Habbakuk being full of these ideas, composed [Hab. iii.] a song, wherein he shews, that God is mindful of his mercy, when he is most angry; he extols the great wonders, which God formerly wrought in favour of his people; he hopes that God will shew him his brethren in their captivity, but will deliver him out of it, and give him the swiftness and agility of an hind, that he may fly to the Mountains, and escape from the hands of the Chaldæans, at the time when they shall ravage Judæa. These characters all agree perfectly with what we have said concerning the life of this Prophet. He prophesied not long before the kingdom of Judah was destroyed, at the same time as Jeremiah. He abode in Judæa, while the rest of the Jews were in captivity at Babylon, and died, as we have said, two years before the return of the Jews [In the year of the World 3455, before J. C. 545, before the Vulgar Æra 549.] under Zerubbabel.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. This, as Huetius asserts, was another Habbakuk, of the Tribe of Levi, as appears from St. Jerom's Preface to his Comment upon Daniel. The Introduction to the story of Bel and the Dragon, as preserved in Greek by Sixtus Senensis, runs thus: Προφετεία τῦ ᾽Αββακὺμ υἱῦ τῦ ᾽Ιησᾶ, ἐκ φυλῆς Λευι. Huet. Dem. Evang. Prop. iv. De Proph. Dan.

Translators' note. Porphyry, Eusebius, and Apollinarius were of opinion, that the stories here mentioned are parts of that Habbakuk's prophecy who is said to be of the Tribe of Levi. Hieron. Procem. Comment. Dan.

Vid. Salien, Annal. & M. Huet Demonstr. Evangel.

Vide Hieronym. & Eusseb. in Ceila, Echela, & Gabaa.

Sozomen. Hist. Eccles. l. 1. c. 29. To tear one's clothes in the time of mourning, is a custom taken notice of in very many places of the sacred Writings. Jacob having been informed, that his son Joseph had been devoured by a wild beast, put on sack-cloth, and was a long time inconsolable. He who brought the melancholy news to the High-Priest Eli at Shiloh, that the Ark of the Covenant was taken, appeared with his clothes rent, and his head covered with dust. See MOURNING or FUNERALS of the Levit. xix. 19.

Habits

HABITS, Vestis, Vestitus. Moses forbids the Hebrews to disguise themselves; The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment. The Legislator's design [Deut. xxii. 5.] herein, was, to precaution the Hebrews against the abuses, which are the common consequences of these disguises. A woman dressed in man's clothes will not be restrained so much by that modesty which is becoming her sex; and a man dressed in a woman's habit, may without fear and shame make his way into places, where, without this disguise, shame and fear would hinder his admittance, and prevent his appearing. The importance and wisdom of these Laws is still more discernible in the manners of the Eastern people, among whom the women continue always close in apartments, to which, men, who are strangers, have no access. Every one knows what noise Clodius's behaviour made at Rome, who disguised himself like a woman, that he might steal in among the Roman Ladies, who were celebrating a feast in honour of the good Goddess.

Some Interpreters believe, that Moses by this prohibition intended principally to forbid the Hebrews the use of those superstitious ceremonies, which were performed on certain festivals of the heathen Deities. In the Feasts of Bacchus, for example, the men disguised themselves like women[1]. The same was practised in the Feasts of Venus and Mars: in the first, the men put on women's clothes; and in the second, the women put on men's.[2] In the East, the men sacrificed generally to the Moon in women's clothes, and the women in men's; because this Planet was adored under the name of God, and Goddess, and was affirmed to be of both Sexes. The same ceremony was observed in the Sacrifices of Venus of Cyprus, as Servius relates[3].

Others[4] maintain, that Moses had no other design than to forbid women the use of arms, and men the exercises peculiar to women; as if he had ordained that there should be no martial women, such as the Amazons and Semiramis, and that none of this sort of people should be seen among the soldiers, by reason of the indecency and inconveniences which might happen from thence. The Hebrew text is pretty favourable to this opinion, and it is supported by many learned Interpreters. The literal import of the Hebrew is this[5], The vessels, (the instruments, the arms) of the man shall not be upon the woman; and the man shall not be dressed in woman's clothes.

Alberic Gentilis, a learned Lawyer, was of opinion, that Moses used these words as a veil to that abominable instance of immodesty, with which he was afraid to have his people made too well acquainted, by his mentioning the name of it. These crimes were at that time but too generally known, particularly in the land of Canaan. And that which makes us believe, that Moses intended to forbid something more than a bare change of clothes, is his saying, that all who do so, are an abomination unto the Lord thy God.

[Gen. xxxv. 2.] To change Habits, and wash one's Clothes, were ceremonies used by the Jews, in order to dispose themselves for some holy action, which required particular purity. Jacob, some time after his return from Mesopotamia, required his people to throw away the strange Gods which were in their houses, to change their Habits, and come [Exod. xix. 19.] with him to sacrifice at Bethel. Moses commands the people to dispose themselves for the reception of the Law, by purifying themselves, and washing their clothes: Sanctifica illos hodie & cras, laventque vestimenta sua. This is to be seen in several places of Scripture.

[Gen. xxxvii. 34. 1 Sam. iv. 12.] Hebrews. An Habit wove with woollen and linnen, was forbidden by the Law. A Garment mingled mingled of linnen and woollen shall not come upon thee. The Jews still at this day, observe this prohibition, and do not so much as sew a [Leo of Modena's Ceremonies of the Jews. Part 1. c. 5.] woollen Habit with thread, nor a linnen Garment with worsted, &c.

The Nuptial Habit. It is common in all civilized Nations, on wedding-days, and days of such like ceremonies, to put on gay clothes; as, on the contrary, to wear mourning in ceremonies used on melancholy occasions. Cicero reproaches Vatinius with having [Tull. in Vatinium.] appeared in mourning at a rejoicing entertainment, or a feast given by Quintus Arius, while he, the latter, and the other guests were dressed in white.

The Essenians among the Hebrews, bathed, and put on white clothes, when they [Joseph. l. 16. de Bello Jud. c. 12.] were to eat together. The Wedding-Garment, in a moral sense, denotes Charity, performing good Works, or the Grace and Gifts of the Holy Spirit.

The strange Habit mentioned in Zephaniah, [Zeph. i. 8.] visitabo super omnes qui induti sunt veste peregrinâ, may denote the particular Habits worn by the Hebrews in imitation of strangers; who followed the modes of strangers; who were not content with the stuffs, and linnen cloths, the colours and dyes of their own Countries; who sought for others among strangers in Babylonia, Chaldæa, Egypt, Tyre, &c. Some believe the Hebrews were not satisfied with imitating the Worship and Superstitions of Idolaters, but wore their Habits likewise in their impious and sacrilegious ceremonies. Others by strange Habits suppose those to be meant, which they took in pawn from the poor and unfortunate, and unjustly appropriated to themselves, contrary to the express prohibition of the Law, which requires that they should be [Exod. xxvi. 27.] returned to the poor when night comes on.

Vestis stragulata, the tapestry which the virtuous woman made for herself, in Hebrew, [Prov. xxxi. 22. מרבדים עשתה לה] Marbadim, signifies rather coverlings, hangings for the bed, counterpanes, or tapestries raised on both sides.

The Habit that trails along the ground, Vestis poderis, mentioned in the Book of Wisdom, in Ecclesiasticus, and the Revelations, [Wisd. xviii. 24. Ecclus. xxvii. 8. Rev. i. 13.] signifies literally, a Habit or Garment hanging down to the feet, a long, trailing Habit, a Habit used on days of ceremony. In the Book of Wisdom, it denotes the High-Priest's sacerdotal Mantle, called in Hebrew, Mehil, which was of linnen, of a blue azure colour, with pomgranates at the bottom made of wool, of a hyacinth, purple and crimson colour, and bells of gold intermixt with them. In the Revelations, it represents the Habit wherein our Saviour appeared to St. John. He was dressed in a long Habit girt about with a gold girdle. In Ecclesiasticus, Poderes honoris signifies a Habit of honour and distinction, an ornament allowed only to persons of some dignity.

The Ancients had oftentimes a great number of Habits by them; as they did not cut them, they might serve almost indifferently all sorts of persons. The Hebrew [1 Kings x. 25. 2 Kings xxii. 14. and x. 22. Levit. xix. 17.] Kings had wardrobes of clothes, and frequently made presents of them. This custom is still common in the East, particularly among the Arabians.

We have enlarged upon the matter of the Hebrew Habits in a particular Dissertation, and in the Article VESTMENTS. I shall here insert some farther remarks upon this subject, taken from Leo of Modena. The Jews at this day forbear wearing any Habits that are woven, or so much as sewed together, with two different matters, and to disguise themselves, as we have already mentioned. They moreover believe all effeminate actions to be prohibited, and the use of paint and depilatory plaisters; and the women in like manner allow themselves in nothing as to this respect, which is peculiar to the men. This Author seems to think, that Moses enjoined the men not to cut off all the hair of their beards, lest in this particular they should make themselves like the women, who have no hair upon their chins.

As to their way of dressing, they do not willingly imitate other nations, unless it be to prevent their being turned into ridicule. They are not allowed to cut their hair round, or like a crown, nor to leave tufts of it growing, as the Turks do; but they love to go every where in long Habits, or in Robes. The women dress after the fashion of the Country where they are, except that on their wedding-day, they cover their hair with a perriwig, or head-dress, resembling natural hair, as to the outward appearance observing the mode of the Country; but above all things, they take care to prevent their own hair being seen.

The men among the Jews esteem it an indecency to have their heads uncovered, because they do not believe it to be any mark of respect; wherefore they do not practise it even in the Synagogue. This is part of the Eastern Manners still preserved by them. Nevertheless, as it is a custom among Christians, to be uncovered before Persons of Quality, they comply with it.

Every Garment they wear ought to have four lappets, and at each there should be a string hanging in the form of tufts, which they call Zizith. See ZIZITH. This precept relates only to the men; Moses having made no regulations as to the womens Habit, perhaps because they ought not to appear abroad. At present, the Jews, to avoid being ridiculous, are content with wearing a square piece of stuff

8 C under their clothes, with the four tufts or strings before mentioned. But in the Synagogue, at the time of their prayers, they cover themselves with a square woollen veil, which has these four tufts at the corners: this is what they call Taled. See this Title.

The men ought likewise to have always upon their foreheads what the Scripture calls Totaphoth, whereof we have already said something under the word Frontlets; but to prevent their being rallied by the common people in a matter which they esteem sacred, they put on their Totaphoth only, when they are at prayers.

They farther believe, that decency requires them to wear a girdle over their clothes, or something that may make a separation between the upper and lower parts of their body.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Lucian. Μόνος τῶν ἄλλων γυναικεῖα οὐκ ἐνεδύσατο ἐν τοῖς Διονυσίοις.
Maimonid. Jul. Firm. c. 4.
Servius in Æneid. 2.
Joseph. Antiq. l. 4. c. 8. Aug. qu. 32. Chald. Lyran. Vat. Fag. &c.
לאיהיה כלי־גבר שאשה ולא ילבש גבר שמלת אשה

Habor

HABOR, Chabor, or Chaboras, a celebrated River in Mesopotamia, which discharges itself into the Euphrates. Part of the Israelites belonging to the ten Tribes was transplanted to the Country lying upon the river Habor. Ezekiel dates his Prophecies from the river Chebar, which is the same as Habor.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Haccatah

HACCATAH, the father of Johanan, who brought an hundred and ten persons with him from the captivity of Babylon. Ezra viii. 12.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hachaliah

HACHALIAH, was one of those who signed the Covenant which Nehemiah renewed with God. Neh. xii. In the year of the World 3551, before Jesus Christ 449, before the Vulgar Æra 453.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hachilah

HACHILAH. The inhabitants of Ziph were willing to deliver up David, who had fled for security to the hill of Hachilah, into the hands of Saul, his persecutor.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hachilah

HACHILAH, the father of Nehemiah. Neh. i. 1.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hachmoni

HACHMONI, the father of Jashobeam. Compare 2 Sam. xxiii. 8. with 1 Chr. xi. 11. and see our Comment. The passage in Samuel seems to be corrupted.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadad (I)

I. HADAD, the son of Bedad, succeeded Hushan in the kingdom of Edom. He obtained [Gen. xxxvi. 35.] a victory over the Midianites in the territories of Moab. The name of the City, where he reigned, is Azith, the situation whereof we are unacquainted with. Samlah of Masrekah succeeded him.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadad (II)

II. HADAD, King of Syria, reigned at [2 Sam. iii. 4.] Damascus when David attacked Hadadezer another King of Syria. Nicholas [Nicol. Damas. apud Joseph. Antiq. l. 7. c. 6.] of Damascus relates, that Hadad upon intelligence that David made war with his ally, carried succours to Hadadezer as far as the Euphrates, where David was at that time, by whom both Hadad and Hadadezer were defeated. The Scripture likewise tells [2 Sam. viii. 5.] us, that the King of Damascus going with a good body of troops to the assistance of Hadadezer King of Zobah, was killed by David, together with two and twenty thousand of his men: but it does not mention the name of this King of Damascus. This we learn from Nicholas of Damascus, who adds, that his successors the Kings of this City took the name of Hadad; and that one of his descendants being desirous to blot out the ignominy which this defeat had brought upon his ancestors, attacked the King of Samaria, and reduced his whole Country to a desolate condition. This was Benhadad who made war against Ahab, as we have seen in the article AHAB.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadad (III)

[Joseph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 2. circa finem. 1 Kings xi. 14, 17, & seq. About the year of the World 2963, before J. C. 1037, before the Vulgar Æra 1041.] III. HADAD, son to the King of East Edom; was carried into Egypt by the King his father's servants, at the time, when Joab General of David's troops extirpated all the males of Edom. Hadad was then a little child. He was conveyed first into Midian, and afterwards to Paran, and last of all into Egypt. He was presented to the King of Egypt, who gave him an house, lands, and every thing necessary for his support. He won so much upon the affections of this Prince, that he married him to his Queen Tahpenes's own sister. Of her he had a son, whose name was Genabath, whom Queen Tahpenes brought up in Pharaoh's house with the King's children. After this, Hadad being informed that David was dead, and that Joab was killed by Solomon's order, declared to Pharaoh his inclination to return into his own Country. Pharaoh did all he could to detain him: but Hadad pressed him so earnestly, that he at last permitted him to return into Edom. When he was there, he began to raise disturbances against Solomon; but the Scripture does not tell what it was particularly he did there.

Josephus says, 1. That he did not return to Edom till long after the death of David, and when Solomon's affairs began to decline, by reason of his impieties, and God's deserting him. 2. That being come into Edom, and not being able to ingage the Edomites in a revolt, because they were kept to their duty by the strong Garrisons which Solomon had placed there; he got together such people as were willing to imbark in his designs, and carried them to Razon, who was then in rebellion against Hadadezer his master, King of Syria. Razon received Hadad with joy, and assisted him in conquering part of Syria, where he reigned, and from whence he made inroads upon Solomon's territories. This Josephus says. Tostatus, Salian, and some others will have it, that Pharaoh King of Egypt made peace between Hadad and Solomon; and from the latter obtained, that Hadad should reign over Edom, upon condition nevertheless of paying him tribute: that Hadad for some years continued subject and tributary to Solomon; but that towards the end of this Prince's reign, he grew weary of this submission, and began to rebel against him.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadad (IV)

IV. HADAD, the son of Baal-hanan, King of Edom. He reigned in the City of Pai. After his death, Edom was governed by Dukes or Princes, of whom we have an enumeration, 1 Chr. i. 51, 52, 53, 54.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadad (V)

V. HADAD. Josephus calls the Kings of Syria by this name, who in Scripture are called Benhadad, and of whom we have said something under the Article BENHADAD.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadad (VI)

VI. HADAD, the God of the Syrians. [Macrob. Saturnal. l. 1. c. 23.] Macrobius assures us, that this Deity was the Sun. Hadad signifies one, or alone. Several Kings of Syria have been called Hadad. Nicholas of Damascus affirms, that [Nicol. Damasc. apud Joseph. Antiq. l. 7. c. 6.] this name was for a long time as common to them, as the name of Ptolemy to the Kings of Egypt.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadad (VII)

VII. HADAD, one of the twelve sons of Ishmael. 1 Chr. i. 30. the same as Hadar. Gen. xxv. 15.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadadezer

HADADEZER, King of Zobah, which from south to north extended from Libanus [2 Sam. viii. 3.] as far as the Orontes. When David went with a design to inlarge his dominions as far as the Euphrates, he defeated Hadadezer, took seven hundred horse and twenty thousand foot; hamstrung all the horses of Hadadezer's chariots, and reserved so many only as were necessary for an hundred chariots of war. Hadad King of Damascus, coming to the assistance of Hadadezer, David defeated him likewise, and killed two and twenty thousand of his men. The arms of Hadadezer's soldiers David took, and carried to Jerusalem; and brought away with him a prodigious quantity of brass, from the Cities of Betah and Berothai, which were in subjection to Hadadezer. These victories over Hadadezer procured David a visit from Toi, the King of Hamath, who was at war with Hadadezer, and sent great presents to David, as an acknowledgment for delivering him from this enemy. This happened in the year of the World 2960, before Jesus Christ 1040, before the Vulgar Æra 1044.

Seven years after, the King of the Ammonites being dead, David sent Ambassadors to Hanon his son, with compliments of condolance upon his father's death. This young Prince, instead of acknowledging David's civility, affronted his Ambassadors, and obliged him to declare war against him. Hanon, sensible that he was not strong enough to resist him, called the neighbouring Princes to his assistance, and in particular Hadadezer: he did not dare to declare openly against David, who had humbled him, and seven years before had made him tributary to him; but he sent privately into Mesopotamia, and there bought troops [See our Comment upon 1 Chr. xix. 6, 16. and 2 Sam. x. 16.] of the King of that Country, and gave them to the King of the Ammonites. These auxiliary forces, in all probability, did not come soon enough to ingage with Joab and Abishai, the Generals of David's army, but came after the battle which was won by Joab.

As these succours were considerable, David thought fit to go in person with a large reinforcement in order to encounter him. The battle was fought beyond Jordan; Shobach, General of Hadadezer's troops, who commanded those of Mesopotamia, was intirely defeated, and the Kings who had taken part with Hadadezer, fled, and no more ventured to send assistance to the Ammonites. They even submitted to David, and became tributary to him. David brought the metals, and richest of the spoils, which he had taken from Hadadezer, into the Tabernacle, and there consecrated them to God.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadad-Rimmon

HADAD-RIMMON, otherwise Maximianopolis. See ADAD-RIMMON.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadar (I)

I. HADAR, one of the twelve sons of Ishmael. Gen. xxv. 15. the same as Hadad. 1 Chr. i. 30.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadar (II)

II. HADAR, the son and successor of Achbor, King of Edom. He reigned in the City of Pai. Gen. xxxvi. 39.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadasha

HADASHA, or Chadassa, a Town in Judah. Josh. xv. 37. Eusebius says, it lay near Taphnæ. St. Jerom read it Gophnæ; but remarks, that this was a mistake. The Rabbins say, that it was one of the smallest Towns in Judah, and that there were but fifty houses in it. The true reading of Eusebius is, in my opinion, Taphna, and not Taphnæ or Gophnæ.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadassah

HADASSAH, otherwise Esther, niece to Mordecai. See ESTHER.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadid

HADID, or Chadid, a City of Benjamin. Ezra ii. 33. Nehem. xi. 34. It is the same, in all probability, as Adida or Adiada in [Joseph. Antiq. l. xiii. c. 1. & 23. 1 Macc. xii. 38. xiii. 13.] Josephus, and the Books of Maccabees. They place it in Sephela, or in the Plain of Judah. But I do not know whether this City belonged originally to Benjamin: I should think rather, that a cession was made of it to this Tribe, after the return from the Captivity, and that Adida is the same as Adithaim in the Tribe of Judah. Josh. xv. 36. Eusebius and St. Jerom speak of two Cities called Aditha, or Adi; one near Gaza, the other near Diospolis, or Lydda. All this, as well as Sephela, carries us too far from the Canton of Benjamin.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadlai

HADLAI, the father of Amasa, of the Tribe of Ephraim. 2 Chr. xxviii. 12.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadoram

HADORAM, the son of Joktan, the son of Eber. Gen. x. 27.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hadrach

HADRACH, or Adra, a City mentioned by the prophet Zechary, who denounced threatnings, and prophecies of a very dreadful nature against it. Ptolemy, in Cele-Syria, takes notice of a City called Adra, in the 68 degree ⅔ of latitude, and the 32 ⅓ of longitude. The Country of Hadrach could not be far from Damascus; for Zechary says, that Damascus was the bulwark, defence, and confidence of Hadrach.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hagar

HAGAR, by nation an Egyptian, and servant to Sarah, the wife of Abraham. Sarah seeing herself old and barren, and knowing that God had promised a numerous posterity to Abraham, believed, that in order to contribute to the accomplishment of these promises, she ought to give her servant to Abraham for a wife, that by her he might have children, who should be heirs to the divine [In the year of the World 2093, before J. C. 1907, before the Vulgar Æra 1911. a Gen. xvi. 1, 2, 3, & seq.] promises. Abraham therefore took Hagar to wife at the sollicitation of Sarah a.

But Hagar finding herself to be with child, began to despise her mistress Sarah. Whereupon Sarah told Abraham, that he treated her unjustly, that she had given him her servant to wife, who, since she had conceived, used her with contempt. And let the Lord judge between me and thee, said she. Abraham answered her, Behold thy servant, she is in thy hands, do with her as thou pleasest.

Sarah therefore having used her ill, Hagar fled; and the Angel of the Lord finding her in the wilderness, near a fountain or well, in the way to Shur, commanded her to return to her mistress, and humble herself under her hands. He added, I will multiply thy race, and make it so numerous, that it shall be scarce possible to compute its number. Thou hast conceived a son, whom thou shalt call Ishmael, because the Lord hath heard thee in thy affliction. He shall be fierce and wild; his hand shall be lifted up against every man, and every man's hand shall be lifted up against him: he shall set up his tents over against all his brothers. Hagar discovering, that it was an Angel who spoke to her, said, Is it possible then for me to live, after having seen the Lord? She called this well therefore, the well of him that liveth and seeth me. She returned afterwards to Abraham's house, and submitted herself to Sarah; and some time after was delivered of a son, whom she named Ishmael. Abraham was then fourscore and six years old, in the year of the World 2094, before Jesus Christ 1906, before the Vulgar Æra 1910.

Fourteen years after, the Lord visited Sarah, and she brought forth Isaac b. Abraham was then an hundred years old. The child being weaned, young Ishmael, who was then seventeen years of age, was jesting with [In the year of the World 2108, before J. C. 1892, before the Vulgar Æra 1896.] [1, 2, 3, &c.] Isaac in too familiar a manner, [Galat. iv. 29. As he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the spirit.] and in a way which looked like raillery, or insult, or even like bad usage; so that Sarah desired Abraham to expel Hagar and her son out of his family, because they ought not, she said, to be heirs with Isaac. Abraham was afflicted at this discourse; and could scarce resolve with himself to put them out of his house: but the Lord appeared to him, and injoined him to do as Sarah said; for, added he, in Isaac shall thy seed be called. And as to the son of the bond-woman, I will make him the father of a great people, because he is sprung from thee. Abraham therefore rising in the morning, took bread and a bottle of water, and put it upon Hagar's shoulder, gave her her son, and sent her away. Hagar intending to return into Egypt, which was her native country, lost her way, and went about wandering in the wilderness of Beersheba. The water which she carried with her, began to fail, she left her son therefore under one of the trees there, and going to the distance of a bow -shot from him, sat down, saying, I will not see him die: and she lifted up her voice and wept.

Now God heard Ishmael's voice, and the Angel of the Lord calling Hagar, comforted her, and told her, that God had heard her son's voice, and commanded her to rise, and conduct him to a well which he discovered to her, in order to refresh him. She took Ishmael therefore, gave him some water to drink, filled his bottle, and retired to the wilderness of Paran, where the child grew and dwelt. He became very expert at drawing the bow, and his mother married him to an Egyptian woman. Ishmael was the father of twelve sons, who were the Heads of twelve [Gen. xxv. 12.] Tribes in Arabia, where they settled, and possessed the country which reaches from Havilah, near the place where the Tigris and Euphrates meet, as far as Shur, a city bordering upon Egypt.

We do not know when Hagar died. The Rabbins[1] are of opinion, that she was Pharaoh's daughter; but St. Chrysostom[2] asserts, that she was one of those slaves, which Pharaoh gave to Abraham. Gen. xii. 16. [Jarchi. Eliezer.] The Chaldee Paraphrasts, and many of the Jews, believe Hagar and Keturah to have been the same person, whose marriage with Abraham is related Gen. xxv. But this last opinion is not credible. The characters whereby Keturah is described in Scripture, are very different from those which are ascribed to Hagar. Philo thinks that Hagar embraced Abraham's Religion, which is very [Philo de Abraham.] probable.

The Mussulmen, who are descended from Ishmael the son of Hagar, speak mightily in commendation of this woman, and relate her her history very differently from Moses. They call her in the way of eminency, [D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 421. Hagiar.] Mother Hagar, and maintain, that she was not barely Abraham's concubine, but his lawful wife; that she was the mother of Ishmael, the eldest son of this Patriarch, who as such possessed Arabia, which very much exceeds, both in extent and riches, the land of Canaan, which was given to his youngest son Isaac.

They tell us farther, that Hagar was born in Egypt, in the city or neighbourhood of Farma, which was, as they say, the Capital of Egypt, and the Royal Seat of Pharaoh. This city was afterwards so totally destroyed, that not the least footsteps of it remained; the place only of its situation was shewn upon an eminence in the way from Cairo to Syria, as travellers passed over the sands of Costir. The Fatimites, that is to say, the descendants of Hali and Fatima, Mahomet's daughter, rebuilt it, but it was demolished by Baldwin King of Jerusalem.

They pretend that Hagar died at Mecca, and was buried in the outward inclosure of the Temple there, which they call the Square House. You may see, if you please, what we have said in the Article Isaac.

[Gal. iv. 24.] Hagar, according to St. Paul, is the figure of the Synagogue, which produces only slaves. She is forced from the house of her husband, and master, with her son under her care; they both wander about in the wilderness, overwhelmed with weariness, grief, and thirst: all which denotes the infidel and incredulous Jews, who persecuted Jesus Christ, and were banished from their country, their temple, and their father's house. They wander like vagabonds amidst the nations, and are scattered among Christians, odious to all the world, a burthen to themselves and others, with a vail before their eyes, which hinders them from seeing the light which surrounds them, and discovering the well of living water, which might satisfy their thirst. But God at last will be touched with their calamities, and open their eyes; Hagar will be eased of Ishmael: the Lord will open their eyes[3] to see the light, and that they may come to the fountain of life, to Baptism, whereby they may be saved.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ita Chald. Rabb. Josus & Salom. Jarchi.

Chrysost. Homil. 38. in Genes.

2 Cor. iii. 16. When it shall turn to the Lord, the vail shall be taken away. Rom. xi. 25, 26. Until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved.

Hagarens

HAGARENS, the descendants of Ishmael. They are called also Ishmaelites and Saracens; and lastly, by the general name of Arabians, taken from the country, where they dwelt. Their name, Saracens, is not derived, as some have thought, from Sarah, Abraham's wife, but from the Hebrew [סרקFurari, Prædari.] Sarak, which signifies to rob or steal; because the Saracens, or Sarakins, for the most part carry on the trade of thieving. [Plin. l. 6. c. 28. Strabo, l. 17. p. 528.] As to the Hagarens, they dwelt in Arabia the Happy, according to Pliny. Strabo joins them with the Nabathæans, and Chavlotæans, whose habitation was rather in Arabia Deserta. Others think their Capital was Petra, otherwise Agra, and consequently they should be placed in Arabia Petræa. The author of the lxxxiiia Psalm, ver. 6. joins them with the Moabites; and in [1 Chr. v. 10.] the Chronicles it is said, that the sons of Reuben, in the time of Saul, made war against the Hagarens, and became masters of their country, eastward of the mountains of Gilead. This therefore was the true and ancient country of the Hagarens. When Trajan came into Arabia, he besieged the Capital of the Hagarens, but could not take it. [Dio. l. 68.] The sons of Hagar valued themselves of old upon their wisdom, as appears by Baruch iii. 23.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Haggai

[In the year of the World 3457, before J. C. 542, before the Vulgar Æra 547. b Ezra iii. 3, & seq.] HAGGAI, the tenth of the small Prophets, was born in all probability at Babylon, from whence he returned with Zerubbabel. The Captives began immediately after their return to work with ardour in rebuilding of the Temple, and in putting it into such a condition as to have sacrifices offered in it b. But by the envy of those, who were enemies to the Jews, and the ill offices of the Courtiers, Cyrus, in the second year of his reign, was induced to revoke that permission whereby he had impowered the Jews to rebuild their Temple. Cambyses the son of Cyrus, coming to the crown, renewed the same prohibition. So that the Temple for fourteen years continued in the same state wherein the Jews had put it immediately after their return; that is to say, without covering to any part except the Temple properly so called, or the Holy and the Sanctuary, and perhaps some Porches about the Courts belonging to the Priests.

But after the death of Cambyses, Darius the son of Hystaspes coming to the Empire c, Haggai was excited by God d to exhort [c In the year of the World 3483, before J. C. 517, before the Vulgar Æra 521. d Ezra v. 1, 2, &c. and Hag. i. In the Year of the World 3484, before J.C. 516, before the Vulgar Æra 520.] Zerubbabel Prince of Judah, and the High-Priest Joshua the son of Josedeck, to resume the work of the Temple, which had been interrupted for so long time. The Prophet reproaches them with their indolence, and tells them, that they were very careful to lodge themselves commodiously, while the House of the Lord remained a desart place, and lay buried in its own ruins. He says, that the calamities of drought and famine wherewith God had afflicted them since their return, were punishments for their neglecting to carry on the work of repairing his Temple. The remonstrances of Haggai had their effect, and in the second year of Darius, of the World 3484, which was the sixteenth after the return of the Jews from Babylon, they began again to proceed in this work. No sooner had they set about it, but the Lord [Hag. i. 14. and ii. 1. Hag. ii. 2, 3, 4, 5—10.] commanded Haggai to tell the people, that if any one had seen the Temple built by Solomon, and did not think this to be so beautiful and magnificent a structure as that was, he ought not to be discouraged, nor have at all the less respect for the new one: that God would render this still more august and venerable than the first had been, not in the abundance of gold and silver, which might adorn it, but by the presence of the Messiah, who was the Desire of all nations, and the Glory which he would add to it.

We know nothing of Haggai's death. St. Epiphanius will have it, that he was buried at Jerusalem among the Priests; which might induce us to believe, that he was of Aaron's family: but Haggai says nothing of himself, which favours this opinion. The Greeks fix his Festival on the 16th of December, the Latins on the 4th of July.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Haggi (I)

I. HAGGI, the second son of Gad. Gen. xlvi. 16.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Haggi (II)

II. HAGGI, of the Tribe of Gad, Head of the Family of the Haggites. Numb. xxvi. 15.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Haggiah

HAGGIAH, the son of Shimea, one of the descendants of Merari. 1 Chron. vi. 30.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Haggith

HAGGITH, David's fifth wife, and the mother of Adonijah. 2 Sam. iii. 4.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hagiographa

HAGIOGRAPHA. This word signifies in general Holy Scriptures, which deserve our respect, whether they are canonical and inspired, or whether they treat only of holy things, and are written after the manner of the sacred and inspired Scriptures[1].

But the name Hagiographa is properly given to those sacred Books, which the Hebrews call Cethubim. For they distinguish all the canonical Books of the Old Testament into three Classes: 1. The Law; 2. The Prophets; 3. The Hagiographa, or [Hieron. Præfat. in Lib. Regum.] Cethubim. They reckon five Books of the Law; these are the Pentateuch, or the five Books of Moses; eight Books of the Prophets, viz. 1. Joshua; 2. Judges and Ruth, which make but one; 3. the first and second Book of Samuel, which among them make but one; 4. the two Books of Kings, which are sometimes mentioned by the name of the third and fourth Books of Kings, and with the Hebrews are but one; 5. Isaiah; 6. Jeremiah; 7. Ezekiel; 8. the twelve small Prophets which compose but one Book. These are the Books which they comprehend under the name of the Prophets. Lastly, the Hagiographa are nine in number, viz. 1. Job; 2. the Psalter, divided into five parts; 3. the Proverbs; 4. Ecclesiastes; 5. Solomon's Song; 6. Daniel; 7. the two Books of Chronicles, which make but one with the Hebrew; 8. the first and second Books of Esdras, which among the Hebrews make one only; 9. the Book of Esther. St. Jerom adds, that some reckon the Books of the Hagiographa to be eleven, including Ruth and Lamentations as two distinct Books in this number.

In his Preface to Judith, he says, that the Book of Judith is placed by the Hebrews among the Hagiographa, the authority whereof can be of no service in supporting [Præfat. in Tobiam.] any contested points. He says the same of Tobit. He observes, that the Hebrews do not receive it among their sacred and canonical Books, but only as one of the Hagiographa. Lastly, in his preface to Daniel, he acknowledges that the Hebrews admit of eleven Books among their Hagiographa. From whence we may easily conclude two things; first, that in St. Jerom's time, the Hebrews were not fixed, as to the number of the Hagiographa; and secondly, that they owned two sorts of Hagiographa, some sacred, and canonical; and others of a much inferior authority, whereof no use was made in religious disputes.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Vide Gloss. Ordin. Præfat. in lib. Tobiæ & Driedon. l. 1. c. 4. Catalog. Divin. Script.

Hai

[Josh. vii. 3, 4. In the year of the World 2553.] HAI, or Ai, a City situated near Bethel, to the west of it. The Septuagint call it Agai; Josephus, Aina; and others Aiath. Joshua having sent a body of three thousand men against Ai, God permitted them to be repulsed, because of Achan's sin, who had violated the anathema, whereby Jericho and every thing in it was devoted to destruction, by reserving to himself some part of the spoil. But after the expiation of this crime, Hai or Ai was taken, burnt, and sacked by the Hebrews. See AI.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hain

[עיןAin, Ein, a Fountain, an Eye.] HAIN, En, or Ein. This word signifies a Fountain; and the names of several Cities in Palestine are in part compounded of it. See above EN, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hain-Shemesh

HAIN-SHEMESH, or Ain-Shemesh; En-shemesh or Hin-shemesh; the City of the Sun. It was in the division of Judah. Josh. xv. 7.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hair

[Ezek. xliv. 20. Lev. xix. 28.] HAIR. The Law of God hath left no particular ordinance with the Hebrews, in the matter of their Hair. They wore it long, as it grew naturally; only the Priests had theirs cut every fortnight, while they were in waiting at the Temple; and in doing so, they made no use of razors, but of scissars only. Moreover, they were forbidden to cut their Hair in honour of the dead, that is to say, of Adonis; though upon other occasions of mourning, they cut it [Jer. xli. 5. Ezek. v. 1. Levit. xix. 28.] without scruple. God forbad them likewise to cut their Hair round: Ye shall not round the cor ners of your heads; in imitation of the Arabians, Ammonites, Moabites, and Edomites, of the people of Dedan, Tema, and Buz[1]; who did this, as is said, in imitation of Bacchus, who wore his Hair in this manner[2].

The Septuagint translate the text of Moses[3], Ye shall not make Sisoe of the Hair of your head: the Hebrew word Sisoe, a Lock of Hair which was offered to Saturn. Lucian evidences, that the Syrians likewise offered their Hair unto their Gods.

We know that it was usual with the Heathens to make vows, that they would not suffer either their Hair or their Beards to grow till they had overcome their enemies.

[Silius Ital. l. 4. de Bello Punico. Tacit. de Morib. Germ. Levit. xiii. 4, 13, 31, 32, &c. Idem Hist. l. 4.] Occumbit Sarmens, flavam qui ponere victor

Cæsariem, crinemque tibi, Gradive, vovebat.

The Germans had the same custom, Crinem barbamque summittere, nec nisi hoste cæso exuere, votivum obligatumque virtuti oris habitum. Civilis having taken arms against the Romans, vowed never to cut his Hair, which out of meer artifice he wore long and of a red colour, after the manner of the Germans, till he had defeated the Legions. Civilis barbaro voto, post capta adversus Romanos arma, propexum, rutilatumque crinem patratâ demum cæde legionum deposuit. This has some relation to what the Law enjoins the Nazarites: All [Numb. vi. 5, 9.] the days of the vow of his separation there shall no razor come upon his head: and if any man die very suddenly by him, and he hath defiled the head of his consecration, then he shall shave his head, as if till then he had done nothing: he shall be polluted by the presence of the dead body, and shall begin again the whole ceremony of his Nazaritesbip. See the article NAZARENS.

When a man was suspected of having a leprosy, enquiry was carefully made whether the colour of his Hair changed, or if his Hair fell, this being one indication of a leprosy; and when he was healed, he washed his body and his clothes, cut his Beard, the Hair of his head, and of his whole body, and presented his offering at [Levit. xv. 8, 9.] the door of the Tabernacle: but he did not enter into the camp till eight days after, cutting again all the Hair of his body.

We have said something concerning the weight of Absalom's Hair, in the article relating to him. Black Hair was thought to [Cant. v. 11. Horat. de Arte Poet. & Carm. l. 1. Od. 32.] be the most beautiful: His locks are bushy, and black as a raven. This likewise was the taste of the Romans: Spectandum nigris oculis, nigroque capillo. The Levites upon the day of their consecration to God's service, shaved their whole bodies; Radent omnes pilos carnis [Numb. viii. 7.] suæ; they washed their clothes in pure water, were sprinkled with the water of expiation, offered Sacrifices, and were dedicated to the Lord by Aaron.

Lepers in like manner were to shave off all the Hair of their bodies upon the day of their Purification and Expiation. This ceremony was an indication that they were desirous not to leave any place in themselves, where the least pollution might remain, undiscovered, and not cleansed and purified.

[Exod. xxv. 4, &c. Bellon. c. 2. Observat. l. 121. Busbeq. Iter Amasien. Tournefort Voyage, tom. 3. p. 334, & suiv.] The of Hair the Feet. See above FOOT.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jer. xxv. 23. Herodot. l. 3. c. 8.
Herodot. loco citat.
Levit. xix. 27. Οὐδὲ ποιήσετε σισόην ἐκ τῆς κόμης τῆς κεφαλῆς ὑμῶν.

Goats-Hair

GOATS-HAIR; Moses used Goats-hair to make the curtains of the Tabernacle. Ancient and modern Writers speak often of the Goats of Asia, Phrygia, and Cilicia, whose Hair, which was very large, is cut off, in order to make stuffs with it. Bellon says, that the Hair of these Goats is white; Busbequius assures us, that it is very bright and fine, and hangs to the ground; that the beauty of it is equal almost to that of silk, that it is never sheared, but combed off. The shepherds are careful to wash them frequently in rivers. The women of the country spin this Hair, and it is carried to Angora, where it is worked, and a good dye given it. There is still at this day a great trade driven with it at Angora and Aleppo. See likewise Aristotle, Hist. Animal. l. 8. c. 18. 22. and Plin. l. 8. c. 50. and Varro de Re Rustica, l. 2. and Virgil's Georgicks.

M. Tournefort procured these Goats of Angora with their Hair, to be delineated and engraved. He says, that they are the most beautiful Goats in the world; that they dazzle people with their whiteness. Their Hair is as fine as silk, curls naturally in locks of eight or nine inches long. Several fine stuffs are made with it, particularly camlet. These Goats are to be seen only at four or five days journey from Angora and Beibasar. Their brood degenerates if they are carried farther off; in all probability, by reason of the pasture which is fatter than at the places we have named. Goats-Hair sells at different prices: some of it is much dearer than the other; but that which is so valuable, is designed only for the camlet which is made for the Grand Senior's Seraglio.

[Matth. iii. 4. Mar. i. 6.] The workmen of Angora use the pure thread only in their camlets; whereas at Brussels, for what reason I cannot tell, they are forced to mix yarn with it. In England, they put some of this Hair into perriwigs, but there is no necessity for having it spun.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Camels-Hair

CAMELS-HAIR. St. John Baptist was clothed in a Garment made of Camels-hair, not with a Camel's skin, as our Painters and Sculptors sometimes describe him, but with coarse camlet made of camel's Hair. This creature in some particular places yields very fine silk, whereof there are stuffs made of very great price; but its hair is hard, and scarce fit for any but coarse habits, and a kind of hair-cloths. This is a remark by the Author of the imperfect work upon St. Matthew, which is printed among St. [Ælian. Hist. Animal. l. 17. c. 34.] Chrysostom's works. Ælian relates, that there are camels upon the Caspian sea, with so fine a wool, that it is no way inferior to that of Miletus; that the Priests and richest People of the country wear the stuff which is made of it. Some are of opinion, that camlet derives its name from camel, because it is wrought out of the Wool and Hair of camels: but at present there is no Camels Hair in the composition of it.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Halah

HALAH, a country beyond the Euphrates, whither the Kings of Assyria transplanted the Israelites of the ten Tribes. We do not know distinctly the situation of it: there is mention of it in the books of Kings, and it is placed with Habor: which makes us think, that it was not far from the river Chebal.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Half-Shekel

HALF-SHEKEL, appointed by Moses to be paid by every Israelite, by the head. See Exodus xxx. 13. and above the word CAPITATION.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Halhul

HALHUL, a city in the Tribe of Judah. St. Jerom says, that there was a little place called Alula near Hebron.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hali

[Hieron. in Alul.] HALI, Cali, or Chali, a city of Phœnicia, in the Tribe of Asher. Josh. xix. 25.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Haliætus

HALIÆTUS, that is to say, a Sea-Eagle. St. Jerom makes use of this word after the Septuagint, to signify a sort of Eagle which was reckoned impure among the Hebrews [Levit. xi. 13. Deut. xiv. 13.] . The Hebrew word is Haseninah, and Bochart believes it signifies a kind of Eagle called Valeria, or the black Eagle.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Halleluiah

HALLELUIAH. See ALLELUIA.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Halma

[Isai. vii. 14. עלמה Halma.] HALMA, or Halmath; an Hebrew word which signifies a Virgin; a young person kept close shut up, after the manner of the Eastern people, and remote from all conversation with men. The Authors of the books of the Maccabees[1], and Ecclesiasticus[2], speaking of young unmarried women, give them the Epithets, kept in, and hidden, to distinguish them from married women, who sometimes appear in publick. St. Jerom[3] distinguishes Bethula, a young woman, from Halma, a virgin, in that this latter is one who never has been seen by men[4]. This is its proper signification in the Punick or Phœnician language, which, as is well known, is the same as the Hebrew. Thus when Isaiah said, speaking of the birth of the Messiah, A virgin shall conceive, and bear a son; the ancient Jews understood it of a virgin in the strict meaning of the word; and the holy Evangelists have taken care to point out this circumstance to us, as one of the essential marks of the Messiah. See above ALMA

In the title of the xlvth Psalm, according to the Latins, or xlvith, according to the Hebrews, we read, In finem filiis Core, pro arcanis, which is translated, To the end, for the sons of Korah, for the hidden. In the Hebrew, To the chief Musician of the family of Korah, who presides in the Choir of young women; literally, hal-halamoth, over the young women. We have shewn in our Comment on the Psalms, that there were sometimes in the Temple, and generally in publick ceremonies, choirs of young women, who sung, and had their part in the musical performances. We read the same term hal-halamoth in the title of the ninth Psalm, and Interpreters look for some mighty mystery in it; some saying, that Halamoth, or Almoth, signifies a musical instrument; others, that it denotes some hidden mysteries. But we explain it simply, as meaning choirs of young women, according to what we have above mentioned.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

2 Macc. iii. 19. & 3 Macc. i. 18.

Ecclus. xlii. 9.

Hieronym. in Isa. vii. בתולהBethula. עלמה Halma.

Translators' note. This interpretation of the word עלמה*is evidenced to be the true and proper construction of it*; and the objections of R. David Kimchi, and others, are fully confuted, by the learned Huetius, in his Dem. Evang. Prop. ix. c. ix.

Halohesh

HALOHESH, the father of Shallum. Nehem. iii. 12. We find another Israelite of this name, Neh. x. 20.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

To Halt

TO HALT, to be lame on both sides. With this Elijah reproaches the Israelites of the ten Tribes: they did not adore God with a pure and unmixt worship, but were for reconciling the worship of him with that of idols. God says, he will assemble her that halteth, and her that is driven out. Congregabo claudicantem & eam quam ejeceram: I will take again this spouse, who is infirm, deformed, and divorced, and will give her a numerous posterity. He speaks of the Jews dispersed, and, as it were, abandoned by God. See the same expression in Zephan. iii. 9. The Psalmist says, That his enemies rejoiced to see him halt: In claudicatione meâ lætati sunt. The Vulgate reads, Et adversùm me lætati sunt. And Jeremiah; All my familiars watched for my halting. Omnis homo pacis meæ observavit claudicationem meam. The Vulgate reads, Pacifici mei observantes latus meum.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ham

HAM, Hem, or Cham, the country of the Zuzims, whereof there is mention made in Genesis xiv. 5. The Author of the Vulgate translates it thus; Chedorlaomer overcame the Rephaims of Ashteroth Karmaim, and the Zuzims with them; but the Hebrew reading is, the Zuzims in Hem, or in Ham. What the situation was of this [Gen. xiv. 5. זוזים בהם] land of Ham, we cannot tell.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ham

HAM, the son of Noah, brother to Shem and Japheth. He is believed by some to have been Noah's youngest son.[1] One day, when Noah had drank wine to excess, Ham perceived him lying in his tent, and exposed in an indecent manner: instead of covering him, he went and told Shem and Japheth, who throwing a cloak over themselves, and walking backward, cast it upon their father, and so covered his nakedness. Noah, when he awoke, being informed of what had passed, said, Cursed be Canaan, a servant of servants shall be be unto his brethren. From these words it is conjectured, that Canaan gave his father Ham intelligence of Noah's nakedness. Others are of opinion, that Noah intended to wound Ham in a more sensible manner, by thus cursing his son Canaan. Noah added, Blessed be the Lord God of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant. God shall enlarge Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant.

Ham had a very numerous posterity. He was the father of Cush, Mizraim, Phut, and Canaan. We shall speak of the descendants of each of his sons in their particular articles, and of the country possessed by them. With respect to Ham, it is believed that he had all Africk for his inheritance, and that he peopled it with his children. As for himself, he dwelt in Egypt[2], which is thought to be the most fruitful part of Africk. Africk is called the land of Ham, in several places of the Psalms. In [Ps. lxxvii. 51. civ. 23. cv. 22. Plut. de Iside & Osiride.] Plutarch, Egypt is called Chemia. There are some footsteps of the name of Ham or Cham observed in Pso-chemmis, Psittachemmis, which are cantons of Egypt. Lastly, it is believed, that Hammon, adored in Egypt and Lybia, was no other than Ham, the son of Noah.

[Bibl. Orient. p. 425.] The Author of Tharik-Thabari says, that Noah having cursed Ham and Canaan, the effect of this curse was, that not only their posterity was made subject to their brethren, and born, as we may say, in slavery, but likewise that on a sudden, the colour of their skin became black; for they maintain, that all the Blacks descend from Ham and Canaan. Noah seeing this so surprizing change, was affected with it, and begg'd of God that he would please to inspire Canaan's masters with a tender and compassionate love for him: his prayer was heard; for notwithstanding we may still at this day observe the effect of Noah's curse in the servitude of Ham's descendants, we may remark likewise the effect of his prayer, in that this sort of black slaves is sought for, and made much of in all places.

Many have been of opinion, that the posterity of Ham was the only, or at least principal cause of building the Tower of Babel; that they first suggested the design to others, and formed the presumptuous project of erecting a tower which should reach as high as heaven, that so their name might be celebrated in all ages, and they secured from the apprehension of a new Deluge, if God at any time should send one on the earth. We shall very readily confess, that the undertaking of the builders of Babel was criminal in the sight of God; the author of the book of Wisdom calls it, a [Wisd. x. 5.] wicked conspiracy; but it is not just to charge it without proofs upon the race of Ham alone.

An Arabian author assures us, that Ham was the first who spread idolatry over the earth, who invented horoscopes, and magick; [Abeneph. apud Kircher. Templ. Isiac.] and was the author of divers superstitions, on the account whereof he was called Zoroastres, or Adris the Prophet; that is to say, the Image of a Star, or a Fire at all times giving light.

Fabulous History has preserved some footsteps of Ham's story. It is related, that on a certain day Myrrha, wife, or as others say, nurse to Hammon, and mother of Adonis, having her son in her company, found Cyniras sleeping in his tent all uncovered, and in an indecent posture. She ran immediately, and informed Hammon of it; he gave notice of it to his brothers, who, to prevent the confusion which Cyniras might be in to find himself naked when he waked, covered him with something. Cyniras understanding what had passed, cursed Adonis, and pursued Myrrha into Arabia, where, after having wandered nine months, she was changed into a tree, which bears Myrrh. Hammon and Ham are the same person; so are Adonis and Canaan.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Gen. ix. 24. And Noah awoke from his wine, and knew what his younger son had done unto him. Which words are by some referred to Canaan the son of Ham, and grandson of Noah. But it is more natural to refer them to Ham.

Translators' note. M. Basnage is rather of opinion, that neither Ham nor Mizraim ever were in Egypt, but that their posterity settled in this country, and called it by the name of their ancestors. And as to Ham's being worshipped as a God, and called Jupiter Hammon, he thinks people may have been led into this mistake by the similitude of names; and that Jupiter Hammon was the Sun, to which divine honours have been paid at all times in Egypt. See Histoire des Juifs, t. 3. c. 18.

Haman

HAMAN, the son of Hammedatha the Amalekite, of the race of Agag; or, according cording to other copies, the son of Hamadath [See the Comment on Esther iii. 1, 2.] the Bugæan or Gogæan, that is to say, of the race of Gog. Lastly, it may be read, Haman the son of Hamadath, which Haman was Bagau or Bagoas, that is to say, Eunuch or Servant to the King of Persia, in the text of Esther called Ahasuerus, who in all probability is the same as Darius the son of Hystaspes.

We have no other proof of Haman's being an Amalekite, besides what is said in the third chapter and first verse of the book of Esther, that he was of the race of Agag; nevertheless in the Greek, chap. ix. and ver. 24. of the same book, and in the Latin, chap. xvi. 6.[1] he is called a Macedonian by nation and affection; Animo & gente Macedo: which makes it dubious, whether he were by extraction an Amalekite. However this may be, King Ahasuerus having taken him into favour, gave him rank above [Esth. iii. 2, 3.] all the Princes of his court. And all the King's servants who were at the palace-gate, bent the knee before Haman, and worshipped him, because the King had so commanded.

Mordecai, Queen Esther's Uncle, but who had not yet discovered himself to be thus related to her, was the only one who refused to worship him. Haman had notice of it, and knowing him to be a Jew, he had a mind to see whether he would persist in this resolution. When he found, that Mordecai continued firm in refusing to pay those honours to him, which all the court shewed him, he determined to be revenged of him, and not of him alone, but likewise of the whole nation of the Jews, who were within the extent of Ahasuerus's kingdom.

According to the superstition of the Persians, he proposed first to draw lots, that he might know on what day he should destroy them. Wherefore on the first month of the [In the year of the World 3495 before J. C. 505, before the Vulgar Æra 509.] year, in the way of reckoning the festivals, which was the seventh of the civil year, and answered to the moon of March, Haman began to cast lots, that he might know in what month, and upon what day of the month, he should begin to accomplish his design of extirpating the Jews. God, who governs all lots and chances, and sports with the vain projects of mankind, so permitted it, that the lot should determine the thirteenth day of the month Adar, which was the last of the sacred year, for the execution of his pernicious design, and so defer it for a whole year.

Haman did not omit to speak of it to the King. He told him, that there was a certain people dispersed over all his Provinces, who were Jews, people who kept very little correspondence with others, had laws and ceremonies very different from the rest of mankind, and despised his orders; that he knew very well of what importance it was to the tranquillity of his kingdom, to take care, that indulgence should not render them more insolent. He desired therefore that he would give orders for destroying this people; and to indemnify the King for any loss, which he might hereby sustain, he promised to pay ten thousand talents out of his own fortune into the treasury.[2]This is a prodigious sum for a private person; but Haman reckoned, in all probability, that the King would grant to him the confiscation of the goods belonging to the Hebrews, or that he would not accept the offer, which he made him.

Hereupon the King took the ring, which he was used to wear upon his finger, and gave it to Haman, telling him, that he might keep his money; and as for the people he mentioned, he might do as he pleased with them. Wherefore upon the thirteenth day of Nisan, Haman sent for the King's Secretaries, and directed them to dispatch the Order, which commanded the extirpation of the Jews throughout the whole kingdom of Persia, and was to take place upon the thirteenth day of Adar following; that is to say, a year after the date of the Edict. The order was sent into all the Provinces by the King's couriers, and permission given to the people to fall upon them, exterminate them, and pillage their Goods. The Edict was posted up at Shushan, where Ahasuerus kept his ordinary residence. Haman was overjoyed at his success, and the Jews were in the utmost consternation.

Mordecai, who had been the occasion of this terrible storm, rent his clothes, put on [Esth. iv. 1, 2, 3, &c.] sackcloth, and ashes on his head, and came full of sorrow to the palace-gate. But he was not permitted to come in with all those marks of affliction upon him. Two Eunuchs went immediately to Esther, and informed her of his condition; she sent a more proper habit for Mordecai, but he refused it. She deputed afterwards an Eunuch to him, who was in her service, to know the cause of his great grief; Mordecai related what Haman had done against the Jews, sent her a copy of the King's Edict, and desired her to go to the King, and intercede for her country-men.

Esther replied, that she was not allowed to visit the King, unless she was sent for. But Mordecai insisted, telling her, that God in all probability had raised her only that she might be in a condition to act upon such an occasion as this. Esther therefore gave directions to tell him, that he should pass three days and three nights in the synagogue in fasting and prayers; that she with her servants would do the same: and that after this, she would wait upon the King at the hazard of her own life. The three days [Esth. v. 1, 2, 3.] of fasting being over, she dressed herself in all her finest ornaments, and presented herself before the King. Ahasuerus stretched out his scepter, as an indication that he was pleased with her appearing; and told her, that she might ask what she would, it should be granted her. Esther replied, that she had one favour only to beg of the King; which was, that he would be pleased to come with Haman to an Entertainment, which she had provided for him.

The King came; and after the banquet was over, he once more desired Esther to ask whatever she pleased of him. Esther answered, that she humbly begg'd his Majesty to come again with Haman the next day to another Entertainment, which she would prepare for him, and then she would declare what she desired of him. Haman therefore left the palace with great pleasure; and observing that Mordecai, whom he met with, did not stand up before him, he was very much inraged; came home, related to his wife and his friends, the particular honour which Esther had done him, by inviting him alone to bear the King company at her banquet. But then he added, all this I shall reckon as nothing, while I see Mordecai sitting at the King's Gate, without rising up before me. Hereupon Zeresh his wife, and all his friends, advised him to erect a Gallows fifty cubits high, and desire the King the next morning that Mordecai might be hanged upon it. This advice was agreeable to him; and immediately he gave orders for preparing the Gallows.

The next day early in the morning, [Esth. vi. 1, 2, 3.] Haman came into the King's anti-chamber, to desire the death of Mordecai. Ahasuerus call'd him in to him, and said, What would the man have, whom the King delighteth to honour? Haman believing that he was the person whom the King meant, said, Let him be clothed in the King's royal robes, be mounted upon the horse which the King is used to ride, let the royal diadem be put upon his head, and let the chief of all the Grandees belonging to the Court conduct him through the streets of the City, and cry before him, Thus shall it be unto the man, whom the King delighteth to honour. Ahasuerus answered him, Go, do as thou hast said unto Mordecai the Jew, who has discovered a conspiracy against my person, and has received no reward for it. Haman executed this command with all the reluctancy which may be imagined; and returning to his own house, related what had happened, to Zeresh his wife, and his friends; who, looking upon this to be an happy omen for the Jews, told him, it was their opinion, that if Mordecai, before whom he had fal'n, were a Jew, there couldbe no resisting him, and that he must be subject to him.

[Esth. vii. 1, 2, 3, &c.] While they were yet talking, Haman was called to the Entertainment prepared by the Queen. When Ahasuerus was in good humour, and had partaken plentifully of the good cheer provided, he desired the Queen to ask what she pleased of him. She answered, If I have found favour in thy sight, O King, I conjure thee to grant me my own life, and the lives of my people, for whom I implore thy clemency. Ahasuerus hereupon said to her, Who is there then so daring as to attempt thy life?

Esther answered, this Haman whom thou seest, he it is, who is our mortal enemy. Haman hearing this, was quite stunned, and could not support the looks which both the King and Queen cast upon him. At the same time Ahasuerus in great rage going out into a Garden joining to the room where they dined, Haman threw himself at the Queen's feet, who was lying upon a bed belonging to the table, after the mode of that country: at the same time the King returning into the room, and seeing Haman on the bed, on which the Queen was, cried out, What would he too offer violence to the Queen in my presence, and in my house? Scarce were the words out of the King's mouth, before Haman was seized on, and his face covered, like one going to be executed.

[Esth. ix. 6.] Hereupon Harbonah, one of the King's Eunuchs, said, that he had seen a Gibbet at Haman's house fifty cubits high, which he had prepared for Mordecai; and upon this the King commanded Haman to be hanged; which was done accordingly that very day: his house was given to the Queen, and his employments together with the dignity, which this Favourite possessed, to Mordecai. His ten sons were likewise put to death; and an Edict published, revoking the first, and permitting the Jews to take vengeance of their enemies. This happened in the year of the World 3496, before Jesus Christ 504, before the Vulgar Æra 508. See the Articles ESTHER and MORDECAI.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. The Reader will observe, that here, as in other places, the Author follows the Vulgate, wherein all the addi- tions to the Hebrew are inserted, from the third verse of the tenth chapter, to the end of the sixteenth chapter. These additions are supposed to be the composition of some Hellenistical Jew*; and certainly were never in the orig- inal.*

Ten thousand talents make in all 3421870 pounds sterling. And if the Babylonish talent be meant here, which was worth 70 Eubœan Minæ*, according to* Herodotus*, that is to say, two hundred and nine pounds, and about ten shillings; the ten thousand talents will make two millions one thousand and ninety pounds, or there- abouts.*

Hamath

HAMATH, a celebrated City of Syria, which we take to be Emesa upon the Orontes. The entring into Hamath, which is [Josh. xiii. 5. Judg. iii. 3. 1 Kings viii. 65. 2 Kings xiv. 25. 2 Chr. vii. 8.] is frequently spoken of in Scripture, is the narrow Pass leading from the Land of Canaan to Syria, through the Valley which lies between Libanus and Antilibanus. This Entrance into Hamath is set down as the northern boundary of the Land of Canaan, opposite to the southern limits, the Nile, or river of Egypt. Josephus[1], and St. Jerom after him[2], believed Hamath to be Epiphania. But Theodoret[3], and many other good Geographers, maintained it to be Emesa in Syria.

The same Theodoret[4] declares, that Aquila translated Hamath, Epiphania. For his part, he believes, that there were two cities of this name, which were to be distinguished; one surnamed the Great in Amos, [Amos vi. 2.] which is the same as Emesa; the other called simply Hamath, which, says he, is the same as Epiphania[5]. St. Jerom[6] and St. Cyril of Alexandria[7], believe on the contrary, that Hamath the Great is Antioch, and that Hamath without an epithet, is Epiphania. But I cannot tell whether it can be shewn by any Text of Scripture, that there were two Hamaths in Syria. [Josh. xix. 35.] Joshua assigns the city of Hamath to the Tribe of Naphtali. Toi King of Hamath, cultivated a good understanding with [2 Sam. viii. 9.] David. This city was taken by the Kings of Judah, and retaken from the Syrians by [2 Kings xiv. 28.] Jeroboam the second. The Kings of Assyria made themselves masters of it upon the declension of the Kingdom of Israel, and [2 Kings xvii. 24. & xviii. 34, &c.] transplanted the inhabitants of Hamath into Samaria.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. p. 14.
Hieronym. in locis. in Emath. & in Amos vi. & in Isai. xlvii.
Theodoret. in Jerem. iv. & xlvi.
Theodoret. qu. 22. in 2 lib. Reg.
Theodoret. in Jerem. iv. & xlvi.
Hieronym. ad Amos vi. & in Ezech. xlvii.
Cyrill. Alexand. in Amos, p. 312.

Hamathites

HAMATHITES, descendants of Hamath, one of the sons of Canaan. It is our opinion, that they dwelt in Emath, or Hamath, or Emesa in Syria, upon the river Orontes.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hammedatha

HAMMEDATHA, the father of Haman, of the race of the Amalekites. Esth. iii. 1.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hammon

HAMMON, or Chamon, a city of Asher. Josh. xix. 28. I do not know whether this be not the same with the city of this name, said to belong to Naphtali. 1 Chr. vi. 76.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hammon

HAMMON, Jupiter Hammon. It is an opinion almost generally received among the Criticks, that Jupiter Ammon, who was worshipped in Egypt, as I have hinted, is the same with Ham, whom his father Noah cursed. The conformity of names, and many other circumstances borrowed from history and fabulous accounts, have made this opinion very current. Egypt is called the Land of Ham in several passages of [Ps. lxxviii. 51. cv. 23. cvi. 12.] Scripture. There are some footsteps of this name farther to be observed in Pso-Chemmis, and Psita-Chemmis, which are cantons of Egypt. Plutarch speaks of this country's [Plut. de Iside & Osiride.] being called Chemia. It is certain that it was peopled by Mizraïm, one [Vaïagged, ויגדNuntiavit.] of his sons; and that the neighbouring countries were possessed by the descendants of his other sons, Cush, Phut, and Canaan.

If Noah is the Saturn of the Heathens, Ham, the youngest of his sons, must be their Jupiter. What the Poets say of Jupiter, and the violence offered by him to his father, has a great deal of relation with the action of Ham. Jupiter castrated his father; Ham did not cover his father's nakedness; nay, the Hebrew text may be interpreted, he castrated, instead of he told, by changing the pointing, which is a new invention. Saturn divided the whole World between his three sons; to Jupiter he gave [ויגד Veiagged, He castrated.] Heaven, the Sea to Neptune, and Hell to Pluto. Noah gave Africk to Ham, Asia to Shem, and Europe to Japheth. Africa is thought to be the highest country, and nearest to Heaven:

Terrarum primam Lybiam, nam proxima cœlo est, Ut probat ipse calor, tetigit. Ham is believed to have introduced Idolatry in Egypt, and himself to have received divine honours there. It is the opinion of some likewise, that originally the Stars only were worshipped, and that afterwards the same veneration was paid to illustrious Men, and Kings. Ammon is the same as the Sun, according to the old Pagan Theologists. [Clem. Alex. Diodor. Sicul.] Clemens Alexandrinus speaks of an Apollo the son of Ammon. Apollo we know is the Sun. Bauhen the Indian is also said to be the son of Ammon, begotten by him of the nymph Amalthæa, and that he was the inventor of presses.

The Egyptians, before the dominion of Alexander the Great in Asia and Egypt, knew nothing of the worship of the Grecian Jupiter; but these having introduced their Religion with their Language and Manners into Egypt, the Egyptians, who were the most superstitious of all people, easily received the false worship of the Greeks, and joining it with their old traditions, composed a monstrous medley of Egyptian and Greek Deities. The Greeks were willing to find their own Gods in those of the Egyptians; and the Egyptians, upon some inconsiderable mark of resemblance, made their Gods pass for those of the Greeks. Of Isis, for example, they made Diana, the Moon, Venus, Ceres, &c. of Osiris, Apollo and Adonis, &c. of Ammon, Jupiter, and the Sun, the greatest and principal of the Deities.

[Q. Curt. l. 4.] The Temple of Jupiter Ammon was thought to be one of the most ancient in the world: no one was able to shew the original of it. It was situated in the midst of a wood consecrated to this Deity, and served as a strong fort for the people round about. Three large walls formed the inclosure of it: in the first inclosure, there was an old palace to be seen, which had been formerly the dwelling of the Kings of that country. In the second inclosure, were apartments for the wives and children of these Kings; and in the same were the Temple and Oracle of Ammon. Lastly, the last court contained lodgings for the Prince's Guards and Soldiers. Quintus Curtius, from whom we have this description, says, that the Priests of Jupiter Ammon carried this Deity in a vessel, on the two sides whereof was hung a great number of silver dishes. Ammon was represented and adored under the form of a ram, or at least [Antiq. expliquée, t. 1. p. 45.] with the head of a ram, and the horns of a ram upon it.

Stat tortis cornibus Ammon.

See above the Article AMMON.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hammoth-Dor

HAMMOTH-DOR, a city belonging to the Levites, in the Tribe of Naphtali. A cession was made of it to the Family of Gershom. See Joshua xix. 35. xxi. 32. It is the same perhaps as Hamath or Chamath belonging to the same Tribe, Joshua xix. 3. which is believed to be Tiberias. The name of Hamath or Chamath is given generally to places, where there are Baths of hot water. See HAMATH.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hamonah

[Ezek. xxxix. 16. המונהHamonah, Multitudo.] HAMONAH, a city, where Ezekiel foretold what the burial would be of Gog and his people. We know of no town of this name in Palestine. Hamonah signifies Multitude; and the Prophet intended no more than to shew, that the slaughter of Gog's people would be so great, that the place of their burial might be called Multitude.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hamor

[Gen. xxxiv.] HAMOR, Prince of Schechem, and father of a young man, whose name also was Schechem, who ravished Dinah, the daughter of Jacob, and drew upon his father and all Schechem the effects of her brothers resentment. See DINAH and SCHECHEM. [In the year of the World 2265, before J.C. 1735, before the Vulg. Æra 1739. a Gen. xxxiii. 19.] Jacob returning from Mesopotamia, went to Schechem, where he set up his tents, and bought of Hamor for the price of an hundred Kesitas[1], that part of the field, where he had pitched his tents a.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. That is, about ninety eight pounds eight shillings and nine pence sterling. See KESITA.

Hamuel

HAMUEL, the son of Mishma. 1 Chr. iv. 26.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hamul

HAMUL, the son of Pharez, Chief of the Family of the Hamulists. Gen. xlvi. 12. and Numb. xxvi. 21.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hamutal

HAMUTAL, the daughter of one Jeremiah of Libnah. Hamutal was the wife of King Josiah, the mother of Jehoahaz, and Zedekiah, Kings of Judah. 2 Kings xxiii. 31.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hanameel

HANAMEEL, the son of Shallum, a kinsman of Jeremiah's, who sold a field to this Prophet, which he had at Anathoth. Jerem. xxvii. 17, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hanan (I)

I. HANAN, the father of Rinna. 1 Chr. iv. 20.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hanan (II)

II. HANAN, the son of Azel, of the Tribe of Asher. 1 Chr. viii. 38.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hanani (I)

I. HANANI, father to the Prophet Jehu. 2 Chr. xvi. 7.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hanani (II)

[1 Kings xvi. 7.] II. HANANI, a Prophet who came to Asa King of Judah, and said to him, Because thou hast put thy trust in the King of Syria, and not in the Lord, the army of the King of Syria is escaped out of thine hands. We do not know distinctly upon what occasion the Prophet discoursed in this manner to the King, but Asa ordered him to be seized on, and put in prison, and at the same time treated his people with great violence and injustice. Some will have it, that this Hanani was father to the Prophet Jehu: but this does not appear very clearly from the Scripture. Jehu prophesied in the kingdom of Israel, and Hanani in that of Judah. Jehu was put to death by Baasha King of Israel, who died in the year of the World 3075; and Hanani reproved Asa King of Judah, who reigned from 3049 to 3090.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hanani (III)

III. HANANI, a Levite and Musician, who was in the eighteenth Class appointed by David for the service of the Temple. 1 Chr. xxv. 4, and 25.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hananiah (I)

I. HANANIAH, one of the three young men of the Tribe of Judah and Royal Family, who, having been carried away captives to Babylon, were chosen among others to be instructed in all the Sciences of the Chaldæans, and wait in Nebuchadnezzar's palace. The name of Hananiah was changed into that of Shadrach, and he was brought up with [Dan. i. 7. Dan. iii. 1, 2, &c.] Daniel in the Prince's Court. Nebuchadnezzar having set up a Statue in the Plain of Dura, near Babylon, and commanded all his servants upon pain of death to worship it; Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego did not believe themselves obliged to submit to such unjust orders. They were cast therefore into the fiery furnace: but God did not permit the flames to hurt them; they came out as intire and well, as when they were thrown in. The Angel of the Lord descended to them in the furnace, and suspended the activity of the flame, so far at least as it might have affected them. This happened about the year of the World 3443, before Jesus Christ 557, before the Vulgar Æra 561. And after Nebuchadnezzar's metamorphosis, when he was again settled in his throne, he himself related this strange transformation, and the dream which preceded it, in the Edict published by him upon the occasion of the miracle that had happened in favour of the three Hebrews. Hananiah and Daniel had been then about [Dan. iii. ad finem, & iv. 1, 3, & 32, 33.] seven seven and twenty years in captivity at Babylon.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hananiah (II)

II. HANANIAH, the son of Zerubbabel. 1 Chr. iii. 9.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hananiah (III)

III. HANANIAH, the son of Azur, a [Jerem. xxviii. 1, 16.] false Prophet of the city of Gibeon, who coming to Jerusalem in the fourth year of the reign of Zedekiah King of Judah, and of the World 3409, said to Jeremiah before the Priests and all the People, Thus saith the Lord, I have broken the yoke of the King of Babylon. Within two full years will I bring again into this place all the Vessels of the Lord's House, that Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon took away from this place, and carried to Babylon. And Jeremiah answered, Amen. May it please God to perform what you have said. But hear me: I am not the only Prophet, who has denounced evils against particular Countries and Kingdoms. The event is a real justification of Prophets. It will be seen whether what I declare to you will come to pass. At the same time, Hananiah laid hold of the chains, which Jeremiah had for some time worn about his neck, as an emblem of the future captivity of Judah, and breaking them, he said, Thus saith the Lord, even so in two years time will I break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon. Jeremiah, who had retired, was inspired by God to return; and directing his discourse to him, said, Thou hast broken the yokes of wood, but thou shalt make for them yokes of iron; and since thou seducest the people with falshoods, thou shalt die this year, because thou hast taught rebellion against the Lord. And Hananiah died within the year: in that of the World 3410, before Jesus Christ 590, before the Vulgar Æra 594.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hananiel

HANANIEL, a Tower belonging to the city of Jerusalem, took its name from him. Zech. xiv. 8.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hanathon

HANATHON, or Channathon, a Town [1 Sam. v. 6, 7.] in the Tribe of Zebulon. Joshua xix. 14.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hands

HANDS. Laying on of Hands; a ceremony very much used both in the Old and New Testament. See IMPOSITION OF HANDS.

By HAND, is sometimes understood the vengeance of God exercised upon any one. The Hand of the Lord was heavy upon them of Ashdod, after they had taken the Ark; and they were told that it would still continue to oppress them, till they should send back the Ark with presents.

[Dan. i. 20. עשר ידות] Hand is likewise used for times. Daniel and his Companions were ten Hands wiser than all the Magi and Diviners of the country.

[2 Kings iii. 11.] To pour water on any one's HANDS, signifies to serve him. Thus Elisha is said to have poured water on Elijah's Hands, thereby meaning that he was his servant.

To wash one's HANDS. Pilate washed his Hands, to denote his being innocent of what was required of him, when he proceeded to condemn Jesus, in whom he [Matth. xxvii. 24. Pf. lviii. 11. Pf. xxvi. 6, Job xxxi. 27.] found nothing to deserve such a sentence. The Psalmist washes his Hands[1] in the blood of the ungodly. He approves the vengeance which God takes of their iniquity. The righteous washes his Hands with the innocent; he is in strict friendship with them.

To kiss one's HAND, is an act of adoration: If I beheld the Sun when it shined, and my mouth hath kissed my Hand, says Job.

[1 Kings xix. 18. Judg. xvii. 5, 12. VideLevit. & 1 Kings xiii. 33.] To fill one's HANDS, signifies to take possession of the Priesthood, to enter upon the enjoyment of any sacerdotal Dignity, to perform the functions of it; because in this ceremony, the parts of the victim which was to be offered, were put into the new Priest's Hand.

[2 Kings vii. 17.] To lean upon any one's HAND, is a mark of familiarity and superiority. The King of Israel had one of his confidents upon whom he leaned; and in like manner the King of Syria leaned on Naaman when [2 Kings v. 18.] he went up to the Temple of his God Rimmon.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. Thus indeed the Vulgate has it, Manus suas lavabit in sanguine peccatoris. But the original instead of Hands, reads Feet. רשע פעמיו ירחץ בדמה*Our* English Version agrees with the Hebrew.

Hand

HAND is sometimes taken for the border, the side, the hinge of a door, the arms, the support of a throne, &c.

To lift up one's HAND, is a way of taking an oath in use with all nations.

To give one's HANDS, signifies to grant [2 Macc. xiii. 22.] peace, to swear friendship, to promise all security, to make alliance: Dextram dedit, accepit, abiit. The Jews say, they were obliged to give the Hand to the Egyptians [Lament. v. 6.] and Assyrians, that they might procure bread; that is to say, to surrender to them, to make an alliance with them, that they might be enabled to subsist, that in their extreme necessity they might preserve their Lives.

The right HAND, with the Hebrews, signifies generally the south-side. See below

RIGHT.

[Psal. lv. 11. Isa. v. 25. ix, 12, 17.] To stretch out one's HAND, signifies to chastise, to shew his severity, his justice. Extendit manum suam in retribuendo. God delivered his people out of Egypt with a stretched out Hand, and an Arm lifted up: he delivered them by performing many wonders, and inflicting many chastisements on the Egyptians. The Hand of God is still stretched out; he is still ready to strike.

To stretch out one's HAND, is sometimes [Isa. lxv. 2.] a gesture that denotes mercy. I have stretched out mine Hand all the day long, towards an ungrateful and rebellious people.

Prov. i. 24. I have called, says the wise man, and ye have refused: I have stretched out my Hand, and no man regarded.

[Exod. xxii. 8, 11. 1 Sam. xxiv. 10. Job i. 11.] I will not put forth mine HAND against the Lord's Anointed: I would not kill him. Put forth thine Hand now, and touch all that Job hath, and he will curse thee to thy face. Smite him, treat him rigorously, and you will see if he does not blaspheme thee.

To stretch forth one's HAND on any thing, to take, to steal it. He shall swear, that he hath not put his Hand unto his neighbour's goods.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hand

HAND, Manus, is sometimes put for the extent of a thing: hoc mare magnum & spatiosum manibus, Psalm ciii. 26. and Isai. xxii. 18. Hebr. Terram spatiosam manibus; Genes. xxxiv. 11. and Neh. vii. 4.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hand

HAND is put likewise for a Monument erected by Absalom near Jerusalem, 2 Sam. xviii. 18. Absalom erexerat sibi dum adhuc viveret, titulum in valle Regum . . . & appellatur manus Absalom, usque ad hanc diem.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hand

HAND is likewise frequently taken for the power and impression of the Holy Spirit felt by some Prophet: Facta est super eum manus Domini. It is said in several places, that God gave his Law, or sent his Orders by the Hand of Moses, or some other Prophet; that he spoke to his people by the Hand of Prophets, &c. that is to say, by their means, by their mouth, &c.

The HAND lifted up, is a mark of force and authority. Thus it is said, that God brought his people out of Egypt with an high Hand, an Hand raised up, that is to say, with main force and authority, without the Egyptians being able to oppose it. The Hand lifted up, signifies likewise sometimes the insolence of a sinner, who rises up against God without respect and fear. Peccare elatâ manu. Deut. xxxii. 27.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hanes

[Is. xxx. 4. Hieron. in Isai. xxx. 4.] HANES, a Town mentioned in Isaiah, which St. Jerom thinks to be upon the frontiers of Ethiopia. The Chaldee and our modern Interpreters think, that Hanes is put for Taphnæ, that is to say, Daphnæ Pelusiæ, near Damietta. The Septuagint do not read Hanes.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hannah

HANNAH, the wife of Elkanah, of the Tribe of Levi, who dwelt at Ramath, [1 Sam. i. 2, & seq.] or Ramathaïm, in the Tribe of Ephraim. Elkanah going one day to Shiloh, with a design of worshipping the Lord there, carried his two wives, Hannah and Peninnah, with him. Peninnah had children, who went with her to the Feast; but Hannah had none. Elkanah therefore having offered his sacrifice, which he had provided out of pure devotion, made an entertainment for his family before the Lord, and gave several parts of the victim to Peninnah for herself and children: to Hannah, his well-beloved wife, he gave but one portion of it, because she was alone, and had no children. Hannah therefore was very melancholy, and her rival Peninnah still added to her affliction, by reproaching her with barrenness. Elkanah observing that Hannah did not eat, said to her, Why eatest thou not? and why is thy heart grieved? Am not I better to thee than ten children? Hannah therefore did eat, and when she had done so, went alone to the Tabernacle, there to pour out her heart before the Lord. She made a vow in these terms: O Lord of Hosts, if thou wilt vouchsafe to look upon the affliction of thy servant, and to bless her with a son, I will give him unto thee all the days of his life; and there shall no razor come upon his head.

As she continued very long at her devotion, the High-Priest Eli believed that she had been drinking to excess, and said to her, How long wilt thou be drunken? put away thy wine from thee. But Hannah answered, Pardon me, my Lord, I am a woman overwhelmed with affliction, I have drunk no wine, nor any thing that could intoxicate, but have been pouring forth my heart before the Lord. Whereupon Eli said to her, Go in peace, and the God of Israel grant thee thy petition, that thou hast asked of him. Hannah went away, to her husband, took nourishment, and her countenance was no longer dejected. After this, they returned to Ramah; and soon after Hannah conceived, and was delivered of a son, whom she called Samuel; because she had asked him of the Lord. Samuel was born in the year of the World 2849, before Jesus Christ 1151, before the Vulgar Æra 1155.

Hannah went not to the Temple[1] till she had weaned her son: then she came and brought him thither. She took three bullocks, three measures of flour, and a bottle of wine, and having made her offering, and said her prayer, she presented her son to the Lord, and put him into Eli's hands, telling him, that she was the woman, who some years before had begg'd of God to give her a son, and had obtained the effect of his promises. Wherefore, added she, I return him into the hands from which I received him, that he may be dedicated to God as long as he lives. They therefore adored the Lord; and Hannah composed an hymn of [1 Sam. ii.] thanksgiving, wherein she exalts the power of God's mercy, who produces fruitfulness or barrenness, as he pleases. What happened to Hannah, after she had made an offering of Samuel, is not known; but we shall see in another place how many blessings blessings God heaped on Samuel, whose birth was the effect of his mother's prayers and blessings.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. The Tabernacle is sometimes called the Temple, 1 Sam. xix. 2 Sam. xxii. 7. Psalm xviii. 3. Josephus terms it, ναὸν μεταφερόμενον, a moveable Temple.

Hannekeb

HANNEKEB, or Nekeb, a City of [Josh. xix. 33.] Naphtali. The Author of the Vulgate joins it with Adami, in this manner, Adami [Gemar. Ierosol. Megill. fol. 70. col. 1.] quæ est Neceb. The Rabbins say, that its name was changed, and that it was afterwards called Ziadata.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hanniel

HANNIEL, the son of Ephod, of the Tribe of Manasseh, was one of the Deputies appointed to go and view the promised Land. Numb. xxxiv. 23.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hanoch

HANOCH. See ENOCH IV. V.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hanun (I)

I. HANUN, the son of Nahash King of the Ammonites, is very well known in Scripture for the insult offered to David's Ambassadors, who came to complement him upon his father's death. Hanun by the advice of some evil counsellors, who told him, that David had no other view but to discover the weakest places of the country, in order to attack him afterwards to more [2 Sam. x. and 1 Chr. xix.] advantage; gave directions to cut off the Ambassadors clothes half way their bodies, and to shave their beards: and in this manner he dismissed them. David exasperated at such a dishonourable way of proceeding, declared war against the Ammonites, and sent Joab with the choice of his troops against them. The Ammonites procured [In the year of the World 2967, before J. C. 1033, before the Vulgar Æra 1037.] assistance from Syria, and from beyond the Euphrates; but Joab giving part of the army to his brother Abishai, attacked the Syrians, while Abishai fell upon the Ammonites. They conquered on both sides, and dispersed the enemy wheresoever they met him. David, upon intelligence of this success, passed the river Jordan in person, with the rest of his troops, and defeated the Syrians in a set battle.

[In the year of the World 2968, before J. C. 1032, before the Vulgar Æra 1036.] The year following the war continued still against the Ammonites a. David sent Joab to besiege Rabbah their Capital. During this siege, David committed the sin of adultery with Bathsheba, and procured the death of Uriah by the sword of the Ammonites. When the city was reduced to the [a 2 Sam. xi. xii.] last extremities, Joab gave notice of it to David, who came with the rest of Israel, took the city, put the inhabitants under saws, harrows, and axes of iron, and carried off a great booty. The other cities of the Ammonites he treated in the same manner.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hanun (II)

II. HANUN, the son of Seleph; after the return from Babylon, in the time of Nehemiah. He contributed to the building of the valley-gate. Nehem. iii. 13.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hapharaim

HAPHARAIM, a city in the Tribe of [Josh. xix. 19.] Issachar. Eusebius says, that in his time, there was a place called Apharaïm, six miles from Legio northward.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hara

HARA, a city or canton of Assyria, whither the Israelites of the ten Tribes were transplanted by Tiglath-Pileser. 1 Chr. v. 26.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Haran (I)

I. HARAN, the son of Caleb, and Ephah his Concubine. 1 Chr. ii. 36.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Haran (II)

[Epiphan. lib. 1. de Hæresib. Hieron. quæst. Hebr. in Genes. Lyran. in Genes. xi.] II. HARAN, the eldest son of Terah, and brother to Abraham and Nahor. Haran was the father of Lot, Milcah, and Iscah. Nahor married Milcah, and Abraham, according to several Interpreters, married Sarah, otherwise called Iscah. But this last opinion with respect to the marriage of Abraham and Iscah, is very dubious. Haran died before his father Terah; a particular, whereof there had been no example till that time. St. Epiphanius says, that Haran was smitten by God, as a punishment to his father Terah, who had forged new Gods. The Rabbins tell us, that Haran was accused by Terah for refusing to adore Fire, and condemned to be cast into a burning furnace; where he was consumed in the presence of his father. Others say, that Abraham having set fire to the place where Terah's idols were, and Haran attempting to rescue them from the flames, was himself consumed by them.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Haran

HARAN, otherwise Charræ in Mesopotamia, a city celebrated for having been the place where Abraham first retreated [Genes xi. 31, 32. Gen. xxvii. 45. xxviii. 10. &c.] after he left Ur; and where Terah, Abraham's father, died and was buried. Thither it was likewise that Jacob retired to Laban, when he fled from the indignation of his brother Esau. Lastly, at Haran or Charræ in Mesopotamia, Crassus the Roman General was defeated, and killed by the Parthians. Haran was situated between the Euphrates and the river Chebar, at a good distance from the place, where these two rivers join. Some read it Charan, but the Author of the Vulgate always Haran [See Basnage Antiquitez des Juifs, t. 2. p. 542.] .

M. Basnage in his Antiquities of the Jews, printed in 1723, pretends that some have unadvisedly endeavoured to find the city of Ur between Nisibe and the Tigris, and the city of Haran at Charræ in Mesopotamia, between the Euphrates and the river Chaboras. He maintains that Ur was situated pretty near the place where the city of Edessa was afterwards built, the Capital of King Abgarus's kingdom; and that Haran or Charan was a town, at present unknown, out of the limits of Mesopotamia, in Syria of Shobah, in the way towards the land of Canaan. I report this opinion only for the sake of its singularity; the Author bringing nothing but very weak conjectures [Hardouin. Chronolog. V. T. p. 24.] to support it.

F. Hardouin believed that Haran was in Mesopotamia; which he places between Jordan and the Euphrates; and that it is not the city Charræ, celebrated for the defeat of Crassus; but that of Palmyra, or some other city in Cœle-Syria. He endeavours to prove, that there was a Mesopotamia on this side the Euphrates, between this river and Jordan; and this he does by the title of the Ixth Psalm, which imports that David fought in Mesopotamia and in Syria of Shobah; and again, by the iid chapter, verse 14. of the book of Judith, where it is said, that Holofernes having passed the Euphrates, came into Mesopotamia. But these authorities do by no means prove his assertion. The title of the above-named Psalm does not say, that Mesopotamia was on this side of the Euphrates; David might make war in Mesopotamia at one time, and in Syria of Shobah at another; or rather we should say, that he defeated the people of Mesopotamia in Syria, and on this side of the Euphrates. See 2 Sam. x. 16, 19. 1 Chr. xix. 19. Holofernes might have returned to the other side of the Euphrates, and into Mesopotamia, after having first of all passed this river.

The people of Charræ in Mesopotamia are said to have adored the Moon under the name and habit of a God, and not a Goddess; and that in the worship which they paid to this Deity, the men wore the habit of women, and the women that of men.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Harbonah

HARBONAH, Abasuerus's Eunuch, who was appointed to see Haman executed. Esth. i. 10. vii. 9.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hard

[Gen. xlv. 5.] HARD, is taken for difficult, sad, unfortunate, cruel, austere, &c. Non vobis durum esse videatur, quòd me vendidistis. The Hebrew, Now therefore be not sad that ye sold me [Gen. xlix. 7.] hither. Cursed be their wrath, for it was hard; in the Hebrew, for it was obstinate. [Exod. i. 14.] Pharaoh overwhelmed the Israelites with hard labour, with tasks that were difficult and insupportable. Ye are a people of a hard [Exod. xxxii. 9. 2 Sam. iii. 39. 1 Sam. xxv. 3.] head, untractable, inflexible. These sons of Zerviah are too hard for me; treat me with insolence, with unseasonable cruelty. Nabal was a hard and evil-conditioned man; a man without humanity, without gentleness, without [Psal. xvii. 4.] consideration. I followed hard ways, I led an austere life; my behaviour was morose. A hard heart, hardened, insensible. A hard forehead, insolent. I have made thy [Ezek. iii. 8.] forehead hard against their foreheads. The Israelites are hardened to the degree of insensibility: they have lost all shame. I will make you still harder and bolder in reproving evil, than they are in committing it. And in [Isai. l. 7.] Isaiah, I have made thy face like a rock, very hard. Thy sins are become hard and incorrigible. Propter multitudinem iniquitatis tuæ [Jerem. xxx. 14.] dura facta sunt peccata tua. Envy is hard as [Cant. viii. 6.] hell: it is [Ecclus.] cruel, severe, implacable as death and the grave. An untamed horse is hard; stubborn, unless it is managed betimes.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hare

HARE. This animal is about the size of a Rabbit, but something larger. There is no creature so fruitful as an Hare. It is no uncommon thing to find female Hares actually suckling, and at the same time big with young, some with their Hair already grown; and others more or less formed according to the difference of the times wherein they are conceived. There are likewise Hares to be seen which are both male and female, and use both sexes. I have met with very credible persons, who have assured me, that they have seen and had experience of there being Hares of this kind. It is affirmed, that the Hares upon the Alps are white, while those Mountains are covered with snow, and that afterwards they become grey again like others; which I can scarce believe. Those of them which are white, acquired this colour while they were in the old one's belly; the whiteness of the snow having made an impression on the dam, as Rabbits take the colour which is shewn the old one at the time of her conceiving.

The Hebrews esteem this to be an unclean animal; perhaps because in Palestine it is subject to the mange and leprosy like Foxes. Some Physicians are of opinion, that the flesh of this creature is dry, and promotes melancholy, that it causes obstructions in the spleen and liver, that it is hurtful to the lungs, and hinders people from sleeping[1]. The Romans, on the contrary, set a great value on it:

[Martial. l. 13. Epig. 92. Levit. xi. 6. Arnebeth. LXX.] Inter quadrupedes gloria prima lepus.

Moses ranks it among the unclean creatures, notwithstanding its chewing the cud, because it divided not the hoof. Nam & ipse ruminat, sed ungulam non dividit. Its foot is split into several nails; which alone is sufficient for its being declared unclean. At present people are persuaded that the Hare [Confer Deut. xiv. 7.] doth not chew the cud: but in Moses's time they were in all probability of another opinion; for the Naturalists agree, that it does not chew the cud, and we know of no Author besides Moses, who has written that it [Hist. Animal. l. 3. c. 22.] does. Aristotle has observed, that the Hare has this in common with animals, which chew the cud, that we find something curdled in its stomach. Pope Zachary in his Epistle to St. Boniface, Archbishop of Mentz, exhorts Christians to abstain from the flesh of Hares. Fur ther, Interpreters are divided concerning the signification of the Hebrew, Arnebeth. They agree that it signifies an Hare.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. Pliny tells us, on the contrary, upon Cato's authority, Somnos fieri lepore sumpto in cibis; and takes notice of other particular qualities commonly ascribed to it. The vulgar opinion of its improving the looks of those who eat it, is not forgotten by him. To which Martial alludes in Ep. xxix. l. v. Siquando leporem mittis mihi Gellia, dicis, Formosus septem, Marce, diebus eris. See farther in Pliny, l. 28. c. 19.

Hared

HARED, or Hered. See ARAD. A city in the Tribe of Judah, seated in the most southern part of this Tribe.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hareth

HARETH, a forest in the Tribe of Judah, whither David fled to avoid the persecution of Saul. 1 Sam. xxii. 5.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Harim

HARIM, the third of the twenty-four sacerdotal Families. The descendants of Harim returned from the captivity of Babylon to the number of one thousand and seventeen. [Ezra ii. 39.] There were some of this family, who, having married strange women, separtaed [Ezra x. 21.] from them in obedience to the Law.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Harim

HARIM, his children returned from Babylon to the number of three hundred and twenty. Ezra ii. 32.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hariph

HARIPH, his children returned from Babylon to the number of an hundred and twelve. Neh. vii. 34.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Harnepher

HARNEPHER, the second son of Zophah. 1 Chr. vii. 36.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Harod

HAROD, the Well or Fountain of Harod, Judg. vii. 1. in the great Plain at the foot of mount Gilboa.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Harod

[2 Sam. xxiii. 25.] HAROD, the birth-place of Shammah and Elikah, two valiant men in David's [2 Sam. xxiii. 11.] army. In another place, Shammah is surnamed the Hararite, and in the Chronicles, [1 Chr. xi. 27.] Shammoth the Harorite; and in the same book, Shammoth the Izrahite.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Harodite

[1 Chr. xxvii. 8.] HARODITE, Shammah the Harodite is mentioned in 2 Sam. xxiii. 25. and Shammah the Hararite is named in the same [2 Sam. iii. 33.] chapter, verse 33. He was the son of Agee of Harari or Orori. See hereafter Shammah, [See likewise] where we shall endeavour to clear what relates [2 Sam. and 1 Chr. xi. 27.] to the different Shammahs mentioned in the 2 Sam. xxiii. and 1 Chr. xi.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Harosheth

HAROSHETH, of the Gentiles, a city situated upon the lake Semechon, the place where Sisera dwelt, who commanded the Troops of Jabin, King of Hazor. Judges iv. 2.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Harp

HARP. The Harp is a musical Instrument almost of a triangular figure, and is held upright between the person's legs who plays upon it. It has three parts; the main body of it, which consists of the right side, is made of eight flat fronts of wood, upon which is placed the table, which hath two holes made like trefoil. It has three rows of strings, which in all make seventy eight. The first row contains nine and twenty, which make four octaves; the second row makes the half-turn, and the third is the unison of the first row. There are two rows of pins, which are called buttons, on the right-side, which serve to keep the strings tight in their holes, and are fastned at the other end to three rows of pins placed on the upper side, which are called the Keys.

The Harp is played upon with both hands by pinching them in the same manner together. The musick of it is like that of the Spinnet; for all the strings go by semitones. It is certain that the ancients had no knowledge of the Harp; and Fortunatus shews sufficiently, that it comes from Barbarians.

Romanusque Lyrâ, plaudet tibi Barbarus Harpâ, Græcus Achilliaca, Crotta Bri-

tanna canet. There are some disputes concerning the etymology of the word Harp: some derive it from the people called in Latin, Arpi, who made use of this instrument: others from the German, Herp or Herff; others from the Latin, Carpo. The Cimbri or English-Saxons, called it Harpa, or Hearpa; and it is very probable, that this word, and perhaps the instrument likewise, may be derived from them and their language: for hitherto we have not been informed who communicated it to us.

The figures of the Harp or Cinnor, which are to be seen upon the medals of Simon Maccabæus, have no relation to the Harp we are speaking of, and which our Painters represent King David holding in his hands: it is very like the Lute or Guittar invented by Mercury; but it has but three or four strings: and the most ancient figures of the Lyra, which we see on Basso-relievos, or on Medals, have no more. See MUSICK.

The word Cithara or Cinyra, is commonly translated Harp; and David is represented with an Harp: but we may affirm, that Cithara signifies the ancient Harp which we have described above, under the word Guittar. See our Dissertation upon the musical Instruments of the old Hebrews.

The Nebel or Nablium, or old Psaltirion, was something like our Harp; but the Hasur, or instrument with ten strings mentioned in the Psalms, was much more so. The difference between the Nebel and the Hasur, was this; the first had its hollow founding-belly at the top, and was plaid on below; the Hasur, on the contrary, had its hollow belly below, and was plaid on at the upper part.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Harsha

HARSHA, Head of a Family. Ezra ii. 52.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Harum

HARUM, the father of Aharhel, and son of Cos. 1 Chr. iv. 8.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Haruphite

HARUPHITE. Sephatiah, one of David's brave Officers, is surnamed the Haruphite. 1 Chr. xii. 5.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Haruz

HARUZ, the father of Meshullemeth, the wife of Manasseh King of Judah. 2 Kings xxi. 19.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hasadiah

HASADIAH, the son of Zerubbabel. 1 Chr. iii. 20.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hashabiah (I)

I. HASHABIAH, the son of Amaziah the Levite. 1 Chr. vi. 45.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hashabiah (II)

II. HASHABIAH, a Levite, the son of Jeduthun. The descendants of Hashabiah had the twelfth place among the Levites, who sung in the Temple. 1 Chr. xxv. 3, 19.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hashabiah (III)

III. HASHABIAH, Master of half a street at Keilah, was a contributor towards building the walls of Jerusalem. Nehem. iii. 17.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hashbadana

HASHBADANA, the Levite, who was at Ezra's left hand, while he read the Law. Neh. viii. 4.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hashem

HASHEM, was a considerable Citizen of Jerusalem, 1 Chr. xi. 14. He is called Jashen in Samuel, 2 Sam. xxiii. 32.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hashmonah

HASHMONAH. See ASSEMON.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hashub

HASHUB, one of those who contributed towards building the walls of Jerusalem, after the Jews returned from their captivity. Neh. iii. 11. He repaired the tower of furnaces, with the assistance of Malchijah.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hashubah

HASHUBAH, the son of Zerubbabel. 1 Chr. iii. 20.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hashum

HASHUM. His descendants returned from Babylon to the number of three hundred twenty eight, Neh. vii. 22. or, as in Ezra ii. 19. to the number of two hundred twenty three.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hassenaah

HASSENAAH; the sons of Hassenaah, after the return from Babylon, made the Gate, which was surnamed the Fish-gate, of Jerusalem. Neh. iii. 3.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

To Hate

TO HATE, is not always to be understood rigorously. It frequently signifies nothing more than a lesser degree of love. No one can serve two masters: for either he [Luke xvi. 13.] will hate the one, and love the other; that is to say, will neglect the service of the one, and attach himself to the other. And Solomon, He who spareth the rod, hateth his child. Fathers often spare their children out of an excessive love to them; 'tis true indeed, this is not a proper instance of affection, to forbear correcting them. If a man have two wives, one beloved, and another hated; that [Deut. xxi. 15.] is to say, less beloved. Thus Jesus Christ says, that he who would follow him, must [Luke xiv. 26.] hate father and mother; that is to say, should love them less than his salvation, ought not to prefer them to God. He who loveth iniquity, hateth his own soul. And[1] [Psal. x. 16. Eph. v. 29.] St. Paul, No one hateth his own flesh; himself, his life, his relations, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. Thus our Author, according to his Vulgate, which herein agrees with the Septuagint, who translate this passage in the sense wherein it is here cited, Ὁ δὲ ἀγαπῶν ἀδικίαν μισεῖ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ ψυχήν. Our English Version construes the original in another manner; The Lord alloweth the righteous, but him that delighteth in wickedness does his soul abhor. But perhaps the Reader may be of opinion, that the Greek and Latin Translations above mentioned may express more exactly the meaning of the Hebrew, which runs thus; חמס שנאה נפשו יהוה צדיק יבחן ורשע ואהב.

Hattush

HATTUSH, the son of Shecaniah, of David's Family. 1 Chron. iii. 22. Ezra viii. 2.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Havilah (I)

[Gen. x. 7. Gen. ii. 11.] I. HAVILAH, the son of Cush, according to Bochart, peopled that part of Arabia the Happy, where the Tigris and Euphrates re-unite, in order to discharge themselves together into the Persian Gulf. This probably is the land of Havilah spoken of Gen. xxv. 18. 1 Sam. xv. 7. which reached as far as Shur over against Egypt. The sons of Ishmael had their inheritance in this territory; They dwelt from Havilah unto Shur that is before Egypt, as thou goest towards Assyria.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Havilah (II)

[Gen. x. 29.] II. HAVILAH, the son of Joktan, in all probability peopled Colchis, and the country which is encompassed by the river Pison, or Phasis. These are in Armenia, and in the territories of the Colchians, the cities Cholva and Cholvata, and the region of Choloveta, taken notice of by Haiton.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Havoth-Jair

HAVOTH-JAIR. The Hebrew Havoth or Avoth signifies properly Cabbins, or Houses belonging to the Arabians, which are put together in a circle, and this collection of them produces an hamlet or village. And this is the signification of Havoth still at this day in Arabic. These villages of Jair were so called, because Jair [Numb. xxxii. 41. חות יאיר Josh. xiii. 31, 32. Luke iii. 1. Joseph. Antiq. l. 17. c. 7. Hieron. ad Ezek. xlvii. 16. Apud Reland.] the son of Manasseh conquered and possessed them. They were in the Batanæa, beyond Jordan, in the land of Gilead[1], and belonged to the Half-Tribe of Manasseh.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Euseb. & Hieronym. in Avoth-Jair.

Havran

HAVRAN. Ezekiel, xlvii. 16. speaks of Havran as a Canton situated to the north-east of the holy Land. Some suppose it to be the same as Ituræa. St. Luke says, that Philip the son of Herod was master of Ituræa and the Trachonitis. Josephus says, that he possessed Batanæa, Trachonitis, and Auranitis: where it is observable, that the Auranitis and Ituræa are put one for the other. St. Jerom says, that Havran is a city in the wilderness belonging to the country of Damascus. An Arabian Geographer places the land of Havran, as he speaks, or [Paræst. t. 1. l. 1. c. 22. p. 107.] Auran, to the south of Damascus; and Abulfeda says, that Bozra is the Capital of the country of Havran. Golius in his notes upon Abulpharga says, that the Syrians and Arabians call that part of the land Havran, where Tiberias on the sea of Galilee is situated. William of Tyre calls it the Auranitis. It is certain that the Auranitis was beyond [1 Kings xix. 15, 16.] Jordan.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hazael

HAZAEL. The prophet Elijah being at mount Horeb, received orders from God to go and anoint Hazael to be King of Syria. The Prophet set out upon his journey towards him; but it does not appear [In the Year of the World 3097, before J.C. 903, before the Vulg. Æra 907. a 2 Kings vii. 7. In the year of the World 3120, before J.C. 880, before the Vulgar Æra 884.] that he himself executed this commission. Elisha many years after going to Damascus a, foretold to Hazael, that he should reign over Syria. I shall give a short account of what happened upon this occasion. Benhadad King of Damascus was at that time indisposed: and being informed that the prophet Elisha was coming to Damascus, he sent Hazael with great presents to meet him, in order to consult him concerning his disease. Hazael asked the Prophet whether Benhadad would recover. Elisha answered, Tell him, he shall be cured; but God hath declared to me, that he shall surely die. At the same time Elisha shewed some sort of disorder, his countenance changed, and he shed tears.

Hazael asked him, why he wept? Because, said Elisha, I know how many calamities thou wilt bring upon the children of Israel: their strong Cities thou wilt burn, their young men thou wilt put to the sword, their little infants thou wilt dash against the ground, and rip up the women, who are big with child. Hazael answered, Is thy servant a dog, that he should do these things? The Lord, said Elisha, hath revealed to me, that thou shalt be King of Syria. Hazael returned to the King his master, told him he would recover his health; but the next day he stifled him with a cloth dipt in water, which he spread over his face; and Benhadad being dead, he reigned in his place.

Hazael without delay executed all the evils which Elisha had foretold, that he would bring on Israel. Jehu breaking up the siege of Ramoth-Gilead, and coming to [2 Kings x. 32, 33.] Samaria with his army, Hazael took the advantage of his absence, fell upon his territories beyond Jordan, destroyed all the land of Gilead, Gad, Reuben, and Manasseh, from Aroer to Bashan. Many years passed without Hazael's undertaking any thing against the Kingdom of Judah, because it was more remote from Damascus. He began not to distress it till the reign of Joash the son of Jehoahaz. He laid siege to Gath, took it, and marched against Jerusalem b. Joash perceiving himself not to be strong enough to resist him, gave him all the money, which was in his treasury, [In the year of the World 3165, before J.C. 835, before the Vulgar Æra 839. b 2 Kings xii. 17, 18, &c. xiii. c 2 Chron. xxiv. 23, 24, &c.] and in the treasuries belonging to the House of God, to ingage him to retire. The year following, Hazael's army returned against Joash, c entred into the territories of Judah and Jerusalem, slew all the Princes of the people, and sent a very rich spoil to the King of Syria. The Syrian army was not numerous; but God delivered up to it great multitudes of the inhabitants of Judah; and Joash himself was treated by the Syrians with the utmost ignominy. Hazael did not spare the King of Israel any more than he had done the King of Judah; but what the mischief was which he did him, is not very distinctly known to us. He died much about the same time as Jehoahaz King of Israel; and was succeeded by his son Benhadad.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hazar-Addar

HAZAR-ADDAR, a village mentioned [About the year of the World 3165, before J.C. 835, before the Vulgar Æra 839.] in Numb. xxxiv. 2.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hazar-Gadda

HAZAR-GADDA, a city of Judah, lying towards the south. Joshua xv. 27.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hazar-Mavith

HAZAR-MAVITH, the third son of Joktan. There is a city called Asarmoth in Armenia. Some believe the Sarmatæ were so named from Asarmoth or Hazar-mavith.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hazar-Shual

HAZAR-SHUAL, a city in the Tribe of Simeon, or Judah. Josh. xv. 28. Neh. xi. 27. Hazar or Chazer-Shual may signify the dwelling of a fox.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hazar-Susim

HAZAR-SUSIM, a city of Simeon, 1 Chr. iv. 13. Chazer-Susim signifies the dwelling of horses. It is called Hazar- Susah, Joshua xix. 5.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hazazel

HAZAZEL, the name given to the Scape-Goat. See AZAZEL and SCAPEGOAT.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hazerim

HAZERIM, Hazeroth, Hazor, Azerothaim. These names all signify the same thing, and are often put before the names of places. Hazer or Chazer signifies a porch or dwelling. There is a town called Hazor in Arabia-Petræa, which in all probability is the same as Hazerim, the ancient habitation of the Hivites, before they were driven away by the Caphtorims, or inhabitans of the Isle of Crete, who settled in Palestine. It is likewise, according to all appearances, the same as Hazeroth, where the Hebrews incamped in their journey through the wilderness. Num. xi. 34. xiii. 1. xxxii. 1.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hazezon-Tamar

HAZEZON-TAMAR. This is the same as En-gedi, upon the western coast of the Dead-Sea. See EN-GEDI.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Haziel

HAZIEL, the son of Shimei, a Levite, and a Singer. 1 Chr. xxiii. 9.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hazor (I)

I. HAZOR, a city in the Tribe of Judah. Joshua xv. 2. Eusebius speaks of a Town called Hazor, to the East of Askelon.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hazor (II)

II. HAZOR, New Hazor, otherwise Hezron, in the same Tribe. Josh. xv. 25.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hazor (III)

III. HAZOR, a city in the Tribe of Naphtali. Joshua xix. 36. This probably is the famous city of Hazor, King Jabin's Capital, which was taken by Joshua, after the great battle, wherein he defeated Jabin, and his allies, near the waters of Merom. Joshua xi. 7—10, 11. Hazor was situated upon the lake Semechon.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hazor (IV)

IV. HAZOR, built by Solomon. It is no contradiction to say, that it was Hazor of Naphtali, which Solomon rebuilt or fortified; for the Hebrews having no compounded name, often use the word build instead of rebuild.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Head

HEAD,

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Head

HEAD, Caput. This word has several significations besides its natural one, whereby it denotes the Head of a Man. To be at the Head, in capite, to command, conduct, govern. Thou hast caused men to ride over our [Psal. lxvi. 12. Psal. xviii. 44. Lam. i. 5. Deut. xxviii. 13. Psal. xxxix. 8.] Heads: Thou hast given us masters. Thou hast made me the Head of the Heathen: Thou hast advanced me to the regal State. His enemies were upon his Head; facti sunt hostes ejus in capite. And Moses; Constituit te Dominus in caput, & non in caudam: Thou shalt be always master, and never in subjection.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Head

HEAD, for beginning. In capite libri scriptum est de me: In the beginning of the book it is written of me. The Hebrew has, in volumine libri, in the volume of the book, or in the book folded up in rolls after the manner of the ancients. The river of Paradise was divided into four Heads, in [Gen. ii. 10.] quatuor capita, into four springs, four branches. The Stone which the builders rejected was placed at the Head of the corner, [Psal. cxvii. 22.] in caput anguli, was the first in the angle, whether it were dispos'd at the top of that angle to adorn and crown it, or at bottom to support it. Thy sons are killed, and thrown to the ground at the Head of all the streets, in the beginning of the high-ways; in capite [Isa. li. 20. Job xx. 16.] omnium viarum.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Head

HEAD is taken sometimes for poison, because the Hebrew Rosch, which signifies Head, signifies likewise poison. Caput aspidum suget, he shall suck the venom of asps. [Ecclus. xxv. 22.] And Ecclesiasticus, Non est caput nequius super caput colubri, & non est ira super iram mulieris: there is no poison more dangerous than that of a serpent, and no wrath more impetuous than that of a woman.

[Amos viii. 10.] In times of mourning, they covered their Heads, they cut and plucked off their hair; super omne caput calvitium, say the Prophets, speaking of unhappy times; on the contrary, in prosperity they anointed their Heads with sweet oils: Let thy Head lack no ointments, Eccl. ix. 8.

To shake their HEADS at any one, is sometimes a gesture of contempt and insult: The virgin the daughter of Sion hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her Head at thee. Isa. xxxv. 11, 22. This sometimes was a sign of joy and admiration. Job's friends and relations, after his cure and restoration, came to eat and rejoice with him: Et moverunt caput super eum. Job xlii. 11.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heap

HEAP. The Ancients before the use of writing, and even afterwards, erected very often Heaps of Stone to preserve the memory of certain remarkable events. Jacob in his way to Mesopotamia, having had a vision from heaven at Bethel, set up the stone, which had served him for a pillow, to be a sort of monument, anointed it with oil, vowed that he would offer the tenth part to God of every thing that he should give him, and to look upon this as a consecrated place, and as the house of God. And accordingly, after his return from the other side of the Euphrates, he went to Bethel with all his family; there he offered sacrifices to the Lord, and performed his promises.

The same Patriarch having made a Covenant with Laban his father-in-law, [Gen. xxviii. 11, —18. Gen. xxxi. 44, 45, 47.] upon the mountains of Gilead, they said hereupon one to the other, Come, let us raise here a Heap of Stones; they did so: and afterwards eat upon it in token of friendship. Laban called it the Heap of Witness; and Jacob, the Heap of Testimony; each according to the propriety of his language. And Laban said to Jacob; This Heap shall be as a witness against thee and me this day: for which reason, Gilead was called, the Mountain where the Monument was erected.

[Ex. xx. 25. and xxiv. 4, 5.] It is very probable, that the Altar made of turf, or rough stones, at the foot of mount Sinai; and the twelve Monuments, duodecim titulos per duodecim tribus Israel, which were set up at the same place, in order to offer sacrifices there, at the ceremony of ratifying the Covenant which God had made with Israel; were likewise Monuments of this kind, to serve as memorials to posterity, as well as the Altar composed of rough stones, which was to be raised upon [Deut. xxvii. 4, 5, 6, 7.] mount Ebal, on which burnt-sacrifices were to be offered, and the words of God's Covenant with his people to be inscribed.

[Josh. iv. 3, 5, 6, 7, 9. Josh. xxii. 10, 11.] Joshua erected two Monuments of Stone in memory of the miraculous passage of Jordan; one in the midst of the channel of this river, the other on the shore, at a place called Gilgal; That, says he, when your children ask their fathers in time to come, saying, What mean you by these stones? then ye shall answer them, that the waters of Jordan were cut off before the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord, when it passed over Jordan, whereof these stones shall be for a memorial unto the children of Israel for ever.

After the conquest and distribution of the promised Land; the Israelites of the Tribes of Reuben and Gad, and they of the Half-tribe of Manasseh, who had fought for their brethren, having repassed the Jordan, began to raise a prodigious mass of earth and stones upon the banks thereof, in order to serve as a monument to posterity, and declare to them, that the Hebrews on both sides of this river were but one people, and of the same Religion.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heap

HEAP of Mercury, Acervus Mercurii. See the Article MERCURY.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heaps of Stones

HEAPS of Stones amassed together over the graves of odious persons. We see

8 H [Psal. lxxx. 11. Josh. vii. 26.] some examples of this in Scripture in the person of Achan, whom all the people stoned, and raised a very great Heap of stones over him, which was shewn there long after. The King of Ai was served in [Josh. viii. 29.] the like manner: he hung upon a gibbet till evening, then his dead body was cast out of the city-gate, where a great Heap of stones was raised over him. Absalom received the same treatment. They took Absalom, and cast him into a great pit in the wood, and laid a very great Heap of stones upon him, &c. 2 Sam. xviii. 17. The Prophets likewise speak of Heaps of stones to be seen in the ruins of depopulated cities. Damascus shall be as a ruinous Heap, Isa. xvii. 1. as also of the Heaps of stones which were gathered together in fields and vineyards; I will make Samaria as an Heap of the field, and as plantings of a vineyard, Micah i. 6.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

To Hear

[Luke i. 17.] TO HEAR, is often used for to Obey: Thou hast not heard my voice; who wouldst not obey me. Why hearest thou what they [1 Sam. xxiv. 10. Gen. xvi. 5.] say against David? Why believest thou my enemies? The Lord shall hear between thee and me: he shall be witness to my innocence, and the injustice that thou doest me. To Hear is used likewise for to approve, and for to hearken, to learn, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heart

HEART. This word has a particular emphasis in all languages. The Hebrews look upon the Heart as the source of wit, understanding, love, courage, grief, and pleasure. Hence are derived infinite many ways of speaking. To find his Heart, possess his Heart, incline his Heart, to bind his Heart towards the Lord. A good Heart, an evil Heart, a liberal Heart, a Heart which does an act of kindness freely, voluntarily, with generosity, &c. To harden one's Heart, to lift up one's Heart to God; to beseech him to change our stony Hearts into Hearts of flesh. To love with all one's Heart: to have but one Heart and one Soul with any one. To turn the Hearts of the children to the fathers, and the Hearts of the fathers to the children; to cause them to be perfectly reconciled, and that they should be of the same mind.

[Jerem. xii. 11. Hosea vii. 11.] To want Heart, sometimes denotes to want understanding and prudence. Columba seducta non habens cor; a Dove without wit and cunning. O fools and slow [Luke xxiv. 25. Matth. xiii. 15.] of Heart; senseless men, without insight and understanding. The Heart of this people is stupified, so as to be destitute of understanding. Incrassatum est cor populi hujus .... ne corde intelligant. Thou shalt speak unto all that are wise-hearted, whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom: [Exod. xxviii. 3. Ezek. xiii. 2.] Cunctis sapientibus corde. The false Prophets speak from their Heart: Dices prophetantibus de corde suo, who give out their own imaginations for true prophecies. To lay any thing to Heart, or set one's Heart on any thing; that is to say, to remember it, to apply one's self to it, to have it at Heart. The righteous perisheth, and no one layeth it to Heart; no one concerns himself about it. To return to one's Heart; redire ad cor, to recollect one's self.

[Ezek. xxvii. 4. Psal. xlvi. 2.] Tender of Heart, that is to say, timorous. The Heart dilates with joy, contracts with sadness, breaks with sorrow, grows fat, and hardens in prosperity: it sometimes resists truth; God opens it, prepares and turns it as he pleases. To steal one's Heart, is an expression in Gen. xxxi. 20. to do any thing without one's knowledge. The Heart melts, under discouragement; the Heart forsakes one, under terror; the Heart is desolate, in amazement; the Heart is fluctuating, in doubt. To possess one's Heart, to be master of its motions. To speak to any one's Heart, to comfort him, to say pleasing and affecting things to [Joel ii. 13.] him.

By the Heart likewise the middle of any thing is meant; for example, Tyre is in the Heart of the sea, in the midst of the sea. We will not fear, though the Mountains be carried into the Heart of the sea. As Jonas was three days and three nights in the Whale's belly; so shall the Son of [Matth. xii. 40.] man be three days and three nights in the Heart of the earth. And Moses, speaking to the Israelites, says, And the Mountain burnt with fire unto the Heart of heaven; [Gen. xix. 24. Rom. x. 10.] it rose as high as the clouds.

We should rent our Hearts, and not our Garments. To obtain righteousness, we must believe with the Heart: Corde creditur ad justitiam. God promises to give his [Deut. xxix. 4. Heb. xiii. 9. Deut. xvii. 3. Ps. cxlvii. 4.] people an understanding Heart, an Heart fearing God. The Heart should be established with Grace, and not with bodily nourishment.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heaven

HEAVEN. Heaven and Earth in Gen. i. 1. are used for all sensible creatures. Heaven likewise is often taken for the Air: the birds of Heaven, are the birds which fly in the Air: the waters of Heaven, the cataracts of Heaven, are the rainwaters. God caused fire and brimstone to rain down from Heaven on Sodom; that is to say, to descend from the Air. The Dew of Heaven, the Manna which fell from Heaven; the Clouds of Heaven, the Winds of Heaven; in all which passages, Heaven is put for the Air.

The Stars are placed in Heaven, or in the Firmament. The Hebrews conceived the Heavens, where the stars appeared, to [Gen. i. 14, 15, 16, 17.] be a solid and extended vault. God placed the Sun and moon in the firmament of Heaven. The stars are called the host of Heaven. God, like a powerful Monarch, calleth the stars by their names, and giveth them his orders. The God of the Hebrews is named, not only by the Jews, but also by the heathens and strange people, the God of Heaven; because the Jews adored [Ezra i. 2. v. 11. vi. 9, 10. vii. 12, &c. Judith v. 9, 12. Jonah i. 9.] nothing sensible, and said their God was in Heaven; that there he had his throne, and exercised his sovereign dominion over all creatures.

The Heaven of Heavens is the highest Heaven, as the Song of Songs is the most excellent Song; the God of Gods, the Lord of Lords; the greatest of the Gods, the most powerful of Lords. There is likewise the third Heaven mentioned by St. Paul; for [2 Cor. xii. 2.] the Hebrews acknowledged three Heavens; 1. The aërial Heaven, where the birds fly, the winds blow, and the showers are formed. 2. The Heaven or Firmament, wherein the stars are dispo-sed. 3. The Heaven of Heavens, or the third Heaven, which is the place of God's residence, the dwelling of Angels and the Blessed.

The names of the Saints, of the Predestinated, [Luke x. 20. Hebr. xii. 13.] are written in Heaven, in the book of life. The Tables of Heaven, mentioned in the Testament of the twelve Patriarchs, and in some other ancient works, were, in all probability, certain apocryphal Books, wherein divers pretended prophecies had been collected. Others think, that they were secrets in judicial Astro-logy; others again, that they were the prototypes [Vide Dodwell. Simon. apud Fabric. Apocryph. V. T. t. 2. p. 551.] of Moses's Laws, and even of the New Testament, which were believed to be in Heaven.

The Kingdom of Heaven, is understood in different senses; as may be seen under the Article KINGDOM.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heaviness

HEAVINESS. Heavy. Heaviness of heart and ears, is an expression, which has been used for hardness of heart, and indocility. See the Articles HEART, EARS, and WEIGHT.

The Heaviness of God's hand, or his [1 Sam. v. 12.] hand lying heavy upon any one; denotes, that in his wrath, he uses chastisements, like a master or a father, who corrects his son or servant with severity. A heavy yoke, [Deut. xxvi. 6. 1 Kings xii. 4. Ps. xxxiv. 18. Ex. viii. 24. Numb. xi. 14.] or a heavy weight, signifies slavery, servitude under cruel and merciless masters.

Populus gravis, a great people, a numerous assembly. Musca gravissima, a very troublesome multitude of flies. Populus iste gravis est mihi, this people is insupportable to me. Gravis nox, an uneasy night. Infirmitas gravis, a dangerous disease. Gravis somnus, deep sleep. Multitudo gravis, a great multitude. Mandata gravia, commands hard in practice. Alligant onera gravia, they put heavy loads upon other people's shoulders. Matth. xxiii. 4, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heber

[Gen. xi. 14.] HEBER, or Eber, the son of Salah, was born in the year of the World 1723, before Jesus Christ 2277, before the Vulgar Æra 2281. Several[1] have been of opinion, that from Heber, one of the ancestors of the Hebrews, Abraham and his descendants after him, were called Hebrews. But it is much more probable, that this name was given to Abraham and his family, because they came from beyond the Euphrates into the Land of Canaan[2]; so that by Hebrew, nothing else is meant in its original, but one come from beyond the Euphrates. Heber in Hebrew, signifies beyond, or only passage. Why should Abraham, who was no nearer [c 1. Heber. 2. Peleg. 3. Reu. 4 Serug. 5. Nahor. 6. Terah. 7. Abraham.] than the sixth in generation to Heber c, why should he take his name rather from this Patriarch, than from any other of his Ancestors? Why not rather from Shem, for example, who is styled by Moses, the father of all the children of Heber, or of the other side of the Euphrates; than from Heber, whose life is not in any circumstance extol'd in Scripture? The first time that Abraham is called an Hebrew[3], is about ten years after his arrival in the Land of Canaan, and upon the occasion of the war with Chedorlaomer and his allies. The Septuagint and Aquila translate the Hebrew, Heberi, Perates, or Peraites, which signifies a Passenger, one who came from beyond the river. They who would more particularly understand this question, may read Walton's Prolegomena, and other books written on this subject, and our Comment upon Genesis x. 24.

There is another question upon which the Ancients and Moderns are divided; viz. Whether the Hebrew Tongue derives its name from Heber, and whether upon the confusion of Languages, which happened at Babel, it continued only in the family of Heber and his descendants. As the confusion of Languages was looked upon to be the punishment of their temerity, who undertook to build this Tower, there seems reason to presume, that Heber's posterity, which seemed then to be designed by God to be the Stock from whence the holy Family should proceed, and to have the true Religion left in trust with them, had no share in this undertaking, nor consequently in the penalty, which followed.

Two things are said in reply to this: 1. There is no proof that Heber's family was not concerned in building the Tower of Babel. And, 2. that the Hebrew Tongue was the language of other people, who had no relation to Heber's family; for example, the Phœnicians or Canaanites, the Syrians and τῷ περαίτῃ. and Philistins, in Abraham's time, spoke Hebrew, or a language very little different from it. It cannot be said therefore, that this language was peculiar to Heber's family.

Why then, it will be said, was it called the Hebrew Tongue? was it because it was spoken beyond the Euphrates, as we have observed above, that Abraham was called an Hebrew, because he came from the other side of this river? I answer, 1. That there is great probability, that this language was spoken in Chaldæa and Mesopotamia in Abraham's time, since when this Patriarch came among the Canaanites, he was at no trouble to make himself understood, or to understand the language of the country. And when Jacob went from the Land of Canaan into Mesopotamia, he spoke, understood, and was himself understood without an interpreter. His two wives Rachel and Leah, gave their children Hebrew names. The names of the persons and places in these Provinces, as well as those in Palestine, are Hebrew. It is not therefore improbable, that the Hebrew language was so called, because it was spoken beyond the Euphrates.

But it was spoken likewise on this side of this river, and that too with more purity, and for a longer time than in Chaldæa and Mesopotamia, as is proved by the Monument erected on mount Gilead by Jacob and Laban, who each gave it a different name according to the propriety of their language: which shews that even then the [Gen. xxxi. 47.] Syriac was pretty different from the Hebrew or Phœnician; whereas till the Empire of the Greeks took place, the Hebrew, Cananæan, and Phœnician, and the language of the Philistins and Samaritans, were all in their purity in Palestine. There seems therefore to be reason for our asserting, that the Hebrew Tongue is called so rather from the Hebrews, the descendants of Abraham, than from the people on the other side of the Euphrates, who for the most part were not descended from Heber. Besides, we are not to imagine, that the Language which we call Hebrew, was known commonly by this name among the Heathens. By them it was called the Phœnician, Syriac, or Punic[4] Language, or the Language of the Jews. Among us it is so celebrated by the name of the Hebrew, or holy Language, for no other reason, but because it is the Idiom, wherein the divine Oracles of the Old Testament are written. The very letters which at this day pass for the true and ancient Hebrew letters, are rather the Chaldæan. The real Hebrew or Phœnician characters are preserved only in Medals, and in the Pentateuch of the Samaritans. See SAMARITANS.

[Alcoran: chapter concerning Hond.] Mahomet in his Alcoran calls Heber, Hond, and has written a whole chapter about him. You have here what he says of him: " We sent Hond to Aad his " brother's people, to whom he addressed " himself in these words: O ye people, " adore but one God, otherwise ye will " be reckoned among Infidels. I ask no

“ reward of you for the trouble which I “ take in preaching to you; he who created “ me, will recompense me for it. Will “ you never be wise? Beg pardon of “ God, be converted, and obey his divine “ Will, and he will send you rain from “ heaven; and will encrease your strength “ and riches: be not of the number of the “ wicked. They replied, O Hond, thou “ bringst no reason to prove what thou “ sayest; thy words will not induce us to “ forsake our Gods; we give no credit to “ thy discourses, and tell thee, that some “ of our Gods will severely chastise thee. “ He answered; I take God and yourselves “ to witness, that I am innocent of the sin “ you are guilty of in adoring Idols: if “ you conspire against me, no one will be “ able to protect you at the day of Judgement: I am resigned to the Will of my “ Lord God, and yours..... God adds; “ when we extirpated this people, we delivered Hond by our special Grace from “ their malice, and rescued all true Believers from very great torment. Aad's “ people despised the Commandments of “ God, and disobeyed his Prophets; he “ was cursed in this world, and shall be “ cursed at the day of Judgment, because “ he was disobedient unto God, and formed “ a design of extirpating his brother Hond's “ people.”

In the same chapter intitled Hond, there are several passages which relate to positive Predestination and Reprobation, which obliged Mahomet to say, that the chapter concerning Hond had made his hair turn grey before the usual time, so much he had been terrified by it.

Aad's people, to whom Hond was sent, were an ancient people of Arabia, descended from Ad or Aad the son of Amalek, and grandson to Ham the son of Noah; or, according to others, Ad was the son of Uz, and grandson of Aram the son of Shem. Ad reigned in the Province of Adramonth in Arabia, and was father of a Tribe of old Arabians called Adites. This Tribe refusing to hearken to Hond, or Heber, and even conspiring against him, God sent a burning wind against them, named Rih-Akim, which destroyed them all; but before this he sent a famine, which continued three years successively, during which, heaven was with respect to them shut up. During this famine, great part of the Adites perished, who were one of the most numerous and powerful people of Arabia. They addressed themselves in vain to their false Gods, who were Sakiah, whom they invoked for rain; Hafidah, whom they had recourse to for preservation against bad accidents while they were travelling; Razechah, who, as they believed, furnished them with the necessaries of life; and Salemah, whom they implored in times of sickness, for the recovery of their health.

Finding therefore that their Gods gave them no assistance, they vowed a pilgrimage to Hegiaz, where Mecca stands at present. The Deputies who were sent in the name of their nation, had at their head Morthad and Kil, the first a great favourer of Hond, and thoroughly persuaded of the truth of his sermons. Kil, on the contrary, was very averse to him, and very obstinate in his Idolatry. These Deputies coming to Moavia, who reigned in the Province of Hegiaz, desired this Prince to keep Morthad in custody, while they went and finished their pilgrimage. Moavia complied with their request, and they continued their journey: upon their arrival, Kil prayed to God in this manner; O Lord, give, we beseech thee, such rain to Ad's people, as thou pleasest. He had no sooner ended, but three clouds appeared in heaven; one white, another red, and a third black: and at the same time, these words were heard from heaven; Chuse which of these three thou wilt. Kil chose that which was black, believing it to be the thickest and most abounding with water. But when he came into his own country, the cloud, which was swelled only with the wrath of God, produced nothing but a very cold wind; which blowing seven days and seven nights, destroyed all the inhabitants of the country, and left only the prophet Hond or Heber alive, and those who believed what he had said to them. In this same country of Adramonth, they shew a little town, called Cabarhod, that is to say, Hond's tomb, where they pretend that this Prophet was buried.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joseph. Antiq. l. 16. Euseb. Aug. l. 16. de Civit. c. 3. & l. 18. c. 39. Eucher. in Genes. l. 2. c. 7. Beda in Genes. Lyr. Tost. Mercer. Eugub. Perer. alii.

Ita Origen. Hieronym. Chrysost. Theodoret. Burg. Ribera. Arias. Est. Jos. Scal. Munst. Grot. Seld. Lud. Cappell. Walton, &c.

Gen. xiv. 13. אברהם העבריLXX. Ἄβραμ τῷ περάτῃ Aquil.

Translators' note. We have a specimen of this language in Plautus's Pœnulus, Act 5. Scene 1. where Hanno speaking in the Punic language, begins thus; Ythalonim vualomith, which some read, Neth alonim valonoth, &c. or, Ne eth gnaljonim vegneljonoth; or with some little alteration, Ne eth elohim veeloboth. And thus we see a plain affinity between the Hebrew and Punic languages. See Petit. lib. 2. Micell. c. 2. & Steph. Morinus de Linguâ primævâ.

Heber

HEBER, the Kenite, of Jethro's Family, husband to Jael, that heroick woman, who killed Sisera, Commander in chief of Jabin, the King of Canaan's army. Heber's tents and flocks were very near the city of Hazor. Sisera, after his defeat, passing near [In the year of the World 2719, before J. C. 1281, before the Vulgar Æra 1285.] Heber's tent, went in, and desired water for his refreshment. Jael, instead [Judg. iv. 17. &c.] of water, gave him milk; and while he was sleeping, she pierced his temples with one of those great nails, to which the cords of a tent are usually fastened.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hebrew

HEBREW. See HEBER. As to the Epistle to the Hebrews, see the Article St. Paul, in the year of Jesus Christ 63, and the Commentators upon this Epistle.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hebrew Kings

HEBREW Kings. See the Article KINGS.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hebrew High-Priests

HEBREW High-Priests. See the Article PRIESTS.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hebron

[Numb. xiii. 22. Josh. xiv. 15. In the year of the World 2554, before J. C. 1446, before the Vulgar Æra 1450. Josh. xv. 13.] HEBRON, or Chebron, one of the most ancient cities of the world; for it was built seven years before Tanis, the capital of Lower Egypt. Now, as the Egyptians gloried much in the antiquity of their Cities, and their Country was indeed one of the first which was peopled, after the dispersion of Babel, it may be from hence concluded, that it was one of the most ancient. Some think, that it was founded by Arba, one of the oldest Giants in Palestine; for which reason it was called Kirjath-arba, or Arba's City; which name was afterwards changed into that of Hebron. Arba was the father of Anak; and from Anak the Giants called Anakims, took their name; who were still dwelling at Hebron, when Joshua conquered the Land of Canaan.

In the Latin translation of Joshua xiv. 15. we read, the great Adam is buried there: Adam maximus ibi inter Enacim situs est. And St. Jerom[1] in several a places declares it to have been the opinion of the Jews, that Adam was buried there. But the Hebrew may be construed in another sense, and translated,[2] the ancient name of Hebron was Arba. This man (Arba) is the greatest, the chief of the Anakims. We cannot well tell when it first began to be called Hebron: some think, not till it was conquered by Caleb, and that he called it Hebron from one of his sons, whose name this was. But it is my opinion, that the name of Hebron is more ancient; and that Caleb, to do honour to his son, gave him the name of this anient and celebrated place.

[Euseb. in locis, ad vocem Arco. Gen. xxiii. 7, 8, 9. Gen. xviii. 1.] Hebron was situated upon an eminence, twenty miles southward from Jerusalem, and twenty miles north from Beersheba. Abraham, Sarah, and Isaac were buried near Hebron, in the cave of Machpelah, or the double cave, which Abraham bought of Ephron. Near to this place was the Oak or Turpentine-tree, under which Abraham received three Angels.[3] Eusebius,[4] Sozomen, and several others of the Ancients,[5] speak of the veneration, which not only

Chri- Christians, but the very Heathens themselves had for this Turpentine-tree. It was said to have been there ever since the beginning of the World[6]; as if the matter were not sufficiently exaggerated by saying, that it had been there ever since the time of Abraham, that is to say, for above two thousand three hundred years[7]. Others said, it was the staff of one of the Angels, which had taken root in this place. Here there was a Fair settled, which was very much resorted to by all the country, and this Turpentine-tree was thought to be incorruptible; because it seemed sometimes to be all in a flame, from a fire which was made about it, and did not consume it.

Hebron was in the allotment of Judah. The Lord assigned it for the inheritance of [Josh. xiv. 13.] his servant Caleb. Joshua first took Hebron, and killed the King of it, whose name was [Josh. x. 3, 23, 37. Judg. i. 12, 13.] Hoham. But afterwards Caleb again made a conquest of it, assisted by the Troops of his Tribe, and the Valour of Othniel. It was appointed to be a dwelling for the Priests, and declared to be a City of Refuge. David, after [Josh. xxi. 13.] the death of Saul, settled the Seat of his Kingdom there. At Hebron, Absalom began [2 Sam. ii. 2, 3, 4, 5. 2 Sam. xv. 7, 8, &c.] his rebellion. During the captivity of Babylon, the Edomites having invaded the southern part of Judah, made themselves masters of Hebron; wherefore in Josephus it is sometimes [Joseph. Antiq. l. 5. c. 7.] made a part of Edom. Here Zechary and Elizabeth are believed to have dwelt, and St. John Baptist to have been born. Hebron is still in being: but very much fal'n from its ancient lustre.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hieronym. in Epitaph. Paulæ, & in Qu. Heb. in Genes. & in locis Hebr. in Arbog. & Comment. in Matth. xxvii.

האדם הגדל בענקים חוא

Euseb. Demonstr. l. 5. c. 9.

Sozomen. l. 2. c. 3. vel 4.

Vide Hieronym. & Euseb. in locis. Joseph. Georg. Syncell. ex Jul. Afric. p. 107. Socrat. Hist. l. 1. c. 18.

Translators' note. The Author mistakes Moses; the reason he gives for the impurity of this creature, is, because, as he says, it chews the cud, but does not divide the hoof. כי מעלה גרה הוא ופרסה לא יפריס

Translators' note. This Fable seems to be a Copy from the Ancients, who speak with veneration of the miraculous duration of some Trees; as Cicero of the Oak at Arpinum; Pliny of the Olive-tree at Athens; and of the Palm-tree at Delos; which, according to a received Tradition, had been growing there ever since the birth of Apollo, and was still in being in the time of this Historian. Tacitus takes notice of the tree under which Romulus and Remus had been suckled by a Wolf, as then existing at the distance of eight hundred and forty years. Vide Cic. de Leg. l. 1. Plin. Hist. Nat. l. xvi. Tacit. Annal. xiii.

Hebron

HEBRON, the son of Kohath, Chief of the Family of the Hebronites. Exod. vi. 18.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hebrona

HEBRONA, or Ebronah, an incampment of the Israelites, in the wilderness, between Jotbathah and Elath. Numb. xxxiii. 34, 35.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heder

HEDER. The Tower of Heder. St. Jerom observes, that the place, where the Angels declared the birth of Jesus Christ to the Shepherds, was called by this name; Luke ii. 8, 9. The Empress Helena is said to have built a Church upon that very spot, the remains whereof are still visible. See Micah iv. 8. Turris gregis.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hedge-Hog

HEDGE-HOG. Hericius, Herinaceus, Ericius, or Chærogryllus. The Hedge-hog is a little four-footed creature, covered all over with sharp prickles. As soon as it sees itself to be perceived by any man, or dog, it rolls itself up, and forms, as it were, a round ball stuck with sharp points; so that no one can touch it, without hurting himself. It lives in a hole under ground, and feeds upon wild fruits. In Leviticus[1] the Hedge-hog is declared to be unclean, because it does not chew the cud . The Hebrew Schaphan, which the Septuagint and Vulgate render Chærogryllus, an Hedge-hog, signifies, according to some, a Coney; and, as others say, an Hare; and, according to Bochart, a certain large Rat, common in Arabia, and good to eat, called Aliarbuho.

We find likewise the Hebrew word Schaphan in the Psalms[2]; and the Septuagint translate it Lagoos, which may signify an Hare, a Coney, or even an Hedge-hog. Some old Latin Psalters read, Petra refugium leporibus, and others, Herinaciis, as our Copies have it at this day[3]. St. Jerom[4] takes it to be a sort of Rat to be met with in Palestine, about the size of an Hedge-hog, and in the shape almost of a Bear, which lives in holes and hollow places of the rocks.

[Isa. xiv. 23. LXX. Ἐχῖνος.] Besides the Land Hedge-hog, we have been speaking of, there is a Sea Hedge-hog, which has abundance of scales, all covered with points, which it makes use of instead of feet; for its way of walking is rolling itself along. It is in the shape of an oven, and is very thick before and behind. Some are black, red, and inclining to a purple colour; and there are others, the scales, points, and eggs whereof, are white. There is no fish better armed than this. Isaiah speaking of the destruction of Babylon, says, that God would reduce it to be a dwelling for the Hedge-hog, and that it should be no more any thing besides a great marsh of muddy waters. The Hebrew is Kippod, קפדwhich the Septuagint translate Ἐχῖνος, and, St. Jerom, Erinacius. Bochart shews, that several by the Hebrew word understand some sea-fowl, or other water-fowl, as the bittern, heron, vultur, duck, &c. others a beaver, otter, or castor. There is mention made of the same animal in Isaiah xxxiv. 11. and Zeph. ii. 14. but this does not help us better to explain the signification of it.

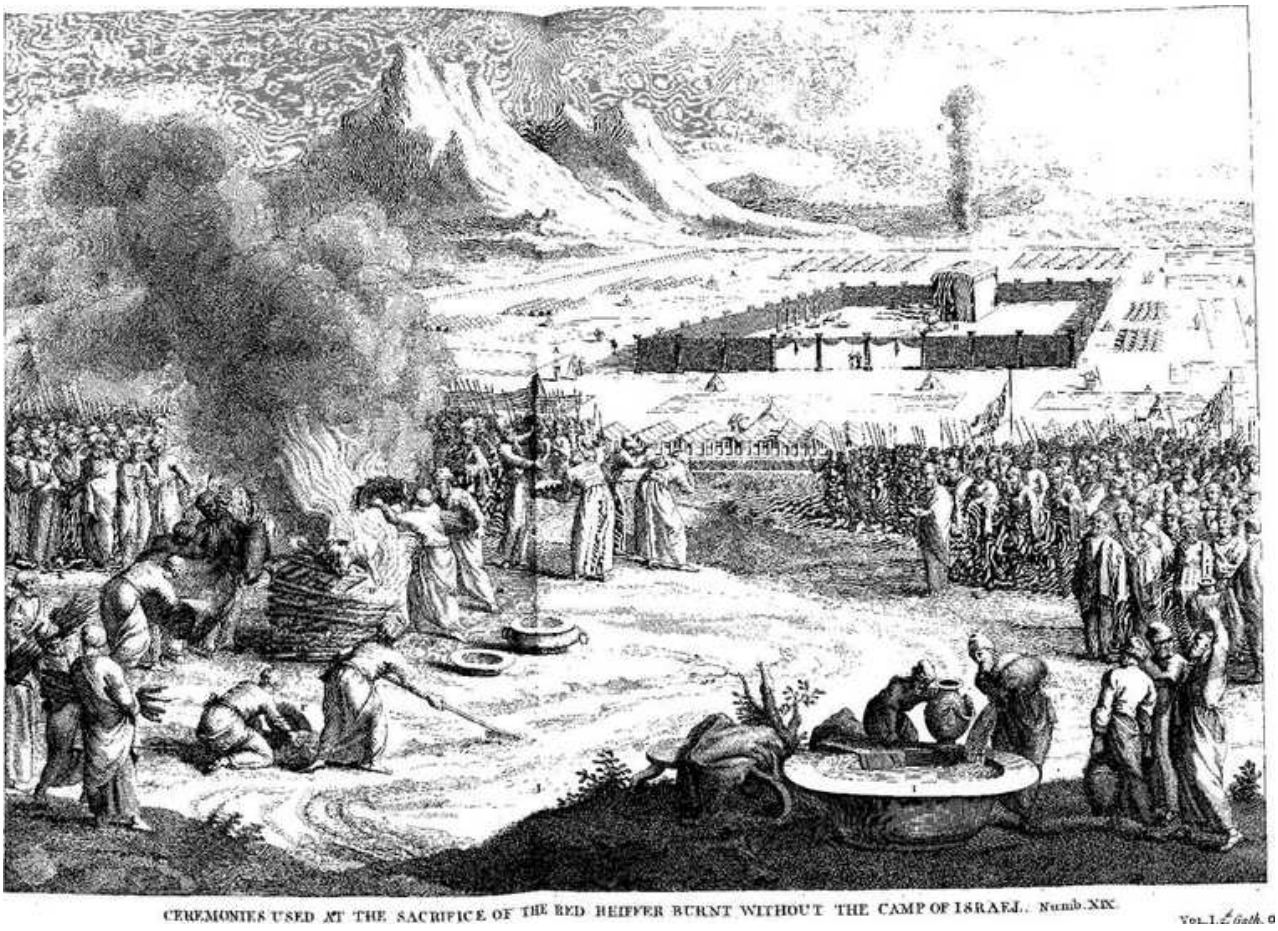
Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Levit. xi. 5. שפן*Schaphan. LXX.* χοιρόγρυλλος. Chorogryllus.

Psal. civ. 18. Hebr. לשפנים*LXX.* Πέτρα καταφυγὴ τοῖς λαγωοῖς.

See St. Augst. on Psalm ciii. Vulg.

Hieronym. Ep. ad Suniam & Fretellam.



Hegai

HEGAI, Esther's Eunuch. Esth. ii. 8.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heifer

[Numb. xix. 2, 3, 4, &c.] HEIFER, Red Heifer. The Lord said unto Moses, " Command the Children " of Israel to bring unto thee a Red Heifer " intire, intire, and without blemish, and that has never borne the yoke. Ye shall put it into the hands of Eleazar the Priest, who shall bring it forth without the Camp, and slay it before all the people. He shall dip his finger in the blood of it, and sprinkle it seven times towards the entrance of the Tabernacle, then burn the Heifer, putting the skin and flesh, the blood and excrements of it, in the flames. The Priest likewise shall throw a bundle composed of cedar-wood, hyssop, and scarlet twice dyed, into the fire that consumes the Heifer; and having washed his body and his clothes, he shall return to the Camp, and remain unclean until the even.

CEREMONIES USED AT THE SACRIFICE OF THE RED HEIFFER BURNT WITHOUT THE CAMP OF ISRAEL.Numb. XIX.

" He likewise who burnt the Heifer shall wash his body and clothes, and remain unclean until the Evening. One that is clean shall gather up the ashes of the Heifer, and carry them out of the Camp into some clean place, that the Israelites may take of them, may carefully preserve them, and make use of them for Water of Separation, because this Heifer was burnt for sin. He who carries the ashes of it, shall wash his body and his clothes, and shall be unclean until the evening. This Ordinance shall be holy and inviolably observed by the Children of Israel, and the strangers that are among them.

" He that toucheth the body of a dead man, and for this reason contracts pollution for seven days, shall be sprinkled with this water the third and seventh day, and so shall be purified. But if he receives no aspersion on the third day, (but on the sixth day only) he cannot be purified on the seventh, (but on the tenth or eleventh only.) Whosoever toucheth the dead body of a man, and is not sprinkled with water mingled with the ashes of the Red Heifer, will defile the Tabernacle of the Lord, (if he appears there in this condition) he shall be unclean, because he was not cleansed with the water of Separation, and his Impurity shall continue upon him."

[Spencer. l. 2. c. 15. de Leg. Hebr. rit.] This is what Moses has ordained relating to this matter; whereupon the Commentators have made the following reflexions. Spencer believes this Ceremony to have been instituted in opposition to the Egyptian Superstitions. The Egyptians never sacrificed Heifers, and the Hebrews generally male creatures only. The former abhor'd red hair, and all animals of the same colour. The Hebrews made no distinction in the colour of Victims but upon this occasion. St. Jerom, [Hieron. Ep. 27.] and many others are of opinion, that the Red Heifer was sacrificed every year, and the ashes of it distributed throughout all the towns and cities belonging to the Israelites. Some of the Rabbins maintain, that there was but one burnt from Moses to the time of Esdras; and that from Esdras to the destruction of the Temple by the Romans, there were but six, or at most nine sacrificed. The same St. Jerom informs us, that this Ceremony was performed always upon the Mount of Olives, directly over against the Temple, from the time that the Ark was fixed at Jerusalem; and the Jews tell us, that after the building of the Temple, the High-Priest always sacrificed this Victim.

There are Authors who suppose the Sacrifice of the Red Heifer to be one of those which were offered in the name of all the people. It was required that it should be [Numb. xix. 2.] without blemish or defect, as well as the Victims used in other sacrifices; that the blood of it should be sprinkled seven times [Ibid. vs. 4. Ibid. vs. 13.] towards the entrance of the Tabernacle; that it should be burnt intirely, and the ashes which remained made use of in purifying people from pollutions contracted on the occasion of any dead body, and to prevent their defiling the Sanctuary and Holy Things.

The Red Heifer, says Abrabanel, was a Sacrifice for the Sins of the whole people of Israel. It may be said, I think, to be a Sacrifice for Sin, but it cannot, in my opinion, be called an Oblation, because this is a name given only to what was offered solemnly to God upon the Altar of Burnt-offerings. The same judgment should be made of that other Heifer, the head whereof was cut off, for the expiation of any murder committed by unknown [Deut. xxi. 1,—9.] persons. This Sacrifice cannot be called an Oblation, because it was not made upon the Altar of Burnt-offerings; nevertheless it was a real Sacrifice for Sin, since by it an atonement was made for murder.

[Hebr. ix. 13.] The Red Heifer which was sacrificed without the Camp, was the Figure of Jesus Christ, whose Blood cleanses our Consciences from all our Sins. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an Heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Jesus Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God? See the Commentators upon Numbers, chap. xix.

An Explanation of the Plate which represents the Ceremony of the Sacrifice of the Red Heifer without the Camp of Israel.

A A A A. The Camp of Israel. B. The Tabernacle of the Congregation

C. The Pillar of Cloud which in the day-time was dark, and light by night, and rested upon the Tabernacle as long as they were to continue encamped.

D. The Pile of wood on which the Red Heifer was burnt after it was slain and flay'd.

E. The High-Priest sprinkling the blood of the Red Heifer seven times before the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

F F. The Priests gathering up the blood and excrements of the Heifer, and throwing them into the fire.

G. Others burning the skin of the Red Heifer.

H. Another bringing a bundle of Cedar-wood and Hyssop, tied together with a woollen-string of a purple colour, in order to throw it into the fire.

I. The great Bason wherein the Priests, after the Sacrifice of the Red Heifer, washed themselves and their clothes before they returned into the Camp.

K. All the people of Israel assembled at the Ceremony of sacrificing the Red Heifer, the Ashes whereof were carefully collected and kept, in order to make the Water of Separation, which was used in Purifications, and Expiations of Uncleanness contracted from some dead body, to prevent the polluting of the Sanctuary, and things holy, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heifers

HEIFERS. As the words Ox and Bull, in the figurative sense of them, signify the Rich and Powerful, the Great who live in an affluence of all things, in a forgetfulness of God, and contempt of the Poor; so in proportion, by Heifers are meant Women who are rich, nice, and voluptuous, who make their pleasure their God. See how the Prophet Amos bespeaks them: Hear this word, ye kine of Bashan, that are in the mountains of Samaria, which oppress the poor, which crush the needy; which say to their masters, Bring and let us drink. And [Hosea iv. 16.] the Prophet Hosea: For Israel slideth back, as a back-sliding Heifer: now the Lord will feed them as a Lamb in a large plain.

The Prophets frequently call the golden Calves of Jeroboam by the name of Calves, or Heifers. The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear because of the Calves of Beth-aven. The Septuagint, and after them Josephus and the Greek Fathers call them golden [LXX. Joseph. PP. Græci Isa. xv. 5. Jer. xlviii. 3, 4.] Heifers. The Hebrew word Hegel signifies properly a Calf; but the Hebrews without question designed in this to imitate the Egyptians, who worshipped the bull Apis.

Isaiah and Jeremiah give the cities of Zoar and Heronaim the epithets of Calves or Heifers of three years old: which words, in the opinion of some, denote their vivacity and indocility. They are cities not to be governed, or brought under the yoke. Others will have it, that the strength and vigour of Zoar and Heronaïm are meant by them: these two cities are sensible of their own force, and will not be subdued. It is our opinion, that the Hebrew words Agola and Shalisha, an Heifer of three years old, denote two cities; one called Bethagla, the other Baal-Shalisha. The first was upon the Dead-Sea. See Joshua xv. 5. xviii. 19, 21. and the other is mentioned in 1 Sam. ix. 4. and 2 Kings iv. 42.

[Jer. xlvi. 20.] In the prophetick style, the Gentile nations are sometimes compared to Heifers. Egypt is like a very fair Heifer: but destruction cometh, it cometh out of the north. He means the Chaldæans, who were to subdue Egypt. And the prophet Hosea, speaking of the ten Tribes of Israel, ch. x. 11. Ephraim is as an Heifer that is taught, and loveth to tread out the corn, and live in plenty: but I will tame her, and force her to submit to be yoked.

Sampson, in the book of Judges, chap. xiv. v. 18. accuses the young men who were at his wedding, with abusing the easiness of his wife, to get his secret out of her: If ye had not ploughed with my Heifer, ye had not found out my riddle. Moses ordains in Deut. xxi. 3. that if the body of any one be found, who has been killed within the liberties of any city or village, and the murderer be not known, the Elders and Judges of the place shall take an Heifer which has never yet been yoked, and lead it into some uncultivated valley, which never has been ploughed; there its head shall be cut off, and the Elders of the place shall wash their hands in the presence of the Levites, over the Heifer's head, and say, Our hands have not shed this blood, neither have our eyes seen it: be merciful, O Lord, unto thy people Israel, and lay not innocent blood unto their charge. See the Article MURDER.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Helam

HELAM, a place celebrated for a battle fought between David and the Syrians, wherein he cut them in pieces, and [2 Sam. x. 17. 1 Chr. xix. 17.] took their horses and their chariots. In the passage of the Chronicles, wherein this history is related, instead of Helam, which is a city that we have no knowledge of, we read Alehem; that is to say, David came and fell upon them; which is probably the best reading.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Helbah

[Judg. i. 31. Ezek. xxvii. 18. Zech. vi. 10, 11.] HELBAH, or Chelba, a city in the Tribe of Asher; might it not be the city of Helbon in Syria, which could not be far from Damascus? Helbon is celebrated for its good vines.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heldai (I)

I. HELDAI. Zechariah received Orders from God, to demand of Heldai, and some others, gold to make crowns for Joshua the son of Josedeck.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heldai (II)

II. HELDAI, one of the twelve Captains of the Companies appointed by David to do duty in their order at the palace, with the four and twenty thousand men which they commanded. Heldai began to wait in [1 Chr. xxvii. 15.] the twelfth month of the year.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heleb

HELEB, the son of Baanah, one of the gallant officers in David's army. 2 Sam. xxiii. 29.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Helek

HELEK, the son of Gilead, of the Tribe of Manasseh, was Chief of the Family of the Helekites. Numb. xxxi. 30.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Helena (I)

I. HELENA, the sister and wife of Monobazus King of the Adiabenians, embraced the Religion of the Jews, together with Izates her son, the successor of Monobazus. This Queen coming to [a Joseph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 2. b De Bello, l. 6. c. 16. p. 920. c. & l. 7. c. 35. p. 964. c In the year of Jesus Christ 44.] Jerusalem, directed a Palace to be built there, in the lower part of the city, where she dwelt till the death of Izates. In a great famine, which made havock in Judæa, she employed great sums of money in relieving the poor. Paulus Orosius will have it, that she embraced Christianity[1]. Her tomb was still to be seen in the time of Eusebius[2] and St. Jerom[3], at the distance of three furlongs from Jerusalem. Pausanias, who wrote at the end of the second Age, and had seen her Mausolæum, mentions it as one of the Wonders of the World.

The famine, which we have taken notice of, fell out in the year of Jesus Christ 44, and was the same with that foretold by the [Acts xi. 28. Acts xi. 29, 30.] prophet Agabus, wherein the Christians of Antioch signalized their charity towards those of Jerusalem.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Paul. Orof. l. 7. c. 6. Bibl. Patr. t. 15. p. 210, &c. Ep. 27. p. 172.
Euseb. Hist. Eccl. l. 2. c. 12.
Hieronym. p. 274.

Helena (II)

II. HELENA, or Selena, the wife of Simon the Magician. See SIMON the Magician.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heleph

HELEPH, a City in the Tribe of Naphtali. Joshua xix. 33. It is called Meheleph in the Hebrew, the Septuagint, and in Eusebius.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Helez

HELEZ, one of the valiant men in David's army, 2 Sam. xxiii. 26. In Samuel he is called Helez the Paltite; but in the Chronicles, 1 Chr. xi. 27. Helez the Pelonite.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heliodorus

HELIODORUS, Prime Minister to Seleucus Philopator King of Syria, was sent by the King his master to Jerusalem, with orders to carry off the treasures which were said to be in the Temple. As soon as he came to Jerusalem, and had declared the occasion of his journey, the High-Priest represented [In the year of the World 3828, before J. C. 172, before the Vulgar Æra 176. Vide Joseph. Antiq. l. 12. c. 4, &c.] to him, that the money, which had been talked of to the King, belonged to Hircanus the son of Joseph, and grandson of Tobias, who was appointed Governour of the Country beyond Jordan for Seleucus, and levied the tribute-money, which was paid there for the King's use; that the rest was money deposited in trust belonging to several private persons, which could not be touched without violating the laws of justice. Heliodorus insisting upon the King's orders, answered, that by fair or foul means this money was to be carried to the King, and appointed a day to go into the Temple, and take away the wealth he found there.

As soon as he came into the Temple, the consternation was very great over the whole city, and particularly among the Priests. At the same time, an horse was seen to appear, with a terrible person mounted upon it, dressed magnificently; the horse fell with impetuosity upon Heliodorus, struck him with his fore-feet, while two young men shining gloriously, and very richly clad, stood on each side of Heliodorus, and each without intermission whipt him. Heliodorus was thrown down, and lost his senses, and in this condition was suddenly carried out of the Temple in a chair. At the same time the High-Priest Onias was intreated to offer up some sacrifice, and use his prayers and intercessions with God, in order to obtain the life and health of Heliodorus.

While the High-Priest was at his prayers, the same young men, dressed in the same habits, appeared to Heliodorus, and said, Thank the High-Priest Onias; for the Lord, for his sake, has given you your life, and proclaim to all the World his power and wonders. Having said these words, they disappeared. Heliodorus having offered sacrifice to God, and made great promises, returned to King Seleucus at Antioch. To him he related all that had befal'n him; and the King asking him, whom he thought proper to be sent once more to Jerusalem, he answered, If you have any enemy, or there is any one whom you would get rid of, send him thither; and if he returns alive, you will see, that he has been whipt almost to pieces. For there is certainly some divine power in this Temple. This is what we know of Heliodorus. Josephus, the son of Gorion, says, that after this event, Heliodorus turned Jew, and renounced Idolatry.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heliopolis (I)

I. HELIOPOLIS, that is to say, the city of the Sun. There is mention made of it in Genesis, and Ezekiel. It is called On in the Hebrew. Potiphar, who married his daughter Aseneth to Joseph, was Priest of Heliopolis. This city was situated upon the Nile, half a day's journey from Babylon in Egypt. Strabo speaks of ancient Temples and Obelisks, which were shewn there in his time, and great houses belonging to the Priests, which were to be seen there, though the city was intirely deserted.

Besides the city of Heliopolis, called On in Hebrew, there was another in Egypt, situated between Cairo, the town of Copte, and the Red Sea. M. D'Herbelot assures us, that the Arabian writers call the city of Coos, Ain-al-Schams, that is to say, Fountain of the Sun, or Heliopolis, the city of the Sun. He believes it to be the ancient and famous city of Thebes in Upper Egypt: he says, the Arabian Geographers describe it to be in the sixty first degree of longitude, and thirty minutes; and the twenty third of latitude, and thirty minutes. Dapper places Heliopolis at the distance of seven thousand paces eastward from Cairo, and near the village of Matares, and consequently it is very different from the famous Thebes, the Capital of Thebaïs. Heliopolis is now destroyed, and there are only some remains of its ancient grandure discernible. The name of Heliopolis is said to have been given it by reason of a Temple which was there dedicated to the Sun, wherein there was a lookingglass disposed in such a manner, that it reflected the rays of this luminary all day long, so that the whole Temple was enlightned by it with great splendor. Among the ruins of this city, there is an obelisk to be seen, which stands in the middle of a square, with hieroglyphical emblems on the four sides, and a column called Pharaoh's needle.

Onias the son of Onias the third, having [In the year of the World 3842, before J.C. 158, before the Vulg. Æra 162. Antiq. l. 12. c. 10 & l. 20. c. 8. In the year of the World 3854, before J.C. 146, before the Vulgar Æra 150.] retired into Egypt, and won the good graces of Ptolemy Philometor, and his wife Cleopatra, obtained permission to build a Temple at Heliopolis, like to that of Jerusalem, for the use of the Jews, who were settled in Egypt. This Temple was standing in Vespasian's time, who commanded Lupus, Governour of Egypt, to shut it up. Josephus de Bello, l. 7. c. 37. p. 995, 996. Paulinus, who some time after succeeded Lupus, ordered all the ornaments and riches, that were in it, to be taken out, and all the doors to be shut, and would not suffer any religious offices to be performed in it. See ONION. This is the name which was given to this Temple.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heliopolis (II)

II. HELIOPOLIS, a city in Cœle-Syria, lying between Libanus and Antilibanus, Laodicea and Abila, otherwise called Balbeck, or Malbeck. There was a famous Temple here dedicated to the Sun, or God Balanius, magnificent remains whereof are still at this day visible. It is my opinion, that this is the city meant by the Prophet Amos in these words; I will cut off the inhabitants of the Idol's camp. In the Hebrew, I will cut off the inhabitants of Bikath-aven, or of the Valley of Iniquity. He calls that city Bikath-aven, which the Heathen called Bikath-Baal, and which at present goes by the name of Baal-beck, the Valley of Baal.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Helkath

HELKATH, or Chelchath, a city in the Tribe of Asher, which was given to the Levites of Gershom's family.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hell

HELL, Infernus; in Hebrew, Scheol. [שאול Scheol. Infernus,] This word in holy Scripture signifies often the Grave, the bottom of the Earth, where [Sepulchrum.] the bodies of the dead rest. Jacob says, that he shall go down into the Grave, or into Hell, overwhelmed with sorrow, for [Gen. xxxvii. 35.] the death of his dear son Joseph. The Conspirators Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, were swallowed up in the Earth, and descended quick into Hell; that is to say, they were buried alive. Thou wilt not leave my Soul in Hell, says the Psalmist; thou wilt not suffer my Body to putrify in the Grave.

Hell is often put for the place, where the souls of men continue after their separation from the body. Isaiah speaking to the King of Babylon, says, Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming; it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth. Ezekiel speaks much after the same manner to the King of Egypt: In the day when the King of Assyria went down to Hell, I caused a mourning, I covered the deep for him.... They who were before in the nether parts of the earth were comforted at his arrival. It is in these subterraneous places, that the Giants groan under the waters; according to Job's expression. Here it was that the rich man was buried. The rebellious Angels were cast down into Hell, and delivered into chains of darkness. [2 Pet. ii. 4.]

Lastly, the name of Hell sometimes denotes the place where the Souls of the Saints waited for the coming of our Saviour, and from thence after his Resurrection went to heaven, there to enjoy eternal happiness. Into this Hell Jesus Christ descended after his Resurrection: Descendit ad Inferos. Of him it is said, Thou shalt not leave my Soul in Hell, neither shalt thou suffer thine holy one to see corruption. To him likewise are applied these words of Hosea, O Death, I will be thy plagues; O Grave, or Hell, I will be thy destruction, &c.

We have heretofore, in the Article ELISIAN FIELDS, taken notice of the opinion entertained by Jews and Heathens, concerning the state of the Soul after death. The Learned are divided as to the Origin, and first Authors of Hell, Tartarus, the Elisian Fields, and what we read in the Greek and Latin Fathers, concerning the state of Souls separated from the Body. Some pretend, that the ancient [Lucas Brugensis. See Basnage Hist. des Juifs, t. 4. l. 6. c. 31.] Jews acknowledged no other than temporal rewards and punishments for the virtuous and the wicked. The Law seems to promise no others. It threatens the Israelites with an untimely and ignominious death; with the severest penalties, with cutting off or extermination, with excommunication, with the extinction of their families, with barrenness in their lands, with captivity and slavery, with being transported into a strange country, with being conquered and pursued by their enemies, with seeing an heaven of brass, and a land of iron, &c. but never with Hell and eternal Death; and the like in proportion, as to rewards. It promises long life, a numerous family, plentiful harvests, fruitful flocks, and profound peace throughout their country; victory over their enemies, riches, plenty, honours, and every thing that may gratify the self-love and senses of mankind; but it never says any thing of eternal Life, of the glory of Paradise, or of the rewards of the other Life.

The Learned are of opinion, that when the Jews became conversant with the Greeks, they began to enquire into what Homer and the other ancient Poets had said of Hell, Tartarus, and the Elisian Fields; and that then, and not before, the Jewish Doctors were observed to be divided in their sentiments, some having adopted what the Greeks said, others adhering to the old opinions received in their nation. And this division produced, as they say, the Sects which afterwards appeared among the Jews: those of the Pharisees and Essenians were more favourable to the opinions of the Greeks, and that of the Sadducees more conformable to the ancient Tradition of the Hebrews. This is what these Authors have asserted.

Others think, that the Jews received these opinions rather from the Persians and Egyptians than the Greeks; because they are to be met with among the oriental People and Egyptians, as well as among the Greeks, and there is a general prepossession, that the Religion of the Greeks was derived from the Eastern People or Egyptians, and formed upon the Ideas only which have been borrowed from other places. The Authors of these opinions have this in common, that they agree in their judgment of the Jews borrowing from other people, the notions which they had of Hell and Paradise, and that the Christians received the same from them.

But upon a nearer examination of the writings of the Hebrews, we shall find, that they thought and spoke almost like the Greeks before Homer, Hesiod, and the most ancient Poets of this nation. Job, the Psalmist, Solomon, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, make mention very clearly of Hell, the place where the wicked are detained. Moses himself takes notice of a fire which is kindled in God's anger, and shall burn unto the lowest Hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundation [Deut. xxxii. 22. Deut. xxx. 15.] of the mountains. And in another place, I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil. It is evident, that good men are not always rewarded in this life, nor the wicked punished in this world according to their merit. Moses therefore intended to point out another life, and another death, other goods, and other evils, than those of this life. And if the Hebrews expected nothing after death, why should Balaam desire of God, that his end might resemble theirs? Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be [Numb. xxiii. 10.] like his.

But let us come to more express testimonies. It is agreed, that Job lived pretty near the time of Moses: and though there may be some difficulty as to the Author of the Book, which goes under his name, some attributing it to Job himself, others to Moses, others to Solomon, and others again to Isaiah; we have reason to believe however, that the writer of this work has expressed the sentiments of Job, that is to say, those which were at that time received in his country, and among the Edomites, or Arabians. Now he distinctly describes the Pains of Hell. He says, that the Giants, those wicked Wretches of old, who corrupted all the ways of Nature by their sins, and whose abominations God drowned in the general Deluge, that these Giants groan under the waters, and they who dwell with them. The place of their punishment, Hell, is naked before God, and destruction hath no covering. And in another passage, Drought and heat consume the snow-waters; so doth the grave, or Hell, those which have sinned. The womb shall forget him, the worm shall feed sweetly on him.

This is all previous to the Poets, who have informed us, that the Giants rebelling against Jupiter, were plunged under the waters, and imprisoned under mountains.

Hic genus antiquum terræ Titania pubes
Fulmine dejecti fundo volvuntur in imo.[1]

The Reader may consult[2] Homer, Hesiod, and the other Poets who wrote after them.

Solomon, who is more ancient than all the Greek Authors, speaks of Hell in the same manner almost as Job: he mentions the Giants; Libertine women, he says, allure fools to the enjoyment of pleasures, who perceive not that this is the way to Hell, where the Giants[3] have their abode; and that they who eat at the table of a debauched woman, go into the depths of Hell. He says in another place, That the house of an harlot inclineth unto death, and that her paths lead to Hell, or to the Giants.... and that none who go unto [Prov. v. 5.] her return again. And again, That her feet go down to death, and her steps take hold on [Prov. vii. 27.] Hell. And, Her house is the way to Hell, going down to the chambers of death. And [Prov. xv. 11.] again, Hell and destruction are before the Lord, how much more then the hearts of the children of men? Here then again, Hell, Perdition, and the Abode of the Giants, are represented as the place where the wicked, the debauched, and adulterers are confined and punished. This certainly was no imitation from Homer or Hesiod, much less from Virgil, no more than that other passage in the same Solomon; The man that wandereth [Prov. xxi. 16.] out of the way of understanding, shall remain in the congregation of the Giants: in cœtu gigantum.

If we could prove that all the Psalms were David's, we might find excellent proofs in these divine Hymns, against those who pretend, that the Jews of old had no distinct idea of Hell; but supposing the Author of the lxxxviith Psalm to have lived no earlier than the captivity of Babylon, it would still be very certain, that he did not borrow his sentiments of Hell from any of the Greek writings. He addresses himself to God in the following terms; Wilt thou shew wonders to the dead? shall the dead arise and praise thee? or, according to the Hebrew, [Psalm lxxxviii. 10, 12.] Shall the Rephaims rise to publish thy praises? Doest thou expect that the old Giants should come forth out of Hell to praise thee? He adds, Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness? For Hell, Destruction, and Forgetfulness are synonymous words. The very Heathens placed the river Lethe, or of Forgetfulness, in Hell; and maintained, that the dead drunk of it, in order by this means to lose the remembrance of life:

[Virgil. Æneid. 6.] Lethæi ad fluminis undam Securos

latices, & longa oblivia potant.

The Prophet Isaiah was a contemporary almost with Hesiod and Homer; Ezekiel lived some time after these old Poets: but it may be affirmed upon very good grounds, that they had no manner of knowledge either of their persons or writings; that they speak of Hell, and the state of the dead in another life, after a manner at least as clear as they, and in expressions very like theirs. Isaiah mentions the fire of the damned which never is to be extinguished, the worm which gnaws [Isa. lxvi. 24.] them and dies not, and the insupportable stench which every way surrounds them. Corpore virorum qui prævaricati sunt in me, vermis eorum non morietur, & ignis eorum non extinguetur, & erunt usque ad satietatem visionis universæ carnis. The Hebrew literally, they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh. The same Prophet in another place [Isa. xxvi. 14, 19. Isa. xiv. 9, &c.] says, The dead shall not live, they are deceased, thay shall not rise: therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish. Here therefore they are represented to be in Hell, and in a state of oblivion. But thy dead men (the Israelites) shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise: awake, and sing ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and thou shalt destroy the land of the Giants; or rather, according to the Hebrew, thou shalt cast down the land of the Giants. Thou shalt overwhelm thine enemies the Giants, with the earth which shall fall upon them, and close the mouth of the great deep upon them. Compare Ezek. xxxi. 10. Jerem. Lament. iii. 5. Psal. lxiii. 16. and what the Poets say of the gates of Hell, and the difficulty of going out of it.

The same Isaiah, speaking of the King of Babylon's fall, says to him, Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming: it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth, it hath raised up from their thrones all the Kings of the nations. All they shall speak and say unto thee, Art thou also become weak as we? Art thou become like to us? thy pomp is brought down to the grave, and the noise of thy viols; the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee. How art thou fal'n from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning? how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations? Thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, yet thou shalt be brought down to Hell, to the sides of the pit: they that see thee, shall narrowly look upon thee and consider thee, saying, Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did shake kingdoms? Here we have a Prosopopœia very like those which we meet with in the Poets and profane Authors, who describe Hell and the Elisian Fields.

[Ezek. xxxi. 15, 16.] Ezekiel is still more express. In the day when the Assyrian went down to the grave, I caused a mourning: I shut the entrance of the deep upon him, (that he might not get out.) I restrained the floods thereof, and the great waters were stayed, and all the trees of Eden, and the choice and best of Lebanon, all that drink water, shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth. They also went down into Hell with him, unto them that be slain with the sword, and they that were his arm, that dwelt under his shadow in the midst of the heathen..... Thou shalt be brought down with the trees of Eden unto the nether parts of the earth, thou shalt lie with them that be slain by the sword: this is Pharaoh and all his multitude.

He afterwards addresses his discourse to the King of Egypt, and tells him, he must descend [Ezek. xxxii. 18, 19,] descend into Hell with others. Go down, and be thou laid with the uncircumcised: the strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of Hell, with them that help him: they are gone down, they lie uncircumcised, slain by the sword. A-shur is there, and all her company, all of them slain, fal'n by the sword, which caused terrour in the land of the living. There is Elam, Meshech, and Tubal, and all her multitude. They shall not lie with the mighty that are fal'n of the uncircumcised, which are gone down to Hell with their weapons of war: and they have laid their swords under their heads, &c.

VESPASIAN BESIEGES AND TAKES JOTAPATA.where Josephus had shut himself up. Joseph. L. III. C. II. VOL. I 2d Ga Z.

Here it is to be observed, as well as in the Poets, that the dead retain in Hell the marks of their profession, and the instruments of their inclinations. Here the Heroes wear their swords in Hell, and place them under their bolsters: in Virgil they have their horses, chariots, arms, and exercises in the Elisian Fields.

Quæ gratia currûm Armorumque fuit vivis; quæ cura nitentes Pascere equos, eadem sequitur tellure repostos.

[Joseph. de Bello, l. 2. c. 12. & Antiq. l. 18. c. 2.] The Essenians, of whom Josephus gives us so advantageous an idea, entertained almost the same opinions as the Heathens, with relation to the souls of men separated from their bodies. They held the soul to be immortal, and that as soon as it was released from the body, it soared with great joy towards heaven; freed, as it were, from a long bondage, and loosed from the ties of the earth: that the souls of good men went beyond the ocean to a place of delight and rest, where they are not subject to any irregularity of seasons; those, on the contrary, of the wicked, are confined to places exposed to all the injuries of air, where they suffer eternal torments. Josephus adds, that from these ideas, the Greek Poets seem to him to have forged the delicious abodes of their Heroes and Demi-gods, and the punishments wherewith wicked men are tortured in Hell under the dominion of Pluto.

The Jews place Hell in the center of the earth. We have observed above, that they called it the deep, and destruction; that they believed it to be situated under waters and mountains; they likewise term it often Gehennon or Gehenna, which signifies the valley of Hinnon, or the sons of Hinnon, which was, as it were, the common Sewer of Jerusalem, where children were sacrificed to the God Moloch. See GEHENNA. The Heathen, in like manner, torments believed the place of torture to be in the [Virgil. Æneid. vi. ver. 576.] deepest part of the earth.

Tum Tartarus ipse Bis patet in præceps tantùm, tenditque sub umbras, Quantus ad æthereum cœli suspectus olympum[4].

[Matth. xvi. 18. Jonah ii. 3. Isai. xxxi. 9.] The Gates of Hell, mentioned by our Saviour in the Gospel, signify nothing more than the power of Hell; for the eastern people call the Palaces of their Princes by the names of Gates. There are three, as the Jews say, belonging to Hell: the first is in the wilderness, and by that Korah, Dathan, and Abiram descended into Hell: The second is in the sea; for it is said that Jonah, who was thrown into the sea, cried to God out of the belly of Hell: The third is in Jerusalem; for Isaiah tells us, That the fire of the Lord is in Sion, and his furnace in Jerusalem. These remarks are but trifling: it is certain however, that Pythagoras and the Poets speak of the Gates of [Virgil. Æneid. vi.] Hell. Virgil:

Porta adversa ingens, solidoque adamante columnæ, Vis ut nulla virûm, non ipsi exscindere ferro

Cælicolæ valeant.

The Hebrews acknowledged seven degrees of Pains in Hell, because they find this place called by seven different names in Scripture; and are persuaded, that there is a great diversity in the pains endured by the damned. Christians have likewise owned, that there are several degrees of them: but no one ever thought of determining the number. It is very credible that it is infinite, as the degrees of men's demerits are innumerable. Many Divines admit of four sorts of Hell, namely, the Hell of the Damned, Purgatory, the Limbus of Children, and that of the Fathers; for all these places are sometimes called Hell: but this name, properly and rigorously speaking, belongs only to that of the damned.

Besides the torment of fire, which is that of the sense, and acknowledged by Mussulmen as well as us, they acknowledge likewise the pœna damni, which is the most terrible of all, and without which the other would be inconsiderable: this is a separation from God, a privation of his sight, and of the beatifick vision, wherein consists the most extreme punishment of the damned.

[Leo of Modena's C. remonies of the Jews. Part 5. c. 12.] The eternity of Hell-torments is acknowledged throughout the whole Scripture: the fire of the damned will never be extinguished, nor their worm die. But the Jews believe, that there are some among them, who will not continue for ever in Hell. They of Hell. They maintain that every Jew, who is not infected with some heresy, and has not acted contrary to other points mentioned by the Rabbins, is not above a year in Purgatory; and that Infidels only, or people eminently wicked, remain perpetually in Hell. Every one knows, that Origen was also of opinion, that the torments of the damned would one day have an end. Manasseh Ben-Israel [Manasseh Ben-Israel de Resurrect. l. ii. c.1. p.181.] names three sorts of persons who would be damned eternally; Atheists, who deny the existence of God; they who deny the divine authority of the Law; and, lastly, they who reject the Resurrection of the Dead. These people, though otherwise their lives were pure, will be punished with endless tortures. Other Rabbins, such as Maimonides, [Moses Maim. Porta retribution. Lent. resurrect. Jud. p. ult.] Abrabanel, &c. assert, that after a certain time, the souls of wicked men will be annihilated.

As the happiness of Paradise is expressed in Scripture under the idea of a feast or wedding, at which there is a great deal of light, joy, and pleasure, so Hell is represented in the New Testament as a dismally dark place, where there is nothing but grief, sadness, vexation, rage, despair, and gnashing of teeth, like one excluded, or during the obscurity of the night, and the severity of the cold, driven from the place of entertainment, where he pleased himself with the thoughts of being admitted.

The Rabbins acknowledge three different sorts of torments in Hell, Cold, Heat, [Vide Bartolocci, l.2. p. 134. Job xxiv. 19.] and Trouble of Mind, or Despair. Cold and fire are taken notice of in Job: Ad nimium calorem transeat ab aquis nivium. Let him [4 Esdr.] return from the cold of snow-water to excessive heat. And the Author of the fourth book of Esdras, places the souls of the damned between fire and water; having fire on the right, and water on the left-hand, and equally tormented by both. The Rabbins believe, that God took from Hell the fire wherewith he burnt Sodom, and the water wherewith he overflowed the earth at the time of the Deluge. Thus the Heathens imagined a river of fire in Hell, and another as cold as ice, which they called Phlegeton and Acheron; and said, some of the Titans were tormented with fire, and others with [Virgil. Æneid. vi.] water.

Aliis sub gurgite vasto

Infestum eluitur scelus, aut exuritur igni.

The regret, remorse, and despair of the damned, are expressed by the Rabbins under the name of disorder in the soul: this [Isai. lxvi. 24. Mark ix. 43, 45.] is what Isaiah, and after him the Gospel, means by that worm which gnaws and does not die. Vermis eorum non moritur.

The Mussulmen (says D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. p. 368. Gehennem) have borrowed the name Gehennem or Gehim from the Jews and Christians, to signify Hell; Gehennem in Arabic signifies a very deep ditch; and Gehim an ugly and deformed man; Ben-Gehennem, a son of Hell, a reprobate. The Angel who presides in Hell, they call Thabeck.

[Alcoran. ch. of the Stone.] As the Jews acknowledge seven degrees of torments in Hell, so do they seven Gates; which likewise is the opinion of several Commentators, who suppose those Mussulmen to be in the first degree of torment, called Gehennem, who have deserved to be involved in it. The second degree, named Ladha, is reserved for Christians. The third, called Hothama, for the Jews. The fourth, Sair, is appointed for the Sabians. The fifth, Sacar, for the Magians, or Guebres, who are worshippers of fire. The sixth, called Gehim, for Pagans and Idolaters. The seventh, is the deepest part of the Abyss, it goes by the name of Haoviath, and is reserved for Hypocrites, who disguise their Religion, and conceal another in their heart different from that which they profess outwardly.

Others explain these seven Gates of Hell in another manner; for example, there are some who believe that they denote the seven capital sins: some take them for the seven principal members of the body, which men make use of to offend God, and are the seven principal instruments of their crimes. For this reason, a Persian Poet uses this expression; You have the seven Gates of Hell in your body; but the soul may make seven Locks for these Gates, the Key whereof is your Free-will, which may be used so effectually by you, as to close these Gates in such a manner, that they may never more open for your Destruction.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Virgil. Æneid. vi. Confer Æneid. iii. de Encelado, & Æneid. ix. de Typhœo, &c.

Homer. Iliad. viii. Hesiod. Theogon.

Translators' note. In our English translation, He knoweth not that the Dead are there; which diversity of interpretation proceeds from the different signification of the same word, which may be rendered either Giants, or the Dead. The word for it in the Septuagint is Γηγενεῖς: in Theodotion's version Γίγαντες.

Translators' note. Hesiod reduces it within a narrow compass; Τόσσον ἔνερθ᾽ ὑπὸ γῆς ὅσον οὐρανός ἐστ᾽ ἀπὸ γαίης. Authors have differed in computing the extent of Hell. An ingenious writer has observed, that VOL. I. some have been so curious as to determine the exact diameter of it to be just a Dutch mile, as Lessius, in his book De Moribus Divinis. Ribera, upon the Revelations, enlarges it to 1600 furlongs, or 200 Italian miles. Bellarmin's imagina- tion is pleasant enough; for he makes crouding and sweating to be one of the [Ἕλλην. Hellen, Græcus, Gentilis.] HELLENISTS. This word comes from Hellen, a Greek. They were called Hellenistical Jews, who lived in Cities and Provinces, where the Greek Tongue was common; these not being much accustomed to Hebrew or Syriac, generally made use of the Greek Version of the Septuagint in private, and in their publick Assemblies;[1] which was disapproved by many other Hebraïzing Jews, who could not endure that the holy Scripture should be read in any language besides Hebrew.

Hellenists

The

The Hellenists were not known till the establishment of the Greek Empire in the East. Sometimes they are called simply, Hellenes, Greeks; and sometimes Hellenistæ, [Acts vi. 1. Ἐγένετο γογγυσμὸς τῶν Ἑλληνιστῶν.] in the New Testament; for I do not find this last word in the Maccabees, or in the other books of the Old Testament.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. This was the only difference between the Hellenistical and Hebraïzing Jews, who reproached their brethren with reading Scripture after the Egyptian manner, that is, from the left to the right; whereas the Rabbins say, that as the Sun moves from East to West, so they should read from the right hand to the left. This difference however produced no schism or separation. Salmasius indeed endeavours to prove, that they never read the Bible in Greek; and he gives this reason for his assertion, viz. because they never read it in Arabic, a language which the Jews were much more gener- ally acquainted with than Greek. See Salmasius, Funus Linguæ Hellenisticæ: and for the contrary opinion, Morin. Exercitat. Biblic. Voss. de LXX. Interpret.

Helon

HELON, the father of Eliab, of the [Acts ix. 29. & xi. 20. Histoire des Juifs, t. v. c.xix. 1 Kings iv. 31.] Tribe of Zebulun. Numb. i. 9.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heman (I)

I. HEMAN, the son of Lotan, and grandson of Esau. Gen. xxxvi. 22.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heman (II)

II. HEMAN, the Ezrahite. In the first book of Kings, we find Ethan, Eman, Chalcol, and Darda, the sons of Mahol, and eminent Musicians belonging to the Temple in Solomon's time. And in the Chronicles, we find Zimri, Ethan, Eman, Calcol, and Dara, the sons of Zerah, and grandsons of Judah. I have some suspicions, that the Transcribers have confounded the descendants of Mahol, with those of Zerah, and that by mistake they have given Eman or Heman, the son of Mahol, the surname of Ezrahite, as if he were the son of Zerah.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hemdan

HEMDAN, the son of Dishon, a descendant of Sehir the Horite. Genesis xxxvi. 26.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hemona

HEMONA, or Villa Hemona, or Haamonai, a City in the Tribe of Benjamin. Josh. xviii. 24.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hen

HEN, the son of Zephaniah, in whose name Zechariah said, that a Crown should be consecrated to the Lord. Zechary vi. 14.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hepha

HEPHA, Kepha, Epha, or Caipha, otherwise Sycaminon, a maritime Town, at the foot of mount Carmel, to the north of it, and to the south of the Port of Ptolemais; from which City it is eighteen miles distant by sea, and thirty by land.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hepher (I)

I. HEPHER, the father of Zelophehad, and Head of the family of the Hepherites. Numb. xxvi. 32, 33. xxvii. 1.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hepher (II)

[Josh. xii. 17.] II. HEPHER. Joshua killed a Canaanitish Prince, who was King of Hepher. This Town of Hepher is perhaps the same as Ephrain, 2 Chr. xiii. 19. in the Tribe of Benjamin; or as Ophrah, in the same Tribe, the place of Gideon's birth, five miles eastward from Bethel, according to St. Jerom.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hephzibah

HEPHZIBAH, the mother of Manasseh, King of Judah. 2 Kings xxi. 1.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heptateuch

[Reg. Sancti Bened. c. 22.] HEPTATEUCH. This word signifies literally, the seven Works; and by this name are meant the seven first books of the Old Testament, which are Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, and Judges. St. Benedict does not allow his Monks at their Conference before Compline, to read the Heptateuch, nor the books of Samuel and Kings. Legat unus collationes vel vitas Patrum, non autem Heptateucum, aut libros Regum, quia infirmis intellectibus non erit utile illà horà hanc scripturam audire.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hercules

[2 Macc. iv. 19, 20.] HERCULES, the son of Jupiter and Alcmena, a famous Hero, to whom the Heathens paid divine Honours. He was born about the time when Gideon was Judge of Israel; about the year of the World 2757, before Jesus Christ 1243, before the Vulgar Æra 1247. There is mention made of Hercules in one place only of the Scripture: and here, upon the occasion of three hundred drachms of silver[1], which Jason, the pretended High-Priest of Jerusalem, sent to Tyre, to contribute to the Games and solemn Sacrifices, which were celebrated there every five years, and were to be celebrated there in the year of the World 3831, before Jesus Christ 169, before the Vulgar Æra 173, in the presence of Antiochus Epiphanes, King of Syria. Hercules was the tutelary Deity of Tyre. The Tyrians called him Melicartha, the King of the City[2].

Several circumstances of the life of Joshua, Sampson, and Moses, have been confounded with that of Hercules[3]: and the Heathens related much the same thing of this Hero, that we do of Jonah. Hercules, they said[4], was three days in the belly of a Sea-dog, as Jonah was three days in a Whale's belly, or in that of some other [Jonah ii. 1, &c.] Sea-monster.

They tell us, that Hercules making war with the sons of Neptune, prevailed with Jupiter to rain down flint-stones upon them, which crushed to pieces these formidable enemies. The sons of Neptune, that is to say, very naturally the Canaanites or Phœnicians, people much addicted to trade and navigation. In the Scripture-style, Son of the Sea, signifies one who carries on a trade by making voyages at sea. Hercules going to the war against Geryon, and being extremely incommoded with the violent heat of the sun, fell into a fit of rage against this Luminary, and drew his bow in order to shoot at it: but the Sun, admiring his great courage, made him a present of a cup, wherein he embarked, and after his return, restored it to the Sun. This may be a representation of Joshua, who being in full pursuit of his enemies, commanded the Sun to stand still, till he had taken vengeance on them: [Ecclus. xlvi. 5.] Iracundia ejus impeditus est Sol, says the Author of Ecclesiasticus. The Sun and Moon, says Habakkuk, stood still in their habitation: at the light of thine arrows they went, and at the shining of thy glittering spear.

Hercules was the tutelary God of slaves: Joshua was the Captain, Governour, and Protector of the Hebrews, who were delivered out of bondage in Egypt. He is represented with a Diadem, with a bow and arrows; he is called Invincible, &c. epithets which likewise suit Joshua very well. The Ancients acknowledged also a Hercules, the son of Nile; Joshua was born in Egypt. Hercules carried off the golden Apples of the Hesperides, he took Geryon's oxen, and strangled the Dragons: all which may denote the conquests of Joshua over the Canaanites. Hercules fought with the Centaurs, and broke Diomedes's wild horses: Joshua engaged the Canaanites in battle, and defeated them with their horses and chariots of war. There are farther many particulars in the history of the same Hercules, which shew some resemblance between him and Sampson. Hercules was of a very advantageous stature, and of an almost incredible strength. He gave himself up to the love of women; and we know what story tells us of his amours with Omphale, who domineered over him, and obliged him, as they say, even to take the distaff. All this agrees but too clearly with Sampson, who resigned himself intirely to Delilah, and was treated in so injurious a manner by her. Hercules fought for the Gods against the Giants; Sampson defended the people of God against the Philistins who oppressed them, and among whom there were men of a gigantick stature. To exaggerate the strength of Hercules, they tell us, that he fought against the Pygmies, and inclosed them in his lion's skin: this may describe the easiness wherewith Sampson defeated the Philistins, who came to bind and take him. Hercules killed several lions, that of Cithera, that of Citheron, and another of Nemæa; one he strangled, and tore off his jaws: all which we find in the history of Sampson, who strangled a lion that fell upon him with dreadful roarings.

[Macrob. Saturnal. l. i. c. 20] Sampson delivered to the Philistins after discovering the secret of his strength to Delilah, and set to hard and mean labours, is a figure of Hercules abandoned to Eurystheus, by the hatred of Juno, and obliged to undergo the severest trials, in order to deliver himself from servitude. The two Pillars of Hercules are admirably represented by those which Sampson grasped and pulled down in the Temple of Gaza. Hercules is often taken for the Sun. Macrobius asserts, that his very name, according to the etymology of the Greeks, signifies, The Glory of the Air, or the Sun. The name of Sampson in Hebrew is derived from Schemesh, which signifies the Sun. Hercules never made use of a sword, nor of any compleat armour; nor do we read that Sampson fought with common weapons; his miraculous strength was to him arms of all sorts, defensive or offensive.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. In the English Version it is 300 Drachms; and so it is also in the common printed books of the Greek Original. But in the Arundel Manuscript, it is τρισχιλίας τετρακοσίας, i. e. 3300, which is the truer reading; for 300 Drachms, at the highest valuation, making no more than 75 Jewish shekels, that is, of our money, 11 l. 5 s. it was too little to be sent on such an occasion. See Prideaux's Connection, &c. Part ii. Book 3.

Translators' note. Hercules was so called by the Tyrians from the Phœnician words Melec and Kartha, which signify the King or Lord of the City. The Greeks, from some similitude, which they observed in the worship of this God at Tyre, with that wherewith they worshipped Hercules in Greece, thought them to have been the same; and therefore called this Tyrian God, Hercules: and hence came the name of Hercules Tyrius among them. This seems to be the Baal, whose worship was introduced among the Israelites by Jezebel. See Prid. Connect. P. ii. B. 3. N. E. Sir Isaac Newton is of opinion, that Hercules was called Melcartus from being the Founder and Governour, or Prince of the City Carteia in Spain. See his Chronology, p. 112.

See M. Huet's Demonstr. Evang.

See Lycophron, Theophrastus, &c.

Heres

HERES, a Mountain in the Tribe of Dan, where the Danites were blocked up by the Amorites. Judg. i. 35.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heresy

[Αἵρεσις. Hæresis, Secta.] HERESY. This word comes from the Greek, Hairesis, and signifies in general, a Sect, or Choice. It is most generally taken in a bad sense, according to the style of the Church, for some fundamental Error in matters of Religion, adhered to with obstinacy. Thus we say, the Heresy of the Arians, Pelagians, Novatians, &c. St. Paul says, that it is necessary there should be Heresies in the Church, that they who are tried may be made manifest: he [1 Cor. xi. 19.] requires Titus to shun, and even to avoid the company of an Heretick after the first and second admonition. St. Luke, in the Acts, speaks [Tit. iii. 10. Acts v. 17. Acts xxiii. 6. xxvi. 5. Philip. iii. 5. Tertull. de Pallio. Divinam Sectam. Acts xxviii. 1. Acts xv. 5. Acts xxiv. 14. Acts xxi. 5. Acts xxv. 5.] of the Heresy of the Sadducees, and of that of the Pharisees.

Now it is visible, that among the Jews these Sects, or Heresies, especially that of the Pharisees, were no way odious; since St. Paul, even after his conversion, declares, that he is of the Sect of the Pharisees. The same Apostle says, that Christianity was called a Sect or Heresy; and it is true, that in the beginning, the Christian Religion was scarce looked upon by strangers to be any thing more, than a Sect or Reformation of Judaism; and the primitive Fathers made no difficulty of calling our Religion sometimes a divine Sect. Tertullus, the Advocate of the Jews, accuses St. Paul before Felix, with being the Head of the Sect of the Nazarenes. St. Paul declares, that he had lived without reproach in the Sect of the Pharisees, which was the most in request among the Jews. The Jews of Rome having got together about St. Paul, told him, that they were desirous to know his thoughts concerning Christianity: that for their parts, they knew nothing of this Sect, but that it was every where opposed.

I say nothing here of the several Sects or Heresies of the Heathen Philosophers, which gave occasion for the Sects that appeared among the Jews: for as the Heathens distinguished their Philosophers into Stoicks, Platonists, Peripateticks, Epicureans, &c. so the Hebrews, after the establishment of the Grecian Empire in the East, were divided into Sadducees, Pharisees, Essenians, Assidæans, and Herodians, &c. We can in proportion shew particular Sects or Heresies almost like those of the Jews; and that not only in the Schools of Philosophy, but in those likewise of Divinity, wherein we find opinions are divided upon matters problematical and undecided, which are no way prejudicial to the Fundamentals of Religion, nor to that Unity wherein all the members of the Church should be joined, in a subordination to the same Governors, in a communion of the same Sacraments, and in the confession of the same essential Articles of Belief.

From the very beginning of the Christian Church, there were very dangerous Heresies; and we may affirm, that there never were any more pernicious: for they attacked the most essential Doctrines of our Religion, such as the Divinity of Jesus Christ, his quality of Messiah, the reality and truth of his Incarnation, the Resurrection of the dead, the liberty of Christians, and their freedom from the legal Ceremonies, and other points of this nature. The most ancient of these founders of Heresy, is Simon the Magician, who desired to buy the Gift of God with money, and afterwards set himself up for the Messiah, and God Almighty, the Creator. Cerinthus, and the false Apostles, [Acts viii. 9, 10, &c. Vide Gal. iv. 12, 13, 17. v. 11. vi. 12. Philip. 18.] against whom St. Paul so often inveighs in his Epistles, had a mind that the faithful should receive Circumcision, and subject themselves to all the legal observances.

The Nicolaïtans allowed of a community of women, and without any scruple committed the most ignominious actions, and followed the superstitions of Heathenism.[1] They went over to the Sect of the Cainists, who acknowledged a power superior to that of the Creator. St. John, in the Revelations, speaks of the Nicolaïtans, as of a Sect of Hereticks then subsisting, and producing great disorders in the Churches of Asia. At the same time there were false Christs and [Rev. ii. 20. 1 John ii. 18, 22. iv. 3. and 2 John, vs. 7, &c. 1 Tim. i. 20. 2 Tim. ii. 18.] false Prophets. St. Paul speaks of Hymenæus and Alexander, whom he had been obliged to deliver over to Satan, to prevent their spreading their erroneous tenets. He speaks likewise of Hymenæus and Philetus, who departed from the truth, saying, that the Resurrection is already past. He foretold, that in the last times there would be some, [1 Tim. iv. 1. 2 Pet. ii. 1. and iii. 3. Jude, vs. 18. Matth. xxiv. 4, 24. vii. 15.] who should forsake the Faith, and give themselves up to the spirit of error, and the doctrine of the Devil. St. Peter and St. Jude foretel the same things, and herein only copy what Jesus Christ himself had said in the Gospel, that false Christs and false Prophets should come, who should seduce the simple by their delusions, and false Doctrine. See the particular Articles, NICHOLAS, SIMON, CERINTHUS, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Vide Epiphan. Hæres. 25. Philastr. & Aug. de Hæres. &c. in Sympos. p. 190, 191.

Hermaphrodite

HERMAPHRODITE. This word comes from the Greek, Hermes, which signifies Mercury, and Aphrodite, which signifies Venus. By it is meant a person, who partakes of both sexes, male and female. The Rabbins say, that God at the beginning created Adam an Hermaphrodite; meaning probably, that he had two bodies, male and female, fastened back to back[1], or by the sides only; and that God, when he created woman, did no more than barely separate these two bodies. This ridiculous opinion is founded on these words of Moses, Male and [Gen. i. 27. Rom. xvi. 14.] Female created he them.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Vide Thalmud & Rabb. & Platon.

Hermas

HERMAS, who is spoken of in St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, was, according to several of the Ancients[1], and many learned Interpreters[2], the same as the celebrated Hermas, whose works are in our hands, and have been placed by some among the Canonical Scriptures.[3] The books of Hermas, intitled, The Shepherd, were written at Rome, or in the neighbourhood of it, about the year of Jesus Christ 92, before Domitian's Persecution.

Ado, Usuard, and the Roman Martyrology, set down the Festival of Hermas on the 9th of May; the Greeks observe it on the 8th of March, and again upon the 5th of October. They rank him among the Apostles, and seventy two Disciples. They add, that he was made Bishop of Philippi in Macedonia, or Philippopolis in Thrace.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Origen. in Rom. xvi. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. l. 3. c. 3. Hieron. de Viris illustrib. c. 10.

Est. Grot. Bez. Druf. alii.

Vide Irenæ. l. 4. c. 3. Clem. Alex. l. 1. Strom. & l. 2. plurib. locis. Tertull. l. de Oratione, c. 12. Origen. Homil. 8. in Numer. & alios plures citatos a Cotel. t. 1. p. 168. & seq. PP. primi sæculi.

Hermes Trismegistus

HERMES Trismegistus. See the Article MERCURY Trismegistus.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hermes

HERMES, whom St. Paul mentions in the same place, Rom. xvi. 14. and salutes with other Believers of his acquaintance, who were at Rome, was, as the Greeks say, one of the seventy Disciples, and made Bishop of Dalmatia. His Festival is kept upon the 8th of April.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hermogenes

HERMOGENES, whom St. Paul speaks of [2 Tim. i. 15.] to Timothy, was, according to some Authors not much to be depended upon,[1] a Magician, converted by St. James the Great, together with Phygellus. But they, after having followed the Apostle for some time, forsook him, when they saw him in prison for the Faith. Tertullian says, that [Tertull. contra Hermogen.] Hermogenes renounced the Faith, and that he was a different person from another Hermogenes, against whom he wrote. Some say he adhered to the errors of Simon and Nicholas; and that his principal mistake was, his denying the Resurrection of the dead, and maintaining that it was already [2 Tim. ii. 17.] passed. This is the most certain account that we have of Hermogenes. They who please may see the fabulous circumstances of his conversion in ABDIAS.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Abdias Apostol. Histor. in l. 4. de Jacobo majore.

Hermon (I)

I. HERMON, Chermon, Aërmon, or Baal-hermon. The Sidonians called it Sirion [Deut. iii. 9, 10.] ; and the Amorites Shenir. St. Jerom says, that this Mountain lies higher than Paneas, and that in summer-time, there was snow carried from thence to Tyre, that people might drink there in fresco. The Chaldee and Samaritan Interpreters call it [Ad Deut. iv. 48.] the Mountain of Snow, because it is always covered with it, by reason of its height. In the book of Deuteronomy, Sion is spoken of, [Deut. iv. 48. שיאן הוא חרמוןDeut. iii. 8. iv. 48.] as if it were a part of Mount Hermon. The Scripture places Mount Hermon as the northern boundary of the land beyond Jordan, and the brook Arnon as the southern. Baal-gad was situated in the plain of Libanus, at the foot of Mount Hermon; and [Josh. xi. 17. Josh. xi. 3.] the Hivites dwelt under the same Mountain in the land of Mizpeh, from Baal-Hermon unto the entring in of Hamath. Mount Hermon belonged to King Og, and lay at [Judg. iii. 3. Josh. xii. 5. xiii. 3. Lib. Enoch. c. 1.] the northern extremity of his dominions, before the Israelites made a conquest of them.

The Author of the apocryphal book of Enoch says, that the Angels, whom he calls Egregori, the Watchful, falling in love with women, held a meeting on Mount Hermon, in the Patriarch Jared's time, and engaged themselves by oath, and by anathemas pronounced by them, never to separate till they had executed their resolution, which was to take unto them wives of the daughters of men. The anathemas by which they devoted themselves, if they failed in their promise, were the reason of this Mountain's being called Hermon, that is to say, Anathema[1]. The Psalmist says, that the Union of [Psalm cxxxiii. 3. ציון Zion. שיאן] Priests is as agreeable as the dew of Hermon which fell upon the hill of Zion. Hermon is the general name of a Mountain with several little Hills belonging to it, one whereof was called Sion, another Shenin, or Sirion. Thus the dew of Mount Hermon falls upon the Hill of Sion, which is joined to it, as sweet oil from Aaron's beard upon the neck of his Tunick. It is true, Sion or Zion in Psalm cxxxiii. is written differently from that of Deuteronomy: but as these are [Psalm lxxxix. 13.] letters of the same sound and organ, we need not make any difficulty of confounding them.

[Psal. xlii. 8.] The same Psalmist says elsewhere, Thou hast made the north and the south, Tabor and Hermon shall rejoice before thee. The situation of Tabor is known. This Mountain lies between the Mediterranean to the west, and the sea of Tiberias to the east. Mount Hermon is to the north of both. In the Hebrew it is, Thou hast created the north and the right hand; that is to say, the north and the south. Tabor to the south, and Mount Hermon to the north, shall rejoice before thee. The two parts of this verse are, as it were, synoninious, and explain one another.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Vide si placet Hilar. in Psalm cxxxiiii.

Hermon (II)

II. HERMON, or Hermoniim, a Mountain situated on this side the river Jordan, in the Tribe of Issachar, southward of Mount Tabor. Several are of opinion, that it is spoken of in this passage of the Psalms: I will remember thee concerning the land of Jordan, and the little hill of Hermon; as if this Mount Hermon on this side Jordan were called the little Hill, to distinguish it from great Hermon, which lay beyond this river. But others think that there is no mention of little Hermon in any place of Scripture, and that the Mountain which was known by this name in St. Jerom's time[1], in the Tribe of Issachar, southward of the great Plain, was called Hermon in later times only. Others explain what is said in another Psalm of this Mount Hermon on this side of Jordan, As the dew of Mount Hermon which falls upon Mount Sion. Maundrel says, that the dew in this place, is as plentiful as a large shower. But this does not persuade us that the Psalmist speaks here of Mount Hermon on this side Jordan, since Mount Sion has no relation to it; whereas we find one of the little Hills of the great Hermon called [D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 387.] Sion.

The common opinion of the Eastern Christians relating to the original of Giants, is this; That Adam having discovered to the sons of Seth what delights he enjoyed in Paradise, excited a desire in the hearts of some of them to enter into it. To this end, they withdrew from the company of others, and chose Mount Hermon in Palestine for their abode, where they lived with chastity, and in the fear of God.

These people retired in this manner from the conversation of others, were called the sons of God, and by their example gave a pattern and idea of the monastick state, which was afterwards embraced with so much fervour in the East. But at length the sons of Seth losing all hope of possessing Paradise, which they considered as the inheritance of Adam, went to their relations, the the descendants of Cain, and tired with celibacy, took their daughters in marriage, and begot Giants.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hieronym. in Ep. 44. nov. edit. p. 552. Apparebit oppidum Naim, in cujus portis viduæ filius suscitatus est. Videbitur & Hermonim, & torrens Endor, &c.

Hermopolis

HERMOPOLIS. There is no mention of this City in the canonical books of Scripture; but some Authors of good antiquity[1] say, that Jesus Christ retired to this City, when he came into Egypt with Joseph; and that when he went into a Temple at Hermopolis, all the Idols fell to the ground, and were broke in pieces. But the little time our Saviour staid in Egypt, seems not to allow of his going so far into the Thebaïs.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Vitæ PP. l. 2. c. 7. p. 460. Sozomen, l. 5. c. 21. p. 630. Nicephor. l. 10. c. 31.

Hern

HERN, Herodius, Herodio. This is a water-fowl, and wild. It is distinguished by its beak and long neck. It flies very high, lives along lakes, marshes and rivers, and feeds upon fish. Bitterns and Curlews are kinds of Herns, whereof there are several sorts, as the white Hern, the large grey, or ash-coloured Stork, the little ash-coloured, the chesnut, the tufted, the starry, and the black Hern, &c. All these differ something from one another either in size or colour; but all agree in living in and about the water, in having large legs, long beaks and necks: and most of them have a tuft upon their heads. They build their nests in woods of lofty trees. The trees on which their dung falls, lose their verdure, and die. They keep themselves for a long time, as it were, immoveable beside the water, waiting to surprize the fish when they are least aware of it. The Septuagint and St. Jerom seem to have taken it for the Stork; for they translate the Hebrew Chasid by Herodio. Chasid signifies merciful, compassionate. Storks are thought to be gentle, good-natur'd birds, and feed their old ones in their declining age[1]; in which particular, the Ancients have observed, that they are often juster than man. Moses declares the Stork to be unclean, perhaps because it feeds on serpents. Herns are creatures, from the use whereof the Hebrews were enjoined by Moses to abstain. Job likewise speaks of [Lev. xi. 19. Deut. xiv. 16. Job xxxix. 13. Psal. ciii. 13.] them, Penna Struthionis similis est pennæ Herodii. And the Psalmist, Herodii domus dux est eorum. But Chasidah, which is the word in the original, signifies, according to the generality of Interpreters, a Stork: it comes from the Hebrew Chasid, Mercy; whereof the Stork is a symbol. Some old Latin Psalters, instead of Herodii domus, read fulicæ domus, a house for the Coot or Moor-hen. But the Septuagint, and many of the Interpreters, declare for the Hern.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Plato in Alcib. Arist. l. 9. Hist. Anim. c. 13. Plin. l. x. c. 23. Solin. alii. Vide Boch. de Anim. Sacr. p. 2. l. 2. c. 29, &c.

Herod (I)

I. HEROD, the son of Antipater and Cypros. His brothers were Phasaël, Joseph, and Pheroras; and he had a sister whose name was Salome. He married several wives; 1. Doris, of whom he had Antipater. 2. Mariamne, the daughter of Alexander, son to Aristobulus, of the Asmonæan family; of whom he had Alexander, Aristobulus, Herod, Salampso, and Cypros. 3. Mariamne, the daughter of Simon the High -Priest, by whom he had Herod the husband of Herodias. 4. Malthace, by whom he had Archelaus, Philip, and Olympias. 5. Cleopatra, by whom he had Herod Antipas and Philip. 6. Pallas, by whom he had Phasael. 7. Phædra, by whom he had Roxana. 8. Elpis, by whom he had Salome, who married one of the sons of Pheroras. He had besides two other wives, whose names are not known to us, and do not relate to the history of the Scripture, which is our principal object in this work.

Herod was born in the year of the World 3932, before Jesus Christ 68, before the Vulgar Æra 72. His father Antipater, according to some[1], was by nation an Idumæan; as others will have it[2], he was by extraction a Jew, deriving his birth from some of the Jews who returned from Babylon. Lastly, others[3] again maintain, that Antipater was an Heathen, and Guardian of one of Apollo's Temples at Askelon; and that having been taken prisoner by some Idumæan scouts, he was carried into Idumæa, and brought up according to the manners of the Jews: for ever since the time of John Hircanus, the Idumæans had [Antiq. l. 13. c. 17. In the year of the World 3875, before J. C. 125, before the Vulgar Æra 129.] observed the Laws of Moses.

Father Hardouin the Jesuit has formed a system, which is entirely new, concerning Herod's family. He believes, that this Prince was an Athenian, because in some Medals he is called a Benefactor to Athens; and that there really was a Herod there in Cæsar's time. Herod was a Platonist, and brought the Sect of Plato, which he favoured, into Judæa. The Herodians, who in Herod's time formed a Sect among the Jews, were these Jewish Platonists; and the Sadducees being the same with the Herodians, (the Gospel naming the one for the other, and confounding them together) it is from thence concluded, that the Sadducees had the same sentiments as Plato, concerning the nature of Spirits and Angels. He maintains, that Herod had no share in building the Temple, and that he was reputed the Author of this great work, only that there might be an opportunity of giving giving him the surname of Great. He would have the whole History of Josephus to be thought spurious. He affirms, that Herod had only Samaria and Judæa for his share; that Galilee and the Trachonitis were never under his jurisdiction. And why? because he built fortresses only in the two first Provinces. If Galilee and the Trachonitis had been in his possession, he had been certainly obliged to build towns and forts there, as pledges of his fidelity. Zenodorus was master of these two Provinces, together with Iturœa, till the reign of Philip and Herod II. who inherited these Governments of Zenodorus; but by what means no one knows. This is part of Father Hardouin's System concerning the genealogy and reign of Herod. Hardouin. de Nummis Herodiadum.

[Apud Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 2.] Nicholas of Damascus, that he might make his court to Herod, whom he was much obliged to, drew his descent from the principal of those Jews, who returned into Judæa after the captivity of Babylon. Josephus, as he was a Jew, and had lived almost in the time of this prince, and under the Kings his sons and grandsons, should be better informed of this matter; but he charges this Historian with infidelity in his account of it: Why should we not refer ourselves to him? and to what purpose is it to form extravagant systems upon the supposed forgery of a work, which certainly is of great antiquity, and wherein no one hitherto [See Basnage Hist. des Juifs, t. 1. l. 1. c. 1. Antiq. l. xv. c. 12.] had found any thing defective.

Herod was never able to win the hearts and affections of the Jews, by any thing he ever did in favour of them: neither the building of the Temple, a work carried on at a very great charge; nor the infinite expences he was at, in procuring provisions for the people in the time of an extreme famine, were sufficient to overpower the strong antipathy they had to him; which was founded upon three reasons: 1. Upon his not being a Jew, but a stranger, and by extraction an Idumæan. 2. Upon his cruelty, whereof he had given proofs upon very many occasions. 3. Upon the little zeal which he expressed for the observance of the Law of Moses, and his frequent violations of this Law; in matters of a publick nature, and of the last consequence: for example, he caused a Theatre and Amphitheatre to be built at Jerusalem, and appointed Games to be celebrated there in honour of Augustus. He placed Trophies round about this Theater in honour of the same prince, and of his victories. He would have had a golden Eagle set up over one of the Temple-doors: he built a Temple to Augustus, and other Deities, and affected always to favour heathens and strangers, without concerning himself about the Religion [Joseph. l. xvii. c. 8.] of the Jews, which he outwardly professed; but he excused himself by alledging the necessity of the times, and the obedience which he owed the Romans.

Herod never had much Religion. He always shewed, that his grandeur and ambition were the only Deities, to which he paid his homage. If he did any thing for God's glory, he took sufficient care to discover at the same time, that his own reputation was more the aim of his endeavours, than the honour of God. But after all, he was a Jew, and desirous to pass for such.

[Joseph. de Bello, l. 1. c. 8. & Antiq. l. 14. c. 16, 17. In the Year of the World 3958, before J.C. 42, before the Vulgar Æra 46. Antiq. l. 14. c. 17.] Herod was but five and twenty years old[4] when his father Antipater gave him the Government of Galilee, with the approbation of Hircanus. He behaved himself with so much prudence and valour, that he restored the peace of this Province, which had been disturbed by abundance of thieves, who committed great ravages in it. Among others, he took one Hezekiah, Captain of the Banditti; whereby he procured the friendship and esteem of Sextus Cæsar, Governour of Syria. But the people of the first rank among the Jews, growing jealous of the authority which Antipater assumed, and of the power which he gave his sons, made their complaints of it to Hircanus, who cited Herod to come and justify his conduct at Jerusalem. Thither Herod came, but armed and attended with good troops. His countenance terrified the Judges. Sameas was the only one who had courage to speak, and to lay the fault of Herod's misconduct upon the Judges themselves and Hircanus, who had permitted him to assume too much authority. But Hircanus observing that the Judges were more disposed to condemn than to absolve him, deferred Judgement till the next day, and gave advice privately to Herod, that he should make his escape in the night.

[In the year of the World 3961, before J. C. 39, before the Vulgar Æra 43.] He retired therefore to Sextus Cæsar at Damascus, and by him was trusted with the Government of Cœle-Syria. Being then desirous to take some revenge for the insult which was offered him by citing him to Jerusalem, he marched against this City with an army: but Antipater his father, and Phasaël his brother, prevented him from undertaking any thing, and persuaded him to return. After the death of Julius Cæsar, Herod was appointed Governour of all Cœle-Syria by Cassius and Marcus. They gave him troops, and promised him even the kingdom of Judæa, when the war between Mark Antony and young Cæsar should be ended b. About the same time Antipater, Herod's father, was poisoned at Jerusalem by one Malichus: but Herod revenged this murder, by putting Malichus to death when he came to Tyre[5]. being at Daphne near Antioch, an hundred of the best rank among the Jews came to him, with accusations against Herod and his [In the year of the World 3963, before J.C. 37, before the Vulg. Æra 41.] brother Phasael. Hircanus, who had promised his grand-daughter Mariamne to Herod, was there. Mark Antony having heard what was alledged against Herod, asked Hircanus, whether Herod and Phasael, or their Accusers, were fittest to govern the State? Hircanus answered, the two brothers. Whereupon Antony made them Tetrarchs, and trusted the Government of all Judæa in their hands. He ordered Letters to be dispatched forthwith to this purpose, and fifteen of the most mutinous of their enemies to be imprisoned; and had resolved to put them to death, if Herod had not interceded for them.

Antigonus the son of Aristobulus, having undertaken to dispossess Hircanus, the Prince and High-Priest of the Jews, ingaged the Parthians by great promises, to march against Jerusalem. Phasael defended the City-walls, and Herod the Palace. Pacorus the King of Parthia's son, having persuaded [In the year of the World 3064, before J.C. 36, before the Vulgar Æra 40.] Hircanus and Phasael to meet Barzaphernes, who was in Galilee, in order to agree upon some accommodation, he himself accompanied them thither. But Hircanus and Phasael discovered very soon, that they were betrayed. As soon as they came to Ecdippa, a maritime town of Phœnicia, they were laid hold on by the Parthians, and put in chains. Herod having been informed of what had passed, departed from Jerusalem, with his mother Cypros, his sister Salome, Mariamne his bride, and Alexandra, the mother of Mariamne. All these he lodged in the castle of Massada, and took the way of Petra, hoping to procure some assistance from Malchus King of the Arabians. But before he reached Petra, he received a message from Malchus, desiring him to be gone, because he was afraid he should offend the Parthians, if he received him.

[Antiq. l. 14. c. 25.] Herod therefore went to Rhinocorura, and there he was informed, that his brother Phasael had killed himself, to prevent the ill -will of the Parthians. From Rhinocorura he went to Damietta, where after some contradiction, he imbarked, the season being already very far advanced. When he was at sea, he was driven about by a violent storm, which obliged him to throw part of his effects over-board, and with much difficulty he got to Rhodes. There he was assisted by two of his friends, whom he found there; and the necessity he was in, could not prevent him from doing good to this city, which had suffered extremely in Cassius's war. From Rhodes he went to Rome, where he laid open the state of his affairs to Mark Antony. Antony had an inclination for him, and remembred the good office, which Antipater, Herod's father, had done him formerly in Syria: he was besides exasperated against Antigonus, whom he looked upon as a turbulent man, and an enemy to the Roman people; and was moreover affected with the promises which Herod made, of giving him a large sum of money, if he would procure him to be declared King. Besides, Octavius Cæsar, who was afterwards called Augustus, was equally desirous of obliging Herod. Wherefore Antony and Cæsar used their interest for him so effectually, that the Senate gave him the Kingdom of Judæa, and declared Antigonus an enemy to the Commonwealth.

Seven days after he departed from Rome, and landing at Ptolemais, he began there to gather some Troops, with a design to march against Antigonus, who kept the castle of Massada besieged. He fortunately rescued his people, who were shut up in this fortress, and from thence marched against Jerusalem, with Silo, a Captain of some Roman Troops, in his company. But Antigonus shut the gates against him, and winter coming on, Herod and Silo put their Troops into quarters. Notwithstanding, he did not remain idle; but seized several posts, and took several towns from Antigonus, as well in Judæa as in Galilee. The next year there were some skirmishes and rencounters between the people of Antigonus's party and those of Herod's, wherein the latter generally had the advantage. At last, Herod in the beginning of his third year's reign, came in earnest and besieged Jerusalem, and attacked it on the same side, where Pompey several years before had carried on his attacks. [before J.C.] While his people were employed in preparing for the siege, he went to Samaria, where he married Mariamne the daughter of Alexandra. After his marriage, he returned to the siege, and carried with him some new reinforcements; in a short time after came Sosius likewise, Captain of the Roman Troops, who brought powerful succours to him from Syria: so that five months after the beginning of the siege, the first enclosure of the city was taken by assault. Some time after, the second enclosure was also forced. Antigonus and his people retired to the Temple: but did not make a long resistance. The City and Temple were taken; and Antigonus, who had fled to some tower for safety, came down, and threw himself at Sosius's feet, who insulted him, calling him Antigona instead of Antigonus. Thus Herod became peaceable possessor of the kingdom of Judæa.

Hitherto the High-Priesthood had been possessed by Kings of the Asmonæan race. Herod, who was not of the family of the Priests, not being qualified to exercise this ministry, and Hircanus being at that time in captivity among the Parthians; the

8 N [In the year of the World 3968, before J. C. 32, before the Vulgar Æra 36. Antiq. l. 15. c. 2, 3.] King sent for one Ananel from Babylon to perform the Office of High-Priest. Ananel was of Aaron's family; but all his merit was his acquaintance with Herod, who had long shewn a regard for him. Mariamne, Herod's wife, had a brother, whose name was Aristobulus, to whom the High-Priesthood by right of birth belonged. The Queen never ceased to sollicit Herod, till he had restored this Dignity to him, and divested Ananel of it. Aristobulus was then but seventeen years of age a, and enjoyed the High-Priesthood but a year, having been drowned by Herod's order[6], as has been related in the Article ARISTOBULUS.

[Vulgar] Alexandra, the mother of this young prince, made great complaints of his death to Cleopatra, who mightily incensed Antony against Herod. Antony sent for Herod, and obliged him to come and justify himself: but he so effectually wrought upon Antony by his presents and discourses, as to win him [In the year of the World 3969, before J. C. 31, before the Vulgar Æra 35. Antiq. In the year of the World 3972, before J. C. 28, before the Vulgar Æra 32. Antiq. l. 15. c. 6. de Bello, l. 1. c. 14.] over intirely to his party c.

War being declared between Augustus and Mark-Antony[7], Herod espoused the party of his benefactor Antony e. But Antony having been overcome, Herod saw himself under a necessity of having recourse to the clemency of Augustus f. He met him at Rhodes, and appeared before him with all the royal Ornaments, excepting the Diadem. He spoke to Augustus with admirable constancy and greatness of soul. He confessed that he had favoured Antony's party, and that he should have done still more for him, had he not been hindred by the war in Arabia: that he was disposed to do as much for him, and to serve him with the same fidelity as he had done Antony, if he would restore him his kingdom, and admit him to his good graces. Augustus, charmed with his behaviour, granted what he desired; and Herod made great presents to this prince and his friends. And when Augustus passed through Palestine in his way to Egypt, Herod all along accompanied him, and took care to have his army furnished plentifully with every thing it stood in need of in its march.

Herod seemed then to be in full possession of all that he could wish. But the peace of his family was soon disturbed by domestick divisions, and misfortunes of different kinds; which in the midst of the greatest prosperity, made him one of the most unhappy princes of his age. He had so great a passion for the princess Mariamne, his wife, that he could not moderate it; and Mariamne, on the contrary, was alienated from him, and despised him. There being a misunderstanding and jealousy between Herod's mother and sister, and his wife Mariamne; the former forgot nothing that might irritate Herod against his spouse, and after several little quarrels, things came to such a state of animosity, that this prince in the transports of his fury, commanded Mariamne to be put to death. But when the first violence of his passion was over, he was so afflicted at what was done, that he fell dangerously ill, and was very near death. In some little time after, he gave orders for the execution of Alexandra, who had too easily credited the news which was spread abroad of Herod's death.

He spent the following years in raising several publick and private Edifices in the Province, and in other places, in representing Shews and Games, and in building Temples in honour of Augustus. He sent the two sons whom he had by Mariamne to Rome, to have them brought up there in a manner suitable to their birth. But the most important work which he undertook at that time, was to rebuild intirely the Temple of Jerusalem. The people, surprized at the proposal, at first could scarce be brought to consent to it, they apprehending, that after he had demolished the old Temple, he might leave the new one imperfect. But Herod encouraged them by assurances, that he would not touch the old building, till he had provided every thing necessary for the raising of the new[8]. He finished it in nine years time, and dedicated it in the year of the World 3996, before Jesus Christ 4, before the Vulgar Æra 8.

Some time after he had began this work, he undertook a journey to Rome, with a design of making his court to Augustus, and seeing his two sons, who were sent thither for the benefit of education. Augustus received him very well, and Herod every where, both upon his journey, and in the city of Rome, gave great marks of his liberality. He brought back his two sons with him into Judæa, and married them, one, viz. Aristobulus, to Berenice the daughter of Salome; and [In the year of the World 3989, before J. C. 11, before the Vulgar Æra 15. In the year of the World 3993, before J. C. 7, before the Vulgar Æra 11.] the other, viz. Alexander, to Glaphyra the daughter of Archelaus King of Cappadocia. About the same[9] time Agrippa coming into Asia, Herod invited him into his Kingdom. He came[10], and Herod shewed him the Cities of Samaria, otherwise Sebaste, and Cæsarea, which he had built in honour of Augustus; and he received him with so much magnificence at Jerusalem, that Agrippa could not sufficiently express his satisfaction with it i. Division being again sown in Herod's family, a jealousy was raised in him against his two sons, the princes Aristobulus and Alexander. Herod, to check their heat and pride, sent for Doris and her son Antipater to court, and began to shew them more esteem and consideration. This preference strangely exasperated the two princes, whose birth was much more illustrious than that of Antipater. They expressed their discontent in too remarkable a manner. Herod carried them to Rome, designing to accuse them before Augustus; but Augustus reconciled them to their father, and Herod upon his return to [Antiq. l. 16. c. 7,8.] Jerusalem, declared before a great Assembly of the people, that it was his intention, that his three sons should reign after him; first of all Antipater, and then Alexander and Aristobulus.

The peace of Herod's family was again disturbed by the malice of Antipater, and the artifices of Pheroras and Salome, Herod's brother and sister. Archelaus King of Cappadocia, coming into Judæa in the year of the World 3996, before Jesus Christ 4, before the Vulgar Æra 8, once more reconciled [Antiq. l. 16. c. 11, 42.] the two brothers to Herod. But at last the calumnies of Antipater and Salome prevailed, and Herod, believing that they had formed designs upon his life, ordered them to be strangled, in the year of the World 3999, one year before the birth of our Saviour; as may be seen in the Article ALEXANDER, the son of Herod, where we have related their history more at length.

Antipater having thus got rid of his two brothers, who gave him most umbrage, began to consider how he might be delivered from Herod himself, whose resentment and inconstancy he was continually afraid of. The better to conceal his intrigues, he procured the King his father's consent for sending him to Rome. But during his absence, Herod discovered his conspiracy, and several months were employed in examining the depositions against Antipater[11].

In the mean while, the Saviour of the World being born at Bethlehem[12], the Wise Men from the East came to pay their homage to him. They followed an appearance of light, which conducted them into Judæa. As soon as they came to Jerusalem, they asked where was the new King of the Jews[13]. The whole city was in disorder at [Matth. ii. 1, 2, &c. Antiq. l. 17. c. 8. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 21.] their arrival; and Herod, who was then at Jericho, where he was under cure for a languishing illness, whereof he died some time after, was likewise much concerned at it, and convened all the Priests and Doctors of the Law to know of them where Christ was to be born. They told [Micah v. 2.] him in Bethlehem of Judah, according to the prediction of the Prophet Micah.

Hereupon Herod, sending privately for the Wise Men, enquired of them very carefully concerning the time, wherein the Star appeared to them: he sent them to Bethlehem, and bid them to return when they had found the Child they sought for. But the Angel of the Lord appearing to them in a dream, and discovering to them the wicked designs of Herod; they returned into their own country by another way. About the same time the Angel warned Joseph to take the Child and his Mother, and fly into Egypt. Herod seeing he was deluded by the Magi, was very angry, and sending to Bethlehem and the country round about, he ordered all the male-children of two years old and under to be killed, according to the time whereof he had enquired exactly of the Wise Men.

In the beginning of this year, which is the first of Jesus Christ, Antipater returned from Rome, not knowing any thing of what had passed against him: only upon his arrival at Cæsarea, he found none very hasty to receive him, and to do him honour. He [Antiq. l. 17. c. 6, 7.] was admitted to his father, for no other reason but that he might hear from his mouth the reproaches which he so justly merited. He was immediately loaded with chains, and put into prison; and Herod wrote to Augustus to inform him of what he had discovered. He afterwards made a new Will, wherein he declared Herod Antipas, the youngest of his sons, to be his heir.

[Antiq. l. 17. c. 8.] A report being one day spread, that Herod was dead, some young people at noon -day beat down a golden Eagle, which he had ordered to be put up over the great Portal of the Temple, contrary to the Law and Custom of the Jews. The Authors of this [Antiq. l. 17. c. 8. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 21.] exploit, with forty of their disciples, were seized by Herod's order, and burnt alive. But Herod's diseases still encreased every day: his fever was not violent; but he had a slow internal heat upon him, which wasted him within. His hunger was so raging, that nothing was sufficient to satisfy it. His bowels were all ulcerated, and he had continual pains in his belly. His legs were swelled, like those of dropsical persons; the parts, which are most carefully concealed, were so rotten, that worms were seen to come out of them, and he had an insupportable itch over all his body. A little before his death, he sent for all those in Judæa, who were any way considerable, and obliged them to come to Jericho, threatning them with death, if they failed to be there at the time appointed. When they were come, he ordered them to be all shut up in the Circus, and with tears constrained his sister Salome and Alexas his brother-in-law, to promise him, that as soon as he was dead, they should massacre all these persons, that so the Jews in every Canton of the Land might, at least in appearance, shed tears at his death. But this order was not executed.

Some time after, he received letters from Rome, [Antiq. l. 17. c. 9. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 14.] whereby he was informed, that Augustus left him at liberty, either to banish Antipater, or to take away his life. This news a little revived him: but his pains returning with great violence, he had a mind to deliver himself from them by death. To this end he called for a knife to pare an apple, as he was used to do, and attempted to plunge it into his body: but his cousin Achiab held his hand, and at the same time made a great outcry, which disordered the whole palace; all from thence believing, that the King was dead. This outcry reached Antipater: he thought Herod was expired, and endeavoured to persuade his guards to give him his liberty. The Officer, who had the charge of him, instead of hearkening to him, went and gave notice of it to Herod, who commanded him to be killed immediately. He survived his son but five days, in which time he changed his will, and gave the kingdom to Archelaus; the Gaulanitis, Trachonitis, and Batanæa to Philip, own brother to Archelaus; and Galilee and Perœa to Herod Antipas. Thus died Herod, at near seventy years of age, after a reign of six or seven and thirty years, from the time of his being declared King by the Senate, and four and thirty years from his being master [In the year of the World 4001, of J.C. 1, before the Vulgar Æra 4.] of Judœa by the death of Antigonus.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 2. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 5.

Nicol. Damasc. apud Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 2. & Hist. Judæor. Arab. ad calcem Bibl. Polyglott. Paris.

Julian. African. Ep. ad. Aristid. apud Euseb. Hist. Eccl. l. 1. c. 6, 7. Euseb. l. 3. in Luc. c. 3.

Joseph. Antiq. xiv. 17. says, that he was but fifteen; but we allow him to be twenty five. In the year of the world 3957, before Jesus Christ 43, before the Vulgar Æra 47. See Usher ad Ann. Mundi 3957. p. 353.

Antiq. ibid. Mark Antony coming into Syria, and being

Antiq. l. 15. c. 3.

In the year of the World 3972, before J. C. 28, before the Vulgar Æra 32.

Translators' note. This, which by some is called the third Temple, was properly Zerubbabel's renewed and enlarged; for such parts of it as Herod in- tended to make more lofty and magnificent, were pulled down by pieces, and the Sacrifices and Religious Offices were never interrupted. So that the Prophet Haggai's Prediction concerning the Glory of the second House is verified; which would apparently be false, if this of Herod's were supposed to be a third. See Lud. Capelli Templi Hierosol. Delineat. ex Villalpando, p. 3800.

Antiq. l. 16. c. 1, 2.

In the year of the World 3990, before J. C. 10, before the Vulgar Æra 14.

Antiq. l. 17. c. 6. In the year of the World 3999, the very year of Jesus Christ's birth, and four years before the Vulgar Æra.

In the year of the World 4000, the 25th of December.

In the year of the World 4001, of Jesus Christ 1, 4 years before the Vulgar Æra.

Herod the Great

HEROD the GREAT, Married

DORIS, the MARI- PHÆDRA,

PALLAS, Mother of AMNE, the the Mother

Mother of one Antipater, daughter of Son, whose of Roxana, who was put Alexandra, name was who married to death by who was the Phasael. a Son of Herod some Mother Pheroras. few days before he himself died.

Of Alexander, Of Herod, Of Salampso,

Of Aristobulus, who married who married who died who married Glaphyra, Berenice the young Phasael, af- Daughter to Daughter of ter having while he the King of Salome, of been was at his Cappadocia, of whom he had Studies in promised to whom he had three Sons and Rome. Pheroras. Tigranes King two Daughof Armenia, ters. and Alexander, who mar[ried the] Herod King of Chalcis, mar- Agrippa I. Daughter of ried first Mariamne the King of the Antiochus Daughter of Olympias, and Jews. He King of Coma- afterwards Berenice, of

MARIMALTHACE, ELPIS,

CLEOPAAMNE, Mother of TRA, the who was

Daughter to *Archela*üs the Mother of Mother to the High- Herod and Salome,

Tetrarch of Priest Simon, Judœa, and Philip, who mar-

who was Antipas, the Tetrarch of ried a Son

Mother of Tetrarch of the Batanæa, of Herod the Galilee, and of and the Tra-

Pheroras. Husband of a daughter chonitis.

Herodias, of whose name This last whom he had was Olympias, married Sa-

Salome, the who married lome the Dancer; who Joseph Dancer, married first Nephew to Daughter of Herod the Herod the Philip, and af-

Great. Antipas Tetrarch and terwards married first Herodias. Aristobulus the the Daughter Son of Herod, of Aretas King King of Chal-
of Arabia, and cis.
afterwards Of Cypros, Herodias wife who married to his brother, Antipater the who was still Son of Salome living. Sister to Herod
the Great.
Aristobulus, Herodias, Mariamne, who mar- who married, who married

ried Jotape, first, Herod, her Uncle *An*married Cypros Daughter otherwise tipater. the Daughter to the King called Philip, [gena.] whom he had Aristobulus, Berenicius, and Hircanus. of Salampso, Aristobulus married Salome who was the Dancer, Philip's widow, Mother to by whom he had three Son, Agrippa, Herod, and Aristobulus.

Drusius. Agrippa II.

who was at first King of Chalcis, and afterwards of Emesa. the Tetrarch of Batanæa, by whom she had Salome the Dancer; afterwards she married Herod Antipas, Tetrarch of Galilee. Berenice, Drusilla, marmarried first ried first Aziz Mark, then Mariamne, King of Emesa, Herod King married first and afterwards of Chalcis, *Archela*üs, Felix Governor Tetrarch of the son of Chelci- of Judæa. She Trachonitis. and last of all Polemon as, and after- had a Son by King of wards him, whose Cilicia. Demetrius, name was Alabarch of Agrippa, who II. HEthe Jews at with his wife Alexandria, perished in the by whom she flames of had Berenice mount *Vesu*and Agrip- vius.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Herod (II)

[Antiq. l. 17. c. 4, 6. Antiq. l. 17. c. 6. p. 626. In the year of J.C. 30.] II. HEROD, called Philip in the Gospel, the son of Herod the Great and Mariamne, daughter to Simon the High-Priest, was at first set down in Herod's Will to be Heir to the kingdom, after the death of Alexander and Aristobulus, and after the discovery of Antipater's conspiracy: but Herod having discovered, that Mariamne, Herod's mother, was concerned in this conspiracy, he razed Herod out of his Will, and substituted Archelaus in his place. Herod Philip married Herodias, grand-daughter to Herod the Great, by whom he had Salome, who is mentioned in the Gospel as a graceful dancer. Herod Antipas the Tetrarch, brother to Philip, having been some time with him, when he was upon a journey to Rome, conceived a criminal passion for Herodias, and talked to her of marrying him. Herodias consented, upon condition that Antipas would divorce the daughter of King Aretas, whom he had married long before.

Antipas, when he returned from Rome, performed his promise, and took Herodias his brother Philip's or Herod Philip's wife. Against this incestuous marriage, St. John inveighed with great vehemence; and this was the Herodias by whose procurement this great man's head was cut off.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Herod Antipas (III)

[In the year of J.C. 31. In the year of J.C. 36.] III. HEROD ANTIPAS, son of Herod the Great, and Malthace, in his father's last Will was styled, Tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa[1]. His first wife was the daughter of Aretas King of Arabia, but he afterwards dismissed her, and took his brother Philip's wife, while his brother was still living, as we have observed in the preceding Article. His divorce from the Arabian King's daughter, ingaged him in a war with this prince, wherein he was worsted; and the very Jews acknowledged, that this was a just punishment of John the Baptist's death. As this holy fore-runner of our [Antiq. l. 17. c. 7. p. 626, 627.] Saviour never ceased exclaiming against his incestuous marriage with Herodias, he ordered him to be seized, and sent him loaded with fetters to the castle of Macheron. Herodias still more exasperated than he, thought of nothing [Antiq. l. 18. c. 2.] but his destruction. She was afraid that Herod, who was not insensible of this holy man's reproaches, and sometimes hearkened to him with pleasure, might at last be moved, and dismiss her. While Herod Antipas was once entertaining the Grandees of his Court upon his birth-day, Salome, Herodias's daughter by Philip her first husband, came into the hall, and there danced so much to the King's satisfaction, that he promised with an oath to grant whatsoever she should ask of him. Salome consulted her mother; and she directed her to ask nothing else besides the head of John Baptist. The King was concerned at this petition; but at last commanded [See Matth. xiv. 3, &c. Mark vi. 17, &c. Matth. xiv. Mark vi. 17.] execution to be done, as was desired.

Some time after[2], Herodias growing uneasy to see her brother Agrippa have the title of King, while Herod Antipas her husband had no other than that of Tetrarch, pressed Antipas so much, that he determined to make a journey to Rome, with an intention to ask the same dignity of Caius the Emperor. But Caius, prejudiced by several letters, which Agrippa had written against Antipas, deprived him of his Tetrarchy, and banished him to Lions, and from thence into Spain, where [Lib. 2. de Bello, c. 16.] he died. See above ANTIPAS.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of Jesus Christ 39.
In the year of Jesus Christ 39.

Herod Agrippa (IV)

IV. HEROD AGRIPPA, the son of Aristobulus, brother to Herodias, and grandson to Herod the Great. See AGRIPPA.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Herod (V)

[Antiq. l. 19. c. 4. Dio. l. 60. Antiq. l. 20. c. 1.] V. HEROD, King of Chalcis, brother to Agrippa and Herodias, the son of Aristobulus, and grandson to Herod the Great. His first wife was Mariamne the daughter of Olympias, and afterwards Berenice his niece, the daughter of Agrippa the Great. The Emperor Claudius gave him the kingdom of Chalcis in the year of Jesus Christ 41. About the year 43, he obtained from the same Emperor authority to inspect the Temple, and the money consecrated to God, with a power of setting up or deposing the High-Priests. He made use of this power in deposing Simon Cantharus, and placing Joseph the son of Cani in his room. Herod died in the year of Jesus Christ 48. There is no mention made of this Prince in the sacred Writings. By his first wife he had a son, whose name was Aristobulus: and by his second, two sons, Berenicianus and Hircanus.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Herodians

[Matth. xxii. 16. Mark iii. 6.] HERODIANS, one of the four Sects, which were among the Jews in our Saviour's time. This Sect was not ancient, and could have been no earlier than the reign of the Herods in Judæa. Neither Josephus nor Philo speak of it by the name of the Herodians [viii. 15. xii. 14.] ; but the Gospel does in several places.

People are very much divided about the Sect of the Herodians. There may be reckoned eight or nine different opinions concerning the original of it. Some believed that the Herodians took Herod for the Messiah[1]; but as there were several Herods, who were known to have reigned over the Jews, they are still divided to know, which of them was acknowledged for the Messiah. The generality are for Herod the Great, the son of Antipater, who died some months after the birth of Jesus Christ. He appeared at a time when all the world were in expectation of the Messiah. Messiah. He was a powerful, brave, and warlike Prince. He is said to have procured the genealogical Memoirs of the House of David to be burnt, that so no one might be able to prove, that he was not of a family, from which it was well known that the Messiah was to spring. Lastly, Persius is [Pers. Sat. 6. vs. 180. Luke xiii. 32.] cited, who speaks of King Herod's Festival, which was celebrated at Rome among the Jews with great illuminations.

Others[2] were of opinion, that Herod II. surnamed Antipas, and Tetrarch of Galilee, was the Head of the Herodians. He was a very ambitious and very politick Prince, for our Saviour calls him Fox. He might be very well thought to be ambitious of passing for the Messiah.

Philastrius[3] and some others believed Herod Agrippa, who was appointed King of Judæa by Caligula, to have given name to the Herodians. But how can this opinion be maintainable, since the Herodians were already known some years before this Prince ascended the throne?

Father Hardouin[4] imagined, that the Herodians were Platonists, whom King Herod had brought into credit in Judæa, in imitation of the Platonists of Athens, of whose Sect he was a follower.

[Mark viii. 15. Matth. xvi. 6.] These Platonists, according to him, were of the same principles with the Sadducees, for which reason the Herodians are mentioned in the Gospel instead of the Sadducees; and our Saviour having cautioned his Disciples in St. Mark, to beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Herodians, in St. Matthew admonishes them to guard themselves against the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees. But in other places the Evangelists distinguish clearly the Sadducees from the Herodians; and it is very probable, that St. Mark has supplied what was wanting in St. Matthew.

The Author of the imperfect Work upon St. Matthew believes, that the Herodians were Pagan Subjects of Herod Antipas: But is it credible that the Pharisees should concert with Pagans to tempt Jesus Christ?

Many of the Fathers[5], and several Commentators, have asserted, that the Herodians were people of Herod's retinue, who to satisfy their curiosity, or make their court to their master, came with the Pharisees to tempt Jesus Christ upon paying tribute; but it appears by the recital of the Evangelists, that the Herodians were a Sect subsisting in Judæa without any dependance on King Herod, and his power at Jerusalem.

Some[6] will have it, that the Herodians were Politicians who favoured the dominion of Herod and the Romans, against the Jews, who were zealous for the Liberty of their nation: the former maintained, that it was their duty to pay tribute to the Kings established by the Romans; and they were called Herodians, as who should say, Royal, or Royalists, in opposition to the other Jews, who were not of the same opinion, and might properly be termed Republicans, or Free. St. Justin the Martyr[7] says, that the Herodians were people of Herod's party, who acknowledged him to be the High-Priest of their Nation; which the other [Strabo, l. 16. p. 765.] Jews refused to do. Strabo tells us, that this Prince took upon him the High-Priesthood, which his predecessors had not enjoyed. But Josephus says nothing like it; he only confesses that Herod, after the death of his brother-in-law Aristobulus, disposed as he pleased of the High-Priesthood; which, without doubt, was displeasing to all honest Israelites. But we have no proof that they, who were well satisfied with Herod's conduct in this particular, composed a distinct Sect among the Jews.

Scaliger[8] and some others were of opinion, that this was a kind of fraternity set up in honour of Herod, as there were societies of the same nature at Rome in honour of Augustus, Adrian, and Antonine, called for this reason Sodales Augustales, Augustians, Adrianians, &c. But this fraternity or society of Augustians was not established at Rome till after the death of Augustus, and so consequently after that of Herod, who died before Augustus.

Dr. Prideaux[9] proves very clearly, that the Herodians were a Sect formed among the Jews; that they had a leaven, or particular doctrines distinct from those of the Pharisees and Sadducees, against whom our Saviour requires his followers to guard themselves. There is no question to be made, but that they took their sentiments from Herod the Great, since they bore his name. They were probably his creatures or domesticks, as the Syriac version calls them. There remains nothing more than to know what were the Doctrines of the Herodians. This Author thinks they were reducible to these two Heads: 1. In their belief that the dominion of the Romans over the Jews was just and lawful, and that it was their duty to submit to it. 2. That in the present circumstances they might with a good conscience follow many of the heathen modes and usages. It is certain [Antiq. l. 15. c. 12.] that these were Herod's Principles, since he excuses himself on the score of the necessity of the times for acting in many things against the maxims of the Jewish Religion.

[Acts v. 37.] Having now laid before you these several opinions relating to the Herodians, it remains for us to chuse our side of the question. We see from the Gospel, 1. That this was a Sect formed and actually subsisting among the Jews in our Saviour's time. 2. That it differed from the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenians. We have made it appear, that the argument produced to shew, that they and the Sadducees were the same, is not solid. 3. They were seen always with the Pharisees. 4. They were very much concerned to know whether it were necessary to pay tribute to the Romans, or not. 5. They had some dangerous principles, since our Saviour admonishes his hearers to take care of their leaven. Now I see none but the Disciples of Judas the Gaulonite or Galilæan, in whom all these characters concur. They composed a Sect, which is particularly taken notice of in [Joseph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 1, & 2.] Josephus; they agreed in all things with the Pharisees; the only instance which distinguished them, was their excessive love of liberty, they being fully persuaded, that men were to pay obedience to God only. This Sect was in all its vigour when our Saviour appeared; after the destruction of Jerusalem, when the nation was dispersed and reduced to slavery, it sunk and was intirely lost.

Judas Gaulonites, or the Galilæan, appeared at the time when all the people were taxed by order of Augustus, in the year of [Antiq. l. 18. c. 1. p. 616.] Jesus Christ 10, and of the Vulgar Æra 14, ten years after the first taxation which was made at the birth of Jesus Christ. This Judas pretended, that the true Israelites, being the people of God, were to be subject to no man. He had a great number of Disciples, whom some called Galilæans, because Gaulon is in Upper Galilee; and others Herodians, because this City belonged to Herod Antipas's kingdom. Josephus gives them no particular name; he says only, that they were followers of Judas the Gaulonite, great lovers of Liberty, and maintained the same opinions as the Pharisees [Antiq. l. 18. c. 1. & de Bello, l. 2. c. 12. Hieron. in Ep. ad Tit. c. 3.] . All that the Gospel tells us of the Herodians agrees perfectly with the idea, which Josephus gives us of the Disciples of Judas Gaulonites. St. Jerom makes no question, but that St. Paul in his Epistles has these Hereticks in view, when he recommends submission to the secular Powers established by God. See our Dissertation concerning the Sects of [Antiq. l. 18. c. 7.] the Jews, prefixed to our Comment on St. Mark.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Tertull. de Præscript. Appendic. initio. Epiphan. Hæres. Herodian. Hieronym. contra Luciferian.
Theophylact. Euthym. in Matth. See Basnage Hist. des Juifs, l. 3. c. 8. art. 8, 16, 17.
Philastr. de Hæres. Prateolus Elench. Hæres. c. 14.
Harduin. de Nummis Herodiad.
Chrysost. Hieron. Drutmar. Jans. Vatab. Erasm. Nat. Alex. &c.
Origen. in Matt. c. 17. Cyril. Alex. l. 2. in Isai. ii. Theophylact. in Matt. Grot. Maldonat. &c.
Justin. Mratyr. Dialog. cum Tryphone.
Scaliger. Animadv. in Euseb. Chronic. N°. 1882. Casaub. Proleg. in exercit. in Baron.
Prideaux's History of the Jews, part 2. l. 5.

Herodias

HERODIAS, the daughter of Aristobulus and Berenice, sister to King Agrippa, and grand-daughter to Herod the Great. Her first husband was her uncle Herod Philip, by whom she had Salome. Herodias having hearkened to the propositions which were made to her by Herod Antipas her uncle, Tetrarch of Galilee, of marrying her at his return from Rome, she removed from Philip's house into that of Antipas, together with her daughter Salome. And as St. John the Baptist at all opportunities [Matth. xiv. 3.] censured this incestuous marriage, Antipas ordered him to be put in prison, and some [Mark vi. 17. Hieron. in Rufin. l. 3. c. 11. p. 247.] time after Herodias suggested to her daughter Salome to ask John the Baptist's head of the King. Thus this holy man was beheaded; and St. Jerom relates, that this woman, holding his head in her hands, pierced his tongue with her bodkin, in like manner as Antony's wife served Cicero's.

[Antiq. l. 18. c. 9. In the year of Jesus Christ 39.] Herodias not enduring with patience to see her husband Tetrarch only, while her brother Agrippa, whom she had known in a state of indigence and humiliation, was honoured with the title of King, persuaded her husband Antipas to go to Rome, and desire the Emperor Caïus to grant him the same favour, which he had bestowed upon Agrippa. But Agrippa, moved by a still meaner degree of jealousy, at the same time sent his servant with letters to the Emperor, importing that Herod had in his arsenals wherewithal to arm seventy thousand men. Antipas not being able to deny this fact, was immediately banished to Lions. Caïus understanding that Herodias, who had accompanied her husband in this journey, was sister to Agrippa, shewed an inclination to pardon her: but she chose rather to follow her husband in the calamity which she had brought upon him, than to owe any thing to her brother's fortune. See the Article HEROD ANTIPAS, that of AGRIPPA, and that of HEROD PHILIP.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Herodion

[Rom. xvi. 11. Menæa. 8. April. Bolland. viii. April.] HERODION, St. Paul's cousin. The modern Greeks tell a great many stories of St. Herodion. They reckon him among the seventy-two Disciples and Apostles; and say, that notwithstanding, out of humility he was content to be a servant to all the Apostles. He was ordained Priest, then Bishop of Patræ, probably in Achaia. He is the same perhaps as St. Rhodion, whose head, they say, was cut off at Rome, the same day as St. Peter's and St. Paul's.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Herodion

[Antiq. l. 14. c. 25. & 16. 1. De Bello, l. 1. c. 21. De Bello, l. 5. c. 7.] HERODION, a Castle built by Herod upon the spot where he had defeated his enemies in his flight. This Castle was sixty furlongs from Jerusalem, and here this Prince desired to be buried. It was not far from Tekoah. M. Reland believes, that Herod built another of the same name towards the Mountains of Arabia, and, as he conjectures, beyond Jordan. For it must be confessed, that a Castle built sixty furlongs, or three leagues from Jerusalem, cannot naturally be supposed to mean a Fortress built towards the Mountains of Arabia.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heroon

HEROON, a City at the northern extremity or point of the Red Sea. It is in all probability the same which we at present call Suez. The Ancients call it likewise Heroopolis, and the Gulf of Suez, Sinus Heroopoliticus.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heser

HESER, a City of Judah, built or fortified by Solomon, 1 Kings ix. 15. It is in all probability the same as the City of Asor or Hazor.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heshbon

HESHBON, a celebrated City beyond Jordan, otherwise called Esbus, Chesbon, Chasphon, Chascor. It was, as Eusebius says, twenty miles eastward from Jordan. [Josh. xiii. 17.] It was given to the Tribe of Reuben; but was probably made over to that of Gad, since we meet with it among the cities which this Tribe gave the Levites for their [Josh. xxi. 37. 2 Chr. vi. 8.] abode. It belonged at first to the Moabites, from whom King Sihon conquered it. It was retaken by the Israelites a little before the death of Moses. Lastly, after the ten Tribes were transplanted into the Country beyond Jordan, the Moabites made themselves [Jerem. xlviii. 2.] masters of it. Pliny makes it belong to Arabia. Solomon in his Song speaks of [Plin. l. 5. c. 11.] the waters of Heshbon; and the second [Cant. vii. 4.] book of Maccabees says, that the Lake of Caspis or Heshbon was two furlongs, or [2 Macc. xii. 16.] three hundred paces broad.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hesrai

HESRAI, of Carmel, one of David's brave Officers. 2 Sam. xxiii. 35.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hesron (I)

I. HESRON, the third son of Reuben, Gen. xlvi. 9. Head of the Family of the Hesronites. Numb. xxvi. 6.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hesron (II)

II. HESRON, the son of Pharez, and grandson of Judah. 1 Chr. ii. 5. Gen. xlvi. 12.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Heth

HETH, the father of the Hittites, was the eldest son of Canaan, and dwelt southward of the Promised Land, at Hebron and thereabouts. Ephron, an inhabitant of Hebron, was of the race of Heth, and this whole city in Abraham's time was peopled by the children of Heth. There are some, who maintain, that there was a city called Heth; but we find no footsteps of it in the Scripture.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hethlon

HETHLON, a city mentioned in Ezekiel, as limiting the Land of Promise on the north side. Ezek. xlvii. 15. xlviii. 1.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hexapla

[l. 1. c. 16.] HEXAPLA. This is the name of a large work composed by Origen, wherein he collected all the Greek Versions of the Scripture, which had been made till that time: namely, those of the Septuagint, Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, and a fifth found at Jericho in 217, together with a sixth found at Nicopolis in 228. These six Versions were disposed in six columns opposite to one another, that it might be observed at one view, where they agreed or disagreed; and to confront them more easily with the Hebrew, Origen placed the Hebrew in Hebrew letters at the head of them, and the same text in Greek letters in two columns answerable to the six columns before mentioned. So that there were in all eight columns; two for the Hebrew, and six for the six Greek Versions. There was even a seventh Version, which contained the Psalms only: but of this no notice was taken in the denomination of the Hexapla. From these two columns of the Hebrew, the work was sometimes called Octapla, by reason of the eight columns.

It is not now in being intire, and the loss of such an immense performance is the greatest the Church ever has sustained. The ancient Fathers have preserved several fragments of it. Eusebius, St. Chrysostom, Theodoret, and the other Greek Fathers, and among the Latins, St. Jerom, have often cited the Hexapla, and confronted the passages of Scripture according to the several Versions contained in this work. Some of the moderns have collected the fragments of it: among others, Drusius has given us a large Volume of them in 8vo. But the R. F. De Montfaucon, a Benedictine of the Congregation of St. Maur has carried his enquiries much farther, and given us two Volumes of them in folio, printed in 1713. To these he has added Prolegomena, wherein he explains the form and history of the Hexapla[1].

Origen, before he wrote his Hexapla, had composed the Tetrapla; that is to say, a collection of the four principal Versions of the Scripture, which are those of the Septuagint, Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion. Tetrapla signifies properly a compound of four rows, or four folds.

Origen is thought to have begun this great work of his Hexapla about the year 231, but we cannot tell exactly when he finished it. So large an undertaking must have required a great deal of time in the execution of it.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. St. Jerom*, in his Epistle to* Marcella*, calls* Origen, Adamantius, the indefatigable, one not to be overcome with labour; and indeed, says Dr. Prideaux*, it was not without indefatigable labour, that he compleated this and the other works which he published. The same learned Doctor is very particular in his description of* the Hexapla*; and speaking of Father* Montfaucon's Edition of it, he says, that it is as bulky as the Hexapla*, and a very pompous edi- tion of it hath made us expect concerning this matter much more than is performed. See Dr.* Prideaux's Connection, &c. Part II. Book I.

Hezekiah (I)

I. HEZEKIAH, King of Judah, the son of Ahaz and Abi, was born in the year of of the World 3251, Ahaz his father being [2 Kings xvi. 1. compar'd with 2 Kings xviii. 1. See our Comment upon 2 Kings xvi. 1, &c.] then no more than eleven years of age. There is some difficulty with respect to this particular; but the Scripture asserting, that Ahaz was but twenty years old when he began to reign, and that he reigned but sixteen years, it follows, that he lived but six and thirty. Now the same Scripture says, that Hezekiah was five and twenty years old, when he began to reign: we must conclude therefore, that Ahaz his father had him, when he was but yet eleven years old: which is indeed very extraordinary, but not at all impossible.

Hezekiah succeeded his father Ahaz in the year of the World 3277, or 3278, before Jesus Christ 722, before the Vulgar Æra 726. He did that which was good [2 Kings xviii.] and agreeable to God. He destroyed the High-places, cut down the prophane Groves, and broke the Statues which the people adored in the reign of Ahaz. He broke in pieces the brazen Serpent which Moses had made, because the Children of Israel burnt incense to it. In the first [2 Chr. xxix. 3.] month of the first year of his reign, he ordered the great doors of the Lord's House to be opened, and repaired them: he convened the Priests and Levites, and exhorted them to purify and cleanse the Temple, and to put it into a condition to have Sacrifices offered in it as formerly. The Priests and Levites having executed the King's commands, they began to offer Sin-offerings and Burnt-sacrifices upon the Altar of the Temple; which Sacrifices were furnished by the King. After this, the Princes of the people offered again abundance of Victims, and the Worship of God was perfectly restored in his House.

As the Feast of the Passover had been hitherto neglected, Hezekiah invited not only all his own people to it, but those [2 Chr. xxx.] likewise of the kingdom of Israel. Some ridiculed the proposal; but many came into it: and this was the most solemn Passover that had been observed for a long time. After this, the people began generally to destroy all the remains of Idolatry, which were still subsisting not only in the territories subject to Hezekiah, but in those likewise belonging to Hosea, the last King of Israel; who saw his people, without jealousy, returning to the worship of the Lord. Hezekiah took all necessary care to keep up the good regulations, which he had [2 Chr. xxxi.] established in the Temple, and to provide sustenance for the Priests and other Ministers of the Lord, together with such other things as were requisite for their support. All the people brought their Tythes, and First-fruits, in so large a quantity, that there was some left.

[In the year of the World 3290, or 3291. 2 Kings xviii. 7. 2 Chr. xxxii. 1, 2, 3, &c.] Some years after, Hezekiah shook off the Assyrian yoke, and refused to pay the accustomed tribute to that King. He defeated the Philistins, and destroyed all their country from the Tower of the watchmen to the fenced Cities. He set about repairing the Walls of Jerusalem, and fortified it by building Towers about it. He laid in stores of arms and provisions, set good commanders over his troops, stopp'd up the springs which were without the city, and omitted nothing which was necessary to put himself into a condition of making a vigorous resistance.

In the mean time, Sennacherib King of Assyria marched against him; entred the territories of Judah, and made himself master of almost all the towns in it. Hezekiah observing that the Kings of Egypt and Cush, with whom he had made [2 Kings xviii. 24. xix. 9.] an alliance, did not come to his assistance, and being sensible, that he was not of himself strong enough to resist so powerful an enemy, he sent Ambassadors to him, desiring him to retire out of his dominions, and promising to submit to such terms, as he should think fit to impose upon him.

Sennacherib demanded of him three hundred talents of silver, and thirty talents of gold[1]; and to raise this sum, Hezekiah was obliged to exhaust all his treasures, and to pull off the gold plates, which he had put formerly upon the Temple-doors. But Sennacherib having received this money, instead of returning, and leaving Hezekiah in peace, sent three principal Officers of his Court to him from Lachish, which he was besieging, to Jerusalem, with a summons to him to surrender. These Officers desired to speak with Hezekiah; but the King did not think it proper to go out of the city: he sent Eliakim, Shebna, and Joah to them, whom Rabshakeh spoke to in an insolent manner, aggravating the power of his master, and saying, that Hezekiah was not able to furnish him with a thousand men to mount a thousand horses, which Sennacherib should supply him with: he added, that the Jews in vain placed their confidence in the King of Egypt; that Pharaoh would be to them as it were a bruised reed, which breaks under him who would rest upon it, and pierces his hand: that Sennacherib was come into Judæa in obedience purely to the Lord's Order, who had said to him, Go up against this Land, and destroy it.

And as Rabshakeh spoke Hebrew, and the people of Jerusalem were upon the walls and heard him, the Deputies appointed by Hezekiah desired him to speak Syriac, because they understood this language, and not Hebrew, before all the people who heard them from the walls. Rabshakeh answered, Did my Lord send me hither to speak to you only and your master? or to these men rather, who hear me from the walls; and whom you would reduce to the necessity of drinking their own urine and eating their own excrements? At the same time he raised his voice, and exhorted the people to surrender to his master; adding, that as there were no Gods who were able to rescue the nations out of his hands, which he had subdued, so the Lord could not preserve them from the arms of the Assyrian King.

Hezekiah having heard these blasphemies, rent his clothes, covered himself with sackcloth, went to the House of the Lord, and sent a message to the Prophet Isaiah, with an account of what Rabshakeh had said. But Isaiah said, thus saith the Lord, fear not the menacing and blasphemous discourses which you have heard, I will send out the spirit of fear against Sennacherib, which will oblige him to return to his own country, where he shall perish by the sword. Accordingly this King having broke up the siege of Lachish, and setting down before Libnah, was informed that Tirhakah King of Cush, was marching against him, with a design to engage him. He left the siege of this place therefore, to go and meet Tirhakah; and at the same time sent letters to Hezekiah, wherein he told him, that he ought not to place his confidence in his God; that this would never secure him from his power, no more than the Gods of other nations had been able to protect them against his arms.

Hezekiah having received these letters, went up to the Temple, spread them before the Lord, and begg'd of God to deliver him out of the hands of this insolent and proud enemy. The Lord heard his prayer, and sent the Prophet Isaiah to tell him, that he should not fear Sennacherib's threats; that this Prince would be soon obliged to return home; that he should not lay siege to Jerusalem and attack it, and that the Lord would protect and defend the city and his people. Accordingly, the very night after this Prediction, the Angel of the Lord came down into the camp of the Assyrians, and killed there an hundred fourscore and five thousand men of Sennacherib's army; so that this Prince was obliged to retire immediately to Niniveh, where two of his sons smote him with the sword, as he was worshipping in the Temple of Nisroch his God. He was succeeded by Esar-haddon, in the year of the World 3291, before Jesus Christ 709, before the Vulgar Æra 713.

[2 Kings xxi. 23, &c. and Isai. xxxviii. & 2 Chron. xxxii. 29, 30. Rabb. apud Hieronym. in Isai. xxxix. 2 Chron. xxxii. 24.] Soon after this war, and in the very year of Sennacherib's invading the territories of Judah, which was the fourteenth year of Hezekiah, this Prince fell very dangerously sick. His disease was probably an imposthume or an ulcer. The Rabbins are of opinion, that God afflicted him with this indisposition to punish his neglect, because he had not composed a song of thanksgiving for his deliverance from Sennacherib's war. But the second book of Chronicles seems to attribute this disease to the elevation of Hezekiah's heart, and his not acknowledging sufficiently, that his deliverance was owing to the pure favour of God. However this may be, the Prophet Isaiah came to him, and said, Set the affairs of thine house in order, for thou shalt live no longer, but shalt die. Hezekiah, turning his face to the wall, addressed his prayer to God with abundance of tears. Isaiah was not got above half way the court, when the Lord commanded him to return to Hezekiah. He did so, and said to him, Thus saith the Lord, I have heard thy prayer, and have seen thy tears. I have healed thee, and in three days thou shalt go to the Temple, and I will add still fifteen years to thy life. Besides, I will protect thee against the King of the Assyrians, and will defend Jerusalem from his insults. At the same time, Isaiah ordered some figs to be brought, which he put upon the King's ulcer and he was cured.

But Hezekiah had before said to him, what sign shall I have, that the Lord will heal me? Isaiah answered him, would you have the shadow of the sun advance ten degrees, or retire ten degrees in the dial of Ahaz? Hezekiah desired, that the shadow might go back ten degrees, for this seemed to him most difficult; and the Prophet calling upon the Lord, the shadow, as he had promised, returned ten degrees backward. It is very probable, that this retrogradation, which was very sensible and real in the dial of Ahaz, was caused by some reflection of the sun's rays, without a necessity of there being any real retrogradation of this Luminary. Hezekiah, after his recovery, composed a song of thanksgiving to the Lord, which the Prophet Isaiah has preserveda.

[a Isai. xxxviii. 10, 11, &c. b In the Year of the World 3291, before J.C. 709, before the Vulgar] At this time b Merodach or Berodach-Baladan King of Babylon, sent letters and presents to Hezekiah c, because he understood that he had been sick, and knew that at the time of his cure, some great proprodigy [2 Chr. xxxii. 31.] had happened at Jerusalem. Hezekiah was mightily delighted with this Ambassy; he shewed the King of Babylon's Envoys all his treasures, his spices, his rich vessels; in a word, he concealed nothing in his palace from them. The Prophet Isaiah came afterwards to the King; and having understood what had passed, told him as from God, that a time would come, when all that was in his house, and his fathers had amassed together to that day, would be removed to Babylon: that his sons would be made Eunuchs to serve in the palace of the King of Babylon. Hezekiah answered, The Will of God be done: whatever he hath ordained is just: let peace and truth reign during the remaining days of my life. This Prince passed the latter years of his life with great tranquillity, laid up great riches, conveyed water into the city, and died in the year of the World 3306, before Jesus Christ 694, before the Vulgar Æra 698. He was succeeded by Manasseh, who inherited neither his wisdom nor his piety. The Sacred Writings evidence upon many occasions, the piety and merit of Hezekiah; and Jesus the son of Sirach, Author of the book of Ecclesiasticus, hath dedicated an Encomium to him in the xlviiith Chapter of his work.

HIGH PLACES CONSECRATED TO THE WORSHIP OF IDOLS.1. Apis. 3 Dagon. and to all sorts of abominations. 2 Priapus. 4 Moloch.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. An Hebrew talent, according to the Scripture, (Exod. xxxviii. 25, 26, 27. containing 3000 shekels, and every shekel three shillings of our money, these 300 talents of silver must contain of our money 135000 pounds; and the thirty talents of gold two hundred and sixteen thousand pounds. So the whole sum here paid by Hezekiah, amounted to three hundred fifty one thousand pounds of our money. Prid. Connect. &c. P. 1. B. 1.

Hezekiah (II)

II. HEZEKIAH, the second son of Neariah, a descendant of Zerubbabel. 1 Chr. iii. 23.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hezekiah (III)

III. HEZEKIAH, the son of Shallum, was one of those that opposed the Israelites, who had carried a great number of their brethren, belonging to the Tribe of Judah, into captivity; and obliged them to set them at liberty. 2 Chr. xxviii. 12.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hezekiah (IV)

IV. HEZEKIAH returned from Babylon with ninety eight persons of his family. Neh. vii. 21.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hezir

HEZIR, Head of the seventeenth sacerdotal Family. 1 Chr. xxiv. 15.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hiades

HIADES. See HYADES.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hic-Sos

HIC-SOS, Shepherd-Kings. See above EXODUS, and below SHEPHERDS.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hiddai

HIDDAI, one of the brave Officers in David's army. He was of the Valley or Brook of Gaash. 2 Sam. xxiii. 30.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

To Hide

TO HIDE, To Hide one's self. To hide one's face, to turn from any one, are expressions which shew some aversion and estrangement. The Prophet beseeches God not to turn his face from him, not to hide himself before him; that is to say, he begs of him to hear him, to look favourably upon him. In another place he says, that he hides his friends in the secret of his presence: in some secret place, where he sees them in the [Ps. xxxi. 20. Psal. cxix. 19.] inner part of his Palace. He prays to God not to hide his commandments from him; to discover to him the sense of them. St. Paul says, that the Sacrament, [Col. i. 26. See likewise Eph. iii. 9. Ps. lxxxiii. 3. על צפוניך] or mystery of our salvation hath been hid from ages and from generations, but is now made manifest to his Saints in the times of the new Covenant.

To HIDE is often used for to protect. The Saints are sometimes called the hidden ones. In the Psalms, Cogitaverunt adversus sanctos suos; in the Hebrew, Adversus absconditos suos.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hiel

[1 Kings xvi. 34. Josh. vi. 26.] HIEL, of the city of Bethel, rebuilt Jericho, notwithstanding the curse denounced by Joshua against the person who should attempt to do so. Wherefore he experienced the effects of Joshua's curse; for God suffered him to lose his eldest son Abiram, while he was laying the Foundations of Jericho; and his youngest son Segub, when he was hanging up the Gates.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hierapolis

[Coloss. iv. 13.] HIERAPOLIS. St. Paul writing to the Colossians, testifies of Epaphras, and says, that he abounds with zeal and affection for those of Laodicæa and Hierapolis, as well as for those of Colossæ. Hierapolis was in Phrygia, and in the neighbourhood of Colossæ and Laodicæa.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hieronymus

HIERONYMUS, Demophon, Timotheus, and some others, whom Lysias had left in Judæa, after the agreement made between the Jews and the young King Antiochus Eupator, did what they could to oblige the Jews by their ill treatment of [2 Macc. xii. 2.] them, to break the treaty.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

High Places

HIGH PLACES, in Hebrew, Bamoth, and in Latin, Excelsa. They are often spoken of in Scripture[1]; and the Prophets reproach the Israelites for nothing with so much zeal, as for worshipping upon the High Places. The destroying of these High Places is a commendation given but to few Princes in the Scripture; and many of them, though otherwise zealous for the observance of the Law, had not the courage to ruin these Eminences, and prevent the people from sacrificing upon them.

While the Temple was not built, there was nothing in the High Places very contrary to the Law, provided God only was adored there, and that no Incense or Victims were offered to Idols. Under the Judges they seem to have been tolerated; and Samuel offered Sacrifices in several places besides the Tabernacle, where the Ark was not present. Even in David's time they sacrificed to the Lord at Shilo, Jerusalem, and Gibeon. But after that, the Temple was built, and a place prepared for the fixed settlement of the Ark, it was no more allowed of to sacrifice out of Jerusalem. Solomon in the beginning of his reign went a pilgrimage to Gibeon. But from that time we see no lawful Sacrifices offered out of the Temple.

The

The High Places[2] were very much frequented in the kingdom of Israel. The superstitious people went sometimes upon Mountains sanctified by the presence of Patriarchs and Prophets, and by the appearances of God, in order to worship the true God there. There was nothing wanting in this worship to make it lawful besides the place which the Lord had chosen. But upon these Hills they often adored Idols, and committed a thousand abominations in Groves, and Caves, and in Tents set apart for prostitution. This was what inflamed the zeal of pious Kings and Prophets, to suppress and destroy the High Places.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

1 Kings iii. 2, 4. xii. 31, 32. xiii. 2. xiv. 23, &c. במותBamoth, Excelsa.

Translators' note. Dr. Prideaux thinks it probable, that the Proseuchæ, which, he says, were open Courts built like those in which the peo- ple prayed at the Tabernacle, and at the Temple, and in one of which our Saviour is said to have continued all night at his devotions, Luke vi. 12. were the same, which in the Old Testament are called High Places. And he is confirmed in this opinion, in that the Proseuchæ had Groves in or about them, in the same manner as the High Places had, &c. Connect. P. 1. B. VI.

Hilen

HILEN, a City in the Tribe of Judah, which was given to the Levites. It is the same probably as Cholon or Olon. Joshua xv. 51.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hilkiah (I)

I. HILKIAH, the father of Eliakim. 2 Kings xviii. 18.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hilkiah (II)

II. HILKIAH, the son of Amaziah, a Levite of Merari's Family. 1 Chr. vi. 45.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hilkiah (III)

III. HILKIAH, the father of Jeremiah, Jerem. i. 1. Some[1] will have it, that this Hilkiah was the High-Priest of this name, who lived in the reign of Josiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 4, 8, 10. but their opinion wants good proofs.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Clem. Alex. l. 1. Strom. Hieron. seu Author. Tradit. Hebr. in Paral. Brug. Tostat. alii.

Hilkiah (IV)

IV. HILKIAH, the High-Priest, grandson to Shallum, and father of Azariah, who succeeded him in the High-Priesthood. Under the Pontificate of Hilkiah the book of the Law was found in the [2 Kings xxii. xxiii. 2 Chr. xxiv. In the year of the World 3380, before J. C. 620, before the Vulgar Æra 624. Baruch i. 7. 2 Kings xviii. 18, 26, 37.] Treasury of the Temple; which ingaged King Josiah to reform Religion, and resettle it, after it had sunk so low in his dominions, through the impiety of the preceding reigns. We are of opinion, that he is the same as Eliakim or Joachim, who lived in the reign of Manasseh, and governed at the time when Holofernes laid siege to Bethulia in 3347, before Jesus Christ 653, before the Vulgar Æra 657.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hilkiah (V)

V. HILKIAH, father of the preceding Hilkiah. He lived in the reign of Hezekiah. See our Dissertation concerning the succession of the Hebrew High-Priests, prefixed to our Comment upon Judith.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hillel

HILLEL, a famous Rabbin, who lived, says St. Jerom, a little before Jesus Christ. [Hieron. in Isa. viii. l. 3.] He was the Disciple of Sameas or Schamai, and became the Head of one of the most celebrated Schools of the Jews. I am surprized that Josephus, who, in several places, speaks of Sameas, has said nothing of Hillel his Disciple, unless he has called him by some other name; for he makes mention of Pollio a famous Pharisee, Herod's friend, and Sameas's master. Antiq. l. 15. c. 1. & 13. p. 541. and of Ananel, whom Herod sent for from Babylon to be High-Priest. Hillel perhaps may be one or other of these two men. Sameas lived in the [Antiq. l. 14. c. 17. p. 484. Zachutus in Juchafin. Gedaliah in Schalschelet Hucc. belu. David Ganz in Zemach David.] time of Hircanus, and saw the beginnings of Herod. Hillel therefore must have flourished under the reign of this Prince[1].

This Rabbin was born at Babylon, and there abode till he was forty years of age: then he went to Jerusalem, where he applied himself seriously to the study of the Law, wherein he so much distinguished himself, that after forty years he was made Head of the Sanhedrim, at the age consequently of fourscore. He lived there forty years longer, as the Jews say; so that according to their calculation he must have lived an hundred and twenty years. He entred upon his office an hundred years, as they tell us, after the taking of Jerusalem. This Chronology is not exact; but the Rabbins are not very curious in this point.

They pretend, that by the mother's side he descended from David, for she was of the race of Sephata the son of David and Abital; of the father's side he was of the Tribe of Benjamin. All the Jewish writers look upon him as the most eminent among the ancient Doctors of their nation: his son and grandsons discharged the Office of President of the Sanhedrim with great honour, for the space of ten generations. All this is related upon the credit of the Rabbins.

[Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 17. & l. 15. c. 1.] We are of opinion, that the celebrated Doctor Hillel is described by the Historian Josephus, under the name of Pollio. This Historian tells us, that Herod the Great laying siege to Jerusalem, with expectations, that if this city were taken, all Judæa would be compelled to acknowledge him for King; the whole body of the Sanhedrim violently opposed his design, and cried with all their might, The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord! as if God, whom they supposed to be concerned for the glory and preservation of his Temple, were obliged to hinder the holy City's falling into the hands of Herod, whom they looked upon as a stranger; but that Pollio and Sameas always opposed the other Counsellors, and declared, that it was necessary for them to receive Herod for their King, and surrender the city to him; representing to the people, that the measure of their sins was compleatly filled up; and that God intended to punish them by delivering them up to Herod, so that all their endeavours to resist him would be vain. Their remonstrances made no impression on the minds of those who heard them. Herod made himself master of the city by force, and put to death all the Members of the Sanhedrim, except Pollio and Sameas, or Hillel and Sameas, according to those who believe Pollio to be the same as Hillel.

These are the two Rabbins mentioned in the Mishna, or Deuterosis, or second Law of the Jews: these are the principal Masters of the Jewish Traditions included in the Mishna. These two Rabbins being divided in their opinions, and their Disciples engaging in their quarrel, there was blood shed, and several persons killed on both sides; but Hillel's school had at last the superiority, and the decision was pronounced by a pretended Voice from heaven, which they call Bath-kol, or the Daughter of the Voice, that put an end to all disorders. Hillel was of a gentle, peaceable humour, and Shammai or Sameas, on the contrary, was of a sharp and violent temper; nevertheless he grew weary of the dispute, and very readily submitted to a voice, which they heard, and gave out to be a kind of oracle. The Jews blame Sameas, and extol Hillel to the heavens.

The latter of these two brought up above a thousand Pupils in the knowledge of the Law; and among these there were fourscore of great distinction; for the Jewish Authors observe, that thirty of them were of such eminence as to be worthy of having the Glory of God to rest upon them, as it had rested formerly on Moses; thirty who were able to stop the course of the Sun, like Joshua; the other twenty were a little inferiour to the first, but superiour to the second. The most eminent of all was Jonathan, the son of Uzziel, Author of the Chaldee Paraphrase upon the Prophets.

The Jews say, that Hillel was so poor, as to be forced to work with his own hands for a livelihood; and that to satisfy the ardent inclination to Learning, with which he was transported, he gave one half of his profit to the University-Porter, and subsisted upon the other. As he wanted work, and so grew unable to prevail, as usual, with the Porter, he got to the window, that he might hear there; and having continued

Prid. Connect. Part II. B. 8. there all night, he was found the next morning covered with snow. Sameas having observed him in this condition, admired his affection for study, and believed it excusable to violate the Sabbath in order to warm him.

He became Head of a celebrated School, and had a great number of famous Disciples. The Jews bestow abundance of very high encomiums on him. They call him Prince of the Sanhedrim, Chief of the Pharisees, the Defender of Traditions[2]. He did not follow all the sentiments of his master Sameas. St. [See Basnage Hist. of the Jews, t. 2. l. 4. c. 3. p. 26, 27. Edit. Par. About 30 years before the birth of Jesus Christ. Hieron. in Isai viii.] Jerom says, that these two great Men formed two parties among the Jews, and were Masters of the Scribes and Pharisees. Akiba succeeded them, and Meïr Akiba. He adds, that the Hebrews make Shammai and Hillel to be the Authors of their Mishna and their Deuteroses[3]. The Rabbins relate, that Hillel coming from Babylon to Jerusalem, was consulted concerning the celebration of the Passover, which fell that year upon a Saturday; and that his answer gave so much satisfaction, that he was made the Patriarch of his Nation, and that his Posterity succeeded him till the fifth Age of the Church.

He was succeeded by his son Simeon, who has been confounded with old Simeon, who received our Saviour, when Joseph and the Blessed Virgin presented him at the Temple. But this conjecture is absolutely destroyed by observing, that Hillel, having been forty years Patriarch, lived about ten years after the birth of Jesus Christ; so that Simeon and his son could be then neither High-Priest nor Patriarch of the Jews, nor of an age so far advanced as St. Luke intimates. The name of Hillel is not to be met with in the Scripture; and we place it here, only because it is very much celebrated in the writings of the Jews, and he is said to be the father of old Simeon. There was besides another Hillel very famous among the Jews, who lived, according to the Rabbins, about the year of Jesus Christ 240.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. Sammai & Hillel non multò prius quàm Dominus nasceretur orti sunt in Judæa. Hieronym. in Isai. viii. 14. See more of these two eminent Doctors in Buxtorf's Lexicon Rabbinicum, David Ganz in Zemach David, and Dr. Prideaux's Con- nect. &c. P. 2. B. VIII. Rabbins upon Pirke Avoth, or the Sentences of the Fathers, the Scribes are called Scripturists or Textu-

Translators' note. Hillel was Nasi, or President of the great Sanhedrim, aries, in opposition to Eliezar, Abarbanel and Mai- and Shammai Ab Beth Din, that is Vice-President of the monides, who were so many Deuterotes or Para- same. Nasi in Hebrew, signifies Prince, and Ab Beth Din, phrasts and Commentators of Holy Scripture. See Father of the House of Judgment.

Translators' note. By Deuteroses are Basnage Hist. des Juifs, t. 2. p. 424. See likewise meant Paraphrases and Comments upon Scripture: whence in an old Comment composed by ten

Hillel (II)

II. HILLEL, the son of Judas the Holy, was a celebrated Rabbi among the Jews, [Basnage Hist. des Juifs, t. 2. l. 4. c. 6.] and of great reputation even among Christians. He is thought to be the person who fixed the Epoch of the Creation of the World, and computed the years from thence, as the Jews do still at this day. Before, they made use of different Epochs; the departure out of Egypt was the Æra of some; the Law delivered on Mount Sinai, was that of others. Some computed their years from the Dedication of the Temple; others from their Return from the Babylonish Captivity; nay, there were some who borrowed their Epoch from the Entrance of Alexander the Great into Jerusalem. But Hillel introduced the custom of reckoning their Years from the beginning of the World, a custom which has been regularly followed since the completion of the Gemara; and according to the calculation made by it, Jesus Christ was born in the year of the World 3760; whereas according to ours, he was born in the year 4000 from the creation of the World.

The Jews are accused with having designedly abridged the Chronology of the Old Testament, and diminished the number of years which had run out before Jesus Christ, that so they might be the better able to elude the prophecies which spoke of the Messiah's coming. The incredulous Jews were perplexed with them, and particularly they were attacked with the prediction of one Elias, who affirmed, that the Messiah would be born, and the Law abolished, at the end of the fourth Millenary of the World: for he reckoned two thousand years under the Law of Nature, two thousand under the Law of Moses, and two thousand under the Messiah; after which the World was to have a conclusion. As this Tradition came from the Jews, and many of them were staggered at it, and became converts to Christianity; the second Hillel thought he should do an essential service to his Nation, in lessening the number of years which had expired from the creation of the World to the birth of Jesus Christ.

The Jews farther assert, that Hillel whom we are speaking of, composed a Cycle of nineteen years, whereby he reconciled the course of the Sun with that of the Moon, by the help of seven intercalations. He inserted a month at the third year, at the sixth, eighth, eleventh, fourteenth, seventeenth, and nineteenth. The Jews received this Cycle with so much the more readiness, as he was Prince [Bartolocci Bibl. Rabbin. t. 2. p. 416, 548. Basnage Hist. des Juifs, t. 2. l. 4. c. 5. art. 15.] of the captivity in the West, and he was always followed, till Sid reformed the Calendar in Spain, by King Alphonzo's order. Hillel reformed likewise the Tekupha, that is to say, the Revolution of the year, by fixing the Solstices and Æquinoxes in a more exact manner than had been hitherto done; for example, the Autumnal Æquinox had been misplaced on the 7th of October: he resettled it at the 24th of December.

He is believed to have wrote a famous Bible with his own hand, which was preserved till the sixteenth Century. Kimchi says, that the Pentateuch belonging to it was kept at Toledo.

[Origen. Epiphan.] Origen was acquainted with Hillel II. and frequently consulted him. St. Epiphanius assures us, that before his death he was converted to Christianity; which particular is related after the following manner, as he learnt it from the mouth of Joseph, who had been an intimate friend of Hillel's, Tutor to his son, and one of his Disciples. Eusebius of Verceil and St. Epiphanius going to see Joseph at Scythopolis, he told them, that Hillel, who was a descendant from Gamaliel, and had been Patriarch of the Jews, perceiving his end to be drawing near, sent for the Bishop of Tiberias, under pretence of consulting him about his disease, as a Physician of good experience; but ordering his servants to retire out of the room, he was at his own request privately baptized. This is thought to have happened about the year of Jesus Christ 310 or 312. He left a son under age in the tuition of two friends, who brought him up in the principles of the Jewish Religion: he was Patriarch or Prince, as his father had been before him. Joseph, one of his guardians, becoming a convert to Christianity, related these particulars to Epiphanius and Eusebius of Verceil, as we have before observed.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hillel (III)

III. HILLEL, the father of Abdon, Judge of Israel. Judg. xii. 13.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Himenæus

HIMENÆUS, 1 Tim. i. 20. and 2 Tim. ii. 17. See hereafter HYMENÆUS.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hin

HIN, an hollow measure of the Hebrews. It was half an Hebrew Seah, or the sixth part of a Bath. It held one gallon and two pints[1].

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. Hin was a liquid Measure; as of Oil, for instance; Exod. xxx. Ezek. xlv. 46. or of Wine, Exod. xxix. Levit. xxiii. Ac- cording to Josephus, it contained two Attick Congii, lib. 3. cap. 9, & 10. Therefore it was the sixth part of an Ephah. Josephus writes, lib. 3. ἀρχαιολ. that they offered with an Ox, the half of an Hin of oil; or, in English measure, according to Josephus, 6 pints 25,698 solid inches; according to the Tables, 5 pints 1,267 solid inches. With a Ram they offered the third part of a Hin, or 3 pints, 10,469 solid inches. And with a Lamb, the fourth part, or 2 pints, 15,071 solid inches. The Prophet Ezekiel was commanded to drink water to the quantity of the sixth part of an Hin, that is 1 pint, 19,672 solid inches. The LXX render Hin falsly χοῦν, or one Congius, Levit. xix. and with a much greater difference from the truth, the Latin Version renders it Sextarius. Epiphanius makes a twofold Hin; the greater of 18 Sextarii, the lesser of 9. Arbuthnot, Tables of Ancient Coins, Weights, and Measures.

Hind

HIND. The import of the Hebrew Text is often Hind, where we read in the Vulgate Stag: for example, Gen. xlix. 21. Naphtali is a Hind let loose. And in the Psalms, Psal. xviii. 33. He maketh my feet like Hind's feet. The Hind is a gentle, amiable Creature, Prov. v. 19. The wise man compares a regular man's wife to a Hind and a Fawn: Cerva charissima & gratissimus hinnulus: in the Hebrew, Cerva amorum, & hinnulus gratiæ.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

To Hinder

[Lev. iv. 22.] TO HINDER. Prohibeo is used for to forbid. Quod Domini lege prohibetur: or for, [1 Sam. xxv. 33. Psal. xl. 9.] to divert from. Blessed be thou which hast kept me this day from coming to shed blood: and for to refrain, I will not refrain my lips: I will not cease to praise thee. Prohibe linguam tuam a malo: Keep thy tongue from evil. Mortuo non prohibeas gratiam: Shew thy gratitude to the dead. [Ps. xxxiv. 13. Ecclus. vii. 33.] Haggai, chap. i. ver. 10. Prohibiti sunt cœli ne darent terræ pluviam: God hath not permitted the heavens to give rain unto the earth, Ecclus. xlvi. 9. Prohibere gentem a peccatis: To divert the people from sin. Jeremiah xlviii. 10. Cursed be he that keepeth back his sword from blood: Maledictus qui prohibet gladium suum a sanguine.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hinnom

HINNOM. The Valley Gehennom, or the Valley of the sons of Hinnom, so called from Hinnom. This Valley lies to the East [Josh. xv. 8. xxiii. 16. 2 Kings xxiii. 10. Neh. xi. 30. Jerem. vii. 31.] of Jerusalem. It is also called the Valley of Topheth. It is believed, that the God Moloch was worshipped there, and that a perpetual fire was kept up there in honour of him. See what we have said on GEHENNA.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hippicos

HIPPICOS, a Tower of the City of Jerusalem, built by Herod the Great, and demolished by the Romans.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hippopotamus

HIPPOPOTAMUS. We do not meet with this word in the Text of the Old [Bochart. de animal. sacr. parte 2. l. 5. c. 15. Job xl. 10. הנה נא בהמות] Testament. But as Bochart, and some others before him, have asserted, that the Hebrew Behemoth, which signifies Animals in general, did in particular denote the Hippopotamus, in the Text of Job, ch. xl. vs. 10, &c. we shall here give the description of it. The word Hippopotamus, according to the Greek import of it, signifies a River-horse. It is to be found principally in the Nile, in the Indus, and other great rivers. The feet of it are said to grow forked like an ox's; in its back, mane, and tail it resembles an horse, and neighs like one. It has the teeth of a boar, but not so sharp; its hide, when it is not moistened, resists all sorts of weapons.

Thevenot, who had seen one, describes it [Thevenot. Voyage, partie 2. c. 72.] after the following manner: It is as it were of a dun colour, and resembles a buffle very much behind; but its legs are shorter and larger. It is about the size of a camel, and its muzzle like that of an ox. The body of it is twice as large as an ox's, its head like that of an horse, its eyes and ears small, its nostrils very wide, has no chest, its feet very big, and almost round, with four claws on each, like those of a crocodile, the tail small like that of an elephant, the skin bare, and almost without hair. In its lower jaw, it has four great teeth half a foot long, two whereof are hooked, and about the size of an ox's horns. It has one on each side its mouth: the two others which are strait, jut forward, and grow long out of its mouth. It was killed with musket-shot by some Janizaries, who found it upon land where it was come to feed. They shot at it several times without piercing through its skin; but at last, being wounded in the jaw, it fell.

This Author confesses, that many took this Animal for a Sea-buffle, but he with some others discovered it to be a Sea-horse: yet I question whether this is the true Hippopotamus. However, let this be as it will, we have interpreted the Hebrew, Behemoth, by Elephant. The Reader may see what we have said of it under the Title belonging to it. Some are of opinion, that the species of the Hippopotami is extinct in the Nile.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hippos

HIPPOS, a City of note in the time of Josephus the Historian, and Capital of a small Canton called Hippene. This City was situated beyond the Lake of Tiberias, thirty furlongs from Tiberias, and sixty from Gadara. The Plains of Hippos and Scythopolis were adjacent to one another. The Hippene, Gadara, and the Gaulanitis were the southern boundaries of Galilee. Hippos was an Episcopal City, and we find some of its Bishops among the subscribers to particular Councils. What its ancient name was, we do not know; for Hippos is a Greek word, which signifies an horse.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hiram (I)

I. HIRAM, King of Tyre, the son of Abibal, mentioned even by profane Authors, distinguished himself by his magnificence, and adorned the city of Tyre with many fine works. As soon as David was seated on the throne, and acknowledged King by all Israel, Hiram sent Ambassadors [About the year of the World 2958, before J. C. 1052, before the Vulg. Æra 1046.] to him with artificers, carpenters, and stone-cutters, together with cedar, to build a palace for David. The same Hiram sent Ambassadors to Solomon, as soon as he heard that he was anointed King in his father's room a, to congratulate him upon his accession to the crown. And Solomon on his part sent to him, to desire timber and stones of him for building the Temple of the Lord, together with labourers to hew both the timber and stones. Hiram promised Solomon all that he desired, provided he would ingage to furnish Hiram's family [In the year of the World 2992, before J. C. 1008, before the Vulgar Æra 1012.] with a certain quantity of corn and oil.

These two Princes had all their lives a good understanding with each other; and Dius, who wrote the Annals of Tyre, relates, that they held a correspondence by letters; and in Josephus's time, Hiram's letters were still to be seen, with Solomon's answers. Menander of Ephesus, and the same Dius, speak of certain riddles, which these two Princes proposed one to the other. Dius says, that Solomon first sent some to Hiram, which the latter was not able to resolve, and therefore paid a great sum of money to Solomon; but that afterwards he explained them with the assistance of one Abdemon; and then proposing others to Solomon which he could not resolve, Hiram received a much larger sum of money than he himself had paid upon the like occasion.

After that Solomon had finished all his works, he made a present to Hiram of twenty

[year of the World 3012, before J. C. 988, before the Vulgar Æra 1992. 1 Kings ix. 10, &c. 1 Kings ix. 14.] twenty towns in Galilee. Hiram went to view these places: but was not pleased with them, and he called them the land of Chabul, saying, Are these, my brother, the towns which you have given me? Josephus says, that Chabul signifies something that displeases. Others translate it, a land full of briars; and others, too strong, too moist a soil. See CHABUL, where we have examined the situation of these twenty cities. The Scripture remarks, that Hiram lent Solomon an hundred and twenty talents of gold, while he was imployed in building; which hundred and twenty talents of gold make six hundred and fifty seven thousand pounds sterling. This is what we learn from Scripture concerning Hiram, King of Tyre.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hiram (II)

II. HIRAM, the son of a Tyrian, whose name we are unacquainted with, and a Jewish mother of the tribe of Naphtali, according [1 Kings vii. 13, 14. 2 Chron. ii. 14.] to the book of Kings; or of a Tyrian father, and a mother of the Tribe of Dan, according to the book of Chronicles. This Hiram was an excellent Artificer in all sorts of works in brass or copper. He understood not only how to execute, but likewise to invent the finest works. He made two large columns of brass for Solomon, which were placed at the entrance of the Temple-Porch, one whereof was called Jachin, the other Booz. He moreover made that large Bason, called the Brazen-Sea, wherein water was kept for the use of the Temple; and ten brazen Basons of a lesser size, with their bases, for the use of the Priests.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hiras

HIRAS, a Canaanite of the city of Adullam, father-in-law to Judah the son of Jacob, who married his daughter Shuah. Gen. xxxviii. 1, 2.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hircanus (I)

I. HIRCANUS, John Hircanus, the son of Simon Maccabæus. It is believed that he was called Hircanus, according to the Memoirs which are printed in Arabic at the end of M. le Jeay's Polyglot, by reason of the victory obtained by him over Hircanus, whom the books of the Maccabees[1] and Josephus[2] call Cendebeus. Josephus the son of Gorion[3] says, that Simon's eldest son was called Hircanus, and that after his death, the same name was given to John his second. Eusebius[4], Sulpicius Severus[5], and others were of opinion, that he had the name of Hircanus from a victory obtained over the Hircanians, perhaps in the expedition, wherein he accompanied Antiochus Sidetes beyond the Euphrates: all which is very uncertain. It is very sure, that the name of Hircanus was not at that time unknown, or new [Vide 2 Macc. iii. 11. & Joseph. Antiq. l. 12. c. 4.] among the Hebrews.

The High-Priest Simon, who was also Prince of the Jews, made his son John Hircanus Governour of the frontiers of [1 Macc. xiii. 54. In the year of the World 3865, before J. C. 135, before the Vulgar Æra 139. 1 Macc. xv. 38, 39, 40. 1 Macc. xv. 1, 2, &c. In the year of the World 3866, before J. C. 134, before the Vulgar Æra 138. In the year of the World 3869, before J. C. 131, before the Vulgar Æra 135. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 14. and the fourth of the Maccabees. 1 Macc. xvi. 11, &c. 4 Macc. & Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 16. In the year of the World 3869, before J. C. 131, before the Vulgar Æra 135. Antiq. l. 13. c. 16. 4 Macc. ii. Antiq. l. 13. c. 19.] Judæa upon the Sea-coast. Hircanus's quarters were generally at Gazara; and King Antiochus Sidetes coming to besiege Dora, whither Tryphon had escaped, sent Cendebeus, one of his Generals, against the Jews, with orders to seize on Gazara, and reduce the Jews to obedience. John Hircanus immediately gave notice of this to his father Simon, who was at Jerusalem. Hereupon Simon sending his two sons John Hircanus and Judas, gave them twenty thousand horse and foot, and sent them against Cendebeus. As soon as the two armies were in fight, and the sacred Trumpets were sounded in the Jewish army, Cendebeus fled with all his forces. John and Judas pursued them, and killed great numbers of them.

Some time after[6], Simon having been unhappily killed in a treacherous manner by Ptolemy his son-in-law[7], John Hircanus and Judas had seasonable notice of it, to prevent the snares which he had laid for them, and hinder him from making himself master of Jerusalem. They went and besieged him in the castle of Docus, near Jericho, where he had assassinated Simon; but Ptolemy commanding the mother and two brothers of John and Simon to be scourged, when they intended to assault the place, compassion and tenderness hindered them from pressing the siege closely, and the Sabbatical year coming on, they withdrew; and Ptolemy escaped to Philadelphia: this is Josephus's relation. But some learned Criticks look upon this whole recital to be fabulous.

But however this may be, it is certain, that after the death of Simon, John Hircanus was acknowledged Prince and High-Priest of his Nation. And King Antiochus Sidetes having been informed, that Simon was no longer at the head of the Jewish affairs, prepared to march against Jerusalem. He laid siege to it, and incamped near the north part of the city, which was the only place, at which it was accessible. Hircanus made a vigorous defence, and in a sally, drove the enemy to a good distance from the city, and ruined the towers and works.

The Feast of Tabernacles coming on, Hircanus sent to the King, desiring a suspension of arms till the solemnity was over. Antiochus granted it, and sent even Sacrifices and rich Presents. This liberality ingaged Hircanus to make proposals of peace to him. The propositions were agreed to. Antiochus came into the city, and Hircanus gave him a great sum of money. Josephus says, that the King ordered the battlements of the walls to be pulled down, and obliged the Jews to pay him certain tributes. It is said, that Hircanus upon this occasion ordered David's tomb to be searched narrowly, and that he took out great riches from thence. See what we have said concerning David's tomb, at the end of the Article relating to this Prince.

Three years after the return of Antiochus Sidetes into his own country, he resolved to make war with Phraates King of Parthia. He invited Hircanus to go with him. a The [In the year of the World 3873, before J. C. 127, before the Vulgar Æra 131. a 4 Macc. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. alii.] beginnings of this war were very successful to Antiochus; he worsted the Parthians three times, and took Babylon: but his troops having rendred themselves odious and insupportable by their excesses, the people rose, and put the King's forces to the sword, which lay dispersed in winter-quarters. It is observed, that during this war the King's army was obliged to stay two days in one place, by reason of the Jews, who required to rest upon the Sabbath-day. Hircanus seeing the defeat of Antiochus's army, returned into Syria, and took Alep, Medaba, [4 Macc. ii. Nicol. Damasc. apud Joseph. Antiq. l. 15. c. 16. In the year of the World 3875, before J. C. 125, before the Vulgar Æra 129. b Antiq. l. 13. c. 17.] Samega, Sichem, and Gerizim, came back very happily to Jerusalem, shook off the Syrian yoke, and recovered an intire liberty.

The year following, he made war with the Idumæans, conquered them, obliged them to receive circumcision, and other Jewish ceremonies; b the use whereof they continued till after the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple by the Romans c. He afterwards deputed Ambassadors to Rome, to renew the Alliance with the Roman people d: and some years e after, he undertook the siege of Samaria, the conduct whereof he trusted to his sons Antigonus and Aristobulus, who gave great proofs in this war of their valour and prudence. Samaria was taken after about a year's siege. Hircanus ordered the city to be demolished f, [c 4 Macc. ii. d Antiq. l. 13. c. 17. & 4 Macc. ii. In the year of the World 3877, before J. C. 123, before the Vulgar Æra 127. e In the year of the World 3894, before J. C. 106, before the Vulgar Æra 110. f Antiq. l. 13. c. 18. & 4 Macc. iv. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 18.] and it was not repaired till long after, under Gabinius. Hircanus died in the year of the World 3898, before Jesus Christ 102, before the Vulgar Æra 106, after having governed the Commonwealth of the Jews for nine and twenty years. Aristobulus his son succeeded him. Josephus says, that John Hircanus received the Spirit of Prophecy from God.

After the reduction of Samaria, he was master of all Judæa, Samaria, Galilee, and several frontier places, and thereby became one of the most powerful Princes thereabouts; no one of his neighbours durst any more attack him, and the rest of his days he passed in perfect repose, as to affairs abroad, but at home he met with some trouble from the Pharisees. This Sect had acquired such a reputation, as gave them a great ascendant over the people. Hircanus had endeavoured by all sorts of means to bring them over to his interest; he had been brought up among them, had always professed himself to be of their Sect, and upon all occasions gave them proofs of his benevolence.

He one day invited the Leaders of them to a magnificent entertainment, and when the banquet was over, desired them to tell him, if he had done any thing in the conduct of his life which was contrary to Justice or Religion, according to the Maxims received and taught among them. As soon as he had ended his discourse, all began to praise his Administration, and give him the commendations due to a brave Man, and a just and worthy Governour. Hircanus received with joy these applauses from the Pharisees, which he believed he had merited by his behaviour.

But when the rest had ceased speaking, Eleazar, who hitherto had said nothing, rose up, and directing his discourse to Hircanus, said, Since you desire to have the truth freely told you, if you would shew yourself a just man, resign the High-Priesthood, and content yourself with the Civil Government of the Nation. Hircanus asked what reasons he had for giving this advice? Because, replied he, we know upon the testimony of some among us, who are advanced in years, that your mother was a captive, and that, as the son of a strange woman, you are by the Law incapable of possessing this office.

Josephus assures us, that the fact was false, and that all who were present extremely blamed him, who had affirmed it, and declared their indignation in strong terms against him. Hircanus was so incensed at it, that he resolved to be revenged in a most signal manner. Jonathan, his intimate friend and a zealous Sadducee, taking the advantage of the disposition he was then in, animated him vigorously against the party of the Pharisees, and persuaded him to desert it, and embrace that of the Sadducees. The measures which he took for effecting his design, were these: he intimated to Hircanus, that this was no sally of Eleazar's, but an act concerted by the whole Cabal, whereof Eleazar was but the organ; and for his further conviction, he had nothing more to do, than to consult them how to punish the false accuser; that if he would please to make the experiment, he would find, by their regard to the criminal, that they were all his accomplices.

Hircanus followed his advice, and consulted the chief leaders of the Pharisees, with relation to the penalty which he deserved, who had thus slandered the Prince and High-Priest of his Nation; expecting, without doubt, that they would condemn him to death. But their answer was, that calumny was no capital crime, and that all the punishment it merited could be only whipping and imprisonment. This gentleness in a case of so grievous a nature, per-

8 R suaded Hircanus that all Jonathan had intimated to him was true, and he became a mortal enemy to the whole Sect of Pharisees, and forbad the observance of such commands as were founded only on their pretended Traditions; inflicted penalties on those who acted contrary to his orders, and entirely forsook their party, to embrace that of the Sadducees.

Hircanus did not long survive this storm, for he died the year following, after having enjoyed the High-Priesthood nine and twenty years. Josephus says, that he was favoured with the gift of prophecy, and foretold, that his two eldest sons Aristobulus and Antigonus should not long outlive him, and that the succession should fall to Alexander his third son. He knew likewise by revelation the very moment wherein Antiochus of Cyzicus became victorious over his two sons who were then at war with him, though he was two days journey from the place where the battle was fought.

[Antiq. l. 18. c. 6.] The castle called Baris is likewise said to have been built by him, which was afterwards made use of as a Palace for the Asmonæan Princes, as long as the sovereignty over the Jews continued in their hands. This Palace was built upon a steep rock fifty cubits high, without the inclosure of the Temple-square, and upon the same mountain. It was square, and two furlongs about. Here the Pontifical Robes were kept, which the High-Priest wore in great solemnities. Here too Herod the Great afterwards built the tower Antonia. See above BARIS.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

1 M. cc. xv. 38, 39.
Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 13.
Ben-Gorion. l. 4. c. 2.
Euseb. in Chronico.
Sulpit. Sever. t. 2. Hist. Cedren. alii.
In the year of the World 3869, before J. C. 131, before the Vulgar Æra 135.
1 Macc. xvi. 11, &c.

Hircanus (II)

II. HIRCANUS, the son of Joseph, and grandson to Onias II. the High-Priest. Joseph his father was Receiver of the King of Egypt's Revenues, and had many sons; but he principally loved Hircanus, because he found more wit and industry in him, than in his other children. Joseph had this son by his own niece: the matter, as it is reported by Josephus the Historian, is as follows. Joseph [Antiq. l. 12. c. 4.] going to Alexandria, upon affairs relating to his office of Receiver, was accompanied thither by his brother Solymius, who carried one of his daughters with him, whom he designed to marry at Alexandria, if he could find a suitable match for her among the Jews of that place. When they were arrived there, Joseph fell passionately in love with a young woman whom he saw dancing. He owned his weakness to his brother, and desired his assistance to procure this young girl for him, but to manage the matter so secretly, that he might not suffer in his reputation. Solymius promised him: but instead of the dancer, he put his own daughter into his brother's bed, who having drunk a little, did not perceive that she was his niece. This intrigue lasted for some time, without Joseph's making a discovery; his passion instead of diminishing, was every day still more inflamed. He confessed to his brother, that he was apprehensive he should not be able to get the better of himself in this particular, and his great uneasiness was, [Exod. xxxiv. 16. Deut. vii. 3. 1 Kings xi. 2. Nehem. x. 30. and xiv. 25. Ezra ix. 10.] that the Law would not allow him to marry this young woman, because she was a stranger; and that if the Law would permit it, the King would never consent to it.

Hereupon his brother discovered the whole affair to him, and told him, that the person whom he was so passionately fond of, was his own niece, that it was in his power to marry her when he pleased; that what he had done was to prevent his committing so scandalous a sin, as that of having such a commerce with a strange woman as was forbidden by the Law; that he had chosen rather to injure his own daughter, than expose him to this infamy. Joseph was extremely affected with his brother's friendship, expressed his gratitude to him, and at the same time married his daughter, by whom the year following he had the Hircanus we are here speaking of.

[Levit. xviii. 12, 13. xx. 19. Antiq. l. 12. c. 4. p. 404, & seq.] The Law of Moses does indeed forbid the marriage of the aunt with her nephew, but not the uncle's with his niece. The reason which the Jewish writers give for it, is, that the aunt with respect to the nephew being in the same line as the mother, has naturally the superiority over him, which natural superiority could not subsist in marriage, in which state the woman is a degree lower: wherefore the nephew's marrying his aunt would in a manner overthrow the order of nature; but the marriage of the uncle with the niece is not liable to the same inconveniences; for each still continues in that rank of order with respect to one another, wherein nature had placed them.

[In the year of the World 3795, before J. C. 205, before the Vulgar Æra 209.] Joseph at a particular time sent Hircanus to the distance of seven days journey from his house, with three hundred yoke of oxen, and servants to sow a large piece of ground. But to make a trial of his son's wit, he took away the traces, wherewith the oxen were fastened to the plow; so that when they were come to the place appointed, the plowmen finding no traces, would have sent immediately to their master for them; but Hircanus rejected this proposal, ordered ten pair of oxen to be killed, distributed the flesh of them among his labourers, and made use of the hides in preparing bands and traces for his plows. At his return, his father commended his wisdom, and was pleased with what he had done.

Some time after, Ptolemy Philopater King of Egypt, having had a son by his wife Eurydice, all the Governours of Provinces, and Receivers of the King's Revenues, went to Alexandria, to make their complements and presents upon the birth of young Prince Ptolemy Epiphanes. Joseph sent his youngest son Hircanus thither, with [Joseph. Antiq. l. 12. c. 4. p. 404, 405.] letters directed to Arion his Agent at Alexandria, that he might furnish him with something wherewithal to make a present to the King and Queen. The other persons who had been sent with this commission, gave some more, some less: but none had offered any thing above the value of twenty talents. Hircanus designing to excel them all in liberality, compelled Arion to give him a thousand talents, with which he bought an hundred young lads, whom he presented to the King, and as many handsome young girls, whom he presented to the Queen.

His present was very well received; and when he proposed to go away, the King gave him letters of recommendation for his father and brothers, who being provoked with the excessive expence he had been at, at Alexandria, laid an ambush for him in the way; but he defended himself so well, that he killed two of his brothers, and dispersed those who had formed designs upon his life.

When he came to Jerusalem, and saw no one would receive him, he retired to the other side of Jordan, where he passed the remainder of his life in a very fine house, which he had built for himself in a place called Tyre, imploying himself in levying contributions upon the Arabians, compelling them to pay by force of arms, and making war upon them. Here he continued during the seven last years of Seleucus Philopater's reign. But [In the year of the World 3829, before J. C. 171, before the Vulgar Æra 175.] when he saw that Antiochus Epiphanes had got possession of the kingdom, he was afraid lest this Prince should hunt him out, by reason of the mischief, which he had done the Arabians; he therefore killed himself, and Antiochus Epiphanes confiscated his fortune.

[Antiq. l. 12. c. 15.] This Hircanus is spoken of in the second [2 Macc. iii. 11.] book of Maccabees, and is called Hircanus the son of Tobias; because in reality he was the grandson of Tobias, and Joseph's own son. When Heliodorus proposed to carry off the treasures of the Temple by the order of King Seleucus, he was told, that the greatest part of the riches which were lodged there, were left in trust by Hircanus the son of Tobias, Receiver of the King's Revenues.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hircanus (III)

III. HIRCANUS, eldest son of Alexander Janneus King of the Jews, and brother to Aristobulus, of the Asmonæan race. After the death of Alexander Janneus, his wife [In the Year of the World 3926, before J.C. 74, before the Vulgar Æra 78.] Alexandra, or Salome, got possession of the Regency, which she enjoyed nine years, gave the High-Priesthood to Hircanus, and left Aristobulus, without imployment. As soon as she was dead[1], Aristobulus got together some troops, and made himself master of the principal forts in [Antiq. l. 13. c. ult.] the country; so that he wanted nothing, as we may say, but the Royal Ornaments and Name of King. Notwithstanding, Hircanus continued three years, or, as Josephus somewhere says, three months, in possession of the regal Power.b After a battle which was fought near Jericho between the forces of Hircanus and Aristobulus, wherein those of Hircanus were defeated, the latter retired to the Cittadel of Jerusalem, and they who were of his party into the Temple; but Aristobulus entring Jerusalem, soon made himself master of the Temple, and a Treaty of peace was set on foot between the two brothers. It was agreed, that Aristobulus should enjoy the honours of the Crown and High-Priesthood, and that Hircanus should continue a private person, with the peaceable enjoyment of his fortune.

But this peace was of no long duration; Antipater, Hircanus's friend, never ceased solliciting him, to secure himself from the snares, which Aristobulus was laying for him, till he had determined him to put himself under the protection of the Arabian King. Some time after, he returned to Jerusalem, [Æra 65.] and taking Hircanus with him, carried him to Aretas King of Arabia, then at Petra. Antipater afterwards was often pressing Aretas to resettle Hircanus upon the throne of Judæa. To this end he made use of presents, prayers, and promises; and Aretas at last resolved to espouse his cause, and declare war against Aristobulus. A battle was fought, wherein Aristobulus was overcome, and forced to fly for safety to Jerusalem, and afterwards to secure himself in the Temple, where he was besieged by Hircanus and the Arabian army.

In the mean time Scaurus, Commander of the Roman army, came to Damascus, and having received Embassies both from Hircanus and Aristobulus, who desired his assistance, and offered him large sums of money; he embraced the party of Aristobulus, who proposed to give him four hundred talents, rather than that of Hircanus, who made less offers to him, and wrote both to Hircanus and Aretas, threatning them with Pompey's, and the Roman arms, if they did not without delay retire from Jerusalem. Aretas obeyed without making any difficulty of it, and Aristobulus having sallied upon the troops of Hircanus, killed about seven thousand of his men.

The next year, Pompey came himself to Damascus c, where he received Embassies from Aristobulus and Hircanus. Pompey commanded these two Princes to come in person, and give an account to him of their conduct. After he had heard them, he dismissed them, and told them, he would come himself into their country, and decide their difference. Accordingly he came thither soon after, and laid siege to Jerusalem, Hircanus supplying the Roman [Antiq. l. 14. c. 8.] troops with plenty of all necessaries. The siege lasted three months, and the City and Temple were taken upon the 20th of December, in the year of the World 3940, before Jesus Christ 60, before the Vulgar Æra 64. Pompey restored the High-Priesthood to Hircanus, and the Dignity of Prince of the Jews; but without allowing him to use the Diadem; and subjected the Jews to the payment of a tribute to the Romans.

After Julius Cæsar had reduced all Syria and Egypt to his obedience, he confirmed the High-Priesthood to Hircanus, together with the Government of his Nation, and declared him Ethnarch, and the Roman people's [In the year of the World 3957, before J. C. 43, before the Vulgar Æra 47.] friend. (Antiq xiv. 17.) Thus Hircanus continued in the peaceable possession of these two Dignities, from the year of the World 3940, when he received them from Pompey, to the year of the World 3964, before Jesus Christ 36, before the Vulgar Æra 40, when he was taken prisoner by the Parthians, and carried to Babylon. But as [Antiq. l. 14. c. 24, 25. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 11.] he was naturally stupid and lazy, Antipater had the principal share in the government of Affairs, and left Hircanus, as we may say, the name only of Prince of the Jews. He engaged Hircanus to marry Mariamne the daughter of Alexandra, and grand-daughter of Hircanus, to his son Herod; and procured the Government or Intendancy of the two principal parts of Hircanus's

Dominions for his sons Herod and Phasaël; Galilee for Herod; Jerusalem and the territories adjacent for Phasaël. The Grandees among the [Antiq. l. 14. c. 16, 17. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 8.] Jews grew jealous of Antipater and his sons, and even accused Herod of having very much exceeded his power in some things, that he had done in Galilee. But Hircanus, who favoured Herod, advised him secretly [In the year of the World 3958, before J. C. 42, before the Vulgar Æra 46. a Antiq. l. 14. c. 17. b In the year of the World 3964, before J. C. 36, before the Vulgar Æra 40. Antiq. l. 14. c. 24, 25.] to fly in the night-time from Jerusalem, and return to his Government a. Antigonus, the son of Aristobulus, having ingaged the Parthians, who were then in Syria b, by great promises, to come and restore his father to his throne; Pacorus, the King of Parthia's son, went to Jerusalem; and having been received by Phasaël, Herod's brother, as a Guest, persuaded him to come with Hircanus to Barzaphernes, who commanded the Parthian army, that they might bring things to an accommodation. But Barzaphernes ordered Hircanus and Phasaël to be seized; conducted Antigonus to Jerusalem, and put Hircanus and Phasaël into his hands. Antigonus fearing lest Hircanus might some time or other be restored by the interest of the people, to the High-Priesthood, ordered his ears to be cut [Levit. xxi. 17,18, &c.] off, that so for the future he might be rendred incapable of this Dignity: the Law of Moses excluding all such from it, as are any way maimed. After this he gave him up to the Parthians, who carried him in fetters beyond the Euphrates.

[Antiq. l. 15. c. 2, 3.] He continued there till the year of the World 3968, before Jesus Christ 32, before the Vulgar Æra 36. Herod was at that time King of the Jews; and this artificial Prince apprehending always some revolution, desired to have Hircanus in his power, to watch him, and prevent his giving him disturbance. Hircanus therefore sollicited thereto by Herod, and pressed by the natural inclination, which all men have to see their native country, procured permission from Phraates King of Persia, to return into Judæa. Herod at first loaded him with honours: but he had not been there long, before he saw that all the caresses of Herod were feigned.

[In the year of the World 3974, before J. C. 26, before the Vulgar Æra 30.] After the defeat of Antony, Alexandra, Mariamne's mother, and the daughter of Hircanus, believed that Herod, who had always adhered to the interest of Antony, would feel the effects of Augustus's resentment; she imagined it possible for Hircanus to be once more placed upon the throne of Judæa; she endeavoured to inspire him with these hopes, and sollicited him to ask of Malchus King of Arabia, that he would allow him a retreat at his court. Hircanus, who had no ambition, at first rejected these proposals; but at last overcome by the importunities of his daughter, he wrote to Malchus, desiring him to send a detachment of horse, which might conduct him as far as the lake Asphaltites, a frontier of Arabia, to secure him from the ill-will and treachery [Antiq. l. 15. c. 9.] of Herod.

Dositheus, who was charged with these letters, discovered the whole design of Hircanus to Herod. Herod desired Dositheus to carry the letters sealed to Malchus, and bring his answer. Malchus answered, that he would very willingly furnish him with horses and every thing necessary, and offered him a secure sanctuary in his dominions. As soon as Herod had received these letters, he sent for Hircanus, and asked him, what correspondence he carried on with Malchus? Hircanus would not own any; but Herod producing the letters, and convicting him, put him to death, in the year of the World 3974, before Jesus Christ 26, before the Vulgar Æra 30.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the World 3935, before Jesus Christ 65, before the Vulgar Æra 69.

Hircanion

HIRCANION, a very strong Castle and Town in Judæa. Joseph. de Bello, l. 1. c. 14. p. 742.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hir-Shemesh

HIR-SHEMESH, a City in the Tribe [עיר שמש Urbs Solis.] of Dan. Josh. xix. 41. This name signifies, The City of the Sun.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hireling

HIRELING. Moses requires, that the Hireling should be paid as soon as [Levit. xix. 13.] his work is over : The wages of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night unto the morning. An Hireling's days or year is a kind of Proverb, signifying a full year, without abating any thing of it. His days are like the days of an Hireling, Job vii. 1. The days of man are like those of an Hireling; as nothing is deducted from them, so nothing likewise is added to them. And again, chap. xiv. 6. Till he shall accomplish as an Hireling his day: to the time of his death which he waits for as the Hireling for the end of the day. See likewise Isai. xxi. 16. Within a year, according to the year of an Hireling. And xvi. 14. Within three years, as the years of an Hireling.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hireling

HIRELING, in Moses, is taken sometimes for a Labourer, or strange Servant who was not a Jew: for example, he forbids [Exod. xii. 45. Levit. xxii. 10.] the Stranger to eat the Passover. In another place, by this word is meant an hired Jew who is not a Priest: he is not allowed to eat of meat sanctified and sacrificed [John x. 12, 13.] to the Lord. In the Gospel, the Hireling is set in opposition to the true Shepherd; the first neglects the sheep, the second loves and guides them carefully.

The Hirelings whom the Father of the family (that is to say, God) sends into his Vineyard, are the Prophets and Apostles, Jews and Christians; the second succeed the first, and all receive their reward when [Matth. xx. 28.] their work is done.

The Labourer or the Hireling is worthy of his hire, or wages; this is a Proverb, Matth. x. 10. and 1 Tim. v. 18.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

To Hiss

TO HISS, is a kind of insult and contempt: All they, who shall see the destruction [1 Kings ix. 8.] of this Temple, shall be astonished, and shall hiss, and say, How comes it that the Lord hath treated thus this City? And Job, speaking of the wicked under humiliation, [Job xxvii. 23.] says, that they shall clap their hands at him, and shall hiss him out of his place. I will make this City the subject of ridicule [Jer. xix. 8.] and scorn; I will make it desolate and an hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hiss, because of all the plagues thereof. Jeremiah repeats this very expression in several other places. See Jerem. xlix. 17. l. 13. Lam. ii. 15, 16. See likewise Ezek. xxviii. 36. Zeph. ii. 15.

To Hiss, to call any one with hissing, is a mark of power and authority. The Lord says, that in his anger, he shall hiss, and call the enemy against Jerusalem: He will hiss unto them from the end of the earth. He [Isa. v. 26. Isai. vii. 18.] will bring them with an hiss from the very extremities of the earth. And in another place, The Lord shall hiss for the fly, and shall bring it to him, that is in the uttermost part of the rivers of Egypt, and for the bee that is in the land of Assyria. The two flies which God will bring thus with a hiss, are the Kings of Egypt and Assyria. They shall come with their troops into the territories of Israel, and shall disperse themselves over the whole country. Theodoret and St. Cyril of Alexandria writing upon Isaiah, remark, that in Syria and Palestine, they who looked after bees, drew them out of their hives, carried them into the fields, and brought them back again with the sound of a flute, and the noise of hissing. Zachary, speaking of the return from the Babylonish [Zach. x. 8.] captivity, says, That the Lord will gather the House of Judah, as it were, with an hiss, and bring them back into their country; which shews the ease and authority with which he will perform this great work; Sibilabo eis, & congregabo illos.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hittites

[Ptolem. l. 5. c. 16. & 17. Antiq. l. 14. c. 2.] HITTITES, the Land of the Hittites, spoken of in chap. i. of Judges, vs. 26. A man of Bethel went into the Land of the Hittites, and built a city, and called the name thereof Luz. It is our opinion, that this man retired into the Land of the Hittites, southward of the Tribe of Judah, and that he there built Lusa, Elysa, or Lussa, which the Geographers speak of. Josephus says, that the Jews took the city of Lussa from the Arabians. It was in memory of his native place, that this man of Bethel called his new city by the name of Lusa. The Hittites were the descendants of Heth.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hivites

HIVITES, a People descended from Hevæus, the son of Canaan. They dwelt at first in the country which was afterwards possessed by the Caphtorims, or Philistins. [Deut. ii. 23. Josh. xiii. 4.] The Scripture says expressly, that the Caphtorims drove out the Hivites, who dwelt from Haserim unto Gaza. There were Hivites likewise at Schechem, and Gibeon, and consequently in the centre of the promised Land; for the inhabitants of Schechem, and the [Josh. xi. 19. Genes. xxxiv. 2. Josh. xi. 3.] Gibeonites were Hivites. Lastly, there were some beyond Jordan, at the foot of mount Hermon. Bochart is of opinion, that Cadmus, who carried a Colony of Phœnicians into Greece, was an Hivite. His name, Cadmus, comes from the Hebrew, Kedem, the East, because he was of the Eastern part of the land of Canaan. The name of his wife Hermione, comes from mount Hermon, at the foot whereof the Hivites had their dwelling. The metamorphosis of Cadmus's companions into serpents is grounded on the signification of the name Hivites, which in Phœnician signifies Serpents. See AVIMS.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hobab

HOBAB, the son of Jethro, and brother -in-law to Moses. Moses being upon the point of departing from mount Sinai to go to the conquest of the promised Land, said [Numb. x. 29.] to Hobab, we are journeying unto the place, of which the Lord said, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good. Hobab answered, That he could not go, and would return into his own country. But Moses insisted, and entreated

8 S him so earnestly, that he at last yielded to his request. Some think the Kenites, who dwelt southward of Judah, were the descendants [1 Sam. xv. 6. Gen. xiv. 15.] of Hobab the Midianite.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hobah

HOBAH, Hobal, Shoba, or Shobal. It is said in the book of Genesis, that Abraham pursued Chedorlaomer, and the other confederated Kings, as far as Hobah to the left, or to the north of Damascus. We are of opinion, that this is the city of Abila, in the valley lying between Libanus and Antilibanus.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hodaviah

HODAVIAH, 1 Chron. v. 24. was of the Tribe of Manasseh, and distinguished for his valour.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hodoviah

[2 Sam. xxiv. 6.] HODOVIAH, a Levite, the father of Dimeel. He returned from the Babylonish captivity. Ezra ii. 40.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hodshi

[Josh. x. 1, 2, 3, &c.] HODSHI, or Chodshi, a place in the Land of Gilead. It is said, that Joab going by David's order to number the people, came to Gad, and to the Mountain of[l] Hodshi. We do not know the situation of this place.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. In the Hebrew Text ואל ארץ תחתים חדשיIn terram inferiorem Hodsi. English, To the nether Land newly inhabited.

Hoham

HOHAM, King of Hebron, one of the five who laid siege to Gibeon: after the loss of the battle he was taken, put to death, and hanged by Joshua's orders.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hoglah

HOGLAH, the daughter of Zelophehad, of the Tribe of Manasseh, Numb. xxvi. 33. Hoglah signifies an Heifer.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Holocaust

[In the year of the World 2553, before J. C. 1447, before the Vulgar Æra 1451. עלהAscendit, seu Holocaustum.] HOLOCAUST, comes from the Greek, Holocauston[1], which signifies intirely burnt, because all the flesh of Burnt-offerings was consumed by fire upon the Altars, herein differing from the Sacrifices for Sin and other Sacrifices, some parts whereof, which were not consumed upon the Altar, were reserved. The Hebrew word Halah, which is translated Holocaust, or Burnt-offering, is derived from a root, that signifies to go up: because the whole Sacrifice, which is thus offered, is made to ascend and evaporate in smoke. The oldest Sacrifices whereof we have any knowledge, are Burnt-offerings; and it is very probable, that before the Law, no others were offered, and that even the Sacrifices for Sin, and Thanksgiving were Holocausts. See hereafter the Article SACRIFICE. After the erection of the Tabernacle, or at least after the building of the Temple, or the time when the Tabernacle was fixed in one place, two Lambs were offered every day as Burnt-offerings upon the brazen Altar, one in the morning, the other in the evening: the first before all the other Sacrifices; and the second, after all those of the day.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ὁλόκαυστον ab ὅλος totus & καίω accendo.

Holofernes

[In the year of the World 3347, before J. C. 653, before the Vulgar Æra 657. Judith ii. iii.] HOLOFERNES, Lieutenant-General of Nebuchadonozar, the King of Assyria's armies. In the Article NEBUCHADNEZZAR, we shall shew who this Prince was. See also ARPHAXAD. Nebuchadonozar [Judg. i. 16. Judith v.] therefore having in a remarkable encounter overcome Arphaxad King of the Medes; sent to all the Nations with an intention of obliging them this way to submit themselves to his Empire[1], pretending that there could be no power capable of resisting him. Notwithstanding, the people, to whom he deputed his Ambassadors, refused to obey him; whereupon he sent Holofernes against them at the head of a powerful army. This General passed the Euphrates, entred Cilicia and Syria, and subdued almost all the people of these Provinces, some voluntarily submitting, others being compelled by force to surrender; the General every where exercizing a thousand cruelties, and endeavouring every where to have his master worshipped [In the year of the World 3348, before J. C. 652, before the Vulgar Æra 656. Judith vi. Judith vii.] as a God.

Having resolved to make a conquest of Egypt, he advanced towards Judæa, which is the common road into that country, and little expected to meet with any resistance from the Jews. In the mean time he was informed, that they were preparing to oppose him; and Achior commander of the Ammonites, who had already submitted to Holofernes, and were as auxiliary troops in his army, represented to him what sort of persons the Hebrews were, and told him, that they were a people protected in a particular manner by Almighty God, who rendred them invincible as long as they were obedient to him; and therefore he should not flatter himself with the expectation of overcoming them, unless they had committed some offence against God, whereby they might become unworthy of his protection. Holofernes provoked at this discourse, said to him, since you have acted so well the Prophet, I will shew you that there is no other God besides Nebuchadnezzar; and that you shall perish together with the Hebrews, whose God, and whose power you have so gloriously described to us. At the same time he commanded Achior to be taken and carried towards Bethulia, and delivered into the hands of the Hebrews. The servants therefore of Holofernes took Achior, and having conveyed him within sight of, and pretty near to the walls of Bethulia, they tied him to a tree, and left him there, whither the Jews soon came and loosed him, and were informed from his mouth of all that had passed.

In the mean time, Holofernes formed the siege of Bethulia; and having cut off the water which supplied the city, and set guards at the only fountain which the besieged had near the walls, the inhabitants of the city were soon reduced to extremity, and resolved to surrender, if God did not send them succours in five days. Judith being informed of their resolution, con ceived the design of killing Holofernes in [Judith viii. ix. x. xi.] his camp. She took her finest clothes, and went out of Bethulia with her maid-servant; and being brought to the General, she pretended that she could no longer endure the sins and excesses of the Jews, and that God had inspired her with the design of surrendering herself to him.

As soon as Holofernes saw her, he was taken with her beauty; and some days after invited her to a great feast, which he prepared for the principal Officers of his army. But he drank so much wine, that sleep and drunkenness hindred him from satisfying his passion. Judith, who in the night was left alone in his tent, cut off his [Judith xii. xiii.] head with his own sword; and departing with her servant from the camp, she returned to Bethulia, with the head of Holofernes. As soon as it was day, the besieged made a sally upon the enemies, who going into their General's tent, found his headless carcass wallowing in its own blood. They then discerned that Judith had deceived them, and fled with precipitation, leaving the camp abounding with rich spoils: the Jews pursued them, killed a great number of them, and returned loaded with booty.

There is a great diversity of opinions concerning the time when this war between Holofernes and the Jews happened. Some date it from the captivity of Babylon, in the reign of Manasseh, and Pontificate of Eliakim the High-Priest. Others place it at some time after the captivity. All which may be seen more at large in the Article JUDITH. We suppose it to have happened before the captivity, in the year of the World 3348, before Jesus Christ 652, before the Vulgar Æra 656.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages
Judith i.

Holon

HOLON, Cholon, Olon, or Helon, a [Josh. xv. 51. Josh. xxi. 15. 1 Chron. vi. 69.] City of Refuge belonging to the Priests, and situated in the mountains of Judah.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Holy

HOLY, Holiness. By these words is sometimes meant Holiness and outward Purity, and sometimes they are taken in the sense of Holiness merely internal; God is Holy in a transcendent and infinitely perfect manner. He is the Fountain of Holiness, Purity, and Innocency. He sanctifies his Saints, his People, his Priests. He requires perfect Holiness in those who approach him; and to be sanctified and honoured by his servants. He rejects all worship which is not found and pure. In order to come near to his Altars, it is not sufficient to have inward Holiness. He demands of the Israelites an exemption from legal pollutions. Be holy, says he to them, for I am holy.

[Isai. i. 4. v. 9. x. 20. xxix. 19. xxxvii. 27. xli. 14, 16, &c.] The Prophets call the Lord, The Holy one of Israel, as if the name of Holy were synonymous with that of God. They provoked the Holy One of Israel to anger; and in another place, Let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel draw nigh and [Psal. xvi. 10. Isai. xli. 14. Luke iv. 34. Luke i. 35. Acts iii. 14.] come: and again, The poor man shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel. The Messiah in like manner is called the Holy One; Thou shalt not suffer thine Holy One to see corruption. And in Isaiah, Thy Redeemer is the Holy One of Israel. And in the Gospel, I know thee who thou art; the Holy One of God. And again, The Holy thing which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God. Jesus Christ is called simply, the Holy One in the Acts; Ye denied the Holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted to you. Lastly, Holy is the common Epithet given to the third Person of the Trinity, Holy Ghost.

The Israelites are generally called Holy in the Scripture, because they are the Lord's, who sanctifies them; they profess the true Religion, are called to Holiness, which they should labour to acquire, and which many in reality did attain to under [Exod. xix. 6. Exod. xxii. 31. Levit. xi. 44, 45. Numb. xvi. 3. Tobit ii. 18.] the old Law. Ye shall be an holy Nation. Ye shall be holy Men unto me. And again, Be holy, for I am holy; and elsewhere, All the Congregation are holy every one of them. We are, said Tobit to his son, filii sanctorum.

From the infinite Holiness of God, it naturally followed, that every thing belonging to him should be styled Holy; his Temple, his Ministers, his Solemnities, the Country which he gave to his people; we every moment find expressions to this purpose: This day is holy and solemn; holy Garments, holy Oil, holy Field, holy Land, holy City, holy Day, holy Name, holy Souls, &c.

[Acts ix. 13. Acts ix. 31, 41.] Christians are still more particularly declared Holy, as being called to, and designed for a more holy Perfection, and a more excellent Holiness, they having received the Earnests of the Holy Spirit in a more plentiful and perfect manner. St. Luke in the Acts, and St. Paul in his Epistles generally describe Christians under the name of Saints: Lord, I have heard, by many of this man, how much evil he hath done thy Saints. St. Peter came down to the Saints which dwelt at Lydda; he raised Tabitha from the dead, and presented her to the Saints. St. Paul directs his Epistle to the Romans, To the beloved of God called to be Saints. St. Paul speaks in twenty places of his gatherings for the Saints.

The Holy is used sometimes for the whole Temple, and even for Heaven; which is the place of the Almighty's abode. For example; Behold, the blood of it was not brought in within the Holy place; ye should indeed have eaten it in the Holy place: where Holy place signifies the Temple, or the Court of the Priests, which is called Holy compared with the Court of the people; as in Ezek. xlii. 14. The Priests shall not go out of the holy place into the utter court. And in 1 Macc. iv. 36. Ascendamus nunc mundare sancta: Let us go and purify the Temple.

By Holy are likewise understood in general all things holy, and consecrated to God; and Holy of Holies, such things as are in a particular manner consecrated to him: for example, The Altar of Burnt-offerings is called Sanctum

Sanctorum, the most Holy, Exod. xxix. 36. In like manner, the perfumed oil with which Aaron anointed the Altar, and sacred Vessels, Ex. xxx. 10. In a word, all the utensils of the Holy and the Sanctuary are mentioned in the same style; as are the Offerings and Sacrifices, the use whereof was reserved to Aaron and his sons. See Exod. xxx. 36. Levit. ii. 3, 10. vi. 17, 25. and in other places.

Holy is used sometimes for Heaven; The Lord send thee help from the Holy, the Sanctuary, Psal. xx. 2. from Heaven. As for thee, O Lord, thy dwelling is in the Holy: Tu autem in sancto habitas, Psal. xxi. 4. He hath looked down from the height of his Holy, his Sanctuary; from Heaven did he behold the Earth, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Homonæus

HOMONÆUS, the name of a place in Galilee, thirty furlongs from Tiberias. Joseph. de vita sua, pag. 1020.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Honestus

HONESTUS, Honestas, are often used [Wisd. vii. 11.] to signify riches: All good things together came to me, with wisdom and innumerable riches in her hands: Innumerabilis honestas per manus illius. And in another passage, In [Wisd. viii. 18.] operibus manuum illius honestas sine defectione. And speaking of Jacob, honestavit [Wisd. x. 10.] illum in laboribus: Wisdom made him rich in his travels, it made him rich, honestum fecit illum.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Honey

HONEY. Bees are some of the smallest [Ecclus. xi. 3.] creatures that fly, says Ecclesiasticus, and the Produce of them is the sweetest thing in the world. The Scripture describing a troop of enemies pursuing with obstinacy and warmth, makes use of the similitude of [Deut. i. 44.] Bees: And chased them as Bees do. And in another place; Like Bees they closed me in [Pf. cxvii. 12.] on every side. God, in order to give us an idea of his Omnipotency, says, That he will [Isai. vii. 18.] hiss for the fly that is in the uttermost part of the rivers of Egypt, and for the Bee, that is in the land of Assyria. By the Fly and the Bee here, are meant the Kings of Egypt and Assyria. See above BEELZEBUB and FLY, where we speak of the worship which the Philistins paid the Fly.

As to Honey, we see in Leviticus, that God did not permit any to be offered to him [Levit. ii. 11.] upon his Altar: Ye shall burn no leaven, nor any honey, in any offering of the Lord made by fire. There are many reasons given for the expediency of this Law: for example, that Honey does not agree well [Levit. xi. 20. Herodot. l. 2. Vide Bochart. de Animal. Sacr. part. 1. l. 4. c. 11. Vide & Ezech. xvi. 18, 19. דבשDebasch. Μέλι, Mel.] with other things, which are offered in the way of Sacrifice, that it makes bread sower, and is not good with roast meat; or because Bees are insects which are judged to be unclean; or because Honey is the symbol of carnal pleasures; or lastly, to keep at a distance from the customs of the Heathens, who were used to offer Honey in their Sacrifices.

But at the same time that God forbids any Honey to be offered to him in Sacrifice, he commands the first-fruits of it to be presented to him: Primitias tantum eorum offeretis & munera. These first-fruits and offerings were designed for the support and sustenance of the Priests, and were not offered upon the Altar. Moreover, by the word Honey, the Rabbins and Authors of Hebrew Dictionaries, understand not only the Honey of Bees, but likewise the Honey of Dates, or the Fruits of the Palm-tree, or the Dates themselves, from which Honey is extracted; and when God injoins the first-fruits of Honey to be offered to him, the first-fruits of Dates seem to be meant by this expression; for we know very well that generally the first produce only of fruits was offered.

[Exod. iii. 8. xiii. 5. & passim. Deut. xxxii. 13. Vide & Psal. lxxx. 17.] Every one knows, that Honey was formerly very common in Palestine. The expressions of Scripture, which import so frequently that this country was a land flowing with Milk and Honey, are a good proof of this. Moses says, that the Lord has brought his people into a Land, the rocks whereof drop Oil, and the stones produce Honey in abundance. Honey ran upon the ground in the forest, where Jonathan dip'd the end of his staff in this liquor, and conveyed [2 Sam. xiv. 25, 26, 27.] it to his mouth. Travellers observe, that it is still at this day in great plenty there, and that the inhabitants of the country mix it in all their sauces. John the Baptist fed upon wild Honey, which was [Math. iii. 4.] to be found in rocks up and down the country, or in hollow trees. Children were fed with Milk, Cream, and Honey. Butter and Honey shall he eat, that he may know to refuse the evil, and chuse the good. This [Isai. vii. 15.] was the sweetest and most delicious thing which was then known before the invention and preparation of Sugar. God complains of Jerusalem for offering that Bread, Oil, and Honey to Idols, which he had given to the inhabitants thereof for their nourishment. Lastly, too great a quantity of Honey is hurtful to the stomach, and [Prov. xxv. 16.] creates a loathing. Hast thou found Honey, says the wise Man, eat so much as is sufficient for thee, lest thou be filled therewith, and vomit it.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Honour

HONOUR, To Honour. Honour, in the Scripture-style, is taken not only for the inward or outward respect which people have and pay to persons, who are superior to them; and to whom we owe [Mal. i. 6. 1 Tim. i. 17. Exod. xx. 12. Esth. xiii. 14. Ps. xxix. 2. Numb. xxiv. 11.] particular marks of deference and distinction; but likewise for real services which are due to them: for example, Honour thy father and mother, that thy days may be long in the land. This Precept requires, not only that we should shew our Parents respect and deference, but likewise that we should assist them, and perform such services for them as they may stand in need of. And Balak King of Moab said to Balaam, I thought to promote thee to great honour, but lo the Lord hath kept thee back from honour; that is to say, hath deprived you of the reward I designed for you. And [Prov. iii. 9.] Solomon, Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of thine encrease: Testify your respect to him by presents and offerings.

By Honour is also understood that adoration which is due to God only. I was afraid to transfer the Honour of my God to man, says Mordecai. And the Psalmist, Give unto the Lord the Honour due unto his name. And Malachi, If I be the Lord, where is my honour? Ubi est honor meus? And St. Paul, Unto the only wise God be honour and glory.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hope

[Acts xxviii. 20.] HOPE. The Hope of Israel, was the coming of the Messiah, the end of the Babylonish Captivity, and the happiness of Heaven. The Lord is the Hope of the righteous; their Hope shall not be confounded; on the contrary, the Hope of the ungodly shall perish: Spes impiorum [Prov. x. 28. Job viii. 13. Psal. xvi. 9. Acts ii. 26. Rom. iv. 18. Wisd. xvi. 29. Zech. ix. 12.] peribit: it shall be without effect; or they shall live and die without Hope. Hope deferred, maketh the heart sad; but when any one possesses what he desires, his soul is comforted. The flesh of the righteous shall rest in peace; shall expect with tranquility a future resurrection. Abraham against hope believed in hope, contra spem in spem, when being advanced in years, God promised him a son. The hope of the unthankful shall melt away as the winter's hoar-frost. He speaks of the Israelites who neglected to gather Manna, which melted in the Sun; and so their hope vanished. The Prisoners of hope, Vincti spei, are the Israelites who were in Captivity, but were in hopes of deliverance.

Hope in the New Testament is generally taken for Hope in Jesus Christ, Hope of eternal Blessings, Hope of a future Resurrection: Gloriamur in spe gloriæ filiorum [Rom. v. 2. Rom. v. 4, 5. Rom. xv. 4. 1 Cor. xiii. 13. 1 Tim. i. 1.] Dei. Experience produces Hope, and Hope maketh not ashamed. Our Hope is founded on the patience and consolation which we derive from the Scriptures. Faith, Hope, and Charity make up the whole treasure of Christians. Jesus Christ is all our Hope: Christi Jesu spei nostræ. All our Hope in this life and the next, consists in his Merits, his Blood, his Grace, his Promises, and Spirit.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hophni

HOPHNI, and Phinehas, sons of Eli [1 Sam. ii. 12, 13, &c. Levit. iii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, &c. Levit. vii. 31, 32. 1 Sam. ii. 22, 23, &c. In the year of the World 2851, before J. C. 1149, before the Vulgar Æra 1153.] the High-Priest, were, says the Scripture, sons of Belial, wicked, dissolute, and perverse men, whose will and lust were the only rule they acted by. They knew not the Lord, they did not pay him the honour which was due to him, nor performed the functions of their Ministry in the Tabernacle, as they ought to do; for when any Israelite had sacrificed a Peace-offering, the son or servant of the Priest came while they were dressing the flesh of it, and holding a fork with three teeth belonging to it in his hand, he put it into the pot, and all that he could take up with it was the Priest's. They treated thus all the people of Israel, who came to sacrifice at the Tabernacle in Shiloh. In like manner also before the fat was burnt, the Priest's servant came, and said to him, who sacrificed, Give me flesh to roast, for I will have none sodden, but raw. Let us first burn the fat, said he who sacrificed, according to custom, and after that take as much flesh as you will. But the servant replied, no; you shall give it me presently, or I will take it by force. Wherefore the sin of Eli's sons was great before the Lord; because they diverted the Children of Israel from coming to offer their sacrifices. That we may have a right understanding of this place, it is necessary to observe, that the Text takes no notice of Burnt-offerings, or Sacrifices for sin, but only of Peace -offerings, or those presented out of mere devotion; the blood whereof, the fat, the kidneys, and the caul which covers the intestines, were offered to the Lord. After this, all the rest of the Sacrifice belonged to him, at whose expence the offering was made. He was to give the Priest for his fee, the right shoulder and the breast of the victim. Moses does not say, whether this should be given dressed, or raw: but it appears from this place, 1. That it was not given to the Priest till it was dressed; and, 2. that the Priest had no right to demand it, till the fat was offered upon the fire of the Altar.

Now the High-Priest Eli was no stranger to his sons irregularities: he knew besides, that they lay with the women, who came to watch at the door of the Tabernacle. He reproved them for it, but so faintly, that they took no care at all to change their behaviour. Wherefore the Lord sent a Prophet to him, who said, Why do you trample under foot my Sacrifices and Offerings, which I have commanded to be presented to me in my Tabernacle? And why have you honoured your sons more than me, by thus eating with them the best of what is offered by all Israel? Therefore thus saith the Lord, I promised indeed that thy house should serve before me for ever; but now I am very far from designing this, says the Lord: for them that honour

8 T me, I will honour; and they that despise me, shall be lightly esteemed. The time is coming when I will cut off thine arm, and the arm of thy father's house, and there shall not be an old man in thy family; and when all Israel shall be in prosperity, thou shalt see a man in the Temple, who shall be the object of thine envy. Thy two sons, Hophni and Phinehas, shall both die in the same day, and I will raise up a faithful Priest for my service, who shall act according to my own heart.

[About the year of the World 2861, before J. C. 1139, before the Vulg. Æra 1143. 1 Sam. x. 11, 12, &c.] Some years after, the Lord caused Eli and his sons to be threatned by the young Prophet Samuel, to whom he said, that since Eli had not reproved and corrected his sons as he ought, the iniquity of his house should be never expiated, either by Sacrifices or Offerings, but that he would pour out all the evils upon it, wherewith he had threatned it. Accordingly, the Philistins having declared war against the Israelites, and they in the first action with [In the year of the World 2888, before J. C. 1112, before the Vulgar Æra 1116] the Philistins having fled, and lost about four thousand men, the Elders of Israel said; Bring hither the Ark of the Lord, that being placed among us, it may save us from the hand of our enemies. The people therefore sent to Shiloh, and the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, brought the Ark into the camp. But God permitted the Philistins to obtain another victory over the Israelites, so that they killed thirty thousand men, among the rest Hophni and Phinehas, and took the Ark of the Covenant, and carried it away with them into their own country. The news of this misfortune being brought to Shiloh, the wife of Phinehas, who was ready to lie in, was suddenly seized with her bearing pains, and died in labour. Eli being informed that his two sons were dead, and the Ark taken, fell backwards from his seat, and broke his neck. Thus the threatnings of God were verified against the house of Eli.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hophrah

[Jerem xliv. 30.] HOPHRAH, King of Egypt, who lived in the time of Zedekiah King of Judah, and Nebuchadnezzar the great King of Chaldæa. Herodotus calls him Apries. [Herodot. l. 2. c. 161, 162, 169.] Zedekiah King of Judah, being weary of the Babylonish yoke, which that King had obliged him to submit to, made an alliance with Hophrah King of Egypt, and to this end sent Ambassadors to him in the seventh year of his reign. Ezekiel reproaches him for so doing in very strong terms; He who sent his Ambassadors into Egypt, that they might give him horses and much people: shall he prosper? shall he escape that doth such things? or shall he break the covenant and be delivered? As I live, saith the Lord, surely in the place where the King dwelleth that made him King, whose oath he despised, and whose covenant he brake, even with him in the midst of Babylon he shall die.

Two years after, that is to say, in the ninth year of Zedekiah, Nebuchadnezzar marched against Jerusalem, and took all [Jerem. xxxix. 1. lii. 4.] the cities of Judah, except Lachish, Azekah, and Jerusalem. Pharaoh Hophrah seeing his ally in the utmost extremity, left Egypt, and came at the head of his army to his assistance. Nebuchadnezzar hereupon raised the siege of Jerusalem, and marched against the King of Egypt; and at the same time, Jeremiah foretold to Zedekiah, that the Egyptians would return into their own country, without daring to encounter the Chaldæans, and that Nebuchadnezzar would take Jerusalem, which fell out accordingly; Zedekiah himself being taken, and carried prisoner to Babylon. At that [Jerem. xliv. 30.] time Jeremiah prophesied, that the King of Egypt should be delivered into the hands of his enemies, in like manner as Zedekiah had fal'n into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar; and Ezekiel addressed his discourse to Hophrah in the words following: " Thus saith the " Lord, Behold I am against thee, Pharaoh King of Egypt, the great Dragon " that lieth in the midst of the rivers, " which hath said, my river is mine own, " and I have made it for myself. But I " will put hooks in thy jaws, and I will " cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto " thy scales, and I will bring thee up out " of the midst of thy rivers, and all the " fish of thy rivers shall stick unto thy " scales. And I will leave thee thrown " into the wilderness, thee and all the fish " of thy rivers: thou shalt fall upon the " open fields, thou shalt not be brought " together, nor gathered: I have given " thee for meat to the beasts of the field, " and to the fowls of heaven. And all " the inhabitants of Egypt shall know, " that I am the Lord, because they have " been a staff of reed to the house of Israel. " When they took hold of thee by " thy hand, thou didst break, and rent all " their shoulder: and when they leaned " upon thee, thou brakest, and madest all " their loins to be at a stand. Therefore " behold I will bring a sword upon thee, " and the land of Egypt shall be desolate " and waste, and they shall know that I " am the Lord, &c."

The xxxth and xxxist Chapters of the same Prophet are likewise levelled against the King of Egypt. There Ezekiel describes the fall of Egypt, the ruin and desolation of it after a very pathetick manner, in the eleventh year of Zedekiah. In the [Ezek. xxx. 20.] seventh day of the first month the Lord said to Ezekiel, " Son of man, I have " broken the arm of Pharaoh King of " Egypt; and lo, it shall not be bound up " to to be healed, to put a roller to bind it, to make it strong to hold the sword . . . I will break his arms, and I will cause the sword to fall out of his hand. I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries. I will strengthen the arms of the King of Babylon, and put my sword in his hand, and the arms of Pharaoh shall fall down, and they shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall put my sword into the hand of the King of Babylon." [Ezek. xxxii. 1, 2, 3, &c. Ezek. xxxi. 1, 2, &c. The first day in the third month of the eleventh year.] Some months after, Ezekiel prophesied again against Hophrah King of Egypt: And the word of the Lord came unto him, saying, Son of man, speak unto Pharaoh King of Egypt, and to his multitude, whom art thou like in thy greatness? Behold the Assyrian was a cedar in Lebanon with fair branches, and with a shadowing shroud, and of an high stature, and his top was among the thick boughs, and under his shadow dwelt many nations.... all the trees of Eden, that were in the garden of God, envied him. But because he was lifted up with pride, I have delivered him into the hand of the mighty one of the heathen, who will treat him as he pleases.... And thou Pharaoh shalt be brought down with the trees of Eden unto the nether parts of the earth; thou shalt lie in the midst of the uncircumcised, with them that be slain by the sword: such shall be the fate of Pharaoh, and all his people, saith the Lord God." The Prophet continues in the following chapter, and makes a mournful song upon the fall of Pharaoh Hophrah. "Thou art like a young lion of the nations, and thou art a whale in the seas, and thou camest forth with thy rivers, and troubledst the waters with thy feet, and fouledst their rivers. Therefore thus saith the Lord, I will spread out my net over thee, with a company of many people, and they shall bring thee up in my net. Then I will leave thee upon the land, and I will cast thee forth upon the open field, and will cause all the fowls of heaven to remain upon thee, and I will fill the beasts of the whole earth with thee. At thy death I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark: I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light. All the bright lights of heaven will I make dark over thee..... the sword of the King of Babylon shall come upon thee: by the swords of the mighty will I cause thy multitude to fall, they are all invincible people; they shall destroy the pride of Egypt, and the whole multitude of her people shall be dispersed; and when I have thus destroyed Egypt, and all that dwell therein, then they shall know that I am the Lord."

These predictions were executed without delay, first against the person of Apries, or Hophrah, by the hands of Amasis, and afterwards against the kingdom of Egypt, and the Egyptians, by Nebuchadnezzar's army. Herodotus says, that Hophrah was the son of Amasis, &c.

After the death of Hophrah, Nebuchadnezzar took and destroyed Jerusalem, then he attacked the city of Tyre a, and took it after a siege of thirteen years. During this [In the year of the World 3415, before J. C. 585, before the Vulgar Æra 588. a In the year of the World 3432, before J. C. 568, before the Vulgar Æra 571. Ezek. xxix. 18, 20. xxx. 1, 19.] long siege, he was reduced to great straits, and to make him amends in some sort for his losses, God said to Ezekiel; "Son of man, Nebuchadnezzar with his army has done me great service at the siege of Tyre; the heads of all his people shed their hair, and all their shoulders were peeled: yet neither he nor his army have received any recompense for the service they have done me in taking Tyre: therefore thus saith the Lord, I will give the land of Egypt to Nebuchadnezzar, he shall take all the people, and make booty of them: he shall divide the spoil, and after this manner his army shall receive their wages, and he shall be paid for the service he has done me at the siege of Tyre: I have given him the land of Egypt, because he hath wrought for me, saith the Lord."

Accordingly Nebuchadnezzar marched against Egypt, and subdued it from Migdol or Magdol, which is at the entrance of the kingdom, as far as Siena, which lies at the other extremity towards the frontiers of [Ezek. xxix. 6.] Ethiopia. He committed strange ravages every where, killed a great number of inhabitants, [Idem xxix. 30, &c.] obtained great victories, and reduced the land to such a solitude, that it could not recover itself in forty years. Nebuchadnezzar [Idem xxix. 13.] granted Amasis conditions of peace: he left this Prince in Egypt with the title of King, but tributary and subject to him: after which he returned to Babylon loaded with the spoils of so many conquered Provinces.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hor

[Deut. xxxii. 50. Numb. xx. 26. xxvii. 13.] HOR, a Mountain in Arabia Petræa, on the confines of Idumæa, which Aaron received the Lord's orders to ascend, in order to be gathered to his fathers. He died, and was buried there in the fortieth year of the departure of the Hebrews out of Egypt, in the year of the World 2552, before Jesus Christ 1448, before the Vulgar Æra 1452.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Horam

HORAM, King of Gezer, who being desirous to assist the King of Lachish, was defeated by Joshua, and his whole country ravaged. Josh. x. 33. In the year of the World 2554, before Jesus Christ 1446, before the Vulgar Æra 1450.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Horeb

[Exod. iii. 1, 2, 3, &c. Exod. xvii. 6.] HOREB, a Mountain in Arabia Petræa, very near Mount Sinai; so that Horeb and Sinai seem only to be two Hills belonging to the same Mountain. Sinai lies to the East, and Horeb to the West; so that when the Sun rises, the latter is covered with the shadow of Sinai. There are two or three fine springs, and abundance of fruit-trees on the top of Horeb; whereas there is none but rain-water on Sinai. At Horeb God appeared to Moses in the burning bush. At the foot of the same Mountain Moses struck the rock, and drew water from it to satisfy the people's thirst. Lastly, Elijah retired to the same place to avoid the persecution of Jezebel. It is said [1 Kings xix. 8.] very frequently in the Hebrews, that God gave his Law to the Hebrews at Horeb, though in other places this is said expressly to have been done at Sinai; because, as we have observed, Horeb and Sinai made in some sort but one Mountain.

The Rock of HOREB, whence Moses drew water. See Exod. xvii. 6, 7. and hereafter RAPHIDIM.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Horem

HOREM, a City of Naphtali. Josh. xix. 38.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hori

HORI, the son of Lotan, of the race of Seir the Horite. Gen. xxxvi. 22.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Horites

HORITES, an ancient people, who at the beginning dwelt in the Mountains of [Gen. xiv. 6. Gen. xxxvi. 20, —30.] Seir beyond Jordan. They had Princes, and were powerful even before Esau made a conquest of their country. The Horites, the descendants of Seïr, and the Edomites, seem afterwards to have been confounded, and to have composed but one people. They dwelt in Arabia Petræa, and Arabia [Deut. ii. 1. & xxxiii. 2. & Judg. v. 4. חורים Chorim, or Horim, Horræi. 1 Kings xxi. 8, 11. & Neh. ii. 16. iv. 14. v. 7. vi. 17. vii. 5. xiii. 17. Eccl. x. 17. Isai. xxxiv. 12. Jerem. xxvii. 20. xxxix. 6. חרמה Anathema. Judg. i. 17.] Deserta, to the south-east of the Promised Land.

We find the Hebrew word Chori or Chorim, which in the book of Genesis is translated Horites, to be used in an appellative sense in several other passages of Scripture, and to signify, Heros, great and powerful men; and it is very probable that the Greeks derived from hence their Heroes, in like manner as they derived Anax, a King, from the sons of Anak, the famous Giant in Palestine.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hormah

HORMAH, Herma, Harma, or Arama; it should be written Chorma, or Cherma. This City was called Zephath before the Hebrews gave it the name of Hormah, which signifies Anathema. What gave occasion for this denomination, was this: the King of Arad, who was a Canaanite, and dwelt to the south of the Land of Promise, having attacked the Hebrews, put them to flight, and took a very rich booty from them: hereupon the Israelites engaged themselves by vow to devote every thing belonging to the King of Arad to the curse, and intirely destroy it: for which reason this place was called [Numb. xxi. 3. חרמה Chormah.] Hormah. It is very probable that this vow was not executed till after Joshua entred into the Land of Promise. Among the Kings overcome by him, we find a King of Herma or Hormah, and a King of Ared or [Josh. xv. 30.] Arad. Hormah belonged to the Tribe of Simeon.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Horns

[Isai. v. 1.] HORNS. The Hebrews by the word Horns sometimes understood an eminence, an angle, a corner; Vinea facta est dilecto meo in cornu filio olei: my beloved has a vineyard situated on an Eminence, or on the corner of a rich and fertile Mountain. By the Horns of the Altar of Burnt-offerings, [Exod. xxvii. 2. xxx. 2.] many understand the Angles of this Altar; but it is certain that there were besides Horns or Eminences at the four corners of the Altar, to which were fastened four chains that the grate belonging to the Altar hung by.

[Exodus xxxiv. 29. 1 Sam. ii. 1, 10.] Horn signifies likewise glory, brightness, rays; for example, it is said, that Moses's face was encompassed with Horns, that is to say, it was radiant, that as it were Horns of light issued from it. And in other places it is said, Mine Horn is exalted in the Lord. He hath exalted the Horn of his anointed: that is to say, he hath loaded me with honour; he hath advanced the Glory of his King or Priest. Lift not up your horn [Psal. lxxv. 5, 6.] on high, says the Psalmist; do not boast yourselves. His Horn shall be exalted with honour; he shall be loaded with honours, &c. [1 Sam. xvi. 1.] As the Ancients frequently made use of Horns to hold liquors, the vessels wherein oil was put, and perfumes, are called often Horns, whether they really were of horn, or of any other matter. Fill thine Horn with oil, says the Lord to Samuel, and go, anoint David King. The High-Priest [1 Kings i. 39. Job xlii. 14.] Zadok took an horn of oil out of the Tabernacle, and with it anointed Solomon. Job called one of his daughters by the name of Horn of Antimony, Cornu stibii, or Horn to put Antimony in, which the women of the East still make use of at this day.

The principal defence and greatest strength of horned beasts consists in their Horns; and the Scripture mentions the Horn as the symbol of strength. The Lord [Psalm cxxxii. 17. Eccl. xlvii. 6. Eccl. xlvii. 8. Jer. xlviii. 25. Lament. ii. 3. Ezek. xxix. 21. Deut. xxxiii. 17.] exalteth the Horn of David; the Horn of his People; he breaketh the Horn of the Ungodly: he cutteth off the Horn of Moab, he cutteth off in his fierce anger all the Horn of Israel; he promises to make the Horn of Israel bud forth; to re-establish the honour of it, and restore it to its former vigour. Moses compares Joseph to a young bull, and says, that he has Horns like those of a Rhinoceros. The sacred Authors frequently express victory in words like these following: Thou shalt toss them [Psal. xliv. 6. Ezek. xxxii. 2. xxxiv. 21, &c.] into the air with Horns; thou shalt disperse them as a Bull disperses every thing that comes before him with his Horns.

Kingdoms and great Powers are often described by the word Horns. It is thus Daniel represents the power of the Persians, of the Greeks, of Syria, and Egypt. [1 Macc. vii. 46. Dan. vii. viii.] He figures to us Darius and Alexander like a Goat and a Ram running violently at each other with their Horns: and Antiochus Epiphanes as an Horn which utters blasphemies, and makes war with the Saints. In these passages, the Prophet represents these animals to us as having many Horns, one whereof grew from the other; which should not surprize us, since in Barbary and the Isle of Cyprus there are Rams to be seen still at this day which have many Horns. In Daniel they are mysterious; but the mystery is founded upon a particular which sometimes happens in nature.

In the first book of the Maccabees, ix. 1, 12, 16, the right and left wings of an army are called the right and left Horn. And in Habakkuk it is said, that the Lord cometh from Paran all encompassed with glory and majesty, having Horns in his hands; that is to say, having his hands armed with flaming darts, and fiery arrows. In profane Authors darts and arrows are sometimes called Horns, because formerly they were armed with Horns. Several people fastened Horns to the end of their darts, and the Centaur Dorylas was provided with the two Horns of an Ox, instead of javelins.

[Ovid. Metam. l. 12.] Sævique vicem præstantia teli Cornua dura boum multo madefacta cruore.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Horon

HORON, or Oronaïm, a City of Arabia, from whence came Sanballat. See [Nehem. ii. 10, &c.] ORONAIM.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Horonaim

HORONAIM, a Town of the Moabites. Isai. xv. 5. Josephus speaks of it, Antiq. l. xiii. 23. xiv. 2.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Horse

HORSE, a very common beast, and very well known in these countries; but very rare among the Hebrews till Solomon's time. Before him, we find no horsemen mentioned in the armies of Israel. God forbids the Kings of his people to keep many Horses, and to make use of this pretence that so they might carry the people back again into Egypt. He commands Joshua to ham-string the Horses of the Canaanites, which he should take in battle, and to burn their chariots of war. David having won a great battle against Hadadezer King of Shobah, took seventeen hundred Horses, and lamed all belonging to the chariots of war, reserving only an hundred chariots. The Judges and Princes of Israel used generally to ride on Mules or Asses. After David's time, Horses were more common in the country of Judah, &c.

Solomon is the first King of Judah who had a great number of Horses, and he kept them rather for pomp than for war; for we do not read that he made any military expeditions. He had, says the Scripture, forty thousand stalls of Horses for his chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen distributed in his fortified places. He had his Horses from Egypt, and there was not a set which did not cost him more than six hundred shekels, which make of our money about ninety pounds. Moses had forbidden the King of the Hebrews to keep a great number of Horses, lest at any time he should be inclined to carry the people back into Egypt.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Horses consecrated to the Sun

HORSES consecrated to the Sun. We read in the second book of Kings, that Josiah took away the Horses which the Kings of Judah his predecessors had consecrated to the Sun. We know the Sun was worshipped over all the East, and that the Horse, the swiftest of tame beasts, was consecrated to this Deity, who was represented as riding in a chariot drawn by the most beautiful and swiftest Horses in the world, and performing every day his journey from East to West, in order to communicate his Light to mankind. In Persia, and among the Messagetæ, Horses were sacrificed to the Sun.

[Ovid. Fast. l. 1. Herodot. l. 1. c. 55.] Placat equo Persis radiis Hyperiona cinctum;

Ne celeri detur victima tarda Deo. Xenophon describes a solemn Sacrifice of Horses, which was made with ceremony to the Sun: they were all of the finest, and were led with a white chariot, crowned, and consecrated to the same God. We may believe that the Horses which Josiah removed out of the Court of the Temple, were appointed for the like Sacrifices.

The Rabbins inform us, that these Horses were every morning put to the chariots [Rabb. Salom. & Kimchi.] dedicated to the Sun, whereof there is mention made in the same book, and that the King, or some of his Officers, got up and rode to meet the Sun in its rising, as far as from the eastern gate of the Temple to the suburbs of Jerusalem.

Others are of opinion, that the Horses mentioned in the book of Kings, were of wood, stone, or metal, erected in the Temple in honour of the Sun. Others, that they were Horses which none were permitted to ride, or fasten to the yoke, but were free, and left to themselves, like those which Julius Cæsar let loose, and set at liberty, after his passage of the Rubicon. The Persians [Suet. in Julio. Dion. Nicol. in Severo. Tacit. de Mor. Germ.] had likewise such Horses, as well as the ancient Germans. Those belonging to the Persians were of the colour of Tygers; those of the 8 U Ger- Germans were all white[1]. They were never employed in any profane use, and people took presages of what was to come from their neighing and their motion.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. Herodian calls them Διὸς Ἵπποι. The Romans thought it an irreligious insolence in Camillus to use white Horses in his Triumph. Maxime conspectus ipse est curru equis albis juncto urbem invectus, parumque id non civile modo sed humanum etiam visum, Jovis Solisque equis æquiparatum Dictatorem in Religionem etiam trahebant. Liv. l. 5.

Horse-Leach

HORSE-LEACH, a sort of Worm that lives in the water, of a black or brown colour, which fastens upon the flesh, and does not quit it till it is intirely full of [Horat.] blood: Non missura cutem nisi plena cruoris hirudo. Solomon[1] in the Proverbs says, The Horse-leach hath two daughters, crying, Give, give. This Horse-leach is Lust; its two daughters are Avarice and Ambition, which are never satisfied. The Septuagint say three daughters, instead of two. [Boch. de Animal. Sacr. part.] Bochart is of opinion, that the Hebrew word Halukah, which the Septuagint and Vulgate translate Horse-leach, signifies Destiny, and that the two daughters of this Destiny are Hell and the Grave,

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Prov. xxx. 15. לעלוקה שתי בנות LXX. τῇ βδέλλῃ τρεῖς θυγατέρες.

Hosai

HOSAI, the Prophet of the Lord, who lived in the time of Manasseh King of Judah [2 Chron. xxxiii. 19.] , and wrote what happened under the reign of this Prince. The Jews are of opinion, that Hosai and Isaiah are the same person, this Prophet also living in the reign of Manasseh. Others take Hosai in a general sense for Prophets and Seers: and thus the Septuagint explain it.

The Syriac calls him Hanan, and the Arabic, Sapkan.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hosanna

HOSANNA, or rather Hosa-na, is an [Salva quæso.] Hebrew word which signifies, Save, I beseech you. It is a form of blessing, or wishing one well. Thus at our Saviour's entrance into Jerusalem, when the people cried Hosanna filio David, their meaning was, Lord preserve this Son of David; heap favours and blessings on him.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hosea (I)

I. HOSEA. This is the first name of Joshua, the son of Nun. The Greeks call him Ausé, or Ausem. Afterwards he bore the name of Joshua. See the Article JOSHUA.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hosea (II)

II. HOSEA, the son of Beeri, is the first [Epiphan. de vita Prophet.] of the small Prophets. Epiphanius says, that he was of the town of Belemoth, in the Tribe of Issachar, which is no other in all probability than Beelmeon, towards Esdraelon, in this Tribe. The Rabbins say, Beerah was his father, who is mentioned in [1 Chr. v. 6.] the Chronicles, and was Prince of the Tribe of Reuben at the time when Tiglath-pilesér carried some of the Tribes of Israel into [In the year of the World 3245, before J. C. 755, before the Vulgar Æra 759. See 2 Kings xv. 29.] captivity. But if it be so, Hosea must be said to be of the Tribe of Reuben, and a native of Beelmeon beyond Jordan. This Prophet lived in the kingdom of Samaria, and his prophecies for the most part have a view to this state; though there are likewise some particular things which concern the Kingdom of Judah.

We read in the introduction to his Prophecy, that he prophesied under the Kings of Judah, Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah; and under Jeroboam II. King of Israel. If he prophesied in the reigns of all these Princes, he must have lived a very long time; for there are an hundred and twelve years from the beginning [Uzziah's began in 3194, and Hezekiah's ended in 3306.] of Uzziah's to the end of Hezekiah's reign. Add, if you please, twenty or five and twenty years which might be the age of Hosea, when he began to prophesy, and this will make an hundred and thirty two, or an hundred and thirty seven years. And if we were to take ten years from Uzziah, and as many from Hezekiah, during which Hosea might not have prophesied, there will still remain an hundred and twelve or fifteen years. In the whole collection of Hosea's prophecies, we find nothing which proves that he prophesied so long; and besides, why should his prophecies be dated in the title by the reigns of the Kings of Judah, when he did not live under their dominion? It is therefore very probable, that this title is not Hosea's, but some ancient [Vide nov. Edit. Hieron. t. 1. p. 727.] transcriber's; and that the true beginning of this Prophet's work, is at these words: The beginning of the word of the Lord by Hosea. It is our opinion, that he began about the end of Jeroboam's reign, who was the second King of Israel of this name.

[Hieron. in Osee, initio. Basil. in Isai. i. Rufin. Riber. Sanct. alii. b Hos. iv. 15. ix. 15. xii. 11. c Hos. v. 1. d Hos. vi. 8. f Hos. v. 1. vi. 8.] St. Jerom, and many others, believe Hosea to be the oldest Prophet, whose writings are in our possession. He was witness to the first captivity of the four Tribes, carried away by Tiglath-pilesér, and the extinction of the kingdom of Samaria by Salmanesar. St. Jerom will have it, that he prophesied even afterwards. The first verses of chap. i. have a view to the death of Zechariah King of Israel, and son of Jeroboam II. From the sixth verse of the first chapter to the third chapter, is a prediction of the captivity of Israel: but after he has foretold this captivity, he declares the return and end of it. He inveighs strongly against the disorders, which prevailed in the kingdom of the ten Tribes. It appears, that in his time there were Idols, not only at Dan, Bethel, and Samaria, but likewise at Gilgal[1], upon Tabor c, at Sichem d, Beer-sheba e, and upon the Mountains of Gilead f. He speaks of the Israelites, as of a people intirely corrupted, and the measure of whose sins was filled up. He foretels that their golden calves should be pulled down, cast upon the ground, and carried into [Hos. viii. 5. x. 5, 6. Hos. iv. 15. Hos. viii. 14. Hos. i. 7.] Assyria.

He reflects with the same severity upon the irregularities which reigned in Judah. He stands up against those who went to worship the false Gods at Gilgal. He speaks of Sennacherib's invading the territories of Judah. He foretels that the people of Judah should still continue some time in their country after the captivity of the ten Tribes; but that after this, they likewise themselves should be carried captives beyond the Euphrates, from whence the Lord would bring them back after a certain number of years. The style of Hosea is obscure, and his expressions often dubious and perplexed. The things whereof he speaks contribute farther to his obscurity, by reason of their distance, and our ignorance of the history of those times.

In the beginning of Hosea's Prophecy we read, that the Lord directed him, To take unto him a wife of whoredoms, and children of whoredoms; that is to say, to marry a woman, who before her marriage had lived a debauched life, but who after her marriage should retire from all bad conversation, and whose children should be legitimate, notwithstanding that by reason of the blemish which their mother had contracted by her former life, they were called the children of whoredoms. This prostitute woman, and the children to be born of her, were a figure, and a kind of real prophecy, which described the idolatry and infidelity of Samaria and the ten Tribes, formerly the Lord's spouse, but afterwards become adulterous and corrupt. The children of this faithless woman are children of prostitution, since they imitate the idolatry of their mother. God gives these children the names of Jezreel, Lo-rechamah, or without mercy, and Lo-ammi, thou art no longer my people; to shew, 1. That God was going to revenge upon the house of Jehu King of Israel, the sins which he had committed at Jezreel, when he usurped the Kingdom of the ten Tribes. 2. That the Lord would treat his idolatrous and sinful people without mercy. 3. Lastly, that he would reject them, and no more look upon them as his people.

Many interpreters[2] shocked at the irregularity of Hosea's marriage with a woman of a bad life, have thought this to be only a parable; that the Prophet called the wife whom he married, a prostitute, with a design only of awakening the attention of the Israelites; or that all this passed only in a vision, without the Prophet's coming to the execution of it. But the whole sequel of Hosea's narration shews sufficiently, that this marriage was very real, though figurative as to the things which it described, and were to be afterwards performed; and this is the opinion of St. Basil, Theodoret, St. Austin, and many good Interpreters.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

See Amos v. 5. Amos was contemporary with Hosea.

Vide Hieronym. in Osee. Isidor. Haimo. Vat. Figuer. Burgens. Abenezra. Kimchi. Alii apud Theodoret. &c.

Hosea (III)

III. HOSEA, the last King of Israel. He was the son of Elah, and having conspired [2 Kings xv. 30. In the year of the World 3265, before J. C. 735, before the Vulgar Æra 739. 2 Kings xvii. 1, 2, &c.] against Pekah, the son of Remaliah, King of Israel, he killed him, and made himself master of his dominions. He did evil in the sight of the Lord, but not like the Kings of Israel, who preceded him; that is to say, according to the Jewish Doctors, he did not restrain his subjects from going, if they would, to Jerusalem, and worshipping the Lord there; whereas the Kings of Israel his predecessors had forbid it under severe penalties, and had even placed guards upon the road to prevent it.

Salmanesar, King of Assyria, having intelligence that Hosea, whose kingdom till then had been tributary to the Assyrians, was thinking of a revolt, and to this end had taken measures with So King of Egypt, in order to shake off the Assyrian yoke, he marched against him, made inroads upon all the country, and after he had caused great desolation in it, laid siege to Samaria[1]. The city was taken after a siege of three years, in the ninth year of Hosea's reign. Salmanesar [In the year of the World 3282, before J. C. 718, before the Vulgar Æra 722. Hos. i. 10, 11. See 2 Kings xvii. 3, 6. Hos. xiii. 16. Micah i. 6.] used the Israelites with the utmost cruelty. He opened the women big with child, and dashed their tender infants in pieces against the ground. Samaria was reduced to an heap of ruins. The King of Assyria removed all the Israelites of the ten Tribes remaining in the country, beyond the Euphrates, and sent Cuthæans in their room, who are still at this day known there by the name of Samaritans. In this manner were the threatnings of God, so often pronounced against this sinful city, verified.

The Chronology of Hosea's reign is extremely perplexed, by reason of the inconsistency of some dates which are set down in Scripture. It is said, 2 Kings xv. 30. that Hosea began to reign in the twentieth year of Jotham the son of Uzziah. (This was the fourth of Ahaz, for Jotham his father died four years before, having reigned only sixteen years, 2 Kings xv. 32, 33.) And in chap. xvii. 1. of this same book, it is said, that Hosea began to reign in the twelfth year of Ahaz. Lastly, the Scripture, 2 Kings xv. 27. allows Pekah to have reigned but twenty years. Notwithstanding, if the last year of Pekah and the first of Hosea concur with the twentieth of Jotham, 2 Kings xv. 30. it is clear, that Pekah must have reigned two and and twenty years, since Jotham began to reign in the second year of Pekah, 2 Kings xv. 32. To reconcile all these differences, it may be said, that Hosea conspired against Pekah in the twentieth year of this Prince, which was the eighteenth after the beginning of Jotham's reign. It was two years longer before Hosea made himself master of Pekah's dominions; so that he was not acknowledged King of Israel till two years after, that is to say, in the fourth year of Ahaz, and the twentieth of Jotham. Lastly, in the twelfth year of Ahaz, he reigned quietly over all Israel, according to chap. xvii. 1. See Usher and the Commentators, in order to reconcile these different dates.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Salmanesar came into Judæa about the year 3276. He began the siege of Samaria in the year of the World 3279, before Jesus Christ 721, before the Vulgar Æra 725.

Hoshaiah

HOSHAIAH, the father of Jezaniah, one of the principal Jews of Jerusalem in the time of Nehemiah. Nehem. xii. 32.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hoshama

HOSHAMA, the son of Jeconiah. 1 Chron. iii. 18.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hospitality

HOSPITALITY. Hospitality has always been very much in esteem among civilized people. In Homer and the old Greek writers, we see what respect they had for their Guests. They believed, that the Gods sometimes went through the world disguised like travellers[1], and observed the conduct of mankind towards one another. The apprehension they had of despising some God instead of a traveller, induced them to receive the greatest strangers with respect, and the Rights of Hospitality were the most sacred and inviolable among them.

The Scripture furnishes us with several examples of Hospitality exercised by the Patriarchs. Abraham received three Angels, threw himself at their feet, invited, [Genes. xviii. 2, 3, &c.] pressed them, served them himself, and stood in their presence; Sarah his wife took care of matters in the kitchen, and baked bread for his Guests. Lot waited at the city-gate to receive such Guests, as might come thither. When the inhabitants [Gen. xix. 1, 2, 3.] of Sodom appeared before his house, in order to insult his Guests, he went out, he spake to them, he exposed himself to their fury, and offered to give up his own daughters to their brutality, provided they would spare them. The same almost is observable [Judg. xix. 16, 17.] in the old man of Gibeah, who had received the young Levite and his wife. St. Paul makes use of Abraham's and Lot's example to encourage the Faithful, and persuade them to the exercise of this virtue, saying, that they who have practised it, have merited the honour of [Matth. x. 40, 41.] receiving Angels under the form of men. The Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul, who abounded with the Spirit of their Master, with great care recommended Hospitality to the Faithful; and the primitive Christians made one principal part of their duty to consist in the exercise of this virtue. Our Saviour tells his Apostles, that whosoever receiveth them, receiveth him himself; and that whosoever should give them even a glass of water, should not lose his reward. Lastly, at the day of Judgment he will say to the wicked, Go, ye cursed, into everlasting fire; I was a stranger, and ye received me not .... and in as much as ye have not done it unto the least of mine, ye have not done it unto me. St. Peter requires the Faithful to use Hospitality to their brethren without murmuring [1 Pet. iv. 3.] and complaint. St. Paul in several of his Epistles recommends Hospitality; Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, says he [Hebr. xiii. 2. Hebr. xiii. 2. 1 Tim. iii. 2. & Tit. i. 8.] to the Hebrews. See likewise Rom. xii. 13. Given to Hospitality. But he recommends it particularly to Bishops. In the two Epistles to Timothy and Titus, where he sets down the duties and qualities of a Bishop, he does not forget Hospitality. Let no one be made a Bishop, who does not exercise Hospitality, says St. Gregory [Greg. Mag. Ep. ad Joan. Episc. Hieron. Ep. ad Oceau.] the Great. And if the Bishop does not receive all strangers into his house, he is inhuman. Episcopus, nisi omnes receperit, inhumanus est, says St. Jerom.

The primitive Christians were so zealous and so exact in the discharge of this duty, that the very Heathens admired them for it. They were Hospitable to all strangers, but chiefly to those who were of the same faith and communion. Believers scarce ever went without Letters of communion, which testified the purity of their Faith: this was sufficient to procure them reception in all those places, where the name of Jesus Christ was known. It is our opinion, that the two last Epistles of St. John the Evangelist, may be such kind of letters of communion and recommendation, which were given to Christians who travelled.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. Of this Tradition among the Heathens, we have some intimiation in Homer, Odyss. P. Καί τε Θεοὶ ξείνοισιν ἐοικότες ἀλλοδαποῖσι, Παντοῖοι τελέθοντες, ἐπιστρωφῶσι πόληας, Ἀνθρώπων ὕβριν τε καὶ εὐνομίην ἐφορῶντες. And of these Peregrinations we have frequent instances in Ovid's Metamorphosis. Summo delabor Olympo, Et Deus humanâ lustro sub imagine terras. 1 Metam.

Hotham

HOTHAM, the son of Heber, of the Tribe of Asher. 1 Chron. vii. 32.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hothir

HOTHIR, the son of Heman, and Head of the twenty-first Family of the Levites. 1 Chron. xxv. 4, 28.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hours

HOURS. The ancient Hebrews did not divide the Day by Hours. The Day was divided into four parts; Morning, Highday or Noon, the first Evening and the last Evening; and the Night was divided [Lament. ii. 19. Judg. vii. 19. Exod. xxiv. 24.] into three parts, Night, Mid-night, and the Morning-watch. If we find sometimes the word Hours in the Septuagint, it signifies the Seasons, as in Homer and Hesiod.

The word Hours occurs often in the Scriptures both of the Old and New Testament: for example, Pluam cras hâ ipsâ [Exod. ix. 28.] horâ grandinem. And, Liberi qui eâdem horâ nati sunt, &c. And, Hâc eâdem horâ, ego tradam omnes istos vulnerandos in conspectu Israel, &c. And in Daniel, Quâcunque horâ audiveritis sonitum, &c. In Tobit, Quasi dimidiam fere horam. And, Prostrati per horas tres. And Judith, Per multas horas unâ voce clamaverunt ad Deum, &c. But in the books of Moses, and the other writings in Hebrew, Hora is used for the precise time or season[1]. In Daniel, we find the word Schaata, which is translated Hour, and may be derived from the verb scaah, which signifies to cease, to be at rest.

The books of Daniel, Tobit, and Judith are the first wherein we find the word Hour mentioned expressly in the sense we give it, or rather in the sense wherein the Ancients construed it, who made use of it both in Greek and Latin to signify a part either of the day or night. Daniel iv. 16. says, he was about an Hour considering the meaning of King Nebuchadnezzar's Vision. Tobit, xi. 14. tells us, that he continued about half an Hour in very great pain, after which the pearl fell from his eyes. The same Tobit relates, xii. 22. that after the Angel Raphaël had declared to him, and his son Tobias, who he was, they prostrated themselves before him, and remained in this posture for about two Hours. Judith vii. 18. declares, that the people of Bethulia being met together in the Synagogue, spent many Hours in crying to the Lord, beseeching him to deliver them from the hands of Holofernes. The Hebrew text does not speak particularly of Hours, but only of Lines or Degrees; as where it mentions Ahaz's Dial, or the retrogradation of the Sun on this Sun-dial. But however it may be expressed in the text, it is certain that Hours, and the division of the Day into several parts, is the matter there in question. Now Ahaz is much more ancient than either Daniel, Tobit, or Judith.

[John xi. 9. and Matth. xx. 3, 4, 5.] But what were the Hours mentioned in these books? this is very difficult to determine with any certainty. The sacred Writers do not inform us; there is no Chaldee or Syriac Author remaining, of any great antiquity, to give us an account of them; and the Greeks, who in matters of profound erudition, and the most remote antiquity, are our best authorities next to the sacred Writings, knew nothing of the original of Hours among foreign nations, and trace it no higher among themselves than the time of Anaximenes or Anaximander, who lived in the reign of Cyrus, towards the end of the Babylonish captivity. This Author had travelled into Chaldæa, and might very well have learned from thence the manner of dividing the Day by Hours. Herodotus, who lived in the reign of Xerxes[2], says expressly, that the Greeks received from the Babylonians the use of Gnomons and Dials. And Xenophon[3], who followed young Cyrus in his expedition, introduces Euthydemus saying, that the Sun, which is luminous, discovers to us the Hours of the Day, and the Stars the Hours of the Night. Aristophanes[4], who lived in the time of Socrates, speaks likewise of the solar Gnomon or Index, and of Hours. He makes one of his Actors ask what a-clock it is by the Sun-dial? The Reader may see our remarks under the word DIALS.

The result of what we have said is this, that the use of Clocks or Sun-dials, and the distribution of the Day into several Hours, is more ancient among the Eastern people than among the Greeks; that the Author of this invention is not known, and that the first monument we are acquainted with, which speaks in an express manner of it, is the second book of Kings, chap. xx. where we have an account of the Sun's retrogradation on Ahaz's dial; and lastly, that we cannot tell in what manner the ancient Babylonians, Chaldeans, and Hebrews, divided their Hours of the Day and Night; whether they were equal or unequal.

In the books of the New Testament we see very clearly the Day divided into twelve equal Hours, after the manner of the Greeks and Romans. These Hours were equal to each other, but unequal with respect to the different seasons. The twelve Hours of the longest days in summer were much longer than those of the shortest Days in winter. The first Hour was that which followed the rising of the Sun, and was answerable to our six a-clock in the Morning in the Equinox; and to other times in proportion to the length or shortness of the Days. The third Hour was answerable to nine a-clock of the Morning in the Equinox; the sixth at all times to Noon; and so on. In the New Testament we observe [Matth. xiv. 25. Mark vi. 48. xiii. 35.] likewise the Night to be divided into four Watches; a custom which the Jews had borrowed from the Romans.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hebr. בעתhoc eodem tempore, or למועד הזהStatuto hoc tempore. And in Daniel, בעדנאin tempore statuto. Elsewhere בשעתאHora. Dan. iii 6. & iv. 16. שעתא חדאHora una.

Herodot. l. 2. Πόλον κὶ γνώμονα κὶ τὰ δώδεκα μέρεα τῆς ἡμέρης παρὰ Βαβυλωνίως ἔμαθον Ἕλληνες.

Xenophon. Ἀπομνημονυμάτων, l. 4.

Aristophan. in Γηρυτάδῃ.

Hukok

HUKOK, a City of Asher; the same probably as that which is made part of Naphtali in Joshua xix. 33. It was yielded to the Levites, and assigned to be a City of [1 Chron. vi. 75.] refuge. The Tribes of Asher and Naphtali bordering on one another, it is not surprizing that a City lying on the limits of both Tribes should be sometimes attributed to one, sometimes to another.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hul

[Gen. x. 23.] HUL, or Chul, the son of Aram. Josephus calls him Otrus, and places him in Armenia. We find several footsteps of the name of Chul in this country, as the cities of Cholana, Colimna, Colsa, Olane, Choluatha, &c. Hul might have given his name to some of these places.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Huldah

HULDAH, a Prophetess, the wife of Shallum; was consulted by Josiah concerning the book of the Law which had been [2 Kings xxii. 14, 15.] found in the Treasury of the Temple.

King Josiah having set people to work upon the repairs of the Temple, Hilkiah the High-Priest found there in the Treasury [2 Kings xxii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, &c.] the original of the book of the Law, and Shaphan the Overseer being sent thither with a message from the King, Hilkiah told him, that in the Temple he had found the book of God's Law, and at the same time put it into his hands. Shaphan took and read it, and after he had given the King an account of the commission which he had been charged with, he told him, that he had received the book of the Law from the High-Priest, and read it before the King; who, upon hearing it, rent his clothes, and commanded Hilkiah the High-Priest, Ahikam the son of Shaphan, Achbor the son of Micaiah, and Asahiah the King's servant, to go and consult the Lord for him. Go, said he, enquire of the Lord for me, for the people and all Judah, concerning the contents of this book; for the wrath of God is terribly inflamed against us, because our fathers would not hearken unto the words of this book, nor fulfil what is commanded in it.

They therefore went to Huldah the Prophetess, the wife of Shallum Keeper of the Wardrobe, who dwelt at Jerusalem in the second city; to her they related what had happened, and declared to her the King's orders. Huldah answered them, Thus saith the Lord, Tell the man who sent you to me, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the evils which are threatned in this book, because they have forsaken me to worship strange Gods, and have provoked me by their whole conduct; my wrath shall be kindled against this place, and shall not be extinguished. As to the King of Judah who sent you, you shall say unto him, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, because thou wert touched with fear at the reading of this book, and hast humbled thyself before the Lord, hast rent thy garments, and shed tears in my presence, I have heard thee, saith the Lord, thou shalt be gathered to thy fathers, and buried peaceably in thine own sepulchre, and thine eyes shall not behold the evils which I will bring upon this place.

[2 Kings xxiii. 1, 2, 3, 4.] The King having received this answer, convened all the Elders of Judah and Jerusalem in the Temple, was there present himself with them, and all the people from the highest to the lowest, read to them out of the book which had been found, renewed with them the covenant of the Lord, and made them promise to observe his Laws and Ordinances more faithfully for the future; at the same time he destroyed all the remains of Idolatry which were in the Temple, and in all the Country. The time of Huldah's death we are not acquainted with; but the discovery of the book of the Law, whereof we are speaking, fell out in the year of the World 3380, before Jesus Christ 620, before the Vulgar Æra 623.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Human Sacrifices

HUMAN SACRIFICES. See [Matth. xi. 29.] SACRIFICES.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Humility

HUMILITY. Humility is the virtue of Christ and Christians. It consists in having low thoughts of ourselves, founded upon the knowledge of our unworthiness, and dependance on God's aid. Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, says [1 Pet. v. 5.] our Saviour. God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble, says St. Peter.

Humilitas is often used for humiliation. Gen. xxix. 39. Vidit Dominus humilitatem meam. Deut. xxvi. 7. Respexit humilitatem nostram. Esth. xv. 2. Memorare dierum humilitatis tuæ. Psal. ix. 14. Vide humilitatem meam de inimicis meis, &c.

Erasmus had formerly a considerable dispute concerning the word Humilitas in the hymn Magnificat, Luc. i. 48. Quia respexit humilitatem ancillæ suæ, which in this place signifies, as he pretended, the humble and low estate only of the blessed Virgin; so that humilitas in this passage would be equivalent to humiliatio or vilitas. He was opposed by certain Monks, to whom he replied in his Colloquy intitled Medardus. It is plain, humilitas does not always signify the virtue of Humility, but oftentimes the poor, mean, dejected state of people, and the timorous, diffident and modest thoughts which this condition [2 Sam. viii. 1. Psal. lxxi. 4.] inspires.

To humble signifies often to afflict, to bring into bondage, to beat, subdue. Humiliatus est Moab: the Moabites were humbled, their force was broken. Percussit David Philistæos & humiliavit eos: he conquered the Philistins, and subdued their power. Humiliabit calumniatorem: God shall humble the slanderer [Psal. xvii. 27.] or oppressor; he shall load him with confusion, he shall pull him down. Oculos superborum humiliabis; thou wilt humble, confound, or cover the proud with shame.

[1 Pet. v. 6.] To humble a Virgin, or a Woman taken in war, signifies to rob her of her honour. Jeremiah, Lament. v. 11. Mulieres in Sion humiliaverunt. Ezek. xxii. 10. Immunditiam menstruatæ humiliaverunt in te: They came near a woman at a certain time when the Law forbids it.

To be humbled under the hand of God, to acknowledge his wisdom and power. Hast thou not seen how Ahab is humbled? is contrite, touched with grief and repentance. Because thy heart was tender, and thou hast humbled thyself before the Lord; because thou hast been touched with sorrow and repentance at the sight of my people's transgressions. The Jews being informed that Holofernes was come into their country, humbled their soul in fasting and prayer. St. Paul advises the faithful of Rome, not arrogantly to exalt themselves, but to accommodate themselves to those of low estate. Non alta sapientes, sed humilibus consentientes.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Humtah

HUMTAH, a City in the Tribe of Judah. Josh. xv. 54. There is mention of a City called Themath or Thamath in the Greek, 1 Sam. xxx. 29. and St. Jerom speaks of Thabatha, the place of St. Hilarion's nativity, five miles from Gaza, towards the south. Nicephorus, who calls it Thebasa, places it at fifteen miles distance from the same city, Gaza. I should be ready to believe that it is the same place as Athmatha or Humtah.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hunting

HUNTING, To Hunt. Hunting is a kind of apprenticeship to war, and an imitation of it. Nimrod was a mighty Hunter before God. He was a warrior, a conqueror, a tyrant, who subdued free people, and put those to death who would not submit to his dominion. The Prophets sometimes express War under the name of Hunting. I will send for many hunters, says Jeremiah, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks. He speaks of the Chaldæans or Persians, who took the Jews, and held them under their dominion. Some are of opinion, that the Hunters mentioned by Jeremiah are the Persians, who set the Hebrews at liberty; and in a more elevated sense, the Apostles, who are, as it were, Hunters, that endeavour to take men with their preaching. Ezekiel speaks likewise of the Kings, who were persecutors of the Jews, under the name of Hunters; Principes aquilonis omnes, & universi venatores. He places them in hell, with the Kings who were not circumcised.

The Psalmist thanks God for having delivered him from the snares of the Hunters. Micah complains, that every one lays ambuscades for his neighbour, and that one brother hunts after another to destroy him. Vir fratrem suum ad mortem venatur. Ezekiel inveighs against the false Prophets, who place cushions under the elbows of sinners, and lay nets to catch them in the chase. Jeremiah in his Lamentations represents Jerusalem as complaining of her enemies, who have taken her like a bird in their nets.

As for Hunting with Dogs, the Reader may see Dogs.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hupham

HUPHAM, or Huppim, the son of Benjamin, Head of the Family of the Huphamites. Numb. xxvi. 39.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Huppah

HUPPAH, a Priest, whose Family had the thirteenth Rank in the four and twenty Classes, appointed by David for the service of the Temple in their turns. 1 Chron. xxiv. 13.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Huppim

HUPPIM, the son of Machir. 1 Chron. vii. 15.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Huppim

HUPPIM, otherwise Hupham, the son of Benjamin. See HUPHAM.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hur (I)

I. HUR, the son of Caleb, the son of Esron, different from Caleb the son of Jepunneh. Hur, if we believe Josephus, was husband to Miriam, the sister of Moses. Others say, he was his son; we know very few particulars concerning the life of Hur: but by the little which the Scripture says of him, we see that Moses had a great regard for him. When this Legislator had sent Joshua against the Amalekites, he went up the Mountain with Hur and Aaron in his company; and while he lifted up his hands praying to the Lord, Aaron and Hur supported his arms, to prevent his growing weary. And when Moses ascended Mount Sinai, in order to receive the Law there, he told the Elders, that if any difficulty should arise, they had Aaron and Hur with them, whom they might consult. Hur was the father of Uri, and Uri the father of Bezeliel.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hur (II)

II. HUR, a Prince of Midian, who was killed in an encounter between Phinehas and the Midianites.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hurai

HURAI, of the Valley or Brook of Gaash, one of the Heroes belonging to David's Army. He is called Hiddai in 2 Sam. xxiii. 30.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Huram

HURAM, the son of Ehud of the Tribe of Benjamin. 1 Chron. viii. 5.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Huri

HURI, the son of Jaroah, of the Tribe of Gad, father of Abihail. 1 Chron. v. 14. and not of Abigail.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hushai

HUSHAI, the Archite, David's friend. He being informed of Absalom's rebellion, and that David was obliged to fly from Jerusalem, met his King and his Friend upon an eminence without the city, with his clothes rent, and his head covered with earth. David perceiving him, told [Æra 1023] him, that if he went with him, he would be a burden a burden to him; but that he might do him an important service, if he returned to the city, and pretended to be in Absalom's interest, in order to defeat the counsel of Ahitophel; and that he should be careful to acquaint him with every thing that passed, by the means of Abiathar and Zadoc the High -Priests, to whom he should give notice of every thing.

[2 Sam. xvi. 17, 18, &c.] Hushai therefore returned to Jerusalem, and as he entred the city, Absalom likewise entred at the same time. To him therefore he went, and said to him, God save the King, God save the King. Absalom answered, Do you use your Friend in this manner? why are you not with David? Hushai said, I will be with him, whom the Lord hath chosen; and will continue with that King, whom this people and all the men of Israel have acknowledged. As I obeyed your father, so will I obey you. After [2 Sam. xvii. 1, 2, 3, &c.] this, Ahitophel told Absalom, that he would take ten thousand men, and pursue David that very night; fall upon him, and defeat him, while he was overwhelmed with his fatigue. This advice seemed good to Absalom, and all in his interest.

But Absalom had a mind farther to know the opinion of Hushai the Archite, and sending for him, proposed what Ahitophel had said to him. Hushai answered, Ahitophel's counsel is not proper at this time. You know your father, and they who are with him are men of great bravery, and exasperated with grief. David is a great soldier, and will make no stay in the open field; he is perhaps at this time hidden in some cave. If you attack him, and any misfortune happens to you, it will be said immediately, that Absalom's party is defeated; and the bravest of those, who are attached to you, will be dispirited. In my judgment, it would be more advantageous to gather all Israel from Dan to Beersheba, after which you may fall upon your father and destroy his party, without leaving one man to follow him: if he should shut himself up in any city, all Israel will besiege him, pull every stone in the walls down with ropes, without leaving one stone upon another.

This advice of Hushai was approved by Absalom and all the Elders of the people; and God permitted thus the counsel of Ahitophel to be overborn, to the great misfortune of Absalom. Hushai immediately communicated what had passed to the High -Priests Zadok and Abiathar, and the news was soon carried to David, who ordered all his people to pass the river Jordan with all speed, lest Absalom, changing his resolution, might fall upon him with his troops. Ahitophel observing his counsel to be neglected, and foreseeing the destruction of Absalom, returned to his own house, and in despair hanged himself. We know not what the end of Hushai [In the year of the World 2981, before J. C. 1019, before the Vulgar Æra 1023.] was.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Husham

HUSHAM, King of Edom, successor to Jobab. Gen. xxxvi. 34.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hushath

HUSHATH, the place where Sibbechai was born, one of the brave Officers belonging to David's Army. 2 Sam.xxi. 18.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hushim

HUSHIM, the son of Dan. Gen.xlvi.23.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hushim

HUSHIM, the father of Ahitub and [Luke xv. 16. Κεράτια, Siliquæ.] Elpaal. 1 Chron. viii. 11.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Husks

HUSKS, in Latin, Siliquæ, Shells or Husks of Peas or Beans. The prodigal Son, oppressed with want, and pinched with [Syr. Arab. Grot. Hammond. Cleric. Bochart, &c.] hunger, desired to feed on the Husks, that were provided for the Hogs. But the most learned Interpreters are of opinion, that the Greek Keratia signifies Carob-beans, the fruit of a tree growing in Egypt, and bearing the same name. There was a sort of wine or liquor of great use in Syria drawn from it, and the lees of it were given to the Hogs. The Greeks and Latins both mention these Carob-beans by the name of Ceratia; and Pliny, as well as the Vulgate, calls them Siliquæ.

This fruit is very common in Palestine, Greece, Italy, Provence, and Barbary: it is suffered to ripen and grow dry upon the tree; the poor feed upon it, and the cattle are fattened with it. The Carob-tree is of a middle size, full of branches, and abounding with round leaves of an inch or two in diameter. The blossoms of it are little red clusters, with abundance of yellowish stalks. The fruits of it are flat cods from half a foot to fourteen inches long, and an inch and an half broad: they are brown a-top, sometimes crooked, composed of two Husks, which are separated by membranes into several cells, wherein are contained flat seeds something like those of Cassia. The substance of these Husks is filled with a sweetish honey kind of juice, not very unlike that of the pith of Cassia. It is in all probability the crooked figure of this Husk which has occasioned its being called in Greek, Keratia, which signifies little Horns.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hyacinth

HYACINTH, by this word we understand a precious Stone, a sort of Flower, and a particular kind of Colour. The Flower Hyacinth is not spoken of in Scripture, but the Colour only, and Stone of this [Cant. v. 14. Rev. xxi. 20.] name, which we are now going to take notice of in their proper Articles.

The Hyacinth Stone. The Spouse in Solomon's Song says, that her Beloved's hands were as gold rings set with Hyacinths; and St. John, in the Revelations, says, that the eleventh foundation of the heavenly Jerusalem is of Hyacinth. Now there are reckoned four sorts of Hyacinths. The first has something of the colour of a Ruby; the second is of a gilded yellow; the third of a citron yellow; the fourth of the colour of a granate. The Hebrew Hebrew Text of the Canticles instead of Hyacinth, reads the Stone of Tarshish. It is again mentioned in Exodus[1]. We do not well know what Stone it is, but the generality explain it Chrysolite.

As to the Hyacinth Colour, Moses often speaks of it[2]. He makes use of the Hebrew word Techeloth, which, according to the most learned Interpreters[3], was an azure blue, or very deep purple, like a violet colour. This colour was dyed with the blood of a kind of oister, called in Latin, Murex, and in Hebrew, Chilson.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Exod. xxviii. 20. תרשישTarshish.
Exod. xxv. 4. תכלתHyacinthus.
See Braunius, de Vest. Sacerd. Hebr. l. 1. c. 13.

Hyades

HYADES. This word comes from the Greek Hyetos, Rain. We find it only in Job[1], where it is placed to answer the Hebrew, Chimah. In the same book Chimah is likewise translated Pleiades. In our our opinion, the word in the original signifies the East, or the Spring. See our Comment upon Job ix. 9.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Job ix. 9. כימהChimah, Hyades. Job. xxxviii. 31. כימהPleiades.

Hyæna

HYÆNA, or Hiena, a four-footed beast. Its name is not to be met with in the Latin Text of the Old Testament, nor in the New; but the Hebrew Text of Leviticus[1] reads, The daughter of the Hiena, Bath-Haïana, instead of Struthio, which we read in the Vulgate. The same name is to be found in several other places of the Hebrew Text, where it is generally translated Struthio, the Ostrich, though it is not very certain, that this is its true signification. See hereafter the Article OSTRICH.

It is certain that Bath-Haïana, or the daughter of the Hiena is a bird; Moses mentions it in his enumeration of such birds, the use whereof was prohibited. But the animal which is known to us by the name of Hiena, is a four-footed beast, almost as large as a Wolf, excepting that its legs are not so long. The hair of it is rough, and its skin spotted with divers colours. Hiena's were formerly produced at Rome in the publick games, and they have been represented on some medals on the score of their rarity. It is an uncommon creature, which is scarce to be seen any where but in Egypt. Spanheim, who had copies of it engraved from medals, describes it with the head of a mastiff, with short triangular ears, a lion's tail and feet, and hair spotted all over like a tyger's.

Bochart, and Ludolphus in his History of Æthiopia maintain, that the Hyæna is in the Hebrew called Tzeboa[2]. Jeremiah speaks of it[3] in chap. xii. 9. The import of the Vulgate is as follows: Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird. And the Septuagint; Mine heritage is unto me a cave of the Hiena. The Hebrew may very well bear the sense of the Vulgate; but Bochart affirms, that the word Hait, translated bird, signifies in general all sorts of wild beasts; and that Tzeboah, which is rendred tinged with divers colours, signifies the Hiena, so named in the sacred language on the score of its spots, and the variety of its hair.

[Plin. l. viii. c. 30. l. xxviii. c. 8.] Pliny speaks of the Hyæna, and describes it in a manner which seems fabulous. He says that it changes its sex every year, is one year male, and the next female; and that from its eyes are taken precious stones, from the name of this creature called Hyenea. Aristotle and Ælian say, that it makes dogs dumb with its shadows; that it imitates the speech of mankind, and deceives them, in order to draw them out of their houses, and devour them. They add, that it has feet like a man's, and no Vertebræ in the neck.

Busbequius, in his travels to Amasia, relates several particulars of this animal. He says it is almost in the shape of a wolf, but not so tall. That its hair is like that of a wolf, except its being more bristling, and marked at certain distances with great black spots. It has no neck, but its head is fastened to the vertebræ or chine-bone of the back, so that it is forced to turn itself quite round, whenever it would look behind. It is very cruel and voracious; it drags dead bodies out of the grave, and carries them to its den. Instead of teeth, it has one continued bone in the jaw. It is said to imitate the voice of a man, and that by this means it often deceives travellers. Busbeq. Iter Amasian. p. 76.

As to the daughter of the Haïana, which is a bird, the use whereof is forbidden by Moses, the Scripture-account of it, which may lead us to some discovery of its species, is as follows: It appears by Job and Micah, that this was a mournful bird, which in its pinings used to make a great noise. I am a brother to dragons, or crocodiles, and a companion to the daughters of the Hyæna. Isaiah [Isai. xiii. 21. Jerem. l. 39.] and Jeremiah, speaking of the destruction of Babylon, and the state to which it was to be reduced, say, that it will seem as a retreat for wild beasts, for dragons, and the daughters of the Hyæna. Isaiah repeats the [Isai. xxxiv. 13. Lament. iv. 3.] same thing, speaking of the destruction of Bozra the capital of Edom. Lastly, Jeremiah in his Lamentations intimates, that this bird is extremely cruel. The dragons, or crocodiles, give suck to their young ones, but the daughter of my people is become as cruel as the daughter of the Hyæna in the wilderness.

It has been the opinion of several Interpreters, that this was the little or great owl, a melancholy, mournful, solitary bird, the cry whereof was piercing and disagreeable; but I do not know how they can accuse it of cruelty; I do not see that they reproach it with this defect. We have offered some conjectures on Isaiah xiii. 21, 22. to prove that the daughter of the Hyæna was the swan. The cruelty wherewith Jeremiah reproaches this bird, agrees very well with the ostrich, which forsakes, they say, its eggs and its young ones. But I find nothing in the Authors who have said any thing of this bird, which justifies its being mournful, noisy, of bad omen, but its belonging to the water, and its delighting in ruins and abandoned places.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Levit. xi. 16. בת־היענהVide & Job xxx. 29. Isa. xiii. 21. & xxxiv. 13. & Jerem. l. 39. & Lam. iv. 3. & Mich. i. 8.
צבועTzeboa. See Boch. Hierozoïcon, parte 1. l. 3. c. 11. & Ludolph. Comment. in Hist. Ethiopic. l. 1. n. 81.
העיט צבוע נחלתי ליLXX. Μὴ σπήλαιον ὑαίνης ἡ κληρονομία μυῖμοί.

Hymenæus

HYMENÆUS, was probably a citizen of Ephesus, who being converted at some of the first sermons of St. Paul, fell afterwards into the heresy of those who denied the resurrection [2 Tim. ii. 17.] of the flesh, and said, that it was already accomplished. St. Austin thinks, [Aug. in Joan. Homil. 19.] that their error consisted in saying, that there was no other resurrection besides that of the soul; which by Faith and Baptism is revived from Sin to Grace. St. Paul sends word to Timothy, in the year of Jesus Christ 63, that he had excommunicated Hymenæus, and given him over to Satan; and [1 Tim. i. 20. 1 Tim. ii. 17.] two years after Hymenæus ingaged in some new error with one Philetus. We know nothing of the end of Hymenæus.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hymn

HYMN. This word is borrowed from the Greek, Hymnos. It signifies a religious Song or Poem, composed in honour of God or the Saints. The word Hymn is often used as synonimous to that of Canticle, Song, or Psalm, which the Hebrews scarce distinguish at all, having no particular term which signifies properly an Hymn, as distinct from a Psalm or Canticle. The Hebrew [מזמור Mismor. Psalmus.] word Mismor, which signifies a Psalm, is more general, and is likewise translated Canticum, or Ode; and the word Tehilla, which signifies Praise, is rendred [תהלה Laus, Hymnus. Eph. v. 19. Coloss. iii. 16. Matth. xxvi. 30.] Hymnus. St. Paul requires Christians to entertain one another with Psalms, and Hymns, and Spiritual Songs. St. Matthew says, that Jesus Christ having supp'd, sung an Hymn, and went out. He recited the Hymns or Psalms which the Jews were used to sing after having eat the Passover. The Hymns which are sung in the Christian Church, and are distinguished from the Psalms, are pieces of Poetry composed generally by very pious but not inspired Authors.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hypocrite

[כנף Chaneph, hypocrita, impius, peccator, proditor, impurus. Jer. iii. 1. xxiii. 15.] HYPOCRITE. This word comes from the Greek, Hypocritès, he who feigns to be what he is not, who puts on a false Person, like the Actors in Tragedies and Comedies. It is generally applied to those who assume the appearances of virtue, without having any thing of the reality of it. Our Saviour frequently accused the Pharisees of Hypocrisy. In the books of the Old Testament, the Hebrew, Chaneph, which is rendred Hypocrite, Counterfeit, signifies likewise a profane, wicked man, one polluted and corrupted, a man of impiety, a deceiver. Jeremiah makes use of the word Chaneph to express the infection, the pollutions of the land of Judah, caused by the sins of its inhabitants.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hyssop

HYSSOP, an Herb very generally known, and in Hebrew called Esob. It was [אזובEsob. Hyssopus. Exod. xii. 22.] commonly made use of in Purifications instead of a sprinkler. For example, God commanded the Hebrews, when they came out of Egypt, to take a bunch of Hyssop, to dip it in the blood of the Paschal Lamb, and sprinkle the lintel and the two sideposts with it. Sometimes they added a little wool to it, of a scarlet colour. For example, in the Purification of Lepers, they [Levit. xiv. 4.] dipped a bunch composed of Hyssop, the branches of Cedar, and red wool in water, mingled with the blood of a bird, and with it sprinkled the Leper.

[John xix. 29.] Hyssop is a shrub, which shoots out abundance of suckers from one root only; it is as hard as any large wood, and grows about a foot and an half high. At particular distances on both sides its stock, it pushes out longish leaves, which are hard, odoriferous, warm, and a little bitter to the taste. The blossom of it appears at the top of the stem, of an azure colour, and like an ear of corn. There are two sorts of it, the garden, and mountain Hyssop. It is very probable that Hyssop grew to a very great height in Judæa, since it is said in the Gospel, that the soldiers having filled a sponge with vinegar, they put it upon a stick made of Hyssop, and presented it to our Saviour's mouth, who was then upon the Cross.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

The Letter I & J

Jaakan

JAAKAN, or Bene-Jaakan, or the Children of Jaakan, an incampment of the [Deut. x. 6.] Israelites in the Wilderness between Gidgad and Moseroth.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jaalam

JAALAM, the son of Esau and Aholibamah. Gen. xxxvi. 3.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jaasau

JAASAU, was one of those who had married a strange woman, and after the Jews returned from the captivity of Babylon, separated from her. Ezra x. 37.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jaazaniah (I)

I. JAAZANIAH, the son of a Maachathite. 2 Kings xxv. 23.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jaazaniah (II)

II. JAAZANIAH, the son of Jeremiah the Rechabite. Jerem. xxxv. 3.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jaazaniah (III)

III. JAAZANIAH, the son of Schaphan, the chief of those idolatrous Israelites who were shewn to Ezekiel in a vision. Ezek. viii. 11.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jaazaniah (IV)

IV. JAAZANIAH, the son of Azur, one of those wicked Israelites who said of Jerusalem, this city is the caldron, and we be the flesh. Ezek. xi. 1, 3.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jaaziah

JAAZIAH, the son of Merari the Levite. 1 Chron. xxiv. 26.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jabal

JABAL, the son of Lamech and Adah, was the Father of those who lodge under [Gen.iv. 20.] tents, and shepherds; that is to say, he was as it were the Prince and Institutor of those, who, like the Arabian Scenites and Nomades, live under tents in the fields, and are by trade shepherds. The word Father is taken often for Master, Head, or Institutor.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jabez (I)

I. JABEZ. We find a man of this name in the Chronicles; but the Scripture, [1 Chron. iv. 9, 10.] which very much commends his piety, does not tell us whose son he was. There are some who think him to be the son of Cos, or Kenaz; in which opinion there is nothing but what is very probable.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jabez (II)

II. JABEZ, the father of Shallum, the fifteenth King of Israel, or kingdom of Samaria. 2 Kings xv. 10.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jabez (III)

III. JABEZ, a City in the Half-tribe of Manasseh beyond Jordan. The Scripture calls it generally Jabesh-Gilead, because it lay in Gilead, at the foot of the Mountains which go by this name. Eusebius[1] places it six miles from Pella towards Gerasa; and consequently it must be eastward of the sea of Tiberias. The city of Jabesh-Gilead was sacked by the Israelites, because it refused to join its arms with theirs in the war undertaken against the Tribe of Benjamin, upon the score of the great outrage which [Judg. xxi. 8. The year is uncertain.] the Levite's wife suffered in the city of Gibeah. Some years after, Naash King of the Ammonites, [1 Sam. xi. 1, &c. In the year of the World 2909, before J. C. 1091, before the Vulgar Æra 1094. b 1 Sam. xxxi. 11, 12, &c. In the year of the World 2949, before J. C. 1051, before the Vulgar Æra 1055.] laying siege to Jabez, the inhabitants desired him to accept of their surrender upon conditions: but the answer which this Prince gave them, was, that they were to expect no other terms than to have their right eyes pulled out. The inhabitants hereupon desired a truce of seven days, promising to give up the city upon what conditions he pleased, if in this time they were not relieved. But Saul being informed of the extremities, which they were reduced to, came speedily to their assistance, cut in pieces Naash's army, and delivered them. They continued ever after to shew great gratitude to Saul and his family, and upon the death of this Prince, they carried off his and his son's bodies, which the Philistins had hung upon the walls of Bethsan, and buried them honourably in a wood near their city b.

You have here some remarks upon the siege of this place, and the speedy succour brought to its inhabitants by Saul.

[Observations on the siege of Jabesh, and the defeat of the Ammonites, 1 Sam. xi. 1——11. Joseph. Antiq. l. 6. c. 6.] □ What appears to me most surprizing, not to say almost impossible, in this war, is, that Saul should be able to get together so numerous and formidable an army in less than eight days time; for upon a review of it at Besech, he found it to consist of three hundred thousand Israelites, and thirty thousand of the Tribe of Judah. Josephus enlarges this number in a very extraordinary manner, upon what foundation I cannot tell. He reckons seven hundred thousand Israelites, and seventy thousand men of the Tribe of Judah: without doubt there is a mistake in his computation; wherefore we must keep to the sacred Writer's account of the matter. Nor can I easily believe that this could be done without a miracle. For the Tribes could not have had intelligence upon one and the same day, considering their distance from one another, and it was very difficult to make them all appear at the same time at the place of general rendezvous, in a readiness to march and fight the enemy. I know very well that they were a well-disciplined people, marching in haste to the succour of their brethren, who were shut up in Jabesh; but whatever expedition the most remote might use, I do not see how naturally they could come time enough: yet they arrive at the appointed time and place, and Saul inspired by God, puts himself at the head of them, and marches directly against the enemy, whom he surprizes in their camp.

I shall speak elsewhere of Samaria, which Benhadad invested with a very numerous army; the conditions proposed by the King of Syria to Ahab King of Israel and his people, seem altogether unreasonable, sufficient to carry the besieged to the utmost extremities, and induce them to kill themselves, rather than submit to them: but the proposal made here to the inhabitants of Jabesh, by Naash King of the Ammonites, is still worse. He having attacked [1 Sam. xi. 1.] the city, all the inhabitants declared, that if he would accept of their surrender upon articles, they were willing to become subject to him. To which he replies, On this condition [Ibid. vs. 2.] will I make a covenant with you, that I may thrust out all your right eyes, and lay it for a reproach upon all Israel. The condition is cruel, and shocking to nature; notwithstanding the besieged seem to submit to it, and answer him; Give us [Ibid. vs. 3.] seven days respite, that we may send messengers unto all the coasts of Israel, and then if there be no man to save us, we will come out to thee. Which was granted them.

The messengers therefore sent express by the city, departed; and coming to Gibeah, where Saul dwelt, they reported to the people the sad condition of their brethren, the inhabitants of Jabesh; and all the people were so affected with the relation, as to shed tears. Saul returned about the same time out of the field following his herd, and said, What aileth the people that they weep thus? And they told him what message they had received from the inhabitants of Jabesh. Hereupon the Spirit of God came immediately upon Saul, and his anger was kindled greatly against the cruel Naash King of the Ammonites, who was not content with subduing the inhabitants of Jabesh, but proposed likewise to make them a reproach to all Israel. Then Saul took a yoke of oxen, and hewed them in pieces, and sent them throughout all the coasts of Israel by the hands of messengers, saying, So shall it be done unto his oxen, who shall not take the field, and follow Saul and Samuel. There was not a moment to be lost in succouring those of Jabesh; there were but six days remaining: wherefore Saul thought on this expedient in order to touch the compassion of the Tribes, and excite them to hasten immediately to the assistance of their brethren. Then the fear of the Lord fell on all the people, the proposal made by Naash struck them with horror; and they all appeared at the place assigned, as if they had been but one man.

Saul having drawn his army together, and reviewed it at Besech, marched without doubt all night, in order to arrive at Jabesh by the time he had promised, having sent word to the inhabitants of the city by messengers dispatched for this purpose, that they should be relieved the next day when the sun was in full force. The people of Jabesh received this news, as may be well imagined, with great joy, and sent word to the Ammonites, in terms to this effect; To-morrow morning we will come out unto you, and you shall treat us as you please. The Commentator observes with reason, that they did not falsify: for the next day they were to make a vigorous sally, and go out unto them, but with sword in hand, while their brethren were to fall upon the camp of the Ammonites. This was indeed a stratagem; for upon these ambiguous expressions, the enemies kept themselves less upon their guard, supposing that the inhabitants of the town had lost all hope of being succoured.

[Ibid. vs. 11.] The next day being come, Saul divided his army into three bodies, and by break of day fell upon the camp of the Ammonites. He surprized, in all probability, this great army of the Ammonites, and attacked their camp in three different places of the circumvallation, in order to find them employment every where. This surprize intirely confounded them; for the Scripture does not say that they made the least resistance. It is not to be questioned, but that the people of the town immediately sallied out upon the enemy, as well to keep their word, as to assist their brethren in cutting them to pieces.

The Hebrews were very well acquainted with the art of war; we see every where in Scripture, that it was their method to fight in separate bodies, and drawn up very deep. It appears here that they formed three strong phalanx's, which were to be divided by little distances, in order to serve for a retreat to the wounded, and to carry orders; the Tribes likewise were separated by intervals, and distinguished by their colours.

I do not understand why Dom Calmet should affirm, that it might be the fourth day of the truce which was granted to the inhabitants of Jabesh, when they were delivered. I have already shewn, that this was impossible, and I believe, that at the soonest it was not till the seventh day, or even at the first dawn of the eighth. He says farther in his Comment on the 11th verse of the same chapter, " That he does " not observe, that either the Hebrews or " their neighbours fortified their camp, " but only placed sentries at the avenues."

[Hist. de l'Anci. Test. in quarto, tom. 1. p. 582.] He certainly did not consider well what he said; for in his History of the Old Testament, speaking of the war between Benhadad and Ahab, he says, " That it was " the custom to inclose besieged towns with " ditches, and redoubts, in order to reduce " the besieged by famine."

Besides,

[Josh. xi. 1, 2, 3, &c.] Besides, it is certain, that Moses made intrenchments about his camp; and not only lines of circumvallation, but those too of contravallation were in use among the Jews and their neighbours. The Reader may see, if he pleases, the Comment on Polybius, where he will find a Treatise concerning the way of attacking and defending places among the Ancients, in which there are several examples of lines drawn quite round besieged places.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Euseb. in locis, in Arisoth. Procop. Gaz. in Judic. makes it twenty miles from Pella to Jabez.

Jabin (I)

I. JABIN, King of Hazor, in the northern part of the Land of Canaan. This Prince, amazed at Joshua's conquests, who had already subdued the whole southern part of Canaan, sent to the other Kings in the northern part along the river Jordan and the Mediterranean, and in the Mountains which lie to the north of the Land of Canaan, to engage them in a league offensive and defensive; in order whereunto, he represented to them, how much reason they had to apprehend every thing, and that the Israelites would be soon masters of the whole country, if they suffered themselves to be attacked one after another: but this was of no other use than to hasten their destruction, and make Joshua's victory more compleat, since he gained more ground, and won more cities in one day, and by one battle only, than he could have run over in many days. Jabin therefore entred into a confederacy with the Kings of Madon, Jobab, Shimron, and Achshaph, and several other people of Canaan, to fall upon the Israelites, who were under the conduct of Joshua, before they were settled in the country. All these Kings and confederated troops rendezvous'd at the waters of Merom, in order to engage the Israelites. Hereupon the Lord said to Joshua, Be not afraid, for to-morrow about this time, I will deliver them all into your hands; you shall hamstring their horses, and burn their chariots with fire. Joshua therefore marched against them, and attacked them suddenly at the waters of Merom, defeated, and pursued them as far as great Zidon, unto Mizrephoth-maim, and unto the Valley of Mizpeh. He lamed their horses, and burnt their chariots with fire. This done, Joshua marched back to Hazor, took it, and killed the King of that city. This was the end of Jabin. He was put to death about the year of the World 2555.

[Observations on the King of Hazor's defeat, and of the other Kings confederated against the Israelites. Josh. xi. 1, &c. a] It is surprizing that the sacred Writer should have so much neglected to relate the circumstances of so memorable a battle, since Josephus a affirms, that the confederate army belonging to the Kings in alliance against Israel, consisted of three hundred thousand foot, ten thousand horse, and twenty thousand chariots of war: it must have been at least so numerous, since [Antiq. l. v. c. 1.] Joseph. [Josh. xi. 4.] the Scripture compares it with the sand of the sea.

Joshua was no doubt dismayed when he understood, that Jabin and all the other Kings were in league against him, and had drawn together so formidable an army, in order to resist him more easily, and oppress the Hebrews with their numbers; but God encouraged him in these words, Fear not, for to-morrow about this time I will deliver them up all slain before Israel. This however did not hinder Joshua, who was an able and experienced General, from putting every thing in practice that artifice and cunning could suggest, in order to succeed in his undertaking. Nothing is more a proof of a General's capacity and understanding, than the stratagems he makes use of, when he is not able to employ open force, to overpower an enemy; surprize is the surest and most honourable means, and stratagems of this kind are very frequent in history.

Joshua therefore thought to surprize his enemies, who having too great an opinion of their strength, were less upon their guard. Nothing is more common than negligence and want of providence in a General, who sees himself at the head of an army infinitely superior to his enemies; he cannot imagine that it ever so much as once enters into their thoughts, to venture to attack him; his soldiers likewise sleep upon this confidence, and are the more remiss; this is what gives occasion for those extraordinary, and almost always fortunate enterprizes, of the weaker against the stronger. Observe this; small armies, under good conduct and command, have at all times been used to beat others that were more numerous; of the defeat whereof there are more examples in history, than of disadvantages received by the others, who have ventured to prevent and surprize them by hard marches made without their notice, upon which all the success of surprizes absolutely depends.

[Josh. xi. 7, 8.] I see no prodigy nor extraordinary miracle, in this famous defeat of the King of Hazor, and his allies; the sacred text sufficiently demonstrates, that there was none. Joshua marched with great expedition against them, and his whole army with him as far as the waters of Merom, and charging them on a sudden, the Lord delivered them into the hands of the children of Israel, who defeated them, and pursued them every way.... so that not so much as one of them escaped. According to the recital in the sacred Author, Dom Calmet says very much to the purpose, " That Joshua must have " divided his army into several bodies, " in order to pursue the fugitives; and " that he sent part of it beyond Jordan, " and part towards Zidon, and Mizrephoth; the situation of the places leaving room to judge, that he pursued " them several days, wheresoever the battle " was fought."

The only circumstance we find in Scripture, relating to the march of the Israelitish army, very much perplexes the Commentators. Josephus says, that Joshua [Joseph. Ant'q. l. v. c. i.] was in sight of the enemy after five days march. From Gilgal, whence Joshua set out, to Merom, is, according to Eusebius's position, says Dom Calmet, about twenty leagues. The Israelites might be very well five days a travelling twenty leagues; the greater or less expedition of marches depends upon the nature of the country, and a great army can with much ado march two or three leagues a day, in a country where there are mountains and narrow passes: nor could it be any miracle, if an enemy that was ill served by spies, should have no intelligence of their march; this is too frequently to be seen in our days, to disbelieve any thing of the like nature's happening in more remote ages. Joshua might likewise have made himself master of all the passes, to prevent the enemy's having any intelligence of his march, which must have been slow through the defilées and mountains, which were to be passed by him before he could come at them. Suppose again, that Joshua had directed his march on the side of the lake Semechon, by which way he would have had forty leagues to go; I have nothing to say against such a supposition: for when the business on foot is to surprize an army, the least difficult way, though it be the longest, is the best; it is that which the enemy least distrusts, and by which an army is often attacked in flank or rear, at a time least expected. But be this as it will, Joshua surprized the King of Hazor and his Allies, and cut their troops in pieces.

We find many examples in Scripture of surprizing camps and armies in this manner, particularly under the Maccabees, wherein we see things were carried on with admirable conduct, and in a way not at all inferior to the most memorable actions of this kind in antiquity.

As to the order of battle, wherein the two armies were drawn up, as the sacred Writer gives us no detail of the circumstances of this action, I can offer nothing thereupon but conjectures and probabilities: there is all the appearance that can be, that it happened in a plain; that Joshua according to the method of the Asiaticks, which was that likewise of the Jews, ranged his whole infantry in one line in the form of a Phalanx, distinguished by great bodies, with very small intervals between them. There is no mention of horse, wherefore I have not mentioned any in the army of the Israelites. The King of Hazor had them in great numbers: I suppose them to have their station upon the wings, and the foot in the center. The people of Asia, and all the Eastern nations, used to post the horse upon the wings, that they might be more easily detached against the run-aways after the victory.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jabin (II)

[Judg. iv. 1, 2, &c. From 2699 to 2719.] II. JABIN, King of Hazor, twenty years oppressed the Israelites. He had nine hundred chariots of iron, and Sisera the General of his troops, commanded a very powerful army. God in compassion to his people, raised up Deborah the Prophetess, wife to Lapidoth, and Barak the son of Abinoam, who delivered the Israelites from this oppression. Sisera was defeated by Barak at the foot of Mount Carmel, and the Israelites having the advantage, fortified themselves against Jabin, and at last intirely [Josh. xix. 33.] subdued him.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jabneel

JABNEEL, a Town upon the frontiers of Naphtali. There is another of the same name in the Tribe of Judah. Josh. xv. 11.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jabneh

JABNEH, otherwise Jamnia, a City of the Philistins. See JAMNIA.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jabok

JABOK, or Jabbok, a Brook on the other side of Jordan, the spring whereof is in the Mountains of Gilead. It falls into Jordan pretty near the sea of Tiberias, to the south of this sea. Near this brook the [Gen. xxxii. 1, 2. ... 23.] Patriarch Jacob met the Angels[1], who wrestled with him. The Jabbok separated the land of the Ammonites from the Gaulanitis, and the territories of Og King of Bashan.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. Our Author here expresses it, as if this Patriarch wrestled with several Angels, contrary to the letter of the Text, Gen. xxxii. 24, &c. It is said indeed in the first verse of this Chapter, That the Angels of God met him. But the dispute is mentioned as passing between Jacob and a single person.

Jachan

JACHAN, the son of Abihail, of the Tribe of Gad. 1 Chron. v. 13.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jachin (I)

I. JACHIN, the fifth son of Simeon; he went down into Egypt with his father, and was Head of the Family of the Jachinites. Numb. xxvi. 12.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jachin (II)

II. JACHIN, Head of the Family of this name, which was the one and twentieth of the four and twenty Families of Priests, 1 Chron. xxiv. 17.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jachin (III)

III. JACHIN. This is the name of one of the two Pillars which were placed on each side the Porch of Solomon's Temple. The other Pillar was called Boaz. They were of brass; four inches thick, eighteen cubits high, and twelve cubits in circumference[1]; I mean the shaft of the Pillar, without including the basis or pedestal, the height whereof the Scripture does not mention; nor the chapiter, which was five cubits high. Upon the top of each of these two Pillars was a crown, or chapiter five cubits high, (1 Kings vii. 16. Jerem. lii. 21.) In some places these chapiters are reckoned to be but three cubits, (1 Kings xxv. 17.) and elsewhere four, (1 Kings vii. 19.) The reason of this proceeds from considering them under different views; and comprehending sometimes the ornaments, and rose or lilly at the top; and sometimes not including them. The intire body of the crown consisted of five cubits; but if neither the lilly on the top, nor the ornaments, whereby the chapiter was joined to the shaft of the Pillar, were included, it was but three cubits high. Lastly, if the lilly only or rose be taken away, it was four cubits in height. Jachin signifies Stability, and Boaz Firmness.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

1 Kings vii. 15. Jerem. li. 21. The Chronicles, 2 Chron. iii. 15, 17. allow the two Pillars to be but 35 cubits high; from whence it is thought that they were each but seventeen cubits and an half high. Eighteen Hebrew cubits, make 30 feet 9 inches; 12 cubits, 20 feet 6 inches.

Jacob

JACOB, the son of Isaac and Rebekah, was born in the year of the World 2168, before Jesus Christ 1832, before the Vulgar Æra 1836. He was the younger brother of Esau, and a twin. It was observed that at his birth, he held his brother Esau's heels; for this reason he was called Jacob, which signifies one, who supplants, or takes his adversary by the foot in order to throw him down. This was a kind of prognostick of what he was to do afterwards. While Rebekah was big with child, Isaac being gone to consult the Lord concerning the struggling of these twins in their mother's womb, God declared to him, that Rebekah should be the mother of two sons, who should become Princes of two great People; but that the eldest should be [Gen. xxv. 25. Gen. xxv. 21, 22, 23. Gen. xxv. 32.] subject to the youngest. Jacob was of a meek and peaceable temper, and loved a quiet life at home; whereas Esau was of a more turbulent and fierce nature, and was passionately fond of hunting. Isaac had a particular tenderness for Esau; but Rebekah was more fond of Jacob.

Jacob having one day prepared a mess of pottage for himself, Esau, who returned extremely fatigued, and with a very sharp appetite from hunting, desired his brother to give him some of that, which he had provided for his own eating: but Jacob refused, unless he would give up his right of seniority to him. Esau replied, Behold, I am at the point to die, and what profit will this birth-right do to me? Jacob said, Swear to me then, and Esau sware to him, and sold his birth-right unto him; and immediately taking the bread and pottage of lentiles, he did eat, and drink, and went away, without giving himself any uneasiness concerning the privilege, which he had thus disposed of. This action, which seemed to be a jest only, declared sufficiently the spirit and sentiments of the two brothers; and St. Paul makes no scruple of treating Esau as a profane person for having in this manner [Hebr. xii. 16. Gen. xxvii. 1, 2, &c. In the year of the World 2245, before J. C. 1755, before the Vulgar Æra 1759.] sold his birth-right.

Long after this, the two brothers being seventy seven years of age, and Isaac their father an hundred thirty-seven, it happened that Isaac fell into a languishing indisposition; and believing his last hour to be near, he called his son Esau, and bad him go, take his hunting weapons, get him some venison, dress it as he knew he liked, and bring it to him; and he would give him his last blessing. Esau obeyed, took his weapons, and went an hunting. Now Isaac's sight was so much weakened with age, that he was able to discern nothing. His wife Rebekah, who had heard what he said to Esau, gave notice of it to her favourite son Jacob, and added; Follow the advice, which I am now giving you; go speedily to the flock, and bring me two of the best kids, that I may prepare them for your father. You shall present them to him, and he will give you his blessing. Jacob at first excused himself, saying, you know my brother

Esau is all hairy, and that I am very smooth; if my father touches me with his hands, I fear he will imagine, that I intended to deceive him; and so I shall bring a curse upon me, and not a blessing. Rebekah answered him, Let this curse fall upon me, my son, hearken to me only, and go look for what I bid you. Jacob went, and Rebekah prepared a mess for Isaac in the manner which she knew to be grateful to him. She dressed Jacob in some of Esau's best clothes, covered his hands and neck with the skins of the kids, which she had cooked for him, gave him the mess, and brought him into Isaac's chamber.

Isaac hearing him, asked who he was, for, as has been said, he saw nothing; Jacob answered, I am your son Esau[1]. Isaac said, how comes it that you have met with somesomething so soon? Jacob replied; the Will of God has so ordered it, that I immediately found, what I sought for. Isaac called to him to come near him, that he might touch him, and be assured that he was indeed Esau. He touched him, and finding him to be very hairy, he said, The voice indeed is Jacob's, but the hands are Esau's. After therefore that he had eat and drank, he bid Jacob come near to him, that he might kiss and bless him. Jacob therefore approaching to him, Isaac smelt the smell of his raiment, and said to him, See, the smell of my son is as the smell of a field, which the Lord hath blessed: Therefore God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatness of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine. Let people serve thee, and nations bow down to thee, be lord over thy brethren, and let thy mother's sons bow down to thee. Cursed is every one that curseth thee, and blessed be he that blesseth thee.

Isaac had scarce finished these words, when Esau came, and brought the venison, which he had been preparing for his father. Isaac hereupon was very much surprized, and said to Esau, thy brother Jacob has imposed upon me, and stol'n the blessing from me, which I designed for thee. Esau replied, he is very justly called Jacob, or one who supplants. This is now the second time, that he hath supplanted me: he robbed me of my birthright, and he has now once more robbed me of the blessing, which was due to me. And addressing himself to Isaac, he desired him earnestly to bless him. But Isaac answered him, I have made him thy master, and subjected all his brethren to him; I have given him corn and wine for his support; and after this, what, my son, am I able to do farther? Esau answered, hast thou not one blessing, O my father? bless me, even me also. And as he wept, and made great outcries, Isaac, touched with compassion, said to him, Behold, thy dwelling shall be the fatness of the earth, and of the dew of heaven from above. And by thy sword thou shalt live, and shalt serve thy brother: but the time shall come, when thou shalt shake his yoke from off thy neck, and be delivered from it. Some translate the Hebrew in another sense[2]: Thy blessing shall be far from the fat of the earth, and the dew of heaven: but thou shalt live by thy sword, &c.

From this time Esau bore always a secret hatred to Jacob, and said in his heart, [Gen. xxviii. 1; 2, &c.] The time of mourning for my father will come, and then I will get rid of my brother Jacob. Rebekah being informed of Esau's wicked design, sent for Jacob, and told him the necessity of his going into Mesopotamia, and retiring to his uncle Laban's at Haran, till Esau's passion was cooled. She afterwards communicated the same thing to Isaac; and told him, that her life would be insupportable to her, if Jacob should marry a Canaanite. Isaac therefore sent for Jacob, gave him his blessing, and directed him to go into Mesopotamia, and marry one of his uncle Laban's daughters. Jacob departed privately; and being come after sun-set to a certain place, where he proposed to pass the night, he took one of the stones which he found there, and having put it under his head, fell asleep. While he was thus sleeping, in a dream he saw a ladder, the bottom whereof rested on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven; he saw likewise the Angels of God ascending and descending by it. He saw likewise the Lord standing above it, who said to him, I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac, to thee and thy posterity I will give the Land whereon thou liest; thy family shall be as numerous as the sand of the sea, and all nations shall be blessed in thee, and in him who shall spring from thee.

When Jacob awoke out of his sleep, he said, the Lord is surely in this place, and I knew it not. How dreadful is this place? this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven. And rising early in the morning, he took the stone upon which he had rested his head, set it up as a monument, pouring oil upon it, and called the place where he had slept, Bethel; a name given afterwards to the city of Luza, which was in that neighbourhood. At the same time he begged of God to protect him in the journey, which he was going to undertake, and devoted to him the tythe of all that he should acquire [Gen. xxix. 1, &c.] by his labour. He departed from Bethel, and after some days journey, came into Mesopotamia, near the city of Haran, where his uncle Laban lived. He enquired of the shepherds, whom he found near this place, whether Laban was in health. They told him, he was very well, and that his daughter Rachel was coming thither to water her flock. As soon as she came, Jacob removed the stone which covered the well, assisted her in giving water to her sheep, and declared to her, that he was her cousin -german, the son of Rebekah, Laban's sister. Rachel immediately ran with this news to her father; and Laban came with speed to receive his nephew, and carry him to his house. After he had been there a month, Laban said to him, Is it necessary, because you are my nephew, that you should serve me without any consideration? tell me then, what recompense is it that you require? Now Laban had two daughters, the eldest whereof was called Leah, and the other Rachel. Jacob therefore replied to Laban, I will serve you seven years, if you will give me Rachel to wife. Laban consented, and soon after the nuptial ceremony was performed according to the fashion of that country. In the evening Laban procured Leah to be brought into Jacob's chamber, instead of Rachel; so that Jacob discerned nothing of this cheat till the next morning. Then he complained of it violently; but his father-in-law, in answer to his complaints, told him, that it was not the custom of the country to marry the youngest daughter before the eldest; and that if he still desired to have Rachel, he should marry her, provided he would serve him seven years longer. How unjust soever this condition was, Jacob agreed to it, out of the extreme affection, which he had for Rachel; and when he had married her, he preferred her to Leah. But God so permitted it, that she was fruitful, while Rachel was barren. Leah had four sons successively, Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah; and Rachel seeing that she had no children, gave her [Gen. xxx.] servant Bilhah to her husband, that by her means at least, she might have children by Jacob. Bilhah therefore had Dan and Naphtali, whom Rachel looked upon as her own. Leah, in imitation of Rachel, gave likewise her servant Zilpah to her husband, who brought him Gad and Asher. After this Leah conceived again, and had a fifth and sixth son, Issachar and Zebulun, and a daughter, whose name was Dinah. At last the Lord remembered Rachel, and gave her a son, who was called Joseph.

Jacob observing his family to be pretty numerous, and that the time during which he was obliged to serve Laban, was ended, desired leave from him to return into his own country with his wives and children. [In the year of the World 2260, before J. C. 1740, before the Vulgar Era 1744.] But Laban, who had experienced how useful Jacob's services were to him, desired him to continue his care of his flocks, with a promise of any recompense that he should ask. Jacob offered to serve him six years longer, provided he would give him all the young encrease of his flocks of goats and sheep, that should be of different colours, that is to say, speckled; and farther, the brown sheep also. The rest, continued he, shall be all yours; that is to say, all that shall be born of one colour only among the sheep and goats, excepting the brown sheep. Hereby Jacob reserved to himself the least part for the fleece. He added; And that you may be satisfied, that I have no design of using any art in producing more lambs or kids of different colours, separate all that are of one colour in your flocks, and leave the care of them to your sons; and give me only those to keep, which are of different colours. Laban willingly accepted these conditions, and that very day there was a separation made of the flocks, according to the plan, which Jacob had proposed; and there was a distance of three days journey between the flocks of Laban, and those of Jacob.

[Gen. xxxi. 10, 11, 12, &c.] But the Lord intending to reward Jacob's labours, discovered an artifice to him in a dream, which succeeded admirably in producing sheep and kids of different colours. This was to put upon the places where his cattle came to water, while they were warm, green branches with the bark in some parts peeled; this begat a diversity of colours in the eyes both of the sheep and goats, which appeared not in the branches themselves only, but in the shadow of them also, represented in the water: so that the sheep having their eyes struck with them, conceived and brought forth young ones of different colours. He did not however make use of this artifice in all the seasons. It is commonly believed, that he exposed the branches in the spring only; because he was desirous to have many of the young ones of the autumn production. But in autumn he let things go in the natural way, being well enough content that Laban should have some of those which were born in spring, and were conceived in autumn[3]. The artifice which Jacob made use of upon this occasion, had nothing in itself supernatural. We know very well, that beasts which receive lively impressions from any objects, generally conceive and produce young ones with some spot of the colour they were so affected with. There is nothing miraculous in the means, which the revelation of God thus discovered to Jacob in his dream. This is the most common opinion entertained among the Latins. St. Jerom[4], St. Austin[5], and St. Isidore of Seville[6], have followed it, and farther supported it with reasons of their own: but St. Chrysostom[7], Theodoret[8], and some others have been of opinion, that all this was above the strength of nature.

Jacob

Jacob acquired so much wealth by the means we have been speaking of, that Laban and his sons grew jealous of him, and could not forbear shewing their uneasiness at it, as if Jacob had robbed them of that, which he possessed. They no longer looked upon him with the same eyes they did before, and said publickly, that he had enriched himself with their fortunes. At the same time, the Lord in a dream advised Jacob to return into his own country, and assured him that he would protect him. Jacob resolved therefore upon returning to the Land of Canaan; and having communicated his design to his wives, he found them disposed to follow him. He took his wives therefore, his children and his cattle, and without saiyng any thing to Laban of the matter, set forward towards Palestine. He had performed three days journey, before Laban had notice that he was gone, and had carried away all that belonged to him. He immediately pursued him, and at last overtook him, on the seventh day of his pursuit, upon the mountains, which were called Gilead. He complained in rough terms to Jacob of his conduct towards him, in flying away thus, without taking leave of him. He added, that he had it in his power to make him repent of what he had done; but that the God of Abraham had appeared to him in the night, and forbad him to say any thing offensive to him; that he easily forgave the desire he shewed of seeing once more his country and relations: but, said he, why have you robbed me of my Gods? for Rachel had taken Laban's Teraphim without Jacob's knowledge.

[* See the Article Teraphim.] Jacob answered; I departed without your notice, because I was afraid lest you should forcibly detain your daughters. And as for the robbery you charge me with, I am consenting, that he, upon whom you shall find your Gods, shall be put to death before all our brethren. Hereupon Rachel concealed the images under the bolster of the Camel's saddle, upon which she was sitting; and when Laban came into her tent to look there for them, as he had done in all the rest, she desired him to excuse her, if she did not rise, saying, that what was common to women, was then upon her. Thus she disappointed all the search her father had made. Jacob in his turn complained to Laban of all the ill treatment he had received from him during his abode in Mesopotamia, and of all that he had done during the strict search [יגר שהדותא Jegar Schehadatha. Gen. xxxii. 2. גלעד Galaad.] which he had made in their several tents. But at last all ended in swearing an eternal alliance between them and their families after them. They set up an heap of stones upon the Mountains of Gilead to serve as a Monument of their friendship. Jacob called this heap Galeed; and Laban Jegar-Sahaduthah; and after having eaten together upon the same place, which from that time was called Gilead, they separated in perfect good understanding. Laban took the road to Mesopotamia; and Jacob going on towards the Land of Canaan, arrived at the brook Jabbok, to the east of Jordan; at the place which from that time was called Mahanaïm, or the two camps, by reason of the two kinds of battalions of Angels, which met Jacob at this place. It is said that these Angels, divided thus into two bodies, were the tutelary Angels of Mesopotamia, which accompanied Jacob as far as Jabbok; or the Protectors of the Land of Canaan, who received him, and guarded him on his arrival.

During Jacob's absence, his brother Esau had settled in the Mountains of Seir, to the East, southward of the place where Jacob was at that time. Jacob fearing lest his brother might still have some resentment remaining, for the injury, which he thought he had received from him, believed it convenient to win upon him by presents and submissions. He sent therefore to give him notice of his arrival, and desire his favour. As soon as Esau was informed of his coming, he departed with four hundred men to go and join him. Jacob thought he had some evil design, and in order to appease him, sent him goats, sheep, camels, cows, she -asses and their foals, with particular directions to those who had the conduct of them, to present them all to Esau in his name, and tell him, that they were presents which he sent him in order to find favour in his eyes, and that he himself was coming after with an intention to salute him. After all his people had passed the brook Jabbok, he remained alone on the other side, and behold an Angel appeared in the form of a mana, and wrestled with him till the morning. The Angel seeing he could not get the better of Jacob, touched the sinews of his thigh, which immediately withered, and Jacob continued lame with itb. The Angel said, Let me go, for the dawn begins to appear: but Jacob answered, I will not let thee go, unless thou givest me thy blessing. The Angel asked him, what was his name: He replied, Jacob. And the Angel said,

Hereafter thou shalt no more be called Jacob, but Israel. And Jacob asking him likewise his name, he said, Why dost thou ask my name? and he blessed him there. Jacob therefore called this place Peniel, saying, I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved. The adventure which happened in this place to Jacob, when the Angel touched the sinews of his thigh, is the reason why the Israelites never eat the sinews of the thigh in any beast.

When Jacob had passed the Jabbok, he divided his people into two bands. Leah and her children went first. Rachel and [Genes. xxxiii.] her son Joseph last. Each of them was attended with her maid-servants. Jacob perceiving Esau at a distance coming towards him, went forwards, and threw himself seven times upon the earth before him. Leah and Rachel did the same with their children. The two brothers tenderly embraced each other, and Jacob begged of Esau to accept the present which he had offered him by his servants. Esau received it, though with some difficulty, and proposed to accompany Jacob with his people, in order to serve him as a guard: but Jacob desired him not to give himself this trouble, saying, that he was obliged to make very slow journeys by reason of the people and cattle which he carried with him; but that he hoped he should have an opportunity one day to visit him at Seir. Esau therefore returned, and Jacob came to Succoth beyond Jordan, where he built an house. There he dwelt for some time; afterwards he passed the river Jordan, and came to Salem, a City of the Schechemites, where he continued, having purchased that part of the field, where he set up his tents, for the sum of an hundred Kesita's, or an [See hereafter the Article Kesita.] hundred Lambs, or so many pieces of Money, of the children of Hamor, Schechem's father.

While Jacob abode at Salem, his family was disturbed by the rape of his daughter Dinah, who was ravished by Schechem, the son of Hamor, as we have related in [In the year of the World 2265, or 2266, before J. C. 1734, before the Vulgar Æra 1738.

Genes. xxxiv.] the Article DINAH, and shall again mention in Schechem. The sons of Jacob took revenge in a remarkable manner for this affront, by killing all the Schechemites, and pillaging their city. Jacob fearing the resentment of the people of that country, was obliged to retire to Bethel, according to the order which he had received from God, who appointed him to stay there, and erect an Altar. In the way of preparation for the Sacrifice, which he was to offer there, he commanded his people to purify themselves, to change their clothes, and throw away all the strange Gods, which they might have brought with them out of Mesopotamia. Jacob took all these Idols which they gave him, and hid them under an oak near Schechem. He departed from thence without any one's daring to attack him, came happily to Bethel, sacrificed there; and the Lord appearing to him, renewed the promises he had made of protecting him, and multiplying infinitely his family.

After he had performed his devotions at Bethel, he took the way of Hebron, in order to go see his father Isaac, who dwelt hard by in the Valley of Mamre.

In the way, Rachel died in labour of Benjamin, and was buried near Bethlehem. Jacob erected a Monument for her; and proceeding in his journey towards Hebron, he pitched his tents at the tower of Edar. He had the satisfaction to find Isaac living, and this good Patriarch lived still two and twenty years with Jacob, not dying till the year of the World 2288, at the age of an hundred and fourscore. Jacob and Esau paid the last duties to him.

About ten years before the death of Isaac, Joseph's misfortune happened, who was sold by his brethren, as we shall relate in the Article JOSEPH. Jacob, believing that he was devoured by wild beasts, was afflicted in a manner suitable to the tenderness which he had for him. In his grief he said, I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning; and he continued to lament him, without receiving comfort from any one. He passed about two and twenty years mourning in this manner, till Joseph discovered himself to his brethren[9], whom Jacob had sent into Egypt during the famine, in order to purchase corn there. Jacob being informed, that his son, whom he had so long lamented, was still living, awaked, as it were, out of a dream, and said, It is enough, Joseph my son is yet alive, I will go and see him before I die. He left therefore the Valley of Mamre, with all his family, and came to Beersheba, where there was an Altar consecrated to the Lord; there he offered his Sacrifices, and God appeared to him in the night, and said, he might go down into Egypt, and that Joseph would close his eyes. He arrived in Egypt with his family, consisting of seventy persons.

Upon his coming, he sent Judah before him, to inform Joseph of his arrival, and desire him withal to come and receive him in the land of Goshen, as had been agreed. Joseph made haste thither, they embraced with tears, and Joseph presented him to Pharaoh. Jacob having wished this Prince all manner of happiness, Pharaoh asked him, what age he was of: He answered, The time of my pilgrimage is an hundred and thirty years; few and evil have my years been in comparison of the age of my fathers. Joseph therefore gave his father and his brethren the land of Goshen, which is one of the best countries in Egypt, and during the famine, supplied them abundantly with every thing necessary for their subsistance.

Jacob lived seventeen years in Egypt, [Gen. xlviii. In the year of the World 2315, before J. C. 1685, before the Vulgar Æra 1689.] from 2298 to 2315. Then falling sick, Joseph came to see him with his two sons Ephraim and Manasseh. When Jacob understood that he was there, he heaped many blessings on him, told him that he adopted Ephraim and Manasseh, and they should be looked upon as Reuben and Simeon; that they should divide the land of Canaan with them, which God had promised him at Bethel: and calling the two sons of Joseph to him near his bed-side, he embraced and blessed them. Then Joseph taking them out of his father's arms, placed them on each side of him, Ephraim at Jacob's left, and Manasseh at his right hand. But Jacob, directed by the spirit of prophecy, laid his right hand upon Ephraim's head, and his left upon Manasseh's, so crossing his hands; and began to bless them. Joseph supposing that he was mistaken, would have had him change the disposition of his hands, put his right upon Manasseh, and his left hand upon Ephraim. Jacob however would not comply, and said to Joseph, I know what I do, my son. The eldest shall be the father of many people, but the youngest shall be greater than he. Thus he gave Ephraim the preference to Manasseh; and the Tribe of the former was accordingly more powerful always than that of the latter; and Ephraim next to Judah was the most considerable Tribe in Israel. Jacob afterwards told Joseph, that God would visit the Hebrews, who were in Egypt, and would bring them back into the land of Canaan, which was promised to their fathers. He added, I leave thee one portion above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand of the Ammorite with my sword, and with my bow.

[In the year of the World 2315, Gen. xlix. before J.C. 1685, before the Vulgar Æra 1689.] Some time after, Jacob called all his sons to give them his last blessing, and foretel what should happen to them in the last times. He spoke to all of them one after another; bestowed commendations on some, and reproaches upon others, and described very distinctly the character of each of the Tribes, and the Country which should fall by lot to them; he particularly commended Judah and

Joseph, and promised to the Tribe of Judah, that the scepter should not depart from it till the Messiah should come, who is the expectation of the nations. After this, he requested of his sons to bury him in the cave, which was in the field of Ephron over against Mamre, where Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, and Rebekah were buried; then he laid himself down again upon his bed, and died. Joseph directed that he should be embalmed after [Genes. l.] the manner of the Egyptians, and there was a general lamentation for him throughout Egypt for seventy days. After which, Joseph and his brethren, accompanied with the principal men of Egypt, carried him, with the King of Egypt's permission, to the burying-place of his fathers, near Hebron, where his wife Leah had been interred. When they were come into the land of Canaan, they mourned again in a grievous manner, for seven days; upon which occasion, the place, where they staid, was called the mourning of Egypt.

The Author of Ecclesiasticus has in few words given us the encomium of Jacob. " [Ecclus. xlvi. 25, 26.] The Lord hath made the blessings and " the covenant, which he made with Abraham and Isaac, to rest upon the head " of Jacob. He acknowledged him in his " blessing, and gave him an heritage, and " divided his portions, among the twelve " Tribes did he part them." Jacob not only foretold the coming of our Saviour by his prophecies, but farther represented him in all his conduct, in his labours, his flight, and his marriage, first, with Leah the figure of the Synagogue; then with his beloved Rachel, the figure of the Church.

The Mahometans maintain that Jacob, the father of the twelve Patriarchs, from whom issued the twelve Tribes, was a Prophet, and that all the Prophets descended from his race, except Job, Jethro, Moses's father-in-law, and Mahomet. They believe farther, that the Royal Power continued in his family till the time of John the Baptist and Jesus Christ; that as the twelve Tribes of the Jews sprung from Jacob, so the Tribes of the Arabians were derived from Ishmael, Abraham's eldest son.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

If any one would know what the Fathers and Interpreters have said concerning this action of Jacob, and whether it were a sin or not, whether it were or were not a lye; for the affirmative, viz. for that opinion which holds it to be both a lye and a sin, he may consult S. Aug. de Doctr. Christian. c. 23. &l. 22. contra Faust. c. 83. Bonfrere, & Est. in Genef. xxvii. And for the negative, viz. that it was no sin, and was one of those lyes which are allowable, see Origen. l. 6. Stro- mat. apud Hieronym. l. 1. Apolog. contra Rufin. Chrysostom. Homil. 52, & 53. in Genef. Cassian collat. 17. c. 17, & seq. & c. 21, & seq. Others are of opinion, that there was no sin in it, it, and that Jacob acted by the inspiration of God; as Biel. in 3. Sent. dist. 38. & Petr. de Alliaco in 1. Sent. q. 12. Lastly, others maintain that this was no lye, and consequently no sin. See S. Gregory, lib. 1. Homil. 6. in Ezech. & in Job. l. 1. c. 3. Isidor. Hispal. Beda, Rupert. D. Thom. 22. qu. 93. art. 3. ad Can. l. 2. de locis, c. 4. Others again think that the sin in this particular committed by him was only venial; as Lyr. Tost. Cajet. Lipom. יהיה מושבך ומטל השמים מעל משמני הארן

משמני הארץ יהיה מושבך ומטל השמים מעל

There is some difficulty in the Hebrew Text concerning this matter, which may be seen in the Commentators.

Hieronym. qu. Hebr. in Genes.

Aug. qu. 93. in Genes. & lib. 18. c. 5. de Civit.

Isidor. l. xii. Origen. c. 1.

Chrysost. Homil. 57. in Genes.

Theodoret. qu. 89. & in Genes. Some are of opinion that it was the Devil who contended with Jacob (Ita quidam apud Procop. in Genes.) Others, that it was the Son, the second Person of the Trinity. Justin. Dialog. Clem. l. 1. Pædag. Tertull. contra Praxeam. Hilar. l. 4. c. 5. de Trinit. Athanas. Orat. 3. contra Arian. Chrysost. in c. vii. Act. Apost. Theodoret. qu. 92. in Genes. Others have thought with the Prophet Hosea xii. 3. that it was an Angel: and this is the opinion which is become the most common since St. Austin. lib. 16. de Civit. c. 39. & qu. 104. in Genes. Some believe that he continued lame all the rest of his life. Others will have it that he was cured very soon after; and whereas we read in the Vulgate, that he came to Salem, they translate, he arrived safe and found on the other side of Jordan.

Joseph was sold in 2276. The first year of the famine was in 2296. Jacob sent his sons into Egypt in 2297. Joseph declared himself to his brethren, and sent for Jacob into Egypt in 2298.

Jacob's Well

JACOB'S WELL, or Fountain. This is the Well near Schechem, at which our Saviour conversed with the woman of [John iv. 16.] Samaria. Jacob dwelt near this place, before his sons slew the inhabitants of Schechem. The old travellers speak of a Church dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and built in the form of a cross upon Jacob's Well or Fountain[1]. The Well was in the Church, and before the rails of the Altar. It was said that the bucket was still to be seen there, which the woman of Samaria made use of, and the sick came thither to drink out of it, and recover their health.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hieronym. in Epitaph. Paulæ. Antonius Martyr. Itiner. Item Itiner. Adamnani & Villibaldi, apud Reland. Palæst. t.2. p.1008, 1009.

Jacob's Ford

JACOB'S FORD. Some affirm Jacob's Ford to be above the mouth of the river Jordan, in the Sea of Tiberias, and below Cæsarea Philippi, at the place where at present there is a bridge. But there is no probability, that Jacob passed the Jordan in this place. It is much more likely that he passed it at Bethsan, or somewhere near it; since it is certain that at his return from Mesopotamia, he crossed the Jabbok at Mahanaim, and from thence went to Peniel, and Succoth, which are near Beth-san, and at a great distance from this supposed Ford of Jacob. Now it appears, that he passed the Jordan in the way to Haran, at the same place where he crossed it at his return; since he says, With my staff I passed over this Jordan, and now am I become two bands.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jacob

JACOB, the father of Matthan[1], and [Matth. i. 15.] grand-father of Joseph. We know nothing particularly of his life.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. See the Text, where it's plainly said, that Jacob was the son of Matthan and father of Joseph. See Matth. i. 15,16.

Jada

JADA, the son of Onam, and father of Jether and Jonathan. 1 Chr. ii. 28,32.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jadason

JADASON. There is mention made of it in Judith i. 6. where it is said, that Nebuchadnezzar overcame Arphaxad by the Tigris and Euphrates, and the Jadason or Hydaspe, as the Greek text has it. In the Syriac it is said the Eulæus, which is by much the more probable; for the river Hydaspe was in the Indies, and the Eulæus near the city of Susa in Persia.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jadau

JADAU, the son of Nebo, was one of those who in the time of Nehemiah separated from the wives, which they had married contrary to the Law in that case provided. Ezra x. 43.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jaddua

JADDUA, or Jaddus, High-Priest of the Jews in the time of Alexander the [Joseph. Antiq. l. ii. c. 8.] Great[1]. Josephus relates, that Alexander being imployed in the siege of Tyre, sent to demand succours and provisions of the High-Priest Jaddus, and required him to acknowledge him, and pay the same obedience to him, as he had paid before to the Persians. Jaddus excused himself on the score of the fidelity, which he owed to Darius, whom he had always owned as his Sovereign. Alexander was incensed at his answer, but dissembled his resentment, in order to take his revenge after the reduction of Tyre. Then he marched against Jerusalem, and the High-Priest perceiving that he was not strong enough to resist him, had recourse to God by Sacrifices, Fastings, and publick Prayers, which he appointed to be observed by all the people. The Lord appeared to him in the night, and encouraged him, telling him that he had nothing to do but to open the city-gates to Alexander, to go and meet him with all the ornaments of his Dignity, to direct the Priests and People to appear in white habits, and covered as usual upon some festival, whereby he would soften the King's heart, and incline him to be favourable to the Jews.

Jaddus the next day gave an account to the people of the vision which he had seen, and disposed them to receive Alexander. When this Prince was come pretty near the city, Jaddus at the head of his Priests and People went out of Jerusalem, and presented himself before Alexander. Every one expected that the King would load the High-Priest with reproaches, and make the inhabitants feel the effects of his indignation. But it happened quite otherwise. Alexander threw himself at the High -Priest's feet, as if in his person he had seen some God; and as Parmenio asked him the reason of such an extraordinary behaviour, he answered, that while he was deliberating whether he should undertake his expedition into Asia, God had appeared to him in the form of this High-Priest, and exhorted him to fear nothing, but boldly to pursue his enterprize, telling him that he would give him all manner of assistance: that the honour which he seemed to shew the High-Priest, he paid to God himself, whose image he was. After this, he made his entry into the city, offered Sacrifices to God in his Temple, granted the Jews both in Palestine, and beyond the Euphrates, the privilege of governing themselves according to their own Laws, and an exemption from tribute every seventh year, wherein the Jews did not cultivate their lands, and had no harvest. See the Article of ALEXANDER the Great. There are some Criticks, who [Rab. Azarias in Meor enaim. 3 par. & alii quidam.] believe, that what Josephus relates of Alexander and Jaddus, is mere fable.

Jaddus was succeeded by Onias I. his son. He had a brother, whose name was Manasseh, who having married Nicaulis, the daughter of Sanballat the Cuthæan or Samaritan, was obliged to retire to his father-in-law, and obtained permission of Alexander to build a Temple, on Mount Gerizim, whereof he was the first [See Joseph. Antiq. l. ii. c. 8. p. 383. Antiq. l. 8. c. 3. p. 277.] High-Priest.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jaddus was High-Priest from 3665 to 3682, during the space of seventeen years, according to Eusebius.

Jadiael

JADIAEL, the son of Benjamin. 1 Chron. vii. 6.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jadon

JADON. Josephus calls the Prophet by this name, who was sent to Jeroboam at Bethel, when he dedicated his golden calves. The Scripture does not name this Prophet, but the generality of Interpreters believe with Josephus, that this was the Prophet Iddo. See IDDO and JEROBOAM.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jadur

JADUR, otherwise Jagur, a City of Judah, Josh. xv. 21. the situation whereof we are not acquainted with. All that we know is, that it lay to the south of Judah.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jafa

JAFA, or Jaffa. Thus the modern Interpreters call Joppa, a maritime City in Palestine. See JOPPA.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jagur

JAGUR, the name of a City. See JADUR.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jah

JAH. This is one of the names of God which we meet with, in compound with many Hebrew words; for example, Adonijah, Halleluiah, Malachiah; that is to say, God is my Lord, praise the Lord, the Lord is my King.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jahath (I)

I. JAHATH, of Gershom's family, the son of Libnah, and father of Zimmah the Levite. 1 Chron. vi. 20.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jahath (II)

II. JAHATH, a Levite of Merari's family; surveyor of the workmen imployed by Josiah in repairing the Temple. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 12.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jahaz

JAHAZ, a City beyond Jordan, near [Numb. xxi. 23. Deut. ii. 32.] which King Sihon was defeated by Moses. It was given to the Tribe of Reuben. It is the same probably as Jahzah, situated to [Josh. xiii. 18.] the north, and pretty near Ar, Capital of the Moabites. It was given up to the Levites. 1 Chron. vi. 78.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jahazah

JAHAZAH, a City in the Tribe of Reuben, which was given up to the Levites of Merari's family. In the Hebrew of [Josh. xxi. 36. 1 Chron. vi. 78.] Joshua and the Chronicles it is Kedemoth[1]. We do not find Jahazah in any enumeration of the Cities of Reuben.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. The Author seems here to be mistaken: for in the Hebrew of Chronicles vi. 63. (not as in the citation 78.) it is said, ואת־יהצה ממטה ראובן את בצר And in the verse following קרמות is mentioned as another city distinct from that of Ja- hazah. So likewise in the Septuagint after Ἰαζὴρ, as it is called in Joshua, and Ἰασὰ in the Chronicles, we find Καδμώθ. In the Hebrew Text of Joshua, the Author's citation is not at all inserted.

Jahazeel

JAHAZEEL, one of those brave men who deserted Saul's party to join David. 1 Chron. xii. 4.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jahaziah

[Jud. iv. 17.] JAHAZIAH, the son, or inhabitant of Tikvah; for the word Son is often taken for inhabitant: for example, the sons of Sion and daughters of Jerusalem, &c. Jahaziah was one of the Commissioners appointed to enquire after the Jews who had married strange women, which examination was made after their return from the Captivity. Ezra x. 15.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jahel

[Gen. xlvi. 14.] JAHEL, or Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite, killed Sisera, General of the Canaanitish army, who having fled for safety to her tent, and being there asleep, Jahel took the opportunity, and pierced his temples with a large nail, which she drove into them with an hammer. This fell out in the year of the World 2719, before Jesus Christ 1281, before the Vulgar Æra 1285.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jahleel

JAHLEEL, or Jalel, the third son of Zebulun, Head of the Family of the Jahleelites. Numb. xxvi. 26.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jahmai

JAHMAI, the son of Tola, and grandson of Issachar. 1 Chron. vii. 2.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jahzeel

JAHZEEL, of the Tribe of Naphtali, Head of the Family of the Jahzeelites. Numb. xxvi. 48.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jahzerah

JAHZERAH, the son of Meshullam, and father of Adiel. 1 Chron. ix. 12.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jair (I)

I. JAIR, of the Family of Manasseh, possessed a large Canton beyond Jordan; the whole country of Argob as far as the [Judg. x. 3.] borders of Geshur and Maachathi. He succeeded Tola in the Judicature or Government of the Israelites, and was himself succeeded by Jephthah. His Government continued two and twenty years; from 2795 to 2817. Jair had thirty sons, who rode on Asses[1], and were Lords or Governours of thirty towns, called Havoth- Jair. He was buried at Carnon beyond Jordan.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

This expression shews, that they were powerful. See Judg. v. 10. xiii. 14.

Jair (II)

II. JAIR, the son of Shimei, and father of the celebrated Mordecai. Esth. ii. 5.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jair (III)

III. JAIR, Havoth-jair. See above HAVOTH. These were Villages possessed by Jair.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jair (IV)

[Matth. ix. 18. Mark v. 22. Luke viii. 43.] IV. JAIR, or Jairus, Chief of the Synagogue at Capernaum. His daughter falling dangerously sick, he besought Jesus Christ with great importunity and passion, to come and lay his hands upon her and heal her. Jesus followed him; and as he was upon the way, Jairus was told, that his daughter was dead, and it was to no purpose for Jesus to give himself the trouble of going farther. But Jesus encouraged them, and said to Jair, fear not; believe only. When they were come to the house, they found the mourners and the musicians prepared to attend the young woman to the grave. Jesus enjoined them to be silent, and said, the child was not dead. He went into the chamber with her father and mother, and three of his principal Disciples; and taking the dead person by the hand, he commanded her to rise, as if he had awaken'd her only out of sleep. She accordingly rose, and began to walk. Now she was about twelve years of age, and Jesus ordered, that they should give her something to eat.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jakim

JAKIM, Chief of the twelfth Family of the four and twenty Classes of Priests. 1 Chron. xxiv. 12.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jambres

JAMBRES, one of the two Magicians who opposed Moses in Egypt, and by their juggling tricks imitated the true miracles of this Legislator. 2 Tim. iii. 8. See JANNES and JAMBRES.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jambri

JAMBRI, was a man of power in the City of Medaba, beyond Jordan. His sons one day attacked John, the brother of the Maccabees, Simon and Jonathan, as he was going to the Nadabatheans loaded with a good booty, killed him and took away [1 Macc. ix. 36,37.] what he had. To revenge the blood of their brother, and indemnify themselves for the loss they had sustained from Jambri's family, Jonathan and Simon having intelligence of some remarkable marriage, and that Jambri's sons were to conduct the bride to Medaba, they lay in ambuscade, fell fell upon the company, who thought of nothing but their diversion, took part of them, and carried off all their spoil. This happened about the year of the World 3843, before Jesus Christ 157, before the Vulgar Æra 161. See hereafter the Article IX. JONATHAN.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

James (I)

I. JAMES, surnamed major, or the Elder, to distinguish him from James minor, or the younger, was brother to St. John the [Matth. iv. 21.] Evangelist, and son to Zebedee and Salome. He was of Bethsaida in Galilee, and left every thing to follow Jesus Christ. His mother Salome, who was one of those women that attended our Saviour in his journeys, desired of him one day, that her two sons James and John might be seated at his right hand, when he should be in possession of his kingdom. But the Son of God replied, that it was only in the power of his Heavenly Father to dispose of these places of honour. St. James and his [Matth. xx. 21.] brother St. John, before their vocation, carried on the trade of fishermen with Zebedee their father; nor did they absolutely quit their profession till our Saviour called them, as they were in their boat busied in refitting their nets. They were witnesses of our Lord's transfiguration; and when certain Samaritans refused to admit [Mark i. 18, 19. Matth. xvii. 2. Luke ix. 54.] Jesus Christ into their town, James and John importuned him to cause fire to descend from heaven in order to consume them. For this reason it is thought the name of Boanerges, or son of thunder was given them. But our Saviour checked their zeal, telling them that they knew not what spirit did or ought to animate them.

Some days after the Resurrection of our Saviour, James and John went a fishing in the Sea of Tiberias. They were present at the Ascension of our Lord, and St. James [Sophron. de Viris illustr. c. 5. p. 264.] is said to have preached to all the twelve Tribes of Israel dispersed throughout the World. But for this there is no other certainty than bare hearsay. His martyrdom is related in the Acts of the Apostles, and [Acts xii. 1, 2, &c.] happened in the 42 or 44 year of Jesus Christ; for the date of this particular is not well agreed upon. Herod Agrippa King of the Jews, and grandson to Herod the Great, had him seized, and executed at Jerusalem; and as he observed his death to be agreeable to the Jews, he proceeded to lay hold also on St. Peter. Clemens [Clem. Alex. apud Euseb. l. 2. c. 9.] Alexandrinus informs us, that he who brought St. James before the Judges, was so affected with his constancy in confessing Jesus Christ, that he too declared himself to be a Christian, and was condemned as well as the other to be beheaded. As they went together to the place of execution, this man asked forgiveness of St. James; who deliberated a little with himself, whether he should treat one as a brother, who as yet had not received the Sacrament of Jesus Christ. But after a short pause, he embraced him, and said, Peace be with you: after which both their heads were struck off.

The Greeks observe his Festival upon the 30th of April, and the Latins on the 25th of July. St. Epiphanius[1] says, that St. James as well as John, both continued always single: that they never had their hair cut, never bathed, wore only a single Tunick, and a linnen Cloak, and never eat either fish or flesh. The Spaniards pretend that this Saint is the first Apostle of their Country, and that his body was brought thither soon after his death: particulars, for which they produce not any good proofs. It is certain that his Relicks have been in great repute, and very much reverenced in this country, every since the ninth century[2].

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Epiphan. Hæres. 58. c. 4. p. 491,492.
See the Martyrologies of Ado, Usuard, and Notker.

James Minor (II)

II. JAMES Minor surnamed the brother of our Lord[1], and Bishop of Jerusalem, was the son of Cleopas, otherwise called Alphæus, and Mary sister to the blessed Virgin; consequently cousin-german to Jesus Christ according to the flesh. He was surnamed the Just, for the admirable holiness and purity of his life[2]. He is said to have been a Priest, and to have observed the laws of the Nazarites from his mother's womb, eating and drinking nothing that was capable of intoxicating[3]; he never cut his hair, never eat any thing that had had life, used no bathing, nor oils, wore no sandals or woollen clothes, but only a linnen cloak, and a tunick of the same. The very great respect which his virtue had acquired, was the reason, they say[4], of his having a very extraordinary privilege allowed him, viz. the liberty of entring when he pleased into the Holy Place of the Temple of Jerusalem. St. Jerom assures us[5], that the Jews had such an esteem for St. James, that they strove with emulation to touch the hem of his garment. The Jewish Talmud relates several miracles said to be wrought by James the Disciple of Jesus the Carpenter; among others, it is there affirmed, that he being called to cure a Jew, whose name was[6] Eligazar, and who had been bitten by a serpent, one of the Rabbins maintained that he ought not to suffer himself to be healed in the name of Jesus Christ. While they were deliberating hereupon, Eligazar died, to the great satisfaction of those obstinate Jews, who preferred death to health procured by the name of Jesus Christ.

Our Saviour appeared to James Minor [1 Cor. xv. 7.] eight days after his Resurrection, and communicated the gift of knowledge to him[7]: And when he ascended up to heaven, trusted him with his throne upon earth, and recommended his Spouse to him, the Church of Jerusalem. He was therefore from that time appointed to be Bishop of that Church; but he performed none of the Offices belonging to this Dignity, till the Apostles either by election, or out of esteem and respect for him, had conferred this honour on him. We are assured[8], that he wore a plate of gold upon his forehead, as a mark of his Episcopacy, with the name of God in all probability imprinted on it, in imitation of the Jewish High-Priests. St. James was at Jerusalem, and there considered as one of the principal Pillars of the Church, when St. Paul first came thither after his conversion, [Gal. i. 18.] in the year of Jesus Christ 37. And in the Council of Jerusalem held in the year 51, St. James, as Bishop of the City, gave his vote last; and the result of the Council [Acts xv. 12, 13, &c.] was principally formed from what St. James said, who, notwithstanding he observed the ceremonies of the Law, and took care that others should observe them in his Church, was of opinion, that such a yoke was not to be imposed upon the Faithful, who were Converts from Judaism.

[Euseb. l. 2. c. 23.] The progress which the Gospel made, having alarmed the chief persons among the Jews, Ananus the son of Annas the High-Priest, mentioned in the Gospel, undertook to put St. James to death. To this end he chose the time when Festus being dead, who had been Governour of Judæa, and Albinus his successor not yet arrived, the Province was without a Governour. Ananus therefore and the principal Pharisees, convening him in a publick manner, told him, that the people were led into an error concerning Jesus Christ, whom they took to be the Messiah, and that it was in his power to convince them of this mistake, since every one was ready to believe whatever he should say of it. They made him therefore go up into one of the Galleries of the Temple, that he might be heard by the whole multitude, which was assembled from all parts to keep the Feast of the Passover. When therefore he was placed above, they cried out to him from below, Tell us, thou Just Man, what we should believe concerning Jesus, who was crucified. He answered with a loud voice, Jesus the son of man, whom you speak of, is now seated at the right hand of the supreme Majesty as Son of God, and must one day come, borne upon the clouds of heaven. At these words a great number of persons gave glory to God, crying out, Hosanna. But the Pharisees and Doctors exclaimed, what, is he, whom we call the Just, likewise mistaken! And going up to the place where he was, they threw him down from the top of the Temple. He did not die of his fall, but kneeling on the ground, he prayed for his enemies; who hereupon by Ananus's order began to stone him; at last a Fuller dispatched him, by [Joseph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 8.] giving him a blow upon the head with the stick, which he made use of in the business of his trade[9].

He was buried near the Temple[10], in the place where he had suffered martyrdom; and in the same place a Monument was erected for him, which was much celebrated till Jerusalem was destroyed by the Romans. The wisest of the Jews very much disapproved the murder of St. James, and the passionate behaviour of Ananus, whereof they made great complaints to Agrippa, and Albinus Governour of the Province; the latter [Joseph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 8.] of whom by his letters threatned to punish his temerity, and Agrippa divested him of the High-Priesthood, which he had exercised only three months. Josephus is cited[11] as affirming, that the war which the Romans made against the Jews, and all the calamities which afterwards happened to them, were imputed to the death of this Just Man. The ancient Hereticks have forged some writings, which they ascribed to St. James, the brother of our Lord[12]. But the Church acknowledges his Epistle only as authentick; and this is the first of the seven, called Canonical. It is written to all the convert Jews in all parts of the world. It is our opinion, that he wrote it a little before his death, which happened in the year 62. In this he contends principally against the abuse, which many made of St. Paul's principle, whereby he asserts, that Faith and not the Works of the Law, justifies before God. St. James strongly maintains the necessity of good Works. Although his Epistle is directed to the Jews, who were dispersed, it is thought he wrote it in Greek, because he cites the Scripture in it according to the Version of the Septuagint. Besides, Greek was at that time the common language of almost the whole East.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Gal. i. 19. Joseph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 8. p. 698.

Clem. Alex. & Hegesipp. apud Euseb. Hist. l. 2. c. 1.

Epiphan. Hæres. 78. c. 13,14. Euseb. l. 2. c. 23.

Hegesipp. Epiphan. & Euseb. locis cit.

Hieron. in Galat. i. 19.

Vide Baron. an. 63. §. 8.

Clem. Alex. apud Euseb. l. 2. c. 1. Origen. contra Celf. l. 1. c. 35. Hieronym. in Galat. i. 19.

Euseb. l. 2. c. 1. Epiphan. Hæres. 29. & 78.

Ita Clem. Alex. Euseb. Epiphan. Hieronym.

Euseb. l. 2. c. 23. Hieronym. de Viris illustr. c. 2.

Origen. contra Celsum, l. 1. Euseb. l. 2. c. 23. Hieron. de Viris illustr. ex Josepho, apud quem non leguntur hodie verba ab Origen. & Euseb. laudata.

We have besides the Preparatory Gospel of St. James, which the Eastern people are well acquainted with. (See Fabricius's Library of the Apocryphal books of the New Testament, p. 66.) We have likewise a Liturgy under his name.

Jamin

JAMIN,

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jamin

JAMIN, second son of Simeon, Head of the Family of the Jaminites. Gen. xlvi. 10. and Numb. xxvi. 12.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jamnia (I)

I. JAMNIA, Jemnaa, or Jabneh, Jamne, Jamni, or Jamnes, a maritime town in Palestine, situated between Azotus and Joppa. It has a pretty good Haven. We do not find its name in the Hebrew Text of Joshua, but only in the Greek, Josh. xv. 45. where Jamnai near Ekron is placed among the Cities of Judah. Uzziah King of Judah, the son of Amaziah, took it [2 Chron. xxvi. 6. Antiq. l. 5. c. 1. 2 Macc. xii. 9.] from the Philistins. Josephus says, that it was given upon the division to the Tribe of Dan. We read in Maccabees, that the Port of Jamnia was two hundred and forty furlongs from Jerusalem.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jamnia (II)

II. JAMNIA. Josephus speaks of a Town in Upper Galilee, called Jamnia or Jamnith.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Janai

JANAI, or Jaanai, of the Tribe of Gad, the son of Abihail. 1 Chron. v. 12.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Janna

JANNA, or Janne, the son of Joseph, and father of Melchi. Luke iii. 24.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jannæus

JANNÆUS, or Alexander Jannæus. [Plin. l. 30. c. 1. 1 Tim. iii. 8.] See above III. ALEXANDER.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jannes

JANNES, and Jambres; or, as Pliny calls them, Jamne and Jotape, two Magicians, who, as St. Paul says, resisted Moses while he was in Egypt. King Pharaoh could find these two persons only, who were able to hold out against Moses, and by their enchantments imitate some part of [Jonathan. in Numb. xxiii. 22.] the real miracles performed by him. The Paraphrast Jonathan says, that they were the two sons of Balaam, who accompanied him, when he went to Balak King of Moab.

Artapanus tells us, that Pharaoh sent for Magicians[1] from Upper Egypt above [Ambros. in 2 Tim. iii. 8.] Memphis, to set them in opposition to Moses. Ambrosiaster or Hilary the Deacon, says, that they were two brothers. He [Origen. tract. 95. in Matth.] cites a book intitled Jannes and Mambres[2], which is likewise quoted by Origen, and ranked among the apocryphal books by Pope Gelasius, (Gelas. Dist. 15.) Some of the Hebrews (Vide Buxtorf. Lex. Thalmud. & Fabric. de Apocryph. V. T.) call them Janes and Jambres; others, Jochana and Mamré, or Jonas and Jombros. There are some, who say, their names are the same as John and Ambrose. Some will have it, that they flew away with their fathers; others, that they were drowned in the Red Sea with the Egyptians; others again, that they were killed by Phinehas in the war he made [Ap. Euseb. præp. l. 9. p. 241. Pallad. Hist. Lausiac. c. 15. n. 722, 723. Bibl. Orient. p. 648, 649. Monosab.] against the Midianites. Palladius, Author of the Historia Lausiaca, relates, that Macarius the Egyptian went purposely into a desart at the distance of some days journey from his dwelling, to see the tombs of these two famous Magicians, which he found in an old garden planted with trees, where there was an house with a great deal of rich furniture. Devils defended the entrance of it, and threatned Macarius: but he dispersed them; and having visited the house and garden, retired.

Numenius, cited by Aristobulus, says, that Jannes and Jambres were sacred Scribes of the Egyptians, who excelled in magick at the time when the Jews were driven out of Egypt. These were the only persons whom the Egyptians found capable of opposing Moses, who was a man whose prayers to God were very powerful. These two men, Jannes and Jambres, were alone able to frustrate the calamities which Moses brought upon the Egyptians. Pliny speaks likewise of the Faction or Sect of Magicians, whereof he says Moses, Jannes and Jocabel, or Jotapa, were Heads. By this last word he meant probably the Patriarch Joseph, whom the Egyptians looked upon as one of their most celebrated Sages. The Mussulmen add several particulars borrowed from apocryphal Books, or the tradition of the Eastern people, to the real history of Moses. They say, for example, that Moses having wrought his first miracles before Pharaoh, this Prince deliberated with his Council what he had to do in such a juncture; and that the result of the debate was, that he should amuse Moses with fair promises, and in the mean time send orders for the most expert Magicians in Egypt, the number of whom at that time was very great in Thebaïs, and set them in opposition to this man, who seemed more dextrous than any of those who had hitherto appeared.

Hereupon Couriers were immediately dispatched to the most celebrated Magicians of Thebaïs, commanding them to come forthwith to Pharaoh's Court. Sabour and Gadour, two brothers, who passed for the most experienced, and were the principal of the Country, prepared themselves to pay obedience to the King's Orders; but they went first by the advice of their mother, to their father's tomb, in order to consult his ghost concerning the success of their journey. They called him by his name, and conjured him up: upon his answering them, they told him, that there were two brobrothers come into Egypt, for Moses and Aaron were inseparable, who without arms or soldiers, had created very great disorders in the King's Affairs; that this Prince had sent for them to resist them, and oppose them with juggling tricks more powerful than theirs; that they were informed these two strangers had a Rod which would turn into a Dragon, and devour every thing that appeared before it.

Their father answered; As soon as you come to Pharaoh's Court, learn whether the Rod you tell me of is transformed into a Dragon, while these two Magicians are sleeping. For no Inchantments by any Magician have their effect while he is in this condition; and be assured, that if it happens otherwise to these, no creature is capable of resisting them.

The two brothers therefore departing from Thebaïs, arrived at Memphis where the King kept his Court, and understood with great surprize, that while Moses and Aaron were at rest, their Rod immediately assumed the figure of a Serpent, which guarded them with vigilance and suffered no one whatsoever to approach their persons.

The two Magicians very much astonished at this prodigy, did notwithstanding present themselves before the King with all the other Magicians of the country, who came thither from all parts, and according to the account some give of them, amounted to the number of seventy thousand; for besides the two brothers Sabour and Gadour, who resorted thither with all their Disciples, there were two others whose names were Giaath and Mospha, whose train was not inferior to theirs. Lastly, the great Simeon, High-Priest of Egypt, and chief of all those who particularly professed Magick, appeared there likewise at the Head of a very numerous company of his profession.

All these people had provided Rods and Cords, to counterfeit the Miracle wrought by Moses; and as soon as this Prophet had thrown his miraculous Wand upon the ground, and it became a serpent, they too threw down their Rods and Cords, the inside whereof they had filled with quicksilver: these no sooner felt the heat of the sun, than they began to move, and to turn and wind of themselves several ways. The generality of the spectators, who beheld this at a distance, believed at first sight of their moving, that they were real serpents. But they were soon undeceived when they saw, that Moses's serpent had torn in pieces and devoured all those which had been thus counterfeited.

This spectacle frightned the by-standers, who thereupon betook themselves immediately to flight. The two brothers Sabour and Gadour, glorified God, and were converted; they sincerely renounced their vain profession, and generously died for the true Religion; Pharaoh having ordered their hands and feet to be cut off, and their bodies to be fastned to gibbets, imagining that they had been corrupted by the Israelites to favour Moses and Aaron.

This whole recital supposes, that the Magicians wrought no true miracle, but only play'd hocus-pocus tricks, endeavouring thereby to impose upon the eyes and understanding of the spectators. Moses however expresses himself throughout in such a manner as might persuade us, that Pharaoh's Magicians really operated the same effects as he himself produced; so that Pharaoh and his whole Court were persuaded, that the power of their Magicians was equal to that of Moses, till the Egyptians not being able to produce lice, as Moses had done, were constrained to own, that the finger of God was concerned in it. [Exod. viii. 18, 19.] Till then they had acknowledged nothing divine or supernatural in any thing he did. And it is agreed, that magick, and juggling tricks, evil Angels and Sorcerers, may sometimes imitate very nearly true miracles, and the operations of the Almighty. We confess that God may sometimes permit the Devil and wicked men to work true miracles; but he will never permit the Elect and those who with sincerity and reality seek after truth, to be led into error to the end. The falshood, error, malice and disorder which the Devil endeavours to establish, will sooner or later be discovered. See hereafter the Article MIRACLE.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. They are called by several names, in several translations; by the Septuagint, Φάρμακοι, poisoners, and Ἐπαοιδοί, Inchanters; by Sulpitius Severus, Chaldæans, that is, Astrologers; by others, Sapientes and Malefici, Wisemen, (that is, they were esteemed so among the Egyptians) Philosophers and Witches.

Translators' note. St. Jerom translates their names Johannes and Mambres; and there is a tradition, they say, in the Talmud, that Juhanni and Mamre, chief of Pharaoh's Physicians, said to Moses, Thou bringest straw into Ephraim, where abundance of Corn grew; as if they should have said, To bring your magical Arts hither, is to as much purpose, as to bring water to the Nile.

Janneus

JANNEUS, or Alexander Jannæus. See III. ALEXANDER above.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Janohah

JANOHAH, a City in the Tribe of Ephraim, upon the frontiers of the Half-tribe of Manasseh. Josh. xvi. 6. Eusebius places a town called Jano at twelve miles distance from Schechem or Naplouse in the Acrabatene; and another of the name of Janua, at three miles distance from Legio towards the south.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ianthinus

IANTHINUS. St. Jerom uses this term often in Exodus, to signify a violet colour. It is derived from the Greek ios, a violet, and anthos, a flower. The Septuagint translate the Hebrew, techashim, a purple colour, which is much the same as a violet. Bochart thinks it to be the same colour as that which the Latins call hysginus, which is a deep blue, or purple inclining [Plin. l. 8. c. 48.] to black. Pliny; Cocco-tinctum Tyrio tingere, ut fiat hysginum. The Jews generally believe, that the skins of the techashim, [Exod. xxv. 7. Hebr. ערה תחשים Ezek. xvi. 10.] mentioned by Moses, are the skins of animals; but they are not agreed concerning the kind of these supposed animals. Ezekiel tells Jerusalem, that God had treated her as a beloved Spouse, that he had given her shoes of tachash, of violet or purple colour. Calceavi te Ianthino.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Janum

JANUM, a City of Judah. Josh. xv. 53.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jao

JAO, or Jave, or Jabe. These are diminutives or abridgements of Jehovah, the incommunicable name of God, the name with four letters, which the Hebrews out of respect, or rather superstition, do not venture to pronounce. See JEHOVAH. The Samaritans pronounce Javi or Jabi[1] after the manner of the Greeks, who pronounce B like a V consonant.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ἰαυέ vel Ἰαυέ vel Ἰαβέ, vel Ἰάω. Hebr. יהוהVide Epiphan. Hæres. 40. Theodoret. qu. 15. in Exod.

Japha

JAPHA, a City of Galilee, near Jotapata, [Joseph. lib. de vita sua, p. 1016. & de Bello Jud. l. 3. c. 11. p. 848. Josh. xix. 12.] according to Josephus. He fortified it with a double enclosure of walls; but this did not prevent the Romans from making themselves masters of it, and carrying fire and sword into every part of it, after they had taken it by assault. It is probably the same City, which in Joshua is called Japhia, and made part of the Tribe of Zebulun.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Japha

JAPHA, or rather Jaffa. This is the name which the moderns give Joppa.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Japheth

JAPHETH, the son of Noah. He is commonly named the third in order of Noah's sons. Japheth was born in the 500 [Gen. v. 31.] year of Noah. Moses says expressly, that he was the eldest of Noah's sons[1], according to the translation of the Septuagint and Symmachus. The same Moses says, that Ham was the youngest of the three. Gen. ix. 24. When Noah knew what his younger son had done unto him. Lastly, Moses says, that [Gen. xi. 10.] Shem two years after the Deluge, was but an hundred years old. He was not born therefore till the 502 year of Noah: so that Japheth was the eldest of the three.

Europe and a part of Asia was Japheth's portion. His descendants possessed all Europe and the Isles in the Mediterranean, as well those which belong to Europe, as others which depend on Asia. They had all Asia minor, and the northern parts of Asia above the sources of the Tigris and Euphrates. Noah, when he blessed Japheth, [Gen. ix. 27.] said to him, God shall enlarge Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant. This blessing of Noah was accomplished, when the Greeks, and after them the Romans, carried their conquests into Asia and Africk, where were the dwelling and dominions of Shem and Canaan.

[Gen. x. 5.] The sons of Japheth were Gomer, Magog, Madai, Javan, Tubal, Meshech, and Tiras. The Scripture says, That they peopled the Isles of the Gentiles, and settled in different countries, each according to his language, family, and people. We are of opinion, that Gomer was the father of the Cimbri, or Cimmerians; Magog of the Scythians; Madai of the Macedonians or Medes; Javan of the Ionians and Greeks; Tubal of the Tibarenians; Meshech of the Muscovites or Russians; and Tiras of the Thracians. But we shall speak in particular of these descendants of Japheth under their proper titles. By the Isles of the Gentiles, the Hebrews understand the Isles of the Mediterranean, and all the countries separated by the Sea from the continent of Palestine; whither also the Hebrews could go by Sea only, as Spain, Gaul, Italy, Greece, Asia minor.

[Hesiod. Theogonia.] Japheth was known by profane Authors under the name of Iapetus. The Poets make him to be the father of Heaven and Earth, or of Titan and the Earth. His habitation was in Thessaly, where he became celebrated for his power, and violence. He married a Nymph, whose name was Asia; by her he had four sons, Hesperus, Atlas, Epimetheus and Prometheus, who are all very famous in the fabulous history of the Ancients. The Greeks believe, that Japheth was the father of their race, and acknowledged nothing more ancient than him; from whence comes the proverb, As old as Japheth; or, that Japheth alone is understood to signify one who is extremely aged. It is very probable likewise, that Neptune was confounded with Japheth. There is some resemblance in their name. Neptune is the God of the Sea, as Japheth is Lord of the Isles of the Gentiles. Saturn divided the whole World between his three sons, Jupiter, Pluto, and Neptune; thus Noah distributed the whole Earth between Shem, Ham, and Japheth. Jupiter is the same as Ham or Ammon; Pluto is concealed under the name of Shem; and Japheth under that of Neptune. See Bochart, M. Huet, F. Morin, &c.

Besides the seven sons of Japheth above mentioned, the Septuagint, Eusebius, the Alexandrian Chronicle, and St. Austin give him an eighth, called Eliza, who is not named either in the Hebrew or the Chaldee. The Arabians likewise affirm Japheth to have had a son, of whom there is no mention in this place; viz. Cozar, who fled, as they say, to the banks of the Wolga, where he built a city, and gave it his own name. There are some Authors who maintain, that the Israelites of the ten Tribes carried into captivity by the Kings of Assyria, went into the land of Cozar, and advanced as far as Tartary and China. But the Hebrews assert, that Cozar was only the grandson of Japheth by Togarma. This account is in Josephus the son of Gorion, but it is no where to be seen in the Hebrew Text.

Arnobius the younger, on the hundred and fourth Psalm, says, that Japheth possessed the river Tigris, and two hundred Countries or Provinces, which spake three and twenty languages; so that these three and twenty languages, joined with the other languages of the sons of Ham and Shem, make in all seventy two; and that all the countries peopled by the three sons of Noah, are in number a thousand.

[Bibl. Orient. p. 470. See Numb. ix. 10, 11. 2 Macc. xiii. 51.] The Mussulmen place Japheth among the Prophets sent by God: they believe him to be Noah's eldest son, and that his father after the Deluge gave him for his allotment the Provinces which lie to the east and north of the Mountains of Armenia, upon which the Ark rested.

Before Japheth departed, to go into the country which was given him for his inheritance, Noah made a present to him of a stone, which the Eastern Turks call *Giud*è- Tasch and Senk-Jede, upon which he wrote the great name of God; by virtue whereof, he who possessed this stone might bring down rain from heaven at discretion. This pretended stone has been long preserved among the people of the Mogul's country.

The Eastern people affirm Japheth to have had eleven male children; namely, 1. Gin, or Sin, or Tchin, the father of the Chinese. 2. Seklab, the father of the Sclavonians, or ancient Chalybes. 3. Manschuge, from whom are derived the Goths and Scythians, otherwise called Gog and Magog or Jagiouge and Magiouge. 4. Gomari or Gomer, mentioned by Moses, whom we believe to be the father of the Cimbri and Germans. 5. Turk, the founder of the people known under the general name of Turks. 6. Khalage, a race of those people called Turks. 7. Kho-zar, from whom the Kozarians are descended. See above CHOZAR or COZAR. 8. Ros or Rous, father of the Russians or Muscovites. 9. Soustan. 10. Gaz. 11. Tarage, from whom came the Turcomans. Japheth married his eleven sons to their own sisters, that so the country which they were to have in possession, might be the sooner peopled. In effect, the northern Provinces are supposed to have been first peopled.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Gen. x. 21. ϛονοζίεμ ὢτ τεφάϊ ὢφλεδἈלגדול יפת אחי. Sym. τῷ πρεσβύτου.

Japheth

[Judith ii. 25.] JAPHETH. Judith speaks of a Province called Japheth. From Cilicia to the borders of Japheth, which were toward the south. We know of no Province to the south of Cilicia, which was peopled by Japheth. Wherefore some would read Jephlath, or Jephlati instead of Japheth. Others read Japha or Jaffa, which is the same as Joppa. But we must confess that we know not what this Japheth is, which is said to lie towards the south of Cilicia.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Japhia

JAPHIA, a City of Zebulun. See JAPHA, and Josh. xix. 12.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Japhia (I)

I. JAPHIA, King of Lachish, killed by Joshua. Josh. x. 3.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Japhia (II)

II. JAPHIA, one of David's sons. 2 Sam. v. 16.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Japhlet

JAPHLET, the son of Heber, descended from Achor. 1 Chron. vii. 32.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Japhleti

JAPHLETI, a Town on the frontiers of Benjamin and Ephraim. Joshua xvi. 3.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jar

JAR, or Jiar, an Hebrew month, which answers to our April. It was the eighth of the civil, and second of the sacred Year. It consisted but of nine and twenty days. Upon the tenth day of this month the Jews mourn the death of Eli the High-Prieft, and of his two sons Hophni and Phinehas. They who could not observe the Passover in the month Nisan, keep it in the month Jar. On the fifteenth of this month, God sent a prodigious quantity of quails to the Hebrews in the wilderness; and on the sixteenth the Manna began to fall. On the eighteenth day began their wheat-harvest, three and thirty days after the Passover. On the twenty-third, they celebrate a Festival in memory of the purification of the Temple, by Judas Maccabæus, after he had driven the Syrians out of it. On the twenty-ninth they commemorate the death of the Prophet Samuel.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jara

JARA, or Jarvah, the son of Gilead. 1 Chron. v. 14.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jarah

JARAH, the son of Ahaz, of Saul's Family. 1 Chron. ix. 42.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jaramoth

[Josh. xxi. 20.] JARAMOTH, a City in the Tribe of Issachar, which was given to the Levites the sons of Gershom, and appointed to be a City of refuge. It is the same probably as Rameth or Ramoth. Joshua xix. 20.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jaramoth

JARAMOTH, Jarmuth or Jerimoth, a City of Judah. Joshua killed the King of Jerimoth. Josh. x. 5. St. Jerom places Jarmuth at four miles distance from Eleutheropolis, near Esthaol; and speaking of Jarmus, he says, that Jarmutha, the same probably as Jarmuth and Jerimoth, is ten miles from Eleutheropolis in the way to Jerusalem. There must be a mistake in one or other of these passages.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jarden

JARDEN. This is the Hebrew name of the river Jordan.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jared

JARED, the son of Mehalaleel, and father of Enoch. He begat Enoch at the age of an hundred and sixty two years, and died in his nine hundred and sixty second year. Gen. v. 18, 19.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jarhah

JARHAH, an Egyptian, Sheshan's slave. His master gave him his daughter Ahlai in marriage, by whom he had Attai. 1 Chron. ii. 34, 35.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jarib

JARIB, the son of Simeon. 1 Chron. iv. 24.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jarmuth

JARMUTH. See JARAMOTH.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jashen

JASHEN, 2 Sam. xxiii. 32. or Hashem the Gizonite, as he is called 1 Chron. xi. 33. was the father of some valiant Men, who distinguished themselves in the reign of David.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jashobeam (I)

I. JASHOBEAM, the son of Zabdiel, commanded a body of Troops consisting of four and twenty thousand men, who did duty in King David's Court in the month Nisan, which answers to our March. Some believe him to be the same as Jeshobeam the son of Hachmoni, who is spoken of above. Hachmoni signifies the Wise; Zabdiel it may be was his true name, and Hachmoni a sort of surname.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jashobeam (II)

II. JASHOBEAM, the son of Hachmoni, Captain over thirty men, or an Officer in David's Army. He lift up his Spear against three hundred men, whom he killed in one rencounter. He was one of the three Heroes, who passed through the Enemies Camp, and went to procure water for David out of the Cistern of Bethlehem. 1 Chron. xi. 16, 17.

The Hebrew Text of the second book of Samuel, which speaks of Jashobeam, runs literally thus:[1] He who sate in the throne of Wisdom, the head of the three, Adino of Ezni, who lifted up his spear against eight hundred men, whom he slew. But the Text of Chronicles, which is parallel to this, imports b Jashobeam an

as follows: Hachmonite, chief of the thirty, he lift up his spear against three hundred, whom he slew at one time. The difference between the two Texts might persuade one, that these two persons are intirely different; but how are these matters to be reconciled? Jashobeam is the son of Hachmoni, he kills three hundred men; he is chief of the thirty. Adino, on the contrary, is head of the three, and kills eight hundred men. Notwithstanding, when we examine the thing nearly, it appears, that all the difference proceeds only from some letters which are read differently in the Texts of these two passages. I would therefore mend the Text in the second book of Samuel thus: c Jashobeam the son of Hachmoni, head of the thirty, he lifted up the wood of his spear against three hundred men whom he slew. The Septuagint read, Jeshbaal son of Techemani, was head of the three. This is Adino the Eznite, who drew his sword against eight hundred. In the Roman Edition, Jebosthe the Canaanite, head of the three, &c. We cannot see from whence they took Adino the Eznite, which is intirely superfluous in this place.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

2 Sam. xxiii. 18. instead of and instead of

Jashobeam (III)

III. JASHOBEAM, the Korhite, or of the Race of Korah, was one of those brave men who came and joined

 David, during Saul's persecution. 1 Chron. xii. 6.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jashub (I)

I. JASHUB, of the Tribe of Issachar, Chief of the Family of the Jashubites. Numb. xxvi. 24.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jashub (II)

II. JASHUB, or Shear-Jashub, the son of Isaiah. See Isai. vii. 3. Shear-Jashub signifies the remainder shall return. And the Prophet by giving his son this name, intended to shew, that the Jews, who should be carried away Captives to Babylon, should one day return.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jashubi-Lehem

JASHUBI-LEHEM. This word is put for Bethlehem. 1 Chron. iv. 22.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jason (I)

I. JASON, the son of Eleazar, was sent to Rome by Judas Maccabæus, to renew the alliance with the Romans, in the year [1 Macc. viii. 17.] of the World 3842, before Jesus Christ 158, before the Vulgar Æra 162.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jason (II)

II. JASON, a Jew, a native of Cyrene, who wrote in five Books the History of the Persecutions, which the Jews suffered under Antiochus Epiphanes and Eupator. These five Books were abridged by a Jew, whose name we are not acquainted with. His work has been conveyed down to us, and is the second book of Maccabees; but that of Jason is lost. Both were written in Greek. It is believed, that the Abbreviator of Jason has added something at the end of the second book of Maccabees. We do not know exactly the Age either of Jason, or his Abbreviator.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jason (III)

III. JASON, High-Priest of the Jews, and brother to Onias III. was a man of unbounded ambition, who made no scruple of divesting his brother of the High-Priesthood, in order to take possession of this Dignity himself; and this by sacrilegiously purchasing it with a sum of money of Antiochus Epiphanes, the most impious Prince of his time, and the greatest Enemy to the Jews. The History of Jason is differently related by the Author of the second book of Maccabees and Josephus the Historian. [Joseph. Antiq. l. 12. c. 4. ad finem.] Josephus says, that at the death of Onias

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jason (III)

III. Jason his brother took possession of the High-Priesthood, excluding his nephew Onias IV. the son of Onias III. the lawful Heir of his Dignity. Jason obtained a confirmation of the Priesthood, which he had thus usurped, from Antiochus Epiphanes, by offering him a large sum of money. But Antiochus growing dissatisfied with Jason, dispossessed him, and put his brother Menelaus in his place, who bought the High-Priesthood at a better price. Thus the three brothers, Onias III. Jason and Menelaus successively possessed this great Dignity, while Onias IV. to whom of right it belonged, continued deprived of it. He was obliged to fly into Egypt, where he built the Temple Onion.

The Author of the second book of Maccabees relates this matter differently. [2 Macc. iv. 8, &c.] He says, that Jason, growing uneasy to see the Priesthood too long enjoy'd by his brother Onias III. offered a large sum of money to Antiochus Epiphanes, in order to purchase this Dignity of him: he obtained it, and his brother Onias III. was deprived of it. Jason having afterwards sent one Menelaus to Antiochus, who was of the Tribe of Benjamin, and brother to Simon, Governour of the Temple; this Menelaus prevailed so effectually with Antiochus Epiphanes, by presenting him with a good sum of money, that he procured the High-Priesthood for himself, and Jason was divested of it. The same Author represents Jason to be a man of no Religion, who did all he could to abolish the worship of God in Jerusalem, and prevail with the very Priests themselves to go over to the Religion of the Greeks. He is to be looked upon as the first cause of all the misfortunes which the Jews underwent from Antiochus Epiphanes.

During the whole time of Menelaus's usurpation, Jason kept himself concealed [2 Macc. iv. 26.] in the Country of the Ammonites; but some time after, Epiphanes going into Egypt, and a report spreading that he was dead, Jason, attended with a body of a [2 Macc. v. 5, 6, &c.] thousand men, made haste to Jerusalem, and entred the City, notwithstanding the resistance of the citizens. Hereupon Menelaus fled into the Citadel, and Jason began to treat the inhabitants after the manner which is generally practised in places taken forcibly and by storm. But the rumour of the King's death being soon contradicted, he was obliged to fly a second time into the Country of the Ammonites. At length Aretas King of the Arabians, endeavouring to hem him in, in order to get him into his hands, he fled into Egypt, and not believing himself to be secure there, he went for refuge to Lacedæmon, a City in alliance with the Jews, to whom the Lacedæmonians said they were related. But he died there, and his body remained without burial, there being none in the place who had any compassion for him, and were inclined to pay the last offices to him, which are not refused even to strangers. Jason enjoyed the High-Priesthood no longer than from the year of the World 3830 to 3832, when Menelaus was appointed in his room.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jason (IV)

IV. JASON, mentioned in the Epistle to the Romans, ch. xvi. 21. was St. Paul's Host at Thessalonica. Jason hazarded his life to preserve him in a sedition which [Acts xvii. 7.] was raised against him in that City. It appears by the Epistle to the Romans, that he was related to St. Paul. Jason and Sosipater my kinsmen. The Greeks make him Bishop of Tarsus in Cilicia, and give him the title of Apostle. They honour his memory on the 28th or 29th of April.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jasper

JASPER, in Latin, and in Greek, Jaspis, in Hebrew, Jaspé, is commonly taken in Scripture for a precious Stone; though, according to the usage of other Languages, Jasper is reckon'd rather among marbles. The most beautiful are green, and the most esteemed are full of little red spots, here and there scattered upon the green. They are likewise much in request, which come near the colour of Lacca or Purple. We see some of a carnation colour, red, rose-colour'd, striped, white, and some of several colours: Nature in some has represented trees, flowers and landskips, as if they had been painted. Jasper is not transparent, and comes pretty near the nature of Agate. There is Jasper found in Persia, the Indies, Syria, Cappadocia, and in many other places of the East. There are some found likewise in Armenia, and even in the Pyrenees, and in Bohemia. Several properties are ascribed to it, as that it stops bleeding, helps women in labour, and is of use as a preservative and counter-charm. In Exod. xxviii. 18. where we read Jaspis in the Vulgate, the Hebrew has Saphir[1]. And ver. 20[2], where we read Beryllus in the Vulgate, in the Hebrew it is Jaspé, which in the Septuagint is translated Onyx, in Josephus, Beryl, in Jonathan, Panther, because of the variety of colours in the Jasper. The Septuagint are not uniform in their manner of translating the names of such precious Stones as are in the Hebrew; and we have already observed, that the Hebrews themselves generally do not know the true signification of them. They translate them at random. They who please may consult Lewis de Dieu upon the xxviiith ch. of Exodus, where he has very well examined this matter.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Exod. xxviii. 18. יִרְפָּסSaphir. LXX. Ἴασπις.
Ver 20. Heb. פִּטְדָה.LXX. Βήρυλλος.

Jathniel

JATHNIEL, the son of Meshelemiah, one of the Porters of the Temple. 1 Chron. xxvi. 2.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jattir

JATTIR, a City in the Tribe of Dan. Josh. xv. 48. It was afterwards given up to the Levites of Kohath's Family. Joshua xxi. 14. Eusebius says, that Jattir or Jether, or Jethira, is situated in the Canton called Daroma, towards the City of Malatha, twenty miles from Eleutheropolis. It is probably the same as Ether or Athar.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Javan

JAVAN, the fourth son of Japheth, was the father of the Ionians or Greeks, as well those who were in Greece, as those who were in the Isles and Continent of Asia minor, who were properly called Ionians. But anciently the people of Macedonia, Attica, Bœotia, and Achaia were called likewise Ionians. Homer in his Hymn in honour of Apollo, calls the inhabitants of Delos, Ionians. And the Scholiast on Aristophanes says, that the Barbarians call all the Greeks, Ionians[1]. Javan was the father of Elishah, Tarshish, Kittim, and Dodanim.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Scholiast. Aristoph. in Acarnan. Act. 1. Sc. 8. Ἴωνες γὰρ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι πάντας τὰς Ἕλληνας Ἴωνας οἱ βάρβαροι ἐκάλουν. * ————Crocodilon adorat Pars hæc, illa pavet saturam serpentibus Ibin. Juv. Sat. xv. † Ægyptiorum morem, says Cicero, quis ignorat? quorum imbutæ mentes pravitatis erroribus quamvis carnificinam prius subierint, quàm Ibim, aut felim, aut canem, aut crocodilum violent: quorum etiam si imprudentes quidpiàm fecerint, pœnam nullam recusent. Tusc. Disp. l. v. As also in his first Book de Naturâ Deorum, c. 29. And Herod. l. 11. c. 65. Ὃς δ' ἂν Ἶβιν ἢ ἱέρηκα ἀποκτείνῃ, ἤντε ἑκὼν, ἤντε ἀέκων, τεθνάναι ἀνάγκη.

Jazar

JAZAR, a City beyond Jordan, given to the Tribe of Gad, and afterwards to the [Josh. xxi. 36. xiii. 25.] Levites. It lay at the foot of the Mountains of Gilead, near the brook Jazar, which forms a rivulet or torrent that falls into the Jordan.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jaziz

JAZIZ, the Hagarite, had the principal care of the flocks of Sheep belonging to David. 1 Chron. xxvii. 31.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ibex

IBEX, a wild Goat, which is very swift, and runs up steep rocks. See 1 Sam. xxiv. 2. The Hebrew, Joale, is likewise to be met with in Job xxxix. 1. Psalm ciii. 18. and Prov. v. 12. Bochart, from some Arabian Authors, describes this creature in the following manner: It is a kind of wild Goat, says he, that lives upon steep Rocks; Nature has given it large Horns, which it bends backwards as far as its buttocks, so that it leaps from the highest precipices, and falls upon its back without hurting itself, because its horns receive and break the blow.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ibhar

IBHAR, one of David's sons, born of one of his Concubines. 2 Sam. v. 15.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ibis

[Levit. xi. 17. Ibis. Strabo, l. 17.] IBIS, an unclean Bird, very common in Egypt. Strabo says it is like a Stork, and that some are black, and others white. The Egyptians worship these birds, because they devour the Serpents, which otherwise would over-run the country. The Hebrew word Janeschoph, which is translated Ibis, may come from Nescheph, which signifies darkness; for which reason Junius and Bochart, instead of the Ibis, understand by it an Owl. The Syriac renders it Swan, and the Arabic, Nisus, which is a Sea-Eagle.

It is agreed, that the Ibis is of the species of Storks. The white Ibis is a real Stork; the black, which is properly the Ibis, is a bird peculiar to Egypt; it never goes out of it, and some say that it cannot even live out of it. At a distance it seems to be all black, but if you look near it, it is of the colour of a Lapwing or a Wood-raven, the feathers whereof seem to be mixed with green, and a colour bordering upon blue, blended something with purple. The belly of it and sides under the wings are white, its beak is large, strong, and of a scarlet colour, as well as its legs and feet. Its beak is about eighteen inches long, its neck a foot or fourteen inches, its body and breast are as large as the back of a goose. When its head is under its wings, it has the form of a heart.

[Polyæn. l. 7. Stratagem.] The white Ibis is to be seen in all parts of Egypt, but the black is not commonly to be met with any where but about Damietta. The Egyptians had so much veneration for it, that it was a capital crime among them to have killed so much as one, tho' through inadvertency . Cambyses King of Persia, who was not unacquainted with their superstition in this respect, had some of these birds placed before his army while he besieged Damietta. The Egyptians not daring to shoot against them, nor consequently against their enemies, suffered the town to be taken, which was as it were the key of all Egypt. The Ibis not only eats the flying Serpents, or Saraphs, but kills them after it is sated with them. It eats likewise the Eggs of Serpents, and carries them to its young ones, which are very greedy of them. After the death of the Ibis, the Egyptians were used to embalm it, in order to preserve it, made a kind of funeral for it, and paid great honours to it.

[Salmas. in Solin. p. 418. Solin. c. 34.] It is very remarkable in this bird, that altho' it be a water-fowl, and lives principally about the Nile, yet it never enters the water, and does not know how to swim. The use of glysters is said to have been learned from the Ibis, and not from the Stork. It generally builds its nest upon Palm-trees, to avoid the cats. The Ancients asserted in their writings, that it conceived at its beak, and even laid its eggs that way; but these are both equally mistakes. Aldrovandus relates, that the flesh of the Ibis is red, like a Salmon's, that it is sweet, that its skin is very hard, and smells like wildfowl.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ibleam

IBLEAM, a Town in the Half-tribe of Manasseh, which was settled on this side Jordan. It is probably the same as Bileam, mentioned 1 Chron. vi. 70. which was resigned to the Levites of Kohath's Family. The situation of Ibleam is not very well known to us.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ibri

IBRI, the son of Merari, a Levite. 1 Chron. xxiv. 27.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ibum

IBUM. The Rabbins give this name to the ceremony of a brother's marrying his sister-in-law, the widow of his brother deceased without children, by virtue of the Mosaick Law mentioned in Deut. xxv.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ibzan

IBZAN, of the Tribe of Judah, eighth Judge of Israel. He was of the City of Bethsan, or Scythopolis, and succeeded Jephthah in the year of the World 2823. [Judg. xii. 10.] He died at Bethlehem, and was buried there after seven years government. He was the father of thirty sons and thirty daughters, whom he had had by several wives. He married all his children, and was father-in-law to thirty daughters and as many sons-in-law. He was succeeded by Ijon, in the year of the World 2830, before Jesus Christ 1170, before the Vulgar [1 Sam. iv. 19, 20, 21.] Æra 1174.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ichabod

ICHABOD, the son of Phinehas, and grandson of Eli the High-Priest. His mother was delivered of him the very moment she heard the fatal news of the Ark's [אי כבוד-Ichabod.] being taken. Ichabod may signify where is the glory? because at this instant there was intelligence brought, that the Ark of the Lord, the Glory of Israel, was fallen into the enemies hands.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Iconium

ICONIUM, at present Cogni, formerly [Acts xiii. 51. xiv. 1, &c.] the capital City of Lycaonia in Asia minor. St. Paul coming to Iconium in the year of Jesus Christ 45, converted many Jews and Gentiles there. It is believed, that in his first journey to this City, he converted St. Thecla, so celebrated in the writings of the ancient Fathers. But some incredulous Jews excited the Gentiles to rise against Paul and Barnabas, so that they were upon the point of offering violence to them, which obliged St. Paul and St. Barnabas to fly for security to the neighbouring Cities. St. Paul undertook a second journey to Iconium in the year 51 of Jesus Christ; but we know no particulars of his journey, which relate peculiarly to Iconium.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Idalah

IDALAH, a City in the Tribe of Zebulun, Josh. xix. 15. Some call it Jetala; but the Hebrew reads it Jadala; the Septuagint, Nabal; the Syriac, Aral.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Iddo (I)

I. IDDO, the son of Levi. 1 Chron. vi. 21.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Iddo (II)

II. IDDO[1], the son of Ahinadab, to whom Solomon gave the government of Mahanaim, and the Canton belonging to it, beyond Jordan. 1 Kings iv. 14.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. In the English Version it is, Ahinadab the son of Iddo had Mahanaim*; and herein it agrees both with the Hebrew Text and the Septuagint*.

Iddo (III)

[2 Chron. xii. 15. 2 Chron. xiii. 22.] III. IDDO, a Prophet of the Kingdom of Judah, who wrote the actions of Reboboam's and Abijah's reigns. It seems by 2 Chron. xiii. 22. that he had intitled his work Midrash or Enquiries. We know nothing particularly concerning the life of this Prophet. It is probable that he likewise [2 Chron. ix. 2. Joseph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 3.] wrote some prophecies against Jeroboam the son of Nebat, wherein part of Solomon's life was included. Josephus, and many others after him, are of opinion, that it was Iddo, who was sent to Jeroboam, while he was at Bethel, and was there dedicating an Altar to the golden Calves; and that it was he, who was killed by a lion. See 1 Kings xiii. Joseph. [In the year of the World 3030, before J. C. 970, before the Vulgar Æra 974. Ezra viii. 17.] Antiq. l. 8. c. 3.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Iddo (IV)

IV. IDDO, father of Berachiah, and grandfather to the Prophet Zechariah. Zech. i. 1. In Ezra, Zechary is called only the son of Iddo. Ezra v. 1. vi. 14.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Iddo (V)

V. IDDO, Chief of the Half-tribe of Manasseh beyond Jordan, in the time of David and Solomon. 1 Chron. xxvii. 21.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Iddo (VI)

VI. IDDO, Chief of the Nethinims, who were in captivity in the Mountains of Casphia. Ezra sent to them, inviting them to return with him to Jerusalem.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Idol

IDOL. The Greek word Eidolon signifies in general a representation, a figure. It is always taken in Scripture in an ill sense for all sorts of representations of the heathen Deities, whether of Men, Stars, or Animals; whether of figures in relievo, imbossed, or in painting, of what matter or nature soever. God forbids the use of all sorts of Idols, or figures and representations of the creatures, with an intention to pay an idolatrous and superstitious worship [Exod. xxiii. 4.] to them. Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven image, nor the likeness of any thing in the heavens above, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth; thou shalt not bow down to them nor worship them. We shall speak of the Idols and false Gods mentioned in the Scripture, in the particular Articles under their names.

The Heathens had Idols of all sorts, and of every kind of matter, such as gold, silver, brass, stone, wood, potter's earth, &c. The Stars, Spirits, Men, Animals, Rivers, Plants and Elements were the subject and model of them. There have been whole Nations seen to worship a rough stone. The Arabians, by the report of Maximus Tyrius, adored a great square stone. It is certain that before Mahomet they had a very great veneration for a certain black stone, which is still at this day fastned to a pillar standing in the Porch of the Temple at Mecca, and is kissed very devoutly by the Mahometans. The ancient Israelites had many Deities or Idols, the figure whereof is not known to us. The Mahometans speak of an Idol called Soura, which they say had been worshipped in the time of Noah before the Deluge. The ancient [D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 827.] Arabians likewise adored an Idol under the name of Uza, as who should say, the mighty or powerful God. The God Helagabalus was nothing but a stone in the form of a cone, under which they worshipped the Sun. They adored likewise Spears or Lances[1], great pieces of Timber, Fire, Animals, the Sun, Moon, Stars, Earth, Flowers, Plants, Trees, and Fountains. Barbarous people, such as the ancient Gauls, and Germans, had scarce any other Gods but these.

THE IDOLATRY OF THE ISRAELITES IN THE WILDERNESS.Exod. XXXII. 8. VOL. I 2d Gath. Q 2.

It is very well known what the ancient Idols of the Egyptians were; because a great number of them has been transmitted down to us. They were for the most part very ill-contriv'd Figures, representing Animals, or symbolical Figures compounded of Man and some Animal or other: here, the head of a Dog grafted upon the body of a Man; there, the head of a Cat upon that of a Woman; Oxen, Sparhawks, Ravens, Serpents, the vilest Insects, the very Herbs of their Gardens in this country received divine honours.

If in this point we refer ourselves to the Rabbins and the generality of Interpreters, they will tell us, that the Idols mentioned in Scripture were grotesque Figures. Dagon was described in the form of a Fish; Beelzebub in that of a Fly; the golden Calves set up by Jeroboam, as well as those worshipped in the wilderness, were cast in the shape of a Bull. We have spoken of all these Idols under their respective Titles. See MOLOCH, CHEMOSH, BAALPEOR, DAGON, ASTEROTH, BAAL, &c. and the Articles HIGH-PLACES and SAMARITANS.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Clem. Alex. in Protreptico, p. 29, 30. Eufeb. præpar. l. 1. Philosoph. Orient. voce Angelus & Astra.

Idolatry

IDOLATRY, the superstitious Worship which is paid to Idols and false Gods. This word is in general understood for all impious, superstitious, and sacrilegious Worship. People are not agreed about the original of Idolatry. The Author of the book of Wisdom proposes three Causes of it: first, the love of a Father who having lost his Son in an advanced age, to comfort himself under this loss, causes divine honours to be paid to him. Secondly, The beauty of Works engrav'd. Thirdly, The skill of an Artificer in Potters-earth, who consecrates a Statue of his own making as if it were a Deity. They who believed that man was formed by chance, imagined, that by degrees he came to institute a Religion for his own use, and that fear and superstition were the first causes of this Religion. Primus in orbe Deos fecit timor. Man under the disturbance of mind, proceeding from his fears, [Lucret. l. 5. de rerum natura.] forged, says Lucretius, imaginary Deities.

The most knowing in this matter are persuaded, that the first objects of idolatrous worship were the Sun, Moon, and Stars. The brightness, beauty, and usefulness of them, with respect to us and every thing about us, induced men to ascribe some divine virtue to them, and afterwards a religious worship. Others[1] have believed, the most ancient Idolatry to have been that of Angels. At first some respect was shewn them, founded on the excellency of their Nature, and the assistance which we receive from them: afterwards a sort of worship, subordinate to that which is due to God, was paid them. Lastly, they were adored without any reference to God. After this, some imagined that Angels belonged to the Stars; and so the worship which was paid them, was insensibly transferred to the Sun, Moon, and Stars.

Vossius, who examined this matter with so much care, maintains, that men began first to depart from the worship which they owed to God, by rendring divine honours to the two Principles of Good and Evil. Mankind observing, that the World abounded with Good and Evil, were not able to imagine, that God, who is all over Goodness, should be the Author of Evil. They invented therefore two Deities of equal power, to whom they allotted quite different offices. The first Principle, the author of Good, created the World; the second Principle, the author of Evil, spread throughout it all the Evil he could. To the worship of these two Principles succeeded that of Spirits, particularly that of Dæmons; afterwards that of Souls was introduced, [Wisd. xiii. 13, 14. xiv. 15. xv. 7, 8. Vossius Tract. de Idolat. l. 1. c. 1.] of Heroes, and illustrious Persons.

But if we would recur to the true cause of Idolatry, we must search for it in the depravation of man's heart, in his ignorance, vanity, pride, love of pleasure, his fondness of things sensible, his libertinism, brutal passions, the irregular love of amorous persons, the mistaken tenderness of a father for his child, or of a wife for her husband; an extravagant respect in subjects for their Prince, or of children for their Father, an excessive gratitude for the benefits and services received from certain persons, admiration of the great qualities of creatures, or of illustrious persons: one or many of these reasons, joined with the indelible Idea conceived by man of the Divinity, induced him to pay respect, worship, and a superstitious adoration to what he loved, esteemed, or honoured with excess.

If any one ask at what time this disorder began, some of the Rabbins will tell him, that before the Flood, the descendants of Cain introduced into the world the worship of the creature. They believe Enos to have been the first inventor of it: in this sense they explain a certain passage in Genesis, which, according to the Hebrew[2], may be interpreted in this manner: Then the name of the Lord was profaned by giving it to Idols; but the old Greek Interpreters, and St. Jerom, understood it otherwise. The Septuagint[3]: Enos placed his confidence in calling upon the name of the Lord. Aquila[4]: Then people began to call upon the name of the Lord. The Vulgate: Enos began to call upon the name of the Lord. The Eastern People make no doubt, but that Idolatry was common before the Deluge; and it is but too probable, that in the inundation of wickedness intimated in the Scripture by this expression, All flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth, impiety of worship was meant, aswell as the infamous irregularities of incontinency.

[Joseph. Antiq. l. 1.] Josephus, and the generality of the Fathers, seem of opinion, that after the Deluge, Idolatry became very soon the prevailing Religion of almost all the world; for wherever we cast our eyes since the time of Abraham, we see only a false Worship and Idolatry in the world. Abraham's forefathers and Abraham himself were ingaged in it, as the Scripture mentions with sufficient clearness. Your fathers dwelt on [Josh. xxiv. 2, 14.] the other side of the flood in old time, even Terah the father of Abraham, and the father of Nahor, and they served other Gods.

Now therefore fear the Lord and serve him in sincerity and in truth, and put away the Gods which your fathers served on the other side of the flood and in Egypt.

[Epiphan. de Hæres. Suidas in Serug. Josh. xxiv. 14.] St. Epiphanius believes, it was Serug the grandfather of Terah who first introduced Idolatry after the Deluge. Others believe, that it was Nimrod, and that he instituted the worship of fire among his subjects, which subsisted for so long a time in Persia, and in some places of it is still continued. Some add, that the Patriarch Abraham refusing to adore this element, was cast into the flames, out of which he came in a miraculous manner without having received any harm. Others will have it, that [Cassian. collat. 8. c. 21. Lactant. l. 2. de falsa Relig.] Ham the son of Noah was the inventor of Idolatry. Some likewise charge his son Canaan with this crime. But we must confess, that there is no positive and historical proof of all this, and there is a great deal of probability, that Idolatry came insensibly and by degrees, and that they who made the first step towards this impiety, did not carry it to the point at which it afterwards arrived. It is without doubt very ancient in the world, but to fix the Epoch of it, and assign the Author or Authors of it, is impossible: for we must not believe, that Idolatry came in all from the same country, every nation set up its particular Gods, and a Religion after its own mode. When once we leave the [Jerem. ii. 13, 14.] fountain of living waters, which is the Lord, every one hews himself out broken cisterns that will hold no water. Hence proceeds that monstrous diversity of Opinions, Worship, and Deities which is to be met with in Paganism. I do not enter into any enquiries after the rise of Idolatry among the Greeks and Romans.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joh. Clerici Index Philolog. ad Hist.
Gen. vi. 26. אז הוחל לקרא בשם יהוה
Οὗτος ἤλπισε ἐπικαλεῖσθαι τὸ ὄνομα κυρίου τοῦ Θεοῦ.
Aquil. Τότε ἤρχθη τοῦ καλεῖσθαι ἐν ὀνόματι κυρίου.

Idolatry of the IDOLATRY of the Israelites. The Hebrews had no Idolatry or Gods peculiar to themselves; they imitated the superstition of other people, but do not appear to have been inventors in matters of Religion. In Egypt they worshipped the Egyptian Deities; in the Wilderness, the Gods of the Canaanites, Egyptians, Ammonites, and Moabites; in the Land of Promise, the Gods of the Phœnicians, Syrians, and other people round about them.

Rachel in all probability adored Idols at her father Laban's, since she carried off his [Gen. xxxi. 30.] Teraphims. Jacob, some time after his return from Mesopotamia, required his people to throw away the strange Gods that were among them, to purify themselves, and prepare to go with him to Bethel, there to offer sacrifices unto the Lord. He received their strange Gods [Gen. xxxv. 2, 3, 4.] from them, and the superstitious pendants which were worn by them at their ears, and hid them under a turpentine-tree near Sichem. Leah was not free from the guilt of this superstitious worship, since she called one of her sons Gad, which is the name of the God of Good-fortune. [Gen. xxx. 11.]

Jacob kept his Family to the worship of God as long as he lived; but after his death, part of his sons gave themselves up to the worship of the Egyptian Deities: Put away the Gods which your fathers served on the other side of the flood and in Egypt, said Joshua to the Israelites. Amos informs us, that during their sojourning in the wilderness, they carried [Amos v. 25, 26. Acts vii. 42.] with them the niches of their Gods, the tabernacle of Moloch, and the image of their Idols. St. Stephen, in the Acts, reproaches them with the same practice. The golden Calf which the Hebrews worshipped at the foot of mount Sinai, was in imitation of the God Apis, whom [Exod. xxvii. 4, 5.] they had adored in Egypt. When Moses was sent by God to deliver his people out of this country, he said to them, Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not your selves with the Idols of Egypt.

[Ezek. xx. 6, 7, 8, 9.] Under the Government of the Judges, they fell often into infidelity; and God, to punish them, gave them to the people who were their enemies. Gideon, after he had been favoured by God in so particular a manner, made an Ephod, and laid snares for the Israelites, in order to engage them in an unlawful worship. Micah's Teraphims are well known, and the worship of them continued in Israel till the dispersion of the people. Lastly, the Scripture shews expressly, that the Hebrews forsook the Lord, adored strange Gods, and performed their worship to Baal and Ashtaroth. The children of Israel [Judg. ii. 11, 12, 13.] did evil in the sight of the Lord, and served Baalim. They forsook the Lord God of their fathers, and followed other Gods: of the Gods of the people that were round about them; and bowed themselves unto them: and they forsook the Lord, and served Baal and Ashtaroth.

Under the Government of Samuel, Saul, and David, the worship of God seemed to have been very pure in Palestine. There was corruption and irregularity visible in their manners, but little or no Idolatry. Solomon, (who would believe it ?) is the first King of God's people, who, out of complaisance to the strange women whom he had married, caused Temples to be erected in honour of their Gods, and was so impiously complying with them, as himself to offer incense to these false Deities, 1 Kings xi. 5, 6, 7. He adored Ashtaroth the Goddess of the Phœnicians, Moloch the God of the Ammonites, and Chemosh the God of the Moabites. Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who succeeded him in the largest part of his dominions, set up golden Calves at Dan and Bethel, and made Israel to sin. Hereupon the people being no longer under any restraint from their apprehensions of the Royal Authority, gave themselves up without reserve or limitation to every evil inclination of their hearts, and worshipped not only the golden Calf, but likewise all the Deities of the Phœnicians, Syrians, Ammonites, and Moabites.

Particularly under the reign of Ahab this disorder was at its height; the impious Jezebel did what she could to extinguish quite the worship of the Lord, driving away and persecuting his Prophets, who were as it were a barrier, which still retained some part of the people in the true Religion. God therefore being incensed at the Sins and Idolatry of the ten Tribes, at last abandoned them to the Kings of Assyria and Chaldæa, who transplanted them beyond the Euphrates.

The people of Judah were almost as much corrupted. The description which the Prophets give of their Irregularities and Idolatry, of the abominations and lasciviousness committed on the High-Places, and in Woods consecrated to Idols; this description, I say, strikes us with horror, and discovers all [1 Macc. i, 12, &c.] the corruption of the [Judg. viii. 27. Judg. xvii. 5. xviii. 30, 31.] heart of man when under the power of his passions. Judah was led into captivity at several times, and did not return till after seventy years absence. After their return, we do not find that they were any more reproached, as before they had been, with Idolatry. They expressed zeal enough for the worship of God, and except some transgressors, who obeyed the orders of Antiochus Epiphanes, the rest of the people kept themselves clear of those impieties which had drawn so many calamities upon their forefathers.

Concerning the origin of Idolatry, the Reader may see Isaac Vossius's great work on this subject, and our Dissertation prefixed to the book of Wisdom; Seldenus de Diis Syris, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Idumæa

IDUMÆA, or Edom, a Province of Arabia, which derives its name from Edom or Esau, who there fixed his habitation. He settled at first in the Mountains of Seir, in the land belonging to the Horites, to the South-East of the Dead Sea; and his descendants afterwards spread themselves throughout Arabia Petræa, and in the country which lies to the south of Palestine, between the Dead Sea and the Mediterranean. It happened, that during the Babylonish captivity, and in the times when Judæa was almost deserted, they fell upon the territories, which lay to the south of Judah, and advanced as far as Hebron. Thus when we speak of Idumæa, we must be exact in distinguishing times. In the time of Moses and Joshua, and even under the Kings of Judah, the Idumæans were confined to the east and south of the Dead Sea, in the land of Seir, in the way towards the Gulph of Elan. Afterwards Idumæa extended more to the south of Judah. The capital City of East Edom, or Idumæa, was Bozra, situated towards Edrai; and the Capital of south Edom was Petra, or Jectael. We are not the only persons, nor the first, who have distinguished the land of Idumæa into East and South, with relation to Palestine. Strabo, Brocard, Bonfrere, Adricomius, Torniel, and some others, have done the same.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Idumæans

IDUMÆANS, or Edomites, People descended from Edom or Esau, the son of Isaac, and Jacob's eldest brother. The Idumæans had Kings long before the Jews had any. [Gen. xxxv. 31.] They were first governed by Dukes or Princes, and afterwards by Kings. They continued independent till the time of David, who subdued them, and shewed the perfect completion of Isaac's prophecy, who had said, that Jacob should rule Esau. The [Gen. xxvii. 29. 30.] Idumæans bore with great impatience this subjection to the Kings of Judah; and at the end of Solomon's reign, Hadad the Edomite, who had been carried into Egypt in his childhood, returned into his own country, and there procured himself to [1 Kings xi. 22.] be acknowledged King. But it is very probable, that he reigned only in East Edom; for the other Edomites, who lay more to the south of Judæa, continued in their obedience to the Kings of Judah till the reign of Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat [2 Chron. xxi.] , against whom they rebelled. Jehoram made war upon them, but was not able to subdue them. Amaziah the son of Joash King of Judah, obtained likewise some advantages over them. He made himself master of Petra, killed ten thousand of them, and compell'd ten thousand more to leap from the rock, on which the City of [2 Chron. xxv.] Petra was situated. But these conquests were not attended with any considerable consequences.

Uzziah King of Judah took from them [2 Kings xiv.] the City of Elath on the Red Sea. But Rezin King of Syria, retook it from Uzziah, and drove the Jews out of it. Some think, that Esar-haddon King of Syria ravaged [Isai. xxi. 11, 12, 13 and xxxiv. 1. Judith iii. 14.] their country. Holofernes subdued them, as well as the other people, who dwelt round about Judæa[1]. When Nebuchadnezzar besieged Jerusalem, the Idumæans joined him, and encouraged him utterly to destroy this City, and root up the very foundations of it*a*. This cruelty did not long continue unpunished. Nebuchadnezzar, five years after the taking of Jerusalem, humbled all the States which bordered upon Judæa, and in particular the Idumæansb. Judas Maccabæus attacked and defeated them in several rencounters[2]: but John Hircanus intirely conquered them, obliged them to receive Circumcision, and submit to other observances of the Jewish Law[3]. They continued subject to the later Kings of Judæa till the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. They even came to the assistance of this City, when it was besieged[4], and entred into it in order to defend it: they did not however continue there till it was taken, but left it, and returned into Idumæa loaded with a great booty.

What the ancient Religion of the Idumæans was, we cannot tell. It is credible, that in the beginning they adored the true God, the worship of whom Esau learned in his father Isaac's house. Job, whom we believe to have been an Idumæan, or Edomite, as well as some of his friends, whose sentiments we meet with in his book, was also an adorer of the true God, whose worship he preserved in all its purity. They had rejected circumcision, when John Hircanus conquered them, and obliged them to submit to it, and practise the Religion of the Jews[5]. Josephus speaks of an Idumæan Deity called Kose[6]. Costobarus, who was born of one of the most ancient and illustrious Families of Idumæa, was descended from the old Priests of the God Kose. St. Epiphanius says[7], that the Arabians of Arabia Petræa and Idumæa worshipped Moses,out of regard to the Prodigies which God wrought by his means. Chose in Hebrew signifies a Seer or Prophet; a quality which agrees perfectly with Moses. The Scripture does not reproach the Idumæans with Idolatry, nor does it any where mention their Idols. The prophane Writers who have said any thing concerning the Religion of the Arabians, have, without doubt, confounded the Idumæans with the Arabians, in the midst of whom they dwelt.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Psal. cxxxvi. 7. Lament. iv. 21, 22. Ob. vf. 11. Jerem. xii. 6. lix. 7. Ezek. xxv. 12.
1 Macc. v. 3, 4. 2 Macc. x. 16. Joseph. Antiq. l. xi. c. 11.
Antiq. l. xiii. c. 17.
Joseph. l. 4. de Bello, c. 6. p. 877.
Joseph. Antiq. l. xiii. c. 17.
Idem. l. xv. c. 11. Antiq.
Epiphan. Hæres. 55. p. 460.

Jealousy

[Josh. xv. 7.] JEALOUSY. Waters of JEALOUSY, which women were obliged to drink, who were suspected of Adultery by their husbands. Numb. v. 17,18, &c. I have spoken of them at length in the Article ADULTERY. We see no Example in the History of the ancient Jews of any woman tried by the Waters of Jealousy. The way of Divorce which was open to them, was shorter and more easy. It is very frequently said in Scripture, that God had an affection for his people attended with Jealousy, and that he punished them when they were guilty of infidelity, in like manner as an husband transported with love, and stung with Jealousy, punishes a wife, who has been failing in her duty. Idolatry is a kind of fornication and adultery in those people, who have the advantage of knowing God.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jearim

JEARIM. Mount Jearim is mentioned in Joshua, as one boundary of the inheritance of Judah. Jearim signifies Woods or Forests. Thus mount Jearim may in general denote a woody Mountain, or that upon which the City of Baalah, otherwise called Kirjath-jearim, was situated.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jebus

[Gen. x. 16. Josh. xviii. 28. Josh. xv. 63. Judg. xix. 16. 2 Sam. v. 6, &c. 1 Chron. xi. 4.] JEBUS, Jebusite, the son of Canaan, and father of the people of Palestine called Jebusites. Their dwelling was in Jerusalem and round about, in the Mountains. This people was very warlike, and abode in Jerusalem till David's time.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jebus

JEBUS, otherwise Jerusalem. See JERUSALEM. Jebus was founded by Jebus or Jebusæus, the son of Canaan, and father of the Jebusites.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jecamiah

JECAMIAH, the son of Jeconiah, of the Royal Family of Judah. 1 Chron. iii. 18.[1]

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ob. vf. 1. Jerem. lix. 7, 10, 20. Joseph. Antiq. l. x. c. 11.

Jecoliah

JECOLIAH, the wife of Amaziah, King of Judah, and mother of Azariah. 2 Kings xv. 2.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jedaiah (I)

I. JEDAIAH, the son of Haramaph, of the Family of the Priests. Neh. iii. 10.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jedaiah (II)

II. JEDAIAH, a Priest, who returned from the Babylonish captivity with nine hundred and seventy three of his brethren, Ezra ii. 36.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jedaiah (III)

III. JEDAIAH, was one of those, who signed the Covenant with the Lord in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah. Ezra x. 43.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jedaiah (IV)

IV. JEDAIAH, Head of the second Class of Priests. 1 Chron. xxiv. 7.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jediael

JEDIAEL, one of the brave men in David's Army, who abandoned Saul's party, and embraced that of this Prince. He came to him at Ziklag, and always served him very faithfully. Jediael was of the Tribe of Manasseh; the son of Shimri, and brother of Joha.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jediah

JEDIAH, the Meronothite, had the principal care of a part of David's flocks. 1 Chron. xxvii. 30.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jedidah

JEDIDAH, the daughter of Adaiah, of the City of Boscath, mother to Josiah King of Judah. 2 Kings xxii. 1.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeduthun

JEDUTHUN, a Levite of Merari's family, and one of the four great Masters of Musick belonging to the Temple of [1 Chron. xvi. 38, 41, 42. xxv. 36. 1 Chron. xv. 17. Psalm lxxxviii. 1.] Jerusalem. He is the same as Ethan. Some of the Psalms are said to have been composed by him, such as the eighty eighth, intitled, of Ethan the Ezraite; and the thirty eighth, sixty first, and seventy sixth, which go under the name of Jeduthun. Some believe, that David having composed these Psalms, gave them to Jeduthun and his company to sing; and that this is the reason of their going by this name. But there are some Psalms which have the name of Jeduthun, that seem to have been composed either during the Captivity, or after it; and consequently the name of Jeduthun prefixed to them, can signify nothing else, but that some of his descendants, and of Jeduthun's Class, composed them long after the death of the famous Jeduthun, one of their Ancestors.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeezer

JEEZER, the son of Gilead, Chief of the Family of the Jeezerites. Numb. xxvi. 30.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehaleleel

JEHALELEEL, the son of Caleb, and father of Ziph. 1 Chron. iv. 16.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehaziel

JEHAZIEL, the son of Hebron. 1 Chron. xxiii. 19.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehdeiah

JEHDEIAH, a Levite, one of the sons of Shabael. 1 Chron. xxiv. 20.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehezekel

JEHEZEKEL, one of the four and twenty Families of Priests. This was the twentieth in rank appointed for the service of the Temple. 1 Chron. xxiv. 16.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehiah

JEHIAH, a Levite, who assisted in carrying the Ark, when David removed it from the house of Obed-edom in order to convey it to Jerusalem. 1 Chron. xv. 24.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehied

JEHIED, a City in the Tribe of Dan. Josh. xix. 45.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehoahaz (I)

[2 Kings xiii. 1, 2, 3, &c.] I. JEHOAHAZ, the son of Jehu King of Israel, succeeded his father in the year of the World 3148, before Jesus Christ 852, before the Vulgar Æra 856. He reigned seventeen years to the year of the World 3165, before Jesus Christ 835, before the Vulgar Æra 839. He did evil in the sight of the Lord, and followed the ill example which had been given by Jeroboam the son of Nebat. Wherefore the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel, and he gave them up during all this time to Hazael King of Syria, and Benhadad the son of Hazael. Jehoahaz, overwhelmed with so many misfortunes, prostrated himself before the Lord; and the Lord being moved with the Calamities of Israel, heard him, and sent a Saviour to him in the person of Joash his son, who re-established the affairs of Israel, and de-livered his people out of the hands of the Kings of Syria. Of all his soldiers Je-hoahaz had only fifty horsemen left, ten chariots, and ten thousand foot; for the King of Syria had defeated them, and made them like the dust of the threshing-floor. All this notwithstanding was not sufficient to prevail with the Israelites to forsake their evil ways, and their super-stitions. Joash the successor of Jehoahaz was more fortunate than his father, but did not depart from his impiety.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehoahaz (II)

II. JEHOAHAZ, otherwise Shallum, the son of Josiah King of Judah. Josiah having been wounded mortally by Necho King of Egypt, and dying of his wounds at Megiddo, Jehoahaz was made King in his room, tho' he was not Josiah's eldest son. He was in all probability thought fitter than any of his brethren to make head against the King of Egypt. He was three and twenty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned about three months only in Jerusalem.

King Necho at his return from his expedition against Carchemish, being pro-voked at the people of Judah's placing this Prince upon the Throne without his participation, sent for him to Riblah in Syria, divested him of the Kingdom, loaded him with chains, and sent him into Egypt, where he died. Jehoiakim or Eliakim his brother, was made King in his room. Ezekiel intimates, that Jehoa-haz resisted Necho, gave him battle, and lost it. See his words: What is thy mother? a lioness: she lay down among lions, she nourished her whelps among young lions. And she brought up one of her whelps: it became a young lion, and it learned to catch the prey, it devoured

9 F men, men. The nations also heard of him, he was taken in their pit, and they brought him with chains into the land of Egypt. Jehoahaz is visibly denoted by this young lion. The Rabbins believe, that he raised an army, and marched even into Egypt, to revenge the death of his father Josiah.

There is a considerable difficulty in the Chronology of this Prince's reign. The [2 Kings xxiii. 31.] Scripture says, That he was three and twenty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months in Jerusalem. [2 Kings xxiii. 36.] His brother Jehoiakim succeeded him, being of the age of five and twenty. The generality conclude from hence, that the people placed Jehoahaz upon the throne without following the natural order of succession, tho' he was not the eldest son of Josiah. The reason of this preference is not known; but it seems unquestionable, from what was said just before of the age of Jehoahaz, compared with that of Jehoiakim his brother and successor. Others assert, that Jehoahaz, otherwise Shallum, was Josiah's eldest son; and to reconcile what the Scripture relates of the age of Jehoahaz, who was made King at three and twenty, and of Jehoiakim his brother, who was set upon the throne three months after, being then five and twenty, some alledge that Jehoahaz was indeed carried to Riblah three months after his being established King of Judah, but that the sacred Writer did not acknowledge the Throne of Judah to be vacant, till after his death, which happened two or three years after his deposition; and that then Jehoiakim his younger brother had attained to the age of five and twenty: during the imprisonment of Jehoahaz, his brother Jehoiakim was looked upon only as his Vicar or Lieutenant.

Others place an Interregnum of nine months between the two Kings Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim, and suppose farther, that the years of Jehoahaz are full, Jehoiakim's begun only; by this expedient the two years are filled up which the Scripture gives Jehoiakim above his elder brother Jehoahaz. But without fatiguing ourselves in forming dubious systems of Chronology, it were better to confess, that Jehoahaz was younger than Jehoiakim, and that the people without regard to age, placed the youngest son of Josiah on his Throne, for reasons which the Scripture has not thought proper to declare.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehoiachin

JEHOIACHIN, the son of Jehoiakim King of Judah, and grandson of Josiah, [2 Kings xxiv. 8. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9.] reigned but three months over the house of Judah. Some believe, that he was born about the time of the first Babylonish Captivity, in the year of the World 3398, when Jehoiakim or Eliakim his father, was taken captive and carried to Babylon. Jehoiakim returned from Babylon, and reigned till 3405, when he was killed by the Chaldeans in the eleventh year of his reign. Jehoiachin, otherwise Joachin or Coniah succeeded him, and reigned alone but three months and ten days: but he reigned ten years in conjunction with his father. Thus the 2 Kings xxiv. 8. is reconciled with 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9. In the second book of Kings it is said, that he was eighteen years of age when he began to reign; and in the Chronicles that he was but eight: that is to say, he was but eight years old when he began to reign with his father, and was eighteen when he began to reign alone.

[2 Kings xxiv. 8, 9, &c. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9, 10. Joseph. Antiq. l. 10. c. 9.] The Books of Kings and Chronicles intimate, that the people set up Jehoiachin, at least that they acknowledged him for King, in his father's room. But Josephus says, it was Nebuchadnezzar who gave him the Kingdom; and that some months after, fearing he might be inclined to some revolt, in order to revenge the death of his father Jehoiakim, he repented giving him the title of King, and sent an army against him, which besieged him in Jerusalem. But Jehoiachin, who was good and just, would not expose the town on his account to danger: he sent his mother and his nearest relations as hostages to those who commanded the siege, having first received a promise and an oath from the Generals above mentioned, that they would do no harm to the town or hostages; but they did not keep their word, and before the year's end, Nebuchadnezzar sent orders to his Generals to take Jehoiachin and send him to Babylon, together with his mother, his friends, and all the youth and trading part of the City; which accordingly was done. Ten thousand eight hundred and thirty two men were carried to Babylon, of which number were King Jehoiachin, his mother Nehushta, and his principal Counsellors, whom Nebuchadnezzar confined in prison. This is what Josephus says.

The Text of the books of Kings is shorter, and differs in some things from Josephus. It says, that Jehoiachin did evil in the sight of the Lord; that the King of Babylon first sent his army under the command of his Generals to open the siege of Jerusalem, and afterwards was himself present at it: that King Jehoiachin went out of the City with his mother, his princes, servants, and officers, and surrendred himself to Nebuchadnezzar; that this Prince carried away all the Treasures of the Temple, and those of the King's Palace, and cut in pieces all the golden Vessels which Solomon had made for the use of the Temple, and ordered all to be conveyed to Babylon: that he took away with him all the best inhabitants of Jerusalem, the Princes, and mighty Men of valour, to the number of ten thousand men, and all the good Artificers in the country, leaving none there but the poorest of the people. He transplanted the King thither also, the Queen his Mother, the King's Wives, his Eunuchs, and the Judges of the land, seven thousand men of war, a thousand good artificers, and all that he found capable of bearing arms.

Whether in this number of ten thousand first mentioned, the eight thousand afterwards spoken of, are to be comprehended, we cannot tell. It is very credible, that the earnestness remarkable here in Nebuchadnezzar, to transport to Babylon, omnem artificem & clusorem, all the good workmen in iron, gold, silver, wood, &c. was with an intent to people and fill the City of Babylon, which he had embellished and enlarged; this likewise was the aim of his bringing whole nations out of their own country to settle them at Babylon, or in Babylonia, which he had a mind to make the most beautiful and flourishing country in the world.

[2 Kings xxv. 27. Jerem. lii. 31. Jerem. xxii. 24.] Jeremiah mentions Jehoiachin as a bad Prince, who by his sins had incurr'd the indignation of God. As I live, saith the Lord, though Coniah the son of Jehoiakim were the signet upon my right hand, yet would I pluck thee thence. And I will give thee into the hand of them that seek thy life, and into the hand of them whose face thou fearest, even into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, and into the hand of the Chaldeans. And I will cast thee out, and thy mother that bare thee, into another country where ye were not born, and there shall ye die.——Is this man Coniah a despised broken Idol? is he a vessel wherein is no pleasure? Wherefore are they cast out, he and his seed, and are cast into a land which they know not? O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord. Thus saith the Lord, Write ye this man childless, a man that shall not prosper in his days: for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah. All this was literally executed. Jehoiachin succeeded in none of his designs. He was taken and carried captive to Babylon, where he died. But it is believed that he repented, and that God treated him with mercy; for we read that King Evilmerodach, Nebuchadnezzar's successor, used him in an honourable manner, took him out of prison, spoke kindly to him, and placed his Throne above the Thrones of the other Princes, who were at his court.

[1 Chron. iii. 17, 18. and Matth. i. 12.] As to these words, Write this man childless, they cannot be taken literally, since we know that Jehoiachin was the father of Salathiel, and many other children, an enumeration whereof we see in the Chro nicles. But the Hebrew word which is translated childless, is placed likewise for one who has lost his children, who has no succession, or heirs. In this sense, Jehoiachin son of a King, and King himself, was looked upon as a man without issue, since he had no son who succeeded him in his kingdom, as in reality he had none; for neither Salathiel, who was born and died in captivity, nor Zerubbabel, who returned from Babylon, nor any of Jehoiachin's descendants, as far down as Jesus Christ, bore the Scepter, or were seated on the Throne of Judah. Jesus Christ, according to the idea which mankind had of him, was not king. We do not know the year of Jehoiachin's death.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehoiada

[In the year of the World 3120, before J. C. 880, before the Vulgar Æra 884. 2 Kings xi. xii. and 2 Chron. xxiii. xxiv.] JEHOIADA, by Josephus called Joadus, succeeded Azariah in the High-Priesthood, and was himself succeeded by Zechariah. The Chronicles seem to have confounded Johanan and Azariah with Jehoiada and Zechariah. See I Chron. vi. 9, 10. We have already said a good deal of Jehoiada in the Article ATHALIAH, and shall say more of him in that of JOASH. This High-Priest, with his wife Jehoshabeath, preserved the young King Joash, the son of Joram King of Judah, who was then but one year old, from the violence of Athaliah, who, that she might alone enjoy the Kingdom, had undertaken intirely to extinguish the Royal Family. Jehoiada concealed this young Prince in the Temple, and his nurse with him; and at seven years end, he took care to have him acknowledged King, and set him on the Throne of David, having first destroy'd the cruel Athaliah. In this whole affair he discovered an admirable degree of prudence, wisdom, and good conduct.

[In the year of the World 3126, before J. C. 874, before the Vulgar Æra 878.] As soon as Athaliah was dead, and the young Prince established on the Throne, he ordered the Temple of Baal to be demolished, and his Statue broken in pieces. The face of the Kingdom was quite changed under the direction of his care and counsel both in religious and civil matters; and as long as Jehoiada lived, and Joash followed his advice, every thing succeeded very happily. The High-Priest had formed a design of making some necessary repairs in the Temple, and to that purpose had collected considerable sums in all the Cities of Judah [2 Kings xii. and 2 Chron. xxiv. 5, 6, &c.] : but the Levites did not acquit themselves of this commission with all the diligence that was proper, and the work of repairing the House of God was not carried on as it ought to have been, till after the King was at age, and this Prince and the High-Priest both united their authority in procuring the execution of this design.

Jehoiada left a son, by name Zechariah, who was High-Priest after him, and put [2 Chron. xxiv. 20, 21.] put to death by Joash, with an ingratitude which has loaded his memory with eternal ignominy and reproach. See JOASH and [In the year of the World 3164, before J. C. 836, before the Vulgar Æra 840. 2 Chron. xxiv. 15.] ZECHARIAH. As for Jehoiada, he died in a good old age, being an hundred and thirty, in the year of the World 3160, before Jesus Christ 830, before the Vulgar Æra 834. He was buried in the Sepulcher belonging to the Kings at Jerusalem, a distinction which was due to the services which he had done the King, the State, and Royal Family.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehoiakim

JEHOIAKIM, or Eliakim, the brother and successor of Jehoahaz King of Judah, of whom we have been speaking, was made King by Necho King of Egypt at his return from an expedition against the City of Carchemish [2 Kings xxiii. 34, 35, 36.] , in the year of the World 3395, before Jesus Christ 605, before the Vulgar Æra 609. Necho changed his name from Eliakim to Jehoiakim, and set a ransom upon him of an hundred talents of silver, and ten talents of gold. To raise this money, Jehoiakim was forced to lay heavy taxes upon his people, exacting of every man something in proportion to his fortune. Jehoiakim was five and twenty years of age when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years at Jerusalem. His mother's name was Zebudah, the daughter of Pedaiah of Rumah. He did evil in the sight of the Lord, and Jeremiah reproaches him with building his house by unrighteousness, with oppressing unjustly his Subjects, with keeping back the wages of those, whom he employ'd in his service; with having his heart and eyes turned to avarice and inhumanity, and following his inclination, which led him to commit all sort of barbarities and wicked actions. This is the portraiture of Jehoiakim. The same Prophet informs us, that he sent men to bring the Prophet Urijah out of Egypt, whither he had fled for safety; that he put him to the sword, and left him without giving him a suitable burial.

Wherefore the Lord threatens him with [Jer. xxii. 18, 19.] an unhappy end. He shall die, says Jeremiah, and shall be neither mourned for nor regretted. He shall be buried with the burial of an ass, drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem. Jehoiakim, after he had continued about four years subject to the King of Egypt, fell under the dominion of Nebuchadnezzar King of the Chaldeans. This Prince having recovered what Necho had taken upon the Euphrates, came into Phœnicia, and Judæa, subdued the City of Jerusalem, and subjected it to the same burdens [of the World 2399, before J. C. 601, before the Vulgar Æra 605, and in the fourth year of Jehoiakim.] and conditions which it was liable to under the King of Egypt[1]. Jehoiakim was taken in Jerusalem, and Nebuchadnezzar put him in fetters, intending to carry him to Baa 2 Kings xxiv. 1, 2. bylon: but he restored him to liberty, and left him in the country, upon condition that he would pay him a large tribute.

Thus Daniel and Jeremiah are reconciled with the Kings and Chronicles. The Chronicles, according to the Hebrew, say, that Nebuchadnezzar bound Jehoiakim in chains to carry him to Babylon; and Daniel relates, that the Lord delivered Jehoiakim into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar; that this Prince carried great part of the Vessels belonging to the House of God to Babylon, and some captives, among whom were Daniel and his companions; but he does not say that Jehoiakim was carried thither. The books of Kings and Chronicles tell us, that Jehoiakim reigned eleven years at [xxiii. 36.] Jerusalem. Jeremiah says, that Nebuchadnezzar retook Carchemish from Necho King of Egypt in the fourth year of Jehoiakim; and elsewhere, that the first year of Nebuchadnezzar agreed with the fourth of Jehoiakim.

All these Chronological marks evidence to us, that Nebuchadnezzar did not come into Judæa till the year of the World 3399, which is the fourth year of Jehoiakim; that Jehoiakim was not carried to Babylon, but only put in chains in order to be removed thither, and that afterwards he was set at liberty, and left at Jerusalem; lastly, that Jehoiakim was four years subject to Necho, before he became tributary to Nebuchadnezzar.

In this fourth year of Jehoiakim, Jeremiah having dictated to Baruch all the Prophecies, which he had pronounced till that time, Baruch read them the year following before all the people assembled in the Temple. Jehoiakim was informed of it, and ordering this book to be brought to him, it was read to him, and to all the great men who were about him. The King was in his winter-apartment in the ninth month, which answers to our November, and there [Æra 605.] was a fire on the hearth burning before him. After three or four pages had been read to him, Jehoiakim cut the book with the Secretary's penknife, and threw the rest into the fire, till it was consumed, without hearkening to the remonstrances of Elnathan, Delaiah, and Gemariah, who opposed this action. The reading of this book did not affect either Jehoiakim, or his people; and instead of being converted, he gave orders for seizing Jeremiah and Baruch: but the Lord concealed them, and did not permit him to discover where they were.

Then the Lord commanded Jeremiah to have his prophecies again written down, and he pronounced terrible menaces against Jehoiakim to this purpose; There shall be no Prince descended from him to sit upon the Throne of David. His body shall be cast out and exposed to the heat by day, and to the frost by night. I will rise up against him, his family, and servants, and I will bring upon him, Jerusalem, and all Judah, all the evils wherewith I have threatned them. Jehoiakim soon experienced the truth of Jeremiah's predictions. [In the year of the World 3401, before J. C. 599, before the Vulgar Æra 603. 2 Kings xxiv. 1,2. 2 Kings xxiv. 2, 3, &c.] Three years after he rebell'd against Nebuchadnezzar; and Nebuchadnezzar, who was taken up with other affairs, not being then able, or not condescending to go in person into Judæa, sent troops thither consisting of Chaldæans, Syrians, Moabites and Ammonites, who ravaged all the country, and carried three thousand and three and twenty Jews away with them to Babylon, in the seventh year of Jehoiakim, of the World 3401; and four years after, Jehoiakim himself was taken, put to death, and thrown into the common sewer, according to the prediction of Jeremiah. He [Jer. xxii. 18. and xxxv. 30.] was succeeded by his son Jehoiakin in the year of the World 3405, before Jesus Christ 595, before the Vulgar Æra 599.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

2 Kings xxiv. 1, 2.

Jehoiarib

JEHOIARIB, Head of the first Family of Priests established by David. 1 Chron. xxiv. 7. From this illustrious Family the Maccabees were descended. 1 Macc. ii. 1.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehoram

JEHORAM, the son and successor of Jehoshaphat King of Judah. He was born in the year of the World 3080. His father made him partner with him in the Kingdom, in the year 3112. He began to reign alone after the death of Jehoshaphat, which happened in 3116, and died, according to Usher, in 3119; that is to say, before Jesus Christ 881, before the Vulgar Æra 885. He married Athaliah, Omri's daughter, who engaged him in Idolatry, and several other sins, and was the cause of all the misfortunes, which attended his reign. Jehoram being well settled in the kingdom, began his reign with the murder of all his brothers, whom Jehoshaphat had removed from all publick business, and placed in the fortified Cities of Judah, with good pensions in gold and silver. God, as a punishment of Jehoram's impiety, permitted the [In the year of the World 3115, before J. C. 885, before the Vulgar Æra 889. See 2 Kin. viii. 20,21. and 2 Chr. xxi. 8,9. In the year of the World 3116, before J. C. 884, before the Vulgar Æra 888.] Edomites, who, ever since the reign of David, had been all along subject to the Kings of Judah, to revolt. Jehoram a marched against them, and defeated their Cavalry; but either through want of courage in his troops, or his own want of conduct, he did not make a good use of his victory. So much is certain, that the Edomites for that time continued free from the Hebrew yoke.

About the same time, Libnah a City of Judah, rebell'd likewise, and refused any longer to acknowledge Jehoram for its sovereign. Letters were brought him from the Prophet Elijah b, who had been translated out of the world about eight years before; whether the Prophet wrote these letters from the place where he is at present, waiting for the consummation of ages, or whether he wrote them before his translation, with the spirit of foresight, and a prospect of all the evils which Jehoram would be the cause of: however this may be, these Letters reproached him with his impiety and the murder of his brothers, and threatned to inflict some great misfortune upon him, his wives, his children, and his people, and to bring a dysentery upon him, which should make him evacuate his bowels with excessive pain. These threats were soon followed with their effect. The Philistins and Arabians, who lie to the south of Palestine, made an inroad upon the territories of Judah, ravaged them, plundered the King's palace, carried away his wives and his children, so that he had none remaining with him except Jehoahaz the youngest. Besides all this, God afflicted him with a cruel Dysentery, which tormented him for two years, and brought him to the grave. The people refused to pay him the same honours which they had paid his predecessors, by burning a great quantity of spices over their bodies. He was buried in Jerusalem, but not in the Royal Sepulchre. He was succeeded by Ahaziah, otherwise Jehoahaz.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehoshaphat (I)

I. JEHOSHAPHAT, the son of Ahilud, David's, and afterwards Solomon's Secretary. 1 Kings iv. 3.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehoshaphat (II)

II. JEHOSHAPHAT, the son of Paruah, Solomon's Intendant in the Tribe of Issachar. 1 Kings iv. 17.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehoshaphat (III)

III. JEHOSHAPHAT, King of Judah, the son of Asa, who also was King of Judah, and Azabah the daughter of Shilhi. He ascended the throne at the age of five and thirty, and reigned five and twenty years. He had always the advantage over Baasha King of Israel, and placed good garisons in the Cities of Judah, and in those of Ephraim also, which were conquered by his father. God was always with him, because he was always faithful to him. He demolished the High-Places and Groves, where abominable actions were committed. In the third year of his reign he sent some of the Officers of his Court, together with some of the Priests and Levites, into all the Cantons of Judah, with the book of the Law, in order to instruct the people in their duty. God blessed the zeal of this Prince in such a manner, that he was feared and reverenced by all his neighbours. The Philistins and Arabians were tributaries to him. He built several Houses in Judah in the form of Towers, and fortified several Cities. He generally kept an army of eleven hundred thousand men without reckoning the Troops in his strong holds. This number seems prodigious for so small a State as that of Judah; and but one quarter of these troops did service probably at a time. But after all, Jehoshaphat was able to set on foot such a number of soldiers. [1 Kings xxii. and 2 Chron. xviii. In the year of the World 3107, before J. C. 893, before the Vulgar Æra 897.] him with, which is, the alliance which he made with Ahab King of Israel. Some time after he went to visit Ahab at Samaria; and Ahab invited him to march with him against Ramoth-Gilead. Jehoshaphat consented: but desired first, that some Prophet of the Lord should be consulted concerning this undertaking. Micaiah therefore, the son of Imlah, was sent for, who said, I saw all Israel scattered upon the hills like sheep without shepherds. And the Lord said, These have no master; let them return every man to his house in peace. Immediately the King said to Jehoshaphat, Did I not tell thee, that he would prophesy no good concerning me, but evil? Ahab therefore commanded Micaiah to be put in prison; and notwithstanding marched against Ramoth with Jehoshaphat in his company; to whom Ahab said, That he would change his dress before he went to the battle; but advised him to put on his usual habit. Now the King of Syria, who defended Ramoth, had given orders, that his Officers should keep close to the King of Israel only, and bring him alive or dead to him. When therefore they perceived Jehoshaphat with the Royal Ornaments, they made no question but that he was the King of Israel; and the heat of the engagement was near him. But Jehoshaphat began to cry unto the Lord; whereby he was discovered, and they ceased pursuing him. In the mean time it happened, that a Syrian Soldier shot a random arrow, and pierced Ahab, who thereupon died in his chariot. As for Jehoshaphat, he returned in peace to Jerusalem. But the Prophet Jeush, the son of Hanani, reproved him smartly for assisting Ahab; and Jehoshaphat repaired this fault by the good regulations which he [2 Chron. xix. 1, 2, 3, &c.] made, and the good order which he established in his dominions, both as to civil and religious affairs, by appointing honest and able Judges, by regulating the Discipline and Order of the Priests and Levites, and by enjoining them to perform punctually their duty. After this, the Moabites, Ammonites, and Meonians, people of Arabia Petræa, declared war against Jehoshaphat. [2 Chron. xx. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the World 3108, before J. C. 892, before the Vulgar Æra 896.] They advanced as far as Hazazon-Tamar, otherwise called En-gedi. Jehoshaphat had recourse to fasting and prayer. He went with all the people to the Temple, and put up his prayers to God. Then Jahaziel the son of Zechariah, animated by the Spirit of the Lord, encouraged the King, and promised from God, that the next day he should obtain the victory without fighting. Accordingly these people being the next day assembled against Judah, they were struck with a frenzy, and killed one another; so that Jehoshaphat and his army had nothing to do but to gather up the spoils and arms of the dead.

[In the year of the World 3115, before J. C. 885, before the Vulgar Æra 889.] Some time after, Jehoshaphat made a covenant with Ahaziah King of Israel. They equipp'd jointly a fleet in the port of Ezion-gaber upon the Red Sea, in order to go to Tarshish. God did not herein approve the conduct of Jehoshaphat, because Ahaziah King of Israel was an impious Prince. Eliezer the son of Dodovah of Mareshah, came to Jehoshaphat, and said to him, Because thou hast made an alliance with Ahaziah, God hath disappointed thy designs, and thy ships have been shattered, so as to be unfit for their voyage to Tarshish. This Prince continued all the rest of his life to walk in the ways of the Lord, without being diverted from them. Nevertheless he did not destroy the High-places, and the hearts of his people were not turned intirely to the God of their fathers. Jehoshaphat died after a reign of five and One thing the Scripture reproaches twenty years, and was buried in the Royal Sepulchre. His son Jehoram reigned in his stead a.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehoshaphat

JEHOSHAPHAT, The Valley of JEHOSHAPHAT. Joel says, that, The Lord will gather all nations in the Valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there. Abenezra is of opinion, that this Valley is that where King Jehoshaphat obtained so signal a victory, and with so much ease, against the Moabites, Ammonites, and Meonians of Arabia Petræa. 2 Chron. xx. 1, 2, 3, &c. This Valley lay somewhere towards the Dead Sea, beyond the Wilderness of Tekoah; and after this event it was called the Valley of Blessing, 2 Chron. xx. 26. Others think, that the Valley of Jehoshaphat lies between the walls of [Brocard.] Jerusalem, and the Mount of Olives, and that it is watered with the Brook Kidron, which runs through the midst of this Vale. St. Cyril of Alexandria, without farther explaining himself, says, that this Valley is but some furlongs distant from Jerusalem. Lastly, there are some who maintain, that the ancient Hebrews had no distinct knowledge of any particular place under the name of the Valley of Jehoshaphat; and Joel intended by it to shew in general the place, where God was to exercise his Judgement against the Nations, and will appear at the last Judgement with all the brightness of his Majesty. Jehoshaphat in Hebrew signifies the Judgement of God. See the Commentators upon Joel iii. 2. It is very [Vet. Tirin.] probable, that the Valley of Jehoshaphat, [xi. 1, 2, 3, &c.] symbolical, as well as the Valley of Slaughter, Vallis concisionis, spoken of in the same Prophet; and in the same Chapter. Joel iii. 14. From this passage the Jews, and many Christians, have been of opinion, that the last Judgement will be solemnized in the Valley of Jehoshaphat.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehosheba

JEHOSHEBA, or Jehoshabeath, the daughter of Joram, and sister of Ahaziah King of Judah; she married Jehoiada the High-Priest, and rescued the Royal Family of Judah from intire destruction, by saving young Joash, then but a year old, out of the hands of Athaliah, while she was murdering all the Princes of the Royal Family. See JOASH, JEHOIADA, and ATHALIAH.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehovah

[Gen. iv. 26. In the year of the World 3126, before J. C. 874, before the Vulgar Æra 878.] JEHOVAH. This is the Name of God, a Name ineffable and mysterious, which God did not declare to the Patriarchs of old, before Moses: a Nomen meum Adonai non indicavi eis. The Hebrew instead of Adonai reads Jehovah. I appeared unto Abraham, and unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of God Almighty, but by my name Jehovah was I not known to them. Shaddai signifies he who is self-sufficient; Jehovah[1], he who subsists of himself, and gives being and existence to others. When God declared to Moses, that he had not made known his name Jehovah to the old Patriarchs, he did not mean, that they did not know him under the idea of God the Creator, who was selfexisting; but that he had not revealed this name, which so well expresses his nature, and by which it was his Will principally to be invoked afterwards. It is true, Moses after uses this name in Genesis; for example, he says, that the Sons of Seth called themselves by the name of Jehovah; and that Abraham sware and lift up his hand to Jehovah. And lastly, the Lord said to Abraham, I am the [Gen. xiv. 22. Gen. xv. 7.] God Jehovah that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, &c. But the reason of this is, that Genesis was written after God had revealed this name to Moses. He uses it in this book by way of anticipation, and because at the time when he wrote, the Jews used commonly the name Jehovah. Herein he followed the custom of his time, not of that when the Patriarchs were in being, whose lives he was giving some account of.

Finally, when we pronounce Jehovah, we follow the croud; for we do not know distinctly the manner wherein this proper and incommunicable Name of God should be pronounced, which is written with jod, hé, vau, hé, and comes from the verb. pressed it differently. Sanchoniathon writes Jevo[2]; Diodorus[3] the Sicilian, Macrobius[4], St. Clemens[5] Alexandrinus, St. Jerom[6], and Origen[7], pronounce Jao; Epiphanius[8], Theodoret[9], and the Samaritans, Jabé or Javé: we find likewise in the Ancients, Jahoh, Javo, Jaou, Jaod. Lewis Capellus is for Javo; Drusius for Javé; Mercer for Jehevah; Hottinger for Jehva. The Moors call their God Juba, whom some believe to be the same as Jehovah. The Latins in all probability took their Jovis or Jovis Pater from Jehovah. It is certain that the four Letters which we pronounce Jehovah, may likewise be expressed by Javo, Jaho, Jaon, Jevo, Jave, Jehvah, &c. and that the ancient Hebrews were not unacquainted with the pronunciation of it, since they recited it in their prayers, and in the reading of their sacred Books.

But the Jews, after the Captivity of Babylon, out of an excessive and superstitious respect for this holy name, left off the custom of pronouncing it, and forgot the true pronunciation of it. I am of opinion, that the Septuagint, that is to say, the Greek Interpreters who are cited by this name, were already accustom'd not to pronounce it, since in their translation, they generally render it Kyrios, the Lord. Origen[10], St. Jerom[11] and Eusebius[12], testify, that still in their time the Jews left the name of Jehovah written in their copies with Samaritan characters, instead of writing it in the common Chaldee or Hebrew characters; which shews their veneration for this Holy Name, and the fear which they were under, lest strangers, who were not unacquainted with the Chaldee letters and language, should discover, and misapply it. These precautions notwithstanding did not hinder the Heathens from misapplying it frequently. Origen[13] informs us, that they made use of it in their Exorcisms, and in their charms against diseases. Clemens Alexandrinus[14] relates, that those Egyptians who were permitted to enter into the Temple of the Sun, carried the name of Jaou about with them. Trallian gives us some magick verses against the Gout, wherein there was the name of Jas or Jaath.

Philo says[15], that after the punishment of the Blasphemer, who was stoned to death in the wilderness, God published a new Law by Moses, importing that, Whosoever curseth the Lord, he shall surely be put to death. Thus the Septuagint and Theodoret read Leviticus xxiv. 15. whereas in the Hebrew and the Vulgate (Elohim) shall bear the punishment of his sin, and he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, he shall surely be put to death. Philo adds, that this Law of Moses is profoundly wise, and that the first part of his Ordinance forbids blaspheming the false Gods of the Gentiles; and the second requires, that the name of God should not be used unseasonably; that it is a crime worthy of death, and punishable in the last degree for any man to make use of this Holy name negligently, and only to adorn and fill up his discourse. Josephus[16] expresses himself with the same reserve concerning the name of God. He says, that God having appeared to Moses in the burning bush, revealed his name to him, which he had never discovered to any man, and I, says he, am not permitted to mention.

The Jews say, that after their return from the Captivity, the name of God was pronounced once only in the Temple, and this upon the great day of Expiation; moreover, a noise was made on purpose, when the High-Priest pronounced it in the presence of a few chosen Disciples, who might hear him without the people's hearing him. But after the destruction of the Temple, they forbore intirely to pronounce it; for which reason the true pronunciation of it has been lost. The Jews never at all mention the sacred name of Jehovah[17], but say instead of it, Adonai or Elohim, as often as they read or pray. St. Jerom has imitated them by translating the passage of Exodus vi. 3. I have not discovered to them my name Adonai, instead of, my name Jehovah. The modern Hebrews tell us, that Moses by virtue of the word Jehovah engraved on his miraculous Rod, performed all the prodigies spoken of in the Scripture; and that Jesus Christ by virtue of the same, wrought all his Miracles, having while he was in the Temple stolen the ineffable name, which he put into his thigh between the skin and the flesh. They add, that we might be able to do as much, if we could come at the perfect pronunciation of this name. They flatter themselves that the Messiah at his coming into the World, will teach them this mighty Secret.

The Jews believe, that whoever knows the true pronunciation of Jehovah, or the name with four letters[18], cannot fail of bethe happiness at this day to be heard, it is owing only to their ignorance of the true pronunciation. That Simon the Just, High -Priest of their Nation, was the last who was acquainted with it; that after his death the number of prophane persons encreasing mightily, and they abusing this divine Name, others forbore to pronounce it at all; that in the room of it they substituted another composed of twelve letters[19], which the High-Priest pronounced when he gave the blessing to the people. Tarphon a famous Rabbin, believed to be the same with Tryphon, against whom St. Justin the Martyr argues in his Dialogue; Tarphon, I say, relates, that one day drawing near the Priest to hear his benediction, he perceived that he did not pronounce distinctly the twelve letters, and was satisfied with only muttering, while the Levites sung; that this proceeded from the multitude of prophane persons, to whom it was not prudence to discover this sacred Name, lest they should abuse it. In their Talmud they denounce terrible curses against those who pronounce it; they make a scruple of even trying to do it; and pretend that the Angels have not this liberty.

The very Heathens themselves seem to have had some knowledge of this great, ineffable Name. We have still an oath in Pythagoras's golden Verses to this purpose; By him who has the four Letters[20]. Upon the frontispiece of a Temple at Delphi was read, by Eusebius's relation[21], this inscription, Thou art. The Egyptians upon one of theirs put this, I am. The Heathens had certain names of their Gods, which they did not venture to pronounce. Of this Cicero[22] produces an example in his Catalogue of the Heathen Deities. Lucan says, the Earth would have trembled had any one pronounced them[23]:

————————an ille Compellendus erit quo nunquam terra vocato Non concussa tremit.

The name of Romulus was written in the publick Records like that of Jehovah among the Jews, with the four consonants which compose it. But this they did not so much out of respect, as out of fear lest any one should call away the Tutelary Gods of their City[24].

The refined very much upon the name of Jehovah. They remark, for example, that in Genesis, Moses calls God by no other name than Elohim, while he speaks of the Creation of the World; but after he had finished the Creation, he gives him the name of Jehovah: the reason they alledge for this, is, that in the Beginning God seem'd in some sort imperfect, while He was producing Beings by parts, and piece-meals: but after he had concluded his work, he took the name of Jehovah, which is a name of infinite Perfection. To this they refer the following words of Deuteronomy: [Deut. xxxii. 4.] The work of the Rock is perfect, or rather the work of God, this almighty Rock is perfect.

The letters which compose this adorable Name abound with mysteries. Jod, which is the first, denotes the Thought, the Idea of God; this is a Light which no man can approach; it is one of those things which the eye of man hath not seen, nor the mind of man comprehended: of this latter, Job spoke in the following words, Seeing it is hid from the eyes of all living, &c. The Hé, which is the last of the four letters, discovers the Unity of God and the Creator. From thence issue the four Rivers of Paradise, that is to say, the four Majesties of God, which the Jews call Schekinah.

The name of God includes all things: He who pronounces it shakes Heaven and Earth, and inspires the very Angels with terror. There is a sovereign Authority in this Name; it governs the World by its power. The other names and surnames of the Deity are ranged about it, like officers and soldiers about their King and General; from this they receive their orders, and obey. This is the fountain of graces and blessings; the channel thro' which God's mercies are convey'd to men. He who was to know all the mysteries of God's name, would be ignorant of nothing in all the ways and methods of his Justice and Providence.

[Bibl. Orient. p. 460. Hou. & p. 326. Esma.] Mussulmen frequently make use of the name, Hu or Hou, which has almost the same signification as Jehovah; that is to say, He, who is. They place this name in the beginning of their Rescripts, Passports, and Letters-Patents; they pronounce it often in their prayers: there are some who repeat it so frequently, and with so much vehemence, crying out with all their strength, hou, hou, hou, that at last they are stunn'd, and fall into fits, which they call extasies. But the great Name of God is Allah, which they pronounce often, and have great confidence in it. They say that it was by virtue of this name, that Noah made the Ark float up and down as he pleased; that Japheth engrahis sons; and by the help of this he could bring down rain when he thought proper. By this very name they say Jesus Christ wrought his Miracles. Lastly, among the Arabians, and all those who make profession of Mahometanism, the name of Allah corresponds with those of Elohim and Adonai in use among the Hebrews, and even with that of Jehovah, which is called ineffable; and from a Greek word Tetragrammaton, or of four letters, which more particularly denotes the Essence of God.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

יהוהJehovah. Κύριος. Vulg. Adonai.
Sanch. apud Euseb. Præpar. l. x. c. 9.
Diodor. Bibl. l. 2.
Macrob. Sat. l. c. 18.
Clem. Alex. l. 5. Strom.
Hieronym. seu alius sub ejus nomine in Psal. viii.
Origen. l. 6. contra Celf.
Epiph. Hæres. 40.
Theod. qu. 15. in Exod.
Fragm. Orig. in Palæograph. Græc. l. 2. c. 1.
Hieronym. in lib. Reg. Præfat. & in Ezech. ix.
Euseb. in Chronico ad 4740.
Origen. l. 1. contra Celsum.
Clem. Alex. l. 5. Stromat.
Philo de Vita Mosis. l. 3. p. 683, 684.
Antiq. l. 2. c. 5. p. 61. Ὁ Θεὸς αὐτῷ σημαίνει τὴν ἑαυτοῦ προσηγορίαν, οὐ πρότερον εἰς ἀνθρώπους παρελθοῦσαν, περὶ ἧς ἔμοι θέμις εἰπεῖν.
Translators' note. The Tetragrammaton is called by Josephus, Τὰ ἱερὰ γράμματα, τὸ φρικτὸν ὄνομα Θεῦ. And Caligula in Philo swears to him and the Ambassadors his Associates by the God who was to them ἀκαταγόμαστος. νοταμμάργαρτεΤ יהוה. Vide Medias Thillim in Psal. xii. Druf. de nomine Tetragram. c. x.
Maimonid. More Nevochim. parte 1. c. 62.
Τετρακτύς. Vide Selden. de Diis Syr. Syntag. II. c. I.
Eufeb. Præpar. l. xi. c. 11. Plutarch. Tract. de Ei inscript. forib. Templi Delph. t. 2. p. 384.
Cicero de Nat. Deorum. l. 3.

Lucan. l. 6. vf. 744, 745.
Plin. l. 28. c. 2. Constat ideo occultum (nomen) in cujus Dei tutela Roma esset, ne qui hostium simili modo evocarent.

Jehozabad (I)

I. JEHOZABAD, the son of Shomer, [2 Kings xii. 21.] was one of those murderers who assassinated Joash King of Judah, in the year of the World 3165, before Jesus Christ 835, before the Vulgar Æra 839.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehozabad (II)

II. JEHOZABAD, of the Tribe of Manasseh, one of David's gallant Officers. 1 Chron. xii. 20.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehozabad (III)

III. JEHOZABAD, the son of Obededom a Levite, and Porter belonging to the Tabernacle. 1 Chron. xxvi. 4.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehozabad (IV)

IV. JEHOZABAD, General of Jehoshaphat's army, consisting of an hundred and fourscore thousand men. 2 Chron. xxiii. 18.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehozadak

[1 Chron. vi. 14, 15.] JEHOZADAK, the son and successor of Seraiah, High-Priest of the Jews. It does not appear that he ever exercised the functions of the High-Priesthood. He died at Babylon. But his son Joshua or Jesus, returned from the Captivity, and took [Ezra iii. 2. Ezra iii. 2. viii. 2. x. 18, &c.] upon him the exercise of his Dignity after the rebuilding of the Temple, in the year of the World 3468, before Jesus Christ 532, before the Vulgar Æra 536.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehu (I)

I. JEHU. The Prophet Jehu, the son of Hanani, was sent by God about the year 3073 or 3074, before Jesus Christ 927 or 928, before the Vulgar Æra 931 or 932, to Baasha King of Israel, with directions [1 Kings xvi. 1.] to say, Forasmuch as I exalted

9 H thee out of the dust, and made thee prince over my people Israel, and thou hast walked in the way of Jeroboam, and hast made my people Israel to sin, to provoke me to anger with their sins: Behold I will take away the posterity of Baasha, and the posterity of his house, and will make thy house like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat. Him that dieth of Baasha in the city, shall the dogs eat; and him that dieth of his in the fields, shall the fowls of the air eat. The Text of the Vulgate adds, that Baasha incensed at the liberty taken by Jehu, the son of Hanani, put him to death: but in the Hebrew Text it is said only, Jehu having declared to Baasha what the Lord had pronounced against him, and that the Lord would treat his house as he had treated the house of Jeroboam; for this he slew him. It is not expressly mention'd whether whether Baasha slew Jehu, or the Lord Baasha. That which makes the latter more credible, is, that in the year of the World 3107, about thirty years after the death of Baasha, we see Jehu again, the son of Hanani, who is sent by God with reproaches from him to Jehoshaphat King of [2 Chron. xix. 1, 2, &c.] Judah. Shouldst thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? therefore is wrath upon thee before the Lord. Nevertheless, because good things are found in thee, the Lord hath spared thee. Certainly if Jehu had been put to death by Baasha, he could not have appeared so long afterwards before Jehoshaphat. Some will have it, that there were two Jehu's, the sons of Hanani: but I should chuse to say, that in the first passage which we have proposed, the death of Baasha, not that of Jehu, is intimated, rather than multiply persons without necessity. Lastly, we know nothing more of Jehu's life[1]. Hanani his father was likewise a Prophet, and is spoken of by us under his proper title.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. It is said in 2 Chron. xx. 34 Now the rest of the Acts of Jehoshaphat first and last, behold, they are written in the book of Jehu the son of Hanani, who is mentioned in the book of the Kings of Israel. From whence it appears, that the Prophets employ'd themselves in recording the transactions of their times, and that what Jehu had written of this kind, was thought worthy to be inserted in the Memoirs, wherein the several events were registred, which daily happen'd in every Prince's reign. See Theodor. Præfat. in 1 Reg.

Jehu (II)

II. JEHU, the son of Jehoshaphat[1], and grandson of Nimshi, Captain of Joram the King of Israel's troops, was appointed by God to reign over Israel, and to revenge the sins committed by the house of Ahab. The Lord had given orders to Elisha to [1 Kings xix. 16.] anoint Jehu, which order was executed by one of the sons of the Prophets, whom he sent on this errand in his room, in all probability [2 Kings ix. 1, 2, 3, &c.] that the matter might be transacted with more secrecy. The Lord spoke to Elisha, and declared his Will to him concerning Jehu, in the year of the World 3097, before the Vulgar Æra 907; and Jehu was not anointed King till 3120, before the Vulgar Æra 884, and three and twenty years after the order given for it to Elisha. Jehu was at Ramoth-Gilead, besieging the Citadel of that place, with Joram the King of Israel's army, when a young Prophet appeared, who took him aside from among the Officers of the army, in the midst of whom he was sitting; and when they were alone in a chamber, the Prophet poured oil upon his head, and said to him, Thus saith the Lord, I have anointed thee King over Israel, thou shalt extirpate the house of Ahab, and revenge the blood of the Prophets which hath been shed by Jezebel. I will root out the house of Ahab by thy hands, and treat it as I have treated that of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and that of Baasha the son of Ahijah. Jezebel shall be eaten up by the dogs in the fields of Jezreel, and no one shall do the last offices for her.

No sooner had the Prophet said this, but he opened the door and fled, lest he should be known; and Jehu returning to the place where the rest of the King's Officers were, they asked him what the matter was, and pressed him to tell what this man came for. He declared to them what had passed, and that he was a Prophet sent by God to anoint him King. Hereupon they immediately rose up, and each of them taking his cloak, they made a kind of Throne for Jehu, and sounding the Trumpets, cried, Long live King Jehu. Now Joram, King of Israel, was then at Jezreel, where he was under cure for some wounds which he had received at the siege of Ramoth. Jehu therefore gave orders, that no one should be suffered to stir out of the City; and at the same time departed, in order to go and surprize the King at Jezreel. As he drew near to the City, the Sentinel gave notice, that he saw a troop coming in great haste. Joram sent an Officer with a chariot of war, to discover who it was: but Jehu, without giving the Officer any answer, bad him follow him. Joram sent a second, and Jehu laid the same command upon him. Last of all, Joram came himself, riding in his chariot, with Ahaziah, King of Judah, in his company, who also was in his chariot; and they met Jehu in the field of Naboth of Jezreel.

[In the year of the World 3120, before J. C. 880, before the Vulgar Æra 884.] Joram asked him, Is it peace, Jehu? and he answered, What peace, so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel and her witchcrafts are so many? Joram immediately turning his bridle, and flying away, said to Ahaziah, We are betray'd. At the same time Jehu drew his bow, and smote Joram between his shoulders, pierced his heart, and killed him in his chariot. Then Jehu commanded his body to be thrown into the portion of Naboth the Jezreelite, in order to fulfil what was said by the Prophet Elijah, who had foretold, that it should happen in this manner. Ahaziah also fled, but was pursued by Jehu's orders, [See 2 Kings ix. 25.] and wounded mortally; but he got in his chariot as far as Megiddo, and there died.

Jehu went afterwards to Jezreel, where was Jezebel. As he came into the City, Jezebel, who was at her window, said to him, Can he who has killed his master hope for peace? Jehu, lifting up his head, and seeing her, commanded two or three Eunuchs, who were above, to throw her out ately, and she was trampled to death under the horses feet as they entred: the dogs too, in execution of Elijah's threatnings, did eat her; so that when Jehu sent to have her buried, they found only her bones. After this, Jehu sent to tell the inhabitants [2 Kings x. 1, 2, 3, &c.] of Samaria, who had the bringing up of Ahab's seventy children, that they might chuse any one of them whom they thought proper, and place him upon the throne. But they, overpowered by their fears, answered, that they were Jehu's servants, and would in all things obey him; so that Jehu commanding them to put to death all the King's children, and send him their heads; they executed this order the next day. Then he slew all Ahab's relations, and friends, the Great Men of his Court, and the Priests who belonged to him, and were at Jezreel.

After this he came to Samaria, and in the way met with the relations of Ahaziah King of Judah, who were going to Jezreel to salute the King and Queen's children, whose death they were not as yet acquainted with. Jehu gave directions to seize them, who were two and forty in number, and to massacre them all. A little farther, he found Jehonadab the son of Rechab, and taking him into his chariot, he said to him, Come with me, and see my zeal for the Lord. And when he was come to Samaria, he slew all those who remained of Ahab's family, without sparing one of them. Then calling the people of Samaria together, he said to them, Ahab paid some honours to Baal, but I will pay him greater. Send therefore for all the Ministers, Priests, and Prophets of Baal, in order to be present at a great festival, which I design to celebrate in honour of him. When they were all come and assembled in Baal's Temple, he commanded to give them all habits, and directed them to take particular care, that there was no stranger among them. After which he ordered his people to put them all to the sword, and not spare so much as one of them.

Therefore they were all killed in the Temple of Baal. The statue of Baal was pulled down, broken, and burnt: then the Temple itself was destroy'd, and a place was made of it for relieving the necessities of nature.

The Lord, well-pleased with the vengeance exercised by Jehu against the house of Ahab, promised him that his children should sit upon the throne of Israel to the fourth generation. But at the same [2 Kings x. 29, 31, 32.] time he is accused in Scripture for not forsaking the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, and had intro- [i. 4, 5.] The Prophet Hosea threatens him with God's vengeance in these terms; Yet a little while, and I will avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu, and will cause to cease the kingdom of the house of Israel. And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will break the bow of Israel in the valley of Jezreel. Jehu had indeed been the instrument of God, in taking vengeance on the house of Ahab, but he had likewise revenged particular injuries to himself; or rather, what he did, he had done with the spirit of animosity, and ambition. He had followed his passion rather than the Will of God. He had not kept within due bounds. God rewards his obedience, but punishes his injustice and ambition, his idolatry and the blood unjustly spilt by him. He reigned eight and twenty years over Israel, and Jehoahaz his son [2 Kings x. 35, 36.] reigned in his stead. The four descendants of his family who governed successively after him, were Jehoahaz, Joash, Jeroboam II. and Zechary. The reign of Jehu was perplexed with the war, which Hazael King of Syria carried on against him. This [2 Kings x. 33, 34.] Prince ravaged all the frontiers or extremities of the kingdom of Israel, and cut in pieces all he found there. He laid waste the whole country beyond Jordan, and the Tribes of Manasseh, Gad and Reuben, which were settled there. We do not know the time when this war commenced. It broke out probably in the beginning of Jehu's reign, when Hazael, having intelligence that Jehu had quitted Ramoth- Gilead, fell upon this country and subdued it.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

4 Reg. ix. 2. videbitis Jehu filium Josaphat, filii Namsi.

Jehu (III)

III. JEHU, the fourth son of Rehoboam, King of Judah, and Abihail. 2 Chron. xi. 19.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jehu (IV)

IV. JEHU, the son of Obed, and father of Azariah. 1 Chron. ii. 38.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeiel (I)

I. JEIEL, a Levite, who dwelt at Gibeon. 1 Chron. ix. 35.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeiel (II)

II. JEIEL, of the Tribe of Reuben. 1 Chron. v. 7.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jekameam

JEKAMEAM, the fourth son of Hebron. 1 Chron. xxiii. 19.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jekamiah

JEKAMIAH, the son of Shallum, and father of Elishama, of Caleb's family. 1 Chron. ii. 41.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jemini

[Judg. iii. 15.] JEMINI. This word is generally placed for Benjamin. Thus it is said that Gera[1] the father of Ehud, was the son of Jemini, that is to say, of the Tribe of Benjamin. And speaking of Saul, it is said, that he was [1 Sam. ix. 1.] the son of a man of Jemini, meaning, of the Tribe of Benjamin. In another place, the land of Jemini is the land of Benjamin. [1 Sam. ix. 4.] Jemini in Hebrew signifies my right hand. This is the name which Jacob gave his son, whom Rachel called Benoni, or the son of my sorrow.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. Not the grandfather, as the Author has it אהוד בן גראLXX. Ἀωδ υἱὸς Γηρά.

Jephthah

JEPHTHAH, Judge of Israel, and Successor to Jair in the government of the people; he was the son of Gilead and of [Judg. xi. 1, 2, &c.] one of his concubines; or to speak plainly, he was a native of Mizpah, the son of an harlot, and one Gilead, who having married a lawful wife, and had children by her, these children drove Jephthah from his father's house, saying, that he could not [Judg. xi. 7.] be heir with them. Jephthah retired into the land of Tob, and there he became captain of a band of thieves, and such other people as he had picked up together. At that time the Israelites beyond Jordan, seeing themselves pressed by the Ammonites, came to desire assistance from Jephthah; and that he would take upon him the command of them. Jephthah at first reproached them with the injustice which they had done him, or at least which they had not prevented, when he was forced from his father's house. But as these people were very earnest in their request, he told them that he would succour them, provided that at the end of the war they would acknowledge him for their Prince. This they consented to, and promised with an oath. This fell out in the year of the World 2817, before Jesus Christ 1183, before the Vulgar Æra 1187.

Jephthah having been acknowledged Prince of the Israelites in an assembly of the people, sent a deputation to the Ammonites, with directions to say to them, What hast thou to do with me? why art thou come to attack me and ravage my country? The King of the Ammonites answered, Because the Israelites when they came out of Egypt took my country: now therefore restore that to me, and let us live in peace. Jephthah sent other Ambassadors to the Ammonites, telling them, that the Israelites had taken nothing from them, but from the Amorites only; and that all which they possessed beyond Jordan they possessed by right of conquest. He added, if you think you have a right to enjoy all that Chemosh your God hath given you, why should not we enjoy what the Lord our God hath given us? Zippor, King of the Moabites, who lived in the time of Moses, was a witness to our conquering this country, which was then in the hands of the Amorites, yet he did not complain, nor did he desire the restitution of it; and here you come now after so long a time to demand it. If you continue your design of making an unjust war against me, let the Lord be judge, and arbitrator of this dispute between Israel and the children of Ammon.

The King of the Ammonites would not submit to these reasons, and Jephthah, who was fill'd with the Spirit of God, began to get his troops together; and to that end went over all the land which the Israelites possessed beyond Jordan. At that time he made a vow to the Lord, that if he were successful against the Ammonites, he would offer up for a Burnt-offering, whatsoever should first come out of his house to meet him. The battle being fought, Jephthah remained conqueror, and ravaged all the land of Ammon. But as he returned to his house, his only daughter came out to meet him with timbrels and dances. Hereupon Jephthah tore his clothes, and said, Ah, wretched man that I am! my child, thou hast deceived me, and art thyself deceived; for I have made a vow unto the Lord, and cannot fail in the performance of my promise. His daughter answered, My father, if thou hast made a vow unto the Lord, do with me as thou hast promised, grant me only the favour, which I now ask; Give me leave to go to the mountains for two months, that there I may bewail my virginity with my companions. Jephthah granted her this liberty for two months; after which he executed what he had promised; and his daughter died a virgin, being offered up as a burnt-sacrifice, according to the opinion of several Fathers[1] and Interpreters[2].

[Judg. xii. 1, 2, &c.] In the mean time they of the Tribe of Ephraim, jealous of the victory obtained by Jephthah over the Ammonites, passed the river Jordan in a tumultuous manner, came and complained to Jephthah, that he had not invited them to this war, and threatned to set fire to his house. Jephthah answered them, that he had sent to desire their assistance, but observing that they did not come, he put his life in his hands, and hazarded a battle. The Ephramites not being satisfied with these reasons, Jephthah assembled the people of Gilead, gave them battle, and defeated them. The conquerors not contenting themselves with putting them to flight, made themselves masters of the fords of Jordan, and when any one of Ephraim appeared upon the banks of the river, and desired to go over, the Gileadites asked, Art thou an Ephramite? If he replied, No; they said, pronounce then Schibbobeth, which signifies, an ear of corn; but if instead of Schibboleth, he said Sibboleth, without an aspiration, he was immediately taken, and killed upon the spot. So that there were two and forty thousand men of the Tribe of Ephraïm killed that day.

We know nothing more particularly [He died in the year of the World 2823, before J. C. 1177, before the Vulgar Æra 1181. a Judg. xii. 7. b Heb. xi. 32.] concerning the life and government of Jephthah, only that he judged Israel six years, and was buried in the City of Mizpah in Gilead a. St. Paul b places him among the Saints of the Old Testament, the merit of whose faith distinguished them. The fable of Iphigenia, the daughter of Agamemnon, seems to have been borrowed from the history of Jephthah. Agamemnon by mistake having killed Diana's Hind, the Goddess in a rage produced such obstacles as retarded the departure of the Fleet. Chalchas the Soothsayer was consulted, who declared, that the Gods demanded a Victim of Agamemnon's blood. Iphigenia was led to be sacrificed; but Diana, touched with compassion, placed an Hind in the room of her, which was sacrificed, and she made Priestess of Diana Orthia in Tauris, where human Victims were offered.

There is something so extraordinary in Jephthah's Vow, that notwithstanding the Scripture speaks of it in very plain and clear terms, yet such difficulties occur concerning it, as perplex the Commentators.

The Spirit of the Lord came upon Jephthah, [Judg. xi. 29, 30, 31, &c.] says the sacred writer, and he passed over Gilead and Manasseh; without doubt in order to gather troops, and form an army, which might repel the Ammonites, and deliver the Israelites for the time to come from their incursions. And he made a vow unto the Lord, and said, If thou shalt without fail deliver the children of Ammon into my hands, then it shall be, that whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt-offering.

He declares very clearly, that he will offer up for a Burnt-offering the first Person of his house that shall come forth to meet him, at his return from the defeat of the Ammonites. Observe, that he does not say, the first thing, the first animal, but the first person. Besides, he does not say barely that he will vow, consecrate, or offer him to the Lord, who should first come forth to meet him; but adds affirmatively, that he will offer him up for a Burnt-offering: Eum holocaustum offeram Domino. This is the true meaning of the text, and the Fathers so explained it, as will be seen hereafter.

Yet notwithstanding the evidence of the [Pagnin. Montan.] Text, some modern Interpreters explain it in another manner, and translate the Hebrew thus: And the thing which shall go forth out of the doors of my house when I return in peace from making [Vide Kimchi, Rab. alii, Munst. Vat. Clar. Druf. Grot. Lyr. Marian. &c. c Deut. xii. 31.] war with the Ammonites, that shall be the Lord's, and I will offer it up to him for a burnt-offering. Jephthah, say they, vows to God, whatever should come forth to meet him, whether man or beast, but not in the same manner: that is to say, if it be a man or woman, I will consecrate them to the Lord, they shall be the Lord's; if it be an unclean animal, for example, a Dog, I will kill him or redeem him. Besides, how could Jephthah be ignorant, that the sacrifice of human Victims was odious in the sight of God? Ye shall not imitate, saith the Lord c, the abominations of the Canaanites, who offered their sons and their daughters to their Gods, by causing them to pass through the fire. Would not the principal Men of the Nation, and the Priests, have opposed the execution of such a Sacrifice? Lastly, supposing it to be granted, that Jephthah had devoted his daughter, was he unacquainted with the Law which allowed him to redeem her for a moderate sum of money? He who shall have made a vow, and [Lev. xxvii. 2, 3, &c.] have vowed his life unto the Lord, shall pay the price that shall be ordained; a man from twenty to sixty years of age shall pay fifty shekels according to the weight of the Sanctuary; a woman thirty; a male-child from five to twenty shall give twenty shekels, a female of the same age ten. This is the most plausible part of what is urged to persuade us, that Jephthah did not make a vow to sacrifice his daughter to the Lord.

To these Reasons it may be replied, 1. That they who alledge them would wrest prepousterously the meaning of the Text, which says expressly, That he who should come out to meet him should be the Lord's, and should be offered up for a Burnt-sacrifice. He speaks of a person, not of a beast. 2. No one pretends to justify either the precipitate Vow of Jephthah, or his literal execution of it: it is allowed, that his Vow was not according to knowledge, and that God did not require such a victim to be offered. He had done much better if he had asked forgiveness for his imprudence, and imposed upon himself, with the advice of the High-Priest belonging to his Nation, some penalty proportioned to his fault.

[Lev. xxvii. 28, 29.] 3. The redemption of things devoted which the Law permits, is not of things devoted by anathema, but of such only as are devoted simply, without this addition: in the former case they are not redeemable. No devoted thing that a man shall devote unto the Lord, of all that he hath, both of man and beast, and of the field of his possession, shall be sold or redeemed.... none devoted which shall be devoted of men shall be redeemed; but shall surely be put to death.

9 I

The Fathers and many learned Commentators have made no difficulty to own, that Jephthah did really offer up his daughter for a Burnt-sacrifice. Josephus[3] expressly says he did. The Chaldee Paraphrast says, that He sacrificed her without consulting the High- Priest; and that if he had consulted him, he would have redeemed his daughter with a sum of money. St. Ambrose deplores the cruelty of Jephthah's promise, and the rigorous execution [Ambrof. l. 3. de Offic. c. 12. Aug. qu. 49. in Judic.] of his vow. St. Austin disapproves the conduct of Jephthah, and says, that in this particular he did what was forbidden by the Law, and not commanded by any particular order. Fecit quod ex Lege vetabatur, & nullo speciali jubebatur imperio. He supposes consequently that he literally executed his vow. St. Jerom believes, that God permitted the performance of it, to punish this imprudent father for his temerity: Ut qui improspectè [Hieron. l. 1. contra Jovinian.] voverat, errorem votorum in filiæ morte sentiret.

[Chrysost. Homil. 14. ad pop. Antioch.] St. Chrysostom observes, that God by his all-wise Providence permitted this father really to put his daughter to death, with an intention to restrain those who might hereafter be too easily induced to make such promises. This was an example very proper to inspire men with circumspection, and keep them from rash vows and promises. St. Justin the Martyr, and Theodoret, looked upon this action in [Justin. in Author. qu. ad Orthodox. q. 90. Theodor. qu. 20. in Judic. Author. qu. ad Orthodox. qu. 99.] the same view. Others are not satisfied with supposing the sacrifice of Jephthah's daughter to be a certain fact, but have approved and praised it. The Author of Questions to the Orthodox, printed in St. Justin's name, does not doubt but that the Piety to God, which induced him to sacrifice his daughter, was the reason of the Apostle's placing him among the righteous. St. Jerom expresses himself after the same manner: Jephte obtulit filiam virginem, & idcirco in enumeratione sanctorum ab [Hieron. Ep. ad Julian.] Apostolo ponitur. He says in another place, That if the Sacrifice be not laudable, at least the Spirit and Intention deserve approbation. [Hieron. in c. vii. Jer.] Non sacrificium placet, sed animus offerentis. St. Ambrose does not venture to accuse him for having executed his promise; but pities him for being under such an unhappy necessity, as to be able no way to fulfil his vow, but [Ambrof. l. 3. Offic. c. 12.] by an act of Parricide. Non possum accusare virum, qui necesse habuit implere quod voverat; sed tamen miserabilis necessitas, quæ solvitur parricidio. St. Thomas acknowledges, that the Faith and Devotion, which inclined him to make this Vow, proceeded from God, and that this was the Apostle's motive for placing [D. Thom. 2. 2. Art. 2. ad 2. q. 88. Heb. xi. 32, 33.] him among the righteous; but that which quite spoil'd his action, was his suffering himself to follow his own particular motion, in executing what he had too rashly promised. See our Dissertation on this matter, that of Lewis Capellus, Father Alexander's, and the Authors cited in our Bibliotheca Sacra.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joseph. Antiq. l. 5. c. 9. Ambros. l. 3. de Officiis, c. 12. Hieronym. l. 1. contra Jovinian. Aug. qu. 49. in Judic. Chrysost. Homil. 14. ad pop. Antioch. Auth. Quæst. ad Orthodox. qu. 99. Theodoret. qu. 20. in Judic.

Jonath. Chald. Ludov. Capell. Dissert. Sing. de voto Jeph. Serrar. Tirin. Salian. Genebr. Caiet. See our Disserta- tion on this subject prefixed to Judges.

Joseph. Antiq. l. v. c. 9. συγχωρήσας δὲ τὸν κατὰ προειρημένον χρόνον μετὰ τοῦτον διελθόντα θύσας τὴν παῖδα ὁλοκαύτωσε

Jephunneh (I)

I. JEPHUNNEH, the father of Caleb, of the Tribe of Judah. Numb. xiii 7, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jephunneh (II)

II. JEPHUNNEH, the son of Jether or Jethran, of the Tribe of Asher, a different person from the Jephunneh mentioned in the preceeding Article.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jerah

JERAH, the fourth son of Joktan. Gen. x. 26.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jerahmeel (I)

I. JERAHMEEL, the son of Kish. 1 Chron. xxiv. 29.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jerahmeel (II)

[1 Chron. ii. 9.] II. JERAHMEEL, the eldest son of Hezron, of the Tribe of Judah. Jerahmeel was the brother of Chelubai and Ram. His sons were Ram, Bunah, Oren, Ozem, Abijah and Onam. 1 Chron. ii. 25,26,27.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jerahmeel (III)

III. JERAHMEEL. King Jehoiakim commanded Jerahmeel and some others to lay hold on Baruch and Jeremiah; but God [Jerem. xxxvi. 26.] did not permit them to discover them.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jerahmeel (IV)

IV. JERAHMEEL, a Canton in the portion of Judah, towards the South of this Tribe. It was possessed by the Descendants [1 Sam. xxvii. 10. xxx. 29.] of Jerahmeel the son of Hezron. David told Achish, that he made inroads upon the Country of Jerahmeel, while he was ravaging the territories of the Amalekites, Geshurites and Gezrites.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeremiah

JEREMIAH, the son of Hilkiah, of the Priestly Race, was a native of Anathoth, a [Jer. i. 1. Jer. i. 5.] village in the Tribe of Benjamin. He was appointed for the employment of a Prophet from his mother's womb, and before his birth. When God first spake to him, and sent him with his orders to the Kings and Princes, the Priests and People of Judah, he excused himself, alledging his youth and want of eloquence. This was in the fourteenth year of his Age, and the thirteenth of Josiah's reign, in the year of the World 3375, before the Vulgar Æra 629. He continued to prophesy till after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldees, which happened in the year of the World 3416, and he died, as is believed, in Egypt, two years after, viz. in the year of the World 3418, before Jesus Christ 582, before the Vulgar Æra 586.

Jeremiah was satisfied with preaching vivâ voce, without writing any thing down till the fourth year of Jehoiakim King of Judah. Then he began to digest his Prophecies into order, as we shall take notice of by and by. We shall here give an epitome of his life, as far as we are able, observing the time of each particular passage of it. When God called Jeremiah to the prophetick Ministry, he immediately disco vered to him, that he should suffer a great deal from the Jews; but at the same time he promised him to make him as it were a wall of brass against the Kings, Princes, and People of Judah. He likewise shewed him under the figure of the branch of an Almond-tree, and under that of a pot heated [Jerem. i. 18, &c. Jer. i. 11, 12, &c.] by fire blown up by a north wind, that all Judæa was threatned with some very great Calamity, which was very near befalling them from the Chaldæans. We may say, that this is the general object of almost all the Prophecies of Jeremiah. They turn upon the sins of Judah, and the punishment which God was to inflict on them by the hands of Nebuchadnezzar King of the Chaldæans.

The Prophet begins with a sharp invective against the disorders of the Kingdom of Judah, which were extreme during the first years of Josiah's reign, which was the time, wherein these Prophecies were pronounced, and before this Prince had reformed [Jer. ch. ii. iii. iv. v. vi. vii. viii. &c. 2 Kings xxiii. 4, 5, 6, &c.] his Dominions; which he did not do till the eighteenth year of his reign. During all this time, Jeremiah endured great persecutions from the Jews. His very Relations and Fellow-Citizens, the inhabitants of the little Town of Anathoth, threatned to kill him, if he continued prophesying. But he threatens them too, that they should be put [Jer. xii. xiii. xiv. xv. xvi.] to the sword, and perish by famine. At the same time he complains to God of the prosperity which the wicked enjoy'd, while good men were afflicted and oppressed. There was a famine at that time in the land, the effect of the wrath and indignation which God had conceived against his people. About the same time, God forbad his Prophet to take a wife, and bring up children in Jerusalem, to go into any house where there was mirth and feasting, or into any house of mourning, in order to comfort those, who were in sorrow. The signification of all which was, that God had resolved to deprive his people of all peace, joy and consolation.

It is our opinion, that it was under the reign of Shallum the son of Josiah[1], that [Jer. xvi. xvii.] Jeremiah received God's orders to go to a Potter's house. There he observed a pot which broke within the Potter's hands, who [Jer. xviii.] immediately made another of the same clay, whereof the first was composed. Jeremiah declared, that this was an indication of Judah's reprobation, in whose place God was to raise up another people, which would be more faithful to him. In order to make the meaning of this Prophecy more sensibly understood, he was commanded to take an earthen Pitcher and break it before the Priests and Elders of the people in the Valley of the sons of Hinnom. From thence he went up to the Temple, where he confirmed all that he said. Pashur, the Captain of the Temple ordered him to be seized, and put into a prison belonging to the Temple, in which place he continued till the next day. Then he told Pashur, that he, his sons, and his friends should be carried into captivity.

[Jer. xxii. Jer. xxiii.] Jehoiakim King of Judah, having succeeded[2] Shallum, Jeremiah told him, that if he would be stedfast in his fidelity to God, there should be still Kings of Judah seen in his palace, with all the lustre of their Dignity about them; but that if he persevered in his irregularities, God would reduce that place to a Wilderness. But as Jehoiakim, instead of reforming, gave himself up to cruelty and avarice, and amused himself with raising costly buildings, Jeremiah threatens him with a miserable death, and tells him, that he should be deprived of the honours of burial. He farther speaks against Coniah the brother of Jehoiakim, and foretels to him, that he should be delivered up into the hands of the Chaldæans, and should never see any Prince of his family upon the throne of Judah. He declaims strongly against these two Princes, and describes them to be cruel Pastors, who instead of feeding their flock, devour and scatter it.

About the same time, Jeremiah going up to the Temple, foretold clearly the Destruction [Jer. xxvi.] of it. Whereupon the Priests and false Prophets laid hands on him, and declared, that he had incurr'd the penalty of death. The Princes of the people being come thither to judge him, Jeremiah with undaunted resolution told them, that he had said nothing but by God's order; and that unless they were converted, they would soon see the effect of his menaces. This discourse mollified his Judges; they acquitted and dismissed him, and justified him by the example of the prophet Micah, who had foretold the same thing under King Hezekiah, without suffering at all for it.

Before the fourth year of Jehoiakim, Jeremiah [In the year of the World 3398, and the fourth year of Jehoiakim. Jer. xlvi. xlvii. xlviii. xlix.] prophesied against several people bordering upon Judæa; such as the Egyptians, Philistins, Tyrians, Phœnicians, Edomites, Ammonites, Moabites, and the inhabitants of Damascus, Kedar, Hazor, &c. for Jeremiah was appointed to be the Prophet of the Gentiles; Prophetam in gentibus dedite: as St. Paul was to be the Apostle of the Gentiles. The Prophet therefore threatens all these people to make them drink the cup of God's wrath. But this prophecy was not perfectly fulfill'd, till after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldæans.

In the fourth year of Jehoiakim, Nebuchadnezzar was sent into Judæa by his father Nabopolassar. He laid siege to Jerusalem, took Jehoiakim and many other Jews, [In the year of the World 3398, before J. C. 602, before the Vulgar Æra 606. Jer. xlv. xlvi. xlvii. &c.] among whom was Daniel, and his companions. He designed to carry them all captives to Babylon; but he set Jehoiakim at liberty, and was content with having the rest of the captives conducted thither. In this year Jeremiah positively foretold the captivity of the Jews, and that it should endure seventy years, after which God would punish the Chaldæans and Babylonians in their turn. At the same time he foretold once more that the several people bordering upon the Jews should be made to drink of the cup of God's wrath to an excessive degree.

In this fourth year likewise of Jehoiakim, the Prophet received God's order to set down every thing in writing which had been revealed to him, from the thirteenth year of [Jer. xxxvi.] Josiah to that time. Jeremiah obey'd. He dictated his prophecies to his Disciple Baruch, and directed him to go and read them in the Temple, he himself not being in a condition to go thither, because he was in fetters, with which he was loaded by the King's command. Baruch therefore in the fifth year of Jehoiakim went to the Temple, and upon the great day of Expiation, he read before the Assembly of the people the unwelcome predictions wherewith Jeremiah menaced them. Micaiah, the son of Gemariah, went and gave intelligence of this to the Princes and Magistrates, who sent for Baruch and the Book which he had read publickly. The King was informed of all that had passed, and Baruch was examined concerning the manner, wherein this volume was dictated by Jeremiah. He answered, that the Prophet dictated it to him by heart, without hesitating, and as if he had been reading in a book. The Magistrates directed Baruch to withdraw, and to lie concealed with Jeremiah: in the mean time, they carried the book to the King, who had three or four pages of it read in his presence: but upon hearing the contents of it, he cut it with a pen-knife, and threw it into the fire, which was burning before him. At the same time he commanded Baruch and Jeremiah to be seized, but God did not permit them to be found. Jeremiah received orders a second time to dictate once more to Baruch what was thus burnt, and God caused many new things to be added.

Jeremiah one day, by God's order, introduced the Rechabites into the Temple, and had wine presented to them. They excused themselves from drinking any of it, saying that Jonadab, one of their Ancestors, had forbidden them to do so, as also to dwell in houses and cities, and allowed them to lodge in tents only. They added, that nothing but necessity had induced them to come into the city, the Chaldæans being in possession of the country, and not suffering them to live there in peace. From this circumstance we may judge, that this fell out during the siege of Jerusalem, in the seventh and last year of Jehoiakim. Jeremiah [In the year of the World 3405, before J. C. 595, before the Vulgar Æra 599.] took occasion from this answer to reproach the Jews with the little submission which they paid to God's Laws, while the Rechabites shewed so much deference to the orders of one of their Ancestors.

In some little time after, Jehoiakim was taken, killed, and thrown by the Chaldæans into a common sewer. His son Jehoiachin succeeded him, and reigned three months only. He too was taken by the Chaldæans, and carried away captive to Babylon. After Jehoiachin, Zedekiah reigned from the year of the World 3405 to 3416, which is the year wherein Jerusalem was taken by the Chaldæans.

[Jer. xxvii.] The Kings of Moab, Ammon, Edom, Tyre, and Sidon, sent Ambassadors to Zedekiah in the beginning of his reign. To each of these Ambassadors, Jeremiah made a present of a yoke to carry to their Masters, with orders to tell them from God, that whosoever should refuse to submit willingly to Nebuchadnezzar, should be compelled to become subject to his Dominion. Jeremiah said the same thing to Zedekiah. And as the Prophet wore bonds and yokes upon his neck, as so many indications to the Israelites of their approaching captivity, and subjection to the Chaldæans, a certain false Prophet, whose name was Hananiah, laid hold of these bonds and yokes, which were upon the neck of Jeremiah, and breaking them publickly, he said, After this manner will the Lord break the yoke which Nebuchadnezzar would impose upon the Jews. As Jeremiah was retiring with great concern, God secretly directed him to return, and tell Hananiah, that instead of the wooden yoke which he had broken, King Nebuchadnezzar would put another on them made of iron: and for your part, Hananiah, said he, since you abuse the name of God with your lyes, you shall die before the end of this Year. Accordingly he died two months after this prediction.

We are of opinion, that it was in the reign of Zedekiah that Jeremiah received God's orders to go to some cavern near the Euphrates, and hide there a linnen Girdle. Some time after he returned to the same place, and there found the Girdle all rotted, which signified God's desertion of Judah, which heretofore he had stuck as close to, as a Girdle. In the fourth year of the same same Prince, Seraiah, Baruch's brother, having been sent to Babylon, in all probability [In the year of the World 3409, before J. C. 591, before the Vulgar Æra 595.] to desire of Nebuchadnezzar the restitution of the Vessels belonging to the Temple, Jeremiah gave him the prophecies, which he had written against Babylon, with directions to read them to the captive Jews, and after that to fasten them to a stone, and throw them into the river Euphrates. Jeremiah wrote again another time to the same captives by Gemariah, whom the King sent to Babylon, advising them to settle in that country, to build houses and marry there, because their captivity was to last seventy years; after the expiration of which, the Lord would deliver them. One Shemaiah, who was then at Babylon, wrote to Zephaniah, who was one of the Chief Priests, and reproved him for permitting Jeremiah to write these things to the captives, and for neglecting to imprison him upon this occasion. Zephaniah read the letter to Jeremiah, and this Prophet wrote again to the captives of Babylon, and foretold to Shemaiah, that he should die in captivity, and that neither he, nor any of his posterity should see the deliverance of the people of Judah.

While Nebuchadnezzar was carrying on the siege of Jerusalem in the tenth year of Zedekiah's reign, Jeremiah, who was [In the year of the World 3414, before J. C. 586, before the Vulgar Æra 590.] continually prophesying, that the City would be taken, and the people reduced to captivity, was imprisoned in the Court belonging to the Palace. At that time Hanameel, the son of Jeremiah's Uncle, visited the Prophet in his confinement, and told him, that the right of redeeming such a field at Anathoth, the place of his nativity, was his. Jeremiah bought it, sealed the writings, and delivered the money for it. He put the writings into Baruch's hands, [xxxiii.] and ordered him to keep them, because, added he, the time will come, when this land will be again cultivated and inhabited. During the same siege, the King and the Inhabitants of Jerusalem set their slaves at liberty, because it was the Sabbatical Year; and the view of their present danger made them more exact in the observance of the Law. But Nebuchadnezzar having for some time left the siege, in order to make head against the King of Egypt, who made a shew of coming to its relief, the King and People took their slaves again, without considering their Word, or the Law of God. Jeremiah hereupon rose up against them, and threatned them in a terrible manner. After the siege was broke up, his liberty was given him, and Zedekiah sent to him, recommending himself to his prayers. The Prophet sent the King word, that Nebuchadnezzar [Jerem. xxxvii.] would return against the City, that he would take it, and reduce it to ashes. As he was preparing to retire to Anathoth, the place of his nativity, the guards seized him as a deserter, and the Princes threw him into a dungeon, where his life was in great danger by reason of the incommodiousness of the place. Zedekiah some time after sent to know of him, whether he had any new Revelation. Jeremiah told him, that he would infallibly be delivered into the hands of the Chaldæans, and desired him to procure his release out of the place of his confinement. The King granted this favour to him, and appointed bread to be given him every day for his sustenance, as long as there should be any in the City.

Nebuchadnezzar returning to the siege of Jerusalem, blocked it up closer than before; and Zedekiah having sent to ask Jeremiah [Jer. xxi.] whether he had any thing good to communicate to him, he answered the persons employ'd on this errand, that the destruction of the King and Grandees was resolved on; but as for the people, that they of them who should surrender to the Chaldæans would have their lives given them, and that they, who should persist obstinately in their design of abiding in the City, would be destroyed with it. As this Prophet continued to foretel the calamities which would befall the City, the Great Men of Jerusalem made their complaints to Zedekiah, who permitted them to do what they pleased with Jeremiah. They let him down therefore with cords into a well, where there was no water, but only mud; here the Prophet must have very soon perished, if Ebedmelech had not given notice of it to the King, who commanded him to be taken out of this place. Notwithstanding, [Jerem. xxxviii.] he was still left in the court of the prison, and there continued till the City was taken, which happened some time after, in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, of the World 3416, before Jesus Christ 584, before the Vulgar Æra 588.

Jeremiah was taken with other captives, and carried to Ramath: but as Nebuchadnezzar [Jer. xxxix. 11,12,&c. xl. 1—6. xli.] had expressly charged Nabuzaradan, the General of his troops, to take care of Jeremiah, and leave him at liberty to do as he thought fit; Nabuzaradan gave him the choice of going with him to Babylon, or of staying in Judæa with the remainder of the people. The Prophet accepted this last offer, and went to Gedaliah at Mizpah, where likewise many of the Jews, who had been dispersed into different places by the war, came and joined him. There they lived in peace and security, when Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, attended with ten men, came to Gedaliah at Mizpah, and treacherously murdered him. But he was pursued by Johanan the son of Kareah, and by him obliged to let go the booty which he had 9 K taken taken, and to fly himself with eight men in his company, to the Ammonites.

Johanan having got together as many Jews as he could find, appointed them to [Jer. lxii.] meet at Bethlehem, where they consulted Jeremiah, to know whether they should stay in Judæa, or retire into Egypt. The Prophet desired time to consult God; and at ten days end answered them, that if they went into Egypt, they would there perish by the sword, famine, and pestilence; and that if they continued in the land of Judah, God would protect and preserve them. The principal of the people hereupon began to mutiny, and asserted, that this answer did not proceed from God, but was suggested by Baruch, to divert them from going into Egypt. They resolved therefore to go thither, and compell'd Jeremiah and Baruch to accompany them. There this Prophet uttered several predictions against the Jews and Egyptians, told them that Nebuchadnezzar would invade the country, and described the very place where he would erect his throne; threatned the King of Egypt, that God would give him up into the hands of the Chaldæans, as he had already served Zedekiah. This is the account of Jeremiah's life, which we have collected from his own writings.

Several of the Ancients[3] maintain, that he was put to death at Taphnis in Egypt, by the Jews, who were not able to bear his menaces and reproaches; and they explain these words in the Epistle to the Hebrews, They were [Heb. xi. 37.] stoned, as relating to his death. Some Rabbins are of opinion that he returned into Judæa, and others will have it that he went to Babylon, and there died. Some of the Primitive Fathers[4] tell us, that as Elijah did not die, so neither did he; because the Scripture says nothing of his sickness, and because the Apostles answered Jesus Christ, who asked [Matth. xxvi. 14.] them what the Jews said of him, that some took him for Elias, others for Jeremiah. But the common and general opinion of Divines, is, that he died, and must one day rise again. Beside the Book, which contains his prophecies, we have his Lamentations in five Chapters, which are mournful songs composed upon the occasion of those calamities which befel Jerusalem in its declining state, and upon the intire destruction of it by the Chaldæans. This opinion to us appears to have the best foundation. Others[5] think that Jeremiah composed them upon the death of the pious King Josiah. It is certain that he wrote [2 Chron. xxxv. 25.] Lamentations on this subject; but they have not been handed down to us. You have here what we read in the Chronicles relating to these Lamentations: And all Judah and Jerusalem mourned for Josiah. And Jeremiah lamented for him, and all the singing-men and singing-women spake of Josiah in their Lamentations to this day, and made them an ordinance in Israel. He is said likewise to be the Author of the cxxxviith Psalm, and some assert that he with Ezekiel composed the lxvth. There are Authors who affirm that he compiled the two Books of Kings, because the last chapter of Jeremiah is the same with the last chapter in the second Book of Kings. But the reason of this is, the last chapter of Jeremiah was taken from the second Book of Kings to serve as a supplement to his Prophecy. There are citations in the Books of the[6] Maccabees from particular writings of Jeremiah, which were still to be seen in the year of the World 3880, before Jesus Christ 120, and 124 years before our Vulgar Æra. But these writings are lost. Lastly, the Fathers often cite Baruch under the name of Jeremiah; because Baruch is generally mentioned at the end of his master's prophecies.

Jeremiah appeared after his death to Judas Maccabæus with that holy High-Priest Onias in his company, and gave him a sword of gold, very bright and glittering, with these words, Take this holy sword, the [2 Macc. xv. 13.] gift of God, with which thou shalt wound the adversaries. At the same time Onias shewing him Jeremiah, said, This is a lover of the brethren, who prayeth much for the people, and for the holy City.

The Alexandrian Chronicle[7] relates, [Chronic. Pasch. p. 156, 157.] that Jeremiah being in Egypt, prophesied to the Egyptian Priests, that their Idols would be overthrown by an earthquake, when the Saviour of the World should be born, and lying in a manger; for which reason they had from that time a Virgin represented with a child lying in a manger, and paid divine honours to him. King Ptolemy asking the Priests the reason of this, this, they told him what Jeremiah had declared prophetically to their Ancestors. This Chronicle adds, that Alexander the Great going one day to this Prophet's tomb, and being informed of what he had fore-told concerning his person and conquests, ordered his body to be removed to Alex-andria, and a magnificent monument to be erected for him. John Moschus, in his Pratum Spirituale[8], relates likewise this last circumstance, and adds, that Jeremiah was very much honoured in that part of Alexandria called Tetraphyla.

Eupolemus, who is cited in Eusebius[9], informs us also of some particularities concerning the life of Jeremiah, wherein there is no more certainly than in those which we have produced out of the Alex-andrian Chronicle. This Author says, that Jeremiah having declared to the idolatrous Jews, that their destruction was near, King Jehoiakim resolved to have him burnt alive. But the Prophet foretold to him how the Jews, who should be carried in captivity to Babylon, would make use of that very wood, wherewith he designed to burn him, in dressing provisions for the Babylonians, and in digging ditches for them round about the Euphrates and Tigris. Nebuchad-nezzar being informed of this prediction, engaged Assibazus King of the Medes to accompany him in the war, which he proposed to undertake against the Jews; and after he had subdued Samaria, Galilee, Scythopolis and the land of Gilead, he de-stroy'd Jerusalem, took Jehoiakim, and carried away the riches of the Temple, excepting the Ark, and Tables of the Law, which he left with Jeremiah. There are several things in this account, which are not warrantable. But as to this last cir-cumstance of the Ark, we read in the second Book of Maccabees, that Jeremiah having taken the sacred fire, concealed it in a cistern, where, when the Jews re-turned from the captivity, they found only some muddy water, which however took fire when it was poured upon the Altar; and that the same Prophet removed the Tabernacle and the Ark to Mount Nebo, and there hid them in a cave, where they still remain to this day.

Jeremiah was all his life-time exposed to the ill treatment of the Jews, whose irregularities he was continually reproving. [Ecclus. xlix. 7.] The Author of the Book of Ecclesiasticus, in the Encomium which he gives us of this Prophet, seems to draw his character from the persecutions endured by him. They entreated him evil, who nevertheless was a Prophet sanctified in his mother's womb. St. Jerom[10] observes, that Jeremiah's style is lower and more neg-lected, than Isaiah's for example, and some others of the Prophets. This defect he ascribes to this Prophet's birth; for he was born and educated at Anathoth, which was a village or little country town. There are other Criticks[11] who discover a sublimity, and greatness in his style. Grotius thinks with reason, that his talent lay principally in touching and exciting the passions of tenderness and pity. The Lamenta-tions are a master-piece in this kind.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Josiah was kill'd in the year of the World 3394, before the Vulgar Æra 3010.

Shallum reigned but three months. Jehoiakim was put in his place the same year, being the year 3394. The Prophecies of Jeremiah against Jehoiakim may have been pronounced in the year 3395.

Tertull. adverf. Gnostic. c. 8. Hieronym. l. 2. contra Jovinian. Epiphan. de vita & morte Prophet. Doroth. in Synopsi. Ita & Hebræorum traditio.

Victorin. in Apoc. xi. 3. & plures apud Hilar. in Matt. can. 20.

Hieronym. in Zach. xii. 11. Ita Chald. Interpp. Raban. Maldonat. Bonav. Hugo. Thomas Figuier. Vat. Jun. Vide & Joseph. Antiq. l. x. c. 6.

2 Macc. ii. 1. Invenitur in descriptionibus Jeremiæ Prophetæ.

Translators' note. This Chronicon had first the name of Fasti Siculi, because first found in an old Library in Sicily, and from thence convey'd to Rome, where Sigonius and Onufrius made use of it, and quote it under the name of Fasti Siculi. But Sylburgius having gotten another copy of it, presented it to Hæschelius, who gave it to the Library at Augsburg in Germany, from whence Rader the Jesuit published it with a Latin version Anno Dom. 1624. under the title of Chronicon Alexandrinum. He gave it this title, because in the Manuscript from whence he printed it, there was a short Preface premised under the name of Peter Patriarch of Alexandria. See Prideaux's Connect. P. 2.

Joan. Mosch. Prat. Spirit. c. 77. p. 877.

Eupolem. apud Euseb. Præpar. l. 9. c. 39.

Hieronym. Præfat. in lib. 6. Comment. in Jerem.

Sanct. Proleg. 2. in Jerem. Du Pin. Frassen.

Jeremiah (II)

II. JEREMIAH, of the City of Libnah, was the father of Hamutal the wife of Josiah King of Judah, and mo-ther of Jehoahaz and Zedekiah. 2 Kings xxiv. 18.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeremiah (III)

III. JEREMIAH, a very valiant man of the Tribe of Manasseh, and Head of his Family. 1 Chron. v. 24.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeremiah (IV)

IV. JEREMIAH. There were two Heroes of this name in David's Armies. 1 Chron. xii. 4, 10, 13.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeribai

JERIBAI, one of David's brave Of-ficers. 1 Chron. xi, 36.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jericho

JERICHO, a City in the Tribe of Benjamin, about seven leagues from Jerusalem, and two from Jordan. Moses calls it the city of Palm-trees, by reason of the great number of these trees growing in the plain of Jericho. Josephus says, that in the territory belonging to this City there were not only many Palm-trees, but likewise the Balsam-tree, which produced that precious liquor so much esteemed by the Ancients. The Valley of Jericho was watered with a rivulet which formerly was salt and bitter; but was afterwards sweet-ned by the Prophet Elisha, so that its wa-ters made the plain of Jericho not only one of the most agreeable, but one of the most fertile spots in that country. Jericho was the first City in the Land of Canaan, taken by Joshua. He at first sent Spies thither, who were received by a woman named Rahab; by her they were lodged in her own house, and preserved from fal-ling into the King of Jericho's hands, who had sent people to seize on them. She obliged them to promise her, that when the City should be taken, she and her whole family should have their lives given them. See the Article RAHAB.

Joshua received God's orders to lay siege to Jericho, some few days after his [Josh. vi. 1, 2, 3, &c.] passage over Jordan, and perhaps on the evening before, or upon the very day of the first Passover, which the Hebrews celebrated in the Land of Canaan. The manner wherein the siege was to be formed, had something very extraordinary in it. God commanded them once every day for seven days together to make a tour about the City. The soldiers marched first, in all probability out of the reach of the Enemies arrows. After them followed the Priests, who sounded the trumpets; then they who carried the sacred Coffer, wherein the Tables of the Law were included; and last of all, the whole body of the people disposed in the same order which they observed in their marches through the Wilderness. This ceremony was repeated till the seventh day, upon which they marched seven times round about the City; and at the seventh, while the trumpets were sounding, and all the people making great cries, the walls of themselves fell down. The first day, the Rabbins say, was Sunday, and the seventh, the Sabbath-day. During the six first days, all the people continued in profound silence; but on the seventh, Joshua commanding them to shout, they every where exalted their voices; and the walls being overthrown, they all entred the City, every man in the place which was opposite to him.

Now God had ordained that the City should be devoted to the Curse, and that no one should touch any thing, which was found in it; that they should spare neither man nor beast, that they should put all to the sword without distinction of age or condition; and that Rahab only and her family should be excepted out of this general law. All this was accordingly executed. They set fire to the City, and consecrated to the Lord all the gold, silver and brass which were to be found in it. Then Joshua pronounced this imprecation, and said, Cursed be the man before the Lord, who shall raise up and rebuild Jericho: let his first-born die while he lays the foundation of it, and may he lose his youngest child, when he hangeth up the gates. This [2 Kings xvi. 34. About the year of the World 3090, before J. C. 910, before the Vulgar Æra 914.] imprecation made by Joshua was not vain. Hiel of Bethel about five hundred and thirty seven years after this undertook to rebuild Jericho. He lost his eldest son Abiram as he was laying the foundations, and his youngest son Segub, when he hung up the gates.

We are not however to imagine, that there was no City of the name of Jericho in this Canton till the time of Hiel of Bethel. There was a City of Palm-trees, the same probably as Jericho, in the time [Judg. iii. 13.] of the Judges, under Eglon King of the Moabites. David's Ambassadors, who had been insulted by the Ammonites, dwelt at [2 Sam. x. 4, 5.] Jericho, till their beards were grown again. There was therefore a City of Jericho at that time; but it was not built upon the foundations of the old one; it lay somewhere in the neighbourhood of this first [a Doubdan, Voyage de la Terre Sainte, c. 37. b Joseph. de Bello, l. 5. c. 4.] Jericho a. Josephus sufficiently distinguishes these two places, when he says b, that even in his time near ancient Jericho, which was destroyed by Joshua, there was the spring of a Fountain which abounded with water, and was sufficient to moisten the whole plain. But after Hiel of Bethel had repaired old Jericho, no one made any scruple of dwelling there. We have seen in the Article ELISHA, after what manner the Prophet sweetned the waters of this Fountain. Herod caused a very beautiful palace to be built at Jericho. Here he gave orders for drowning his brother-in-law the High-Priest Aristobulus. Our Saviour wrought some miracles at Jericho; and there it was that he was invited to abide with Zacchæus, whose faith is so much commended in the Gospel.

[Ecclus. xxiv. 18. Quasi plantatio Rosæ in Jericho.] The Rose of JERICHO is mentioned with approbation in the Scripture, and in the Writings of Travellers; though there is room to question whether what the Scripture calls the Rose of Jericho, be the same thing with what the Moderns understand by this name. Let this be as it will, that which goes under this name, is described thus: It is a plant in shape like an Elder-tree. The Blossom of it appears in bunches composed of very small flowers, like those of the Elder-tree. At first it is red, and afterwards becomes whitish. The plain of Jericho is all covered over with this sort of shrub. There are some too which grow in particular places of Arabia. The flower of it is incorruptible; it dries up, and closes much like the Elder-flower, before it opens and blows. Several virtues are ascribed to it, without any foundation. If it be left some time in the water, it opens, and blows; if it be left for any time out of the water, it closes again; and this in all seasons of the year.

As to the Balsam-tree of JERICHO, see the Article BALSAM-TREE.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jericon

JERICON, Jercon, or rather Jarkon, a Town in the Tribe of Dan. Joshua xix. 46. Me-jarkon signifies the waters of Jarkon. This place was situated in the neighbourhood of Joppa.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jerimoth

JERIMOTH, a City in the southern part of Judah. See JARMUTH.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jerimoth

JERIMOTH. There were several persons of this name, but we know nothing particularly of their lives. See 1 Chron. vii. 7, 18. viii. 14. xxiii. 13. xxiv. 30. xxv. 4, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeroboam (I)

I. JEROBOAM, the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, whose name is so often mentioned with detestation in the Scripture, as Author of the Schism and Idolatry of the ten Tribes; was the son of Nebat, and a widow, whose name was Zervah. He was born at Zereda in the Tribe of Ephraim. Jeroboam was bold and enterprizing; and Solomon had given him commission to levy the taxes over the whole house of Joseph, that is to say, throughout the Tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh. One day when Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem, and was going alone into the [1 Kings xi. 29.] country, the Prophet Ahijah the Shilonite met him with a new cloak upon his shoulders. There were only these two in in the field. Then Ahijah taking his [The year is uncertain, but it was towards the end of Solomon's reign that this was done.] cloak, cut it in twelve pieces, and said to Jeroboam, Take ten of them to thy self; for thus saith the Lord, I will divide and rend the Kingdom of Solomon, and will give ten Tribes to thee. One Tribe shall remain to him for my servant David's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake, which I have chosen among all the Tribes of Israel; because Solomon worshipped Ashtoreth the Goddess of the Zidonians, Chemosh the God of the Moabites, and Milcom the God of the Ammonites, and because he hath forsaken me, and given himself over to iniquity. Notwithstanding I will not deprive him of the Kingdom; he shall enjoy it till his death: but I will dispossess his son of it, and will give thee ten Tribes belonging to it. If therefore thou obeyest my orders, and walkest in my ways, as David my servant hath done, I will be with thee, and will establish thy house for ever, and put thee in possession of the Kingdom of Israel.

[In the year of the World 3029, before J. C. 971, before the Vulgar Æra 975.] Jeroboam, who was already ill-inclined to Solomon, being encouraged by Abijah's promises, began to stir, and sollicit the people to revolt. But Solomon, who had intelligence of his designs, resolved to take Jeroboam into custody, who therefore fled into Egypt, and there continued till the death of Solomon. Rehoboam, who succeeded him, following the advice which his young Counsellors gave him a, behaved himself in a haughty and menacing manner towards the people, who were assembled in order to acknowledge him for their King; this provoked them to such a degree, that ten of the Tribes separated from [a 1 Kings xii. 1, 2, &c.] the house of David, and deserted Rehoboam. In the mean time, Jeroboam returned from Egypt, and the ten Tribes having intelligence of it, invited him to appear among them in a general Assembly, in which they appointed him to be King over all Israel. Jeroboam fixed his residence at Shichem, and there fortified himself. He likewise rebuilt Penuel beyond Jordan, and put it into a condition of defence, in order to keep the Tribes quiet which were on that side.

Jeroboam forgetting the fidelity which he owed to God, who had given him the Kingdom, thought of nothing more than maintaining himself in possession of it at the expence of Religion, and God's Worship. He said within himself, If my people go to Jerusalem to offer their Sacrifices, and perform their Adorations, they will soon return to the obedience of the house of David, and I shall be the victim of their inconstancy, or of Rehoboam's resentment. He resolved therefore to make two golden Calves, in imitation probably of the God Apis, whom he had seen in Egypt; to place one at Dan, the other at Beersheba[1], at the two extremities of his Dominions; and to publish a prohibition throughout all the land against going hereafter to Jerusalem, and an order to worship these two golden Calves. Henceforth, said he, go no more to Jerusalem. Behold thy Gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt! He built Temples likewise in the High-Places, and made Priests of the lowest of the people, who were neither of Aaron's Family, nor of the Tribe of Levi.

[In the year of the World 3030, before J. C. 970, before the Vulgar Æra 974. 1 Kings xiii.] He appointed publickly a solemn Feast upon the fifteenth day of the eighth month, in order to dedicate his new Altar, and consecrate his golden Calves; and all the people being assembled, he himself went up to the Altar to offer Incense and Sacrifices. At that time a man of God, who is generally believed to be the Prophet Iddo, came from Judah to Bethel by God's direction, and seeing Jeroboam at the Altar, he cried, " O Altar, Altar, thus saith the " Lord; a Child shall be born unto the " house of David, by name Josiah, and " upon thee shall he sacrifice the Priests of " the High-Places, who now burn incense " upon thee: he shall burn men's bones " upon thee." And for a proof that the Lord hath spoken this, behold the Altar shall immediately be rent asunder, and the ashes, and whatsoever is upon it, shall be poured upon the earth. At the same time the King, who was standing by the Altar, stretched out his hand, and commanded the Prophet to be seized: but the hand which he had so stretched out withered, and he could not draw it back. The Altar immediately was broken, and the fire, with the ashes which were upon it, fell upon the ground, according to the man of God's prediction. Then the King said to him; Offer up thy prayers to God, that he may restore to me the use of my hand. The man of God besought the Lord, and the King's hand was restored to the condition it was in before. Hereupon Jeroboam said to the Prophet, Come and dine with me at my house, and I will make thee some presents. He answered, Although thou shouldst give me half of thine house, I would not go with thee, nor will I taste any thing in this place; for the Lord hath expressly forbidden me to do so.

An event of so extraordinary a nature did not recover Jeroboam from his impiety; he continued to keep the people in error and superstition, by appointing Priests of the High-Places, and engaging them in such a sort of worship as was contrary to the Law of God. This was the sin of Jeroboam's family, and the cause of its utter [The year is not certain.] extirpation. Some time after, Abijah his son falling sick, Jeroboam sent his wife to [1 Kings xiv.] the Prophet Abijah to consult him concerning his son's health. And that the man of God might not discover the Queen, she disguised herself in the dress of an ordinary woman. She was scarce got to the threshold of the Prophet's door, but Abijah, who had lost his sight with age, cried out to her, Come in thou wife of Jeroboam, why dost thou disguise thyself? Go tell Jeroboam, thus saith the Lord, I made thee Prince over my people, and thou, instead of continuing faithful to me, hast turned thy back upon me, and paid thy adorations to strange Gods. Wherefore I will utterly root out the house of Jeroboam; they of his family who shall die in the city, shall be eaten by dogs; and they, who shall die in the field, shall be devoured by fowls of the Air. As to the Child concerning whom thou art come now to consult me, he shall die of his disease, and all Israel shall mourn for him. As the Prophet had foretold, so it happened: yet Jeroboam became not at all the better for it. He died after a reign of two and twenty years, and Nadab his son [In the year of the World 3050, before J. C. 950, before the Vulgar Æra 954.] reigned in his stead.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. One of these golden Calves was set up at Bethel, not at Beersheba: as the Author himself plainly intimates, where he tells us, that the Prophet found Jeroboam sacrificing at Bethel. Beersheba was distant a day's journey from Bethel. Gen. xxvii. 10, &c.

Jeroboam (II)

II. JEROBOAM, the second of the name, King of Israel, was the son of Jehoash. He began to reign after his father, in the year of the World 3179, before Jesus Christ 821, before the Vulgar Æra 825. [2 Kings xiv. 23, 24, &c.] He reigned one and forty years, and died in the year of the World 3220, before Jesus Christ 780, before the Vulgar Æra 784. He did evil in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the ways of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin. His reign was long and happy. He restored the kingdom of Israel to its ancient splendor, from which it was extremely fallen under his predecessors, and reconquered the Provinces and Cities, which the Kings of Syria had usurped, and dismembred from his Dominions. He reduced all the countries to his obedience on the other side of Jordan, as far as the Dead Sea. And all this in execution of the promises which God had made by the Prophet Jonah, the son of Amathi, from whom we have other prophecies; but not those which he pronounced in favour of Jeroboam II. nor the particulars of the conquests made by this Prince, which were written in the Annals of the Kings of Israel.

The Prophets Hosea, Amos, and Jonah prophesied under Jeroboam II. We see by their writings, that in his reign, idleness, [See Hosea v. 1. vi. 8. ix. 15. xii. 11. and Amos v. 5. vii. 13. viii. 14. Amos ii. 6, 7, &c. iii. 9, 10, 14. vi. 4, 5, 6. viii. 4, 5. Amos ii. 11, 12. iv. 4, 5. v. 22, 23. viii. 3, 5, 10. Amos vii. 10, 11, 12.] effeminacy, magnificence, and injustice reigned in Israel; that the licentiousness of the people in point of Religion was extreme; that they not only frequented Dan and Bethel, where the golden Calves were placed, but likewise Mizpah in Gilead, Beersheba, Tabor, Carmel, and Gilgal, and in general, the several places where God had at any time appeared to the Patriarchs, and almost all the High-places in Israel. Not that they designed always to worship Idols there, but hereby they acted with disobedience to God, and exposed themselves to opportunities of falling into infamous disorders, by being present in assemblies, where there was so much gaiety and pleasure, and in places remote from view and observation. It is remarkable also, that in his reign several articles of the ceremonial Law were observed in Israel. The First-fruits and Tythes were paid; the Feasts and Sabbath were observed; and Nazarites were consecrated.

The Prophet Amos was raised up by God to threaten the house of Jeroboam with the utmost calamities. He said that the High-places consecrated to Idols should be destroy'd, and that Jeroboam's family should be cut off by the sword. Amaziah the Priest of Bethel informed the King, that Amos was a rebellious subject, that he inspired the people with an inclination to revolt, and said publickly, Jeroboam shall die by the sword, and Israel shall surely be led away captive out of their own land. This was a calumny framed by this sham-priest; and the Scripture does not say that the King gave any credit to it. Nevertheless Amaziah obliged him to depart out of the territories of Israel; and it is very probable, that he did so by the King's authority. We know nothing more concerning the particulars of Jeroboam's life.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jerubbaal

[2 Chron. xx. 16.] JERUBBAAL. Gideon was surnamed thus after he had destroyed Baal's grove, and his father had replied to those, who complained of this action, that it was Baal's business to take revenge for it. Judg. vi. 31, 32. From hence Sanchoniathon has borrowed his Jerombaal, Priest of the God Jao. Euseb. Præpar. l. 1. See GIDEON.

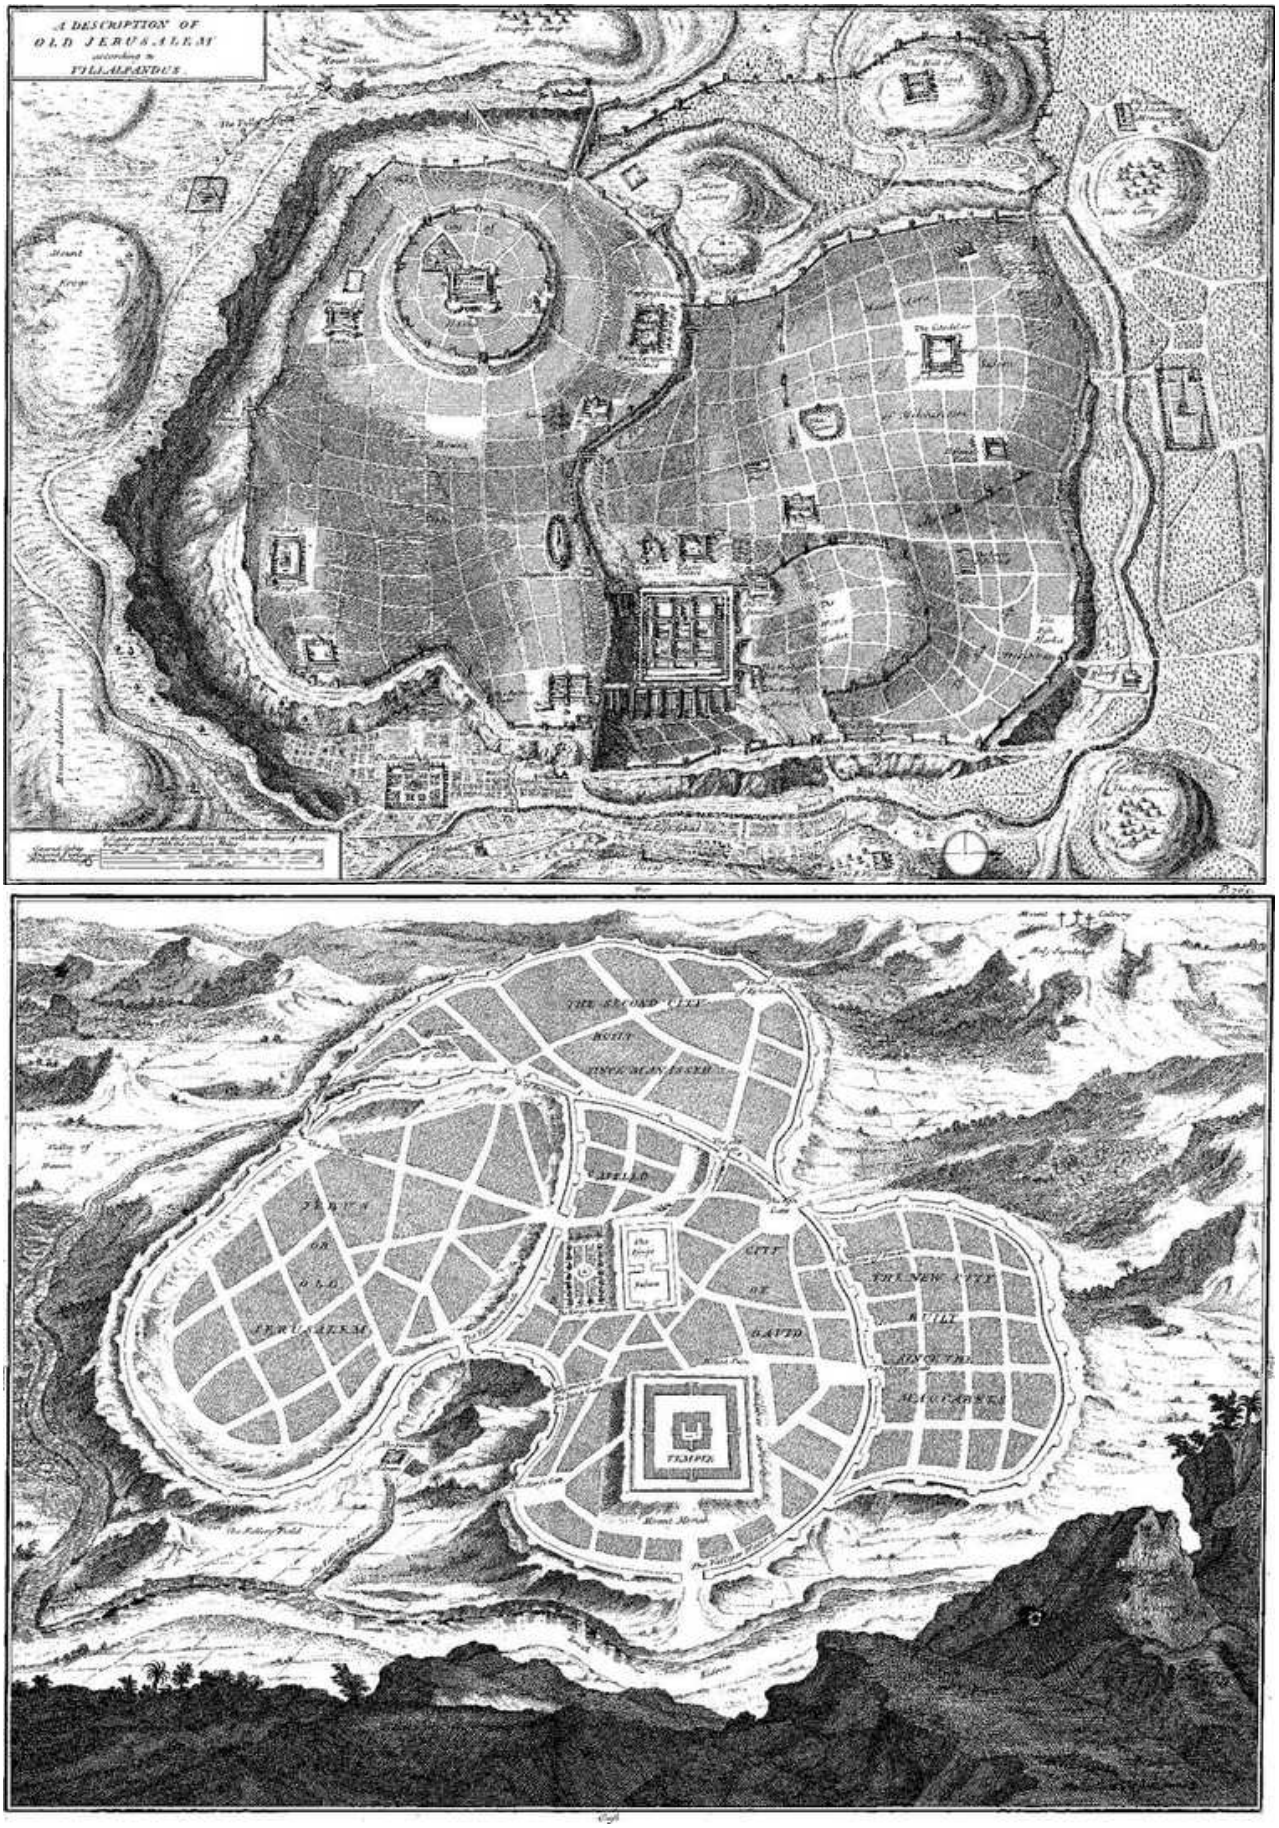
Read this article in its place on the printed pages



Jeruel

[Josh. xviii. 28. Gen. xiv. 18. Heb. vii. 1. Ps. lxxv. 3. in Heb.] JERUEL. King Jehoshaphat obtained a great victory over the Ammonites, Moabites, and other confederated people in the wilderness of Jeruel. It lay to the west of the Dead Sea in the southern part of Judah, nor far from Ziz.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jerusalem

JERUSALEM, called before Jebus or Salem. Some call it Solyma or Ierosolyma; the Hebrews Jeruschalaim or Jeruschelem. This word may signify the vision of Peace, or the possession or inheritance of Peace. Joshua gave it to

A NEW PLAN OF OLD JERUSALEM ACCORDING TO THE AUTHOR.

Josh. xviii. 18. to the Tribe of Benjamin. He took and put to death the King of Jerusalem in the famous battle of Gibeon; and there is all the probability that can be, [Josh. x. 23, 40. xii. 10.] that he did not leave this city alone in the midst of the country without reducing it, as he had done the rest. Notwithstanding, it must be confess'd, that it is no where said to have been taken by him. Nay, it appears from other passages, that the Jebusites continued in possession [2 Sam. v. 6, 7.] of it till David's time; and it is said expressly, that the children of Benjamin did [Judg. i. 21.] not drive the Jebusites out of Jerusalem.

On the other side, this City appears to have been within the division of the Tribe [Josh. xv. 63.] of Judah. It is said in Joshua, That the children of Judah could not drive out the Jebusites [Judg. i. 8.] the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and in the Book of Judges we read, that the children of Judah took and burnt Jerusalem. Lastly, David, who was of the Tribe of Judah, no sooner was acknowledged King by all Israel, but he marched against Jerusalem, and reduced it to his obedience, drove the Jebusites out of it, and made it the Seat of his Kingdom. In a word, the [Ps. lxxviii. 68.] Psalmist does very clearly make Jerusalem to be a part of Judah, when he says, that the Lord chose not Ephraim, but the Tribe of Judah and Mount Sion. In order to reconcile these different Texts, it may be said, that Jerusalem being upon the frontiers of the two Tribes, it is sometimes made a part of one, and sometimes of the other; that Benjamin had most right to it by Joshua's division of the country, and Judah by right of conquest, having twice subdued it; first under the Judges, and afterwards under David.

After that the Lord had declared Jerusalem to be the place which he had [See Joseph. de Bello Jud. l. 4. c. 6. & l. 3. c. 5.] chosen for his Habitation, and for his Temple, it was looked upon as the Metropolis of the whole Nation, and belonging to all the Israelites in common. It did not therefore properly belong either to Benjamin or Judah.

The City of Jerusalem was built upon one or two Hills, and was encompassed all [Ps. cxxiv. 2. Strabo, l. 16.] round with Mountains. Montes in circuitu ejus. It was situated in a stony and barren soil, and was about sixty furlongs in length, according to Strabo. The territory and places adjacent to Jerusalem, were well watered, having the fountains of Gihon and Siloam, and the brook Kidron at the foot of its walls; and besides these, the waters of Ethan, which Pilate had convey'd through Aqueducts into the City. The ancient City [Joseph. l.] [Bello.] 1. c. 15. de of Jerusalem or Jebus, which David took from the Jebusites, was not very large. It was seated upon a Mountain southward of the Temple. The opposite Mountain, situated to the north, is Sion, where David built a new City, which he called the City of David, wherein was the Royal Palace, and the Temple of the Lord. The Temple was built upon Mount Moriah, which was one of the little Hills belonging [1 Kings ix. 15, 24. xi. 27.] to Mount Sion[1].

Between these two Mountains lay the Valley of Millo, which formerly separated ancient Jebus from the City of David, but was afterwards filled up by David and Solomon, in order to join the two Cities. After the reign of Manasseh, there is mention made of a new City, called the Second, which was inclosed with walls by this Prince[2]. The Maccabees made still some farther additions to it, and considerably enlarged it on the north side[3], by inclosing a third Hill, and making it part of Jerusalem. Josephus speaks again of a fourth Hill called Bezetha, which Agrippa joined to the City, and began to encompass with walls. This new City lay to the North of the Temple, along the Brook Kidron. Wherefore Jerusalem was at no time so large, as when it was attacked by the Romans. It was then three and thirty furlongs in circumference, which make four miles and an hundred and five and twenty paces, or a league and almost an half, at three miles to a league. Which is farther confirmed [Joseph. de Bello, l. 6. c. 6.] by what the same Josephus says, who informs us, that the wall of circumvallation, which Titus made about the City, was nine and thirty furlongs, which make four miles, eight hundred seventy five paces, or something more than a league and an half. Others describe it to be of a much larger extent. See Villalpandus for the affirmative, and M. Reland for the negative. Palæstin. t. 2. l. 3. p. 836, 837.

We shall not undertake to describe all the publick and private Edifices of this celebrated City. The old ones are almost intirely unknown to us: and those which Josephus speaks of, and describes to us, have little or no relation to the Bible, which we proposed principally to illustrate in this work. We shall give you a description of the Temple in the particular Article belonging to it: we shall speak likewise of the Synagogues in another place. The Plan, which we have given of Jerusalem, excuses us from repeating here many things, which may be seen, by casting an eye only on this description. The Gates, which we have mentioned, were not perhaps exactly in the place where we put them: but in matters of this nature, whether we will or no, something must be allowed for conjectures. I have spoken of the Fish-pool, which was in the Sheep-market, in its proper place, under Bethzaida or Bethesda. I have said something likewise of the fountains Siloam and Gihon.

It is an opinion generally entertain'd, that Melchisedek was King of Jerusalem; not but that there is some difficulty in this [Hieron. Ep. ad Evangelum. Gen. xiv. 18.] matter. St. Jerom thinks, that the City of Salem, whereof Melchisedek is said in Scripture to have been King, was a village near Scythopolis, where the ruins of this Prince's Palace were still visible in his time; which were so extraordinary, as to shew sufficiently what formerly had been the magnificence of this Edifice. The Author of the Paschal Chronicle says likewise, that he saw the village where was formerly the [Reland. Palæit. l. 3. p. 976, and 833.] dwelling-place of Melchisedek. M. Reland, in like manner, will not believe that Melchisedek reigned at Salem. We chuse rather to follow the opinion of the generality of the Fathers and Interpreters, since there is nothing in it contrary to Scripture, which sometimes calls Jerusalem, Salem; since likewise they who are of the contrary opinion are not agreed concerning the situation of the City of Salem, which they affirm to have been the place of Melchisedek's residence.

The Jebusites were masters of it during the time of Moses, Joshua, and the Judges, and till the beginning of David's reign. It is the conjecture of some, that Joshua took it from them, as has been already observed by us. The children of Judah, after the death of Joshua, got possession of it[4]: but either they could not keep it, or they took only the lower Town, the Citadel continuing in the power of the Jebusites. And this is the first time that this City is said distinctly in the sacred Text to have been taken: the second time is set down at the beginning of David's reign. No sooner did this Prince perceive himself to be well settled on the [2 Sam. v. 6.] Throne of Israel, but he march'd against Jerusalem. The City was so strong, that the Jebusites, who were in possession of it, boasted that they would defend it only with the blind and lame. But David forced it, and drove out the Jebusites, and chose it to be the Capital of his Kingdom. From that [In the year of the World 2956, before J. C. 1044, before the Vulgar Æra 1048.] time Jerusalem became the theatre of many important actions; so that to write the History of this City, would be to undertake a recital of almost the whole sacred History.

David embelished and considerably augmented it: but Solomon added so many great and beautiful works, that he made it one of the finest Cities in the East. Under the reign of Rehoboam, the son and 1 Kings xiv. successor of Solomon, it was taken and pillaged 25, 26, 27. by Shishak King of Egypt. This Prince carried away all the treasures of [In the year of the World 3033, before J. C. 967, before the Vulgar Æra 971. 2 Kings xii. 17. & 2 Chron. xxiv. 24, 25.] the Temple and of the Royal Palace.

Hazael King of Syria being come against Jerusalem, and threatning to take it, Joash King of Judah redeemed the City with a great sum of money; which he sent to the King of Syria, in order to oblige him to raise the siege. To this end he made use of all the treasures of God's house, and of the palace, that he might thereby be enabled to satisfy the avarice of Hazael, who notwithstanding, sent against him, the year following, an army, which defeated that of Judah, took several Princes, killed them, and left Joash himself languishing under violent diseases.

[In the year of the World 3178, before J. C. 822, before the Vulgar Æra 826. 2 Kings xiv. 13. & 2 Chron. xxv. 23.] Some time after, Joash King of Judah, having rashly declared war against Amaziah King of Israel, this last Prince defeated the army of Judah, took Joash prisoner; and entring Jerusalem, carried away all the treasures, which were in the Temple and the royal Palace, demolished four hundred cubits of the City-walls, from the gate of Ephraim to the Angle-gate, and then returned to Samaria.

Necho King of Egypt returning from his expedition against Carchemish on the Euphrates, entred Jerusalem, took Jehoahaz, whom the people of Judah had set upon the throne of Josiah, put Eliakim or Jehoiakim in his place, and carried Jehoahaz, into Egypt, where he died. We do not read in Scripture, that Necho pillaged the City or the Temple, but he imposed a Tax on all the land, of an hundred talents of silver, and ten talents of gold, which Jehoiakim was obliged to pay by levying a capitation or Tax upon all the people in proportion to their fortunes. It appears by Ezekiel, that Jehoahaz had attacked Necho, or at least had made a resolute resistance before he surrendred himself to him. Thy mother is a lioness, she lay down among lions, she nourished her whelps among lions. And she brought up one of her whelps, (meaning Jehoahaz) it became a young lion, and it learned to catch the prey, it devoured men. The nations also heard of him, he was taken in their pit, and they brought him with chains into the land of Egypt.

[In the year of the World 3398, before J. C. 602, before the Vulgar Æra 606. 2 Kings xxiv. 1, &c. Dan. i. 1. Jer. xxv. 1. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6.] Nebuchadnezzar being come into Judæa b, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the King of Judah's reign c, laid siege to Jerusalem, which was then tributary to the Kings of Egypt; and having subjected it to the dominion of the Chaldæans, he left Jehoiakim there, whom he designed at first to carry with him in irons to Babylon. Thus the different passages wherein this event is spoken of, are reconciled; some whereof imply, that Jehoiakim was carried to Babylon, and others that he reigned at Jerusalem. He did reign there, but as a Prince depending on Nebuchadnezzar, as he reigned there before by the courtesy of the Kings of Egypt. At the end of [In the year of the World 3400, or 3401, before J. C. 599, before the Vulgar Æra 603.] three years, he grew weary of this submission, and took arms against Nebuchadnezzar. The King of Chaldæa being then busied in other affairs, could not so soon reduce Jehoiakim; he sent only some troops against him of the Chaldæans, Syrians, Moabites, and Ammonites, who ravaged Judæa, and carried three thousand and three and twenty Jews to Babylon. In the [Jer. lii. 28.] seventh year of Jehoiakim, of the World 3401; and four years after, of the World 3405, which was the eleventh year of Jehoiakim, they entred Jerusalem, took and put to death this Prince, and cast his body into a common sewer.

THE SIEGE OF JERUSALEM BY NEBUCHADNEZZAR.King. XXV. i. &c.

THE TAKING OF IERUSALEM BY NEBUCHADNEZZAR.2 Kings. XXV. 4.

[2 Kings xxiv. 2, 3, 4.] Jehoiachin his son succeeded him; but after a reign of three months and ten days, Nebuchadnezzar coming to besiege Jerusalem, Jehoiachin was obliged to surrender; the city was again taken by the Chaldæans, and the treasures of the Temple and royal Palace carried to Babylon. Lastly, [2 Kings xxv. 10, &c.] Nebuchadnezzar took Jerusalem the fourth and last time, in the year of the World 3416, before the Vulgar Æra 588, and in the eleventh year of Zedekiah.

[Ezek. xvii. 15—18. Jer. xxxiv. 8, &c. In the year of the World 3412.] The occasion of this war was as follows: Zedekiah, in the seventh year of his reign took secret measures with Hophrah or Apries King of Egypt, to shake off the yoke of the Chaldæans; and two years after he declared himself openly, and refused to pay tribute to Nebuchadnezzar. This Prince being quite tired with the infidelity and inconstancy of the Jews, resolved to exterminate this perfidious Nation, to destroy their Kingdom, and transport the Inhabitants thereof beyond the Euphrates. He came therefore with a powerful army against Jerusalem, and arrived in Judæa at the beginning of the year of the World 3414, which was a Sabbatical Year, wherein the King and people were to dismiss their Slaves, according to the Law of the Lord, which requires the Hebrew Slaves to be set at liberty every seven years: this was immediately executed, and the Slaves continued free as long as the King of Babylon was taken up with the investiture of the city. But the King of Egypt advancing with his army to succour Jerusalem, and Nebuchadnezzar breaking up the siege in order to repel him, the Jews took their Slaves again, without troubling themselves either about their word, or the Law of God. This is what Jeremiah reproaches them with in very strong terms, at the same time as he is threatning them with the greatest calamities. In the mean time Nebuchadnezzar gave the King of Egypt battle, and after he had overcome him, and put him to flight, return'd to the siege of Jerusalem, took it, burnt and destroy'd both the City and the Temple, and carried the Princes and the People away into captivity. So that we may reckon the City of Jerusalem to have been taken nine times before the Babylonish captivity.

[Observations on the blockade and siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar.] □ Of all the Cities most celebrated in antiquity, none is more famous than Jerusalem, as well for its magnificent buildings, as for the many sieges it has sustained. The last and most memorable is that which it maintain'd against Titus, at the head of [2 Kings xxv.] his Romans, under the empire of Vespasian. All the most profound and wonderful effects of Art were put in practice at this siege; the courage and resistance of the besieged was nothing inferior to the skill, valour, and obstinacy of the besiegers. All the calamities which generally accompany long defences, fell upon this unhappy City, as Jeremiah [Jerem. ix. Joseph. de

Bello Jud. l. v. c. 13.] had foretold; pestilence and famine were as destructive to it, as the fury of its enemies. In a word, this was the last effect of God's wrath, which determined the fate and utter annihilation of this proud city, thus to punish the ingratitude and perfidiousness of the Jews. The description which Josephus has given us of it, is so admirable, and written with so much art, that there is no one, however understanding in the affairs of war, who could acquit himself with more capacity than he has done. But let us return to the siege of this City by Nebuchadnezzar, which at present we are to speak of.

The sacred Author, after his usual manner, is so far from giving us a particular and circumstantial account of this siege, that he passes over the most necessary circumstances. Those Readers who know nothing of what belongs to War, trouble themselves very little about it; but they who are perfectly acquainted with this art, are sensibly concerned to find no particular relation in Historians, of so many gallant actions as were then perform'd, whereof we have but a very imperfect sketch remaining. However, as the Scripture in certain places reports some circumstances and practices, which it omits in others; by adding every thing together, we may be led to the discovery of the Jewish method in the art of attacking and defending.

The situation of Jerusalem, the strength of its walls, and the resistance of the besieged, rendred this City almost impregnable, and consequently the sieges very long. Wherefore Nebuchadnezzar, upon his setting down before the Town, did not attempt to take it by assault, but was concontent to block it up at first, with two lines drawn round it; that is to say, with a circumvallation and contravallation. The King of Egypt having taken the field, in order to come speedily to the succour of the [Joseph. Antiq. l. x. c. 10.] place, Nebuchadnezzar march'd to meet him, defeated him, and put him to flight. This movement of the King of Babylon will not suffer us to doubt his drawing a line of contravallation against the sallies of the inhabitants, whom King Zedekiah commanded in person, and a line of circumvallation against the enemies without the City; for although the sacred Writer in the second verse says, That the city was shut up by the line of circumvallation till the eleventh year of King Zedekiah; this however is no declaration that but one line only was drawn: the words of the first verse prove sufficiently, that two lines were contrived, one against the City, the other against the Succours which were expected. Circumdederunt eam, & extruxerunt in circuitu ejus munitiones. They invironed the town, and made intrenchments quite round.

We see in this siege, as well as in many others mention'd in the Scripture, that lines of circumvallation and contravallation were known and practised by the Asiatick people, long before the Greeks and Romans, and that these were not the inventors of them. I believe it will not be unseasonable to produce here what I have said thereupon, in my Comment on [Comment. sur Polyb. tom. 2. p.449,450.] Polybius. The method of encompassing Towns with a Ditch and Intrenchment against the besieged, and another without towards the open country, with the camp between these two lines, was in use among the Asiatick nations, long before the Greeks and Romans, and perhaps many ages before Moses. When thou shalt besiege a city, says this great Legislator, and the siege shall be long, and thou shalt have encompassed it with machines in order to destroy it, thou shalt not cut down fruit-trees, nor ravage the country round about, by destroying all the trees with axes; because they are but wood, and not men, who might encrease the number of thine enemies. If they are only wild trees which produce no fruit, thou may'st cut them down to make machines of them, or fortifications against the city.

[Comment. sur le Deut. c. xx. 19.] The means and precautions following were made use of when Cities were extremely strong and well peopled; the enemy then blocked them up by a line or counter-line, with a ditch palissaded within, and sometimes enclosed with a parapet, the ground whereof was supported by a work with fascines. " Such were properly the " ditches, walls, palissades, and terrasses, " with which the City was incompassed, " in Hebrew called Matzur, says Dom [Isai. xxix. 2, 3.] " Calmet; and all this could not be done " without using the trees in the country." What we are to admire in the works of this sort, is, that in the framing of them, they were altogether like those of the Greeks and Romans, excepting the Towers wherewith they were flanked. I do not observe any in the Hebrew camps, or in those of the several people they were at war with, before the siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar.

There are so many passages in the sacred Writers, which plainly describe lines of circumvallation and contravallation, that to produce them all would be superfluous; we shall confine ourselves to what Isaiah only says of them: I will distress Ariel; I will camp against thee round about, and will lay siege against thee with a mount, and I will raise forts against thee. The Prophet speaks of these sorts of works, [Idem. xxxvii. 33.] as of something which was not new in his time: and elsewhere he promises King Hezekiah, that Sennacherib would not besiege Jerusalem, nor undertake any thing against it, and that it should not be encompassed with either intrenchments or terrasses: which signifies nothing more than that the King of Assyria should not invest it, nor surround it with a line of circumvallation.

The Prophet goes still farther; he distinguishes the line with which places are invironed, from terrasses; and I believe that these terrasses do not always signify high elevations of earth, which command the walls, or equal them almost in height, upon which towers were erected, or machines for throwing any thing, and where archers, slingers, and others employ'd in services of this nature, were placed: this is Dom Calmet's opinion, and I think he is mistaken; they were only coverts round the borders of the ditch, like our trenches, where the slingers and archers were continually at work, secure against the defence made by the Town, while they annoy'd it every way. We see in several places of Scripture, that works of this kind were not only serviceable for such uses, but farther for a contravallation, to check and streighten the besieged.

It is very probable, that Nebuchadnezzar did not at first besiege the City in form, but only blocked it up, having intelligence, that the King of Egypt with his whole army was marching to the succour of the place: for he must have necessarily guarded his circumvallation, to prevent any relief from getting into the City, and have left a large body of troops to defend the works, capable of making head against the sallies of the besieged; which would have weakened him so much, that he could never have gone to meet the King of Egypt, who would not have failed to cut off his provisions, and attack him, while the besieged, with the King at the head of them, would have sallied out vigorously upon him: but he prevented all this. He marched out to meet the Egyptian army, and after he had defeated it, and put it to flight, he returned to Jerusalem, opened the siege in form, ordered all the machines to be set up against the walls, battered it for a long time, so that it being distressed by famine, and the breach made, all the men of war fled by night, by the way of the gate between two walls, which is by the King's garden, (now the Chaldæans were against the city round about) and the King went the way toward the plain. The Chaldæans therefore entred the City through the breach, and made themselves masters of it after a siege of two years and an half, in the eleventh year of the reign of Zedekiah, on the ninth day of the fourth month, that is to say, on [Jer. xxxix. 2.] Wednesday the 27th of July, in the year of the World 3416.

Some will be surprized to see machines of every kind made use of in this siege, Towers, Battering-Rams, Balistæ and Catapultæ, which the Greeks made use of in their sieges; they were all known to the people of Asia, and no one can in the least doubt the King of Chaldæa's making use of them at the siege of Jerusalem, since Ezekiel speaks of them so clearly in different [Ezek. iv. 2. xxi. 22. Ibid. xxvi.] places of his book, and particularly in his prophecy against Tyre: Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon shall come with horses and chariots, with horsemen and numerous troops; he shall incompass thee on every side with intrenchments and terrasses; he shall lift up his buckler against thee; he shall set engines of war against thy walls, and with his axes he shall break down thy towers. Can any thing be more particular? No one therefore can question the Chaldæans putting in practice the method of covering themselves in their way from the camp to the batteries by parallels, which the French call blindeés, or something else equivalent to them: there was nothing more simple and easy; and I find it again practised in the last siege of Jerusalem by Titus.

[Joseph. Antiq. l. x. c. 11.] Josephus says, that the Chaldæans having entred the City about midnight, went up directly to the Temple, and that King Zedekiah and his people escaped in the dark, and fled through narrow passes into the Wilderness; but that the Chaldæans having got intelligence of them from deserters, set out by break of day in pursuit of them, and stop'd them in the plain of Jericho. [Dio. l. 66. p. 747.] The sacred Writer says almost the same thing: Zedekiah went the way toward the plain, and the army of the Chaldæans pursued after the King, and overtook him in the plains of Jericho, and all his army were scattered from him. The Rabbins affirm, that Zedekiah fled through a subterraneous way, which led from the palace belonging to the Kings of Judah to the plains of Jericho; they might be believed in this particular, if they did not add some extravagancies to it, after their usual manner. They say, that the King intending to make his escape by this subterraneous passage, God permitted a Hind to follow him without, and go as far above as he went under-ground, and that the Chaldæans pursuing after the Hind, found unexpectedly the King coming out of the covered way. As to the subterraneous passage, there is nothing incredible in it: the Scripture and Josephus make no mention of it; but Dio, who is cited by Dom Calmet, tells us, where he is speaking of the last siege of Jerusalem, " That the " Jews had subterraneous conveyances, " which passing under the walls, opened " at a great distance from thence into " the plain."

Having therefore taken the King, they brought him to the King of Babylon at Riblah, and they gave judgement upon him. This verse demonstrates to us, that Nebuchadnezzar observing the siege to draw out into length, resigned the conduct of it to his Generals, and that he was not at Jerusalem when it was taken, but at Riblah, which some believe to be Apamea in Syria, upon the Orontes.

After the Captivity of Babylon, Jerusalem was rebuilt and repeopled, in the year of the World 3468, before Jesus Christ 532, before the Vulgar Æra 536, which is the first year of Cyrus's reign at Babylon. But the Walls and Gates belonging to it, were not rebuilt till after the return of Nehemiah, in the year of the World 3550, before the Vulgar Æra 454. Alexander the Great, after he had taken Tyre, entred Jerusalem, in the year of the World 3672, before Jesus Christ 328, before the Vulgar Æra 332.

After the death of this Prince[5], Jerusalem remained in the power of the Kings of Egypt; and Ptolemy the Son of Lagus, took Jerusalem by stratagem[6], if the accounts of Aristæus and Josephus are to be credited[7], and carried into captivity about an hundred thousand men, whom he had taken in Judæa. The same Josephus[8] says, that Ptolemy Euergetes King of Egypt, came likewise to Jerusalem, and there there offered many sacrifices of thanksgiving. Lastly, Ptolemy Philopator, after the victory, which he had obtained over Antiochus the Great, near the City of Raphia, came to Jerusalem, went to the Temple, and there offered sacrifices: but the Priests hindred him from going into the Sanctuary, which so provoked him, that he resolved to put all the Jews to death who [In the year of the World 2787, before J. C. 213, before the Vulgar Æra 217.] were in Egypt; and this he had executed, had not God in a very miraculous manner protected his people, as is related at length in the third book of Maccabees.

Antiochus the Great having recovered Cœle-Syria and Judæa from the King of Egypt, came to Jerusalem, where he was very well received by the Jews, who furnished provisions for his Army and his Elephants, and assisted him to reduce the garrison, which Scopas had left in the citadel of Jerusalem. In acknowledgement for these good services, Antiochus omitted nothing that was necessary to re-establish Jerusalem in its former splendor; he granted large privileges to the Jews, and gave great sums for the Sacrifices of the Temple. Seleucus the son and successor of Antiochus the Great, was not so favourable to the Jews, as Antiochus had been. He sent Heliodorus to the Temple of Jerusalem[9], to take from thence the treasures which belonged to it; but he was forced to return without doing any thing, after having been very ill handled by Angels, who appeared to him in the Temple.

Antiochus Epiphanes, brother and successor to Seleucus, came to Jerusalem[10], and was received there by Jason, who had usurped the High-Priesthood, with great honours, with the light of flambeaus, and the loud acclamations of the people. At this time he did no mischief. But three years after, in the year of the World 3834, being informed that the inhabitants of Jerusalem had express'd some joy upon a false report that he was dead in Egypt, he conceived so much indignation against them, that at his return, he besieged the city, pillaged it, carried away all the gold, and most of the rich vessels belonging to the Temple, and killed above fourscore thousand men.

Two years after[11], he sent one Apollonius to Jerusalem, the collector of his revenues, with secret orders to pillage and burn the city. This man in all appearance came at first with a peaceable spirit; but he fell suddenly upon the city, made a great slaughter in it, took a rich booty, set fire to the place, destroy'd most of the houses, and reserved so much only, as he ordered to be enclosed within walls at the upper end of the city, near the Temple of the Lord, where he built a Citadel, and left a strong garison. Jerusalem was then forsaken by its own inhabitants, and left in the hands of the Gentiles. In the year following, 3837, the Sacrifices were interrupted in the Temple, the statue of Jupiter Olympius was placed upon the Altar, and the abomination of desolation was seen in the House of God. Things continued in [1 Macc. i. 62.] this condition for three years[12]. Judas Maccabæus having defeated Nicanor, Gorgias, and Lysias, went up to Jerusalem, purified [1 Macc.iv. 36, &c.] the Temple, and restored the Sacrifices.

The year following, Antiochus Eupator was received by Judas Maccabæus in Jerusalem[13], after the peace which had been concluded between them. This Prince honoured the Temple, and made presents to it. But before he left the city, he gave directions for pulling down the wall, which was between the Temple and the Citadel, and secured the Holy Place [1 Macc. vi. 2 Macc. xiii. 4 Macc. ii.] from the attempts of the Syrians. This Citadel, which always kept Jerusalem depending on the Kings of Syria, stood six and twenty years, from the year of the World 3836 to 3862, when it was taken and demolished by Judas Maccabæus.

Antiochus Sidetes enraged at the great mischiefs which Simon Maccabæus had done him, made war with John Hircanus his son and successor. He came into Judæa, and after he had ravaged the open country, he compelled Hircanus to retreat to Jerusalem, where he besieged him; but he met with a vigorous resistance from the besieged, incamp'd at the distance of two furlongs, or two hundred and fifty paces from the Temple, towards the north part of the city, and erected an hundred and thirty Towers, upon which he placed a great number of soldiers, to drive away all those who defended the walls. And as they were carrying on the sap, they discovered the foundations of them to be laid on wood; Antiochus therefore set fire to it, which threw down a great part of the wall: but the besieged appeared upon the breach, and stop'd the effort of their enemies, who designed to get an entrance this way into the city. At the same time Hircanus made a vigorous sally on the besiegers, and compell'd Antiochus and his people to retreat to a good distance from the Town; after which, Hircanus returned, and burnt the Towers which had been erected by Antiochus.

JERUSALEM BESIEGED BY ANTIOCHUS SIDETES.

I am very much surprized at Polybius's silence [Observations on the siege of Jerusalem by Antiochus Sidetes.] with regard to the Jews, and the several wars carried on against this nation by the Kings named Antiochus, and particularly by Antiochus Sidetes; for the Greek Author here named is very circumstantial in his account of the expeditions of these Princes; notwithstanding which, he makes no mention of the Maccabees, and says not a word of so many battles and memorable sieges: in short, one would think, that King Hircanus, and this famous siege of Jerusalem by Sidetes, whom Josephus calls Soter, were all imaginary. Livy is no better informed than Polybius; we find nothing of the Jews in other contemporary Authors, nor in any but such as wrote long after. What can we think or believe of this silence?

This siege of Jerusalem happened about the end of the year 3869. Josephus, who has described it, relates some particular circumstances, which we do not read in the fourth book of Maccabees. He says, " That Antiochus divided his army " into four bodies, in [Antiq. l. 13. c. 16.] order by this means " to inclose the whole place ; that he was " very much incommoded by the want of " water, which inconveniency was remedied by plenty of rain;" that he made a double circumvallation, very great and very wide, to cut off all communication between those within and others without: that the besieged on their part made many sallies, with great loss to the besiegers, when they happen'd not to be upon their guard; and when they were, the others retreated easily into the city. He adds farther this particular: Hircanus observing, that the number of unserviceable mouths which were in the place, might occasion an unprofitable consumption of his provisions, forced them all out, and retained those only who were in the vigour of their age, and for that reason fit for war; but Antiochus prevented them from getting into the open country, and so they continued wandering up and down within the inclosure of the city-walls, where they miserably perished with hunger. In the mean time, the Feast of Tabernacles coming on, the besieged touched with compassion for their fellow-citizens, permitted them to return into the city, &c. It is with some regret that we find the sacred Historians do not give us the whole detail of these so famous sieges.

Sidetes doubtless marched with a great provision of Troops, warlike Machines, and all things necessary for a long Siege, which he had reason to expect from his remembrance of preceding ones; for this city always made a stout resistance, which was owing not only to the strength and height of its walls, but to the bravery likewise of the besieged.

Sidetes incamped in the north part of the city, and erected an hundred and thirty towers, upon which he posted soldiers to drive away all those who appeared upon the walls. And in the mean time, the miners were employ'd in sapping the foundations of the wall. Josephus mentions only an hundred towers with three stories, which were very sufficient, not to say too many. It is surprizing that he should take no notice of Rams, and that they should endeavour only to make a way by subterraneous passages even under the foundations of the city-walls: but to what purpose were all these Towers near each other, and upon the whole front of the attack, if they had no design of battering it above, as well as below, whither the besieged might have come, and made the undertaking useless and ineffectual? I very much question their proceeding in this way: for I do not consider near so much the great expence of these Towers, as the difficulty of finding wood to build them with, in a country which must have been very much unprovided with it: for it is rare to find any in Provinces ravaged with almost continual Wars. Besides, these Towers become useless, when people intend to reduce a Town by subterraneous Galleries under the foundations of the ramparts, where too a prodigious quantity of Timber is necessary.

The Walls of Jerusalem were very strong and high, as the Author of the Maccabees informs us: and Josephus, who has given us a very exact description of them, makes them to be of a very surprizing height. The Archers posted in these Towers, which ran upon Wheels, prevented certainly any one's appearing on the Fortifications; but to what purpose was this precaution, since they made their way only by subterraneous passages to the foundations of the City-walls? Was it with a design of hindering those, when the walls should fall, who were upon the fortifications, from incommoding their enemies who should go upon the Assault? This was too inconsiderable for so great a provision of Towers. For my part, I am of opinion, that Battering-Rams, and all the Machines in use at this time, were employ'd; and we must believe, that Antiochus took as much pains to destroy the walls above, as under ground.

The besiegers shortened mightily their work of sapping; for they found the City-walls built on Piles, so that they had nothing to do but to remove the earth from between the Piles, and fill the void places with combustible matter, and fascines, which they set on fire, and so made a large breach, by thus overthrowing the wall. Afterwards Antiochus storm'd the City with great fury, but the besieged defended themselves with so much bravery and vigour, that the besiegers were repulsed with dishonour : And at the same time, Hircanus sallying out upon the enemy, killed abundance of them, and obliged Antiochus and his people to retire to a good distance from the city. This sally must have been very fierce and bloody, since Antiochus's troops were forced to draw off farther from the place, and without doubt abandon their intrenchments; nevertheless Hircanus did not think it proper to engage himself farther, but prudently returned, and was content with setting fire to all the Towers above mentioned, and reducing them to ashes. It appears by the sequel of the story, that Antiochus was charm'd with the gallant resistance of the Jews, and that he could not forbear having a particular esteem for Hircanus: For the Feast of Tabernacles coming on, Hircanus sent to desire a suspension of arms till after the solemnity, (that is to say, for eight days ;) which the King granted, and sent even Sacrifices to the Temple, and Presents in gold and silver; and the High-Priest commanded the Priests to receive what the King sent; the liberality and piety of Antiochus engaged Hircanus and his people to sue to him for peace: the King consented, and entred the city. Hircanus received him there, together with the principal Officers of his army, and gave them a great entertainment.

Antiochus got clear of this affair like a man of capacity, and more gloriously than he had reason to expect; his generosity engaged the High-Priest to desire peace of him, and altho' it was not very honourable to the Jews, the consequence shewed, that it conduced much to their greatness and elevation.

This peace may be reckoned among the most uncommon ones, for it lasted not only during the whole reign of Antiochus, but long after the death of this Prince, who perished unhappily in a war which he was carrying on against the Parthians. And Hircanus, who followed him as his friend, took the opportunity of his death to make himself master of several good places; he recovered all the Towns which had belonged to the Jews, subdued the Idumæans, received all his neighbours under his protection, who promised him to live in peace, and in obedience to him: lastly, he renewed the ancient alliance, which [1 Macc. viii. 17. xii. 1.] had been contracted by Judas Maccabæus, and confirmed by Jonathan, between the Jews and Romans.

The City of Jerusalem enjoy'd great peace till the reign of Hircanus and Aristobulus, the Sons of Alexander King of the Jews. Hircanus, as eldest, had been acknowledged King; but as his stupidity [In the year of the World 3938, before J. C. 62, before the Vulgar Æra 66. Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 1. In the year of the World 3940, before J. C. 60, before the Vulgar Æra 64. Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 8. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 5. Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c.17. Antiq. l. 19. c. 7.] and laziness rendred him very unfit to reign, Aristobulus his brother made himself master of the Kingdom, and three years after Hircanus had been upon the Throne, he obliged him to relinquish it, having overcome him in a battle near Jericho, and forced him in the Temple. Aretas King of the Arabians, having undertaken to restore Hircanus to his Dominions, and besieging Aristobulus in Jerusalem, the two brothers addressed themselves to Pompey, who was in the East, desiring his Protection. Pompey undertook to re-establish Hircanus on the Throne, to the exclusion of Aristobulus; he attacked Jerusalem, took it, entred the Temple, and went even into the Sanctuary ; but he had so much moderation as to touch nothing that was in this Holy Place. He left great Treasures there, and above all admir'd the fondness which the Priests shew'd for their Ceremonies, which neither the Alarms of the siege, nor the Conqueror's sword, could induce them to interrupt. The day after the Temple was taken, he commanded it to be purified, and Sacrifices to be offered in it.

But some years after, Julius Cæsar, at the request of Hircanus, and in consideration of the services which he had perform'd for him in Egypt, permitted him to rebuild the walls. The Decree to this purpose was prepared at Rome, and no sooner was it brought to Jerusalem, but Antigonus set people to work in the repair of it, and it became very soon as strong as it had been before. As the City was still considerably inlarged afterwards, King Agrippa undertook to enclose the new Town with walls ; but Narsus, Præfect of Syria, having given intelligence of it to the Emperor Claudius, the Emperor forbad him to proceed any farther. Josephus says, that if he had been suffered to go on, he had made the Walls so high and so strong, that no [Tacit. Hist. l. v. c. 12. Vitruv. l. 1. c. 2. Veger. de Re Mil. l. 4. c. 2.] human power could have forced them. Tacitus remarks, that when Titus besieged it, it included two great Hills fortify'd with very strong Walls, which were not drawn in a strait Line, but with Angles in and out, and Towers; that when the enemy attack'd them, he might lie open on the sides, and be obliged to expose his flanks to the besieged. Duos colles immensum editos claudebant muri per artem obliqui, ac introrsum sinuati ut latera oppugnantium ad ictus patescerent. This was the good and ancient way of fortifying places, according to Vitruvius and Vegetius.

Antigonus the Son of Aristobulus, supported by the assistance of the Parthians, some years after[14] attacked his Uncle Hircanus in Jerusalem. Herod and Phasael defended the City: but Hircanus and Phasael departing thence, in order to go and treat with Pacorus the King of Parthia's son, they were both seized and loaded with fetters. Herod was forced to leave the City, and save [Antiq. l. 14. c 24, 25. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 11.] himself by flight. He went to Rome, where, by the credit of Mark Antony and Cæsar, he procured the Title of King from the Senate. He returned therefore to Palestine[15], and with the assistance of Sosius, who commanded the Roman army in Syria, he besieged Antigonus in Jerusalem. After a siege of five months, [In the year of the World 3966, and 3967.] Antigonus surrender'd, and threw himself at Sosius's feet, who insulted him in his misfortune, by calling him Antigona, to reproach him with his weakness and cowardice. Archelaus, the Son and Successor of Herod the Great, being sent into exile, [Antiq. l. 14. c. ult.] Judæa was soon after reduced into a Province, under the obedience of the Governour of Syria. The Roman Emperors always kept a garrison in the Citadel Antonia, till the last rebellion of the Jews, which began by their besieging this fortress, wherein they forced the Roman garrison, and put it to the sword[16]. The year [In the year of the World 4069, of J. C. 69, of the Vulgar Æra 65.] following, of Jesus Christ 70, Titus laid siege to the City, carried it, burnt and reduced it to a wilderness.

[Joseph. de Bello Jud. l. 7. c. 18.] Josephus remarks, that Titus, after he had taken the City of Jerusalem, commanded his soldiers to demolish it intirely, excepting three Towers, which were the largest and most beautiful; these he was desirous to reserve as a monument of the valour of the Romans, who were able to take a place of such great strength. The Towers thus preserved were those of Phasaël, Hippicus, and Mariamne. He likewise ordered the wall to be left standing, which inclosed the City on the West-side, that it might serve as a rampart to the Camp there appointed to remain, with Troops to guard the country. All the rest of the City was destroy'd and levell'd, so that they who had never before seen it, could scarce persuade themselves that it had ever been inhabited.

The Jewish Authors assure us, that Turnus Rufus, or rather Terentius Rufus, whom Titus left there to command the Troops, plowed up the [Joseph. de Bello Jud. l. 7. c. 20.] ground on which the Temple stood, that none might ever after be permitted to rebuild it. The Roman Laws indeed prohibited the rebuilding places, where this Ceremony had been perform'd, without first obtaining permission from the Senate. But it is believed, that this did not happen, that is to say, that the ground on which the Temple stood was not plowed up till after the revolt of the Jews under Adrian. Some are of [Hieron. in Zach. c. viii.] opinion, that Jerusalem was [Epiphan.] not destroy'd in such a manner, but that still some inhabitants remain'd there, whether they dwelt amidst the ruins, with the Roman Troops, or near them, or whether they provided dwellings for themselves somewhere thereabouts.

St. Epiphanius affirms, that the house whither the Apostles retired after the ascension of the Son of God, and in which they received the Holy Ghost, was preserved, together with seven Synagogues, which were likewise on Mount Sion, and in the neighbourhood of this house. Besides, we know the names of the several Bishops taken from the Synagogue, who governed the Church of Jerusalem from Jesus Christ to Adrian's time, when a Bishop was placed there, chosen from among the Gentiles.

[Euseb. l. 6. de demonstrat. Evang.] Eusebius goes still farther than Epiphanius; for he will have it, that Titus preserved half the City, agreeably to the Prediction of the Prophet Zachary[17], who had foretold, that one portion of the City should be left standing, and that the whole should not be razed to the very foundations till the time of Adrian. Lastly, St. Jerom maintains, that Mount Moriah, where the Temple [Hieron. & Cyril. in Zach. xiv.] stood, and Sion, where the Palace was, were left intire by Titus. All which is founded only upon what Josephus says, of Titus's leaving that part of the wall standing, which enclosed Jerusalem on the West-side, which has been interpreted to include half the City; and that besides, he suffered not the Towers of Phasael, Hippicus, and Mariamne to be touched, which were thought to be in the upper part of the City: it is farther presumed, and that with reason, that the tenth Legion, which was appointed to remain in the Town, did not continue there alone; that the people who composed it, took care to preserve some houses for their own lodgings, and permitted some families of the Jews to dwell there for the service of the Troops.

The Rabbins pretend that God wrought continual miracles in the Temple and City of Jerusalem. 1. No woman ever miscarried by smelling the meats sacrificed in the Temple, or by eating to excess of them. 2. Flesh placed upon the Altar never corrupted, tho' it were left there several days without consuming it by the fire; which sometimes happened, when the quantity of the Victims was too great. 3. It so fell out, that the High-Priest never contracted any pollution the night before the great Day of Expiation. 4. The Rain never extinguished the fire of the Altar. 5. The Wind did not hinder the smoke from rising like a pillar towards heaven. 6. There 6. There never was any defect or putrifaction discovered in the Manna which was preserved in the gold Omer, or in the Shew-bread. 7. The Israelites never found that they were too much crouded in the Court of the Temple, let the Assembly there be ever so numerous. 8. No one ever failed to get a lodging at Jerusalem, where he might lie. 9. Jerusalem never ceased to be holy after its Consecration by Solomon: nothing that happened to it from that time was ever capable of profaning it.

They affirm farther, that this City was common to all the Tribes, and belonged to no one in particular, and that it was not subject to the Law, which required all murder committed within the confines of any Tribe to be expiated by the Sacrifice of a young Heifer. No house there belonged to him who had bought it as his property. None were allowed to have gardens or orchards within the compass of the city; and when dead bodies were removed from one place to another, they were not permitted to be carried through the city, lest they should pollute it. There were but two Sepulchres in the city, that of David, and that of Huldah, which had been built by the old Prophets. These remarks are all taken from the Rabbins, whose exactness is not always unexceptionable.

In the beginning, and when the Jebusites were in possession of it, Jerusalem was very small; it was afterwards inlarged by piecemeal. I shall here lay before you an account taken from the Jewish Doctors of what was observed in these circumstances of inlarging [Talmud. Halacah. Beith. Habberhira, c. 10. Psal. xxx. 1.] any city. The Great Sanhedrim, the King, and some Prophet hereupon consulted the Urim and Thummim. After they were agreed in the meaning of the Oracle, the Counsellors of the Sanhedrim pronounced two Hymns, containing a thanksgiving to the Lord. This done, they took two loaves of leavened bread, and going out that instant amidst people playing upon cymbals, the harp and psaltery, they stop'd at each corner of the street, and at every publick building in their way, and pronounced these words, I will praise thee, O God, for thou hast lifted me up. Being come at last to the place, as far as which the city was to be inlarged, the procession stop'd; and of the two loaves which were brought, one was eat, the other was burnt.

The Eastern People, as well as the ancient Jews, call Jerusalem the Holy City, and sometimes the Holy House, by reason of the Temple which was built there. They give it the name likewise of Ilia, which is a corruption of Ælia, the name it bore by the Emperor Adrian's order, when he rebuilt it. They affirm Jerusalem to have [Ps. lxxiii. 1.] been built by Melchisedech the Son of Shem, who removed thither the body of Adam, which had been kept by Noah in the Ark. They also maintain, that it is situated in the Centre of the whole habitable Earth, according to this expression of the Psalmist, Thou hast wrought Salvation in the midst of the Earth.

Mahomet, in the first years of his Sect's appearing in the World, commanded all Mussulmen at their Devotions, to turn towards Jerusalem; and after his death, the generality of his companions were for burying him within the inclosure of this city. They believe, that the stone which Jacob anointed in his way to Mesopotamia was removed to Jerusalem, and placed on the Mountain where Solomon's Temple was built. After the ruin of this Temple, the Christians built a magnificent Church in the same place; and the Turks at last becoming masters of the city, Omar, one of their Caliphs, built a Mosque near the same stone, which of all the places of Devotion frequented by them, next to those of Mecca and Medina, is that whereunto they principally go in pilgrimage; and their pilgrimages to Mecca having been interrupted by the incursions of the Carmates from the year 317 to 339 of the Hegira, the Mussulmen went to Jerusalem, and there perform'd their Devotions.

The Cadhi Gemaliddin, Son of Vustel, writes, that passing through Jerusalem in his way to Egypt, he saw the Christian Priests carrying glass-bottles full of wine, and placing them on the Sakra, that is to say, on Jacob's stone, near unto which the Mussulmen have built a Temple.

This is a Series of the most remarkable Events which have befallen the city of Jerusalem, from Moses to its intire destruction by the Romans. It is not our design to carry on our Remarks any farther, since we confine ourselves to what concerns the Bible, and the History of the Old and New Testament.

We have in another place given a Catalogue of the Kings of Judah, and the other Princes who reign'd at Jerusalem, as far as Archelaus. We have also drawn up a Chronological List of the High-Priests of the Jews. As to the Bishops of the Christian Church of Jerusalem, the first who governed it after Jesus Christ, was St. James the Younger, surnamed the brother of our Lord, of whom we have spoken under his particular Title. He was chosen in all probability immediately after the Ascension. He was put to death by the intrigues of Ananus, the Son of Annas, who is mentioned in the Gospel. His martyrdom happened in the year of Jesus Christ 62. He was succeeded by Simeon, a Relation likewise, or Cousin of our Saviour, and, according to some Historians, brother to St. James his predecessor. Simeon suffered martyrdom under Trajan, about the year of Jesus Christ 107. See the word SIMEON. The sequel of his successors has no relation to our subject.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

See Psal. xlviii. 2. Isai. xiv. 13. and 2 Sam. v. 7, 9. and 1 Chron. xi. 5. and 1 Kings viii. 1. and 2 Chron. v. 2. Ezek. xl. 2.
2 Chron. xxiv. 22. xxxiii. 14. and 2 Kings xxii. 24.
Joseph. de Bello, l. 5. c. 6. p. 912, 913.
Judg. i. 8. Now the children of Judah had fought against Jerusalem, and had taken it, and smitten it with the edge of the sword, and set the city on fire.
The death of Alexander happened in the year of the World 3681, before Jesus Christ 319, before the Vulgar Æra 323.
In the year of the World 3684, before Jesus Christ 316, before the Vulgar Æra 320.
Antiq. l. 12. c. 1, 2.
Joseph. l. 2. contra Appion. p. 1064. In the year of the World 3758, before Jesus Christ 342, before the Vulgar Æra 346.
In the year of the World 3828, before Jesus Christ 172, before the Vulgar Æra 176.
In the year of the World 3831, before Jesus Christ 169, before the Vulgar Æra 173.
In the year of the World 3836, before Jesus Christ 164, before the Vulgar Æra 168.
Till the year of the World 3840, before Jesus Christ 160, before the Vulgar Æra 164.
In the year of the World 3841, before Jesus Christ 159, before the Vulgar Æra 163.
In the year of the World 3964, before Jesus Christ 36, before the Vulgar Æra 40.
In the year of the World 3965, before Jesus Christ 35, before the Vulgar Æra 39.
De Bello, l. 2. c. λα. λβ. p. 810, 811, 812.
Zach. xiv. 2. Half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city.

Jerusha

JERUSHA, the mother of Jotham, son of Uzziah King of Judah. 2 Kings xv. 33.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeshaiah

JESHAIAH, the son of Jeduthun, of the four and twenty Families of the Levites appointed for the service of the Temple; he was Head of the eighth. 1 Chron. xxv. 3.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeshana

JESHANA, a City in the Tribe of Ephraim. 2 Chron. xiii. 19. the same perhaps as Zin, Numb. xxxiv. 4. Eusebius and St. Jerom place Zin at seven miles distance from Jericho, northward.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jesharelah

JESHARELAH, the seventh of the four and twenty Families of the Levites. 1 Chron. xxv. 14.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeshebeab

JESHEBEAB, Chief of the fourteenth Family of Priests, who were in waiting at the Temple. 1 Chron. xxiv. 13.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jesher

JESHER, the son of Caleb and Azubah. 1 Chron. ii. 18.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeshimon

JESHIMON. This is probably the same as Hesmona, Asemona, Esem, Esemon, and Esemona, a city in the Wilderness of Maon, belonging to the Tribe of Simeon, lying a great way in the southern part of Palestine, and even in Arabia Petræa. See 1 Sam. xxiii. 24. Josephus [Antiq. l. 6. c. 14. p. 198. G.] reads the Wilderness of Simeon, instead of the Wilderness of Maon, where Jeshimon was situated. This city belonged to the Tribe of Simeon.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeshishai

JESHISHAI, of the Tribe of Gad, the son of Jahdo, and father of Michael. 1 Chron. v. 14.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeshua

JESHUA, a city in the Tribe of Judah. Nehem. xi. 27.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jeshui

JESHUI, the son of Saul. 1 Sam. xiv.49.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jesse

JESSE, the son of Obed, and father of [Ruth. iv. 17,22. 1 Chron. ii. 13. Matth. i. 5. Gen. xlvi. 17.] David, Eliab, Abinadab, Shaminah, Nethaneel, Raddai, and Ozem. David was the youngest of them all; but he became the most illustrious, and Head of his Family.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jesui

JESUI, the third son of Asher, Head of the Family of the Jesuites. Numb. xxvi. 44.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jesus-Christ

JESUS-CHRIST, the Son of God, the true Messiah, and Saviour of the World, begotten of the Father before all Ages, equal to and consubstantial with the Father as to his divine Nature; inferior to the Father, and of the same Substance with the Virgin Mary his Mother, as to his human Nature; the first and principal Object of the Prophecies; figured and promised in the Old Testament; expected and desired by the old Patriarchs; the hope and salvation of the Gentiles; the glory, happiness and consolation of Christians. The ineffable name of Jesus, or, as the Hebrews pronounce it, Jehoshuah, or Joshua[1], signifies Saviour, He who shall save. No one ever bore this name with so much justice, nor so perfectly fulfilled the signification of it as Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the World, who hath saved us from Sin and Hell, and hath merited Heaven for us by the price of his blood.

The Angel Gabriel had six months before declared to Zachary the future birth of his son John the Baptist, the forerunner of the Messiah, when God sent the same Angel[2] to Nazareth, a city of Galilee, to the Virgin Mary, who was espoused to [Luke i. 28.] Joseph, of the Tribe of Judah. The Angel entring the place where she was, said, Hail thou, that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women. Mary hearing these words, was disturbed at them; but the Angel encouraged her, and said, Thou hast found favour with God, thou shalt conceive, and bring forth a Son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the son of the Highest; and the Lord shall give unto him the Throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the House of Jacob for ever. Mary asked him how this could be, since she knew not man? the Angel answered, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the Power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that Holy thing, which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God. And behold, thy cousin Elizabeth, she hath also conceived a Son in her old age, and this is the sixth month of her being with child; for there is nothing impossible with God. And Mary said, Behold the Handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word!

[Luke ii. 1, &c.] About nine months after this, an Edict issued by the Emperor Augustus, was published in Judæa, enjoining all persons to cause themselves to be registred in the place of their birth or original. Joseph, who was of the Tribe of Judah, and Family of David, and Mary his espoused wife, went together to Bethlehem; and while they were there, Mary's time being up, she was delivered of a[3] Son, and put him in a manger belonging to the stable, where they were obliged to lodge, there being no room to be found in the Inn. Whether our Saviour were born the very night on which the blessed Virgin arrived at at Bethlehem, or some days after, is a question. The most common opinion is, that he was born that very night: but the Text of the Gospel, which says, that while they were there, she brought forth her first-born, should seem rather to favour the contrary opinion.

Now there were Shepherds in the neighbourhood of Bethlehem, who passed the night in the fields, watching and guarding their flocks. On a sudden the Angel of the Lord appeared to them, and a Light from Heaven encompassed them, and they heard these words; I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, who is Christ, the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you; ye shall find the Babe wrapped in swaddling-clothes lying in a manger. At the same instant there was with the Angel a multitude of the heavenly Host praising God, and saying, Glory be to God in the highest, and on Earth Peace, Good-will towards men. After this the Shepherds went speedily to Bethlehem, where they found Mary and Joseph, and the Child lying in a manger; and by these marks they discerned the truth of what they had been told concerning this Child.

The eighth day being come, when the Child was to be circumcised[4], he was called Jesus, which was the name declared by the Angel, before he was conceived in his mother's womb. Some days after there came Wise Men from the East to Jerusalem, who were in search after the new King of the Jews, and said, that an unknown Star had appeared to them in their country, which denoted the birth of this new Prince. At these words, the whole city was moved; and Herod, who was then at Jericho, where he [Joseph. Antiq. l. 17. c. 8. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 21.] was under cure for the disease whereof he died, being informed of it, sent for the Priests, and having asked them where Christ should be born, they answered at Bethlehem. Then inquiring diligently at what time the Star appeared, he bad the wise Men go, and find out the new King, and as soon as they had seen him, come and give him notice of it, that he too might go, and worship him. They departed, and immediately the Star, which they had seen in the East, again appeared to them, and conducted them to Bethlehem, where it stop'd over the place where the child was. There therefore they entred, adored Jesus, offered their presents to him, and the next night, the Angel of the Lord having warned them of Herod's evil disposition, they returned by another way into their own country. Forty days after the birth of Jesus, the time of Mary's Purification being come, she went to the Temple of Jerusalem, to present her first-born Son, and offer those Sacrifices, which the Law prescribed for women after their lying-in. The good old Man Simeon, filled with the Holy Ghost, came at the same time to the Temple; and taking Jesus in his arms, gave thanks to God, saying, That he should die contentedly, since he had seen that Saviour, who was the expectation of Israel. There was also a pious widow, whose name was Anna, in the Temple; she praised God for what she had seen, and published the coming of the Messiah to all who waited for redemption in Israel.

After this, as Joseph and Mary were preparing to return to Nazareth, an Angel warned Joseph in a dream, to fly with Jesus into Egypt, because Herod would soon [Matth. ii. 13, 18.] seek the Child, in order to kill him. Accordingly Herod seeing the Wise Men were returned, without coming to him, was mightily inraged; and fearing lest this new King was come to deprive him of his crown, he sent orders for the execution of all the male children under two years old in Bethlehem and the confines of it. Herod died soon after this massacre, and Archelaus his son succeeded him. Now the Angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in Egypt, some months after the death of Herod, and told him, that he might return into Judæa; because he who had designs upon the Child's life was dead. But when he was in Judæa, as soon as he understood that Archelaus reigned there, he did not think it proper to continue there. He chose rather to go to Nazareth, which was a small City of Galilee, whither the Dominion of Archelaus did not extend. There Jesus Christ dwelt, and was subject to Joseph and Mary, working at his father's trade, who was, as is generally believed, a Carpenter, till the thirtieth year of the Vulgar Æra, which was the thirty third of his age.

Jesus, at the age of twelve years[5] went to Jerusalem, in order there to celebrate the [Luke ii. 22, &c.] Passover. After they had performed what the Law required of them, Joseph and Mary returned to Nazareth; and believing Jesus to be with some of their friends or relations, they went a day's journey without any suspicion of his absence. But in the evening, having in vain sought for him, they went back the next day to Jerusalem, where they found him in the Temple, sitting in the midst of the Doctors, asking them questions, and hearing them. Joseph and Mary expressed to him the uneasiness which he had put them to; but he answered them, that they might very well think he could be no where but in his Father's Temple; as if he had a mind to intimate to them, that it was to no purpose to seek for him in any other place. He returned with them to Nazareth, and continued to live there with great submission to them.

John the Baptist, the son of Zachary, having lived to the age of two and thirty [In the year of the World 4032, of the Vulgar Æra 28, of J. C. 31. Matth. iii. 13, &c. Luke iii. 21,22,&c. In the year of J. C. 32, of the Vulgar Æra 30.] in the Wilderness, came into the country about Jordan, preaching repentance, and publishing that the Messiah, who had been so long expected, was at last come; that he was then present among the Israelites, that he had his fan in his hand, and would thoroughly purge his floor, and burn the chaff with unquenchable fire.

As multitudes resorted to John, to be baptized, Jesus went to him among others: but John, who by the assistance of the Holy Spirit discovered him, prevented him, saying, It is from thee that I should receive baptism. Jesus answered him, Suffer it to be so; it is necessary, that I should thus fulfil all righteousness. John therefore baptized him: and as he came out of the water, and was praying, the heavens opened, and the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a Dove upon him, and a voice came from Heaven and said, Thou art my beloved Son, in thee I am well pleased.

After this, Jesus was led by the Spirit into the Wilderness, there to be tempted of the Devil; and having fasted forty days and forty nights, he was hungry. The Tempter hereupon approaching him, asked him to change the stones which he offered to him, into bread. Jesus dismissed him with these words, Man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word of God; that is to say, by that which it pleases God to give him for food, or by that which has received from God the virtue of nourishing. Afterwards the Devil transported him to a high Mountain, and told him, that he would give him all the Kingdoms of the Earth, which he pointed out to him with his hand, if he would worship him. But Jesus checked him, saying, It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God. At last the Devil set him on a breast-work belonging to one of the Galleries of the Temple, or upon the Balustrade, which went round this lofty Edifice, and bad him throw himself down, for it is written, God hath commanded his Angels, and they will receive you in their arms, lest you should hurt your foot against a stone. But the Son of God answered him, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. Then the Devil left him for a time, and Angels came and administred to him.

Some time after, John the Baptist going to baptize at Bethabara beyond Jordan, Jesus passed that way in his return from Galilee. John saw him, and said to two of his Disciples, Behold the Lamb of God, (the Victim which procures Salvation) behold the person who taketh away the Sins of the World! Hereupon these two Disciples followed Jesus, went to the place where he abode, and continued all that day with him. Towards the evening, Andrew, who was one of them, having found his brother Simon, brought him to Jesus, and Jesus said to him, Thou art Simon [John i. 29—44.] the son of Jona or Joanna; thou shalt hereafter be called Cephas, that is to say, a Stone or Rock. The next day, Jesus departed to go to Nazareth; he was accompanied by Andrew, Peter, and that other Disciple, who at first went with them to find Jesus, and whom some affirm to have been Bartholomew, or James the son of Zebedee. As Jesus therefore was on the way, he met Philip, and said to him, Follow me. Philip followed him, and lighting on Nathanael, told him, that they had found the Messiah, who was Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph. Nathanael answered him, Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? Philip replied, come yourself and see. Jesus saw Nathanael coming to him, and said of him, Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile! Nathanael answered him, whence knowest thou me? Jesus replied, before Philip called thee, I saw thee under the fig-tree. It is the conjecture of some, that Nathanael was there at that time praying, and beseeching God to discover the Messiah to him. Then Nathanael answered him, I see evidently, that thou art the Son of God, the King of Israel. Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt see greater things than these, when the Heavens shall be opened, and the Angels shall ascend and descend upon the Son of Man. Thus our Saviour often called himself, out of humility, and with an intention to describe his Human Nature.

From Bethabara, Jesus went to Cana in Galilee, where being invited to a wedding, together with his Mother and his Disciples, he changed the water into wine, and [John ii. 12—25.] wrought his first Miracle. From thence he went to Capernaum, where he continued some days with his Mother and his Disciples, because he proposed to be going to Jerusalem, there to celebrate the Passover. [John iii. 1—21.] Being come into the Temple, he drove out the money-changers, and the merchants, who sold beasts and birds for the Sacrifices; and as he was asked by what authority he did so, he answered, Destroy this Temple, and in three days I will raise it up again: which he meant of his Death and Resurrection. He performed many Miracles at that time, and multitudes believed on him. But he did not trust himself with them, because he knew their inconstancy. This is the first Passover, which he celebrated after he began to preach, and manifest himself to the World. While he abode at Jerusalem, Nicodemus came by night to visit him, and said, that God must certainly be with him, because he wrought such great Miracles. Jesus discoursed to him of Baptism and [John iii. 1—21.] Regeneration, which are the first door, through which an entrance is opened to the Christian Religion. He likewise declared to him, that he was the Light of the World, and the Son of God descended from Heaven. Nicodemus did not very readily understand the Mysteries which Jesus Christ then revealed to him, but the sequel will shew, that his faith and conversion were solid and real.

From Jerusalem, Jesus, instead of returning into Galilee, went and dwelt in Judæa, and in the country about Jordan; where he began to baptize with the Baptism of Water and the Holy Ghost, which John the Baptist had promised and proclaimed, and Jesus Christ had not long before explained to Nicodemus. As soon as he began to baptize, a croud of people came to receive his baptism. This Sacrament was conferr'd principally by his Disciples; for his part, he was chiefly employ'd in preaching, and giving his instructions. The number of those, who resorted to him, was so great, that the Disciples of John the Baptist grew jealous of him, and discovered their uneasiness to their Master. But John answered them, that he was only his forerunner and brideman: He is the Bridegroom, and I am only the Friend of the [John iii. 29.] Bridegroom.

John the Baptist being seized and imprisoned by Herod the Tetrarch's orders, as [In the year of J. C. 34, of the Vulgar Æra 31.] we shall shew in the Article of JOHN the Baptist, Jesus fearing lest the Pharisees, who were his declared enemies, should prevail with Pilate to lay hands on him also, upon pretence, that he was followed by a great croud of people, thought fit to retire [John iv. 1, 2, &c.] to Galilee, which was part of Philip's Tetrarchy, and where Pilate had no power. In the way he stop'd near a small village called Sychar, which was inhabited by Samaritans. Jesus Christ sat down very much fatigued near Jacob's Well, and sent his Disciples into the Town to buy provisions for him. During their absence, a woman of the place came to draw water; and Jesus desired her to let him drink. She expressed her surprize to him, that a Jew should ask water of her: because there is no commerce between the Jews and Samaritans, unless in extreme necessity. Jesus instructed her, told her that it was in his power to give her living water, which springs up unto everlasting life; that the time was come, when the Father should be adored not only at Jerusalem or Gerizim, but in all the countries of the world, and that a true, pure, and spiritual worship should be paid to him. The woman of Samaria told him, that the Messiah, who was to remove all doubts, and teach every truth, was soon expected. Jesus hereupon in an express manner declared to her, I am he, I who speak unto thee.

In the mean while, the Disciples being come from Schechem, pressed Jesus to eat. But he told them, that he had another sort of food, which they were not acquainted with, and that was to fulfil the Will of his Father. The woman going to Schechem, related there her conversation with Jesus, and said, that certainly this Man was a Prophet, and that he had told her every thing, which she had ever done. The inhabitants of Schechem came therefore and invited Jesus to go into their City. He went thither, continued there two days, [John iv. 43. Luke iv. 14—30.] and many believed on him.

Upon his arrival in Galilee, he preached in the Synagogues. He went to Nazareth, the place of his birth, preached there, and made an application to himself of a certain passage in Isaiah, which speaks of the Messiah; and said, that he was the Person whom the Prophet foretold. The people of Nazareth admired his doctrine, but the meanness of his condition offended them, and Jesus wrought no miracle among them; he even reproached them with their incredulity, and told them, that no Prophet was honoured in his own country; which so incensed them, that they led him to the top of the Mountain, on which their city was built, with a design to throw him down headlong; but Jesus passing through the midst of them, without their being able to stop him, went with an intention to fix his common residence at Capernaum; notwithstanding from that time to his death he dwelt there very little; for he went sometimes to one place, sometimes to another, preaching and instructing the people, and curing the sick who were brought to him from all parts.

He went a second time to Cana, and while he was there, an Officer belonging to King Herod came to him, desiring him to cure his son who was sick at Capernaum. Jesus told him, that he might return, for his son was healed. As he was on the way home, his servants met him, and brought him the good news of his son's recovery, who, they said, grew well the day before at the seventh hour, viz. at one a-clock in the afternoon, which was the very moment of our Saviour's telling [John iv. 46.] him that his son was cured. Some days after, being upon the Sea of Tiberias, he called Peter and Andrew his brother a second time, who were then employ'd in fishing. He went a little farther, and saw the two brothers James and John the sons of Zebedee, who were likewise in their vessel, and he called them also.

[Matth. iv. 18,19,20, &c.] As he was upon the Sabbath-day in the Synagogue of Capernaum, he healed one who was possessed with a Devil; and when he went out of the Synagogue, he entred Simon's house, where he cured this Apostle's mother-in-law, who had a violent fever [Mark i. 21—29.] upon her. Towards the evening, all the inhabitants of the city, who had any sick persons, brought them to the door of the house, where Jesus was, and he healed them all.

The next day early in the morning, he retired all alone into a desart place to pray. Peter and the other Disciples went thither to find him, and told him, that multitudes sought after him. But he carried them through the cities and villages of Galilee, where he preached the Kingdom of God. His reputation spread through all Syria, and the sick were sent to him from all quarters. [Matth. viii. 23, &c.]

At his return from this journey, he went again to Capernaum, and being as it were overwhelmed with the multitude, which came to hear him, he entred into Simon Peter's ship, and from thence began to teach the people, who were on the shore. He was here when he desired Peter to launch out into the deep, and let down his nets for a draught. Peter obey'd, and took so large a quantity of fish, that his nets broke. After this, he cured a leper, and several other sick [Luke v. 12. Matth. ix. 2.] persons; among the rest one sick of a palsy, who was let down into the house, where he was, through the top of it, there being no possibility of bringing him in at the door, by reason of the great croud which surrounded it on every side. From thence Jesus went upon the Lake of Genesareth, and invited Matthew, otherwise Levi, a Publican by profession, to follow him. See MATTHEW.

[Christ's second Passover from the time of his preaching.] While Jesus was at Jerusalem, whither he went to celebrate the Passover, he cured one sick of the Palsy, who had been eight and thirty years waiting at the Pool of Bethesda. This person having carried his bed upon the Sabbath-day, caused a sort of scandal among the Jews, who having information, that Jesus had commanded him to do so, resolved upon his death, as one who was a blasphemer, and destroyer of the Law, because in a discourse which he had made to them, he had declared that God [John v. 1—47.] was his Father. Departing from Jerusalem, he passed thro' the corn-fields upon a Sabbath-day, and his Disciples, who were pressed with hunger, rubb'd the ears which were almost ripe, within their hands, designing to eat some of the corn. The Pharisees thought this a wicked action, and complained of it to Jesus as a violation of the Sabbath. Jesus justified the conduct of his Disciples by David's example, who in his necessity eat the Shew-bread which for some days had [1 Sam. xxi. 4, 5, 6.] been taken from before the Lord; and by that of the Priests, who work'd in the Temple on the Sabbath-day. Lastly, he told them plainly, that he was greater than the Temple, and that as Lord of the Sabbath he had power to dispense with the Law, which [Matth. xii. 1—8. Matth. xii. 9, 10—22.] required the observance of it.

The next Sabbath-day being in the Synagogue of Capernaum, he there cured a man whose hand was withered, and demonstrated to the Pharisees, that herein he had done nothing contrary to the Law. The Pharisees being exasperated, confederated with the Herodians, whom we take to be followers of Judas the Gaulinite, (see above the Article HERODIANS) to procure the death of Jesus. But our Saviour retired to Capernaum, and went to the Sea-coast of Tiberias, whither he was followed by a croud of people, who came to hear him, and to be cured of their diseases. Finding himself overwhelmed with the multitude, he crossed the Sea, and retreated without any company to a Mountain, where he passed the night in prayer. The next morning he came down, called those of his Disciples, whom he had appointed for this Office, and gave them the Name and Mission of Apostles, that is to say, Messengers: And being seated on a rising ground at the bottom of the Mountain, he began to instruct the Apostles, and the people who flocked thither from all parts, and delivered that admirable Sermon on the Mount, which comprehends a short summary of all his Doctrine, and an abridgement of the [Matth. v. vi. vii.] whole Gospel. Herein he declares, that he makes beatitude to consist in poverty, sorrow and penitential tears; in the love of justice, in exercising works of mercy, in purity of heart, in the love of peace, in suffering, in persecutions, in contempt of riches, honours, and the esteem of the World. He shews that he came not to destroy but perfect the Law, and to restore it to its purity, which was corrupted by the wrong expositions of the Pharisees.

He afterwards sets forth, that he came to establish greater perfection than the Law had done, and to forbid several things; for example, divorce, which the Law tolerated; that he condemned not only evil actions, but evil desires also. He gives them a form of Prayer in the Pater-Noster, which is likewise an excellent

Lecture Lecture of Morality. He condemns hypocrisy, vanity, avarice, all inquietudes either in acquiring or preserving the goods of this world, and rash censures. He recommends prayer, charity, and the love of our enemies. He gives this general rule for our conduct towards our neighbour, not to do that to another, which we are not willing that others should do to us. Lastly, He concludes with saying, That to profess and believe is not sufficient; that he requires works, and that by them at the last day we shall be either condemned or absolved. After this discourse, a leper was presented to him, whom he healed, and enjoined to go and shew himself to the Priests.

From thence he returned to Capernaum, where a Centurion, who was a Gentile, prevailed with the principal Jews of the city, to intreat him to come to his house, and restore one of his servants to his health, who then lay dangerously ill. As he was on the way thither, this man sent one of his friends to declare to him, that he did not believe himself worthy of the trouble he might take in coming to him, but if he said the word, this alone would be sufficient for his servant's cure. At last, the Centurion [Compare Matth.viii. 5—13. withLuke vii. 1--9. Matth. viii. 5, 13.] observing that Jesus Christ was still hastening towards his house, went himself, and told him, that he did not esteem himself worthy to receive him under his roof, but that if he would speak the word only, his servant would be healed. Jesus admired his faith, and said that he had found none such among the Jews themselves; and at the same time cured his servant. Jesus went from Capernaum to Naïm, where he raised a widow's son from the dead, who was already in his coffin, and the people were carrying him to the grave. When he came into the city, a Pharisee, whose name [Luke vii. 10-- 50.] was Simon, invited him to dine with him, and while he was at table, a woman belonging to the place, whose loose conduct was generally known, came and washed his feet with her tears, and wiped them with her hair. Simon was offended at his permitting this woman to touch him; but Jesus convinced him, that she having expressed abundance of repentance and love, had rendred herself a fit object of God's mercy and forgiveness. At the same time he dismissed her, telling her, that her sins were remitted.

After he had gone through all Galilee, he returned to Capernaum, where he found himself so oppressed with the croud that followed him, that he had scarce time to eat. His relations having been informed of the throng, which was about him, came [Mark iii. 21-- 31.] to disengage him from it, saying, that He was beside himself[6]. The Greek Text of this place is obscure. Some[7] translate it, He fainted away; others, He lost his wits; or, He went out of his house, like one fit to be confined and bound, whom we would prevent from running up and down the streets and fields. Or, lastly, He was as it were in a trance, like one under a violent enthusiasm, which robs a man of the free use of his understanding.[8] The blessed Virgin was among those who came to deliver Jesus out of the croud; but with sentiments doubtless very different from those of his other Relations, who did not [John vii. 5.] believe in him. Notice therefore was given to Jesus, that his Mother and Kinsmen wanted him; but he extending his hands towards his Disciples, and those who heard him, said, Behold my Mother and my Kinsmen! they are so, who hearken to me, and do the Will of my Father. In the same place he cured one possessed with a devil, who was both blind and [Matth. xii. 22.] dumb. The Pharisees, whose envy was stirred up by the many wonders which they saw performed by him, said, that he cast out devils in the name of Beelzebub, Prince of the Devils; and required such a Prodigy of him, as could be imputed only to the Power of God. But Jesus Christ told them he would give them no other besides that of the Prophet Jonas; that is to say, the Miracle of his glorious Resurrection, which is as it were the crowning and perfection of all his Miracles.

[Matth. xiii. 1-- 26. Luke viii. 18, &c.] After dinner, Jesus went to the Sea -shore, and the people being got together about him, he went into a Vessel, and from thence began to speak to them, that so he might not be oppressed by the croud. He proposed several Parables to them; for example, that of the Sower; that of a Candle put under a bushel; that of the Tares, which the enemy sowed by night in the field; that of the Grain of Mustard-seed; and that of Leaven. He repeated these Parables to the multitude without explaining them; and when he returned to his lodging, his Disciples desired him to expound the meaning of them to them: He did so, and continued to deliver others, that were new, to them: that of the hidden Treasure; of the Pearl which was purchased at the price of all the buyer had; and that of a Net thrown into the Sea, which gathers all sorts of fish good and bad. Towards the evening, after he had interpreted these Parables to them, he went into a ship, with a design of passing over the Sea of Tiberias. But in the night-time he fell asleep, and a storm rising, the vessel was in danger of sinking. The Disciples therefore awoke Jesus, who [Matth. viii. 23. Luke viii. 23, &c.] commanded the winds, and immediately made the Sea calm.

He landed in the country of the Gergesenes, lying Eastward of the Sea, which he had crossed. There were two famous Demoniacks there, and one among the rest who was possessed by a whole legion of devils. He met Jesus, and the devils complained by him, that he came to torment them before the time. They besought him not to send them into the depths of Hell, but rather into a herd of Swine which were feeding near the place. Jesus granted their request; and immediately the herd, which consisted of about two thousand Swine, ran violently down a steep precipice into the Sea of Tiberias, and the person possessed was delivered. The Gergesenes frightned by this Miracle, and apprehending some new loss, entreated Jesus to retire out of their country. He crossed over the Sea again, and was scarce come ashore, when Jairus a Ruler of the Synagogue at Capernaum, came and desired him to cure his only daughter, who was twelve years old. As he was going to Jairus's house, a woman, who was diseased with an issue of blood, was made whole only by touching secretly the hem of his garment. Soon after news was brought to Jairus, that his daughter was dead. But Jesus exhorted him to have faith; and coming into the house, he raised the young woman from the dead, ordered meat to be set before her, and charged her parents to conceal this [Matth. ix. 18, 19-26. Luke viii. 49—56. Mark vi. 25—44. Mark vi. 1, 2, &c. Matth. ix. 27—31. Luke ix. 11—17.] miracle.

As he was going to Nazareth, two blind men met him, and earnestly begg'd to be restored to their sight. They followed him into the house, and he granted what they asked of him. At the same time almost he cured one possessed with a devil, who was dumb. When he came into the Synagogue of Nazareth, he preached there in such a manner, as was admired by every one. But his fellow-citizens said one to another, Is not this the Carpenter's Son? Is not his Mother's name Mary? and his brethren and sisters are they not all with us? Jesus therefore departed out of the city, and returned no more thither, saying, that a Prophet is not without honour, save in his own country. [Matth. xiii. 54—58. Matth. ix. 36. x. 1—17—42.] Soon after he sent his Disciples throughout all the land, to preach, that the Kingdom of God was at hand; he sent them two by two with power to perform Miracles; but forbad them to carry provisions, arms, change of raiment, or two pair of sandals with them. He directed them to go to the houses of persons most in repute for their merit and virtue, to abide there, without changing lightly their habitation, and to receive there such entertainment as they were pleased to give them. Jesus for his part, went about every where preaching; and when the Disciples and Apostles had finished the course of their Mission, they returned to give an account of it to their Master, who thanked God for the good success of their labours.

In the mean time, Jesus was always followed by a great multitude of people; and in order to enjoy some repose, he was forced to convey himself privately out of the reach of their importunity. One day he crossed the Lake of Genesareth, or Sea of Tiberias, which is the same thing, and retreated to a Mountain at a distance, with his Apostles. But the croud, upon notice that he was gone over, followed him by land, and came to the foot of the Mountain, where he was, in the desart of Bethsaida. Jesus coming down from the Mountain, cured the sick, who were presented to him, and began to teach the people. As the day was declining, the Apostles remonstrated to Jesus, that it was time to dismiss the people, that they might go into the Villages, and buy provisions. Jesus answered them, Do you give them to eat. They excused themselves, representing the impossibility of their doing so. Whereupon he asked them how many loaves they had, and understanding that they had five and two fishes, he made the people sit down upon the grass, and supplied them with something to eat in so plentiful a manner, that the whole company was satisfied; and the fragments of the five loaves and two fishes being gathered up, filled twelve baskets. Now they who were fed upon this occasion, were in number about five thousand men, without reckoning women and children.

[Matth. xiv. 15—21.] The people sensible of so great a benefit, resolved to take Jesus and chuse him for their King: but in the evening, he compell'd his Disciples to go into the Ship, and [John vi. 8—13.] repass the Sea, while he continued upon the Mountain, spending the greatest part of the night in prayer. The Apostles having met with a contrary wind all night, instead of going to Bethsaida, where they proposed to land, were obliged to steer towards the coast of Tiberias, or Capernaum; and the next day, at break of day, they discovered themselves to be about five and twenty or thirty furlongs from the shore. They then saw a man walking on the Sea near them, who made a shew, as if he intended to pass by them. They took it for an Apparition, and were frighted. But Jesus removed their fears, by telling them, that it was he. St. Peter desired permission to go to him, and walk upon the waters; Jesus gave him leave; and Peter walked some time upon the water without sinking. But seeing a wave which threatned him, he was afraid, and began to sink, whereupon he cried out, Lord, save me; then Jesus took him by the hand: and the Disciples desired Jesus to come into their ship. He did so, and immediately the [Matth. xiv. 13—34. John vi. 16-21. Mark vi. 47—53.] vessel was ashore.

The multitude, which did not see Jesus go into the ship with his disciples, thought that he continued in the desart of Bethsaida; where they sought for him with great zeal and care, in order to make him King. But some ships coming from Tiberias to the same place, informed them that Jesus was at Tiberias. Immediately the multitude returned, and came on this side of the Sea, in order to find Jesus, who during this interval was gone to Capernaum. The people asked him how he came thither: and Jesus answered, that they sought him, not because of his miracles, but for the sake of the provision which he had given them. He therefore exhorted them to labour for the meat which perisheth not. He told them that he was the bread from Heaven, which was infinitely more excellent than the Manna, which their fathers had eaten in the Wilderness, and that his Flesh was Meat indeed, and his Blood drink indeed. This discourse amazed the people, and was the cause of his being deserted by many of his Disciples. Hereupon he asked his Apostles if they too would leave him: but Peter answered, that he had the words of eternal life in him, that he was the true Christ, and [John vi. 22, 23—71. Jesus Christ's third Passover after he began to preach.] the Son of the living God.

As the Feast of the Passover drew near, Jesus prepared to go to Jerusalem. The Evangelists do not inform us what he did there; they do not so much as take any notice expressly of this journey. Saint John says only, that the miracle of multiplying the five loaves was wrought a little before [John vi. 4, 5.] the Feast of the Passover. When he returned into Galilee, some of the Pharisees were offended with his Disciples for not washing their hands before they sat down to table[9]. But Jesus sent them away, reproaching them with their hypocrisy, and superstitious fondness for vain Ceremonies, while they neglected the principal duties of [Matth. xv. 22—28, &c. Matth. xv. 10-15, 16—20. and Mark vii. 14, 15—23.] the Law. Being gone into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, a Phœnician or Canaanitish woman came and desired him to cure her daughter. Jesus at first made her no answer: but as she continued her cry, and his Apostles desired him to send her away, and grant her request, he replied, I am not sent but to the lost Sheep of Israel; thereby meaning, that his favours were not intended for the Gentiles, such as the Phœnicians were. When he was come to the house, where he lodged, this woman, without being discouraged, threw herself at his feet, and besought him to restore her daughter to her health. Jesus answered her, It is not just to give the children's bread to dogs. It is true, said she, yet the dogs eat the crumbs under their master's table. Jesus admired her faith, and complied with her desire.

He continued his journey towards Sidon; and returning by the springs of Jordan, he went through Decapolis beyond the Sea of Tiberias, where he cured a man, who was both deaf and dumb. He retired to the top of a Mountain without company, and continued there three days. When he came down, he found abundance of sick people, whom he made whole. Then he ordered seven loaves and some small fishes, which the Apostles had taken for their provision, to be distributed to all the multitude: the number of those who eat was four thousand, without reckoning women and children. They were all satisfied, and seven baskets were filled with the [Matth. xv. 32—39. Mark viii. 1—10.] fragments which were gathered.

Jesus immediately imbarked, and went to Magdala in the Canton of Dalmanutha, (see the Article DALMANUTHA) towards the Springs of Jordan. While he was there, certain Pharisees and Sadducees came, and asked of him a Sign from Heaven. He told them as he had done before upon another occasion, that he had no other sign to give them besides that of Jonah; which signified his future Resurrection. And with respect to a Sign or Miracle from Heaven, he declared to them, that if they were as careful in examining the times and prophecies, which related to the coming of the Messiah, as they were skilful in foreseeing good or bad weather by the inspection of the heavens, they would have discovered soon, that the times pointed out in the Prophets, were fulfilled, and that he was the Messiah promised and expected for so many ages.

[Matth. xvi. 13—20. Mark viii. 27—30. Luke ix. 18.] He afterwards took shipping on the Sea of Tiberias, and came to Bethsaida, where he cured one who was blind. And when he came into the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi, he asked his Disciples, who he was said to be. They answered, that some said he was Elias; others Jeremiah, others John the Baptist, or one of the old Prophets. For the Jews believed a transmigration[10], and that the souls of men passed sometimes from one body into another, so that one and the same body might have many souls[11]. But whom, say ye, that I am? answered Jesus. Peter replied, Thou art Christ, the Son of God. Jesus commended his faith, and said, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church; and the gates of Hell shall not prevail against it. Whatsoever thou shalt bind on Earth, shall be bound in Heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on Earth, shall be loosed in Heaven. He enjoined them to tell no man that he was the Christ. He afterwards foretold the affronts and sufferings which he was to undergo at Jerusalem; and said to the multitude, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his Cross and follow me. For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake, shall find it. Verily, I say unto you, there are some standing here, who shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom. He spoke in all probability of his Transfiguration, which happened six days after.

He took therefore three of his Apostles, Peter, James and John, the sons of Zebedee, and brought them up into an high Mountain apart, which some believe to be mount Tabor, where, while he was at prayers in the night-time, he suddenly appeared with great glory and splendor about him, his clothes became white and sparkling like snow. The three Apostles, who at first were asleep, were awakened by the brightness of this light, and were witnesses of their Master's Transfiguration. They saw Moses and Elias with him, who spoke of every thing that he should suffer at Jerusalem. Peter being in a kind of extasy, said to Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here; if thou wilt let us make here three tabernacles, one for thee, and two others for Moses and Elias. The Scripture observes, that he was so transported with joy, as not to know what he said. During this time, Moses and Elias disappeared, and the Apostles heard a voice, saying, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him. Upon hearing this voice, they were afraid, and fell prostrate on the ground. But Jesus raised them up, and in the morning as they came down from the Mountain, he [Matth. xvii. 1—9. Mark ix. 1—8. Luke ix. 28—36.] charged them not to discover what they had seen to any one, till after his Resurrection.

When they descended from the Mountain, they went in search of the other Disciples, who were in the midst of a great croud, and in dispute with the Scribes upon their wanting power to cure a young man, who was dumb, lunatick, epileptical, and possessed with a devil. As soon as Jesus appeared, the whole company came with respect to meet him, and the young man's father importuned him earnestly to cure his son. Jesus granted his request, and the devil quitted the body which he had possessed. When our Saviour came into the house, where he abode, the Disciples asked why they were not able to cure this man. He answered, by reason of their little faith, and that this sort of devil was to be cast out [Matth. xvii. 19—21. Mark ix. 18—29. Matth. xvii. 24—27.] only by prayer and fasting.

He continued to preach throughout Galilee, and was careful in preparing his Apostles to see his Death and Passion, by speaking to them frequently of his Sufferings. But they did not comprehend any thing he said to them upon this occasion, and disputed on the way, who among them should be greatest. Jesus and Peter came first to Capernaum; and the Receivers of the two Drachms, or Half-shekel per head, which every Jew was obliged to pay annually to the Temple, came and asked Peter, whether his Master would pay them. Jesus prevented Peter, and before he said any thing to him about it, shewing him first, that as the Son of God he was not obliged to pay this tribute, he directed him to go to the Sea, which was near Capernaum, and throw in his line, and the first fish which he should take, would furnish him, he said, with what was necessary to pay for both of them. Peter accordingly went, and the first fish he took, had a Stater or Shekel of silver under its tongue, which St. Peter gave the Receivers for Jesus and himself.

[Matth. xviii. 1—5.] In that very instant the other Disciples arrived, and in consequence of the dispute which they had been engaged in by the way concerning the Primacy, they asked Jesus who should be greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven. Our Saviour, who knew what passed among them, told them, that in order to become the first, it was requisite they should endeavour to place themselves last; and taking a little Child, he told them, that if they would be admitted into the Kingdom of Heaven, they should become like that child. He added, that the least of those, who believed in him, were not to be despised, since their Angels behold continually the face of his heavenly Father. He afterwards delivered Rules how to treat our brethren when they offend us ; and St. Peter upon this occasion asked him, how often he was to forgive his brother, whether seven times. Jesus replied, not seven only, but seventy times seven. He added the parable of the servant, to whom his master had forgiven the sum of ten thousand talents, and who refused to have compassion on one of his fellow-servants, that owed him but an hundred pence. His Lord therefore ordered this wicked servant to be seized, and delivered him to the Executioners [Matth. xviii. 10, 15—35.] of Justice, till he had paid all his debt. God in like manner will treat those, who refuse to forgive their brethren.

Jesus, in the last year of his life, intending to keep the Feast of Pentecost at Jerusalem, sent his Disciples before him to preach in the several places through which he should himself follow them. He repeated to them the same commands, which he had already given them, and granted them the same power of curing the sick, and dispossessing devils. Having sent one of his Apostles into a village belonging to the Samaritans, in order to prepare a lodging for him, they would not receive him. Hereupon James and John, the sons of Zebedee, asked him, whether he would give them leave to call for fire from Heaven upon that village. But Jesus told them, they knew not what manner of spirit they were of; that for his part, he was come not to destroy, but to save mankind. It was perhaps from the [Luke ix. 51—56.] too ardent zeal of these two Disciples, that they had the name of Boanerges given them, [Mark iii. 17.] or sons of thunder.

As our Saviour was still proceeding on his journey to Jerusalem, he went and lodged with two sisters, Martha and Mary, who dwelt at Bethany, three quarters of a league from Jerusalem. Martha was very diligent in preparing something for him and his retinue to eat; while Mary sat at his feet, and heard quietly his word. Martha familiarly complain'd of this to Jesus. But he answered her; Martha, thou art busy about many things; whereas one thing only is necessary. Mary hath chosen the better part, which shall not be taken away from her. As [Luke x. 38—42.] he was upon the Mount of Olives over-against Jerusalem, his Disciples desired him to give them a form of Prayer, in imitation of John Baptist, who had given one to his followers. Jesus therefore repeated to them the Lord's Prayer, which he had before given them in his sermon on the mount, and [Matth. vi. 9, 10, &c.] continued to speak to them of the qualities and power of prayer. Jesus having cured one possessed, who was dumb, the Pharisees accused him with expelling devils in the name of Beelzebub. But after he had confuted their calumny with this argument, that Satan's kingdom could not be divided, which it would be, if Satan expell'd his agents out of such bodies as they possessed, he began to inveigh against them [Luke xi. 14—28— 36.] with great severity; and he did so with more sharpness at an Entertainment, to which he was invited by a Pharisee, where it was taken ill that he sat down to table [Luke xi. 38—54. and Luke xii. See Luke xi. xii. xiii. Luke xiii. 31—35. Luke xiii. 1—9.] without washing his hands. He delivered several instructions to the people and his Disciples, while this Feast of the Pentecost continued, all which it would be inconvenient to relate here in particular. See the Authors of Concords and Harmonies of the Gospel.

While he was still at Jerusalem, some of the Pharisees told him, that Herod was desirous of putting him to death. Jesus, who knew all these things, answered them, Go tell that Fox, behold I cast out devils, and I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected. It was his Intention to discover by this riddle, that his life was drawing near its last period, and that neither Herod, nor any other should hinder him from finishing his full career.

About the same time he was told, that Pilate had mingled the blood of some Galilæans with their Sacrifices. He answered, that these Galilæans were not the most criminal of that country, and recommended repentance to those who spoke to him, and threatned them that they should [Luke xiv. 1—14.] all perish, unless they were converted.

At his return from Jerusalem, he came to Capernaum, where, being invited to dine with a Pharisee, one who was sick of a dropsy was presented to him to be cured. The Pharisees observed him narrowly, to see if he would perform any cures upon that day, which was the Sabbath. He restored the sick person to health, and to justify his conduct, said, If any of your cattle should fall into a ditch upon the Sabbath-day, would you not on that day drag them out? And they were not able to answer him a word. Having likewise remarked with how much vanity the persons invited to this entertainment took possession of the first places, he gave them very fine lessons upon this occasion, and told them, that when they made a dinner or supper, they should invite such persons as might be obliged to them for it, and were not in a condition to make returns, that so at the Resurrection of the just, they might have their reward of God. As he passed through Galilee, he was continually followed by a great company of people, and he did not fail to inculcate to them, that the essential part of his doctrine consisted in renouncing their relations, their ease, and themselves; and that without this no one ought to flatter himself, that he could be his Disciple.

When he came to Capernaum, he did not disdain to talk, converse, and eat even with Publicans and Sinners. The Pharisees murmured at it: but he proposed to them the Parable of a Man, who had an hundred sheep, and having lost one, left the other ninety nine, and went in pursuit of that which was gone astray; he found it, laid it upon his shoulders, and brought it to his house again, where he rejoiced with his friends. Nothing shews more evidently his extreme desire of wicked mens conversion. He proposed to them likewise the Parable of the prodigal son, which is much to the same purpose.

[Luke xiv. 15, &c. Luke xiv. xv.] He designed to go to Jerusalem at the Feast of Tabernacles, which was celebrated in the month of October, and in this 32d year of the Vulgar Æra and 35th of Jesus Christ, fell upon the 13th of October. He went thither through the Country beyond Jordan; and in the way he had occasion to give several instructions to the People and his Disciples, concerning the use of temporal goods, divorces, alms, scandal, and other duties, as may be seen in the xvith and xviith Chapters of St. Luke. In the mean time those of his Relations who did not believe in him, sollicited him to go to Jerusalem, to the end, they said, that he might manifest himself to the world, and that the Disciples which he had made in the preceding journeys might be confirmed in their belief of him. Jesus did not tell them, that he would go thither, but only that they might go themselves thither, and for himself, that his time was not yet come. The Octaves of this Feast were half over when he appeared in the Temple, and began to teach there. The Jews, who knew that he had never studied, admired his doctrine, which he declared to them was not his, but his heavenly Father's, who had sent him. There was abundance of talk of him among the people, and different opinions there were concerning him; some affirming, that he was the Messiah, others maintaining that he was not. There was a design of seizing him, and persons were sent to this purpose; but they could not lay hands on him, because his hour was not yet come.

[John vii. 14, 15—53.] Upon the last day of the Feast of Tents or Tabernacles, Jesus being in the Temple, cried, If any one thirst, let him [John viii. 1—11.] come unto me and drink, and out of his heart shall flow rivers of living water. These discourses encreased the diversity of opinions which there was among the people concerning him. The Priests and Prophets maintained stiffly that he could not be a Prophet, because he was of Galilee. The people on the contrary were so affected with the miracles he wrought, that they could scarce have the least doubt, not only of his being a Prophet, but of his being the very Messiah. The evening being come, every one retired; and Jesus went and passed the night upon the Mount of Olives.

The next day he returned to the Temple, and the Pharisees brought a woman to him, who had been surprized in adultery, and asked him in a factious manner, what they should do with her. Jesus made them no answer; but wrote on the ground, as it were in the way of amusement. Then rising up, he said to them, He that is without sin among you, let him cast the first stone. Then he began again to write as before: His accusers fearing lest he should say more of this matter, withdrew one after another; and Jesus said to the woman, Hath no man condemned thee? Neither do I condemn [John viii. 12—21. Euseb. Hist. Eccl. l. 3. c. 39.] thee: Go and sin no more.

This relation was not to be read formerly in some old Copies of St. John's Gospel[12]. The other Evangelists have said nothing of this event. Eusebius tells us, that Papias reported this History, which he learn'd from the Apostles, as well as many others, which are not to be met with in the Gospels. The Greek Fathers for the most part seem not to have read it; and none of the Greek Commentators which are in the Catena upon St. John, have explain'd it. Maldonat assures us, that he never found it in any one of all the Greek Manuscripts, which he had consulted, excepting in one Copy, which contain'd Leontius's Comment on St. John; nor does Leontius say a word of it in his Exposition; and the Greek Text which is joined with his Explanation, is marked with Obelisks, to denote that it was a contested passage, and foreign to that place. The Armenians have expunged it out of their Bible: Nor is it to be seen in the Gothick Translation of Ulphilas, or the Syriac, printed at Paris and London. Euthymius, who was living in the beginning of the twelfth Age, confesses that it is not in the best Manuscripts, or that it is distinguish'd by an obelisk, as a passage which had been surreptitiously inserted, and added afterwards.

But

But the Answer made to this is, that the generality of the Greek Manuscripts, which were consulted by Theodore Beza, Robert Stephens, and Dr. Mill, read the passage here in question, and that there are very few Greek MSS. at present, wherein it is not to be met with ; that there is not one Latin one, which we know of, that is without it: that of the Syriac, Arabic, and Coptic Manuscripts, there are more perhaps that read it, than there are of others which do not. Lastly, Tatian, who lived in the year of Jesus Christ 160, and Ammonius, who lived in the year 220, have acknowledged and inserted it in their Harmony of the Gospels, from whence Eusebius took it, in order to insert it likewise in his.

The Author of the Apostolical Constitutions,[13], St. Jerom[14], St. Ambrose[15], St. Austin[16], the Synopsis whereof Athanasius is said to be the Author, acknowledge this History to be authentick. The generality of the most learned Criticks, even of the Protestants[17], do in like manner own it. And since the decision of the Council of Trent, which has declared the Vulgate to be authentick, it is not allowable to question any longer, but that this passage is genuine. As to the conduct of our Saviour towards this woman, the Commentators may be consulted, and what we have said heretofore under the name of Adultery.

Let us now return to our Lord's History.

The next day after this had passed in the Temple, Jesus going through the street, saw a man who had been blind from his birth. His Disciples ask'd him, whether this had happened to him as a punishment of his own, or of his Parents sins[18]. Jesus told them, for neither of these two reasons; but that the works of God should be manifested in him. At the same time spitting on the ground, he made a kind of Clay with the Spittle, rub'd the blind man's eyes with it, and bid him go and wash them in the pool of Siloam. He went thither, and returned perfectly cured. This miracle made a great noise, because the blind man was very well known. The next day he was brought to the Pharisees, and examined how he had been cured. He told them. Now the cure being wrought upon the Sabbath-day, the Pharisees maintained, that Jesus was no true Prophet, because he violated the Sabbath. The blind man's parents were likewise called. They testified the truth of their Son's cure; but they durst not explain themselves farther, fearing some ill treatment from the Pharisees. As the blind man, on whom this miracle was wrought, asserted resolutely, that Jesus was a good man and a Prophet, they drove him out of the Temple. The next day Jesus met him and said, Dost thou believe on the Son of God? The blind man reply'd, Who is the Son of God? Jesus said, I am he: and immediately he threw himself at our Lord's feet and worshipped [John ix. 35—41.] him.

After this, Jesus return'd into Galilee: but he did not long abide there, because he had determined to be present at the Feast of the Dedication of the Temple, renew'd [Macc. iv. 12.] and purified by Judas Maccabæus, which was celebrated in the month of December[19]. Jesus therefore going to this Festival, passed through the midst of Galilee and Samaria. And as he came near to a certain village, ten Lepers stood at a distance, and cried out to him, Jesus, Master have mercy on us. He said, go, shew yourselves to the Priests. As they were on their way, they discerned that they were healed. One of them, who was a Samaritan, returned to Jesus, and thanked him. Jesus said to him, Were there not ten cleansed? where then are the other nine? Go thy way, thy faith hath saved thee. While he was in the [Luke xvii. 11—17.] Temple, the Pharisees ask'd him, when the kingdom of God should come. He answered, that it would not come in a splendid manner, so as to be observed and taken notice of: but that the kingdom of God was among them. Upon this occasion he gave several instructions to his Apostles concerning vigilance, assiduity in prayer, and humility in opposition to presumption, described in the Parable of the Pharisee and Publican who went to the Temple to pray.

[Luke xvii. 20.—27. xviii. 1, &c.] As Jesus was walking in the Temple, in Solomon's porch, the Jews came about him, and said, How long wilt thou keep us in suspence? If thou art the Christ, tell us. I have already told you, said he, and ye do not believe me. Moreover, the works that I do, sufficiently prove it. If ye were my Sheep and of my Flock, ye would believe; my Father and I are one. Then they took up stones to stone him. But he said to them, I have done you many good services, for which of these is it that ye would stone me? They told him, that they did not attempt to do so for any benefits they had received from him, but for his blasphemies, because he made himself to be God. He said to them, Is it not written, I have said, that ye are Gods? If therefore they whom God speaketh to are styled Gods, why do ye say that I am a blasphemer, because I call myself the Son of God, since God hath sent and sanctified me? They afterwards intended again to lay hands on him; but he escaped from them: when he departed from Jerusalem, he went to Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John the Baptist had baptized, and there he abode for about a month. Thither many of the Jews came to him, and believed on him, saying that John the Baptist had not performed one miracle, whereas Jesus had wrought many.

[John x. 34—42.] While he was beyond Jordan, Lazarus, brother to Martha and Mary, fell sick; and [In the year of the World 4036, of J. C. 36, of the Vulgar Æra 33.] a messenger was sent to inform Jesus of it. He said his disease tended not to death, but to the manifestation of God's works. He continued still two days in the same place. In the mean time Lazarus died. Then he told his Disciples that Lazarus was dead, and at the same time went towards Judea, though his Disciples dissuaded him from the journey, telling him, that the Jews sought an opportunity of killing him. Being come to Bethany, he found Lazarus was dead and had been buried four days. Martha coming out to meet him, said, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died. Jesus assured her that he shou'd rise again. Mary likewise coming soon after; Jesus was touched with her tears, and asking where the grave was, desired to be conducted to it, ordered it to be opened, called Lazarus with a loud voice, and raised him from the dead. This miracle made a great noise in Jerusalem, and the Priests concluded from it, that it was necessary to put Jesus to death. But our Saviour retired to Ephraim upon the river Jordan, where he abode to the twenty fourth of March, which was the fourth of [John xi. 45, &c.] Nisan.

Then Jesus set out in order to be at Jerusalem, when the Passover, which was the last he saw, was to be celebrated, that he might suffer death there. He gave notice to his Disciples of all that was to befall him in this journey: but it was a mystery to them, which they did not comprehend. As he drew near to Jericho, a blind man, who knew of his arrival, asked sight of him, and obtained it by reason of his great faith. When Jesus was in the City, he saw a Publican called Zacchæus, who climb'd up into a Sycomore-tree, that he might [Luke xviii. xix.] have the better view of him in the croud; with him Jesus invited himself to lodge. Zacchæus transported with this honour, was converted, and made full restitution of whatsoever he might have taken from the poor. Jesus the next day departing out of the city, restor'd two blind men to their sight, one of whom was called Bar- Timæus, or the son of Timæus, a man very [Compare Matt. xv. 29—44. Mark x. 46—52. See John xii. 10, 11, 12, &c.] well known in this country.

Jesus came to Jerusalem some days before the Feast of the Passover, but he did not appear so soon in the Temple by reason of the malice of the Jews. Six days before this Festival, as he was at table in Bethany, in the house of Simon, surnamed the Leper, Mary, Lazarus's sister, poured a Box of very precious Spikenard upon our Saviour's feet, and wiped them with her hair. The Disciples, and more particularly Judas Iscariot thought it was ill done, believing this liberality to be wrong placed, and that it had been better to have sold this perfume, and given the money to the poor. But Jesus undertook the defence of Mary, and said, that what she had done was a Prelude as it were to the embalming of his dead body, which would be very soon.

[Matt. xxvi. 6—13. Mark xiv. 3—9.] The next day, which was Monday the 30th of March and the 10th of Nisan, five days before the Passover, Jesus departing in the morning from Bethany, set forward on his way to Jerusalem, and coming near Bethphage, he sent two of his Disciples thither, directing them to bring an Ass to him, and the Fole of an Ass, that he might ride on the latter, and so make his entry into Jerusalem, in order to fulfil the Prophecies. He entered the city therefore in this manner as it were in triumph, followed by a great multitude of people, crying Hosanna to the Son of David, Blessed is the King of Israel who cometh in the name of the Lord. He went to the Temple amidst these loud acclamations, and drove [Zach. ix. 9. Behold thy King cometh unto thee. He is just and having Salvation, lowly and riding up -on an Ass, and upon a Colt the Fole of an Ass. Matth. xxi. 1—15. Mark xi. 1—11. Luke xix. 29—46. John xii. 12—19.] out those who exercised a sordid trade there, overthrew the chairs of those who sold doves, and the tables of the money-changers, that were there for the benefit of strangers, who came from remote provinces to Jerusalem, and had none of the current coin of the country. He likewise cured the blind and the lame, who were in this holy place; and the Priests and Pharisees taking exception at the acclamations which were made in honour of him, he told them, that if the people were silent, the stones in the street should cry aloud.

In the evening he left the city and retired to Bethany, and the next day, Tuesday the 31st of March, and the 11th of Nisan, as he returned in the morning to Jerusalem, he was hungry; and coming near a Fig-tree to look for fruit, but finding 9 R nothing upon it besides leaves, because it was not the season for figs, he cursed it; and immediately the tree began to wither. Being come into the Temple, he again drove out the Merchants whom he found there. The Priests and Elders sought an opportunity to seize him, but they feared the people, who admired his discourses. Towards the evening he returned to Bethany.

Upon the Wednesday following the 12th [Mt xxi. 18, 19.] of Nisan, and the 1st of April, as he was going again with his Disciples to Jerusalem, they saw the withered Fig-tree, and shewed it to Jesus. From thence he took occasion to exalt the merit and power of faith, which with God's assistance may even transport mountains from their place. While he was this day in the Temple, the Chief Priests and Elders came and asked him by what authority he did the things performed by him. But he in his turn asked them a question, which perplexed them: The baptism of John, said he, is it of Men or of Heaven? They did not dare to say either one or other. If they had answered, from Heaven, Jesus Christ would have replied to them, Why then did ye not receive it? and if they had said, that it was of the earth, all the people would have stoned them, because they esteemed John to have been a Prophet. They answered therefore that they could not tell. And I, said Jesus, do not tell you likewise by what authority I do these things.

[Matth. xxi. 20—29. Mark xi. 20—26.] Addressing himself afterwards to the Priests, the Doctors and Pharisees, he proposed some parables to them, the aim of all which was to shew them, that God was ready to reject them by reason of their infidelity, and to call the Gentiles in their room in order to compose his Church. To this end tended the parable of the two Sons, who having been sent into the vineyard by their Father, one said he was going thither, and did not go; and the other at first refused to go, but went afterwards: and that of the husbandmen, who in the vintage-season, used the servants ill, whom the Father of the family sent to them, and killed his Son: and, lastly, the parable of the Feast, which the persons invited would not come to, and strangers pick'd up every where, were brought in to partake of it.

[Matth. xxi. 28—46. and xxii. 1—22. Luke xx. 9—26. Mark xii. 1—17.] After this, the Herodians, Sadducees and Pharisees came one after another and proposed captious questions to him. The Herodians asked him, if it were lawful to pay tribute to Cæsar, or not. Jesus shewing them a piece of money which was current in the country, and was stamp'd with the impression of Cæsar, concluded that they ought to give unto Cæsar the things that were Cæsar's, and to God the things that were God's. The Sadducees asked him, whose a certain woman would be after the Resurrection, who had successively married two brothers. Jesus told them, that at the Resurrection men would not be married, but would be as the Angels of God. Lastly, to the Pharisees he replied, who demanded of him, which was the greatest Commandment of the Law; that the first and principal was the love of God; and that the second was that of the love of our Neighbours. After this he began to inveigh severely against the Pharisees, and to discover their hypocrisy, and [Matth. xxii. 22—46. Luke xx. 27—39. Mark xii. 18—34. Matth. xxiv. 1, 2, 3—44. Luke xxi. 5—24. Mark xiii. 1, 2, 3—37.] the abuses introduced by them, in morality, and the practice of the Law.

Towards the evening, as Jesus was going out of the Temple, his Disciples observed to him the beauties of this Edifice, and the rich presents belonging to it. Jesus told them, that the time should come, when the Temple should be destroy'd in such a manner, that one stone should not remain upon another. And when he was without the City, upon the Mount of Olives, over-against the Temple, they asked him, when they should see the accomplishment of what he had said concerning the ruin of the Temple. Then he began to speak to them of the approaching siege of Jerusalem by the Romans, which happened about four and thirty years after. He described several circumstances of it to them, and told them, that the generation then in being should not be dead, before the execution of what he said, was seen. He mingled some particular expressions with what he said, which are generally explained of the last Judgement, and which indeed cannot be understood literally concerning the last siege of Jerusalem. After this he proposed some parables to them, the tendency whereof was to keep them vigilant and attentive; for example, that of the servant, who being set over his fellow-servants, used them ill, and followed his diversions during his master's absence; but he at his return threw him into prison as a wicked servant. He added the parable of the five foolish and the five wise Virgins; and that of the Father of a family, who distributes several sums of money to his servants, that they might turn them to a good account during his absence. At his return, he rewards those of them who had been faithful and laborious, and punishes the idle and unprofitable. He concludes, that so it will be at the last day of Judgement.

[Matth. xxv. 1—46.] Upon the same day, Wednesday the 12th of Nisan, and first of April, Jesus told his Disciples, that the Passover was to be celebrated in two days, and that the Son of Man should be delivered up into the hands of his enemies, and be crucified. Upon the same day, the Priests took their last resoresolution [Matth. xxvi. 1, 2—5.] of seizing Jesus, and putting him to death, and Judas Iscariot obliged himself to deliver him into their power, provided the sum of thirty shekels[20], which make three pounds eight shillings and five pence farthing, were paid him. [Mark xiv. 1, 2. Luke xxii. 1, 2.] Upon Thursday the 2d of April, and 13th of Nisan, Jesus came not, that we know, to Jerusalem, or at least he did nothing there which has been taken notice of by the Evangelists. He only sent Peter and John thither to prepare a room, and what was necessary for celebrating the Passover. About the evening he came into the city, and went to the house, where Peter and John had provided every thing requisite to keep the Passover the next day; and sitting down to table with them, declared, that one of them should betray him. Judas asked him, if he were the person: Jesus answered him, that he had said it; but he spoke so low to him, that the rest of the [Matth. xxvi. 17—25. Mark xiv. 12—21.] Apostles did not perceive it.

While he was at table, he expressed to them the great desire which he had always had of eating this Passover with them, after which he instituted the Sacrament of his Body and Blood, and gave it to his Apostles to eat and drink. Soon after, his [Luke xxii. 25, &c. John xiii. 2, 3, &c.] Apostles engaging in a contest concerning the Primacy, Jesus, to cure them of this passionate inclination to excel one another, rose from table, and washed their feet. After which he exhorted them to imitate him, and make their glory to consist in shewing all manner of marks of respect and deference to one another. When he sat down again at table, he was troubled, and told his Apostles that one of them should betray him. Peter made a sign to John, who lay at table below Jesus, and consequently had his head in our Saviour's bosom, to ask him who it was that should betray him. Jesus told him, that he was the person, to whom he was going to give a piece of bread dip'd in the sauce. As soon as Judas received this sop, he rose from table, and went away, transported by the evil spirit, who had got possession of his heart. As he was going, Jesus said to him, Do quickly what thou doest; which was interpreted by the other Apostles, as if he had directed him to buy what was necessary for the solemnity, or to bestow some [John xiii. 21—32.] alms upon the poor; for he bore the purse.

Jesus discoursed to them during the remainder of their meal, concerning the humility, which they should exercise towards one another, the union and charity which ought to be among them, the confidence which they should place in Providence, and his own particular kindness for them. He promised to send them [John xiii. 33. xiv. 1—20. Luke xxii. 33—38. Matth. xxvi. 30.] another Comforter after his departure. He told Peter that he would deny him that very night before the Cock crew. After some discourses of this nature, he rose from table, and having repeated an Hymn of Thanksgiving, he went out of the city with them. In the way he again discoursed much to them concerning the union which they ought to have with him, concerning the sufferings to which he should be exposed, the Holy Spirit which they were to receive; his approaching Passion, Death, and Resurrection; concerning the scandal which his death would occasion; their flight, and Peter's denial. All which demonstrated that he [John xv. xvi. xvii.] knew all things, and that he suffered death, only because it was his own Will to do so.

After having passed the brook Kidron, he came to a place called Gethsemane, where there was a garden. He went into it with his Apostles. And as he had been very frequently there, Judas knew perfectly the place. When therefore he was come thither, he spoke to his Apostles, desiring them to wait for him till he had done praying: and taking Peter, James, and John with him, he became extremely sad, and told them, that his soul was sorrowful even unto death. Stay here, said he, watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation. Then going about a stone's cast from them, he fell upon his knees, and prostrating himself upon the earth, he said, Father, all things are possible to thee, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me; nevertheless not my Will, but thine be done. Then an Angel from Heaven came to comfort him, and being in this agony, he continued longer at his prayers, and his sweat was as it were drops of blood falling [Matth. xxvi. 36—39. Mark xiv. 32—36. John xviii. 1, 2. Luke xxii. 40, 41, 42.] to the ground.

He rose three times from prayer, and coming to his disciples, he found them as often sleeping. At last, the third time he told them, that he who was to betray him, was near, and that it was necessary to meet him. Accordingly Judas was entred into the garden with a company of soldiers, to whom he had given this signal, Seize him whom I shall kiss, and convey him away safely. He therefore drew near to Jesus in order to kiss him. Jesus gently reproached him with his crime, saying to him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss? At the same time advancing towards the company of soldiers, he said to them, Whom seek ye? they answered, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus said, I am he. At these words they fell to the ground. He proposed the same question a second time to them, and they answered in the same manner, that they sought Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus said to them, If ye seek me, let these go. Then they took Jesus, and bound him. Peter drew his sword, struck one of the High-Priest's servants, and cut off his ear: but Jesus touched his ear, and immediately cured him; saying unto Peter, Put up thy sword into the scabbard; for all they who take the sword, shall perish by the sword.

[Matth. xxvi. 47—54. Mark xiv. 40—47. Luke xxii. 47—51.] Jesus was at first carried to the house of Annas the father-in-law of Caiphas. Annas had been High-Priest, and Caiphas was so actually that year. Annas questioned Jesus concerning his Doctrine and Disciples. Jesus spoke to him with great freedom, and told him, that he had taught nothing in secret, and that all the Jews were witnesses of his doctrine. At the same time one of the High-Priest's servants smote him on the face, saying, Answerest thou the High-Priest so? Jesus said to him, If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil; but if well, why smitest thou me? Annas sent Jesus back to Caiphas, who probably dwelt in the same house, and the soldiers who had seized on Jesus began to make a fire in the court, for it was cold; Simon Peter, who had followed Jesus at a distance with another disciple, who was known at Caiphas's house, came into the court, by the interest of this other disciple, and warmed himself with the [John xvi. 15, 16, 17; 18. Matth. xxvi. 58.] rest, expecting what the event would be.

Caiphas having sent for the Priests and Doctors of the Law to his house, ordered Jesus to be brought before them; and they sought evidence against him in order to put him to death: but they could find none that was strong enough. At last, there was a man produced, who had heard him say, That in three days he would destroy the Temple of God, and in the same time build another. This testimony was not exactly true, nor sufficient to condemn a man to death. During all this time, Jesus continued silent; whereupon Caiphas conjured him in the name of the living God to say, if he were the Christ. He confessed it, and added, that he would come one day on the clouds, at the right hand of his father, to judge mankind. At these words, the High-Priest rent his clothes, and said, What need have we of witnesses? ye have all heard his blasphemies; what think ye of it? they answered, He is worthy of death. All this [Matth. xxvi. 59—66. and Mark xiv. 54—64.] passed in the night-time. The Assembly being broke up, Jesus was put again into the soldiers hands, who offered him a thousand insults and affronts.

A maid-servant belonging to the High-Priest, looking stedfastly on Peter, said, This man was certainly with Jesus of Nazareth. Peter denied it. In a moment [Matth. xxvi. 67—75.] after he went out of the court, into the porch, and immediately the cock crew. Another maid-servant having again viewed him earnestly, said, that he was certainly one of Jesus's followers. Peter with an oath denied it. At last, about an hour after, some of the company affirmed, that he was one of the disciples of Jesus, and that his language shewed him to be a Galileean. One of Malchus's relations, whose ear had been cut off by Peter, affirmed that he had seen him in the garden, but Peter denied it with protestations, and insisted, that he did not know the man. At the same time the cock crew a second time; and Jesus, who was in the same court, casting his eyes on St. Peter, this glance from him filled the Apostle with sorrow and confusion. He remembred the prediction of Jesus concerning his denying him, and going out of the court, he wept bitterly.

[Mark xiv. 18—75. Luke xxii. 56—63. John xviii. 4. John xviii. 25, 26. Matth. xxvii. 1—10. Mark xv. 1, 2. Luke xxiii. 2, 3. John xviii. 29—38.] As soon as it was day, the Priests, the Senate, and the Doctors were assembled, and appointed Jesus to be brought before them. They asked him if he were the Christ, and the Son of God. At the same time they declared him to be worthy of death. But as the Romans, who were then masters of the country, had taken from them the power of life and death; and they might pronounce a man to be guilty, but not condemn him in form, nor order his execution, they carried him before Pilate, Governour of the Province, and insisted, in their accusation, on these three Articles: 1. That he was a disturber of the publick peace. 2. That he taught that it was not lawful to pay tribute to the Emperor. 3. That he called himself Christ, and the Son of God. Pilate examined him, and asked him, if he were the Messiah or the King of the Jews. Jesus answered him, that indeed he was a King, but that his Kingdom was not of this World.

As the Jews, who were the accusers of Jesus, came not into the Judgement-Hall, or Pilate's house, lest they should be polluted, because they intended that very evening to eat the Passover; Pilate, after having asked Jesus several questions, went out, and declared to them, that he found nothing in him that deserved condemnation. Notwithstanding they continued to accuse him with great vehemence, and Jesus replied not one word to all their accusations. Pilate being informed that Jesus was a Galileean, sent him to Herod, King or Tetrarch of Galilee, who was then at Jerusalem. Herod had long desired to see Jesus, of whom he had heard so many wonders related, and proposed several questions to him, to which Jesus made no answer: which so surprized and provoked Herod Herod and his Court, that in derision they covered him with a scarlet Robe, and insulted his Royalty; then Herod sent him back to Pilate. From that time Herod and Pilate became good friends; for before they [Luke xxiii. 8—12.] were at variance.

Pilate having again examined Jesus, declared to the Jews, that as neither he nor Herod had found any thing in him, which deserved death, he should be content with ordering him only to be corrected, and so would dismiss him. And seeing they still insisted on his condemnation, he proposed to deliver up to them Jesus or Barabbas, it being customary to grant them the life of some criminal at the Feast of the Passover: but they demanded Barabbas, and cried out that Jesus ought to be crucified. Pilate after having once more made some attempts to deliver the innocent, was over-power'd with their cries and threats; and fearing some sedition, he ordered water to be brought to him, washed his hands, told them, that he cleared himself of the guilt of his death, and gave him up to them to be crucified. Now it was about the third hour, or nine a-clock in the morning, when the sentence was pronounced, and Jesus was put into the hands of the Roman soldiers, in order to be executed. They first of all insulted him a thousand ways, upon his being said to be a King; they put an old purple cloak upon him, placed a crown of thorns upon his head, and a reed in the form of a scepter in his hand; and making a shew of saluting him, and paying their homage to him, they spate in his face, and struck him on the head with a reed, which they had in their hand.

[Matth. xxvii. 24—29. Mark xv. 15—19. John xix. 1—16. Luke xxiii. 24, 25.] After this, they laid his cross on him, and conducted him to Calvary, a little hill which lay to the north-west of the city. As Jesus was extremely faint, and the cross was very heavy, the Roman soldiers, who had the care of him, took one Simon, whom they met with, in order to assist him in carrying it, either by bearing all of it intirely, or the extremity of it only, which was behind Jesus. When he came to Calvary, they gave him wine mingled with myrrh or gall to drink; but having tasted it, he would not drink it. They nailed him therefore to the cross between two thieves, one on the right hand, the other on the left. He prayed for those [Mark xv. 25.] who crucified him. St. Mark says, that it was about the third hour of the day, that is to say, nine a-clock in the morning: but St. John says, that it was about the sixth hour, [John xix. 14.] that is, about noon. It might be eleven a-clock in the morning or thereabouts.

Pilate commanded the sentence of his condemnation to be fixed upon his cross in these terms, JESUS of NAZARETH, King [Matth. xxvii. 39, 44. Luke xxiii. 35—43. Mark xv. 29—32.] of the JEWS. The Jews would have persuaded him to have written this, JESUS the pretended King of the JEWS. But he refused to make any alteration. The soldiers parted his garments among them, but for his coat they cast lots, being unwilling to cut it, because it was without seams, and all of one piece made at the loom, as was the fashion then, and is still in the East. The Magistrates, Priests, and People, and the very Thieves themselves, who were crucified near him, insulted him, and said, If thou art the Son of God, save thyself. Nevertheless, one of the Thieves rebuked his companion, acknowledged the innocence of Jesus, and desired to be remembred by him, when he was in his Kingdom; and Jesus promised him, that he should be that day with him in Paradise. Mary the Mother of Jesus, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene, with St. John the Evangelist, were then at the foot of his cross; and Jesus said to his Mother, shewing her John the beloved Disciple, Woman, behold thy Son! Then addressing himself to the Apostle, he said to him, Behold thy Mother! And from that time St. John kept her always at his own home as his mother.

[John xix. 25—27.] About noon, which was the sixth hour of the day, the Sun was covered with darkness till the ninth hour, or three a-clock in the afternoon. At the ninth hour the darkness was dispersed, and Jesus cried with a loud voice, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Then they gave him vinegar in a spunge to drink; and as soon as he had tasted it, he said, It is finished; and he bowed his head, and gave up the Ghost. Then the Veil [Matth. xxvii. 48, 50. John xix. 28—30. John xix. 31—37. Mark xv. 34—37. Matth. xxvii. 51—54.] of the Temple was rent, from the top to the bottom, the Earth trembled, the Rocks were rent, the graves were opened, and the bodies of many who were dead, rose again, and appeared to many after the Resurrection of Jesus Christ. Now the Jews being unwilling that the bodies should remain upon the cross the next day, which was the great day of the Sabbath, or Passover, desired Pilate that they might be taken down, and their legs broke, in order to hasten their death; but one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side only, and forthwith there came forth blood and water.

Towards the evening, Joseph of Arimathea, who was one of the Disciples of Jesus, and a Senator of great distinction, came and requested of Pilate, that he might have the body of Jesus, in order to bury it before sun-set: for it was the evening before the Sabbath-day, the Rest whereof began at sun-set. Pilate consented, and Joseph put the body of Jesus into his own grave, which was dug in a rock, and was in a garden, near the place where our Lord had been crucified. The grave was closed with a stone, which stop'd up the entrance of it. But the Priests fearing lest the Disciples of Jesus should come and take away his body, placed guards there, and sealed the stone which closed the entrance of the sepulchre, to prevent its being touched. The next day, which was the great Sabbath-day, every one rested according to the Law; but after Sun -set, as soon as it was allowable to act, and buy any thing, the holy women, who intended to embalm our Saviour's body, because it had been put a little hastily into the grave, brought drugs and spices to pay this duty to him. And the next day, early in the morning, before it was light, they went out of the city to go to Calvary. But Jesus was already risen, and the soldiers, who were witnesses of his Resurrection, returned to the city.

[Matth. xxvii. 62-66. and xxviii. 1—4. Mark xvi. 2—4. Luke xxiv. 1—4. John xx. 1—2.] These women coming to the sepulchre, saw two Angels in an human form, clothed in white, and shining all over with a glittering light, who said to them; Fear not. Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, who was crucified, he is not here, he is risen; come and see the place where he lay. Tell Peter and his Disciples, that he is risen, and will be before you in Galilee. Mary Magdalene, who was quicker than the others, ran speedily to Jerusalem, and told the Apostles, that their master's body was carried away, and she knew not what was done with it. Peter and John made haste to the sepulchre; John arrived there first, but did not go into the sepulchre. Peter entring into it, saw the linnen-clothes which the body of our Saviour had been wrap'd up in, and the napkin which covered his head. John likewise saw them, and after that returned to Jerusalem. [John xx. 2—8.] Mary, who was come back to the sepulchre, stooping down to look within the grotto, saw two Angels there, one at the head, the other at the foot of the sepulchre, who said to her, Why weepest thou? she answered, They have carried away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him. At the same time turning herself back, she saw Jesus under the form of a gardener. She said to him, If thou hast born him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, that I may take him away. Jesus said unto her, Mary. Immediately she knew him, and threw herself at his feet to kiss them. But he said to her, Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father. Go tell my brethren, that I ascend to my Father and their Father, to my God and their God. [John xx. 11—17. Mark xvi. 9, 10.] Mary returned therefore to Jerusalem, and related what she had seen to the Disciples. Jesus appeared again to other women, as they returned from the sepulchre; he spoke to them, and they adored him. But the Apostles treated them as fanciful persons, [Matth. xxviii. 9.] and did not believe what they related.

The same day at evening, being the first day of the week, the sixteenth of Nisan, and the day after the Passover, two of Jesus's Disciples were returning towards Galilee, designing to lie at Emmaus, sixty furlongs, or about two leagues and an half from Jerusalem. Jesus joined them in the way under the form of a traveller, and asking them what they were talking of, they spoke to him of his death and passion, which were the subject of conversation every where in Jerusalem. We were in hopes, added they, that this Jesus would redeem Israel, nevertheless this is the third day since this happened. There are also women who assure us, that they have seen and spoken with him. Then Jesus reproved them for their want of faith, demonstrated to them by the Scriptures, that Christ was to suffer, and so enter into glory. When they came to Emmaus, they invited Jesus to stay with them, and as he made as though he would have gone farther, they constrain'd him to go into the house with them. While he was at table, he blessed the bread, and gave it them; then their eyes were opened, and they knew him: but he vanished out of their sight. And they rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, where they found the Apostles gathered together; to them they related what had happened to them, and they understood that Jesus had appeared likewise to Peter.

[Luke xxiv. 13—34. Mark xvi. 12.] They were still together, when Jesus was seen in the midst of them, though the doors were shut very close. This sight put them into some disorder, and frightned them; but he removed their apprehensions, by saying to them, Peace be with you. Look upon my hands and feet, and see that it is I myself: touch me; a Spirit hath neither flesh nor bones. He asked if they had any thing to eat; and as they put before him a piece of a broiled fish, and an honey-comb, he took it, and did eat before them; and breathing on them, he said to them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost; whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained. Now Thomas, one of the twelve, was not with them when Jesus came, and he said, Unless I see the print of the nails in his hands, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe. Eight days after, the Apostles being all together, Jesus appeared again in the room where they were, and said, Peace be unto you: then addressing himself to Thomas, he said to him, Put your finger into the wounds of my hands and feet, and thrust your hand into my side, and be not incredulous. Thomas answered, My Lord, and my God. Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are [John xx. 19—31. Lukexxiv. 36—41.] they which have not seen, and yet have believed.

The Apostles going into Galilee after the Octave of the Passover, Jesus shewed himself to them at the Sea of Tiberias. Peter, Thomas, Nathanael, James, John, and two other Disciples were upon this Sea a fishing, when Jesus appeared in the morning upon the shore, and asked them if they had taken nothing. They answered no, tho' they had been working all night. He bad them cast their nets on the right side of the ship, and they should catch fish. They did so, and their nets were so full of fish, that they broke. Hereupon the Disciple whom Jesus loved, knew that it was Jesus, and said to Peter, It is the Lord. Immediately Peter girt on his fisher's coat, for he was naked, threw himself into the Sea, and swam to shore before the ship arrived. The rest dragg'd the net ashore, and found an hundred and fifty three large fishes in it; and notwithstanding the number was so great, the net was not broken. Then Jesus desired them to bring him some of what they had caught, and they found fire, and prepared a broiled fish and bread. They eat with him, and none of them asked him who he was: for it was evident that he was Jesus.

[John xxi. 1—14.] After this, Jesus said to Peter three times successively; Peter, lovest thou me more than all these? Peter likewise answered three times; that he loved him with all his heart: and Jesus as often said to him, feed my sheep or my lambs. He added, intending to signify what death this Apostle should die: When thou wast young, thou girdest thy self, and walkedst whither thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not. Follow me. Peter followed him: and seeing the Disciple whom Jesus loved, following also, he said to Jesus, What shall this man do? Jesus answered, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me. A report therefore spread among the brethren, that this Disciple would not die. But our Lord did not say so. Upon this foundation many have advanced, that St. John the Evangelist was not dead. See our Dissertation on St. John's death in the Tome including this Apostle's Gospel.

[John xxi. 15—24.] The Disciples of our Saviour being all gathered together on a Mountain in Galilee, Jesus shewed himself to them. When they saw him, they worshipped him: but some doubted, whether his body were a real body; for as to his resurrection and presence, it does not appear, that any the least question could be made of them. Jesus said unto them, All power is given unto me in Heaven and in Earth; Go, teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. It was upon this occasion, as is generally believed, that he shewed himself to above five hundred brethren at once, [Matth. xxviii. 16—20.] many of whom were still living when St. Paul wrote his second Epistle to the Corinthians, in the year of Jesus Christ 57.

[1 Cor. xv. 5, 6.] After this, Jesus commanded his Disciples to go to Jerusalem, because there he was to ascend up to Heaven in their presence. He appeared again to them, and eat with them; reproaching them with their incredulity as to his Passion and Resurrection; shewing them by the Scriptures, that all this was to be so accomplished. He opened their understanding, and explained the Scriptures to them: commissioned them to go and preach the Gospel throughout all the world, impowered them to perform all sorts of miracles, enjoined them to baptize, and teach all nations, saying, That they who believed and were baptized, should be saved; that they, on the contrary, who continued in their incredulity, should be damned. He appointed them to stay in Jerusalem till the coming of the Holy Ghost, who should invest them with a supernatural power, and with his [Mark xvi. 19. Luke xxiv. 49—53. Acts i. 5—14. and ii. 1, &c. Mark xvi. 14—18. Lukexxiv. 44—48. Acts i. 3—7.] holy Unction.

After this, he conducted them out of Jerusalem, as far as Bethany, and lifting up his eyes to Heaven, he blessed them, and vanished out of their sight, being suddenly taken up by a cloud, which transported him beyond their view. Then two Angels appeared to them, and said, Ye men of Galilee, what is it that you are admiring with your eyes thus lifted up to Heaven? This same Jesus, who is taken up into Heaven, shall so come in like manner, as ye have seen him go into Heaven. Then they returned from the Mount of Olives to Jerusalem, and there continued all together in prayer, with Mary the Mother of Jesus, and such of his relations after the flesh, as believed on him, till the day of Pentecost, on which the Holy Ghost descended upon them in the form of fiery tongues.

This is a short historical account of our Saviour's Life, related in a chronological order, and according to the harmony of the Gospels. We have avoided all the Critical and Theological Questions, which we meet with in the Commentators, whose original writings may be consulted. A Dictionary is not a collection of Dissertations, nor a heap of critical Reflexions. The Jews have several pernicious Books, intitled Toledoth Jesu[21], which contain the fables and impostures that they publish of Jesus Christ. We have discoursed of them at full length in the Dissertation concerning the Characters of the Messiah, printed before our Comment on Jeremiah. We have likewise treated of the beauty of our Saviour in a Dissertation prefixed to Jeremiah. See the Dissertations of F. Vavassor, and M. Rigaut, on the same subject. I have treated of the Adoration of the Wise Men, of the Baptism instituted by Jesus Christ, of the last Passover, of the Darkness which happened at our Saviour's death, of the Resurrection of those who rose with him, in particular Dissertations. I have spoken of his Cross in the Article of this Dictionary, belonging to this name. The Reader may consult the Chronologers concerning the years of his Life; and Binæus on the circumstances of his Birth, Passion, and Death. We have treated of the Habits of the Hebrews in a separate Dissertation; and Braunius enlarges on this Matter in his Books concerning the Habits of the Hebrew Priests. I shall be excused therefore from entring here into an examination of these particulars.

The power of performing Miracles is so well known to have been in Jesus Christ, not only among Christians, but likewise among Mahometans, that it is a kind of Proverb with them, when they commend an expert workman, to say, He has the breath of the Messiah; because our Saviour by his breath alone, not only raised the dead, but also gave life to things inanimate. They hold, agreeably to the spurious Gospel of Jesus, that in his youth he formed birds of Potter's earth, and then with a puff of his breath only, set them a flying. They affirm, that he was but three [D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. P. 499. Issa-benMiriam.] hours in the cradle; they call him sometimes the Spirit of the Father; an expression borrowed from some of the Writings of the Fathers; they acknowledge that he was born without a Father, of the Virgin Mary; they say he had a brother, whose name was Okil, or Okail; but this is a brother after the fashion of the Hebrews, who call cousin-germans thus. They believe that he ascended up to Heaven, that he will destroy the dominion of Antichrist; that he exercises his Almighty Power in Heaven, where he is our Mediator, and possesses the place of honour in the fourth Heaven, which is the Empyræum, according to their Systemm. They own that from the Gospel is derived the Life of the Soul, and the Renovation of the Heart. A Mahometan Poet expresses himself on this subject after the following manner: He speaks to Jesus Christ; The heart of man under affliction derives all its consolation from thy words: the Soul recovers life and vigour barely at the hearing of thy name pronounced. If ever the mind of man can raise itself to the contemplation of the mysteries of the Deity, it is from thee that it derives the lights necessary to attain to the knowledge of God, and the attraction which it feels so sensibly, springs all from thee. Would any one believe, that these were the words of one who did not acknowledge the Divinity of Jesus Christ?

The Jews do him much less justice; there are some among them who have the impiety to say, that the Soul of Esau animated Jesus Christ; that he was born of one Panther, and a young milliner whom [Toledoth Jesu, or the Book of the generation of Jesus.] he had debauched; that Jesus had the dexterity to steal the name of God out of the Temple, that he concealed it in a wound which he made in his own body by opening the skin, and so escaped two lions form'd by magick art, who were placed, one at the right, the other at the left hand of the Sanctuary, and roared in a most frightful manner when any one went either in or out: that by virtue of this name, he immediately raised one from the dead, and cured a leper at Bethlehem, the place of his nativity. The noise of this miracle drew a croud of people after him, who conducted him to Jerusalem, as it were, in triumph, mounted on an Ass.

The Priests, who were jealous of his reputation and glory, presented a petition to Helene, who reign'd at that time with her son Monbazus or Hircanus, and demanded of her the punishment of Jesus. He appeared before her, and engaged her in his interest by new prodigies. Hereupon, one of the Priests offered to destroy the credit of Jesus, by learning, as he had done, to pronounce the name of Jehovah, provided they would charge themselves with the sin which he committed. He accordingly did learn it, and came and defy'd Jesus. They both raised themselves up into the air by virtue of this name; Judas undertook to procure that his antagonist should fall, which he was not able to do by any other way than by making water upon him. At this instant they both fell, because they were polluted, and the power of this sacred Name forsook them.

Jesus made haste to wash himself in the river Jordan, and began to work new miracles. Judas being convinced that he was inferior to him, yet unwilling to desist from his undertaking, became one of his disciples, observed his proceedings, and discovered them to the Priests. Jesus intending to go into the Temple, was seized with many of his disciples. The rest fled, and retreated to the mountains. Jesus being thus in the power of his enemies, was fastened to a marble pillar in the city, whip'd, crown'd with thorns, and being thirsty, vinegar was offered him. The Sanhedrim having condemn'd him to death, he was stoned. They intended afterwards to hang his dead body on a tree, but the tree broke, because Jesus foreseeing what kind of death he was to die, had inchanted it with the name of Jehovah.

Judas, who lost no opportunity of lessening his credit, run to look for a great cabbage in his garden to which his dead body was fixed. It was designed afterwards to put it in a common sepulchre; but Judas fearing lest his disciples should take him away, and publish that he was risen again, buried him in the channel of a brook, the water whereof he had diverted from its course; and as soon as this was done, he made it flow again as usual, lest any one should know where he had laid him. Judas's precaution did not however prevent its being published that he was risen. Queen Helena believed it, and declared that he was the Son of God; but Judas shewed her mistake, and discovered the imposture of Jesus's disciples by producing his dead body. It was tied to a horse's tail, and dragg'd before the Queen's palace, who thereupon was at last undeceived.

The Religion of Jesus was however every where propagated, in spreading whereof twelve men were very instrumental, who run over whole Provinces and Kingdoms, and preached his Miracles and Doctrine. This progress afflicted the Jewish Sages. They deputed one Simon Kepha to remedy this evil: he learnt the name of Jehovah, and came to the metropolis of the Nazarens, convinced them that he was sent by Jesus, and ingaged them to promise him, that they would do whatsoever he should desire of them. He forbad them to treat the Jews ill, and commanded them to celebrate the Feast of Jesus's being stoned, and the fortieth day of his death, instead of the Feast of Pentecost. This they promised upon condition he would abide with them: Simon consented, they built a tower for him called Peter, wherein he continued shut up for six years, living only upon bread and water: after this time expired, he died.

Elias came afterwards to Rome, and maintained before the Romans that Simon had deceived them, and that he was the person whom Jesus had intrusted with his orders. He commanded them to be circumcised upon pain of being drowned; to observe the first day of the week instead of saturday: but in the very instant while he was speaking in this manner, a stone fell upon his head, and dashed his brains out: Thus may all the enemies of God perish. This is the conclusion of the ridiculous and abominable Romance, which the Jews composed under the title of Toledos Jesu, or the Generation and History of Jesus; it was so called in imitation of St. Matthew's Gospel, which bears the same title: The Book of the Generation of Jesus Christ the Son of David.

There is besides another Book which goes under the same title, and was published by M. Huldric, in 1705. It keeps closer to the Gospel, but there are insupportable faults and anachronisms in it. The Author, who takes upon him the name of Jonathan, and says he was contemporary with Jesus Christ, and an inhabitant of Jerusalem, asserts our Saviour to have been born in the reign of Herod the Great, which is agreeable to Truth, and contrary to what the Jews commonly tell, of his being born in the year of the World 3671, which answers to the reign of Alexander the Great; but he is grossly mistaken when he declares Jesus Christ to have died in the reign of the same Herod. The Author believes that this Prince having received complaints against Panther, the supposed father of Jesus, made a journey to Bethlehem, and there massacred all the infants. He makes Joshua, the son of Serachia, preceptor to Jesus, which Joshua studied under Akiba, who did not live till above an hundred years after Jesus Christ; he says, that Herod consulted the Senators of Worms, inhabitants in the land of Cæsarea, or in the Empire, about Jesus Christ; that Herod and his son made war with the Disciples of Jesus, who had retired to Ai in the Desarts of Judæa; that they worshipped Jesus and his image, as well as his mother Mary: that they desired aid of the King of Cæsarea against Herod the son. What a deal of ignorance and stuff is here!

Any one need only read these two impertinent works, in order to conceive all the contempt of them which they merit. Notwithstanding, it is with works of this kind, that the Jews confirm one another in their aversion to Christianity. They have gone farther; for to get clear of the objections which are made to them, relating to the time when the Messiah should appear, they have abridged the chronology of the Old Testament, and placed the birth of our Saviour in the year of the World 3671, that is to say, 329 years before his real Epoch. They have altered the Text of some prophecies which were too clear for Jesus Christ, and have wrested the meaning of almost all the others that concern him; those particularly, the completion whereof is most evident, and observable. They confound the characters of the Messiah; some will have it that he has been come a long time, but lies concealed among men; others expect him, but curse those who compute the times of his coming. Others again maintain, that the coming of the Messiah is no article of faith. What infatuation! what knavery is this!

[Euseb. in Isai. xviii. 1. Hieronym. ibid. Oecumen. in Ep. ad Rom.] The Fathers inform us, that at the very beginning of Christianity, the Jews sent over all the world to defame Jesus Christ and his doctrine, and persuade people that his Disciples were impostors, who having privately stolen their master out of his grave, gave out publickly that he was risen again. St. Matthew relates how, after the Resurrection of our Saviour, the guards who had been set at his sepulchre, came and gave notice to the Chief Priests of what had happened; and that these having hereupon held a council among themselves, gave great sums of money to the soldiers, that thereby they might engage them to declare, that his Disciples carried away his body, while they were sleeping; and this the soldiers did not fail to publish.

Ahmed-ben-Cassem-Al-Andacousi, a Moor of Grenada, who lived in the year of Jesus Christ 1599, cites an Arabian Manuscript of St. Cæcilius Archbishop of Grenada, which was found in a grotto near the same city, with sixteen leaden plates engrav'd in Arabic characters. Don Petro de Castro y Quinones, Archbishop of the same place, has himself testified this matter. These leaden plates, which are called of Grenada, have been since carried to Rome, where after an examination, which lasted many years, they were at length condemned as Apocryphal, under the Pontificate of Alexander VII. They contain several fabulous Histories relating to the infancy and education of Jesus Christ, and the life of the blessed Virgin. Among other things it is said, that Jesus Christ while he was yet an infant, and learning the Arabic Alphabet at school, asked his master questions about the signification of every letter, and when he had learned of him the grammatical sense and signification of them, he taught him the [Bibl. Orient. D. 73. Ahmed, &c. p. 312. col. 2.] mystical meaning of each of them.

You may see the spurious Gospels, which have been published, relating to the life, infancy and preaching of Jesus Christ, under the Article GOSPEL.

A great deal has been written concerning the form, beauty, and stature of Jesus Christ. Some have asserted, that he was the handsomest of all the sons of men. Others have maintained, that there was no beauty, nor any graces in his outward appearance: some make him to have been of a very advantageous size; others say, [Psal. xlv. 3.] he was very small. It may be proper to produce here a short abstract of the reasons which are brought to support these different opinions.

[Hieron. in Matt. ix. & in Matt. xxi. 12,13. & Ep. ad Principiam. Damasc. de fide orthodox. l. 4. c. 17.] They who maintain that Jesus Christ was the most beautiful man that ever was, ground their belief principally upon these words of Scripture: Thou art fairer than the children of men; grace is poured into thy lips. Speciosus formâ præ filiis hominum, diffusa est gratia in labiis tuis. Besides he was of an excellent constitution; every thing that could contribute to beauty met in his conception, birth and education; and nothing that could make a man mishapen and deformed was any way concerned in it, no irregularity of imagination, none of the common ailments that attend being with child and lying-in, no excess in diet, no disorder in management and conduct. The body of our Saviour must have been the most perfect work, since he was conceived of a most pure and holy Virgin, and by the operation of the Holy Ghost.

The Fathers have not expressed themselves on this matter in an uniform manner. St. Jerom believes, that the lustre and majesty which shined about our Saviour's face, were capable of winning all hearts: it was this that drew the generality of his Apostles with so much ease to him; it was this majesty that struck those down who came to seize him in the Olive-garden. St. John of Damascus relates, that Abgarus King of Edessa, having sent a Painter to [Nicephor. Hist. Eccl. l. 2. c. 7.] draw the picture of our Saviour, the man was so dazled with the splendor which glittered on his face, that he was obliged to give over his undertaking; and Jesus Christ, to satisfy the King's devotion, took the Painter's cloth, apply'd it to his face, and impress'd his Portrait on it, which he sent to King Abgarus.

Nicephorus is of opinion, that St. Luke drew the pictures of Jesus Christ, the blessed Virgin, and the Apostles, and that by this means their images represented to the life were scattered over all the earth. It is certain that there has been always a particular tradition in the Church, concerning the figure and stature of our Saviour and his Apostles. I will here describe our Lord to you after the images which are believed to have been painted by St. Luke. He was very beautiful in the face, and about seven Spithamas, or seven foot, high; his hair was inclining to be very fair, not thick, but a little curled; his eye-brows were black, and did not form exactly a semicircle. His eyes were large, lively, and something yellowish; his nose long, his beard black, and pretty short; but he wore his hair long: for the scissars had never been used upon his head, nor had the hand of any one touched him, besides that of his Mother the Virgin, when he was as yet a child. His neck was not stiff nor his carriage lofty, or proud. He stooped a little with his head: his complexion was almost of the colour of wheat; his countenance neither round nor sharp; but like his mother's, something longish, and pretty much upon the vermilion. Gravity, prudence, meekness and clemency were painted in his face; in a word, he resembled perfectly his divine Mother. Nicephor. Hist. Eccles. l. 2.. 43.

[Isa. lii. 14, 15, &c. liii. 2, 3, &c. Bernard. Serm. 1. in festo omnium Sanct.] St. Bernard says, that the people followed him, and were attached to his person by the allurement of the several graces which shined in him, by the sweetness of his conversation and discourses, and the lustre of his beauty. Adhærebant ei affatu pariter & aspectu delectati, cujus nimirum vox suavis, & facies decora. St. Chrysostom says, that the people [Chrysost. in Psalm. xliv.] were as it were nailed to our Saviour, and were never weary of seeing and admiring him. In the same place, explaining the following [Idem. ibid. Isai. liii. 2.] words of Isaiah, He hath no form nor comeliness; he says, Have a care how you misunderstand this passage, as if any deformity of body was meant by it; God forbid we should construe it in this sense; we understand by it, that contempt which he shewed of every thing which the world esteems, that meanness which he chose to appear in. We might heap together many other testimonies from modern Authors, and several plausible reasons to prove the beauty of our Saviour, which any one may see in the Authors who have written particularly on this subject.

We come now to what is alledged in the way of evidence to demonstrate, that Jesus Christ was not handsome. The Prophet Isaiah speaks of him in the manner following: He shall appear without glory among men, and without beauty amidst the sons of men. He shall grow up before the Lord as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: he hath no form nor comeliness; we have seen him, and there is nothing beautiful or amiable in him. He was despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: we hid as it were our faces from him. He was despised, and we esteemed him not. We took him for one smitten of God, for a leper, and a man reduced to the lowest humiliation. He was wounded for our transgressions, &c. All the Commentators agree, that this passage is to be understood of the Messiah. St. Paul confirms what we have been reading, by saying, that Jesus Christ humbled [Phil. ii. 7.] himself in taking the form of a servant, and appearing in the likeness of men. The Evangelists have no where taken notice of his beauty.

The most ancient Fathers have acknowledged, that he was not at all handsome: Homo indecorus & passibilis, says St. Irenæus[22]. Celsus[23] objected to the Christians, that Jesus Christ, as man, was little and ill made, and of mean and obscure birth: from hence he inferr'd, that Jesus Christ therefore was not God. Origen answered, that it was written indeed, that the body of Christ was not beautiful, but not that he was little, or of obscure birth. Clemens Alexandrinus[24] owns in several places, that the body of Jesus Christ was not beautiful, his beauty lying in the soul; that he came without that handsomeness of body which is pleasing to the eyes, lest mankind being too much engaged by this external charm, should lose that relish and esteem of things spiritual which he recommended to them. St. Cyril of Alexandria[25] expresses himself much after the same manner, and maintains, that the beauty ascribed to him in the Psalms, is to be understood of internal beauty, the beauty of the soul, and that he appeared in a form which had very little outward gracefulness.

The old Latin Fathers are as clearly for this opinion. Tertullian says plainly, that Jesus Christ was not handsome: Vultu & aspectu inglorius[26]; that his outward form had nothing that could attract consideration and respect[27]: Ne aspectu quidem honestus. Who would have dared to spit in his face, if the meanness of his appearance had not in some sort deserved it?[28] An ausus esset aliquis ungue summo perstringere corpus novum, sputaminibus contaminare faciem non merentem? St. Austin confesses, that Jesus Christ, as man, was without beauty, and the advantages of person; but as God, he excelled in form all the sons of men:[29] Ut homo non habebat speciem neque decorem, sed speciosus formâ ex eo quod est præ filiis hominum. The generality of the Ancients, such as Eusebius, St. Basil, Theodoret, St. Ambrose, St. Isidore of Pelusium, the Author of a Comment on the Psalms, printed in St. Jerom's name, explain the passage in Psalm xliv. Fairer than the children of men, as relating to the beauty of Christ according to his Divinity.

From all that has been here produced, we may conclude, that the Christians of the primitive ages believed Jesus Christ to have been more ill-favoured than handsome, according to his human nature; that the contrary opinion is more modern;

that that both may be maintained, and that neither the one nor the other is an Article of Faith. The Reader may consult those Authors who have written particularly on this matter, such as Rigaltius, Father Vassor, and the Dissertation which we have printed before our Comment on Isaiah. Abbot Boileau, Dean of the Holy Chapel at Paris, wrote a Dissertation, wherein he undertook to prove, that Jesus Christ was a little man: his principal reason for this assertion, is, that Zachæus being desirous of seeing him, got up into a tree, in order to distinguish him from the croud; Quiâ staturâ pusillus erat. He supposes these last words to relate to Jesus Christ, whereas they are generally understood of Zachæus.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

יהושעJehoshuah. ΙΗΣΟΥΣ, Jesus.

In the year of the World 4000, nine months before the birth of Je- sus Christ.

Jesus Christ was born the 25th of December in the year of the World 4000, of the Julian Period 4709, four years before the Vulgar Æra; or, if you please, three years before the common Æra, beginning the year on the first of January, which begins the year 4710 of the Julian Period.

Luke ii. 21. In the year of the World 4000, of Jesus Christ 1, and 3 years before the Vulgar Æra.

In the year of the World 4012, of Jesus Christ 12, of the Vulgar Æra 9.

Mark iii. 20, 21. Ἔλεγον γὰρ ὅτι ἐξέστη.

Grot. in Marc. iii. Casaubon. Exercit. in Baron. &c.

Heinf. Ham. Lightfoot. in Marc. iii. See the Comment.

Translators' note. The Jewish Doctors prescribe it as a Law, that every one ought to wash their hands before they eat a morsel of bread as big as an egg. They don't examine whether their hands are clean or dirty; because as they are parts of the body used about many things, they may be polluted without one's perceiving it. Therefore it is always convenient to wash them. Basnage, Histoire des Juifs, l. vi. ch. xix.

Translators' note. It is true our Saviour never reproaches the Pharisees with this error; nor was it his design to confute all the mistaken opinions entertained by them. But it is very probable that they might borrow this notion from the Eastern Eastern People, among whom it was very common. And altho' the people might imagine that Elias was come down from heaven, and Jeremiah risen from the dead, yet this is but conjecture, and it may be said with as much probability, that they believed the souls of the Prophets returned and animated some other body, in order to govern and take care of the Church.

See Isaac Lorienz. de Revolut. animarum. Manasse Ben-Israel de Resurrect. mort. Zohar. &c.

Vide Hieronym. l. 2. contra Pelag. c. 6. in Evangelio secundum Joannem in multis & Græcis & Latinis Codicibus non invenitur de adultera muliere. Vide & Selden. Uxor. Hebr. l. 3. c. 11. & varias Lect. Millii in Joan. viii.

Constit. Apost. l. 2. c. 24.

Hieronym. l. 2. contra Pelag. c. 6.

Ambros. l. 3. de Spirit. S. c. 2. & lib. 7. Ep. 58. & l. 9. Ep. 76.

Aug. Tract. 32. in Joan. & lib. 2. de Adulter. conjug. c. 6. & 7. & lib. de vera & falsa poenit. c. 13. & Ep. olim 54. nunc 153. & lib. de Consens. Evang. c. 10. &c.

Calvin. Gomar. Selden. Uxor Heb. l. 3. c. 11. Mill. in Joan. viii.

Translators' note. The Apostles shew evidently by this question, that they had some notion of the Soul's Præexistence. The man born blind could neither have sin'd, nor have been punished for any Sin he had committed, unless his Soul had before animated some other Body. There could be no sense in asking, whether a Man who did not exist before his birth, had sin'd. The Apostles therefore must have had a view to the opinion of the Transmigration, which was received by the Ancient Jews, and is still followed by their Descendants.

It was celebrated this Year on the 15th of December, the 22d of Casleu.

Translators' note. Or four pounds ten shillings English, according to the valuation of a shekel, by our learned Dr. Prideaux.

Translators' note. There are several Books which go under the name of ספר תלדות ישו in imitation of the title prefixed to St. Matthew's Gospel, Βίβλος γενέσεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. The Book of the generation of Jesus Christ*, or the History of* Jesus Christ. The Jews have two principally, which go under this name: one published by Wagenseil, in the second volume of his Tela Ignea Satanæ*; the other by* M. Huldric*, with Annotations, in the year 1705*.

Iren. l. 3. c. 19. nov. Edit.

Origen. contra Cels. ἀλλὰ ὡς φασὶ, μικρὸν καὶ δυσειδές, καὶ ἀγενὴς ἦν.

Clem. Alex. Pæd. l. 3. c. 1. & l. 1. & 3. Strom.

Cyr. Alex. Glaphir. in Ex. ἐν εἴδει γὰρ πέφρυκεν τῷ λίαν ἀκαλλιστάτῳ.

Tertull. de Idolat.

Idem, adversus Judæos.

Tertul. de carne Christi.

Aug. in Psalm. xliv.

Jesus (II)

II. JESUS, or Jeshua, the son of Jozadak, was the first High-Priest of the Jews, after they returned from the Babylonish captivity. We do not know very exactly how many years he exercised the High -Priesthood. His first care after his arrival at Jerusalem, was to restore the Sacrifices, to regulate the Offices and Order of the Priests and Levites; and, lastly, to rebuild the [Ezra iv. 3, 8.] Temple, as far as the condition, which the Jews were then in, would allow him to carry on such a work. The Prophets Haggai and Zechariah often mention Jesus the son of Jozadak. Haggai addresses himself [Haggai i. 1, 2, &c.] to him and Zerubbabel, exciting them to build the Temple after the death of Cyrus and Cambyses; and in the second year of Darius the son of Hystaspes, King of Persia, [In the year of the World 3485, before J. C. 515, before the Vulgar Æra 519.] the Spirit of the Lord animated Jesus and Zerubbabel, and Haggai prophesied to them by divine inspiration, that in a little time he would shake the heavens and the earth and the sea, the dry land, and all nations; that the desire of all nations should come into the world, and that the new House or new Temple which they raised, should be filled with glory.

[Zech iii. 1.] Zechariah relates, that the Lord shewed him the High-Priest Jeshua the son of Jozadak standing before the Angel of the Lord, and Satan standing at his right hand to accuse him. And the Angel of the Lord said to Satan, " The Lord rebuke thee, " even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem for his habitation, and hath, as " we may say, pluck'd this brand out of " the fire. Now Jeshua was clothed with " filthy garments, and stood before the " Angel, who said, Take away the filthy " garments from him. And unto him, he " said, Behold I have caused thine iniquity " to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee " with change of raiment." At the same time he put a fair mitre upon his head, and the Angel said to him, " If thou wilt " walk in the ways of the Lord, thou " shalt govern his House, and keep his " Temple, and I will give thee an Angel " to walk with thee." Lastly, God promises him to send his servant the Branch, (See the Article BRANCH:) Adducam servum meum Orientem; that is to say, the Messiah, who accordingly appeared under the second Temple.

[Zech iv. 2, 3, &c.] The same Prophet having seen a vision of two Olive-trees, which were one on the right, the other on the left-hand of the golden Candlestick in the Temple, through which the oil ran into the lamps of this Candlestick, the Angel of the Lord told him, that these two Olive-trees were Jesus the son of Jozadak, and Zerubbabel the son of Salathiel, who are the two anointed ones that stand by the Lord of the whole earth. Zechary received likewise orders [Zech. vi. 11. Vide Euseb. Demonstr. l. 4.] from the Lord to take the gold which the principal of the Jews offered to God, make crowns of it to place upon the head of Jesus the son of Jozadak, and promise him that the man surnamed the Branch, that is to say, the Messiah, should come, who should indeed build a Temple to the Lord, and there be seated on his throne. This new Temple, which he was to build to God, is the Christian Church, which he hath established, and in it hath placed his throne. Some, by the word Branch or East, as the original may be translated, understand literally Zerubbabel, who was a [Theodor. ad Zech. iii. & vi. & Hieron. ibidem.] branch of David's family: but Zerubbabel being contemporary with Jesus or Jeshua, to promise his coming was very vain. They both returned together from the Babylonish captivity. Jesus the son of Sirach, Author of the Book of Ecclesiasticus, commends [Ecclus. xlix. 14.] Jesus the son of Josedec and Zerubbabel, as Signets on the Lord's right hand, and as persons principally concerned in building the second Temple to God's eternal Glory, when the Jews returned from the captivity of Babylon. Jesus the son of Josedec was succeeded in the High-Priesthood by his son Joachim, who was High-Priest in the reign of Xerxes. See Joseph. Antiq. l. xi. c. 5. initio.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jesus (III)

[Ch. l. 29 & li.] III. JESUS, the son of Sirach, Author of the Book of Ecclesiasticus, was, according to Genebrard, in his Chronicle, descended from the High-Priest Jesus the son of Jozadak. Some Greek copies make Eleazar the father of Sirach of Jerusalem, to have been his grandfather: but Jesus the son of Sirach, who speaks of himself in the fiftieth chapter and 29th verse, and throughout the fifty-first chapter, and in some other places of his Book of Ecclesiasticus, never says any thing either of his being himself a Priest, or that any of his Ancestors were so. He informs us only, that he was desirous of wisdom, that he begg'd it earnestly of God, while he lay prostrate before him in the Temple; that he had travelled much, in order to comcompleat [See Ecclus. xxxiv. 13. Ecclus. li. 5, 6, 7, 8. Ecclus. xxxiii. 16.] his studies; that he studied hard, and had run through many dangers; that having been slandered to the King, he was in imminent danger of death; but by God's mercy, was rescued from it. He says, he was the last of his nation who wrote moral Sentences. Lastly, Jesus his grandson, the translator of his work testifies that his grandfather was in great reputation for his wisdom. See the Preface to this Book. We do not know who Sirach was, the father of Jesus, nor can we tell certainly his name who was the father of Jesus, the Author's grandson, and the translator of his work.

The Arabians[1] are acquainted with this writer, and his works. They believe that he or his grandfather was Visier to Solomon; and they say he had a very virtuous wife, whose name was Fikia, and whose life has been written in Arabic. There is also an Arabian book intitled, The Sentences and Wisdom of Jesus the son of Sirach.

We have discoursed at large of the book of Ecclesiasticus in the Article ECCLESIASTICUS. What we have said of the Author, and his Book, of its Canonical Authority, of the Translator of it, and the time wherein they both lived, may be seen in the Article above mentioned. We shall say no [See likewise M. Fabricius's Bibl. Græc. t. 2. l. 3. p. 727.] more of them in this place.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Bibl. Orient. p. 494. Joschovah ben-Sirach.

Jesus (IV)

IV. JESUS, otherwise Jason, High-Priest of the Jews, illegally possessing the place of Onias III. See above JASON.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jesus (V)

V. JESUS, the son of Phabis, High-Priest of the Jews, Ananel's successor, and predecessor to Simon the son of Boëthus. He was High-Priest but for a short time. He was deposed by Herod the Great in the year of the World 3981, before Jesus Christ 19, before the Vulgar Æra 23. We know nothing particularly of his Life.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jesus (VI)

VI. JESUS, the son of Sias, High-Priest of the Jews, succeeded Eleazar, and was himself succeeded by Joazas, in the reign of Archelaus the son of Herod. This Jesus the son of Sias, held the Pontificate but four years; he was deposed in 4009, and his predecessor was appointed to this dignity in 4004.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jesus (VII)

VII. JESUS, the son of Damnæus, High-Priest of the Jews, was so created by King Agrippa, in the year of Jesus Christ 63, and deposed the same year. He succeeded Ananus, and Jesus the son of Gamaliel was his successor.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jesus (VIII)

VIII. JESUS, the son of Gamaliel, High -Priest of the Jews, successor to Jesus the son of Damnæus, and predecessor to Matthias the son of Theophilus. The two High-Priests, Jesus the son of Damnæus, and Jesus the son of Gamaliel, having each their party in the Temple, and the City, disputed sword in hand for the Pontificate. Agrippa, to put an end to this bloody contention, deposed them both, and placed Matthias, the son of Theophilus, in their room, in the year of Jesus Christ 64.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jether (I)

I. JETHER, the son of Gideon, who had not the courage to kill Zebah and Zalmunna, though his father commanded him to do so. Judg. viii. 20.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jether (II)

II. JETHER, the husband of Abigail, David's sister, and father of Amasa. 1 Chron. ii. 17.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jetheth

JETHETH, the son of Esau, one of the ancient Dukes of Edom. Gen. xxxvi. 40.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jethlah

JETHLAH, a City in the Tribe of Dan. Josh. xix. 42.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jethro

JETHRO, Priest or Prince of Midian[1], the father-in-law of Moses. Some believe that he was Priest to the true God, and that he maintained the true Religion, as being a descendant of Midian, the son of Abraham and Keturah. Moses does not disguise his alliance with Jethro's family, but invites him to offer Sacrifices to the Lord upon his [Exod. xviii. 11, 12.] arrival in the camp of Israel, as one who adored the same God with the Israelites. It is by some asserted, that he had four names, Jethro, Raguel, Hobab, and Ceni. Others will have it, that Jethro and Raguel were the same person; that Hobab was the son of Jethro, brother to Zipporah, and brotherin-law to Moses; and lastly, that Ceni is a common name signifying the country of the Kenites, inhabited by the posterity of Hobab, to the South of the promised Land. The Hebrew, Chothen[2], which St. Jerom translates cognatus, kinsman, is made use of in Numb. x. 29. to denote the degree of relation which was between Moses and Hobab. And in another place the same term is used to signify the same thing, Exod. xviii. 1, 27. Nevertheless in this place cited from Numbers, Hobab is called the son of Raguel. For which reason some others are of opinion, that Raguel is the father of Jethro, and Jethro the father of Hobab. On the other side, Raguel gives Zipporah to Moses in marriage, Exod. ii. 18, 21. The signification of the Hebrew, Chothen, not being fixed, it is impossible to be at any certainty in this question.

The

The occasion which gave Moses the opportunity of making an alliance with Jethro's family, was this: Moses having killed an Egyptian, who abused an Hebrew, was obliged to fly out of Egypt. He retired into the land of Midian, to the East of the Red Sea, between the gulph of Elam and Heroopolis. As he sat down near a well where Jethro's daughters were watering their cattle, there came some shepherds, who forced them away. Moses defended the young women, and watered their flock. Their father being informed of what had passed, sent for Moses to his house, and gave him his daughter Zipporah in marriage. By [Exod. ii. 15, 16, 17, &c. From the year of the World 2473 to 2513, before J. C. 1487, before the Vulgar Æra 1491.] her Moses had two sons, Gershom and Eliezer. After he had been forty years at Jethro's, he had the vision of an Angel, who spoke to him in a burning bush, and enjoined him to deliver the Israelites out of Egypt. Jethro understanding what the Will of God was in this particular, permitted him to return into his own country with his wife and children. But Zipporah having been obliged to return to her father's house in Midian, before she went into Egypt, Jethro brought her back to Moses, who was then incamped at the foot of Mount Sinai, about a year after the Hebrews came out of Egypta.

Jethro sending notice to Moses of his arrival, [Exod. xviii. 1, 2, 3, &c.] Moses went out of the camp, met him, fell prostrate before him, embraced him, introduced him into his tent, and related to him all that the Lord had done for the Israelites. Jethro blessed God for it, offered Burnt-offerings and Peace-offerings, and ate with Moses, Aaron, and the Elders of Israel, in the presence of the Lord. The next day, Moses taking his seat in order to judge Israel, continued from morning to evening employed in this manner. Jethro remonstrated to him, that this was a fatigue above his strength to undergo, and would be tiresome both to himself and his people; that therefore he should chuse some men of firmness and fortitude, who feared God, and hated covetousness, that they might share with him in the weight of Government; that the cognizance of lesser affairs should be referr'd to them, and those of more consequence should be reserved to himself. Moses submitted easily to this advice, and chose certain men of merit out of all Israel, whom he appointed to have rule over the people; some over a thousand, others over an hundred, fifty, and ten. They administred justice to the people, and when any thing of greater difficulty than ordinary occurr'd, they referred it to Moses.

When the Israelites were upon the point of decamping from the Wilderness of Sinai, and proceeding on their journey towards the Land of Promise, Moses desired Jethro to continue with the people, that he might [Exod. xviii. 27.] be a guide to them: but Jethro refused, and returned to Midian, leaving, as some believe, Hobab his son, to conduct the Israelites [Numb. x. 29.] in the Wilderness. Hobab went with them to the Land of Promise, and had a share in the division of it made by Joshua. We do not know what befell Jethro after that time.

The Jews have published several fabulous accounts relating to Jethro, which we shall just touch upon by the way.[3] They tell us in the first place, that he had six names; Jethro or Jether, Raguel, Chobab, Peni, Phutiel, and Chebar. They add, that being one of Pharaoh's principal Counsellors, and giving moderate counsels, and such as were favourable to the Hebrews, whereas Balaam, another of this Prince's Counsellors, was for taking measures that were quite contrary, he was obliged to fly from Pharaoh's court, and retire to Midian. Thither he carried with him a rod of Saphire, which was created on the sixth day of the World, and had been delivered down from time to time successively from Adam to Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph; and last of all to Pharaoh. Jethro found the secret of carrying it off to Midian; and having fixed it in the ground in his own garden, he could never pluck it out: but Moses by the help of God's name, the pronunciation whereof he understood, pulled it up very easily; and to this he owed his marriage with Zipporah. And with this same rod it was, that he afterwards wrought so many miracles. They believe that he wrote that section in the Pentateuch, which they call Jethro. The Mahometans call him Soaib; a name observed to be in Saadias, and the Arabic version of Exodus.

You have in the following account several curious, but uncertain particulars, of Jethro's life, which have been handed [Bibl. Orient. p. 790. Schoalb.] down to us by the Arabians. They say one Michael the son of Taskir, and grandson of Midian, was his father: this last was the immediate son of Ishmael, according to the Author of Leb-Tarik; for Moses makes no mention of Midian among the sons of Ishmael [Gen. xxv. 13, 14.] . Jethro gave his son-in-law Moses the miraculous rod, with which he performed so many prodigies. He was favoured with the gift of prophecy, and God sent him to his countrymen the people of Midian, to preach the Unity of God, and withdraw them from idolatry. Mahomet says, that he wrought miracles[4] to convert this nation; and one of his Commentators affirms, that whenever Jethro had a mind to perform his devotions on the top of a certain Mountain, the Mountain became lower, in order to render the ascent more easy to him.

Another Commentator on the Alcoran says, that Jethro took pains principally to reform the bad custom which the Midianites had, of stealing, of having two sorts of weights and measures; of buying by the larger, and selling by the smaller. He was often used to say to them, Get just weights and measures, and defraud no man of what belongs to him. Besides these frauds which the Midianites committed in their way of trading, they offered violence to travellers, and robb'd them with impunity on the high-ways. They threatned even Jethro to drive him out of their country, together with his disciples, if they did not all return to those wicked practices which were in vogue among them.

[Euseb. de nomin. Hebr.] This insolence obliged God to manifest his wrath, in shewing them an example of his just severity. He sent the Angel Gabriel, who, with a voice like thunder, and a dreadful cry, set the Earth a trembling, and this Earthquake was the destruction of them all, except Jethro, and them, who like him, believed the Unity of God. It was after this punishment that Jethro went to his son-in-law Moses, as is related in Exodus xviii. 1, 2, 3. and following verses. The advice which Jethro gave Moses upon this occasion, made the Mussulmen call him, The Preacher of the Prophets.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ita Ezechiel Poeta apud Euseb. l. 9. c. 4. Præpar. Jonath. alii plures. The Hebrew Cohen כהן*signifies sometimes* a Prince.
Chothen חתנGener, Affinis, Cognatus. LXX. Πενθερὸς, Socer, vel Γαμβρὸς, Gener. Aquila. Sym. Theod. Νυμφίος, Sponsus.
Vide Tanchuna, & Mechilta & Scip. Sgambat. l. 2. Archiv vet. Test.
In the year of the World 2514, before Jesus Christ 1486, before the Vulgar Æra 1490.

Jettan

JETTAN. Eusebius says, that there is a considerable place called Jettan, eighteen miles from Eleutheropolis, in the Canton which went under the name of Daroma.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jetur

JETUR, the son of Ishmael. Gen. xxv. 15. was father of the Iturœans.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jews

JEWS; in Latin, Judæi. The Israelites who returned from the Captivity of Babylon, were then and ever after called by this name. Judæi comes from Juda, because then the Tribe of Judah was not only the most powerful, but almost the only one, which made any figure, and appeared with any splendor. After the Captivity, the Jews multiplied and grew so strong, that in our Saviour's time, and forty years after, when they declared war against the Romans, they were one of the most powerful nations in the East.

They set about rebuilding the Temple, and the holy City, under Ezra and Nehemiah, as we see in the Books which bear the names of these two pious Persons. From this time they were more zealous in the observance of their Laws, more faithful in [Alcoran, c. Arof.] the practice of their Duties, and more averse to Idolatry than they had before appeared to be. The Israelites of the ten Tribes, who returned at different times from the Captivity, were confounded with those of Judah, and were called Jews, perhaps upon political views, because the permission granted by Cyrus to the Hebrew captives, of returning to their own country, was granted expressly to those only of the Kingdom of Judah; or because all the Hebrews being after the Captivity united under one and the same Monarchy, and there being no longer any distinction in this sense between Judah and Israel, they all took the name of Judah, as being the most considerable part, and that wherein the Head of their Religion resided; that is to say, the High-Priest who resided at Jerusalem, and the Prince of the country, who was always of the Tribe of Judah, subordinate to the Governour sent by the Kings of Persia.

[In the year of the World 3495, before J. C. 505.] Under the reign of these Kings they enjoyed great peace, and had leisure to settle themselves quietly in their country, to rebuild their cities, and cultivate their lands, which had been so long forsaken. During this interval, they who dwelt beyond the Euphrates were in great danger by reason of Haman's ambition, and Mordecai's resolution, who could not persuade himself to pay him those honours, which were not due to him. But Esther had credit enough to prevail for the revocation of the Edict, which the King of Persia had published against the Jews, and Mordecai was advanced to great honours, being placed in those stations at Court and in the State, which Haman had possessed before him: the Jews hereupon revenged themselves upon their enemies, and became terrible to those who had despised them.

When Alexander the Great undertook the war against Darius Codomannus, the last King of Persia, the Jews continued firm in their duty to Darius, who was their lawful Sovereign, and refused Alexander the succours he demanded for the siege of Tyre, about which he was employed. This Prince resolved to be revenged on them for their refusal, and after he had taken the city, he marched against Jerusalem. But the High-Priest coming out to meet him at the Head of all his Clergy and the People, Alexander received him with respect, bestowed many [In the year of the World 3672, before J. C. 328.] favours on the Jewish nation, and granted them an exemption from tribute every seventh year; a favour which he would not grant to the Samaritans.

After the death of Alexander the Great, the Jews were subject sometimes to the Kings of Egypt, and sometimes to those of Syria, according as these Princes were more more or less powerful, or extended their conquests more or less over one another.

Under Ptolemy Philopator King of Egypt, they suffered a cruel persecution in their dominions; this Prince would have had [In the year of the World 3787, before J. C. 213. In the year of the World 3834, before J. C. 166.] them crushed to death under Elephants feet, but God rescued them from this danger, by a miraculous effect of his protection.

A division arising among their Priests, and Jason purchasing the High-Priesthood of Antiochus Epiphanes, this Prince took from hence an opportunity to persecute the Jews, and undertook to make them abandon their Religion, to embrace that of the Greeks. There were no torments which he did not inflict on them, in order to overcome their constancy; he met with an inflexible resistance from the Maccabees, and a great number of honest Israelites who joined them, and maintained the true Religion with prodigies of valour, and at last restored their country to its liberty. The Asmonæans or Maccabees, after having for some time exercised the High-Priesthood under the Empire of the Syrian Kings, at length delivered themselves from their dependance, and annexed the Principality or temporal Sovereignty to the Dignity of the Priesthood. Hircanus was the person who intirely shook off the Syrian yoke a; but Aristobulus his son and successor was the first who assumed the title of King[1]. The Kingdom continued in his family till the time of Herod the son of Antipater the Idumæan[2].

There was however some interruption; for Gabinius Governor of Syria, entring Judea at the head of a powerful army, not long after Pompey's leaving it, reduced Alexander the eldest son of Aristobulus under his obedience, who had escaped from Pompey, restored Hircanus to the High-Priesthood, and changed almost intirely the civil State of the country: from being Monarchical, he made it Aristocratical; suppressed [In the year of the World 3947, before J. C. 53.] the title of King, and instead of the Great Sanhedrim, and the common Courts where Justice was administred in Jerusalem, and other cities, he settled five different Courts in Judea, every one whereof was independent on the rest, and exercised a sovereign Authority within its district. The first was fixed at Jerusalem; the second at Jericho; the third at Gadara; the fourth at Amathur; the fifth at Sephoris. The whole country was divided into five Provinces or Jurisdictions, and each Province was obliged to have recourse for Justice to one of the Courts which was assigned it, and where affairs were terminated without appeal.

[In the year of the World 3957, before J. C. 43.] Some years after, Julius Cæsar coming from Egypt to Palestine in his way to Syria, Antigonus the son of Aristobulus, last King of the Jews, waited on him, and threw himself at his feet, desiring to be restored to the Principality of his father; complaining at the same time of Hircanus and Antipater. But the latter of these, to whom Cæsar had great obligations, for services performed during the war in Egypt, justified his own conduct and that of Hircanus, so well, that Antigonus was dismissed as a turbulent and seditious man, and Cæsar appointed Hircanus to continue High-Priest and Prince of Judæa, giving Antipater at the same time the Office of Procurator of Judea under Hircanus. The Aristocracy settled by Gabinius was abolished, and the Government restored upon the same footing upon which it stood before.

Antigonus the son of Aristobulus having given the Parthians large sums of money, to the end that they might assist him in recovering the throne of his Ancestors, found means to defeat the forces of Hircanus, who was supported by Herod and his brethren; after which, Herod retired into Italy; Antigonus took Hircanus, had his ears cut off, in order to render him for the future incapable of the High-Priesthood, delivered him to the Parthians, who carried him into their country, and possessed himself of the Pontificate and Principality of the Jews.

But Herod arriving at Rome, and laying [In the year of the World 3964, before J. C. 36.] before Antony the condition of affairs in Judea, Antony jointly with Octavian, surnamed afterwards Augustus, procured the crown of Judea for him, which he possessed until his death, and transmitted to his children. I run over all this very slightly, my design here being only to give a general Idea of the State and Government of the Jews, from the time of their return from the Captivity of Babylon to that of Herod.

After the death of this Prince, his Kingdom was divided among his sons. Archelaus had Judea, Idumea, and Samaria; Herod Antipas had Galilee and Perœa; and Philip the Auranitis, Trachonitis, Paneas, and the Batanœa[3]. Archelaus reigned ten years only in Judea. He was accused before Augustus by the Jews and Samaritans, and being unable to justify himself, was banished to Vienne in Gaul, and Judea was reduced into a Province. In this condition it was at the death of our Saviour.

From this time to the destruction of Jerusalem they had Roman Governours; a list of whom I have given in the Article GOVERNOURS. After the destruction of Jerusalem, Judea was comprehended under the Government of the Presidents of Syria, Syria, and the Jews made still a separate people, and continued in their own country subject to the Romans, till the reign of Adrian; then they revolted, and made war against the Romans: in this the generality of them perished miserably, and their nation was intirely dispersed[4]. See the Article BARCHOCHEBAS.

The Religion of the Jews may be considered in different views, with respect to the different conditions of their nation. Under the Patriarchs, natural Religion was that which they observed, being averse to Idolatry, and those crimes which are the consequences of Atheism; or the superstitious Worship of false Gods: using circumcision, which was the seal of that covenant which God had made with Abraham, and following the laws which reason, assisted by the lights of grace and faith, discovers to those who have honest hearts, and seriously seek after God, his righteousness, and truth, living in expectation of the Messiah, the desire of the Gentiles, who was to compleat their hopes and wishes, and fully to instruct and bless them. Such was the Religion of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Judah, Joseph, and the other Patriarchs, who kept up the worship of God in their families, and the tradition of the true Religion.

From Moses's time the Religion of the Jews was more fixed, and set out more particularly. Natural Religion and the Laws of Nature were better explained. Before, every one honoured God according to the inclination of his heart, and in the manner which he thought proper. From Moses's time, Ceremonies, Days, Feasts, Priest and Sacrifices were all determined with an infinite exactness. This Legislator described the very age, sex, and colour of hair required in certain Victims: he settled the number, qualities, and nature of them: at what hour, by whom, why, and on what occasions they were to offer them. He regulated the Tribe, the Family, the bodily Qualities, the Habits, Order, Rank, and Functions of the Priests and Levites. He specified the measures, metals, woods, and works which were to compose the Tabernacle, or portable Temple of the Lord; the dimensions, metal, and figure of the Altar, and its Utensils; in a word, he omitted nothing which concerned the worship of God, who is the first and principal, and, more properly speaking, the only Object of the Jewish Religion.

Hither may be referred likewise the several purifications made use of to dispose themselves for their approach to things Holy. The impurities which kept them at a distance from them, the ways of expiating their pollutions, of preventing and avoiding them; the continual care which the Jews must be in to hinder them from incurring some of these pollutions, which excluded them from civil society, from the use of things holy, from the camp, and from their own houses, according to the variety of circumstances: even some certain natural infirmities, certain diseases, and involuntary accidents required purifications. The bare touching of an animal which died of itself; the being present at funerals, the touching of an unclean person, were capable of polluting a man, and to put him under an obligation of purifying himself.

I will not inlarge here on the moral, judicial, and ceremonial Laws of the Jews; I have already treated of them in the Article LAWS. But I cannot forbear remarking the extreme rigour of that Law which condemned to death, for example, those, who violated the Sabbath; who contracted marriages within the prohibited degrees; who were guilty of adultery; who came near a woman at particular times when her usual infirmities were upon her; who committed sins against nature; solicited their brethren to idolatry; consulted Diviners and Magicians; blasphemed against God, or came near to things holy without being purified. A Lay-man, or even a Levite, who should have entred the Temple, that is to say, the Holy, or the Sanctuary; who should have touched the Ark of the Covenant, or seen it bare: these, and many other faults, were punished with death. Such was the spirit of the old Law, a spirit of fear, of bondage, and constraint. The Law was represented by Hagar, says St. Paul, who begat slaves [Gal. iv. 24.] only, gendering to bondage. The Gospel on the contrary produces free men: For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, &c. Rom. viii. 15.

The long abode which the Hebrews made in Egypt, left a strange propensity in them to idolatry; neither the miracles which Moses wrought before their eyes, nor the precautions which he took to withdraw them from the worship of idols, nor the rigour of the laws which he published on this subject, nor the splendid marks of God's presence in the Israelitish camp, were sufficient to overcome this unhappy inclination, nor to stop the course and effects of it. Have ye offered unto me Sacrifices and Offerings in the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel? said the Lord by Amos. Ye [Amos v. 25, 26.] have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch, and Chiun your images, the star of your God which ye made to yourselves. We know with what facility they fell into the adoration of the golden Calf, when they were scarce, as we may say, come out of the channel witnesses of this wonder, which had terrified all the neighbouring nations.

[Deut. xii. 8, 9. Josh. v. 4, 5, 6, 7.] Moses therefore gave his Laws in the wilderness, but they were not observed there. When ye shall enter into the land which the Lord your God shall give you, Ye shall not do after all the things which we do here this day, every man whatsoever is right in his own eyes: for ye are not as yet come to rest, and to the inheritance which the Lord your God giveth you. They did not circumcise the children which were born in the wilderness, as well because of the danger of death which children newly circumcised would have been exposed to, by the fatigue of journeys, and frequent decamping, as because the people of Israel not being mingled with other nations, were under no necessity to take that sign, which was instituted principally to distinguish them from other people.

During the wars which Joshua made with the Canaanites, and before the Ark of God was fixed in any certain and safe place, it was difficult to observe all the Laws of Moses; wherefore under Joshua and the Judges, and even in the reign of Saul, we see liberty enough in Israel with regard to the observance of many articles of the Law, which were much better observed under David, for example, and Solomon, when the Hebrews were at peace in their land, and there was a freer and more easy access to the place, where the Tabernacle was. Before they sacrificed in different places of the country, and the most religious observers of the Law made no scruple in this point, provided the Sacrifices were offered to the Lord. They were even obliged to tolerate many abuses, for want of necessary power and authority to suppress them. In those days, says the Scripture, there was no King in Israel, and every man did that [Judg. xvii. 5, 6 xviii. 31. xxi. 24. Judg. xvii. 4. Judg. viii. 27. 1 Sam. ii. 12, 13, &c.] which was right in his own eyes, or whatsoever seemed good to him. Hence Micah's Ephod, which was removed to Laish; hence that which Gideon made in his family; hence the irregularities of the High-Priest Eli's sons; hence the crime of the inhabitants of Gibeah, and the frequent idolatries of the Israelites, whereof there is mention made in the book of Judges. See Judg. ii. 1, 2, 3, and 11, 12. And the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord, and served Baalim, and they forsook the Lord God of their fathers.... and followed other Gods, of the Gods of the people that were round about them. stop to such inveterate disorders. The superstitions which they did not dare to exercise in publick, they practised still in private. They sacrificed upon the High-places: they consulted Diviners and Magicians. Solomon, whom God had chosen to build his Temple, was himself a stone of stumbling and offence to all Israel: he erected Altars to the false Gods of the [2 Sam. xi. 5, 6, 7.] Phœnicians, Moabites, and Ammonites; and he not only permitted his wives to worship the Gods of their country, but he himself adored them. There were few among the Kings his successors, who did not shew in this respect like weaknesses. Jeroboam the son of Nebat, King of Israel, introduced the worship of the golden Calves in the kingdom of Israel; and this worship took such deep root there, that it never was intirely extirpated. There were from time to time some reformations in Judah, but they did but suspend the evil, they did not absolutely stop it, nor close the source of it.

[Hosea iii. 4. Zeph. iii. 12.] The Captivity of Babylon was a more effectual remedy. The Hebrews, borne down by the hand of God, and sinking under it, reflected upon themselves, and sincerely renounced idols. They never were more faithful, nor more exact in the observance of God's Laws than after this period: and the children of Israel, after they had been a long time without a King, without a Prince, without a Sacrifice, without an Image, without an Ephod, and without Teraphim, returned at length unto the Lord their God, and sought him and David their King, and feared the Lord, &c. God reserved to himself an afflicted and poor people, who trusted in the name of the Lord: the remnant of Israel committed no more iniquity, neither was a deceitful tongue found in their mouth; they dwelt in peace, and no one disturbed them in their inheritance. The persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes served only to separate the straw from the wheat, and display the zeal, courage and firmness of the Maccabees. the most perfect, lived in retreat, and did not concern themselves with publick affairs. The Reader may see what we have said of these different Sects in their respective Articles.

Our Saviour found a great deal to reform in the doctrines and practices of the Pharisees. He declared loudly against their dangerous explanations of the Law; and thereby drew upon himself their hatred, which at last ended in his death. In his time the Law was known and observed, and it may be said, that perhaps so much zeal and punctuality was never seen in the outward observance of Moses's Ordinances. But the Spirit of the Law, the practice of solid virtues, such as humility, simplicity, love of poverty, humiliations, and sufferings; the love of God, and of our neighbour, these were scarce so much as known. The Pharisees practised the Law only out of ostentation. They abounded with pride, envy, and avarice; and had changed the most important precepts by their erroneous explanations. Such was the Religion which Jesus Christ undertook to reform; and which he in reality did reform in the Gospel.

The whole Nation of the Jews, their Priesthood and their Kingdom, are, according to St. Austin's remark, a prophecy of the Christian People, of the Priesthood and Kingdom of Jesus Christ[5]: whatever happened to them was figurative, says St. Paul[6]; their Bondage in Egypt, their miraculous Deliverance, their Passage thro' the Red Sea, their Sojourning in the Wilderness, and their Entrance into the promised Land; their Circumcision, their Ceremonies, their Priests, and Sacrifices, were all figures of Christ's coming, of the Establishment of Christianity, of the Duties and Privileges of Christians, of their Priesthood, Sacraments, and Excellency of the Gospel.

This Nation, which, as Moses first intended, was to live united, and collected together in one and the same country, was afterwards, by an effect of God's Wisdom, dispersed into many places, that before the coming of the Messiah they might be known throughout the world, and that by the singularity of their Lives, their Manners, Religion, History, and Laws, strangers might be every where informed who the Jews were, and that this general knowledge might insensibly dispose them to receive the Gospel, and acknowledge the Messiah, whom the Jews expected, and of whom they told so many wonders. Wherefore when Jesus Christ appeared, all the East was in expectation of the birth of this Redeemer, of this Monarch who was to be the happiness, the hope, and salvation of all people. since the death of Jesus Christ, the Jews should be again dispersed into all places of the world, carrying every where the marks of their reprobation, and the punishment of the sin committed by their fathers against the person of Jesus Christ, their Messiah, and Deliverer, whom they rejected and crucified. We see them every where odious, despised, debased, and persecuted, yet continuing still obstinately fond of their ceremonies, and the traditions of their fore-fathers, though at such a distance from Jerusalem, and having neither Priests nor Temple, are unable to observe the generality of their ceremonial Laws. They expect continually the coming of the Messiah, who will not appear till the day of Judgment, to pronounce their doom, and take off the Veil which is spread over their eyes and hearts: Even unto this day the veil is upon their [2 Cor. iii. 15, 16.] heart: nevertheless when it shall turn unto the Lord, the veil shall be taken away.

They preserve, they carry about with them, they read and study the sacred Books of the Old Testament, without penetrating the sense of them; they know the letter of them, but do not see into the mysteries contained in them. They afford light for the use of others, and do not enlighten themselves, says St. Austin[7]. They carry our books, as servants do those of children, who go to school; they carry the books which instruct us in what we should believe[8]. Codicem portat Judæus, unde credat Christianus: librarii nostri facti sunt, quomodo solent servi post dominos codices ferre, ut illi portando deficiant, illi legendo proficiant. When we dispute with Pagans, Infidels, and the Incredulous, who receive not our testimony, we convince them by the sacred writings of the Jews, who certainly neither preserved nor composed them to oblige us. Of this use the Jews are to us, they contribute against their inclination to the advancement of Christianity: Nobis serviunt Judæi tanquam capsarii nostri sunt, studentibus nobis codices [Aug. in Psalm. xl. p. 353.] portant.

We have given the Reader in the course of this work almost the whole History of the Jews, by relating the Lives of those illustrious men who have appeared among them from the beginning of the world to the destruction of Jerusalem. He may likewise consult the chronological Table of the sacred History, prefixed to the first Tome of this Dictionary, and the geographical Map of Judæa, wherein the extent of this country may be seen, and the inheritance of each Tribe. We shall give a short account of their principal Laws under the Article LAWS, or under that of MOSES.

We have in particular Dissertations discoursed of their Chronology, Polity, Poetry, Punishments, Marriages, Divorces, Houses, Musick, Diet, Militia, Officers of their King's Court, of their relation to the Spartans, the order and succession of their High-Priests, of their sacred Books, both in general and particular; of their Texts, Language, Translations; of their system of the World, Schools, and Habits. We have likewise treated in particular pieces of the different Sects which were among them; of Melchisedek, Enoch, and several other subjects, which relate to the Jewish Nation and Religion. These Dissertations may be seen in collections which have been separately made of them, or in our Comment upon the Books of the Old and New Testament. It would be impossible to treat of all these things here at any length, and several of them we have spoken of in this Dictionary, under their particular Articles.

Articles of Faith professed by the JEWS. See above the word FAITH.

Kings of the JEWS. See the Article KINGS.

High-Priests of the JEWS. See the Article PRIESTS.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the World 3898, before Jesus Christ 102.

In the year of the World 3965, before Jesus Christ 36.

In the year of the World 3874, before Jesus Christ 126.

Translators' note. Juvenal takes notice of the little Arts which were practised by the Jews in their poor vagabond condition, to procure daily sustenance. Whether this observation on the deplorable state of this People was made after the last calamity About the same time that appeared in the Religion of the Jews, which hitherto had not been seen in it; I mean Sects, and divided Opinions upon the most important matters of the Law. The Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenians, formed three parties, as among the Greeks there were Academicks, Peripateticks, Stoicks, and Epicureans. The Pharisees were the most prevailing, and acquired an infinite deal of credit with the people. The Sadducees were not so numerous, but had more of Saul and David, with all their autho- mity, which befel their Nation under Adrian, may be questioned; tho' Mr. Dodwell is of opinion, that Juvenal's Satyrs were written in the reign of this Emperor, and that he was a ... by Adrian: if so, what he says of them in his sixth Satyr, might possibly be penn'd after the destruction of Barchochebas, and the many miseries of the Jews consequent thereupon. F. Tarteron indeed will have it, that he either died very soon after the third year of Adrian, or forbore writing from that time; upon which supposition it is impossible he could have any view to the unhappy circumstances of the Jews after the reduction of Bether, and the death of Barchochebas, which happened according to the Chronology of our Author in the 17th and 18th years of Adrian; and consequently my application of this passage under the Article Barchochebas, must be understood rather of the Jews when dispersed after the demolition of Jerusalem by Titus.

Aug. de Civit. Dei. l. 7. c. 32.

1 Cor. x. 6, 10. Omnia in figurâ contingebant eis. Serm. ad Cathecumen. de Symbolo, p. 578. nov. Edit.

Aug.

Aug. in Psalm. lvi. p. 534.

Jews

JEWS, their Dispersions, their Captivities: whether they are returned from them. See CAPTIVITIES, and TRANSMIGRATIONS.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Wandering Jew

WANDERING JEW. I am so well persuaded, that every thing that is reported of the Wandering Jew is fabulous, that I should not think him worth speaking of in this place, if I did not know, that there were still some people so simple as to believe something of the story. The example of Enoch and Elijah, who are still living, and are thought to dwell in some private place on earth; the persuasion of the Jews, who believe the Prophet Elijah to be invisibly present at the ceremony of circumcising [Modena, part. 4. c. 8.] their children; the words of Jesus Christ in the Gospel, who speaking to St. John the Evangelist, says, If I will [Joh. xvi. 21,22,23.] that he stay till I come, what is that to thee, follow thou me; which many of the Ancients and some Moderns have understood, as if our Saviour had promised this Apostle, that he should not die till the day of Judgment: these several considerations induce them to believe that there really is [D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. p. 932. Zerid.] a Wandering Jew.

They call the Mahometan Authors to their assistance, who relate, that in the sixteenth year of the Hegira, a Captain, named Fadhila, who commanded three hundred horse, being arrived with his Troop about the close of day between two Mountains, and having began evening prayer in a loud voice with these words, God is Great, he heard a voice repeating the same words, and continuing to pronounce the whole prayer with him to the end. Fadhila at first suspected that this was an echo, but observing that the voice repeated distinctly and intirely all his words, he said, O Thou who answerest me, if thou art of the Order of Angels, the power of God be with thee; if thou art of another kind of Spirits, well and good; if thou art a man as I am, appear before my eyes. He had no sooner ended these words, than an old man with a bald head and a staff in his hand, having the air of a Dervise, immediately presented himself before him.

After they had saluted one another civilly, Fadhila asked the old man who he was: he answered, that he was called Zerib, son to the son of Elijah; and added, I am here by order from Jesus Christ, who left me in this world, that I might live there till he came a second time on earth. I wait therefore for this Lord who is the source of all happiness, and I dwell, according to his directions, behind this Mountain. Fadhila asked him at what time the Lord Jesus was to appear: he answered, at the end of the world, and at the day of Judgement. And what are the marks, said he again, of the near approach of this day? Zerib then told him with the tone of a Prophet, that when men and women should couple together without distinction of sex; when the abundance of provisions should not lessen the price of them; when the blood of the innocent should be shed, and the poor should beg alms without receiving any; when charity should be extinct, the Scripture should be turned into ballads, the Churches dedicated to the true God be filled with idols; then know that the day of Judgement will be near. He had no sooner ended these words, but he disappeared.

But let us come to the Wandering Jew. The story of him is related with some diversity. Matthew Paris, under the year 1229, tells us, that an Armenian Prelate came at that time into England with letters of recommendation from the Pope, wherein he desired the Prelates to let this foreign Archbishop see the principal relicks of the country, and to shew him in what manner God was served in the Churches of England. Paris, who was then living, says, that many persons upon several occasions examined this Archbishop, and asked him news of the Wandering Jew, who was in the East, and proposed divers questions to him with relation to this man; as whether he were still living, who he was, and what he said of himself.

The Prelate affirmed, that this Jew was in Armenia; and one of the Officers of his retinue said, that he was Pilate's porter, named Cataphilus, who seeing Jesus Christ dragg'd out of the Judgement-hall, gave him a blow with his fist upon the back, in order to push him out the quicker; where upon Jesus Christ said to him, The Son of Man is going, but thou shalt wait till he come. The porter was converted, and baptized by Ananias, and called Joseph; that he had lived ever since, and that when he came to the age of an hundred, he fell sick, and into a swoon, during which he grew young again, and returned to thirty years of age, he being just so old when Jesus Christ died.

This Officer farther assured them, that Joseph was known to his master, that he had seen him eat at his table a little before he came away: that he answered with great gravity and without a smile, as often as he was asked concerning ancient facts; for example, concerning the resurrection of those dead persons, who rose out of their graves when Jesus Christ was crucified; concerning the history of the Apostles, and other holy persons of antiquity. He was always afraid of Jesus Christ's coming to judge the world, because then he was to die. The fault which he committed in striking Jesus made him tremble; nevertheless he hoped continually for pardon, because he sinned through ignorance[1]. There have appeared from time to time such impostors, who taking the advantage of, or rather abusing the credulity of the people, have given themselves out to be the Wandering Jew, and with the benefit of some knowledge in ancient History, and the oriental Languages, have persuaded the simple, that they really were this pretended person. There was one appeared at Hamburg in 1547[2]. A certain Christian affirms that he saw him there, and saw him preach in a church of that city: he seemed to be a man of about fifty years of age, of an advantageous stature, wearing long hair spread over his shoulders: he often sighed, which was imputed to his grief for the fault he had committed. He said that at the time of our Saviour's Passion, he was a shoemaker at Jerusalem, and dwelt near the gate through which Jesus Christ was to pass in his way to Calvary. He was a Jew, and called Ahasuerus; Jesus finding himself fatigued, would have rested upon his stall, but Ahasuerus struck him, whereupon he said, I will rest me here, but thou shalt run up and down till I come. Accordingly he began to run from that moment, followed Jesus Christ, and has wandered ever since.

There was another appeared in England not many years ago. I have a manuscript letter written from London by Madam de Mazarin to Madam de Bouillon, wherein we read, that there is a man in this country who pretends to have lived above seventeen hundred years. He affirms that he was an Officer of the Divan in Jerusalem at the time of Jesus Christ's being condemned by Pontius Pilate: that he thrust our Saviour rudely out of the Judge-ment-hall, with these words, Go, get you gone out; why dost thou stay here? that Jesus Christ answered him, I am going; but thou shalt walk up and down till my coming. He remembers that he had seen all the Apostles, and has not forgotten the features of their faces, their hair, and dress. He has travelled into all the countries in the world, and must wander up and down till the consummation of ages: he boasts of curing the sick by touching them; he speaks several languages; he gives such an exact account of every thing that has passed in all ages, that they who hear him, don't know what to think of him. The two Universities have sent their Doctors to converse with him; but with all their learning, they have not been able to surprize him in any contradictions.

A Gentleman of great learning talked to him in Arabic, whom he answered immediately in the same language, telling him, that there was scarce any one history in the world true. The Gentleman asked him what he thought of Mahomet. I knew his father, said he to him, very particularly at Ormus in Persia; and for Mahomet, he was a man of very good understanding, but nevertheless liable to mistakes, like other men; and one of his principal errors is his denying Jesus Christ to have been crucified; for I was by, said he, and with my own eyes saw him nailed to the cross. He told this Gentleman, that he was at Rome when Nero ordered it to be burnt; that he likewise saw Saladin at his return from his conquests in the Levant; he mentioned abundance of particulars about Soliman the Magnificent. He was likewise acquainted with Tamerlane, Bajazet, Eterlan, and is very particular in his account of the wars in the Holy Land. He gives out, that he will be in a few days at London; where he will satisfy the curiosity of those who shall apply to him.

This is the import of the letter whereof I have been speaking. It says farther, that common people, and some other weak persons, believe him to have wrought many miracles, but that men of sense look upon him as an impostor: and this without doubt is the judgement we should make of him, and of all others who shall have the same presumption.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Basnage Hist. des Juifs, t. 3. l. 5. c. 11. p. 255, 256. Edit. Paris.
Idem. Ibid. ex Schudt compend. Hist. Jud.

Jezaniah

JEZANIAH, the son of Hoshaiah, mentioned in Jeremiah, ch. xlii. 1. He is the same in all probability as Azariah the son of Hoshaiah. Jer. xliii. 2. who was one of the principal persons that engaged the Israelites, who were left in Judæa, to go, against the advice of Jeremiah, into Egypt.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jezebel

JEZEBEL, the daughter of Ethbaal King of the Zidonians, and wife to Ahab [1 Kings xvi. 31.] King of Israel. This Princess introduced into the Kingdom of Samaria the publick worship of Baal, Astarte, and other Phœnician or Canaanitish Deities, which the Lord had forbidden his people in so express a manner; and with this impious worship there was a general prevalency of all those abominations which had formerly so much incensed God against the Canaanites, and procured their utter extirpation. Jezebel was so zealous for the honour of this false Religion, that she fed at her own table four hundred Prophets belonging to the Groves consecrated to the Goddess Astarte; and her husband Ahab had in like manner four hundred of Baal's Prophets, whom he kept as [1 Kings xviii. 19.] the Ministers of his false Gods.

Jezebel seemed to have undertaken the utter abolition of the worship of the Lord in Israel, by persecuting and massacring his Prophets: and she had destroyed them all, if part of them had not been saved by some good men. Obadiah, one of Ahab's Officers, for his share preserved an hundred. Elijah, [1 Kings xviii. 13. In the year of the World 3096, before J. C. 904, before the Vulgar Æra 908.] who appeared at this time, having caused fire to descend from heaven upon his Burnt-offering in the sight of Ahab and of all Israel, assembled at Mount Carmel, and the people having killed four hundred and fifty of Baal's Prophets, who were then present, Jezebel sent a message to Elijah, declaring, that the next day she would take care he should be dispatched: whereupon he fled, and escaped the fury of this impious Queen.

Some time after, Ahab being desirous to buy Naboth's vineyard, and this honest Israelite believing that he ought not to sell it, Jezebel wrote in the King's name to the principal men of Jezreel, where he dwelt, [1 Kings xix. 1, &c. In the year of the World 3096, before J. C. 904, before the Vulgar Æra 908.] requiring them to kill him, and suborn witnesses who should accuse him of blaspheming God, and vilifying the King. These orders were but too punctually executed, and Naboth having been condemn'd and put to death, Ahab took possession of his vineyard as an estate forfeited to him. When Ahab was upon his return from Jezreel, the place where this vineyard lay, Elijah met him, and threatned him in God's name with the destruction of himself and family; and as to Jezebel, who had been the first cause of all this evil, he told her, that her body should be eaten by dogs in the field of Jezreel, or, according to the Hebrew, by the outward wall of Jezreel. These predictions were literally [1 Kings xxi. 23. & 2 Kings ix. 10. 1 Kings xxx. 31, 32.] verified, when Jehu the son of Nimshi rebelling against Ahab[1], and coming to Jezreel, Jezebel painted her eyes with antimony, to make them appear larger and blacker, decked her head with all her ornaments, and looking out of the window, which was in the apartment over the city-gate, and seeing Jehu as he entred riding in his chariot, she cried out, Had Zimri peace who slew his master? Jehu lifting up his head, asked who she was? whereupon two or three Eunuchs immediately made him a very low reverence; and Jehu said to them, Throw her down. At which words, they that instant threw her out of window: and as she fell into the inclosure of the outward wall, she was eaten up by dogs. Jehu coming in to refresh himself, said to his people, Go, see what is become of this unhappy woman, and bury her; for she is a King's daughter. They went, and found only her skull, her feet, and the palms of her hands: they returned therefore, and gave Jehu an account of what they had seen; who said, this is the accomplishment of what the Lord declared by Elijah, saying, In the portion of Jezreel shall dogs eat the flesh of Jezebel: the carcass of Jezebel shall be as dung in the field of Jezreel, and all who pass, shall say, as they observe her, is this Jezebel?

The name of Jezebel is used proverbially, to denote an impious and cruel woman. St. John in the Revelations ii. 20. reproaches the Bishop of Thyatira in Asia Minor, with suffering Jezebel, that woman who calleth herself a Prophetess, to teach and to seduce the servants of Jesus Christ to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols. He says, that he had given her opportunity to repent, but she would not; wherefore God threatens to overwhelm her with diseases and afflictions, together with those who had been corrupted with her; to kill her children, that all the Churches might know, that the Lord searcheth the heart and the reins, and will give to every one according to his works. Jezebel is without doubt in this place a figurative name, and signifies some woman who amused herself with dogmatizing in the Church. See the Commentators upon the Revelations ii. 20.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the World 3120, before Jesus Christ 880, before the Vulgar Æra 884.

Jezer

JEZER, the son of Naphtali, Head of the Family of the Jezerites. Gen. xlvi. 24. Numb. xxvi. 49.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jezra

JEZRA, the son of Meshullam, and father of Adiel. 1 Chron. ix. 12.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jezrahiah

JEZRAHIAH, Intendant or Chief of the singers belonging to the Temple in the time of Nehemiah. Nehem. xii. 42.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jezreel (I)

I. JEZREEL, a City in the Tribe of Judah. Josh. xv. 56.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jezreel (II)

II. JEZREEL, the son of Etam, of the Tribe of Judah. 1 Chron. iv. 3.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jezreel (III)

III. JEZREEL, son to the Prophet Hosea, by the harlot Gomer, whom he had married. Hos. i. 4.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jezreel (IV)

IV. JEZREEL, or Esdrael, or Stradela, or Jezrahel, a celebrated City, situated in the Great Plain between Legio to the west, and Scythopolis to the east. It belonged to [Euseb. in locis. Josh. xix. 18. 1 Kings xxi. 1. and 23. and 2 Kings ix. 10, &c.] the Tribe of Issachar. Ahab had a palace there; and this city became famous on the score of Naboth's vineyard, and the vengeance which God executed on Ahab at Jezreel. S. Jerom a says, that Jezreel was pretty near Maximianopolis; and that not far from it there was a very long vale, of above ten thousand paces in length. Josephus [a Hieronym. in Osee i. Guill. Tyr. l. 22. c. 26.] calls the city of Jezreel, Azarus, or Azares; and in the time of William of Tyre, it was called Little Gerin. There was a fine fountain in it, the waters whereof fell into the river Jordan, near Scythopolis.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Igal

IGAL, of the Tribe of Issachar, was deputed by this Tribe with others, to go and view the Land of Promise, Numb. xiii. 7.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Igdaliah

IGDALIAH, the man of God, who had the care of the wine-cellars belonging to [Jer. xxxv. 4.] the Temple. Jeremiah carried the Rechabites into Igdaliah's apartment, with a design to offer them wine.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ignatius

IGNATIUS, a disciple of the Apostles, bishop of Antioch, and a martyr. He suffered under the persecution of Trajan. Some have asserted, that S. Ignatius, otherwise called Theophoros, or Theopheros, was the child whom Jesus took into his arms, to propose as a pattern of Christian [Quidam apud Anastas. Bibliothec. & alii. Matth. xviii. 2, 3, 5, &c. Chrysost. t. 1. orat. 42. p. 706.] humility. But this particular is by no means certain. We have some letters of S. Ignatius to the blessed Virgin, and others from the blessed Virgin to Ignatius; but they are very well known to be spurious. The name of S. Ignatius is not to be met with in any monument of the New Testament. S. Chrysostom says, that he never saw Jesus Christ; but he is believed to have been a disciple of S. Peter and S. John the Evangelist. We have some epistles written by this holy man, as he was going to Rome in order to suffer martyrdom there. They [Greg. Mag. l. 4. Ep. 37. Hieronym. in Chronic. Ignatii Acta, p. 1, 5.] abound with that divine fire, with which he was inflamed. The history of his martydom is generally known; and besides has no relation to our subject.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jibsam

JIBSAM, the son of Tola, and grandson of Issachar, 1 Chr. vii. 1. Numb. xxvi. 23.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jidlaph

[Gen. xxii. 22.] JIDLAPH, the son of Nabor and Abraham's nephew.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ije-Abarim

IJE-ABARIM, that is to say, the defiles of Abarim, or the defiles of those who pass by; one of the encampments of the Israelites [Numb. xxi. 11. 70עיי .ναρέπ ὢτ νὲ ἰαΓ העברים.] in the land of Moab, after their departure out of Egypt. Moses says, that this place is to the east of the land of Moab. In the same country are the mountains Abarim. Jeremiah speaks of a place called Hai or Gai, which is the same as Je or Jai in the land of Moab.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jim

JIM, a city in the tribe of Judah, Josh. [Jer. xlix. 3. Ulula Hesebon, quoniam vastata est Hai. 2 Kings xv. 29. 1 Kings xv. Ezek. xlviii. 1.] xv. 29.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jimnah

JIMNAH, the eldest son of Asher, head of the family of the Jimnaites, Gen. xlvi. 17. Numb. xxvi. 44.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ijon

IJON, or Abion, perhaps Ein, or Enan, a frontier town to Damascus. We find Inna in Cœle-Syria, in the sixty eighth degree ½ of latitude, and thirty third degree of longitude, according to Ptolemy.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ikkesh

IKKESH, one of those brave officers who commanded in David's army, 2 Sam. xxiii. 26.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ilai

ILAI, a valiant man in David's army, 1 Chr. xi. 29.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Illyricum

[Rom. xv. 19.] ILLYRICUM. St. Paul says, that he preached the Gospel from Jerusalem round about unto Illyricum. Illyricum is a province in Europe, whereof the old northern limits were the two Pannonias, the Adriatic sea to the south, Istria to the west, and Upper Mœsia and Macedonia to the east, so that S. Paul preached in Syria, Phœnicia, Arabia, Cilicia, Pamphilia, Pisidia, Lycaonia, Galatia, Pontus, Paphlagonia, Phrygia, Troas, Asia, Caria, Lycia, Ionia, Lydia, the isles of Cyprus and Crete, Thracia, Macedonia, Thessalia, and Achaia.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Image

[Eccl. xvii. 3.] IMAGE, or representation of any thing. God created man after his own image; that is to say, he created him as another self upon earth, a kind of Demi-God in the world, to exercise a dominion in it subordinate to his. Otherwise, he created him after his image, wise, immortal, good, just, provident, knowing, &c. Lastly, God imprinted his image in man, his holiness, virtue, wisdom. He created man, and gave him a body and reasonable soul; as in after ages his word, his wisdom, was to assume the nature of man; his body and soul. Adam by [Tertull. de resurr. carnis, c. 5. Col. iii. 9, 10. & Rom. viii. 29.] his sin disfigured the image of God, he forfeited the gifts of grace and immortality; but Jesus Christ, hath formed a-new in us this image of his grace: or rather, we being prevented and assisted by him, renew in ourselves the image of God, which was defaced by sin, As we have born the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.

[Ex. xx. 4.] God forbids the Hebrews to make any image or representation of what is in heaven, or earth, or in the waters, with an intention to worship it. But he does not forbid to make images or figures only to represent, instruct, or adorn. Thus Moses and Solomon made Cherubims over the ark, and in the tabernacle. Moses made a brazen Serpent; Solomon cast Lions and Oxen, and placed them in the Temple. And the Christian Church permits the use of images, mages, provided they are used only in such a relative worship , whereby we honour the Saints, whose resemblance they bear; and believe that there is no virtue or any thing divine in them; address no prayers to them, or place any confidence in them.

Besides the common acceptation of the word Image, whereby a bare representation is meant of something real, for example, of an horse, an ox, a star, &c. the representation whereof with a design of worshipping them, is forbidden by the law; this name is farther understood in several other senses: for example; [Ps. xxxix. 7.] In imagine pertransit homo: Man passes away like a phantom: And Imaginem ipsorum [Ps. lxxiii. 20.] ad nihilum rediges, Thou shalt reduce their image, their shadow, their figure, thou shalt reduce them to nothing. The life of man is as it were smoke, a shadow, a vain representation: it passes away, it is dispersed, it vanishes like a cloud. Job, or rather his [Job v. 16.] friend Eliphaz says, that at midnight an image, a phantom, appeared to him, he did not know it; but he heard as it were a voice, or as it were the murmur of a gentle and light wind. Stetit imago coram oculis meis, & vocem quasi auræ lenis audivi.

Imago is sometimes taken in a contrary sense, for a lively and real representation, in opposition to a transient image, a phantom, something that appears in a dream, and has no consistency or reality: for example; The [Hebr. x. 1.] law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things. It represented these good things in a light and superficial manner, like the shadows which appear by night, and have nothing solid and permanent; whereas the Gospel represents the same good things under a lively, solid, firm, stable and real figure; the law was but a shadow, whereof the Gospel is the reality and substance.

Thus in St. Paul's epistles, Jesus Christ [2 Cor. iv. 4. Col. i. 15.] is called the image of the Father: Evangelium gloriæ Christi, quæ est imago Dei. And again, who is the image of the invisible God, the first born of every creature. And in [Hebr. i. 3.] another place he calls him the brightness of his glory, the express image of the Father's substance. This without doubt is not a meer image and no more, a ray only, but a real and substantial image, of the same nature and substance with the Father; it is an emanation from the Father, an efflux of his light and substance.

S. Paul requires, that as we have born the image of the earthy, we should like*wise bear the image of the heavenly*. As we have born the image of sinful and offending Adam, as we have imitated him in his sin and disobedience, so we should endeavour to draw again upon our souls the features of the heavenly man Christ Jesus; his obedience, his humility, his patience, meekness, &c.

Image is taken often for a statue, figure, or idol: for example, Take good heed with yourselves, lest ye make you a graven image, the likeness of male or female, with an intention to adore them: and elsewhere, The Israelites went into the house of Baal, and brake in pieces his images. And the author of the book of Wisdom, speaking of the causes of Idolatry, says, that a father afflicted for the death of his son, made an image of him, to which he paid divine honour: and S. John in the Revelations, xiii. 14, 15. God permitted the beast to seduce men, and it commanded them to make an image of the beast, which became a living an animated image; and all they who shall refuse to adore the image of the beast shall be put to death. By this animated and living image of the beast, to which the inhabitants of the Earth pay their worship and adorations, the Heathen Idols are meant, which Julian the Apostate in some sort brought to life, by reviving and restoring the worship of them, which had been dead and abolished over almost the whole Empire.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Immer

IMMER, head of the family of Priests, which was assigned the sixteenth place in the service of the Temple. The descendants of [12. & xxiv. 13. Ezra ii. 37.] Immer returned from Babylon in number fifteen hundred and two.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Imposition of Hands

IMPOSITION OF HANDS. Imposition of hands is understood in different ways both in the Old and New Testament. 1. It is often taken for ordination and the consecration of Priests, and sacred Ministers, [xiii. 3.] as well among the Jews as Christians.

It is sometimes also made use of to signify the establishment of Judges and Magistrates, on whom it was usual to lay hands, when they were intrusted with these employments. Jacob laid his hands on [Chronic.] Ephrain and Manasseh, when he gave them his last blessing.

The high Priest stretched out his hands to the people, as often as he recited the solemn form of blessing. The Israelites who presented sin-offerings at the Tabernacle, confessed their sins, while they laid their hands upon them. Witnesses laid [Ex.xxix. 19. Dan. xiii. 34.] their hands upon the head of the accused person, as it were to signify that they charged upon him the guilt of his Blood, and freed [Mark x. 16. Acts viii. 17. xix. 6.] themselves from it. Our Saviour laid his hands upon the Children that were presented to him, and blessed them. We find imposition of hands to be made use of likewise in confirmation. The Apostles confer'd the Holy Ghost on those who were baptized, by laying their hands upon them.

The Israelites put their hands upon the Levites, when they offered them to the Lord, in order to be consecrated to his service, Lev. viii. 10, 12.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Impostors

IMPOSTORS, false Messiahs, false prophets, seducers, hypocrites, wolves that come to us in sheeps cloathing, to seduce us. Moses precautions the Hebrews against impostors [Deut. xiii. 1, 2, &c.] and false prophets, saying, If there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, and the sign or the wonder come to pass, whereof he spake unto thee; saying, Let us go after other gods, which thou hast not known, and let us serve them; thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams, but shalt put him to death; because he hath spoken to turn you away from the Lord your God, &c. And in another [Deut. xviii. 10,11,20, 21.] passage, There shall not be found among you that useth divination, or an inchanter, or a necromancer; for all that do these things are an abomination to the Lord—— The prophet which shall presume to speak a word in my name, which I have not commanded him to speak, or that shall speak in the name of other Gods, even that prophet shall die.

These laws were very ill observed in Israel: no nation ever more abounded in Impostors than that of the Hebrews. This volatile, inconstant, and superstitious people was almost always the Dupe of such as had a mind to impose upon them, particularly in matters of religion. Their propensity to idolatry, and their love of novelty, disposed them to adopt all the abominations and impieties of their neighbours. The most famous, as well as eldest impostor that appeared among them with reputation, was Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who having advanced himself to the throne of Israel by rebellion against his lawful Prince, believed he could not maintain himself there, without changing the ancient religion, and introducing the worship of the golden calves in his dominions.

From that time false prophets and impostors were frequent in the land. Queen Jezabel supported four hundred and fifty [1 Kings xviii. 19.] prophets of Baal, and four hundred prophets of Astarte the Goddess of the groves. King Ahab being upon the point of marching with Jehoshaphat king of Judah against Ramoth- [1 Kings xxii. 6,7,8.] Gilead, consulted his four hundred [Is. ix. 14, 15.] prophets concerning the success of his expedition: they all promised him victory, and a happy return. Micaiah the son of Imlah was the only one who contradicted them, and foretold, that the King would lose his life in this journey. Isaiah speaks of false prophets, who reported lies to those who consulted them. Propheta docens mendacium. And Jeremiah complains of certain prophets, who prophesied [Jer. xi. 8.] in the name of Baal, and worshipped idols. Prophetæ prophetaverunt in Baal, & idola secuti sunt; and that these prophets prophesied falsehoods, and were applauded by the priests. And in another place, that the prophets [Jer. v. 31. Jer. xiv. 14.] prophesied falsely in the name of God, who did not send them. The whole book of Jeremiah abounds with reproaches of the like nature, against those false prophets, who spoke as they were prompted by their own spirit: Prophetant de corde suo.

Ezekiel inveighs against them with still more vehemence: Say unto the prophets who [23, 24.] prophesy out of their own hearts, hear ye the word of the Lord, Thus saith the Lord God, wo unto the foolish prophets that follow their own spirit, and have seen nothing. O Israel, thy prophets are like the foxes in the deserts——Mine hand shall be upon the prophets that use vanity and devise lies. And elsewhere, the false prophets are like those who raise a wall without mortar, they devise lies; saying, Thus saith the Lord God, when the Lord hath not spoken. Hosea speaks likewise of those mad prophets, who were a snare, and an occasion of falling to all those who hearkened to them. And Micah mentions those greedy and avaritious prophets who sold their prophesies for money, seduced the People, and declared enmity to all those who did not fill their mouths. Zephaniah speaks of them, not at all more to advantage: Her prophets are light and treacherous persons. And Zachary, in that day the prophets shall be ashamed every one of his vision, when he hath prophesied; neither shall they wear a rough garment to deceive.

This is a tradition and successive series of impostors and false prophets in Judah and Israel, till after the captivity of Babylon. Under the New Testament Jesus Christ foretold, that false prophets should come, who should seduce many persons. There shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that if it were possible, they should deceive the very elect. These predictions did not continue long without the visible effect of them. Simon the magician gave out in Samaria, soon after the death of our Saviour, that he was the great power of God. Josephus mentions several impostors who appeared about the same time. One Theudas or Theodas [Joseph. Antiq. l. xx. c. 2.] odas set up in Judea, in the time of Cuspius Fadus Governor of this province, about the year of J. C. or of the vulgar Æra 45. He gave himself out to be a prophet, and deceived many Jews, persuading them to forsake their fortunes and follow him as far as Jordan, promising them that they should pass it dry-shod, as Joshua had done formerly. But he was taken and killed with many of those who followed him.

Another Theudas, mentioned by Gamaliel in the Acts of the Apostles, appeared some time before our Saviour's death: about four hundred men joined him; but he was killed, and all they who followed him were dispersed. Ten years after an Egyptian, by religion a Jew, persuaded [Joseph. l. xx. c. 6.] the people to follow him to the mount of Olives, assuring them that he would make the walls of Jerusalem fall before them, and introduce them into the city through the [Id. l. ii. de bello, c. 12.] breach. Another impostor drew a great number of people into the wilderness, promising them a general deliverance from all evils. Judas the Galilean, author of the sect of the Herodians, asserted, that the Jews ought to acknowledge none but God for their master; and that they could not [Joseph. Antiq. l. xviii. c. 1.] pay tribute to Cesar, without being Cowards, and offending God. His sons inherited his spirit, and in the war with the Romans encouraged very much the spirit of rebellion in their countrymen the Jews. When this war was ended, one Jonathan, by trade [Joseph. de bello, l. vii. c. 31.] a weaver, appeared in the Cyrenaica, and seduced a great number of Jews by tricks and false miracles, with which he amazed them in the wilderness, whither he had drawn them. Catullus governor of Lybia Pentapolitana dispersed them, and from thence took an opportunity to plunder the richest Jews of that country. But the most famous of all the Impostors, who appeared after the destruction of the Temple, was Barchochebas, who stir'd up an insurrection of the Jews against the emperor Adrian, and brought upon them the forces of the Empire, which reduced them to a condition, from which they were never able to recover. See above, Barchochebas. I take no notice here of the false Messiahs who have appeared at several times among the Jews. See the title Messiah.

The state of oppression to which the Jews are reduced in almost all countries in the world, and the expectation of the Messiah, who, they presume, will deliver them out of all their calamities, makes them more credulous, more liable to be deceived by the promises of Impostors, and more susceptible of the hopes, which these inspire them with of recovering their liberty. As in the age wherein our Saviour manifested himself, the whole east was in expectation of the Messiah, and the deliverer so long waited for, and so often foretold; so this age produced more Impostors than any other, because of the ready admission they were sure to find in the hearts of people prepossessed, and easy to be persuaded. They who were thought to be the most crafty of them, would have made this a handle to reject even Jesus Christ, by confounding him with the seducers, who had appeared, and were from day to day appearing in their nation. This deceiver, they cried, said, that in three days he would rise again. Our Saviour's Apostles were treated in the same manner by the obstinate Jews, As deceivers and yet true, &c.

But what is scarce credible, there have been people among Christians, and that too after so many wonders wrought by Jesus Christ, after so many persecutions endured by the Church, after so many books written by Infidels and Hereticks, which have been destroyed and utterly confuted by Catholick writers, it is scarce credible, I say, that after this, there should be people who could either say or write, that Moses, Jesus Christ, and Mahomet were three eminent Impostors. All the world talks of a famous book published, as they say, under the Title, De tribus impostoribus Mose, Christo & Mahomet. Some maintain it to be a spurious work, and that no such was ever published; others are positive that such an one is in being, and there are some who have boasted that they have seen it. Alberic a Monk of the Cistertian order, in the Diocess of Chalons on the Marne, who lived in the middle of the thirteenth Century, informs us in his Chronicle under the year 1339, that seventeen cases were offered against the Emperor Frederick II. among which one was against the Christian Religion, and was mentioned by the Pope in his Books to the Archbishop of Sens, and this is, that there have been three Impostors in the world, namely, Moses, Jesus Christ, and Mahomet; Tres fuerunt Baratores, seu Guillatores, in mundo, Moyses, Christus, & Mahometes. Alberic is an author contemporary with Frederick II. and his Chronicle is very well esteemed.

But if what is said by John Bayon, a Dominican, who wrote the history of the Abby of Moyenmoutier, and lived in the fourteenth Century, be true, the Emperor Frederick is not the first who uttered this blasphemy. This historian's account of the matter is as follows: I thought, says he, that I was obliged to insert in this work what I learnt while I was at Paris, from the report of people of veracity and probity: about the year one thousand twenty two, there was a Doctor of Divinity at Paris, very conceited of his knowledge, and very much abounding with vanity and ostentation, who being one day in his pulpit, taught publickly, that three Impostors, namely, Mahomet, Moses, and Jesus Christ, had deceived all the world. Tres homines, videlicet Mahometes, Moyses & Christus, totum ad se trahentes deceperunt mundum. But he was struck immediately by the hand of God, and from that moment forgot all that he had known, and lost the use of Speech.

Peter de Vignes, Secretary and Chancellor to the Emperor Frederick II. confesses, that the Emperor his master was accused of speaking this blasphemy. The Pope in a circular letter adressed to all the princes and [Petrus de Vineis, epist. p. 211. edit. Schardii.] prelates,a advances this accusation against Frederick, and says, that proof should be made of it in proper time and places. *Matthew Paris*b relates also what was said of this blasphemy concerning the three Impostors; [a Apud Rainold. An. 1239. n. 12. the letter bears date the 1st of July, in this Year. b pag. 408. c Apud Rainold. An. 1239. n. 28.] but he speaks of it as a calumny imputed to Frederick by his enemies. The author of the life of Gregory IX.c who was a contemporary, affirms, that the Emperor was led into this mistake by his conversation with the Greeks and Arabians, who by their knowledge of the stars, promised him the universal Monarchy; that he believed himself to be a God under the appearance of a man; that Mankind had been seduced by three Impostors, but for his part he was to destroy a fourth Imposture, tolerated by the ignorance of people, which was the authority of the Pope.

Frederick did not suffer these accusations to pass unanswered. He wrote to the Cardinals [Pet. de Vineis, l. 1. p. 32.] to make his apology, as to the three Impostors; he professed publickly his belief, which was correct and catholick as to the Divinity of Jesus Christ, and the Mystery of the Incarnation, and spoke of Moses and Mahomet as a Christian should do.

Here is an accusation very solemnly formed against the Emperor, and positively contradicted by the accused. Hitherto the question is only about words; but it is affirmed by some, that there is a book really in being, intitled, of the three Impostors, &c. Some suppose Muret to be the Author of it, others Bernardin Ochinus, others Peter Aretin, others Poggbius the Florentine, others Postellus a learned Fanatick of the sixteenth century; others Arnaud de Villeneuve[1], others the Emperor Frederick I. surnamed Barberossa,[2] and others Frederick II.

[Hist. de l' Heres. l. 2. c. 16.] Florimond de Raymond says, that he remembers, when he was a child, to have seen a copy of this famous book in the college of Presle, in the hands of Ramus. Father Mersennus speaks of it in his Comment upon Genesis, p. 1830. M. Deshouges Dean of the advocates belonging to the Great Council in Paris, says, in a note under his own hand, which I have read, that he was informd by one of his friends, who was a learned man, that he had seen this detestable book in the private library of one of the most powerful princes in Germany; but, however, under a different title from that De tribus Impostoribus. He adds, that another of his friends, whom he describes only by these three Letters, A. A. L. and with whose Probity and love of Truth he was very well acquainted, assured him, that he found this famous piece in a Bookseller's shop at Genoa, in 1666, and that he had bought it if he had not been prevented by another who purchased it. The late M. Alliot, heretofore first Physician to his Royal Highness of Lorrain, told me, that this Book had formerly been put into his hands, but that he would not read it. Christian Kortholt, in the preface to a book composed by him, under the title of De tribus Impostoribus, which was printed at Kiel in 1680, and at Hamburg in 1700, cites some persons, who said they had seen that which we are here speaking of: but for Kortholt's, it has not the least regard to Moses, Jesus Christ, and Mahomet; but the three Impostors attacked by him, are Edward Herbert, Thomas Hobbs, and Benedict Spinoza. He says that M. Bayle wrote to him on the 7th of April 1699, that the famous book concerning the three Impostors was not in Baldus's library at Rotterdam; and he believes, that all they who boast that they had seen it, are very much to be suspected, either for want of honesty or exactness. Another author has given the same title to a work composed against three Catholick writers of the best reputation. This author is M. Morin, and his book is intitled Vincentii Panurgi Epistola de tribus Impostoribus ad Clariss. Vir. Joan. Baptistam Morinum D. M. atque Regiæ Mathesèos Professorem, Parisiis 1654. The three pretended Impostors whom he attacks are, Gassendi, Nevreus, and Bernier. Gibert Voet, in his dispute about Atheism, says, that in 1614, or 1615, one Nactegaël was driven from the Hague, and sent into banishment, for uttering some impieties concerning the three Impostors. M. de la Monnoye is believed to have made a Dissertation on this matter. Some say[3], that there is still another piece with this title, Of the three Impostors; but these three Impostors are Z*abathai Tzevi, Mahomet Bey* (otherwise John Cigala) and Padre Ottomano.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

See Naudé's Apol. des grands Hommes accusez de magie, p. 267, 268.
Translators' note. Grot. appendic. tract. de Antichristo.
See Basnage's Hist. des Juifs, t. 5. l. 7. c. 23. at the end; or t. 3. l. 5. c. 18. p. 350, &c. of the Paris Edition.

Imprecations

IMPRECATIONS. The Latin word Imprecor is sometimes taken in a good sense to signify wishing well; the making vows for the advantage of any one: for example, Rebekah's [Gen. xxiv. 60.] brethren suffered her to go with Eliezer, in order to marry Isaac, wishing her all sort of prosperity: Imprecantes prospera sorori. And the young King Joash having been placed upon the throne of Judah by Jehoiada the High Priest, the diadem and book of the law were put upon his head, and they saluted him with joyful acclamations, saying, God save the King: Imprecatiq; sunt ei, atque dixerunt, Vivat [2 Chr. xxiii. 11.] Rex.

But generally the word Imprecation, in Latin and in other languages, signifies to make imprecations, to devote any one to misfortunes. Thus the goat Azazel was loaded with Imprecations [Lev. xvi. 21.] and curses, and sent into the wilderness to be there thrown down a precipice. Joshua having taken and destroyed the town of Jericho, pronounced Imprecations against whosoever should rebuild it: Imprecatus est Josue dicens: maledictus vir coram Domino, qui suscitaverit, & ædificaverit civitatem Jericho. Moses commands, that if a woman is suspected of infidelity to her husband, she shall be obliged to drink the waters of jealousy, upon which the priest shall pronounce Imprecations and Curses. He moreover requires, that when the Hebrews entred the promised land, they should dispose themselves [Numb. v. 18,19, 20. Deut xi. 28, 29.] between the two mountains Ebal and Gerizim, and upon the top of mount Ebal should pronounce imprecations and curses against those who should violate the Law of God, and blessings upon the top of Gerizim upon those who should observe it.

We have spoken heretofore of the Imprecations and Devoting used by the ancients against their enemies, or against besieged cities. See the article Balaam and Devotings.

[Ex. x. 10.] The Hebrews frequently expressed Imprecations in terms signifying the very contrary of that they meant; for example, Pharaoh says to Moses and Aaron: Let the Lord be so with you, as I will let you go, &c. the quite contrary is intended: God forbid that I should let you go. And David, instead of pronouncing an Imprecation upon himself, uses these words; So and [1 Sam. xxv. 22.] more also do God unto the enemies of David, if I leave of all that pertain to him by the morning light any that pisseth against the wall. May God treat the enemies of David with rigour; instead of saying, may God treat me with all his severity. And elsewhere, Naboth is accused of having blessed God and the King; that is to say, of having [1 Kings xxi. 10.] blasphemed against God and the King. And Job offered burnt offerings to the Lord, to make expiation for his sons, lest they should have blessed God; that is to say, on the contrary, lest they should have uttered any word contrary to the respect that is due to him. And [Job. i. 5. Job. ii. 5.] again, Satan says unto the Lord, Touch his bone and his flesh, and thou wilt see that he will bless thee to thy face; that is to say, that he will fly out into passion and curse thee.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Impure

IMPURE, legal Impurity. There were several sorts of Impurity contracted under the law of [Numb. xix. 11,14. Levit. xi. 24. Lev. xi. 24, 43.] Moses. Some were voluntary, as the touching of a dead body, or of any animal that died of itself, or of any creeping things, or unclean creature; or the touching things holy by one who was not clean, or was not a Priest; or the touching one who had a leprosy, one who had a gonorrhea, or was polluted by a dead carcase; a woman who had newly lain in, or was in the condition which her sex is every month liable to, or was incommoded with an extraordinary issue of blood. Sometimes these Impurities were involuntary; as when any one, without thinking of it, was in the chamber of a person that lay dead, or through inadvertence touched bones, or a sepulchre, or any of those polluted things, which we have been speaking of, or when either by night or day they suffered any involuntary pollution, or fell into such diseases as pollute, as the leprosy, gonorrhea, or lastly the use of marriage, [Deut. xxii. 10. Lev. xv. 16. Lev. xiii. 14. Lev. xii. 2,3,4,5. Lev. xvi. 19. Lev. xv. 2, 4. Lev. xv. 25. Numb. v. 2. xix. 11, 12, 20. Lev. xv. 16, 18.] whether lawful or unlawful, rendred those of both sexes unclean, who practised it.

The beds, clothes, moveables, and pots, which had touched any thing unclean, contracted likewise a sort of pollution, and often communicated it to others. We have spoken of unclean creatures under the article Animals. These legal pollutions were generally purified by bathing, and lasted no longer than the evening. The person polluted, plunged over head and ears into the water, and either had his clothes on when he did so, or washed himself and his clothes separately. Other pollutions continued seven days; as that, for example, which was contracted by touching a dead body. That of women in their monthly courses lasted till this was over with them. Other instances of uncleanness there were, which lasted forty or fifty days, as that of women who have lately been delivered. They were unclean forty days after the birth of a boy, and fifty after the birth of a girl. Others, again, lasted till the person was cured; as that of Lepers, and persons incommoded with a gonorrhea. Lastly there were certain diseases which shut people out from the commerce of the world; such as the Leprosy: while others excluded only from the [involuntary] use of things holy; such as the involuntary touching of an unclean creature, [See Lev. xxii. 4.] the use of Marriage, &c. Others did not exclude people from the commerce of life, but only separated the person from his relations in his own house, so that he could come no nearer them than to such a particular distance; as women who had newly lain in, or were under the infirmities common to their sex, whosoever touched them became impure for the whole day until the evening.

Many of these pollutions were purified, as we have said, by bathing. Others were expiated by sacrifices; others by a certain water, or lye, made with the ashes of a red heifer, which was sacrificed upon the great [Numb. xix. 10, 11, 12, &c.] day of Expiation. When the Leper was cured of his leprosy, he went to the Temple, and there offered a sacrifice of two birds, one whereof was killed, the other [Lev. xiv. 1, 2, 3, &c.] set at liberty. He who had been polluted by touching a dead body, or by being present at funerals, was to be purified with the water of expiation, whereof we have been speaking; and this upon pain of death. That man who should come near a woman while her usual infirmities were upon her, was condemned to death; and [Lev. xx. 18.] the woman also, if the matter were brought to a hearing before the Judge. The woman who had been delivered of a boy or a girl came to the Tabernacle after the prescribed time, and there offered a turtle and a lamb for her expiation; or if she were poor, two turtles, or two young pigeons.

The Impurities of this kind, which the Law of Moses hath expressed[1] with so much accuracy and care, were only figures of other more important Impurities, which were likewise carefully described by it; such as the sins and iniquities committed against God, or faults committed against our neighbour. The Saints and Prophets of the Old Testament have very well discovered this difference; and our Saviour in the Gospel has strongly inculcated, that they are not outward and corporeal pollutions, which render us unacceptable to God, but such inward pollutions as infect the soul, and are violations of Justice, Truth, and Charity.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. The several regulations prescribed by Moses relating to Impurity, are very numerous and perplexing; but the Rabbins have multiplied them to an enormous degree, and thereby have made the Law a still more insupportable burden. A good part of the Mishnah, is wholly taken up in resolving cases of conscience which may arise on this subject. See Mishnah ,סדר טהרותOrdo Puritatum.

Imri (I)

I. IMRI, the son of Omri, father of [1 Chr. ix. 4.] Ammihud.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Imri (II)

II. IMRI, the father of Zaccer in the [Nehem. iii. 2.] time of Nehemiah.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Incampments

INCAMPMENTS, of the Israelites in the wilderness. 1. Rameses; 2. Succoth; 3. Etham; 4. Pihahiroth; 5. Baal-zephon; 6. Near the Red Sea, after their passage; 7. In the wilderness of Sur; 8. Marah; 9. Elim; 10. Near the Red Sea; 11. In the wilderness of Sin; 12. Dophkah; 13. Alush; 14. Rephidim; 15. Mount Horeb; 16. Sinah; 17. Tabera, or burning; 18. The Graves of Lust; 19. Kadesh-barnea; 20. Hazeroth; 21. Rithmah; 22. Rimmon-parez; 23. Libnah; 24. Rissah; 25. Kehelathah; 26. Shapher; 27. Adar or Haradah; 28. Makheloth; 29. Taheth; 30. Tarah; 31. Mithcah; 32. Hashminah; 33. Moseroth, (the same, perhaps, as Hazeroth;) 34. Bene-jaakan; 35. Horchagidgad; 36. Jotbathah, (the same, perhaps, as the Graves of Lust;) 37. Ebronah; 38. Elath; 39. Ezion-gaber; 40. Mozeroth, or Mount Hor; 41. Zalmonah; 42. Tunon; 43. Oboth; 44. Jjeabarim; 45. Zared; 46. Mothen; 47. Nahaliel; 48. Bamoth-Arnon; 49. Dibon -gad; 50. Almon-Diblathaim. We shall not stay here to fix the situation of all these places, nor tell what happened in each of them; because we shall speak of them in the several articles under which we shall particularly reduce them.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Incendium

[Numb. xi. 3. Deut. ix. 22. תבערה Tabiera.] INCENDIUM. The name of Incendium or Incensio, in Hebrew, Taberah, was given to the incampment whither the Hebrews came after they had decamped from Sinai. This place was so called because God, being provoked by the murmurs of the Israelites, who complained that they had no flesh to eat, sent a fire among them, which consumed them that were in the uttermost parts of the Camp, and destroyed a great number of the Israelites.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Incense

INCENSE, Censers. Incense is an aromatick and odoriferous gum. It issues out of a tree, surnamed by the antients Thurifera, the leaves whereof are like those of a pear-tree, according to Theophrastus. They make incisions in it in the dog-days, in order to draw out the gum. Male Incense is the best; it is round, white, fat within, and kindles into a flame as soon as it is put upon the fire. It is likewise called Oliban. Female Incense is soft, more gummy, and less agreeable to the smell than the other. That of Saba was the best, and most esteemed by the ancients; they speak of it with great approbation.

[Virgil. Georg. 1. & 2. Vide & Æneid. 1. Theophrast. Hist. Plant. l. 9. c. 4. & alii passim.] India mittit ebur, molles sua thura Sabæi.

To offer incense was an office peculiar to the Priests; they entered twice every day into the Holy, namely, morning and evening, to burn Incense there. Upon the great day of Expiation, the High Priest took up with a spoon Incense or Perfume pounded, and ready to be put into the Censer, and threw it upon the fire the moment he went into the Sanctuary; that so the smoke which rose from the Censer, might prevent his looking with too much curiosity on the Ark and Mercy-seat: God threatens him with death upon failing to perform this [Numb. xvi. 13.] ceremony. The Levites were not to touch the Censers; and we know what a terrible punishment Corah, Dathan, and Abiram suffered, for imprudently arrogating to themselves this honour. The Censers of the ancient [Ibid. 31, 32, 33. Rev. v. 8.] Hebrews were very different from those made use of at this day; they did not hang by great chains; they were a sort of chafingdishes, or perfuming-pans, with, or even without, handles; which the High Priest placed upon the Altar of Incense, or carried into the Sanctuary. S. John in the Revelations, speaking of the Censers held by the four Beasts and four and twenty Elders, calls them by the name of dishes only, or gold cups full of Incense; Phialas aureas plenas odoramentorum: which give us an idea of Censers very different from those used at present. In the medals of Simon Maccabæus, we see smoking Censers like a cup, or a chalice with a foot to it. See the Medals which we have taken care to have engraved at the end of this Dictionary.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Incense

INCENSE, incensum, sometimes signifies in Scripture the sacrifices and fat of victims which were offered: as in this passage, Aaron [1 Chr. vi. 49,] and his Sons burnt Incense upon the Altar of burnt offerings and on the Altar of Incense. We know that no Incense was offered on the Altar of burnt-offerings; but that victims were burnt thereupon as an odour agreeable to the Lord.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Incest

INCEST, an unlawful Conjunction of persons related within the degrees prohibited by the laws of God and the Church. By Incest is meant rather the crime committed by this Conjunction, than the Conjunction itself; which at certain times and in certain cases is not looked upon to be criminal: for in the beginning of the world, and again long after the deluge, marriages between brothers and sisters, aunts and nephews, and cousin germans were allowed. The sons of Adam and Eve could marry no otherwise; no more than the sons and daughters of Noah's children, for a certain time. In the time of Abraham and Isaac, these Marriages were still permitted, and among the Persians much later; since it is said to be esteemed neither criminal nor ignominious, among the remains of the old Persians, even at this day.

There are some Authors who believe, that Marriages between brothers and sisters, and other near relations, were permitted, or at least tolerated, till the time of the Mosaick Law; that the first who prohibited [Lev. xviii. 24, 25.] them among the Hebrews was their Legislator; that among other people they were allowed even after him. Others hold the contrary; and it is hard to prove either of these opinions, for want of historical monuments of those ancient times. What we know certainly is, that God detests these Alliances, and forbids his people to pollute themselves with any of these things, for in all these the nations were defiled, which he was to cast out before them. He declares, that he will punish the detestable sins of this land, which abhors its own inhabitants, and throws them up with loathsomness. He begins his ordinances, on the subject of Incests, and other unlawful Conjunctions, with these words: Ye shall not do according to the customs of the land of Egypt, wherein ye dwelt; ye shall not conduct yourselves according to the manners of the land of Canaan, whither I am bringing you. Ye shall observe my ordinances and precepts. All which intimates, that Incests were common and authorized in Egypt and Palestine.

The Marriages prohibited by the law, are, 1. between the son and his mother, or between the father and his daughter; and between the son and his mother-in-law. 2. Between brothers and sisters, whether they are both by the same father and mother, or by one or the other of them only. 3. Between the grand-father and grand-mother, and their grand-son or grand-daughter. 4. Between the daughter of the father's wife, and the son of the same father, which returns almost to what has been said in the second article. 5. Between the aunt and the nephew; but the Jews pretend that it was lawful for the uncle to marry his neice. 6. Between the father-in-law and the motherin-law. 7. Between the brother-in-law and the sister-in-law. There is an exception to this law; which is, that when a man dies without children, his brother was obliged to marry his widow, in order to provide heirs for him. 8. The same man is forbidden to marry both the mother and the daughter; or the daughter of his wife's son, or the daughter of his daughter. 9. His wife's sister, as Jacob, who married both Rachel and Leah. But some translate the Hebrew thus; When thou marryest a wife, thou shalt not take a second: and many maintain, that this passage forbids Polygamy, which was only tolerated afterwards.

[* Druf. Junius. Hammond. Willet. Indæi Caraitæ.] All these degrees of relation, wherein it was not lawful to contract Marriage, are comprehended in the four following verses:

Nata, soror, neptis, matertera, fratris

& uxor,

Et patrui conjux, mater, privigna,

noverca,

Uxorique

Uxorisque soror, privigni nata, nurusque,

Atque soror patris, conjungi lege vetantur.

Moses forbids all these incestuous marriages, upon pain of being cut off: Whosoever [Lev. xviii. 19.] shall commit any of these abominations shall be cut off from among their people; that is to say, shall be put to death. This is plain, because adultery, and other crimes, which the Law in other places subjects to the penalty of death, are here made liable to the same punishment, of cutting off from among their people. And in the twentieth chapter, where some of these laws are repeated, these crimes are made capital: for example, If any one lieth [Lev. xx. 11, 19.] with his mother in law, let them be both punished with death. And he who having married the mother, marries afterwards the daughter shall be burnt alive with her. The generality of civilized people have looked upon incests as abominable crimes: some have punished them with death; and none but barbarians have allowed of them. St. Paul speaking of the incestuous man at Corinth, says, that he had committed a crime unknown and abhor'd even among the Heathens: It is reported commonly, that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not so much as named among the Gentiles, that one should have his father's wife.

Tamar's Incest with her father-in-law Judah is very well known: the Scripture does not condemn it; nay, it seems rather to approve it; and Judah, who designed to have her burnt for an Adultress, acknowledges at last that she was more righteous than he; because, he maliciously deferr'd marrying her to his youngest son Shelah, who should have wedded her according to the law, which obliges one brother to marry the widow of [Gen. xxxviii. 24, 26.] another, upon his dying without children.

Lot's Incest with his two daughters can be excused only by his ignorance, and the simplicity of his daughters, who believed, or pretended to believe, that after the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah there remained no more men upon the earth to marry them, and perpetuate the race of mankind. [Gen. xix. 31, &c.] The manner wherein they drew near unto their father, shews that they looked upon this action as unlawful, and that they did not at all question but their father would have abominated it, if they had not put it out of his power to have any knowledge of it, by making him drunk.

When Ammon the son of David offered to dishonour his sister Tamar in an incestuous manner, this Princess said to him, Brother, have a care how you commit this action, which would bring reproach upon me in Israel, and would make the world take you for a mad man; But speak unto the king our father, demand me for your wife, and he will not refuse your request. Tamar supposed therefore, that marriages between brothers and sisters were lawful. But whatever the opinion was of this young Princess, and whatever her intention might be, it is certain, that the Law expresly forbids these marriages; as has been just now shewn.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Inchantments

INCHANTMENTS. The law of God condemns Inchantments and Inchanters. It makes use of several terms to denote Inchantments. 1. Lackash, which signifies properly to speak with a low voice, like Magicians in their evocations, and magical operations. Moses uses the word Latim, secrets, when he speaks of the Inchantments wrought by Pharaoh's Magicians. The name of Caschap[1] is likewise imployed, whereby they are meant who practice Jugling, Legerdemain, Tricks and Witchery, in order to cheat peoples eyes and senses. The term Chabar, is also made use of, which signifies properly, to bind, assemble, associate, reunite; which takes place principally in those who charm Serpents, who tame them, and make them [Sociare, adunare.] gentle and sociable, which before were fierce, dangerous, and untractable.

We have examples of all these several ways of Inchanting. In the Scripture it is common for Magicians, Sorcerers, and Inchanters to speak in a low voice, and as it were whispering: they are called Ventriloqui, because they spoke as one would think from the bottom of their Stomachs; they affected secrecy, and mysterious ways, to conceal the vanity, ridiculous folly, or infamy of their pernicious art. Their pretended Magick consisted often in their cunning tricks only, in their nimbleness, or in some natural secrets, which ignorant people were not acquainted with; for this reason they affected obscurity and night, or would shew their skill only before the ignorant, or in the presence of mean persons, and were apprehensive of nothing so much as serious examination, broad daylight, and the presence of understanding people.

As to the Inchantments practised by Pharaoh's Magicians, in order to imitate all the miracles which were wrought by Moses, it must be said, either that they were mere witchcraft, and illusion, whereby they cheated the eyes of the spectators[2]; or that if they performed such miracles, and produced real changes of their rods, of the waters of the Nile, and every thing besides, they did this by the application of second causes to the production of effects, [Exod. viii. 18, 19. Deut. xiii. 12, &c.] which depend originally and essentially on the power of God, and by giving certain forms to, or impressing certain motions on a created substance a; and as these impressions, changes, and motions were above the known power of nature, they were thought to be miraculous. But God never permits miracles produced by evil spirits to be such as might necessarily induce us to fall into errors; for either he will set limits to their power, as he did to Pharaoh's Magicians, who being unable to produce Flies, were obliged to acknowledge the finger of God to be concerned in what Moses did; or they will discover [Pindar Pyth. Ode 4.] themselves by their bad doctrine, their impiety, or the irregularity of their conduct, which are the marks described by Moses for discerning a false from a true Prophet: If there ariseth among you a prophet or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, and the sign or the wonder come to pass, whereof he spake unto thee saying, let us go after other gods and serve them. Thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that Prophet; for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether you love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, [Ps. lviii. 5.] &c.

The Inchantments of serpents, the cure of wounds by charms, the metamorphoses mentioned by St. Austin and Apuleius, of a man into an ass, a camel, or any other creature, were common among the ancients. The Psalmist speaks of the serpent or deaf asp that stoppeth her ears, lest she should hear the voice of the charmers, charming wisely, with art, industry and cunning; the Hebrew literally runs thus, The voice of those who speak low, and of those who make use of charms with skill; or the voice of him who tameth, who softneth the serpents. Jeremiah, on the [Jer. viii. 17. Eccl. x. 11.] part of God, threatneth the Jews, and says to them, Behold, I will send serpents among you, which will not be charmed: And Ecclesiastes, A babbler is like those serpents against [Job xl. 25.] which charms have no power. Job likewise speaks of Inchanters by whose power serpents were burst asunder, Shall the Inchanter cause the Leviathan to burst? And Ecclesiasticus, Who will pity a charmer that [Ecclus. xii. 13.] is bitten with a serpent?

[Aug. de Genesi ad litter. l. xix. 28.] St. Austin confesses that the Marsians, or people of Italy, had formerly the secret of inchanting serpents: Any one would say, that serpents understood the language of this people, so obedient do we see them to their orders: as soon as the Marsian has done speaking they come out of their holes. The charmers are often satisfied with driving serpents from some certain Canton.

Primum quas valli spatium comprendit [Lucan. Pharsal. l. 9. ver. 913.] arenas, Expurgat cantu, verbisq; fugacibus angues.

Sometimes they made them burst:

Vipereas rumpo verbis & carmine fauces.

[Ovid Metamorph. fab. 2. de Medea.] At other times they benumb'd them, lulled them asleep, lamed them, and took away their fierceness:

[Virg. Æneid. 7. Nearch. apud Strabon. l. 15.] Spargere qui somnos cantuq; manuq; solebat.

Origen[3] and Eusebius[4] speak of the charming serpents, as a thing in their time very common in Palestine. Nearchus, who followed Alexander the Great in his expeditions, says, that the Indians scarce make use of any other remedies against the biting of serpents besides Inchantments, and that there are some who travel up and down the country professing this art, and making a livelihood of it. The Psylli and the Marsi not only cured the wounds by sucking them, but sold magical plates, which were to serve as preservatives against the biting of serpents.

[Arnob. l. 2.] To charm diseases, to stop the blood by Inchantments, to cure the bitings of serpents, to charm the gout, and sprains, are things very common in antiquity. Pindar affirms, that Chiron the Centaur cured all sorts of diseases by his charms; and that Æsculapius cured all sorts of fevers, ulcers, wounds and pains, by gentle charms, by potions, topical remedies, or incisions. Homer [Homer. Odyss. T.] assures us, that the blood which issued out of Ulysses's wound was stopp'd by using Inchantments. Cato produces certain verses [Cato de Re Rust. c. 160.] which were pronounced in order to heal a limb that was put out of joint.

Musick likewise and singing, which is a kind of charm and Inchantment, were sometimes made use of to cure certain diseases of the mind, or at least caused by the disorder of the mind, or the emotion of the passions. Galen says, that he had a great [Galen. de sanitate tuenda, l. 1. c. 8.] deal of experience in this particular, and that he could farther produce the authority of Æsculapius his countryman, who by the help of melody and musick relieved those whose constitutions were impaired by too great heat: and Plato says, that the midwives [Plato Theætet. p. 145.] of Athens had the secret of making the delivery of women more easy by certain charms and Inchantments.

The Hebrews, a people extremely superstitious, did not indeed carry so far the[5] use of charms and Inchantments in the cure of diseases, because they were restrained by their law which prohibited Magick and Inchantments, and because their Kings and Priests were equally vigilant in preventing these disorders, and stopping the course of them. Notwithstanding all this, we see some footsteps among them of this superstitious manner of curing diseases. Nay, there are some who pretend even to authorize it by the example of Moses, who ordered a brazen Serpent with wings to be set upon a pole, that they who had been bitten by Serpents, [Numb. xxi. 8.] called Saraph, might be healed by looking at it. We have already observed that the custom of inchanting serpents, and charming their bitings, was common among the Israelites, since Jeremiah threatens [Jer. viii. 17.] them in the name of God with sending Serpents among them, against whose biting the Inchanter should have no virtue; and in Ecclesiasticus it is said, that no one will pity a charmer bitten with a Serpent. Saul imployed musick and the sound of David's harp, to procure relief in his fits of melancholy, and while the Devil who tormented him had possession of him.

[Joseph. Antiq. l. 8. 6. 11.] Josephus assures us, that Solomon received from God the art of healing diseases, and the power of expelling Devils; that he composed charms or Inchantments against diseases, and exorcisms against Devils. He adds, that this way of healing was still in his time very much in use among the Jews; that there was a Jew whose name was Eleazer, master of this secret, who, with the help of a ring, wherein was set a certain root shewn by Solomon, had delivered several possessed persons in the presence of the Emperor Vespasian and his sons. King Hezekiah observing how much the brazen Serpent composed by Moses was abused, commanded it to be broke in pieces. He [2 Kings xviii. 4.] burnt likewise, as they say, the books of medicine whereof Solomon was thought to be the Author.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

2 Chr. xxxiii. 6. Jer. xxviii. 8. כשפיםPraestigiatores, Fascinatores, Circulatores.
Philo, l. 1. de vita Mos. Joseph. Antiq. l. 2. c. 5. Justin. q. ad Orthodox. quest. 22. Just. Dialog. cum Tryphone, & alii.
Origen. homil. xx. in Joshua
Euseb. in Psalm. liii.
Aug. qu. 21. in Exod, & l. 18. c. 18. de Civit. D. Thom. 1 parte qu. 104. art. 41. & 22. q. 178. Est. ad 2, &c.

Incredulous

INCREDULOUS. They are so called who refuse their assent to truths declared to them, and resist the evidence of such reasons as are produced for them, or do not attend to them. The Jews, to whom our Saviour preached the Gospel, were almost all incredulous. Many bad Christians are so, with respect to the mysteries of our Religion. Incredulity is not so much a defect of the understanding, as of the heart.

The Latin text of Scripture sometimes uses the word Incredibilis instead of Incredulus; for example, speaking of Lot's wife, who was changed into a pillar of Salt: Incredibilis animæ stans figmentum salis. And the Author of Ecclesiasticus, the Adultress does not believe in the law of the Lord: In lege Altissimi incredibilis fuit. And Baruch, Eramus incredibiles ad Dominum Deum nostrum. It is to be observed, that these three places here cited by me are not of St. Jerom's translation, but in the old vulgate.

[1 Pet. iii. 20.] St. Peter in his first Epistle speaks of the unbelieving Spirits, to whom Jesus Christ preached when he descended into Hell. His qui in carcere erant Spiritibus veniens predicavit, qui increduli fuerant aliquando, quando expectabant patientiam Dei in diebus Noe. These Incredulous Spirits are the Souls of men, who lived in Noah's time, and believed not this holy Patriarch's preaching. They were informed of Christ's coming, of his resurrection, and descending into Hell; but this did but increase their misery and despair: because as they dyed in incredulity and impenitency, they were not in a condition to be benefited by the Redemption which Jesus Christ went to publish in Hell, to those just persons who waited for his coming.

Some of the ancient Fathers[1] believed, that as our Saviour descended into Hell, he preached there to Infidels and Heathens, that if they continued incredulous, their damnation should be inexcusable; that some believed at his preaching and were converted; these by his means were admitted with him into Heaven: But this opinion has not many followers: the Church believes, that they who die in sin and impenitency are irrevocably damned. See the Commentators on this passage of St. Peter. We shall touch upon it further in the article Spirits.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Clem. Alex. l. 6. Strom. Epiphan. hæres. 46. Ambrosiaster in Ephes. iv. Nazianz. Orat. 42, sub finem. Nicet. not. in eundem. 2

India

[Bill. Orient. p. 447. Hend & Send p. 804.] INDIA. The Indies derive their name from the river Indus, one of the largest in that country; the limits whereof are to the west Persia; to the north Great Tartary; to the east China; and to the south the Indian Sea. The Indus and the Ganges are the principal rivers belonging to this country. The soil is very fruitful in Rice, Millet, Fruits, and Spices. Silk and Cotton are very common there: There are Elephants in this country, Camels, Monkeys, and green and red Parroquets; Mines of gold and silver, Diamonds and Rubies, &c. and there are very beautiful Pearls to be fished up along their coasts.

The Eastern people divide the Indies into two parts, called Hend and Send. The word Send signifies properly the river Indus, and all that country takes its name from hence, which lies on this side of it westward, and on the other side eastward of this river, all along the current of it, and principally towards the [Esth. i. 1.] mouth of it. The land of Hend is to the east of Send, and extends principally along the Ganges, to the east and west of this river, from the source to the mouth of it, having the gulf of Persia to the west, the Indian Ocean to the south, to the east large desarts, which separate it from China, and to the north the country of the Azaës or Tartars. The whole country of Hend and Send taken together, is divided into three parts. The first is called Giuzurat, and by us Guzerate, or Decan; this is the most western part: the second goes by the name of Manibar, which we call Malabar; it lies to the east and south of Guzerate: the third and most eastern part Mabar or Mebar, a word which signifies in Arabic a ferry or passage, because from thence people cross over to China. It lies all intirely beyond the gulf of Bengal, and the great city of Canacor or Cancanor is the capital of it.

The Ancients sometimes comprized Ethiopia under the name of the Indies, and the Persians still at this day call an Ethiopian a black Indian. And the histories of the eastern people inform us, that the Indians desired Bishops of Symon the Syrian, Jacobite Patriarch of Alexandria[1]; the Ethiopick Ocean of the Ancients, is our Indian Ocean.

There is mention of the Indies in some places of the Scripture. For example, in the book of Esther, it is said, that Abasuerus reigned from the Indies to Ethiopia; in the Hebrew from Hoddo to Cush. By the name Hoddo all Interpreters understand the Indies [מהדו ועד כוש Mehoddo vead Chusch.] ; and by Cush Ethiopia, or the country which separates Arabia from Egypt. It is certain that Darius the son of Hystaspes, whom we believe to be the same as Abasuerus, reigned over some Provinces in the Indies, properly so called; and that the [Herodot. l. 3. c. 94. Idem. l. 3. c. 97. Job. xxviii. 16. 1 Macc. vi. 37. לא תערך לה כתם] Ethiopians paid certain tributes to him, which are set down in Herodotus. Job likewise speaks of India. Non conferetur tinctis Indiæ coloribus. But the Hebrew reads, It cannot be valued with the Chethem of Ophir. Now the word Chethem is taken for Gold; see Ophir. In the Maccabees, the guide of an Elephant is called an Indian, because generally true Indians were chosen to conduct these creatures. The Indian sat upon the beast's neck, and with an iron rod, which was bent, pricked his ear, and made him turn which way he would. The best authors of antiquity do likewise commonly call the master of an Elephant, of what nation soever he may be, an Indian.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. From the time of Dioscorus, particularly after the Mahometans became masters of Egypt, there were always two Patriarchs of Alexandria, one a Greek Melchite, the other a Copt or Jacobite. See Fabric. B. Gr. t. viii. p. 597.

Iniquity

[Ex. xxviii. 38. Ex. xxxix. 7. Ps. xvii. 5.] INIQUITY. By this word not only sin is meant, but the punishment likewise of sin, and expiation of it; for example, it is said, Aaron will bear the iniquities of the people; he will atone for them. And in another place, The Lord visits the iniquities of the fathers upon the children. He sometimes causes the external effects of his wrath to fall upon the children of criminal parents.

[Lev. v. 1. xvii. 16. xix. 8, &c. Lev. xvi. 22. 1 Sam. xxv. 28.] To bear his Iniquity, to endure the punishment of it, to be obliged to expiate it. Azazel or the Scape-goat shall bear upon him all the iniquities of the people unto a land not inhabited. He shall be led to a precipice, and thrown down, in order to be an expiatory victim for the whole multitude. Aufer iniquitatem famulæ tuæ, said Abigail to David, let not the fault of my husband Nabal be imputed to me.

The man of Iniquity, the child of Iniquity, the hand of Iniquity, the workers of Iniquity, signify a wicked man, a wicked child, sinful men, a criminal behaviour, &c. Torrentes iniquitatis conturbaverunt me. In the Hebrew, The torrents of Belial made me afraid[1]. The wicked have fallen upon [Ps. xlix. 6.] me like a torrent. The Iniquity of my heels shall compass me about. The punishment of my iniquities, which pursue me gradually, will on a sudden lay hold on me. Shall the [Ps. xciv. 20. Acts i. 18.] throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief by a law? Is it possible, O my God, that thou shouldest be in concert with the throne of iniquity, with the Chaldeans, those proud and unjust rulers, who abuse their power that they may overwhelm us with calamities? Judas purchased a field with the reward of Iniquity; or rather he furnished the Chief Priests with wherewithal to purchase one, by restoring to them the reward of his treachery.

[Ex. xxviii. 38.] To bear Iniquity, to expiate it. The Priests bear the Iniquity of the people, they are charged with the expiation of it. Aaron shall bear the Iniquity of the holy things, which the children of Israel shall hallow in [Lev. x. 17.] all their holy gifts. Wherefore have ye not eaten of sin offerings in the holy place, seeing it is most holy; and God hath given it you to bear the Iniquity of the Congregation.

To bear Iniquity, speaking of common Israelites, signifies bearing the punishment of their faults, the being obliged to expiate them, or to be even chastised for them, according to the nature of the things, [Lev. v. 1.] and the judgment of the Priests or Judges. If a man is called upon to give testimony of any thing whereof he was a witness, [1 Sam. xv. 25.] and will not discover it, he shall bear his Iniquity; he shall be punished with death: for so bearing his Iniquity is generally explained. See Lev. xix. 8. xx. 17, 19, 20. xxiv. 15. Numb. ix. 13. xvi. 31, &c. It must be confessed however that sometimes To bear his Iniquity, particularly when the matter in question is something secret, or of less consequence, for the expiation whereof the Law ordains certain sacrifices, that to bear his Iniquity, then signifies no more than to expiate his sin, and offer the sacrifices prescribed by Moses. We know that sin and Iniquity are used in Scripture not only for the sin committed, but likewise for the punishment of sin, and for the victim which is offered as an atonement for it.

The bearing sin, is used likewise for the forgiving it, taking it away, for the absolution and pardon of it. Thus Saul says to Samuel, Nunc porta quæso peccatum meum, & revertere mecum: Bear my sin, excuse, forgive it, &c. And Jesus Christ in the Gospel [John. i. 29.] is called the Lamb of God, that beareth or taketh away the sins of the world; who expiates them by his death, who pardons them in those who repent of them. And in Isaiah, [If. liii. 4, 12.] Truly he hath born our sorrows. And again, he bore the sins of many, and made intercession for the transgressors.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

נהלי בליעל יבעתוני,In the Septuagint χείμαρροι ἀνομίας ἐξεταράξαν με. In the English version the Floods of the ungodly made me afraid: בליעלsignifying Nequitia, Nequam, quasi בלי ועיל says Buxtorf*, qui nihil prodest, qui nullius frugi & utilitatis est. and*

Innocens

INNOCENS, INNOCENT, INNOCENCY. The signification of this word is known sufficiently. The Hebrews made innocence to consist chiefly in an exemption from external faults committed contrary to the law; hence it is that they often join innocens with manibus: Innocens manibus & [Pf. xxiii. 4. Gen. xxxvii. 22. Pf. xxvi. 6. Joseph.] mundo corde. Manus vestras servate innocentes. I will wash my hands in innocency. And again Psalm lxxiii. 13. Then have I cleansed my heart in vain, and washed my hands in innocency. Josephus acknowledges no other sins besides those which are put in execution. Sins in thought, in his account, are not punished by God.

To be innocent, is used sometimes for being exempt from punishment. I will not [Jer. xlvi. 28. Jer. xlix. 12. נקח לא אנקר] treat you as one innocent: literally, I will not make thee innocent, I will chastise thee, but like a kind father. And in another place speaking to the Edomites, They who have not (so much) deserved to drink of the cup of my wrath, have tasted of it, et tu quasi innocens relinqueris? Non eris innocens, sed bibes. And Nahum, ch. i. ver. 3. Dominus mandans non faciet innocentiam. God is ready to exercise vengeance, he will make no one innocent: he will spare no one. And Moses Exod. xxxiv. 7. Nullus apud te per se innocens est. In the Hebrew. Thou shalt make no one innocent. No sin shall remain unpunished. Thou, O Lord, says the [Pf. xvii. 25.] Psalmist, cum viro innocente innocens eris. Thou treatest the just as just, the good as good; thou never doest confound the guilty with the innocent.

[Job xxvii. 5. Job ii. 3, 9.] Job being accused by his friends, declares that he will never renounce his innocency: Non recedam ab innocentia mea. I will suffer continually, and will not confess, that God punishes me for my sins. God tells Satan, that notwithstanding the evils which he had inflicted on him, he still retained his innocency. Adhuc retinens innocentiam. And Job's wife insults him in these words, Adhuc permanes in simplicitate tua? or innocentia tua according to the Hebrew. Thou continuest as firmly attached to thy duty, as submissive to the will of God, as before thy misfortunes.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Innocents

[Matt. ii. 16, 17.] INNOCENTS. By this name the Church calls those infants which were massacred by Herod's order at Bethlehem and within its liberties, from the age of two years old and under, with a design of including the new king of the Jews in this slaughter, whose birth he was informed of by the wise men, who came from the east. See the articles Herod the Great, and Magi. Herod concealing his wicked intentions, desired the Magi to search with care for the new king, and when they had found him, to come and give him an account of it. But they being warned by an angel in a dream, secretly retired out of Judea, and returned another way into their own country. Herod observing that he had been deceived by them, sent to Bethlehem[1], and throughout the liberties thereof, and commanded all the children to be killed there, from two years old and under, a bimatu & infra; according to the time, when, as the wise men told him, the star first appeared to them. The Greeks in their Menology, and the Ethiopians in their Liturgy, affirm, that the number of the children massacred at Bethlehem, and the places round about, amounted to fourteen thousand; which is not at all credible. But the worship of these Innocents is certainly very ancient in the Church, which has always looked upon them as the first fruits and bloom of the martyrs[2]. Their relicks are shewn in several places. The Latin Church celebrates their Festival upon the 28th of December, and the Greeks on the 29th.

It is very surprizing, that Josephus the historian should say nothing of this massacre. This makes people think, that the number of children, who were thus put to death, was not so large as the Greeks, Ethiopians, and Muscovites will have it. Some assert, that it was upon this occasion that Augustus declared, it was better to be Herod's hog than his son. Augustus being informed, says Macrobius, that Herod king of [Macrob. l. 2. c. 4. Saturnal.] the Jews had put to death his own son, among the children whom he had caused to be executed in Syria, said, that a man had better be this Prince's hog, than his son. It is probable enough that the Emperor might at the same time learn the death of the Innocents, and that of Antipater, whom his father Herod ordered to be dispatched five days before his own death; and that upon this occasion, he used the expression related by Macrobius. There was not above six weeks difference between the death of the Innocents and that of Antipater. We have spoken of the flight of Jesus Christ into Egypt in our Saviour's life, and in the article, Flight into Egypt. As to what S. Matthew says, that at the time when these Innocents were massacred, the accomplishment was seen of this prophecy by Jeremiah: A voice was heard from Ramah, &c. It is our opinion, that the [Jerem. xxxii. 15.] primary sense of this prophecy relates to the carrying away the ten tribes into captivity; and that S. Matthew accommodated it to the circumstances in question. See Ramah.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the world 4001, of J. C. 1. and three years before the vulgar Æra.
Vide Iren. l. 3. c. 18. Origen. in Psalm. 36. homil. 4. p. 457. Aug. de Lib. Arbit. l. 3. §. 68. Chrysost. in Matth. homil. 9, &c.

Inrolment

INROLMENT, made by Augustus, under Cirinus, or Cyrenius, Governor of Syria, Luke ii. 1, 2. See above the article Cyrenius.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Instruments of Musick

INSTRUMENTS of Musick. See hereafter the article Musick.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Intellectus

INTELLECTUS. This word, which signifies Understanding, Intelligence, is to be met with before several Psalms. For example, [Pf. xxxii. 1. לדוד משכיל Pf. xlii. 1. משכיל לבני קרח] Intellectus ipsi David; Intellectus filiis Core; or filiis Core ad Intellectum; Intellectus Asaph; Intellectus Ethan; Intellectus Emath, &c. The Hebrew, Maschil le David, signifies either that this Psalm is a moral and instructive song, or that it is profound, and requires a particular study, and application, to understand it[1]. The Hebrews think that the Psalms with this title are some of those which were explain'd at the same time that they were recited.

By Intellectus is sometimes understood good success, good fortune, happiness; because in Hebrew the word Shakal, which signifies Intellectus, signifies likewise prosperity and good success; for example, Initium [Pf. cx. 10. Ps. cxviii.] sapientiæ timor Domini; intellectus bonus omnibus facientibus eum. God heaps blessings upon those who fear him. And in another place, Appropinquet deprecatio mea in conspectu tuo, juxta eloquium tuum da mihi intellectum. Hear my prayers, and according to thy promises, give me good success in my undertakings. In Joshua, Ut intelligas [Josh. i. 7, 8.] cuncta quæ agis, that thou mayest succeed in thy undertakings. And again, Tunc diriges viam tuam & intelliges eam.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. Dr. Hammond on Psal. xxxii. says, that משכיל is used here as the title of a Psalm, to denote the sort of melody, the tune to which it was set, known among the Hebrews by that name, from some famous song, first set to that tune, and added to ,לדוד to or of David; it undoubtedly signifies a Psalm of his set to that tune, and nothing else; and so in all the other Psalms, where it is prefixed in the title.

Intendants

INTENDANTS, or Governors of Judea. See Governors.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Intercalation

INTERCALATION. By this name they call the Jewish custom of adding a thirteenth month to their Lunar year, at the end of every two or three years; that is to say, that in the revolution of the Cycle of nineteen years, there are seven of thirteen months each, and the rest are only of twelve months. When an intercalary month is added to the year, this month is placed between February and March, and then there is a first and second Adar; and the latter is called Ve-Adar, as if we should say, and again Adar, or Adar a second time.

The necessity of this Intercalation arises from their following the course of the moon in their year; whereas we follow the course of the sun. In the Solar year we intercalate one day every four years, in the month of February, and this fourth year is called Bissextile, because we reckon for two days together the sixth of the Calends of March, that is to say, the 24th and 25th of February; which, in the Bissextile years, instead of eight and twenty, has nine and twenty days. This Intercalation is founded on the six hours wanting eleven minutes, which the sun imploys in performing its course, beyond the 365 days which compose the common Solar year.

The Intercalation of the Jews, is owing on the contrary to all the Lunar months being not so long by twelve hours, or thereabouts, as the Solar months; which at the end of three years, makes nine and twenty or thirty days. See the article Months.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Interdict

INTERDICT, Anathema. See the titles Anathema, Excommunication, and Corban.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joab

JOAB, the son of Zeruiah, David's sister, and brother to Abishai, and Asahel. Joab was one of the most valiant men, and greatest generals in David's time; but then he was one of the most cruel, revengeful, and imperious men of his age. He performed some great services for David, and was always firm to his interests. He was commander in chief of his troops, when as yet he was no more than king of Judah. The first action recorded in Scripture, wherein he [2 Sam. ii. 13,14,&c.] signalized himself, was that of the battle of Gibeon against Abner, the principal person in Ishbosheth, the son of Saul's party[1]. The advantage was entirely on Joab's side; but Asahel his brother was killed in the manner related by us in the article Asahel, and in that of Abner. To revenge his death, Joab treacherously killed Abner, who came to Hebron, in order to make an alliance with David, and reduce all Israel to his obedience. David abhorred so base an action; but did not dare to [2 Sam. iii. 27,39. 2 Sam. xi. 12.] punish Joab for it, who was become in some sort formidable to him.

After David had been acknowledged king by all Israel[2], he laid siege to Jerusalem, and promised to make him Captain General of his armies, who should first mount the walls, and beat off the Jebusites. [1 Chr. xi. 16.] Joab was the first who appeared upon the walls, and by his valour very well deserved to be continued in an imployment, which he was already possessed of. He had a principal share in the Wars which David carried on against the Syrians and Edomites. He subdued the Ammonites, and procured the destruction of the brave Uriah at the siege of Rabbah their Capital. It was he who interceeded for Absalom's return from exile, and prevailed with David to receive this young Prince again into his good graces, and permit him to have the honour of appearing at court as formerly. But altho he shewed himself to be very much a friend to Absalom in his disgrace; he was as much his enemy after his rebellion. [2 Sam. xviii. 1, 2, 3—13,14. 2 Sam. xix. 5, 6.] He overcame him in a set battle near Mahanaim; and being informed that he hung by the neck upon an Oak, he pierced him through with his own hands, and killed him, though he very well knew, that David had given contrary orders, to him in particular, and to the whole army, to preserve his son Absalom. And when the king discovered too much sorrow for the death of his son, Joab ventured to say, in no very respectful manner, You have confounded all your servants with shame, who have exposed their lives to preserve yours, your wives, and childrens: you love those who hate you, and do not love your friends. You have this day shewn us, that you have no consideration for your Officers and Soldiers; and that if Absalom had lived, and we had all perished in the battle, you would have been overjoyed. Rise therefore immediately, shew your self, and speak to your servants; otherwise I swear by the Lord to you, that not a man will remain with you this night, and that you will be in greater danger than ever you was.

David resented Joab's insolence; but was not in a condition to reprimand him in the manner he desired. When Sheba the son of Bichri began to set up the standard of rebellion, and the people generally resorted to him, David commanded Amasa[3]; to get some troops together in the Tribe of Judah, [2 Sam. xx. 3,4,5,&c. 2 Sam. xx. 19,20,21. &c. 2 Sam. xx. 23.] and pursue him; thus excluding Joab, who had been till then Commander in chief of all the forces of Israel. But Amasa being a little too slow in coming, David directed Abishai, Joab's brother, to pursue Sheba. Joab accompanied him with the Cherethites and Pelethites of the King's guard. Amasa arrived soon after, and being on his way to join Abishai and Joab at Gibeon, Joab making as if he would kiss him, plunged his poniard in his belly. Thus died Amasa, who was to have been General of the Troops of Israel. Joab brought the war with Sheba to a very happy conclusion, without risking a battle, or exposing the Kings troops; because they threw the head of Sheba to him over the walls of Abela, which he was preparing to besiege. He returned to Jerusalem, and David left him the general command of his armies, probably in consideration of the great service which he had just then been doing him.

When David by the impulse of an evil Spirit, and a curiosity which was blameable[4], undertook to number his people; he gave Joab a commission to this purpose. He did all he could to divert the King from this resolution; but being obliged to obey, he did so, not without regret, and executed what the king had commanded, in part only. David [1 Chr. xxi. 6.] himself acknowledged his fault, and God punished him for it in a very severe manner.

[1 Kings i. 1,2,3,4. &c.] Adonijah David's son, observing himself after the death of Absalom to be the eldest of the royal family, considered how he might procure himself to be acknowledged King. David was very much advanc'd in years, and concerned himself but little with the affairs of Government. People [1 Kings ii. 5, 6, 7.] were not ignorant of his design to leave the Crown to Solomon: but as this Prince was as yet very young, Adonijah flattered himself, that with the assistance of a powerful party, which he had formed, he might be able to exclude him, and get into the throne of Israel. He took care principally to engage Joab General of the army, and Abiathar the High-Priest, in his interest; and at a great entertainment, which he made near the fountain of Siloam for the leaders of his party, he was saluted King by them[5]. But David having been seasonably informed of what had passed, ordered Solomon to be crowned, and anointed by the High-Priest Zadok, and the Prophet Nathan, and placed him on the throne in the view of all the people. Adonijah, upon receiving this news fled to the Temple, as a sanctuary, and Joab with the rest retired to their houses.

Joab by this last step made David more and more averse to him, so that perceiving himself sometime after to be near his end[6], he said to Solomon, Thou knowest in what manner Joab the son of Zerviah has treated me, and what he did to the the two Generals of the army of Israel, Abner the son of Ner, and Amasa the son of Jether, whom he assassinated, and whose blood he shed in time of peace, with as little remorse as if he had been actually at war with them. Do therefore according to thy wisdom, and let him not in his old age go down in peace to the grave. Some time after the death of David, Joab being informed that the young King had caused Adonijah to be put to death, who had desired Abishag of him for his wife, and that he had banished the High-Priest Abiathar to his country-house at Anathoth, thought it high time to provide for his own security: he fled therefore into the Temple, and laid hold on the horns of the Altar, in order to preserve his life. But Solomon did not think the privilege of the Sanctuary a just obstacle to his design of putting him to death. He sent Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, who required him to quit his asylum; but Joab answering that he would not, and would die upon the spot, Solomon gave orders for dispatching him at the foot of the Altar, which were accordingly executed. Thus died Joab. He was buried by Benaiah in his own house in the wilderness[7].

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

About the year of the world 2954, before J. C. 1046, before the vulgar Æra 1050.

In the year of the world 2957, before J. C. 1043, before the vulgar Æra 1047.

Amasa was the son of Zeruiah, as well as Joab; but by another father. Absalom, at the time of his rebellion, gave Amasa the command of his troops. David confirmed him in this employment. See 2 Sam. xvii. 25,26.

2 Sam. xxiv. 1, 2, 3, 4. 1 Chr. xx. 1, 2, 3. In the year of the world 2987, before J. C. 1013, before the vulgar Æra 1017. were

1 Kings i. 8. In the year of the world 2989, before J. C. 1011, before the vulgar Æra 1015.

In the year of the world 2990, before J. C. 1010, before the vulgar Æra 1014.

In the year of the world 2990, before J. C. 1010, before the vulgar Æra 1014.

Joachin

JOACHIN, otherwise Jechoniah or Jehoiachin. See Jehoiachin.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joah (I)

I. JOAH, the son of Zimmah, and grandson of Gershom the Levite, 1 Chr. vi. 21.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joah (II)

II. JOAH, secretary to king Josiah; employed by him in repairing the Temple, 2 Chr. xxxiv. 8.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joah (III)

III. JOAH, the son of Asaph[1], was sent by Hezekiah king of Judah with Eliakim and Shebna, to answer the proposals of Rabshakeh, who was appointed by king Sennacherib to execute this Commission.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

2 Kings xviii. 18. In the year of the world 3291, before J. C. 709, before the vulgar Æra 703.

Joakim

[Luke iii. 23. Aug. l. 23. contra Faust. c. 9. Vide T. 5. nov. Edit. S. Hieronym. p. 44.] JOAKIM, the husband of S. Anna, and father to the blessed Virgin; grandfather to Jesus Christ after the flesh. We believe him to be the same as Eli mentioned in St. Luke. Eli, Eliakim, and Joakim, are properly the same name. The name of Joakim, father of the blessed Virgin, is not to be met with in the canonical writings of the New Testament; but has been adopted by the Greek and Latin Churches. In the Latin principally, since the festival of S. Anna and S. Joakim has been celebrated, and among the Greeks long before. S. Austin, in his answer to Faustus the Manichee, says, that the name of Joakim being known only from apocryphal writings, could not be made use of as an argument. But among the Greeks this name is to be met with in writings of the greatest antiquity. The Proto-evangelium, or preparatory Gospel of S. James, which is a work composed by the Ebionites in the Apostles times, or at least in the second age of the Church, says a great deal of Joakim and Anne. The apocryphal Gospel of the birth of Mary speaks of them likewise. This book is thought to have been composed by Seleucus, an Author in the second Age.

[Pet. Alex. Can. 13.] St. Peter of Alexandria makes mention of the death of Zechary father to S. John Baptist, who was killed between the Temple and the Altar, and of St. Elizabeth's flight, which are circumstances taken from the preparatory Gospel of St. James. Gregory of Nyssa cites [Nyssen. orat. in Natale Domini, p. 778, 779.] the same work, and relates other circumstances from it: for example, that Zechary still maintained the blessed virgin, even after her conception to be a virgin. He adds, that her father was an Israelite of eminent piety, who had a barren wife, that his wife, by reason of her barrenness, not being able to partake of the privileges, which were allowed women who had born children; desired of God that he would be pleased to bless his marriage, and at the same time devoted the fruit of it, which she should bring into the world, to God. God was pleased to give him the virgin Mary, who was educated at the Temple, till the time when she was disposed of to Joseph, that he might be the guardian of her virginity. These are particulars which he relates at large; and it is very visible, that he took them from the book which I have been speaking of, and which has been handed down to us. We meet with almost the same things in a discourse of Eustathius of Antioch [Eustat. Antioch. in Hexaemeron.] upon the Hexaemeron, and S. Epiphanius[1]; which shews the antiquity of this tradition. From these sources S. John Damascenus[2], Vincent of Beauvis[3], and Fulbert of Chartres[4], have borrowed what they have said concerning the blessed Virgin's death. The tradition of Joakim's being the father of Mary, was so general in the east, that even Mahomet speaks of it in his Alcoran.

[Alcoran. Surat. 3.] I do not mention this with a design of attributing any authority to the apocryphal books, wherein the name of Joakim is to be met with; but only to prove the antiquity of this tradition in the Church. Neither the Ebionites, nor Manichees, nor Seleucus, had any interest in deceiving us with regard to the names of Joakim and Anne. They had learned these names from others, and reported them in their works with a design only of procuring a better reception of them from the Catholicks. This is a summary account of what we read in S. James's preparatory Gospel, which is the most ancient monument, wherein the name of Joakim, the Virgin's father, is to be met with. Joakim was a man of power in Israel, who at all solemn festivals made magnificent sacrifices in the Temple. Upon a certain day, when he intended to present his offering, one Reuben told him, that it was not lawful for him, because he had no posterity in Israel. Joakim, with great confusion, hereupon retired into the wilderness, where he had large flocks. There he continued forty days, exercising himself in fasting and prayer. Anne, his wife, on her part, being incensed at the reproaches of one of her maid-servants, went into her garden, and there lamented bitterly the misfortune of her barrenness. An angel declared to her that God had heard her prayer; and at that very time another angel told the same thing to Joakim.

[Damian. homil. 46. p. 106. Bernard. Ep. 174.] Joakim returning to his house, Anne conceived, and brought forth a daughter, whom they named Mary. Three years after they presented her at the Temple, where she was fed by the hand of an angel, till she was twelve years old. Then she was given to Joseph, in order to his being the guardian of her virginity. From this time there is nothing more said either of Joakim or Anne; and Cedrenus tells us, that the blessed Virgin lost her father and mother at twelve years of age. They who please may consult the Bollandists on [Joseph. Antiq. l. xii. c. 5. initio.] the 19th of March upon this subject, and M. de Tillemont, tom. 1. not. 2. concerning the blessed Virgin, and our Dissertation, wherein we attempt to reconcile S. Matthew and S. Luke, as to the point of our Saviour's Genealogy: this is prefixed to our Comment on S. Luke. The worship of S. Joakim and S. Anne is very ancient in the east; but it is more modern in the west. In the time of Peter Damian, and S. Bernard, there was no knowledge of it remaining. It is said, that Pope Julius appointed the feast of S. Joakim to be observed upon the 20th of March, about the year 1510. In a Martyrology printed in 1491, it is set down at the 9th of December. Pius V. struck it out of the Roman Breviary: but Gregory XV. replaced it there, at the 20th of March in 1620. See Bollandus and M. de Tillemont, and M. Bayle's Dictionary, under the name of Joachim; this author however is to be read with great precaution, by reason of the scandalous liberties taken by him.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Epiphan. hæres. 79. c. 5.
Damascen. l. 4. de fide orthod. c. 15.
Vincent. Bellov. specul. prolog. c. 9. & l. 7. c. 64.
Fulbert. Carnot. serm. in nativ. B. M.

Joakim (II)

II. JOAKIM, High Priest of the Jews. We know nothing particularly of his life, except that he succeeded Joshua the son of Jozedek his father, after the return of the Jews from the captivity; and that he lived under Xerxes king of Persia.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joakim (III)

[Luke viii. 3.] III. JOAKIM, otherwise Eliakim, the son of Hilkiah High Priest of the Jews, in the reign of Manasseh and Josiah. He is more generally known by the name of Hilkiah, or Eliakim, Judith iv. 6, 14.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joanna

JOANNA, the wife of Chuza, Herod's steward, was one of those women who followed our Saviour in his travels, and assisted him with their fortunes. S. Luke observes, that these women had been delivered by Jesus Christ from evil Spirits, which possessed them, or cured of diseases with which they had been afflicted. The wife of Chuza was either a widow, or followed Jesus Christ with the consent of her husband. It was a custom among the Jews, for men who dedicated themselves to preaching, to take some women of piety with them, who attended and served them. This was practised without any scandal. We [Hieron. in Matt. xxvii. alii.] know nothing particularly concerning the life of Joanna, the wife of Chuza.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joash (I)

I. JOASH, the father of Gideon, Judg. vi. 11.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joash (II)

II. JOASH, the son of Amelek, who by the command of King Ahab detained the Prophet Micaiah in prison, 1 Kings xxii. 26.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joash (III)

III. JOASH, one of the descendants of Shelab the son of Judah. See the Hebrew, 1 Chr. iv. 22. In the Vulgate he is called Securus, the Certain.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joash (IV)

IV. JOASH, the son of Abaziah king of Judah. When the impious Athaliah was informed, that Jehu had killed Abaziah, and all those of the royal family [2 Chr.xxii. 8, 9,10. & 2 Kingsxi. 1, &c.] of Judah, whom he had met with, she undertook intirely to extinguish the race of the Kings, that she might secure the Crown to herself[1]. She ordered therefore all the Princes her grand-children to be murdered; for she was the mother of Abaziah, who had been lately massacred by Jehu, and reigned sometime in Jerusalem. Nevertheless, God did not permit her to succeed intirely in her ambitious design. Jehoshebah or Jehoshabath the daughter of King Joram sister of Abaziah, and wife to the High-Priest Jehoiada by stratagem conveyed away young Joash, who was then a child, thereby rescuing him from the cruelty of Athaliah, and lodged him in the Temple with his nurse, in a place so private, that Athaliah had no knowledge of it. There he abode six years: but in the seventh year[2], Jehoiada procured him to be secretly acknowledged King by the principal Officers, who had the care of the Temple, and without noise convened there as many as possible of the Priests and Levites, upon the Sabbath day, when the ministers of the Lord, who were to serve the week following, succeeded those who had been the week before upon duty. Jehoiada took such proper measures, and gave orders so well concerted to his people, that young Joash was placed upon the throne, and saluted King in the Temple, before the Queen had any the least notice of it. As soon as she heard the acclamations of the people, she hastened thither with all speed: but the High-Priest commanded her to be seized, and she was killed without the Temple.

[2 Kings xii. 6, 7, 8, 9. & 2 Chr. xxiv. 5, 6, 7.] Joash received the Diadem, together with the Book of the Law, from the hands of Jehoiada; and the High-Priest in the young King's name made a covenant between the Lord, the King and the people, to the end that the people for the future might continue faithful to God with great exactness and duty. He likewise obliged the people to take an oath of fidelity and obedience to the King. After which Joash was conducted to the Royal Palace, and seated on the throne of his Ancestors. Then the people flocked to the Temple of Baal, who was the Deity adored by Athaliah; broke in pieces the Statue of the God, and killed his Priest at the foot of his Altar. Joash was but seven years old, when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years at Jerusalem[3]. His mother's name was Zibiah of Beer-sheba. He governed his people with great justice, and made himself acceptable to God, as long as he was guided by the High-Priest Jehoiada. Nevertheless he did not abolish the High-Places, and the people still sacrificed, and offered Incense there.

Jehoiada in the King's minority, had issued out his orders for collecting the Offerings which were made voluntarily to the Holy Place with design of carrying on the work of repairing the Temple: but his orders were ill executed till the twentieth year of Joash[4]. Then this Prince directed chests to be made at the entrance of the Temple, and had an account given to him of what money was put into them, that it might be faithfully employed in the reparations of the House of God. Jehoiada dying at the age of an hundred and thirty years[5], Joash was led away by the evil counsels of his courtiers, who had before been restrained by the High-Priest's authority. They began to forsake the Temple of the Lord, and addict themselves to the worship of Idols, and Groves consecrated to false gods, or rather to Asteroth the goddess of the Groves; which drew the wrath of god upon Judah and Jerusalem.

Then the Spirit of God came upon the High-Priest Zechariah the son of Jehoiada, and he addressed himself to the people, in these terms, thus saith the Lord, Why do you violate the precepts of your God, and why have ye forsaken him? You will hereby bring upon yourselves a multitude of evils, and the Lord in his turn will forsake you. Upon these words, They who heard him, fell upon him, and stoned him according to the order, which they had received to this purpose from the King[6]. Zechariah as he was expiring spoke these words, May God observe the treatment I receive from you, and revenge my death. It was not long before God inflicted upon Joash, the just punishment of his ingratitude to Jehoiada, whose son he had so lately stoned. Hazael King of Syria came and laid siege to Gath, which belonged to the Kings of Judah; and having taken it, he marched against Jerusalem. Joash in order to redeem himself from the difficulties of a Siege, and from the danger of being plundered, took what money he could find in the Temple, which had been offered there and consecrated by Abaziah his father, Jehoram his grand-father, and himself, with what besides he had in the Royal Treasury, and gave it to Hazael, thereby prevailing with him to draw off his troops.

It is believed that the year after[7] the Syrian army marched again into the territories of Judah: but Hazael was not there in person. The Syrians made great havock in the Land, defeated the troops of Joash, entered Jerusalem, put to death the princes of Judah, and sent a great booty to the King of Syria at Damascus. It is remarkable, that the Syrians were few in number, when they routed the army of Israel, which was infinitely stronger. They treated Joash himself with great ignominy; they accused, and in all probability convicted him of breach of faith, and neglecting to perform his promises[8]. They afterwards returned, and left him extremely ill; and his very servants rose against him, and killed him in his bed, to revenge the blood of Zechariah the High-Priest, which had been shed by him. He was buried in the city of Jerusalem, but not in the Royal Sepulchre[9]. Amaziah reigned in his stead.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the world 3120, before J. C. 880, before the vulgar Æra 884.
In the year 3126, before J. C. 874, before the vulgar Æra 878.
2 Kings xii. 12, &c. From the year of the world 3126 to 3166.
In the year of the world 3146, before J. C. 854, before the vulgar Æra 858.
About the year of the world 3160, before J. C. 840, before the vulgar Æra 844.
In the year of the world 3164, before J. C. 836, before the vulgar Æra 840.
See 2 Chr. xxiv. 23, 24, 25. In the year of the world 3165, before J. C. 835, before the vulgar Æra 839.
2 Chr. xxiv. 24. vulgat. In Joas quoque ignominiosa exercuere judicia. The Hebrew, Cum Joas fecerunt judicia. Compare 2 Kings xxv. 6.
In the year of the world 3166, before J. C. 834, before the vulgar Æra 838.

Joash (V)

V. JOASH, king of Israel, son and successor of Jehoahaz. He was declared king in his father's life time, in the year of the world 3163, and he reign'd alone in the year 3165, before J. C. 835, before the vulgar Æra 839. He reigned sixteen years in [2 Kings xiii.10,11. 12.] Samaria, including the two years that he reigned with his father. He did evil in the sight of the Lord, and imitated Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin. We do not know many particulars of his reign; but we know that the Lord appointed him to re-establish the affairs of the kingdom of Israel, which had been put into very great confusion under Jehoahaz his father. [2 Kings xiii. 5. 2 Kings xiii. 14, 15. &c.]

Elisha falling sick of the disease whereof he died[1], Joash came to see him, and wept before the prophet, saying, O my father, my father, the chariots of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. Elisha desired him to bring a bow and arrows to him; and when they were brought he said, Put thine hand upon the bow; and at the same time Elisha put his hands upon the King's, as it were to direct him, where to shoot, and said; Open the window and shoot, he did so: and Elisha said, This is the arrow of the Lord's deliverance, and the arrow of deliverance from Syria. Thou shalt obtain victory over the Syrians at Aphek, so as utterly to exterminate them. He said again, Take the arrows and shoot against the ground, he did so; he smote the ground three times and stayed. Then the man of God was wroth with him, and said, If thou hadst smitten the ground five, six, or seven times, thou hadst conquered Syria, and entirely destroyed it, but thou shalt smite Syria but twice. After this Elisha died; and Joash recovered from Benhadad King of Syria, the son and successor of Hazael, all the cities which Hazael had taken from Jehoahaz his father. Joash beat Benhadad in three battles[2], and reunited to the kingdom of Israel all the cities which had been dismembred from it, [2 Kings xiii. 25.] and usurped by the Kings of Syria.

Joash after this reigned a long time peaceably. Amaziah King of Judah having been victorious over the Edomites, sent a challenge to him[3], saying, Come, let us see one another in the face. Joash sent Ambassadors to him with this reply. The [2 Cor. xv. 17, 18.] thistle that groweth upon Lebanus sent to the Cedar of Lebanus, saying, Give thy daughter in marriage to my son. But at the same time the beasts of the forest of Lebanus passed by, and trode down the thistle. Thou hast defeated Edom, and thy heart is swelled with pride, stay at home in peace. Why doest thou persue after thy own misery, and that of thy people? But Amaziah would not hearken to him. Joash therefore took the field: Amaziah was routed, and taken in the battle. Joash entred Jerusalem, and ordered four hundred cubits of the city walls to be demolished, from the gate of Ephraim to the corner gate. He took all the treasures of the Temple, and the Royal Palace, and returned in triumph to Samaria. He died there in peace soon after this victory[4], and [2 Kings iii. 13.] was succeeded by Jeroboam.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the world 3165, before J. C. 835, before the vulgar Æra 839.
In the year of the world 3168, before J. C. 832, before the vulgar Æra 836.
In the year of the world 3178, before J. C. 822, before the vulgar Æra 826.
In the year of the world 3179, before J. C. 821, before the vulgar Æra 825.

Joazar

JOAZAR, High-Priest of the Jews, successor to Matthias the son of Theophilus in the year of the world 4000, the year of Jesus Christ's birth. He was succeeded by his brother Eleazar in the year of the world 4004, and was created High-Priest a second time in 4010, and enjoyed this dignity till 4016. Then Ananus the son of Seth succeeded him. Joazar, otherwise Azar, was brother to Mariamne, the daughter of Simon the High-Priest, and wife to Herod the Great. Archelaus at his return from Rome deposed Joazar in 4004, because he was engaged against him [Joseph. Antiq. l. 17. c. 15.] with the seditious. Some time after Joazar was restored by the Romans, for whom he had declared in 4010. Lastly Cyrenius Governor of Syria being come into Judea, in 4016, deposed Joazar and substituted [Antiq. l. 18. c. 1, 3.] Ananus in his place.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Job (I)

I. JOB, the third son of Issachar, Gen. xlvi. 13.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Job (II)

II. JOB, so celebrated for his patience, and the constancy of his piety and virtue, dwelt in the land of Uz, or in the Ausitis, in east Edom, not far from Bozra. There are different opinions concerning his original, and the time wherein he lived. At the end of the Greek and Arabic copies of Job, and in the old Latin Vulgate, we read these words, and they are there said to be taken from the Syriac. Job dwelt in the Ausitis, upon the confines of Idumæa and Arabia; his name at first was Jobab. He maried an Arabian Woman, by whom he had a son, called Ennon. For his part he was the son of Zerah, of the posterity of Esau, and a native of Bozrah; so that he was the fifth from Abraham. He reigned in Edom; and the Kings before and after him reigned in this order. Balak the son of Beor, in the city of Dinhabah, after him Job, otherwise called Jobab. Job was succeeded by Husham prince of Teman. After him reigned Hadad the son of Bedad, who defeated the Midianites in the fields of Moab. The name of his city was Arith. Job's friends who came to visit him were Eliphaz, of the posterity of Esau, and King of Teman, Bildad King of the Shuhites, and Zophar the King of the Naamathites.

This is the most antient account we have of Job's Genealogy. Aristeus, Philo, and Polyhistor[1], acknowledged this Genealogy to be true: the old Greek and Latin Fathers did the same, and cited this addition; and Theodotion has preserved it in his translation of the book of Job. We see no good reason for rejecting this tradition, which is derived, probably, from the Jews, and was received by the primitive Fathers. In tracing it we find Job to have been contemporary with Moses.

Abraham.

Isaac.

Jacob. Esau. Levi. Reuel. Amram. Zerah. Moses. Jobab.

1 Chr. i. 35---44.

Job was a man of great probity, virtue [Job i. 1, 2, 3, 4, &c.] and religion, and he was possessed of very great riches, which consisted in cattle and [Job i. 3.] slaves; whereof, at that time, the wealth even of princes chiefly was made up, especially in Arabia and Edom. His family was numerous; for he had seven sons and three daughters, and probably by the same wife. Lastly, he was in great repute among all the eastern people, and those who dwelt on both sides of the Euphrates. His sons, by turns, made entertainments for each other; and when they had gone through the circle of their days of feasting, Job sent to them, purified them, and offered burnt-offerings for each of them; to the end that God might pardon them, if they had committed any faults against him. For his part he tells us himself, that he was infinitely averse not only to Injustice, Idolatry, Fraud, and Adultery; but that he avoided [xxix. 7. xxxi. 26.] evil thoughts, and dangerous looks, and that he had made a covenant with his eyes not so much as to cast a glance upon a [Job xxxi. 9. Job xxix. 13, 14, 15, 16. Job i. 6, 7, 8, &c.] woman; that he was naturally compassionate to the miseries of the poor; that he was a father to the orphan, protector to the widow, a guide to the blind, and a support to the lame.

Now there was a day when the sons of God, or the Angels, came to present themselves before the Lord, and Satan appeared with them. The Lord asked him, whether he had observed Job, and his way of living. Satan answered, that Job had reason to love and fear the Lord, since he had blessed him with so much riches. But, added he, put thine hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curse thee to thy face. God permitted Satan to tempt Job, and gave him power over all that he had, but forbad him to touch his person. Satan therefore going out from the presence of the Lord, made use of the permission which God had given him. He began with his Oxen. A company of Sabeans, people of Arabia, fell upon Job's husbandmen, put them to the sword, and carried away all the Oxen. One servant only escaped to carry the news of this accident. While he was telling what had happened, a second came and told Job, that fire from Heaven had fallen upon his Sheep, and those who kept them, and had reduced them all to ashes: and that he alone had escaped to tell him.

He had not done speaking, when a third person came to Job, and said, the Chaldeans being divided into three bands, fell upon thy Camels, and have carried them away: they have killed all thy servants, and I only am escaped to tell thee. While he was relating this, another came, and said, While thy sons and thy daughters were eating and drinking in their eldest brother's house, an impetuous wind blew suddenly upon it, and it fell down upon them, and they were all crushed to death under the ruins of it. I alone am escaped to bring thee this news. Then Job rent his clothes, and shaved his head, and fell down upon the ground, saying, Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.

Satan once more presented himself before [Job xi. 1, 2, 3. &c.] the Lord; and the Lord asking him if he had not considered the patience of Job in the midst of all the evils wherewith he had afflicted him, Satan replied, Skin for skin, and all that a man hath will he give for his life; but put forth thine hand now, and touch his bone and his flesh, and he will curse thee to thy face. The Lord answered, Behold, he is in thine hand, but touch not his life. Satan therefore smote him with dreadful sores from head to foot, and Job being seated on a dunghil, with a potsherd scraped off the corruption which issued from his ulcers. Then came his wife and said, Doest thou still retain thy simplicity and piety, Curse God, and then die. Job answered her, Thou speakest as one of the foolish women speaketh. Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil? In all this did not Job sin with his lips. In the mean time three of, Job's friends were made acquainted with the misfortunes which had happened to him, and came each of them out of his own country to visit him; Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shubite, and Zophar the Naamathite. There was a fourth likewise, whose name was Elihu the Buzite, who appears in cap. xxxii. of Job, and has a [Job xxxii. 2. Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite, of the kindred of Ram.] part in their dialogue. These friends therefore visited Job, and lifting up their eyes at a distance to view him, they did not know him. At last as they came nearer to him, they began to weep, to tear their clothes, and throw dust into the air, that it might fall upon their heads. They continued for seven days sitting on the ground by him, without saying any thing to him. But at last Job broke silence, and complained bitterly of his misery. His friends making no distinction between the evils wherewith [Job iii. 1, 2, 3, &c.] God tries those whom he loves, and the afflictions wherewith he punishes the wicked, took Job's complaints for so many marks of his impatience, and accused him of impiety towards God, inviting him to return to him by repentance, and humbly to submit to his justice, since he suffered nothing but what he had very well deserved by his preceding crimes.

Job being convinced of his own innocence, and assured that he had the testimony of his conscience, on the contrary maintained, that his sufferings were greater than his faults, and proved, that God sometimes chastised the righteous to try them only, to give them an opportunity of growing up more to perfection; or lastly, because it was his good pleasure for reasons unknown to mankind. These were Job's principles. His friends were of a different opinion. The whole book of Job, and all the discourses contained in it, are to this purpose. To terminate this dispute, God appears in a cloud, and decides in favour of [Job xxxviii. xxxix. xl. xli.] Job; nevertheless without approving the harsh expressions, which the extremity of his sorrow, and the warmth of dispute, had, as it were, wrested from him. He humbly acknowledged his fault, and asked forgiveness for it. The Lord condemns Job's friends, and enjoins them to expiate their sins with sacrifices, which he directs them to offer by the hands of Job. He drives away the devil, and restrains his power, restores Job to health, gives him double the riches which he before possessed, blesses him with a beautiful and numerous family, and crowns an holy life with an happy death. This is the substance of Job's history.

The time wherein this pious man lived is a point very much contested. But supposing him to have been contemporary with Moses[2], and fixing the time of his trial to some years after the departure of the Hebrews out of Egypt, (it cannot be placed earlier, because he speaks of this event;) he might have lived till the time of Othniel. Supposing, for example, that he was afflicted by God seven years after the departure of the Israelites out of Egypt in the year of the world 2520, before J.C. 1480, before the vulgar Æra 1484, and having lived an hundred and forty years after his recovery, as he himself says, he must have been dead in 2660, two years before the death of Othniel. Some believe[3] that he lived seventy years in prosperity, and that after his misfortunes, God doubled this number. By which account he must have lived in all two hundred and ten years; supposing his afflictions to have continued but a year. They who affirm that he lay seven years or even longer under his diseases, may in proportion increase the number assigned by us; for in this we have nothing very certain.

His tomb has been shewn in several places. The most celebrated is that in the Trachonitis, towards the springs of Jordan, where for many ages a Pyramid has been [Brocard. Adrichom. Tirin. Cotovic. alii.] observed, which some believe to be Job's tomb. It is placed between the cities of Teman, Shuah, and Naamath, which are supposed to have been in this country. The Chaldee Paraphrast, whose name is Cock, makes him to have lived in Armenia; and Travellers tell us, that Job's Tomb is shewn there. But this Job is thought to have been a Mahometan captain, of modern date. Another Chaldee interpreter places Job at Constantinople. There is a tomb to be seen near the walls of this City, which some have taken for Job's[4]: but it is an Arabian's killed at the siege of Constantinople, in 672, and buried at the foot of the walls. In the sixth Age there was a Monastery at Constantinople, dedicated to S. Job[5]; but it is not said that his body was there. Eusebius and S. Jerom assure us, that there was a traditional account of Job's having dwelt at Astaroth-Carnaim, a city situated in the Batanæa beyond Jordan; and that his house was still to be seen there. The Scripture relates Dinhabah to have been the capital of Jobab's kingdom, which Jobab we believe to be the same as Job. This City was in the Ausitis, or in Arabia Deserta. As we suppose Job and Jobab to be the same person, we must say likewise, that he lived and dyed at Dinhabah.

It has been maintained by some, that Holy Job's relicks were at Rome, whither they are said to have been brought by Rhotaris King of the Lombards, in the seventh age. There they remained till the last age, [Vid. Guall. Sanctuas. Pap. l. 4. c. 2.] when they were stolen from thence by thieves, without any one's knowing what afterwards became of them. We meet with the name of Job in the ancient Martyrologies with the title of Prophet, Saint, and Martyr. The worship of him is of great antiquity, and very extensive among the Greeks and Latins. The Greeks have chosen the sixth of May for celebrating the festival of S. Job, and herein they have been followed by the Christians of Arabia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Russia, or Muscovy. The Latins keep his festival on the tenth of May. This, next to the Maccabees, brothers and martyrs, is the first Saint to whom the western Church has decreed publick and religious honours; and we know not of any Saint among the Patriarchs and Prophets to whom Churches have been consecrated, or chapels dedicated, in greater number than to this holy man. We see abundance of them, particularly in Spain and Italy; and he is invoked principally against the leprosy, itch, foul disease, and other distempers which relate to these. See M. Baillet's lives of the Saints of the Old Testament, the tenth of May.

We have treated of Job's disease in a particular dissertation printed before our Comment upon Job. Pineda examined the same subject long before us, and discovered two or three and thirty several kinds of diseases in this good man's body. Bartholin[6] reckons up about twelve; and S. Chrysostom makes no scruple of saying[7], that Job endured all the evils that a man is capable of suffering, and that he suffered them in the utmost degree; that the Devil exhausted his whole stock of malice in tormenting him; in a word, that he was tried every way, and in his single body endured all the afflictions in the world. When we consider accurately all that Job in his Book says of himself, it seems to us, that the circumstances of his disease are for the most part symptoms of a leprosy; and we may affirm, that the Fathers and Commentators are generally of this opinion. S. Chrysostom, Apollinarius, Polychronius, Philip the Priest, venerable Bede, the author of the Sermons ad Fratres in eremo, cited under S. Austin's name, Pineda, Bartholin, Bolduc, Vatablus, Cyprian of the Cistercians, and many others tell us so in an explicite, or at least in an implicite manner.

They who say that he was attacked with that infamous disease which is called the Neapolitan, or foul disease, agree almost in the same opinion, since this, in all probability, is no other than a leprosy. The Latin Church invokes S. Job in diseases of this nature, and Lazarettos and Hospitals, wherein care is taken of persons who have this scandalous distemper upon them, are for the most part dedicated to him. We do not mean hereby to cast any blemish upon the honour and sanctity of the Saint we are speaking of. People may have this disease upon them, without having committed any act of intemperance; and Travellers[8] inform us, that in the hot countries, it is communicated with such great activity, that to converse familiarly with any person infected with it, is oftentimes sufficient to catch it. See our Dissertation on this Subject.

Some[9] have questioned whether there ever was such a person as Job, and have esteemed his book to be a fabulous history, and mere invention. Spinoza believed Job [Origen. l. 6. contra Celsum.] to have been a Pagan. Others say he lived before Moses; others, in the time of Moses; and others again, after him, and under the Judges. There are some who bring him so far backward as the time of David and Solomon c; others as far as the time of the captivity, or very near it. Lastly there are some Rabbins of opinion, that he lived in the reign of Ahasuerus and Esther, and that he had a School at Tiberias in Palestine, before he was carried away to Babylon. But there is no denying that there was such a person as Job, without contradicting Ezekiel, Tobit, and S. James, who [Talmud. tract. Baba Batra. Ezek. xiv. 14. Tob. ii. 12, 15. James v. 11.] speak of him as an holy man, and a true pattern of patience, without opposing the torrent of tradition among both Jews and Christians, and all the authority of the Greek and Latin Fathers. Job did not live under the Jewish law, and perhaps was not subject to the law of circumcision; and in this sense we may confess, that he was a Pagan, as Melchisedeck and some other good men are said to have been: but there is nothing odious or contemptible in the name of Heathen thus understood. Although the time wherein this holy man lived be still dubious, we cannot however place him so far back as the time of David and Solomon, and much less so far as to the captivity of Babylon, since he is cited by Tobit and Ezekiel as an old Patriarch, and speaks of Pharaoh, and the passage of the Red Sea, in a very express manner. Notwithstanding [Job xxvi. 12. & xv. 24, 25.] it is not impossible but that he who wrote his book, as we now have it, might have lived after David and Solomon: because he seems sometimes to allude to the Psalms, Jeremiah, and the Proverbs.

The eastern people relate several particulars of Job, which we do not read in Scripture. They deduce his Genealogy after this manner. Abraham, Isaac, Esau, [Bibl. Orient. p. 81. Aiub.] Razakh, Anosch, Job, or Aiub as they write it. Eutychius Patriarch of Alexandria makes him likewise to descend from Esau thus; Esau, Raguel, Razakh, Amos, Job. But there are some Arabian Historians [Idem. p. 466. col. 1.] who derive his descent from Ishmael, and pretend, that he is the first of the three Prophets sprung from Ishmael; which three Prophets in their account are Job, Jethro, and Mahomet. The same Authors believe, that his wife's name was Rasima, and that she descended from Lot's race, that is to say from the Moabites or Ammonites; that Job was afflicted with a sore disease for three years, as some say; as others, seven.

That having then recovered his health, at the age of 80, he had a son named Basch -Ben-Aiub or Basch the son of Job. Some other Historians declare, that he had five sons, with whom, they say, he made war against an Arabian nation which bordered upon Edom, and was called Dhal-Khefel: this name was given them because they were hip-shot, and in their legs and thighs resembled the hinder parts of a horse, much after the manner wherein the Centaurs are described. Job, assisted by his sons, extirpated this brutal people, who refused to receive the worship of one God, which he preached to them.

The Lord having blessed Job, and enriched him, the Devil grew envious at it, and presenting himself before God, told him, that Job served him purely out of interest; that if he would once withdraw his favours from him, Job would not pay his adorations to him once a day. God hereupon permitted him to deprive this holy man of his wealth and children, but he became not at all the less faithful in serving God, nor less submissive to his will.

This circumstance encreased the rage and envy of the Devil; he once more presented himself before the Lord and told him, that Job continued thus to serve him, only with the hopes of receiving new benefits from his liberality; but that if he afflicted him in his body, he would then see that he would intirely abandon his service, and would break out into loud murmurs against him. God therefore permitted the Devil once more to try Job with a dangerous disease, upon condition, notwithstanding, that he should spare his mouth, his eyes, and ears. Hereupon the Devil blowed such a pestilential heat upon him thro' the nose, that the mass of his blood was immediately corrupted with it, and his whole Body became one ulcer, the stench whereof kept all those at a distance from him, who were inclinable to go near him.

They were obliged to put him out of the City in a very remote place, and notwithstanding all these misfortunes, Job still continued patient. His wife named Rasima, did not fail to carry him every thing that was necessary. The Devil for his part stole every thing away from her[10] that she had provided for him, and having at last reduced her to such a condition, that she had nothing wherewithal to relieve her husband, he appeared to her in the form of a woman that was bald, who told her, that if she would give her two tresses of her hair, which hung upon her neck, she would supply her every day with what was necessary for the subsistence of her husband. Rasima accepted this offer, and gave the old woman her two tresses.

The Devil went immediately to Job, and told him, that his wife had been surprized in the act of leudness, and her hair had been cut off. Job perceived very soon that her hair was wanting, and suspecting very much that she had suffered herself to be deluded by the Devil, he swore if he recovered his health, that he would severely chastise her for this fault. The Devil being very well satisfied with having got the better of Job's patience, transformed himself immediately into an Angel of light, and declared to the people of the country, as one sent by God for that purpose, that Job had forfeited the favour of God, and that they ought not any longer to give credit to his words, nor permit him to abide among them; lest the wrath of God should be extended to their whole nation.

Job upon information of what had passed, had recourse to God, and said to him with confidence: Lord I am every way oppressed with grief; but thou art the most merciful of all those who shew mercy. As soon as this prayer was finished, God in a moment put an end to all the sufferings of Job. The Angel Gabriel descended from Heaven, took him by the hand, raised him from the place where he was, struck the earth with his foot, and caused a fountain of the purest water to spring out of it, wherein Job having washed his body, and drank of it, found he was on a sudden absolutely cured, and restored to perfect health; after this God restored him to his wealth, and multiplied it in such a manner, that to express the abundance of it the Arabian Authors say, a golden shower fell upon him.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Apud Euseb. lib. 9. c. 25. Præparat. Vide & Frideric. Spanheim, hist. Jobi, c. 4. house

Translators' note. The Talmudists report him to have been born in the year of Jacob's settlement in Egypt, and that he died in the year wherein the Israelites departed out of this country. See Huet. Demonstr. Evang, Prop. iv de libro Job. Here this very learned author, contrary to the opinion of F. Calmet, asserts Job to have lived before Moses, but that the memory of his misfortunes was fresh, when Moses, whom Huetius supposes to be the writer of the book of Job, undertook to compose the History of them, while he lived in Midian with Jethro.

Ita Hebræi P. P. plerique, Vide Mercer, Pineda, Torniel Cornel.

Ricaut of the Ottoman Empire, l. 1. p. 16. Elmacin. Hist. Saracen. l. 1. c. 7.

Du Cange. Constantinop. Christ. l.4. p. 104. n.18.

Bartholin. de morbis Biblic. c. 7.
Chrysost. Caten. in Job, p. 51.
Chardin's travels into Persia, t. 2. part the first, and the last chapter.
Talmudistæ & alii apud Maimon. More Nevochim, c. 22.
Rabbini quidam in Talmud. tract. Baba Batra. Maimonid. Anabaptistæ. Salmasius in familiari colloquio apud Spanhem hist. Jobi.

Book of Job

BOOK OF JOB. Many various conjectures have been made concerning the Book of Job. Some have been of opinion, that Job himself wrote it at first, in Syriac or Arabic, and Moses or some other Israelite afterwards translated it into Hebrew. Others suppose Elihu, one of Job's friends, to have been the Author of it, or Moses, Solomon, Isaiah, or some other writer still more modern. It is certain, that no decisive proof towards discovering the Author is furnished by the Book itself. So much seems to be out of all dispute, that he who composed it, whosoever he was, was a Jew by religion, and later than the time of Job. There are so many allusions in it to the expressions of the Scripture, that every one must believe it was very familiar to him. We have cited a great number of those allusions and parallel places which occur in Job and other sacred writers; and have set the arguments in their proper light, whereby each of these opinions are maintained, which are proposed with relation to the Author of this Book.

The original language of the Book of Job is Hebrew, but blended with many Arabic and Chaldee expressions; and several particular turns, which are not to be met with in Hebrew; for which reason this work is so obscure and difficult. It is written in verse, but not confined to any particular measure or cadence, and the beauty of these verses consists principally in noble expressions, bold and sublime thoughts, lively emotions, fine descriptions, and a great diversity of characters. I do not believe that in all antiquity there is a piece of poetry to be found which is more copious, more lofty, more magnificent, more diversified, more adorned, or more affecting than this. The Author, whosoever he was, has put in practise all the beauties of his art, to make the four persons whom he brings upon the stage, keep up each his proper character, and maintain the opinions which they were engaged to defend. The history, as to the substance and circumstances of it, is exactly true; the sentiments, reasons, and arguments of the several persons are very faithfully expressed: but it is very probable, that the terms and turn of expression are the Poet's or the Writer's, whosoever he may be.

[Vide Synod. v. Oecumen. collat 4. art. 63. Jacobi v. 11. Suffe-rentiam beati Job auditis.] As to the canonical authority of the Book of Job, it is generally acknowledged in the Greek and Latin Churches, wherein it has always been esteemed as an article of faith; and this opinion is derived from the Synagogue to the Christian Church. S. Paul in several places seems to quote the Book of Job; at least visibly alludes to it[1]. S. James in his Epistle commends the patience of Job, and says, that it was well known to those he wrote to. Theodore, of Mopsuesta, accuses the Author of the Book of Job with a vain ostentation of profane sciences, with writing a fabulous and poetical history. He reproaches him likewise with making Job speak things inconsistent with the religion and piety of this holy man, and more proper to give offence than edify. But this famous and bold Critick judged of the Book of Job only from the Greek version which he had in his hands, wherein indeed there are observed to be some allusions to fable, and poetical history. But if he had seen the original text, he would have remarked nothing like it. Some charge Luther also, and the Anabaptists, with rejecting the book of Job: but Schultet and Spanheim endeavour to justify Luther in this particular. As to all the difficulties which I have briefly set down, and several others which are proposed relating to the book and person of Job, the Reader, if he pleases, may consult Pineda's Comment, or ours, and the history of Job by M. Spanheim.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Rom. ii. 11. collatum cum Job xxxvi. 19. 1 Tim. vi. 7. cum Job i. 21. & Heb. xii. 5. cum Job v. 17.

Jobab (I)

I. JOBAB, the son of Zerah, and grandson to Esau, Gen. xxxvi. 33. 1 Chr. i. 44.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jobab (II)

II. JOBAB, the son of Joktan, Gen. x. 28. & 1 Chr. i. 23.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jobab (III)

III. JOBAB, king of Madon, Josh. xi. 1.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jobab (IV)

IV. JOBAB, the son of Gera, of the tribe of Benjamin, 1 Chr. viii. 8.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jobab (V)

V. JOBAB, the son of Elpaal, of the same Tribe, 1 Chr. viii. 18.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jochebed

JOCHEBED, the wife of Amram, and mother of Miriam, Moses and Aaron. Several difficulties are started concerning the degree of relation between Amram and Jochebed. [Ita He-] Some assert, that Jochebed was the daughter immediately of Levi, and aunt to Amram her husband. This opinion they ground upon the Hebrew text, Exod. ii. 1. and vi. 20. and Numb. xxvi. 59. where she is called the daughter of Levi. Others maintain, that she was only cousin-german to Amram, being the daughter of one of Kobath's brethren. The Chaldee upon Chap vi. 20. of Exodus says, that she was the daughter of Amram's sister; and the Septuagint, that she was daughter to the same Amram's brother. The Hebrew text Doda, which we read here, does not always denote the same degree of relation between persons; and by the daughter of Levi may be [Doda.] understood either an immediate daughter, or a person descended from Aaron. So that neither the text of Scripture, nor the authority of Interpreters, who are so divided in their opinions, can determine this question. Nevertheless it seems to me most probable, that Jochebed was no more than cousin-german to Amram. 1. Had she been the immediate daughter of Levi, the disproportion between her age and Amram's would have been too great. 2. Marriages between the aunt and nephew were forbidden by the Law, and we have no proof that they were allowed before. 3. By the daughter of Levi may be very well meant the grand-daughter, according to the stile of the Hebrews.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joel (I)

[1 Sam. viii, 1, 2, &c.] I. JOEL, the Prophet Samuel's eldest son. Samuel being grown old[1], made his two sons Joel and Abiah Judges over Israel. They exercised their jurisdiction in the city of Beersheba at the southern extremity of Palestine. But they did not imitate the example of their Father; they received presents, and were unjust in their judgments; which obliged the elders of Israel to desire a king of Samuel.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the world 2908, before J.C. 1092, before the Vulgar Æra 1096.

Joel (II)

II. JOEL, the son of Josibiah, of the Tribe of Simeon, 1 Chr. iv. 35.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joel (III)

III. JOEL, the son of Israbiah, of the tribe of Issachar, 1 Chr. vii. 3.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joel (IV)

IV. JOEL, one of the valiant men of [1 Chr. xi. 38.] David's army.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joel (V)

V. JOEL, a Levite, one of the chief Musicians in David's time, 1 Chr. xv. 7.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joel (VI)

VI. JOEL, the son of Pedaiah, of the Tribe of Manasseh, 1 Chr. xxvii. 20.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joel (VII)

[Ita Epiphan. Doroth. Isidor. Hebræi.] VII. JOEL, the son of Pethuel, the second of the twelve small Prophets, was, as is said, of the Tribe of Reuben, and city of Bethoron, or rather Betharan, for Bethoron was on this side Jordan in the Tribe of Ephraim, and Betharan was on the other side of the River in the Tribe of Reuben. Joel prophesied in the kingdom of Judah[1]; and it is our opinion, that he did not appear there till after the removal of the ten Tribes, and the destruction of the kingdom of Israel. We do not know distinctly the year wherein he began to prophesy, nor that wherein he dyed. He speaks of a great famine, and an inundation of locusts which ravaged Judea: but as these are evils not uncommon in that country, and all sorts of events have not been registered in history, we can infer nothing from thence towards fixing the particular period of Joel's prophecy.

S. Jerome, followed by many others both ancients and moderns, believed Joel to have been contemporary with Hosea, according to this rule laid down by him[2], that when there is no certain proof of the time wherein any Prophet lived, we are to be directed in our conjectures by the time of the preceeding Prophet, whose epoch is better known. But this rule is not always certain, and should not hinder us from following another system, if we have good reasons for doing so. The Hebrews maintain, that Joel prophesied under Manasseh, and think the Famine mentioned by him, to be the same as that which is taken notice of in Jerem. viii. 13. But if it be so, as there is probability enough it is, it must be said that Joel prophesied after Manasseh, since in the same place of Jeremiah, the Lord declares, that he is resolved to disperse his people amidst the nations, by reason of the sins committed by Manasseh, which implies that Manasseh was not then in being. We choose therefore rather to place Joel under Josiah King of Judah, in the same time with Jeremiah. Under the idea of an enemy's army, he represents a cloud of Locusts, which in his time fell upon Judea, and caused great desolation. This together with the Caterpillars and the Drought, brought a terrible Famine upon the land. God being moved with the calamities and prayers of his people, scattered the Locusts, and the wind blew them into the Sea; these misfortunes were succeeded by plenty and fertility. After this the Prophet foretold the day of the Lord, [Joel ii. 2, 3, &c.] and the vengeance which he was to exercise in the valley of Jezreel. He speaks of the Teacher of Righteousness, whom God was [Joel ii. 23.] to send; of the Holy Spirit, which was to descend upon all flesh. He says that [Joel ii. 28, 29.] Jerusalem will eternally be inhabited; that Salvation will come out from thence; that [Joel ii. 32.] whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord will be saved. All this relates to the [Joel ii. 28, 29.] new Covenant and the time of the Messiah.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. Sanctus Joel apud Ebræos post Osee ponitur: & sicut ibi sub nomine Ephraim ad decem tribus confertur vaticinium, quæ vel Samaria vel Israel sæpe memorantur: Sic in hunc Prophetam omne quod dicitur ad tribum Juda, & ad Jerusalem, pertinere credendum est, & nullam omnino Israelis, id est decem tribuum, in hoc fieri mentionem. Hi- eron. in Joel i. 1.

Hieronym. Præfat. in omnes Prophetas. In quibus autem tempus non præfertur in titulo sub illis eos regibus prophetâsse, sub quibus & hi, qui ante eos habent titulos, prophetaverunt. 10 D have

Joelah

JOELAH, the son of Jerobam, was one of those who espoused David's party in the time of his disgrace, 1 Chr. xii. 7.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joezer

JOEZER, one of the gallant officers in [1 Chr. xi. 45.] David's army, 1 Chr. xii. 6.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joha

JOHA, one of the bravest men in David's army.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Johanan (I)

I. JOHANAN, the son of Careah, being informed that Ishmael, the son of [2 Kings xxv. 23. Jer. xl. 15, 16.] Nethaniah, was come to Mizpah, with a design of killing Gedaliah, who had been left there by Nebuchadnezzar to govern the remnant of the people, who continued in the land; Johanan, I say, gave intelligence of it to Gedaliah, and made an offer of going himself to kill Ishmael, and by that means prevent the execution of his purpose. But Gedaliah refusing to credit him, was soon after massacred; in the year of the world 3417, before J. C. 583, before the vulgar Æra 587.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Johanan (II)

II. JOHANAN, the son of Josiah, 1 Chr. iii. 15. It is probable that Johanan died without issue, since the Scripture speaks no more of him.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Johanan (III)

III. JOHANAN, the son of Eliænai, one of the descendants of David by Zerobabel, 1. Chr. iii. ultimo.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Johanan (IV)

IV. JOHANAN, High Priest of the Jews, son of Azariah the High Priest, and father to another Azariah, 1 Chr. vi. 9, 10. Some believe him to be the same as Jehoiada, the father of Zechariah, in the reign of Joash, king of Judah, 2 Chr. xix. 11, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

John (I)

I. JOHN, in Hebrew, Johanan, signifies gentle, agreeable, or the grace of God, agreeable to God. The scripture tells us of several illustrious men whose name was John, Joanne, or Jochanan. The first is [1 Macc. ii. 1.] John, the father of Mattathias, the celebrated Maccabee, who was descended from the Priests of Joiarib's family.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

John (II)

II. JOHN, surnamed Gaddis, the son of Mattathias above mentioned, and brother of Judas, Jonathan and Simon, Maccabees: John Maccabee was treacherously killed by the sons of Jambri, as he was conducting the baggage belonging to his brethren the Maccabees, to the [1 Macc. ix. 36.] Nabathites their Allies.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

John Hircanus (III)

III. JOHN Hircanus, the son of Simon the Maccabee. See above Hircanus.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

John the Baptist (IV)

IV. JOHN the Baptist, the forerunner of our Lord Jesus Christ, and son of Zechariah and Elizabeth, was born in the Year of the world 4000, about six months before Jesus Christ. His birth, name, and employment were foretold to his father Zechary, when he was in the Temple of Jerusalem, where he was performing his functions as a Priest, according to the rank [Luke i. 10, 11, &c.] of his family. The Angel Gabriel appeared to him while he was in the Holy, and declared to him, that he would have a son whose name should be John, and whose birth would be the cause of universal Joy to all the world, that this son should be great in the sight of the Lord, that he should drink no wine, nor any other liquor proper to intoxicate, and should be filled with the Holy Spirit from his mother's womb; that he should convert many of the Children of Israel to the Lord; lastly, that he should come in the spirit and power of Elias, to bring back the children into the way of their fathers, and to prepare a perfect people for the Lord.

Zechary, who was old, and whose wife likewise was too far advanced in years to have children, expressed some diffidence in this matter: but the angel assured him of the truth of his promise, and said to him, I am Gabriel, deputed to you in order to declare this news to you; and this very moment you shall become dumb, until the day in which you shall see the accomplishment of what I tell you. Accordingly he became dumb that very instant; and returning home, Elizabeth conceived. But she kept herself concealed for five months, as if she had been ashamed of her being with child. In the sixth month, the same angel Gabriel was sent to the Virgin Mary, to declare to her, that she should be the mother of the Messiah; and to prove the truth of his promise, he told her, that Elizabeth was six months gone with child. Hereupon Mary went with all expedition to the mountains of Judea, to visit Elizabeth. As soon as she came into Zechary's house, and saluted Elizabeth, the child, whom as yet she bore in her womb, leaped with joy; and she was filled with the Holy Ghost. She raised her voice, blessed her cousin Mary, and said, Whence comes this happiness to me, that the mother of my Lord should visit me ?

The time of Elizabeth's delivery being come, her relations and neighbours rejoic'd at it: and upon the eighth day, when the child was circumcised, they called him by his father's name Zecharias: but his mother told them no, his name should be John. They answered her, that there was no one of this name in her family; and they consulted the child's father by signs, and asked him how he would have him called. He desiring a writing-table to be given him, wrote in it, his name is John. At the same time his tongue was loosed, and he began to praise God in a fine hymn, wherein, after he had blessed the Lord, he addressed himself to young John Baptist, and said, And thou, Child, shalt be called the Prophet of the Highest, for thou shalt go before the Lord to prepare his ways, to give knowledge of salvation unto his people, that they may obtain the remission of their sins. Now the child grew, and was strengthned in spirit, and dwelt in the wilderness till the day of his manifestation to Israel.

Some old apocryphal monuments import, that Herod making search after Jesus Christ and S. John, with an intention of putting them to death, Elizabeth fled with her son to the mountains, and after wandering and climbing a great while, she grew extremely fatigued, and said, O mountain of God, receive the mother with her son; hereupon the mountain immediately opened, then closed, and so secured them from the pursuits of Herod. An angel kept them company, and gave them light, while they were in this obscure corner. We read in John Moschus, that S. John dwelt in a cave, in a place called Sapsas, about a mile beyond Jordan. S. Chrysostom[1] and S. Jerom[2] believe, that he was brought up from his infancy in the wilderness. But S. Paulinus informs us, that [Proto-Evang. Jacobi. n. 22. Vide & Petr. Alex. c.13.] he spent the first years of his life in his father's house, where he learned the law of Moses; and that as soon as his body was strengthned with age, he retired into the wilderness, where he abode without eating or drinking any thing, as is declared [Matth. xi. 18.] by Jesus Christ; that is to say, eating and drinking so little, and things so improper to please the appetite and taste, that in some sort it might be said, that he did not eat at all, making use only of wild honey and locusts, and being clothed only with camels hair and a leathern girdle, which he wore [Matth. iii. 4. Luke i. 30.] about his loins.

After S. John had passed above thirty years in the wilderness, God manifested him to the world, in the fifteenth year of Tiberius, which is the eight and twentieth year of the common Æra; and the holy Forerunner began to exercise his ministry, by publishing the coming of the Messiah. He went therefore to the country about Jordan, and beyond this river, preaching repentance, saying, that the kingdom of heaven was at hand, that the ax was already laid to the root of the tree, giving to all persons who came to see him such instructions as were necessary in their respective conditions. He obliged them to confess their sins, and at the same time plunged them in the river Jordan, telling them, that they should believe in him who came after him, who would baptize them with the Holy Ghost and with fire, and would grant to them the pardon of their sins. From this Baptism S. John derived the surname of Baptist or Baptizer. There were some persons who adhered to him, and became his disciples, exercising themselves in acts of repentance, and preaching it to others: and some of his disciples afterwards followed our Saviour.

The virtue of John Baptist was so eminent throughout all the country, that many of the Jews took him for the Messiah: but he plainly declared, that he was not so. Nevertheless, he was not as yet acquainted with the person of Jesus Christ; only the Holy Ghost had told him, that this was he whom he should see the Holy Spirit descend [John i. 37, 40. Luke xi. 1, v. 3. Luke iii. 15. John i. 31, 34. Matth. iii. 13, 14, 15.] and rest upon. And when Jesus Christ came to present himself, in order to receive baptism from him, as well as other Jews, John, who by the assistance of a supernatural light, discerned who he was, excused himself, saying, I stand in need rather of being baptized and purified by thee. But Jesus prevailed with him to baptize him, saying, that he would fulfil all righteousness. This fell out in the 30th year of the common Æra. John the Baptist was then about four and thirty, and Jesus Christ about three and thirty years of age. Some time after, the Jews sent a deputation to John, desiring to be informed by him, whether he were the [John i. 19—24.] Messiah. But he answered, that he was not the Christ, nor Elias, nor a Prophet, and that he was only the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare the way of the Lord: that besides, he whom they sought was in the midst of them, and they knew him not. The next day Jesus coming to him, John said publickly before all the world, Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world.

Herod Antipas having married his brother's wife while he was still living, had occasioned great scandal throughout all the land, John Baptist spoke of it with his usual liberty and vigour, reproved Herod for it to his face, and told him, that it was not lawful for him to have his brother's wife (from whom he had forcibly taken her) while his brother was yet alive. Herod, incens'd [Mark vi. 17,18.] at this freedom, commanded him to be taken into custody, and imprisoned in [Joseph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 2. p. 627.] the castle of Machærus. This, in all probability, happened about the end of the thirtieth year of the vulgar Æra, and Josephus relates the motive of his imprisonment in this manner: " John, " surnamed the Baptist, was, says he, a " man of piety, who exhorted the Jews " with great zeal to embrace virtue, and

" perform all the duties of justice to one " another.—— He was followed by a " great multitude of people, who were " delighted with hearing his discourses; " and the Jews appeared disposed to enter upon any enterprize, that he should " recommend to them. Herod grew uneasy at it, and was apprehensive that " he would stir up some sedition; he " thought therefore that it was necessary " to prevent this evil, lest, if he should " too long defer to remedy it, he might " one day or other have reason to repent."

[Mark vi. 20, 21, &c.] He remained a good while in prison, and his disciples did not forsake him in this condition. Even Herod respected and feared him, knowing that he was very much beloved by the people; he heard him upon many things, and sometimes followed his advice. [Mark vi. 19, 20. Hieronym. in Rufin. l. 3. c. 11.] But Herodias, who was continually afraid lest Herod should set him at liberty, sought a favourable opportunity of putting him to death. At last she met with it. Upon a certain time when Herod made a great entertainment for his friends upon his birth day, she sent her daughter Salome, whom she had by Philip her lawful husband, into the hall, where this feast was prepared, there [Matth. xiv. 12. Theodoret. Hist. Eccl. l. 3. c. 3. Chronic. Alex. p. 686. Rufin. hist. c. 27. Theophan. p. 64.] to dance before the king and his guests. She acquitted herself so much to this Prince's satisfaction, that he promised to give her any thing that she should ask of him. She immediately went out and told her mother, and desiring to know what it was that she should ask, Herodias instructed her to demand the head of John the Baptist. She returned therefore to the room wherein the company was entertained, and said to the King, Give me now, I pray thee, the head of John the Baptist in this charger. Herod was very much disturbed at her request; but not daring to be worse than his word before all this company, he gave orders for the beheading John the Baptist; which orders were immediately executed, the head given to Salome, and by her carried to her mother; who, as it is said, pierced his tongue with her bodkin. The death of John the Baptist happened, as is believed, about the end of the thirty first year of the vulgar Æra, or in the beginning of the thirty second. The entertainment mentioned by the Gospel, was made probably at Machærus, where S. John was in prison, and where his head was cut off.

The Greek and Latin Churches celebrate the festival of S. John's beheading on the 29th of August. The disciples of John being informed of his death, gave notice of it to Jesus Christ, and came and carried away his body. The Gospel does not tell us where they buried him; but in the time of Julian the Apostate, his tomb was shewn at Samaria, where the inhabitants of the country open'd it, and burnt part of his bones; the rest were saved by some Christians, who carried them to an Abbot of Jerusalem, named Philip. This Abbot made a present of them to S. Athanasius, and S. Athanasius put them in a well, till they were lodged in a more honourable place. Lastly, some time after, Theodosius having demolished the Temple of Serapis, a Church was built in the room of it in honour of S. John Baptist, and here these holy relicks were placed, in 395 or 396. S. John's tomb, which was at Samaria, continued to be frequented, and God wrought [Hieron. Ep. 17.] there many miracles. While S. Paula was in this city, she was witness to the wonders which God performed there by the merits of S. John. We shall not enlarge here on the several translations of his Relicks, and particularly of his head ; this does not belong properly to a Dictionary of the Bible, because it refers to times much later than all our sacred Books. I have spoken of the Baptism of John the Baptist, and of the Christians of that name in the Dissertation upon Baptism prefixed to S. Mark, page 52, &c.

The eastern people have preserved many circumstances of S. John Baptist's life, which are of no great authority among those, who in historical matters admit of nothing but what comes from some good hands, and originals which may be depended on. We read, for example, in the chapter of the Alcoran, intitled, Of Amram's family, that Zachary being at his prayers in Mary's oratory, whereof he had at that time the custody, the Angels, by God's direction, promised him a son, who should be called Jabla, because he would verify and confirm the Word; and that he should become the Head and High Priest of the Messiah's religion; that he should keep himself pure and holy, and should at last be one of the greatest Prophets that ever sprung from the stock of good men.

[Bibl. Orient. p. 471.] They believe farther, that S. John's head being cut off by order of the Jewish King, the blood which issued from his body could not be stanched, till God had revenged it by bringing great desolation on the Jewish people. This expression, the blood was not stanched, is probably figurative, and may signify, that his blood cried for, and demanded vengeance, till the time of the desolation of Jerusalem by the Romans.

The Church of S. John Baptist at Damascus is celebrated, not only among Christians, but likewise among Mussulmen, and Sabians, or Mendai Jabia, commonly called Christians of S. John. This Church was at first dedicated in honour of Zachary, S. John's father; but it had the name of S. John Baptist after that the head of this Forerunner of our Lord was found at Emesa in the time of Theodosius the younger. Some will have it, that the Sabians built it, and there kept the head of S. John Baptist hanging at the roof: and they tell us, that the Caliph Abdalmelech was desirous to purchase this Church of the Christians; and that he did not take possession of it by force, till they had refused forty thousand Dinars, or gold pistoles, which he had offered them: this Church is at present a Mosque. The Caliph, who took possession of it, for many years laid out the revenue of Syria in embellishing it.

The Mahometans cite several expressions of the Gospel as used by S. John, tho they really were Jesus Christ's. They have likewise composed Dialogues between Jesus Christ and S. John Baptist, all which proves the veneration which this people have for him.

Baptism of S. John Baptist. We have already touched upon it in the article Baptism.

There are three questions proposed relating to the Baptism of S. John. First, whether he had power to remit Sins? Secondly, whether the repentance preached by S. John Baptist as a disposition for his Baptism, was barely sorrow for Sin, without any necessity of its being accompanied with satisfactory works? Thirdly, whether the confession of Sins practised by those who were to receive his Baptism, was a bare acknowledgment of their faults, without entring into the detail of particular Sins committed by them?

As to the first difficulty, it is indubitable, that the Baptism of S. John did not remit Sins by any virtue which was peculiar to it. It only disposed people to receive forgiveness by our Saviour's Baptism; it promised pardon, but did not grant it. Agebatur baptismus pœnitentiæ, quasi candidatus remissionis & sanctificationis [Tertull. l. de Baptismo. a Aug. l. 5. contra Donat.] in Christo subsecuturæ, says Tertullian. After the Baptism of John, that of Jesus Christ was still necessary, says S. Austin, if the obtaining the remission of Sins were desired. Joannes tali Baptismo pertingebat, quo percepto esset Baptisma etiam Dominicum necessarium. They who received the Baptism of John were not spiritually born again, and procured not the forgiveness of Sins: this grace was confer'd [Aug. Enchiridion de fide, spe, & charitate c. 49. Origen. in Joan. c. 8.] by virtue only of our Lord's Baptism. Non enim renascebantur qui Joannis Baptismate baptizabantur, sed quodam præcursorio illius ministerio qui dicebat, Parate viam Domini, huic uni, in quo renasci poterant, parabantur. Regeneration was performed not with John but with Jesus Christ, says Origen. Regeneratio non apud Joannem sed apud Jesum per Apostolos fiebat.

If any one received remission of his Sins in John's Baptism, it was by virtue of his Faith in the Messiah, by the merit of his Contrition and Charity. The Baptism of S. John had no more power in this respect than the Sacrifices and Oblations of the Old Law. That which distinguished it was, its pointing out the Messiah then present and already come, whereas the Sacraments of the Mosaick Law proclaimed him at a distance, and only promised his coming. [Matth. iii. 8.]

The repentance which John preached to the Jews required a sincere return to God, a change of heart, and a renovation of life. Bring forth fruits meet for repentance, said he to the Pharisees, and think not to say within yourselves, we have Abraham to our Father—The ax is laid to the root of the tree; every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. I baptize you with water, but he who cometh after me is mightier

10 E than I— His fan is in his hand, and he shall thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he shall burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire. He is not satisfied with fair appearances; he requires good fruits, and good works. Of this he shewed them an example in the whole conduct of his life, in the rigour which he practised upon himself, in his outward appearance, the austerity of his diet, and the roughness of his dress. And when the people asked him, what they were to do? he [Luke iii. 10,11,12, 13.] said to them, Let him who hath two coats give one to him that wanteth it. To the Publicans he said, Exact no more than that which is appointed you. To the Soldiers, do violence to no man, and be content with your wages. This is what he calls fruits meet for repentance, and sincere conversion of their manners.

The confession which preceded S. John's Baptism was without doubt of the same nature with the common confessions made in his nation, in like manner as his Baptism was an imitation of the Purifications and Baptisms preached under the Law. Now the confessions of the Israelites in the Temple, while they put their hands upon the head of their victims, that of the High Priest upon the day of solemn expiation, and those of the Israelites on the same day, were all made particularly. They were not satisfied with declaring themselves in general culpable, and sinners, they confessed circumstantially the several faults committed by them, excepting those which might expose them to the penalty of death. This is the opinion of Maldonat, Jansenius, Estius, and in particular of Grotius, on the third chapter of S. Matthew.

The Jews have still at this day the [Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 20.] custom of confessing themselves much after the same manner as the Roman Catholicks.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Chrysost. homil. x. in Matt. p. 117. & xxi. p. 437.

Hieronym. contra Lucifer. c. 3.

Christians of S. John

CHRISTIANS OF S. JOHN. We have spoken of them under this title.

V. S. JOHN the Evangelist, was a native of Bethsaida in Galilee, and the son of Zebedee and Salome. He was by profession a [Chrysost. in Joan. homil. 17. & Epiph. hæres. 51.] fisherman. Some were of opinion that he had been a disciple of John the Baptist, before he was Jesus Christ's: but there is no good proof of this opinion. He was brother to S. James Major, and both of them were called by our Saviour the sons of thunder, Boanerges, in all probability by reason of their vivacity, and the greatness of their faith. It is believed that S. John was the youngest of the Apostles. He might be five or six and [Paulin.Ep. 386. Hieron. Ep.1. p. 4.] twenty years of age, when he began to follow Jesus Christ in the year of J.C. 30. There are some who believe, that he was the bridegroom at the marriage of Cana[1], and that he always kept his virginity[2]: but this last opinion is better supported by Antiquity, than that which asserts him to have been the Bridegroom at the marriage of Cana.

[John xxiii. 25.xxi.20. Matth. xx. 22. Mark x. 38,39.] Our Saviour had always a particular tenderness and friendship for him; and S. John himself commonly describes himself by the name of the Disciple whom Jesus loved. Jesus Christ gave him peculiar marks of his affection, when he took him with him that he might be present at his Transfiguration; and at his last Supper he permitted him to lye in his bosom, and discovered to him, who it was that should betray him. The mother of S. John the Evangelist, encouraged probably by the friendship which Jesus expressed for her two sons, James and John, took the liberty to desire of him, that he would seat them in his kingdom, one on his right the other at his left hand: but our Saviour addressing himself to the two brothers, said to them, Are ye able to drink of the cup which I shall drink of? They answered, We are able. Jesus said to them, Ye shall indeed drink of my cup, but to bestow the places which ye ask in my kingdom, does not belong to me but to my Father.

[Matth. xxvi. 37. John xix. 26.] Jesus Christ chose only S. Peter, S. James, and S. John, to be witnesses of his agony, and voluntary sadness in the Olive -garden. The last of these did not withdraw himself when the Soldiers came to seize his Master; and it is believed, that he was the Disciple who followed him to Caiaphas's house, where he went in, and some time after introduced S. Peter[3]. He attended our Saviour even to the Cross; and Jesus Christ observing him at the foot of it, said to his mother Mary, Woman, behold thy son; and afterwards to this Disciple, Behold thy mother. And from that time S. John looked upon the virgin as his mother, and took care of her till her death. After the Resurrection of our Saviour, S. John being employed in fishing upon the Sea of Tiberias with other Disciples, Jesus appeared upon the shore; S. [John xxi. 1—7.] John first discovered him, and told Peter of it. When they came ashore, they dined with Jesus Christ, and after dinner, as S. John was following him, Peter asked Jesus, What was to become of him? speaking of S. John; Jesus answered, If I will that he stay till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me. Hereupon the Disciples believed, that Jesus had said he should not die; the rumour whereof spread among the Faithful; and many still believed it at the time when S. John wrote his Gospel, and long after: many also have affirmed, that he did not die. But S. John himself destroys this opinion, which indeed contradicts the most authentick monuments of the Church. The Reader may consult our Dissertation upon the death of S. John the Evangelist, the Martyrology of Florentinus, and the 17th note of M. de Tillemont upon the Evangelist S. John, t. 1. p. 640.

We know very little concerning the life of S. John, till Domitian's persecution. Within few days after the Apostle had received the Holy Ghost, S. Peter and S. John went to the Temple, and there cured a man, who had been lame from his mother's [Acts iii. 1—10.] womb. This miracle was the occasion of their being put in prison. The next day they were set at liberty, and forbidden to [Acts v. 18, &c.] speak of Jesus Christ; but they continued preaching as before; whereupon they were again imprisoned with the rest of the Apostles. But God miraculously delivered them out of Jail. And as they did not cease to preach Jesus Christ, the Magistrates took them into custody, obliged them to appear before them, and reproved them for persisting still to discourse of Jesus, notwithstanding their prohibition. The Apostles, without shewing any consternation, answered them, that it was necessary rather to obey God than men. They were inclined to put them to death; but a Senator, whose name was Gamaliel, desiring that the Apostles might be ordered to withdraw, he discoursed with so much prudence to the other members of the Sanhedrim, that they commanded the Apostles to be scourged only, and so dismissed them.

[Acts viii. 5——12.] S. Peter and S. John were afterwards sent to Samaria, in order to confer the Holy Ghost on those whom Philip the Deacon had there converted and baptized. [Gal. ii. 9. Acts xv. 7, &c.] S. John was likewise of the Council of Jerusalem, where he behaved himself as became one of the pillars of the Church. It is believed that he went and preached to the Parthians, and his first Epistle has been sometimes cited under the name of the [Aug. qu. in Evang. l. 2. c. 39. See Estius and our Comment upon this Epistle.] Epistle to the Parthians. The Indians [Hieronym. de viris illust. trib. c. 9. Tertull. contra Marcion. l.

4. c. 5.] maintain, that he published the Gospel in their Country: but there is no question of his preaching in Asia, and of his abiding some time at Ephesus, and the places round about. Thither he carried the Blessed Virgin, who died there. We do not know in what year particularly he came into this country; but he could scarce arrive there, in order to make it his place of constant residence, before the year of J. C. 66. S. Jerom says, that he founded and governed all the Churches of Asia; and Tertullian writes, that he first established the episcopal order in this country. Which is not to be understood in so rigorous a manner as to believe, that S. Peter and S. Paul were not the founders of several Churches there, and that Timothy did not govern the Church of Ephesus, even while S. John was in this Province.

The Emperor Domitian having declared war against the Church, in the fifteenth year of his reign, and in that of J. C. 95. S. John the Evangelist was banished from Ephesus, and carried to Rome, where he was plunged into boiling oil, without being any way incommoded by it. When he was taken out he was more vigorous and clean than when he was put in. From [Tertull. præscript. c. 36. Hieronym. in] thence he was sent in exile to the Isle of Patmos, in the Egean sea. There he wrote his Apocalypse or Revelations, whereof we have spoken under a particular title. He did not continue two years in banishment. Domitian having been killed in the month of September, and the year 96, his successor Nerva recalled all the exiles who had been banished by his Predecessor; and S. John returned to Ephesus in the year of J. C. 97, being then about ninety years of age. The Bishops and Christians of Asia having pressed him earnestly to write the Gospel, containing what he had heard of our Saviour, [Euseb. l. 6. c. 14. Hist. Eccl. Hieronym. in Matth. &c.] he complied with their request; but did not begin till after a fast and publick prayers. His principal care in this undertaking was, to relate such things as might be of use in confirming the Divinity of the Son, in opposition to certain Hereticks of that time who denied it.

We have also three Epistles written by the same Apostle. The first, as we have observed already, is sometimes cited by the name of the Epistle to the Parthians, and was never contested. The style and sentiments of S. John are to be perceived in every period. The two others have been disputed[4]. The first of these two last is addressed to a Lady of quality, whose name was Electa; or otherwise Electa is a symbolical name to denote some Christian Church, to which another Church wrote. For I have some suspicion that this Epistle is only a Letter of recommendation, which was usually given to the Faithful, who went from one Church to another, and was sometimes necessarily written in an obscure manner, for fear of its falling into the hands of Unbelievers. The third Letter is directed to Caius, whom S. John praises for using hospitality towards the Faithful, and exhorts him to continue this pious practice towards such persons as are imployed in the service of the Church, and refused to receive any thing from the Gentiles.

S. John lived to a very great age, so that he could scarce go to the assembly of the Faithful without being carried by his Disciples; [Hieronym. in Galat. vi.] and as he was no more able to make any long discourses, his custom was to say in all assemblies, to the people, My dear children love one another. At last they grew weary of it; and when he was told so, his answer was, This is what the Lord commands you; and this, if you do it, is sufficient. [Aug. Serm. 253. c. 4. Chronic. Euseb. Epiphan. hæres. 51.] He died quietly at Ephesus, in the third year of Trajan, and the hundredth of Jesus Christ. He might be then, according to S. Epiphanius, ninety four years of age. He was older in the opinion of some, who say, he was ninety eight or ninety nine, or as others, an hundred and four, or an hundred and six, or an hundred and twenty. [Hieronym. de Viris illust. trib. c. 9.] He was buried near the city, and several of the Fathers have observed, that his Sepulchre was there[5]. The Council of Ephesus takes occasion to commend this city from [Concil. Ephes. t. 3. Concil. p. 573. & 616.] its possessing the body of this blessed Divine; and Pope Celestine exhorted the Fathers, who were there assembled, to follow the instructions of S. John, whose relicks they had the happiness to have in their keeping. S. Austin[6], and after him Gregory of Tours, and Willebaldus, speak of a certain powder which was to be seen upon S. John's tomb, and seemed to be produced afresh every day, in proportion as it was taken away. We do not repeat here what we have already remarked concerning their opinion, who maintain that S. John is not dead.

Besides the Gospel, Revelations, and the three Epistles of S. John, which the Church receives, there are some other apocryphal writings attributed to him; for example, a Book of his supposed travels, [Acts xii. 12. Athanas. in Synopf. Epiphan. hæres. 47.] another of Acts, which the Encratites, Manichees, and Priscillianists, made use of; a Book concerning the death and assumption of the Virgin, a Creed supposed to have been given by the Blessed Virgin and S. John to Gregory of Neocæsarca. This Creed was cited in the [Aug. de Fide, c. 4. & 38.] fifth Oecumenical council: but the acts and history just now mentioned, are acknowledged to be apocryphal, and not worthy of any credit. S. John is generally [Nyssen. vita Thaumat. p. 545, 547. Vide Baron. an. 233. § 19. Apud Euseb. l. 5. c. 24. Hieronym. de viris illust. trib. c. 45.] firnamed the Divine, by reason of the sublimity of his knowledge and Revelations, and particularly because of the begining of his Gospel. Polycrates Bishop of Ephesus affirms, that he wore a plate of gold upon his forehead, as a Priest and Apostle of Jesus Christ. He is painted with a cup and a serpent issuing out of it, because some Hereticks having given him poison in a glass, he made the sign of the cross over it, and all the venom was dispel'd under the form of a serpent. This miracle is related in the spurious Prochorus, who calls himself a Disciple of St. John.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Beda in Joan. Smaragd. Abb. S. Mich. in fest. S. Joan. Præfationes vulgo præfixæ Evangel. & Apoc. Soto. Lyr. Carthus. D. Thom. &c.

Ita PP. passim. Epiph. hæres. 58. Ambros. de Symbol. c. 30. de Instit. virg. c. 72. Chrysost. de virg. c. 82. Paulin. Ep. 43. Hieronym. August. alii.

John xviii. 15, 16. Vide Chrysost. homil. 82. in Matt. Hieron. Ep. 16. Aug. homil. 113. in Joan. ter

Translators' note. But these, with the other Catholick Epistles, Clemens Alexandrinus, in his Ὑποτυπώσεων, ranks among the sacred writings. Tertullian has citations from the second Epistle, and appeals to it as canonical. And Origen, tho he says it was by some disputed, whether the second and third Epistles of S. John S. John were genuine, that is, whether they were written by S. John the Apostle (for some would have it, that one John a Presbyter, a Disciple of Christ, and contemporary with S. John, was the Author of them) yet himself gives the point up, and acknowledges them to be the Apostle's. See Euseb. Hist. l. 6. c. 14. Tertull. de carne Christi, c. 24.

Dionys. Alex. apud Euseb. lib. 7. c. 25. Aug. homil. 124. in Joan. Chrysost. Hieronym. alii. b

Aug. in Joan. homil. 124. Greg. Turon: de glor. Mart. c. 30.

John Mark (VI)

VI. JOHN MARK, cousin to S. Barnabas and his Disciple, the son of a Christian woman whose name was Mary, who had a house in Jerusalem, where the Faithful and the Apostles generally met. There they were at prayers in the night, when S. Peter, who was delivered out of prison by an Angel, came and knocked at the door. In this house the celebrated Church of Sion was said afterwards to have been established.

[Alex. apud Sur. 11. Junii. Acts xv. 36,37,&c. Acts xii. 15. xiii. 13.] John Mark, whom some very improperly confound with the Evangelist S. Mark, adhered to S. Paul and S. Barnabas, and followed them in their return to Antioch; he continued in their company and service till they came to Perga in Pamphylia. But then seeing that they were undertaking a longer journey, he left them and returned to Jerusalem. This happened in the year 45 of the common Æra.

Some years after, that is to say, in the year 51, Paul and Barnabas preparing to return into Asia, in order to visit the Churches which they had founded there, Barnabas was of opinion, that John Mark should accompany them in this journey; but S. Paul would not consent to it: upon which occasion these two Apostles separated. Paul went to Asia, and Barnabas with John Mark to the isle of Cyprus. What John Mark did after this journey we do not know, till we find him at Rome [Col. iv. 10.] in the year 63, performing signal services for S. Paul during his imprisonment. The Apostle speaks advantageously of him in his Epistle to the Colossians: Marcus Sister's son to Barnabas saluteth you; if he come unto you receive him. He makes mention of him again in his Epistle to Philemon [Philem. 24.] ; written in the year 62, at which time he was with S. Paul at Rome. But in the year 65, he was with Timothy in Asia; and S. Paul writing to Timothy, desires him to [2 Tim. iv. 11.] bring him to Rome, adding that he was useful to him for the ministry of the Gospel.

In the Greek and Latin Churches the festival of S. John Mark is kept on the 27th of September; some say he was bishop of Biblis in Phœnicia. The Greeks give him the title of Apostle, and say, that the sick were cured by his shadow only. It is very probable, that he died at Ephesus, [Euseb. l. 3. c. 39. & l. 7. c. 25. Chry-sost. orat. 67. p. 504.] where his tomb was very celebrated. The year of his death, and the particular kind of it, we are strangers to. He is sometimes called simply John or Mark. We shall not collect all that is said of him in apocryphal and uncertain Authors.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

John of Giscala (VII)

VII. JOHN of Giscala, the son of one Levi, and a native of Giscala in Galilee. He first of all defended the town of Giscala against the Romans during the last war which Vespasian waged against the [Joseph. de Bello. l. 4. c. 4. p. 858. Græco κεφ. n.] Jews. After the taking of this city, he came to Jerusalem, where he did abundance of mischief, and committed great violences, both in the Temple and the City. He pretended at first to embrace the Party of Ananus and the people, against the zealots or seditious, who were determined to carry on the war against the Romans. [De Bello. l. 4. c. 5. κεφ. ιδ' in Græco, p. 876.] But he went privately, and discovered to the zealots what resolutions Ananus and the honest men of his party had taken, for the preservation of the Commonwealth. He had the art of getting so far into their confidence, that they deputed him to the zealots, who were masters of the Temple, to mediate an accommodation between them. But instead of inclining them to peaceable measures, he advised them to send for the Idumæans to their assistance against Ananus and those in his interest. The Idumæans entered [Joseph. de Bello. l. 4. c. 7.] the City and the Temple, and after they had put to death Ananus, and some other principal persons of the City, they returned to their own home, loaded with Spoil which they had taken in Jerusalem.

In the mean time the zealots were divided. John of Giscala had a powerful party amongst them; Eleazar the son of Simon had another. The latter observing that he was not the strongest, sent for Simon [Joseph. de Bello. l. 6. c. 1. p. 904. De Bello. l. 7. seu 45 in Græco, p. 969.] the son of Gioras, who was at the head of a troop of Banditti, who kept the field. Such was the condition of Jerusalem, when Titus laid siege to it, in the year of J. C. 70. Eleazar was master of the inner Temple; John of Giscala had possession of the outer parts and porches of the Temple; and Simon the son of Gioras was master of the upper City, and part of the lower. In this manner John was placed, as it were, between two fires, having Eleazar to resist on one side, and Simon on the other. These three parties, how much soever they were enemies to one another, united when they were to engage the Romans; and when the battle was over, began again to destroy one another. At the end of the siege, when the city was taken, John of Giscala made his escape, and got into a common sewer, where he continued some days: but being [De Bello. l. 4.] discovered and brought to Titus, he was condemned to perpetual imprisonment. This was too light a punishment for one, who had been polluted with so many crimes, and was the principal cause, as Josephus remarks, of the ruin of his country.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joiada

JOIADA or Judas, High Priest of the Jews, successor to Eliashib or Joashib, who lived under Nehemiah, about the year of the world 3550, before J. C. 450, before the vulgar Æra 454. Joiada was succeeded by Jonathan or John. We neither know the year exactly of Joiada's Pontificate, nor the time of his death.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joiarib

JOIARIB. See Joarib.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jokdeam

JOKDEAM, a city in the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 56.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jokmeam

JOKMEAM, a city of Ephraim, which was afterwards yielded up to the Levites [1 Chr. vi. 68.] of Kohath's family.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jokneam (I)

I. JOKNEAM, a city of Judah, 1 Kings iv. 12.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jokneam (II)

II. JOKNEAM, a city in the tribe of Zebulun, given to the Levites of Merari's family. Josh. xxi. 34. xix. 11. It is the same as Jokneam of Carmel, Josh. xii. 22. wherein it is sirnamed of Carmel, by reason of the neighbourhood of this Mountain.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jokshan

[See Bochart. Phaleg. l. 1. c. 15. Gen. xxv. 6.] JOKSHAN, the second son of Abraham and Keturah, Gen. xxv. 2. We are of opinion, that he peopled part of Arabia, and that he is the person whom the Arabians call Cabtan, and acknowledge to be the head of their Nation. He dwelt in the Provinces which lye to the east of Beersheba, that is to say, in part of Arabia the happy, and part of Arabia the Desart. This Moses expressly mentions: But unto the sons of the Concubines, which Abraham had, Abraham gave gifts, and sent them away from Isaac his son, eastward, unto the east country. Jokshan's sons were 10 F Sheba and Dedan, who dwelt in the same Country.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joktan

JOKTAN, the eldest son of Eber, who had for his portion all the Land which lies from Mesha, as thou goest unto Sephar, a mount of [Gen. x. 25, 26—30.] the east. The land of Mesha is that, in our opinion, wherein Masias was situated in Mesopotamia, and Sephar in the Country of [2 Kings. xvii. 24. xviii. 34. xix. 13.] Sepharvaims, or Sepharrenians, or Sapiors, or Serapares; for these all denote the same thing, that is to say, a people, who, according to Herodotus, were placed between the Colchians and the Medes. Now this was in the Provinces which Moses commonly describes by the name of Kedem or the East. We find footsteps in the same country, of the names of Joktan's sons; which is a farther confirmation of the opinion, just now proposed by us. The names of Joktan's thirteen sons were, Almohad, Shaleph, Hazarmaveth, Jerah, Hadoram, Uzal, Diklah, Obal, Abimeel, Sheba, Ophir, Havilah, and Jobab.

The Arabians firmly believe, that the country inhabited by them, was peopled in the beginning by Joktan the son of Eber, and brother of Peleg; who after the division of languages came and dwelt in this peninsula of Asia, which might have taken its name from Jarab the son of Joktan, or from a large plain in the Province of Tahama, which is called Arabat. These ancient Arabians lived in this country without mingling with other people, till Ishmael and his sons settled there, who mixing with the other Arabians were called Mos-arabes or Mosta-arabes, which signifies mixt Arabians, such as the Ishmaelites are, descended from Ishmael the son of Abraham and Hagar.

The same Authors suppose Joktan to have had several sons, as Joarab, the first author of the Arabic language, and from whom all the posterity of Joktan were called Arabians; Ad, the founder of the Adites, whom God in his anger extirpated; Thamond, Tasni and Giadis, all fathers of some old Tribes of Arabians; but that which embarasses us is, that the founders of these antient Tribes are called by names different from those which are described by Moses; which however did not hinder M. Bochart from placing in Arabia the sons of Joktan mentioned in the Scripture, wherein he has succeeded very well in the judgment of many learned men: in any thing so obscure, and at such distance of time from us, we should be satisfied with probabilities, and think ourselves obliged to those who take pains to clear the darkness of such remote Antiquity. The reader may consult M. Bochart on this matter, and if he has a mind to see some conjectures formed from another system, he may have recourse to our Comment upon Genesis.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joktheel

[ביקבצאל Bikabzeel.] JOKTHEEL, a city of Judah, Josh. xv. 33. It is perhaps the same as Jekabseel of the same Tribe, Neh. xi. 25. But this last is rather Kabzeel, Josh. xv. 21. & 2 Sam. xxiii. 20, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joktheel

JOKTHEEL, a rock which Amaziah King of Judah took from the Edomites, from the top whereof he threw down ten thousand Edomites, whom he had taken in battle. Eusebius is of opinion, that this rock [2 Kings xiv. 7. & 2 Chr. xxv. 5, 6, &c. Plin. l. 5. c. 24.] is the city of Petra, the Capital of Arabia Petræa. The battle, wherein the Edomites were defeated, was fought in the valley of Salt, which we place between Palmyra and Bozra[1]. Pliny says, that the solitudes of Palmyra, reach as far as the city of Petra. It is very probable therefore, that Amaziah pushed his conquest as far as this city, and gave it the name of Joktheel, that is to say, Obedience to the Lord; thereby signifying, that he understood the victory which he had obtained over the Edomites, to proceed from the obedience which he had paid to God.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

See the relation of Palmyra inserted in M. le Brun's voyage, p. 343.

Jona

JONA. This word signifies a dove; and [Matth. xvi. 17.] Barjona the son of a dove. But the best reading seems to be Bar-joanna or Jochanna, the son of John. The name of S. Peter's father was Joanna, or by abbreviation Jona.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jonadab (I)

I. JONADAB, was the son of Shimeah, David's Nephew, and cousin German to [2 Sam. xiii. 3, 4, 5.] Amnon. Jonadab was esteemed to be a very prudent Man, and was a great friend to Amnon the son of David. This young Prince falling ill of a languishing disease,[1] Jonadab asked the cause of it: Amnon declared to him in confidence, that he had a very violent passion for his sister Tamar, born of David, but by another mother. Jonadab said to him, keep your bed and feign yourself sick, and when the King your father comes to visit you, desire him to send your sister Tamar to prepare something for you, which you may receive from her hands. Amnon followed this wicked advice, and ravished Tamar, for which reason Absalom Tamar's brother, killed Amnon[2], and brought great affliction upon the whole royal family.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the world 2972, before J. C. 1028, before the vulgar Æra 1032.
In the year of the world 2974, before J. C. 1026, before the vulgar Æra 1030.

Jonadab (II)

II. JONADAB, the son of Rechab, head of the Rechabites. See Rechabites, and our Dissertation upon the Rechabites prefixed to Jeremiah. Jonadab the son of Rechab, lived in the time of Jehu King of Israel. He is thought to have added to the antient austerity of the Rechabites, that of abstinence from wine, to have introduced the neglect of cultivating their lands, and the custom of being satisfied with what their flocks and fields produced for their subsistence. We do not know where was Jonadab's usual habitation; but we read in the second book of Kings, that Jehu being [2 Kings x 15, 16.] raised up by God with a design of punishing the sins of Ahab's house, and coming to Samaria, to destroy all the false Prophets and Priests of Baal, he met Jonadab the son of Rechab, and having saluted him, said, is thine heart right, as my heart is with thy heart? Jonadab answered, it is. Then Jehu gave him his hand, took him up into his chariot, and said, Come with me, and see my zeal for the Lord. He carried him to Samaria, and executed before him all that remained of Ahab's family, and all the Ministers of Baal's Temple . This is all that we know of Jonadab's life. We shall speak of his Disciples in the article Rechabites.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jonah

JONAH, the son of Amittai, the fifth of the small Prophets, was a Galilean, a native [2 Kings xiv. 25.] of Gath-hepher, which is believed to be the same as Jotapata, celebrated for the siege which Josephus the historian there maintained against the Roman army, a little before the destruction of Jerusalem. Gath-hepher was situated in the land of Zebulon, where was the canton of Opher or Hepher. S. Jerom places it two miles from Sephoris, in the way towards Tiberias. Some Rabbins are of opinion, that Jonah was the widow's son of Sarepta, restored to life by [1 Kings xvii. 17.] Elijah; and this, because the widow receiving her son thus raised to life, said to the Prophet, Now I know that the Lord in thy mouth, is truth. This young man was called the son of Amittai, because Amath in Hebrew signifies truth, and by his resurrection, Jonah was in some sort the son of Elijah: which reason is certainly a very weak one. Nevertheless the opinion of Jonah's being the widow's son is very common. It is certain that Jonah lived in the reigns of Joash and Jeroboam[1], kings of Israel. He could not therefore be the widow's son of Sarepta, since the former of these two princes did not begin to reign till sixty years after the translation of Elijah. Others maintain, that Jonah was son to the Shunammite woman, whose child was raised from the dead by [2 Kings iv. 16, 17. 36, 37.] Elisha. But Shunam [Jer. xxxv. 6, 7.] and Gath-hepher are places too remote from one another; and we know certainly from Scripture, that Jonah was of Gath-hepher. Some are of opinion, that Jonah was the Prophet whom Elisha sent to Jehu, to anoint him king of Israel; but [2 Kings ix. 1, 2, 3, &c. Numb. xxxii. 12. Josh. xiv. 6, & 14.] this fact is not at all certain.

The Author of the Lives and Deaths of the Prophets, cited under the name of S. Epiphanius, and Dorothæus, and the Paschal Chronicle, say, that Jonah was a native of Cariathaim near Azotus upon the Mediterranean. In the same place this Prophecy is attributed to him, When innumerable people shall be seen coming from the west, then must we expect to see this city utterly destroyed; and that this city shall be destroyed when the stone shall be seen to weep with compassion. The nations coming from the west are the Romans, and the stone which weeps over Jerusalem is Jesus Christ, who is called in Scripture the corner stone, and wept over Jerusalem some few days before his passion. The same Epiphanius relates, that Jonah returning from Niniveh, and ashamed to see that his prediction was not followed with the execution he had foretold, retreated with his mother to the city of Sur or rather Tyre, where he dwelt till his death in the plain of Sear, and was buried in the cave of Cenezæus Judge of Israel. This Judge in all probability is Caleb, or Othniel. Caleb in several places is surnamed the Kenezite; but we do not read that he had been Judge of Israel. Othniel was the son of Kenaz, Josh. xv. 17. Judg. i. 13.

What we know with certainty of Jonah is as follows. God having commanded him [Jonah. i. 1, 2, &c.] to go to Niniveh, and there proclaim, that the cry of the inhabitants Sins was come up to Heaven, and they were threatned with approaching ruin, instead of obeying these orders, he resolved to fly away, and go to Tarsus in Cilicia. To this purpose he imbarked at Joppa; but the Lord having sent a violent tempest while he was upon the sea, the mariners with great fear cried each of them to his God, and threw what was in the vessel overboard, in order to lighten it. In the mean time Jonah slept in the hold; whereupon the Pilot went and waked him, and they who were in the ship cast lots to know how this tempest was occasioned; for it had surprized them at a time, when there was no appearance of any such thing. Having therefore cast lots, it fell on Jonah. They asked him who he was, and what he[2] might have done, to bring upon them such a storm. He answered them, that he was an Hebrew, that he worshipped the God of Heaven, that he was one of his Prophets, and fled from his presence to avoid going to Niniveh, whither he was sent. They asked him what was to be done, in order to secure themselves from shipwreck. He replied, Take me and throw me into the sea, and the tempest will cease.

God at the same time prepared a great [Jonah ii. 1, 2,—7, &c.] fish, to swallow up Jonah. This fish was according to some a Whale, or as others say, the lamia, canis carcharias, or Sea-dog. See our Dissertation on the fish which swallowed up Jonah, printed before the twelve small Prophets, and above the article, Fish, which swallowed up Jonah. The Prophet was received into the belly of the fish, and there continued three days and three nights. He cried unto the Lord, and the Lord heard him, and commanded the fish to return him, and cast him upon the shore. It is believed, that he was cast up again at the foot of a mountain, which projects a great way into the sea, between Berytus and Tripoli[3]. Others think it was upon the coasts of Cilicia, two leagues north from Alexandretta; which is much more probable than what some assert, that [Tavernier's journey to Persia, l. 2. c. 1. Joseph. Antiq. l. 9. c. 1.] the Fish carried him as far as to the Euxine sea; others into the Red sea; others again into the Persian Gulf; and others to the shore near Niniveh; wherein there is no appearance at all of truth.

After this the word of the Lord came a [Jonah iii. 1, 2, &c.] second time to Jonah, and directed him to go to Niniveh. Thither he went, and when he came into the city, which was three days journey in extent, that is to say, as Diodorus of Sicily remarks, about five and twenty [Diodor. Sicul. l. 2. Biblioth.] leagues in circumference, Jonah walked up and down the city a whole day, crying, in forty days Niniveh shall be destroyed. The Ninivites believed his word, and were converted: they appointed a publick fast to be observed, and from the meanest of the people to the greatest covered themselves with sackcloth. The king of Niniveh himself, who we take to be the father of Sardanapalus, known in profane Authors by the name of Anacyndaraxa or Anabaxarus, and in Scripture by the name of Phul, descended from his throne, and covered himself with sackcloth, and sat down upon ashes. He issued out orders, forbidding his people to take any nourishment, and to give either meat or drink to their cattle: He commanded both men and beasts to be clad in sackcloth, and that the inhabitants of the city should cry with all their might unto the Lord. God suffered himself to be moved with their repentance, and did not execute the sentence, which he had pronounced against them. Jonah was afflicted at this, and complained to God, saying, that he had always questioned, whether as being a God of [Jonah iv. 1, 2, 3, &c.] clemency and mercy he would not be flexible to their prayers. He desired of the Lord, that he would take him out of the world; and retiring out of the city, he made a little cover for himself shaded with leaves, till he saw what would happen to the city. The Lord caused a plant to grow over his cabbin, called in Hebrew, Kikajon[4]; and which some render gourd, others, a laurel, others, Palma Christi or Ricinus. See hereafter Kikajon. The next morning at break of day, the Lord sent a worm which bit the root of this plant, and made it wither; so that the Sun beginning to shine on Jonah's head, he found himself so faint, that he desired of God to take him out of the world. Hereupon the Lord said unto him, Doest thou think that thou hast reason to be thus concerned at the death of a plant, which cost thee nothing, which rises one night, and dies the next? And wouldst thou not have me pardon a city such as Niniveh, wherein there are an hundred and twenty thousand persons, who are not able to distinguish their right hand from their left, that is to say, where there are an hundred and twenty thousand children, who have not the use of reason, and besides have not offended God by any actual sins? As children make generally but the fifth part of the persons which cities are filled with we presume that there were in Niniveh above six hundred thousand persons.

After this Jonah returned in all probability from Niniveh into Judea. We have seen before what S. Epiphanius has said of his retreat to Tyre, and of his death in the plain of Saraa. The eastern people, who shew his tomb at Mosul[5], which they believe to be the same as Niniveh, are persuaded, that he died and was buried there. In S. Jerom's time his tomb was seen at Gath in Palestine; and the Turks still at this day shew his Mausolæum [Hieronym. Prolog. in Jonam.] at Gath-hepher, in a subterraneus Chapel, enclosed within a mosque. They believe [Adrichom. Quarum. Eugen. Roger. &c.] at Venice, that they have the body of Jonah in the Church of S. Apollinarius. His relicks likewise are to be seen at Nocera in the Kingdom of Naples, and in the Abby of Mount Cassin, where one of his ribs is shewn.

The Greeks have for a long time expressed their veneration for the person of Jonah. There was a Church and Monastery dedicated to this Prophet in the sixth Age. The Greeks keep his festival upon the 21*st* of September, and the Russians on the 22*d*. His name is not in the old Martyrologies of the Latins. About the fourteenth Age it was inserted on the 27*th* of January: but Baronius places it again upon the 21*st* of September. See Bollandus and Baillet.

We do not know when it was that [2 Kings xiv. 25. Hist. Relig. c. 4. p. 456. καὶ μὴ βουλόμενον δεσμώτην παρέπεμψε.] Jonah foretold how Jeroboam II. King of Israel should restore the Kingdom of Samaria to its former extent, from the entrance of Hamath as far as the Dead Sea. Whether this was before, or after his journey to Niniveh, we cannot tell. Our Saviour makes frequent mention of Jonah in the Gospel. He says, that the Ninivites [Matth. xii. 41. Luke xi, 32.] shall one day rise in Judgment against the Jews, and condemn them; because they repented at the first preaching of Jonah, and the Jews would not hearken to him, who was greater than Jonah. And when the Pharisees required a Sign of him to [Matth. xii. 39. 40. xvi. 4. Luke xi. 29, 30, 31.] prove his mission; his answer to them was, that he would give them no other, than that of the Prophet Jonah, that is to say, that of his resurrection, which would complete all his miracles, and render the Jews inexcusable in their hardness.

[Jonah i. 3.] The Scripture says that Jonah fled out of Judea from the presence of the Lord, and imbarked at Joppa in order to secure himself at Tarshish. Ut fugeret in Tharsis à facie Domini. He himself wrote these words, which seems to intimate his belief, that if he could get to Tarshish he should be out of the reach of God's power, and that God would not or could not send him from thence to Niniveh. If the Prophet thought so, his thoughts certainly were not according to knowledge. But we had better construe these words, Ut fugeret à facie Domini, as if their meaning was, that if the Prophet could get at a distance from Judea, he imagined God would think no more of sending him to Niniveh, but would appoint some other to go thither; because it is not usual with God, to pour forth the spirit of Prophecy out of the holy land; but in what manner soever it is interpreted, it is true that it implies some incongruity, and is not at all exact.

The Mahometans are acquainted with the history of Jonah, but their knowledge of it is imperfect. They say he was sent by God to the city of Mosul or Mossul upon [Bibl. Orient. p. 495. Jonæ Ben. Mathæi.] the Tigais. Mosul is built, they say, on the very place, or near it, where old Niniveh stood. The Prophet told them, that unless they were converted, their city would infallibly perish on a particular day mentioned by him. The day came, the city was not destroyed, and nothing was seen to happen which the Prophet had threatned them with, because the inhabitants had diverted the effects of God's power by their Repentance. Jonah to avoid the reproaches of the Nivivites resolved to fly. He embarked, and the vessel wherein he was, being under full sail, stop'd on a sudden, without any one's being able to move it forwards or backwards.

The mariners in this extremity resolv'd to throw one of the men belonging to the Ship overboard, imagining by this means to appease God, and so make the cause to cease which stop'd them; they drew lots, and the lot fell three times upon Jonah. He was cast into the Sea, and immediately a fish swallowed him up, and carryed him to the very bottom of the deep. Hereupon he repeated the prayer mention'd in the Alcoran, which the Mahometans think to be the most decent and efficacious one that is. O Lord there is no other God besides thee. Be praised for ever, I am a sinner but thou art merciful beyond all that I am able to say. The Mahometans called this Prophet the fishes companion, because he continued forty days in the belly of that which swallowed him up. As the true history reports it, he was only three days there. Theodoret says that Jonah having no inclination to go to Niniveh God sent him thither in chains.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Vide Hieronym. Præfat. in Jonam. Pseudo-Epiph. & Doroth. de morte & vita Prophet. Quæst. ad Antioch. q. 65. inter Opera S. Athanas. 2

In the year of the World 3120, before J. C. 880, before the vulgar Æra 884.

This is the tradition of the country, says F. Eugenius Roger. l. 1. c. 12.

קיקיוֹן Kikajon. 70. Κολοκύνθη Cucurbita, Alii Interpp. Græci Κισσός Hedera.

Translators' note. It is situated on the west side of the river Tigris, where was anciently only a suburb of old Niniveh, for the city itself stood on the east side of the river, where are to be seen some of its ruins of great extent even to this day. Mosul is only famous for being the seat of the Patriarch of the Nestorians, of which sect are most of the Christians in these parts, Prid. Connect. &c. Part 1. Book 1.

Jonathan (I)

I. JONATHAN, a Levite, the son of Gershom, and grandson of Moses, dwelt some time at Laish in the house of Micah, and there exercised his ministry as a Levite with an Ephod, and some superstitious images, which Micah had made for his own use, and placed in a chapel belonging to his [Judg. xvii. 7, 8, &c. xviii. 1, 2, & 30, 31.] house. But some years after, six hundred men of the Tribe of Dan, who were looking out for a new place of settlement in the territories of the Sidonians,[1] passing by that way, ingaged Jonathan to follow them. He therefore went with them and settled at Dan, where they of this Tribe placed the images which they had taken out of Micah's house, and appointed Jonathan their Priest, and his son to succeed him in his Office. Now their Idols remained at Dan, otherwise Laish, all the time that the Ark of the Lord was at Shiloh, and till the Captivity of Dan. The Ark was at Shiloh till the last Year of Eli the High Priest, which was that, wherein it was taken by the Philistines, in the year of the world 2888, before J. C. 1112, before the vulgar Æra 1116. The captivity of Dan may denote either the oppression of this Tribe by the Philistines, after the Ark was taken; or the more remarkable captivity of the ten Tribes, which were carried away captives beyond the Euphrates, by the Assyrian Kings. See our Comment upon Judges xviii. 31.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

[1] The year is uncertain. This fell out under the Judges, and in a time, when there was no King nor Ruler in Israel.

Jonathan (II)

II. JONATHAN, the son of Saul, a Prince of an excellent temper, and in all varieties of fortune a most faithful friend to David. Jonathan gave proof of his courage and conduct upon all occasions that offered, during the wars between Saul and the Philistines. One day[1], when the Philistines were incamped at Michmash with a very powerful army, and Saul's army, which consisted of not above six [1 Sam. xiii. 15, 16, &c. 1 Sam xiv. 1, 2, &c.] hundred men, lay at Gibeah of Benjamin, Jonathan said to his armour-bearer, Let us go to the camp of the Philistines. But he took no notice to his father of his design; nor were the people informed where he was gone. There was a narrow pass between two rocks, which led to the camp of the Philistines. Now Jonathan, while he was upon the way towards the Philistines, said to his armour-bearer, If these people, when they perceive us, bid us tarry, let us stay and go no farther; but if they desire us to come up to them, let us go; for this will be a sign to us, that the Lord hath delivered them into our hands.

As soon therefore as the Philistines, who were upon the guard, perceived them, they said, Behold the Hebrews come like rats out of the holes where they had hid themselves; and they who were advanced farthest from the Philistine Camp cried out to them, Come up to us, and we will shew you something. Whereupon Jonathan said to his armour-bearer, Let us go up, follow me, for the Lord hath delivered them into the hands of Israel. They went up and began to kill all that fell into their hands. The whole Camp of the Philistines was in disorder, and Saul's Sentinels perceiving the motion which was thereabouts, gave notice of it to this Prince. Upon search there was neither Jonathan nor his armour -bearer to be found in all the Camp. And the noise and tumult increasing among the Philistines, the Hebrews made haste, and advancing nearer to them discovered that they had killed one another. Saul therefore pursued the runaways, and pronounced these words before his whole army, Cursed be the man that eateth any food this day.

Jonathan, who was not then present, and knew nothing of this, being in a wood where there was much honey, dip'd the end of his staff in it, and tasted a little of it. Some person told him, that the King his father had forbidden any one with an execration to eat any thing whatsoever. Jonathan upon hearing of it, said, that his father had created a general disturbance by this prohibition. How had the people been strengthned if they had eaten what they met with in the pursuit of their enemies? The victory which Israel obtained this day over the Philistines was entire, and Saul was of opinion to attack them again in the night, that so he might prevent their escaping from him. To this end he gave directions for consulting the Lord, but the Lord returned no answer. Hereupon Saul appointed lots to be cast, in order to discover who had violated the oath and protestation which he had made in God's name, to eat no Food; and the lot fell upon Jonathan. Whereupon Saul said, May God treat me with the utmost severity, if thou Jonathan doest not die this day. But all the people opposed the King's resolution, and hindred him from executing what he had declared.

Some Years after,[2] David having overcome Goliah in the manner which is generally known, Jonathan conceived so perfect a friendship for him, that he loved him as himself; as a proof of it, he stript himself of the robe which he had on, and gave it to David. He made him likewise a present of his sword, his bow, and his belt. And when David inçur'd Saul's displeasure, Jonathan continued always zealous in his friend's interests. He gave [1 Sam. xviii. 1 Sam. xix. 1, 2, 3, &c.] him intelligence of the resolution which his father had taken to kill him, advised him to retire, and so wrought upon Saul, that this Prince promised him with an oath, not to kill him. Saul having again resolved upon the death of David,[3] Jonathan took the liberty of speaking to the King, in order to dissuade him from this design: but perceiving that the destruction [1 Sam. xx.] of his friend was a point determined, he went and gave notice of it to David, who lay in the mean while concealed in a field; when on a signal agreed upon between them, they met, conversed, and confirmed their friendship and covenant with an Oath. Jonathan engaged to acquaint David with what discoveries he could make of his father's ill intentions towards him; and David on his part, obliged himself by oath to treat Jonathan as his best friend, and to use his family with Mercy, if Jonathan should die before him. After this they separated, and Jonathan returned to the city of Gibeah, without any one's being a witness of their interview.

The year following,[4] while David was in the Wilderness of Ziph, and lay concealed there in a forest, Saul was in pursuit of him with his troops, in order if he could [1 Sam. xxiii. 16, 17.] to take him: but Jonathan went secretly to his friend, and said to him, Be not afraid; for let Saul my father do what he will, he will not find you; You will be King of Israel, and I shall be next to you, and this my father himself very well knows. They renewed the covenant which had passed between them, and so separated. At last the war breaking out between the Hebrews and Philistines,[5] Saul and Jonathan incamped on mount Gilboa with the army of Israel: but their camp was forced, their troops routed, and they themselves [1 Sam. xxxi. 1, 2.] killed. The news whereof being brought to David, he mourned for a year in a very sensible manner, and consecrated a funeral song to their honour, wherein he evidenced all the tenderness of his heart towards his friend Jonathan. Jonathan had [2 Sam. i. 18, 19, 20, &c.] a son, whose name was Mephibosheth, on whom David heaped great riches. See Mephibosheth.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the world 2911, or 2912, before J. C. 1088, before the vulgar Æra 1092.
In the year of the world 2942, before J. C. 1058, before the vulgar Æra 1062.
In the year of the world 2944, before J. C. 1056, before the vulgar Æra 1060. Oath.
In the year of the world 2945, before J. C. 1055, before the vulgar Æra 1059.
In the year of the world 2949, before J. C. 1051, before the vulgar Æra 1055. contest

Jonathan Ben-Uzziel (III)

III. JONATHAN BEN-UZZIEL, or the son of Uzziel. We have a Targum or Chaldee Paraphrase of the five books of Moses, and another of the Prophets, that is to say, of Joshua, Judges, and the two books of Samuel, the two books of Kings, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the twelve small Prophets; that is to say, all the books of the Old Testament, excepting the Hagiographa, namely Job, the Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Solomon's Song, Daniel, Chronicles, Ezra and Nehemiah, and last of all Esther. The Jews say great things in commendation of Jonathan; they believe he lived in the time of Haggai, Zachary, and Malachi; that is to say, soon after their return from the captivity; and that he received from them the oral law or tradition. They add, that he was likewise the first and most excellent Disciple of Hillel, the famous Rabbi who lived, as is said, a little before the coming of our Saviour, or about that time, in the reign of Herod the Great. But if Jonathan had seen Haggai, Zachary and Malachi, and besides had been Hillel's Disciple, he must have been about five hundred years old, which is incredible. However this may be, the Jews are never weary of exalting the merit of Jonathan the son of Uzziel. They equal him to Moses, and relate, that while he was about his Paraphase, God in a visible manner protected him; that to prevent any thing diverting him from his application, if a fly came and sat upon his paper, or a bird flew over his head, they were immediately consumed with fire from Heaven, without his being at all hurt by it, or any thing about him: that intending to compose a Targum on the Hagiographa, as he had done upon the Law and the Prophets, he was diverted from this design by a voice from Heaven, which told him, that the end of the Messiah was therein determined. This story whether true or false, but rather false than true, has been the occasion of some Christians taking the advantage of this confession, to maintain against the Jews, that the death of the Messiah was clearly foretold in the Prophet Daniel, whom the Hebrews place among the Hagiographa. And since these disputes the modern Jews have taken the liberty of changing this passage, lest such an acknowledgment should be a prejudice to them.

Of the two Targums, whereof Jonathan the son of Uzziel is said to be the Author, it appears that he composed that only which is upon the first and last Prophets. The Jews call Joshua, Judges; Samuel and the Kings, the first Prophets; and Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the twelve small Prophets, the last Prophets.

The Targum or Paraphrase on all these books comes pretty near the style of Onkelos's, which is esteemed the best of all: there is almost the same purity of style discernible in it; but whereas the Targum of Onkelos is an exact and literal version, Jonathan takes the liberty of paraphrasing, of enlarging and adding, sometimes a gloss, sometimes a story, which do no great honour to his work. What he has done upon the last Prophets is still more uncorrect, more imperfect, and less literal than the rest. Thus much concerning the two Targums of this Paraphrast.

That on the Law, which is attributed to him, is very different from the first, both as to the style, (as we may be easily convinced by reading them with attention, and comparing them together) and method: for this last Paraphrase is still more stuffed with fables, glosses, long explanations, and vain additions, than the Targum on the Prophets, which without contest is Jonathan's. Besides, he speaks there of several things which were not as yet existing in his time, or at least did not go under the names he gives them; for example, [Targum in Exod. xxvi. 9.] he mentions the six orders or books of the Mishna, which were not written till long after his time; there are the names of Constantinople and Lombardy in it, which are still more modern than the Mishna.

We cannot tell who is the real Author of this last Targum; it continued a long time unknown even to the Jews: they had no notice of there being such a book, till it was published at Venice, about an hundred and fifty years ago; the name of Jonathan was in all probability put to it only to give credit to the Work, and promote the sale of it. See the article Targum. In the edition of the Polyglott Bible at Antwerp a good deal of the impertinences in Jonathan's Targum has been suppressed. See F. Morinus's Exercitat. Bibl. l. 2. Exercitat. 8. c. 1, 2, 3.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jonathan (IV)

IV. JONATHAN, the son of Abiathar the High Priest, gave notice to Adonijah, and those of his party, who were met together near the fountain of Rogel, that David had declared Solomon his successor, and had procured him to be acknowledged King of all Israel; in the year of the world 2989, before J.C. 1011, before the vulgar Æra 1015.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jonathan (V)

V. JONATHAN, the son of Shage the Hararite, one of those distinguished for their bravery in David's army. In the [1 Chr. xi. 34.] second book of Samuel chap. xxiii. 32, 33. We read Jonathan and Shammah the Hararite.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jonathan (VI)

VI. JONATHAN, the son of Shimeah, David's nephew, killed a Giant; who had six fingers upon each hand, and six toes upon each foot, 1 Chr. xx. 7.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jonathan (VII)

VII. JONATHAN, or Jehonathan, the son of Uzziah, David's high Treasurer, 1 Chr. xxvii. 25.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jonathan (VIII)

VIII. JONATHAN, the son of Asael, was named among others in the time of Ezra, to make enquiry after those, who had married strange women, Ezra x. 15.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jonathan (IX)

IX. JONATHAN, or Johanan, or John, High Priest of the Jews, the son of Jehoiada and father of Jeddoa or Jaddus, celebrated in the time of Alexander the Great. See Neb. xii. 10, 11, 22. He lived under Ezra and Nehemiah. Josephus, [Antiq. l. xi, c. 7.] and after him Eusebius and S. Jerom, call him John instead of Jonathan, and say that he lived in the reign of Artaxerxes. Josephus relates a particular which casts a great blemish upon the memory of Jonathan. Joshua or Jesus his brother was so much in the favour of *Ba*goses, Governor of Syria and Phœnicia under the king of Persia, that he obtained from him the office of High Priest, to the exclusion of his brother Jonathan, who was then possessed of it, and had injoyed it many years. Jesus came to Jerusalem, to take possession of his new dignity, and divest his brother of it. But he refusing to submit to the order of Bagoses, great contests arose, and they came to blows on both sides: the matter proceeded so far, that Jonathan killed his brother in the inner court of the Temple.

This action, in itself very criminal, was still more so on the score of the profanation of the holy place where it was committed. Bagoses being informed of it, came with great indignation to Jerusalem, designing to take cognizance of the murder. He attempted to go into the Temple, in order to observe there the spot where this fact was committed; but he was denied admission, as being a Gentile, and profane person. How! said he, am I then more polluted than the dead body which you have massacred there? And at the same time, being transported with anger, he went into the Temple notwithstanding the opposition of the Priests, examined into the fact, and fined the Temple; the fine he ordered to be paid by the Priests out of the money belonging to the treasury. It was fifty drachmas for every lamb of the continual Sacrifice which was offered every morning and evening; that is to say, two lambs a day. This fine was paid till the death of Artaxerxes; then revolutions happening in the state, and a new Governor being appointed, it was no longer exacted.

The High Priest Jonathan or John died after having exercised the High Priesthood thirty two years. Jeddoa his son succeeded him.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jonathan (X)

X. JONATHAN, a Scribe, and keeper [Jer. xxxvii. 14, 15, 19.] of the prisons in Jerusalem under king Zedekiah. He was very severe to the Prophet Jeremiah, who was put into the prison whereof he was keeper; this Prophet therefore earnestly desired king Zedekiah, by whose orders he was brought before him, that he would not suffer him to be sent back again into that dungeon, where his life was in such apparent danger.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jonathan (XI)

XI. JONATHAN, firnamed Apphus, [1 Macc. ii. 5.] the son of Matathias, and brother to Judas the Maccabee. After the death of Judas, he was appointed to be head of the people, and General of the troops of Israel. [1 Macc. ix. 28, 29.] Bacchides was soon informed of it[1]. Jonathan fled immediately into the country bordering upon the lake As-

1 Macc. ix. 43, &c. phaltites; and at last passed the river Jordan, and observing that Bacchides, commander of the troops belonging to Demetrius Soter, was advancing towards [1 Macc. ix. 44,45,46.] him with a powerful army, in order to give him battle on the sabbath day; and being withal posted in such a manner, that he had the enemy before him, Jordan at his back, and woods and marshes at his right and left; he exhorted his people to implore the assistance of Heaven, and represented to them the necessity they were in, of either conquering or dying, since there was no way left for their escape. He therefore immediately gave battle, and being within the reach of Bacchides, he stretched out his arm in order to have run him thro'; but Bacchides had the dexterity to avoid the blow by retiring backwards. At length Jonathan and his people having laid a thousand of their enemies dead upon the spot, and being apprehensive that they should be overwhelmed with numbers; threw themselves into the river Jordan, and swam over it in the presence of their enemies without their daring to persue them; and this being done they retreated to Jerusalem.

[Observations on the battle between Bacchides and Jonathan, 1 Macc. ix, 44, &c.] The Author of the first book of Maccabees is so succinct in his account of this action between Jonathan and Bacchides, that it is difficult to comprehend him; but for the better illustration of what he says, we must resume the affair a little higher. Jonathan having received the command upon the death of his brother Judas, Bacchides sought all opportunities to kill him. but Jonathan and his brother Simon, and all who accompanied them, knowing his intentions, retired into the desart of Tekoah. Bacchides had intelligence of this, and marched with his whole army on the sabbath day beyond Jordan: so that it appears at first sight by these circumstances, that Jonathan was on one side of the river, and Bacchides on the other. Hereupon Jonathan sent his brother John to the Nabathæans their friends, entreating them to secure their baggage, whereof there was a great quantity which imbarassed them very much. But the sons of Jambri coming out of Medaba, took John, in all probability killed him, and went away with all he had. Jonathan and his brother Simon understanding what had happened, and that the sons of Jambri were conducting a new bride in great pomp from Medaba, who was daughter to one of the most considerable Princes in Canaan, and withal having much at heart the blood of their brother, which had been shed by these people, went and posted themselves behind a mountain, which was a good cover to them, with a design doubtless of revenging the death of their brother, and making themselves reparation for the robbery which had been committed on them. Now the wilderness of Tekoah, whither they at first retired, lay to the east of Jordan, and Medaba to the west, and on the other side of the river, consequently Jonathan and his people passed the Jordan to get into the road to Medaba, where they revenged themselves on the sons of Jambri: and it was without doubt upon their return from this expedition, that Jonathan found he was surprized between Bacchides and the Jordan. All the difficulty consisted only in the sacred author's omitting the circumstance of the foregoing passage over Jordan, and this way it is intirely removed.

Jonathan's harangue is very beautiful and pathetical Let us go up now, says he to his troops, and fight for our lives, for it standeth not with us to day as in times past. For behold the battle is before us and behind us, and the water of Jordan on this side and that side, the marsh likewise and wood, neither is there place for us to turn aside. Wherefore cry ye now unto Heaven, that ye may be delivered from the hand of your enemies. Every one who reads this discourse, must feel the effect which it must produce upon the hearts of soldiers in such a situation. Nothing can be more magnificent and affecting; in a word, it may be said, this is a master piece in the kind. With that they joined battle, and Jonathan stretched forth his hand to smite Bacchides, but he turned back from him. This passage shews us, that the two Generals were each at the head of their armies, and near enough personally to engage with one another. A thousand men of Bacchides's army were killed that day upon the spot: at last Jonathan and they that were were with him, leapt into Jordan, and swam over unto the further land. Jonathan observing, that with all his efforts he was not able to break his enemies, and could no longer resist their number, took a resolution to run the hazard of passing the river in their presence, that so he might preserve, if possible, his little army. This expedient succeeded, and Bacchides surprized at the boldness of his enemy, did not venture to persue him.

This action of the Jewish General's is much to be admired; he behaved with unparallel'd prudence, he was the weakest, yet had the art to disengage himself with glory, and even with advantage, out of so dangerous a circumstance. The conduct of Bacchides was not much for his honour; he was much superior to his enemy, he might have hem'd him in with the great number of his troops, if he had attacked him in any other place than be-

10 H tween two marshes, and two woods, where he could draw up his forces in a front no larger than Jonathan's: for to range in many lines is but bad management; one alone when of a good depth, well ordered, and well conducted, with the boldness of a few resolute soldiers, reduced to the necessity of overcoming or dying, one only, I say, every way so disposed, is sufficient to obtain a victory, since there is nothing more to do than to break the enemy's first line, whose retreat is rendered impossible by their defeat: for besides that the crowd of runaways produces disorder and confusion in the second line, besides this, the people of Asia as well as the Greeks, fought in Phalanx's without intervals between the several bodies, or so small, that it would be very difficult for those who were just before routed, to escape without breaking the second line. We do not observe that the Asiaticks drew up in two Phalanx's when they engaged; and the Greeks when the ground would not permit them to extend themselves in a large front, doubled or tripled their phalanx's, and formed but one body with sometimes a hundred in file. [Polyb. Hist. l. 15.] Hannibal drew up in three Phalanx's, at Zama, which had never been practised: and altho he was at the head of an army consisting of fifty thousand men, he was beaten by Scipio, who had not above two and twenty thousand, and who drew up in a line of columns; for he knew very well, that the victory depended only on the defeat of the first line; thus he routed the great Hannibal in Africk, whom no one could conquer in Italy.

In a word, to return to the order of battle between the Jews and Bacchides; the Jews I suppose to be ranged in two bodies, which filled the space between the marshes and the woods. As to Bacchides, he could do no otherwise than range his infantry in two lines, with his cavalry upon the wings. This is all I am able to conjecture about the matter, according to the situation of places, and the common method of the Jews, and other people of Asia.

After this affair Bacchides returned into Syria. But they who were averse to peace having prevailed with him once more to come back from thence, with the hopes of destroying Jonathan, at a time when he least thought of it, Jonathan prevented them, took an hundred and fifty of the most wicked authors of this design, killed them, and then retired with his brother Simon into the fortress of Bethbasi in the wilderness[2]. This is Beth-agla, in the wilderness of Jericho. Here Bacchides besieged him: but Jonathan after a vigorous Defense made a sally out of the place, defeated Odonarkes and Phasiron, and killed a great number of the enemy. On the other side his brother Simon having made a sally, burnt the enemies machines, attacked the army of Bacchides, and routed it. So that Bacchides directed his indignation against those who advised him to this undertaking, put them to death, and made preparations to return with the broken remains of his army.

Jonathan then sent to him and made proposals of peace, which Bacchides accepted, went back to Syria, and came no more into Judea. Jonathan dwelt at Machmas, where he governed the people, and extirpated the ungodly out of Israel, he did not fix his residence at Jerusalem, because the troops of Demetrius Nicator King of Syria were in possession of the Citadel. Some years after[3] Alexander Balas and Demetrius Soter, who contended for the kingdom of Syria, wrote to Jonathan, desiring his friendship, and endeavouring by their promises and the marks of their esteem and confidence, which they shewed him, to ingage him in [1 Macc. x. 1,2,3,&c.] their party. Jonathan accepted the offers of Alexander Balas, and declared for him against Demetrius. The first time of his putting on the High Priest's ornaments was upon the Feast of Tabernacles, in the year 160 of the Greeks, which is much about the year of the world 3852, before J. C. 148, before the vulgar Æra 152. It was after his receit of Alexander Balas's letter, who gave him his dignity, that the people importuned him to accept it, and he solemnly performed the functions belonging to it.

Two years after[4], Alexander Balas having celebrated his marriage with the king of Egypt's daughter at Ptolemais, Jonathan was invited thither, and appeared there with royal magnificence. Some of his enemies having shewed an inclination to accuse him to the king, he would not hear them, but clothed him in purple, obliged him to sit near him, and strictly forbad any the least complaint to be brought against him. Jonathan returned to Jerusalem, and there abode for some time in peace. But at the end of two years[5] Demetrius Nicator, the son of Demetrius Soter king of Syria, of whom we have made mention, coming into Syria,

THE TOMB ERECTED FOR THE MACCABEES AT MODIN.

1 Macc. x. 67, &c. sent Apollonius General of his troops to Jamnia in Palestine, to defy Jonathan to give him battle, telling him, that he trusted only to his rocks and mountains, where he kept close without daring to descend into the plain. Jonathan stung with these reproaches, got together ten thousand chosen men, laid Siege to Joppa, and carried it with ease. From thence he marched against Apollonius, defeated him, killed eight thousand of his men, and returned loaded with booty to Jerusalem. Alexander Balas hearing of this good success, heaped new honours on him, and gave him fresh marks of his esteem.

Alexander Balas was killed some years after[6], whereupon Demetrius Nicator was [1 Macc. xi.] advanced to the throne of Syria. Jonathan taking his advantage of the troubles in Syria, besieged the citadel of Jerusalem. But some ill designing persons having informed Demetrius of it, he sent for Jonathan to Ptolemais, to answer such accusations as were prefer'd against him. He went thither, and by his rich presents procured the King's friendship, and the confusion of his accusers. Demetrius confirmed him in the enjoyment of what he had already in possession, and besides, added new favours. Sometime after[7], Jonathan having desired Demetrius to recal his troops which he had lodged in the citadel of Jerusalem; this prince answered him, that he would not only perform what he requested, but wou'd besides do more for the advancement of his, and of his people's reputation, provided he would send him succours to reduce the inhabitants of Antioch, who had rebelled against him. [1 Macc. xi. 41, 42, &c. 1 Macc. xi. 53, 54, &c.] Jonathan sent him three thousand chosen men; who rescued him from the danger he was exposed to; for his people had besieged him in his palace. Those of Antioch were obliged to have recourse to his clemency, and desire peace of him.

Demetrius was not so grateful as he might have been, for such an eminent piece of service. He in a very short time quarrelled with Jonathan, and did him all the mischief he could. His ingratitude was the cause of Jonathan's declaring for young Antiochus, whom Tryphon had set upon the throne of Syria[8]. Jonathan fought several battles with Demetrius's generals, wherein he always had the advantage. About the same time he renewed his alliance with the [1 Macc. xii. 1, 2, &c.] Romans, and Lacedemonians. Afterwards upon intelligence, that Demetrius's Generals were upon their march against him, he went as far as Syria to meet them: but they not daring to engage him, he retreated. Jonathan marched with his army against the Zabadean Arabians, or Nabatheans; he defeated them, and returned to Jerusalem loaded with a good booty. He undertook to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, and to raise a wall between the fortress, which was in the hands of the Syrians, and the city.

[1 Macc. xiii. 1, 2, 3, 4, &c.] In the mean time Tryphon having conceived the design of dispatching young Antiochus, and stepping into his throne, thought it in the first place necessary to secure the person of Jonathan. He persuaded him to come to Ptolemais, and having not above a thousand men with him, the inhabitants, as soon as he was entred into the city, shut the gates, killed the Jews who attended Jonathan, seized on him himself, and put him in chains. Tryphon afterwards marched against Simon, Jonathan's brother, who was appointed governor of the people in his place. Simon put himself in a condition to make a good defense. But Tryphon not daring to run the hazard of a battle, sent word to Simon, that he had seized on Jonathan for certain sums of money only, which he owed the king; that if he would send him an hundred talents in silver, and Jonathan's two sons for hostages he would give him his liberty. Simon easily understood, that these proposals were not sincere: nevertheless that he might be liable to no reproaches from the people, he sent to Tryphon what he had demanded. But Tryphon did not keep his word: he killed Jonathan and his sons some time after[9] at Bascama, perhaps Besek, not far from Bethsan. Simon sent and enquired after the bones of Jonathan his brother, and buried them at Modin in a magnificent mausoleum, which he there erected, in memory of his father [1 Macc. xiii. 27.] and his brothers. This was a lofty edifice built both within and without of polished stones. He set up seven pyramids there, one for his father, one for his mother, and four for his four brothers. He adorned the edifice with large columns, and upon them placed arms and ships in carved work, which were seen at a distance by those who sailed near this coast. This sepulchre was still to be seen in the time of Eusebius and S. Jerom. There was a general and great mourning over all Israel for Jonathan, and the people lamented him for many days.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the world 3843, before J.C. 157, before the vulgar Æra 161.
1 Macc. ix. 59, 60, 61, &c. In the year of the world 3846, before J.C. 154, before the vulgar Æra 158.
In the years of the world 3851, and 3852.
In the year of the world 3854, before J.C. 146, before the vulgar Æra 150.
In the year of the world 3856, before J.C. 144, before the vulgar Æra 148. sent
In the year of the world 3858, before J. C. 142, before the vulgar Æra 146.
In the year of the world 3860, before J. C. 140, before the vulgar Æra 144.
In the year of the world 3860, before J. C. 140, before the vulgar Æra 144.
In the year of the world 3861, before J. C. 139, before the vulgar Æra 143. 2

Jonathan (XII)

XII. JONATHAN, the son of Absalom was sent by Simon the Maccabee, to make himself master of Joppa. Jonathan entred the city by force, drove those out that were there, and settled himself in their room, 1 Macc. xiii. 11. In the year of the world 3861, before J. C. 139, before the vulgar Æra 143.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jonathan (XIII)

XIII. JONATHAN, the son of Ananus, and High Priest of the Jews. He succeeded Joseph firnamed Caiaphas, in the year of the world 4038, and of J. C. 38. he was himself succeeded by his son Theophilus, who was confirmed in this Office in 4040 and deposed in 4040. Vitellius [Joseph.] Governor of Syria, created Jonathan High Priest, and some time after deprived him of the Pontificate, in order to invest [Joseph. Antiq. lxviii. c. 7. Antiq. l. 19. c. 5.] Theophilus with it. Agrippa took it from Theophilus, and gave it to Simon firnamed Cantharas, the son of Boethus. Some time [Antiq. l. 19. c. 6.] after he deprived Simon of it, and offered it again to Jonathan. But he excused himself from accepting it, and told the King, that he was very sensible of the honour he intended him; but did not think himself worthy of it: that he was satisfied with having once worn the sacred ornaments, that he knew a man, who for the purity of his manners, and innocency of his life, better merited this dignity; and this was his brother Matthias, on whom the king accordingly confer'd the High Priesthood, in the year of J. C. 45, of the vulgar Æra 43.

Jonathan had been principally concerned in sending Felix to be governor of Judea, and therefore thought, that he had more authority than another person to represent the great mischief, which he did the Country. Felix weary of these remonstrances from such a censor, resolved to dispatch [Antiq. l. 20. c. 6.] him. And as the blameless life of Jonathan did not furnish him with any pretence for doing so, he prevailed with one Dora, a native of Jerusalem, and Jonathan's particular friend, to assassinate him. Dora therefore prepared ruffians, who coming to Jerusalem with daggers concealed under their cloaks, got among Jonathan's people, and falling upon the old man, murdered him. I do not know in what year exactly this happened. Felix was Governor of Judea till the year 60 of the vulgar Æra.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ionia

IONIA, part of Asia Minor, which reaches along the Egean sea, to the westward of it. Caria lies to the south of it, and Æolis to the north. There were computed to be twelve cities antiently in Ionia, Miletus, Myus, Lebedus, Colophon, Priene, Theos, Clazomenæ, Ephesus, Phocea, and Smyrna in the continent, together with Chios and Samos in the islands of the same name. No one doubts but that the name Ionians came from Javan the son of Japhet: but some suppose that of old, it included the people of Attica, and other inhabitants of Greece. See above, Javan.

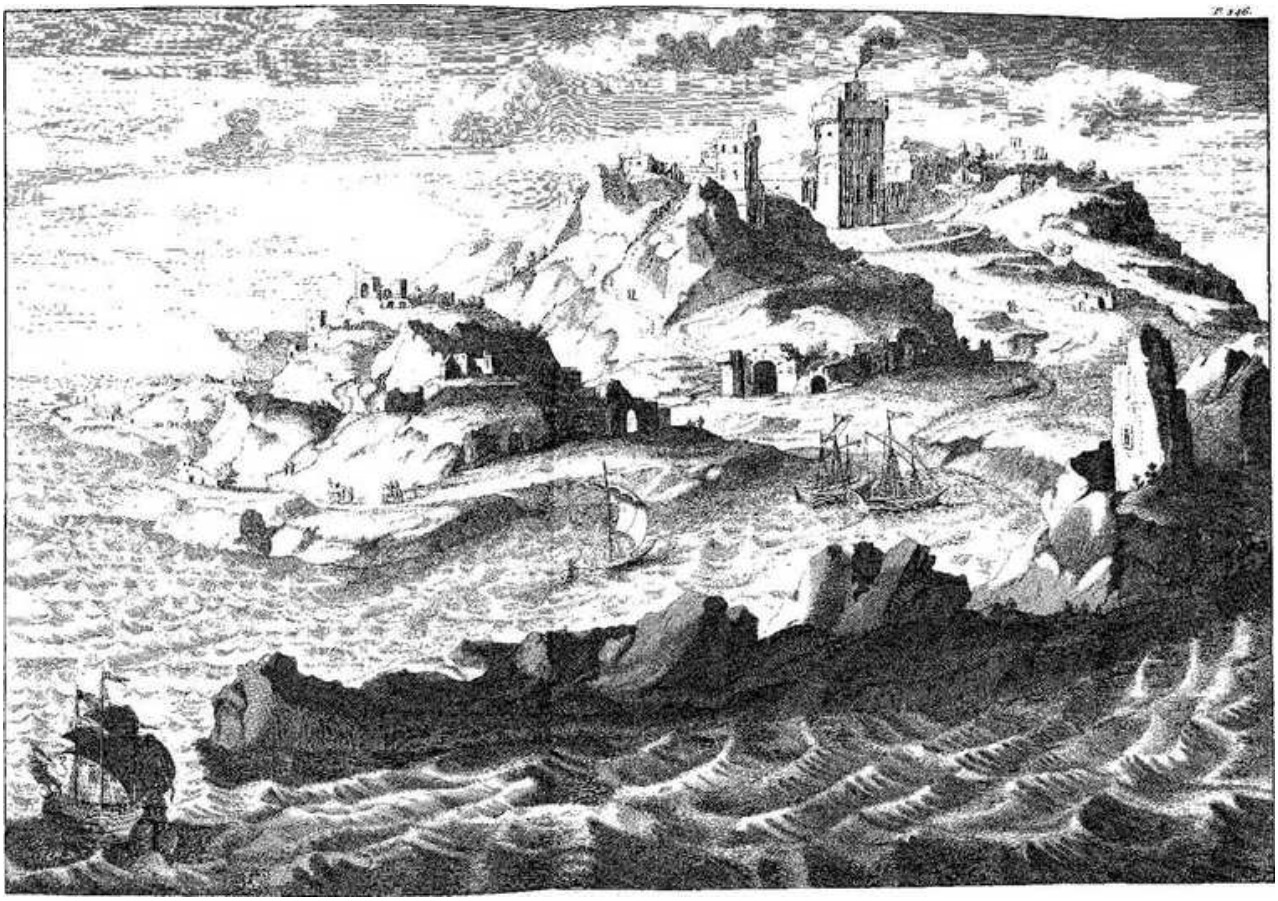
Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jonicus

JONICUS, or Jonithus, whom fabulous history reports to be the fourth son of Noah, is not mentioned in Scripture, Josephus, or in any authentick writer. The first who takes notice of him is the spurious Methodius, from whom Peter Comestor copied what he says of him in his Scholastick history, and after him all who at any time have spoken of him.



What we read concerning him in the counterfeit Methodius, Bishop of Patara, and a Martyr, is contained in his book intitled, Revelations of what has happened from the beginning of the world, and must still hereafter happen, t. 3. Biblioth. PP. and seq. c. 6. Here it is said, that in the year of the world 3109 Noah had a fourth son, whose name was Jonithus, and in the year 3300, he made him great presents, and sent him into the land of Etham. Now after the death of Noah, in the year of the world 3690, the sons of Noah came from the east, and from the land of Etham, and built a Tower in the land of Shinar, where the dispersion of mankind began and the confusion of languages. This Jonithus had his portion from the entrance of Etham to the sea, viz. all the land from the sun or east, and therein fixed his habitation. He received from God the gift of wisdom, and a capacity for arts and letters, and was the first Inventor of Astronomy. Nimrod making him a visit, Jonithus informed him, that according to the influence of the Stars, he was to reign over the land.

Nimrod and Jonithus lived in good understanding, while the other sons of Noah were at war with Nimrod. Jonithus built a city which bore his own name, and in a letter to Nimrod informed him, that the sons of Japhet would destroy the kingdom of Ham. Every one knows, that this pretended Methodius is an impostor, who deserves no credit.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joppa

JOPPA, a sea-port town in Palestine upon the Mediterranean. It is called Jaffa or Japha in the writers of the middle age, and in modern authors. It was the only port which the Hebrews were masters of, upon the Mediterranean. Profane [Stephan. in Jope.] authors think, that it derives its name from Jopa the daughter of Æolus, and wife of Cepheus, who was the founder of it. In S. Jerom's time there were still some marks visible of the chain which Andromeda was fastned to, when she was exposed to be devoured by the sea monster[1]. It is probable, that the fable of Andromeda was forged from Jonah's adventure, who having imbarked at Joppa, was cast into the sea, and swallowed up by a sea monster. See Jonah. Joppa was situated in a fine plain between Jamnia to the south, and Cesarea of Palestine to the north, and Rama or Ramula to the east. The port of Joppa is by no means good, by reason of the rocks which project into the sea. There is frequent mention [Joseph. l. 3. de Bello, c. 25. Acts ix. 36, 37, &c. Acts. x. 5, &c.] of Joppa as well in the books of the Old Testament, written in Hebrew, as in the New Testament. Tabitha, whom S. Peter raised from the dead, dwelt at Joppa. The same Apostle was at Joppa when God shewed him a linen cloth full of creeping things, to signify to him, that he was no longer to make any distinction between Jew and Gentile, when he found people dispos'd to receive the word of truth.

A VIEW OF THE CITY AND PORT OF JOPPA AT PRESENT CALLED JAFEA.According to our modern Travellers.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hieronym. in cap. 4. Jonæ. & in epitaphio Paulæ. Vide & Joseph. de Bello Jud. l. 3. c. 15. bable

Joram (I)

I. JORAM, the son of Toi, King of Hamath in Syria, was sent to David by his father, to compliment him upon the victory which he had obtained over Hadadezer king of Syria his enemy, 2 Sam. viii. 10. In the year of the World 2960, before J. C. 1040, before the vulgar Æra 1044.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joram (II)

II. JORAM, the son and Successor of Ahab King of Israel. He did not immediately succeed his father Ahab, but his eldest brother Ahaziah, who dying without children [2 Kings viii.16,&c.] left him the kingdom[1]. He did evil in the sight of the Lord, but not so much as Ahab his father and Jezebel his mother; for he removed the statues of Baal which his father had caused to be erected; but he followed the ways of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, that is to say, he continued to pay an impious worship to the Golden calves. Mesha King of Moab, who owed the king of Israel an hundred thousand lambs, and an hundred thousand rams with their fleeces, having revolted, and refused to pay this tribute, Joram prepared to make war against him, and invited Jehoshaphat King of Judah to accompany him. He came and brought besides the king of Edom who was tributary to him. These three Princes advanced with their army thro' the wilderness of Edom, but soon discovered, that they were in danger of perishing for want of water. Elisha procured it for them, and delivered them from this apprehension, but not out of any consideration for Joram. The prophet reproached him to his face with his impieties, and told him, that if he had not had more regard for Jehoshaphat than for him, he would not have condescended so much as to look upon him. Elisha notwithstanding did very important services for Joram during his wars with the King of Syria[2]. This prophet discovered to him all the designs and resolutions which were concerted in Benhadad's council, and thereby rendered all the efforts of this Prince ineffectual. Benhadad having laid siege to Samaria[3], the famine was so terrible there, that a woman was known to eat her own son.

Joram being informed of it, rent his clothes, and all the people saw he wore sackcloth upon his flesh. At the same time he ordered one of his servants to go and cut off Elisha's head, as if he had been the cause of these calamities, or that it had been in his power to put a stop to them. Elisha, who was then in his house, desired his friends, who were with him, to shut the door, and hinder the persons whom the King had sent from [2 Kings vii. 1, 2, 3, &c.] entring; telling them, that Joram was coming himself, to revoke the order which he had too rashly given.

Accordingly the King came almost at the same time, and said to Elisha, You see the extreme misery we are reduced to, and what more can we expect from the Lord? Elisha answered him, Tomorrow at this same hour, a measure of fine flour, and two measures of barley, shall be sold at the gate of Samaria for a shekel. (A shekel was worth about two shillings and three pence.) One of the Officers of the army, on whose hand the King leant, answered the man of God, If the Lord were to open the cataracts of Heaven, would it be possible, think you, that what you are speaking of should come to pass? Elisha replied, you shall see it with your eyes, but shall not partake of this plenty. Four lepers who were without the city, going by night to the Syrian camp, discovered that the enemy were all retired, that they had been seized with a pannick terror, and were fled, leaving their camp full of provisions. The lepers gave intelligence of this to the sentinels of the city, who sent notice of it to the King. Joram at first thought it was a feint, and that the enemy made a shew of retreating, with a design of drawing the besieged out of the city, and putting all of them to the sword. He sent a Body of horse therefore to make farther discoveries, and they reported, that they had found the ways full of arms and clothes, which the Syrians had thrown away, that they might be swifter in their flight.

Hereupon all the people went out of Samaria, pillaged the enemy's camp, and Elisha's prophecy was accomplished, concerning the price of wheat and barley at the gate of Samaria. The King's officer, who had declared the thing to be impossible, having his station by Joram's order at the city gate, was stiffled by the crowd. Some time after[4] the King conversing with Gehazi about Elisha's miracles: the Shunamite [2 Kings viii. 3,4,5.] woman, whose son he had raised from the dead, appeared before the King, and demanded of him the restitution of her estate, which had been confiscated in her absence, because the prophet advised her to depart into some foreign country during the famine, which was to continue seven years. At the end of this term therefore she returned; and Gehazi informing the King, that this was the very woman whose son had been restored to life by Elisha, Joram immediately gave directions for making restitution of all that had been taken from her.

About that time[5], Joram attacked the city of Ramoth Gilead, and carried it; but he was dangerously wounded in the assault, [2 Kings viii. 27,28. ix. 1, 2, 3, &c. 2 Chr. xxii. 4, 5, &c.] and obliged to return to Jezreel to have his wounds dressed. He left Jehu, who commanded his army, to reduce the citadel, which still held out. In the mean time, Jehu having received the royal unction by a young Prophet, sent from God with orders directing him to root out the whole family of Ahab and destroy Joram, he immediately departed, and made haste to Jezreel. The sentinel, who had his station upon the Tower of Jezreel, saw Jehu with his company coming, and immediately gave intelligence of it to the king. Joram without delay sent a chariot to meet them; but Jehu commanded him who drove it to go behind and follow him, without farther explaining his intentions. Joram hereupon sent a second person; but neither did he return.

Then he himself got into his chariot, and went accompanied with Abaziah King of Juda, who was in another chariot, to meet Jehu. They met in the field that belonged heretofore to Naboth the Jezreelite: there Joram said to Jehu, Is it peace? Jehu replied, What peace canst thou hope for, so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezabel, and her witchcrafts, are so many? Joram immediately turning his bridle, cried out, We are betrayed, Ahaziah. At the same time Jehu drew his bow, and wounded Joram with an arrow between his shoulders. The arrow pierced his heart, and he fell down dead in his chariot; which Jehu observing, he called to the Captain of his Guards, and commanded him to take him and throw his body into the field of Naboth the Jezreelite, saying, that he remembred the word of Elijah, that the blood of Ahab and his family should be shed in this field, to revenge the murder of Naboth and his sons, whom he put to death so unjustly. Thus died Joram king of Israel, in the twelfth year of his reign, in the year of the world 3120, before J.C. 880, before the vulgar Æra 884: Jehu succeeded him. See above, Benhadad and Jehu.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the world 3180, before J. C. 892, before the vulgar Æra 898.
2 Kings vi. In the year of the world 3115, before J. C. 885, before the vulgar Æra 889.
2 Kings vi. vii. In the year of the world 3119, before J. C. 881, before the vulgar Æra 885.
In the year of the world 3120, before J.C. 880, before the vulgar Æra 884.
In the year 3120, before J. C. 880, before the vulgar Æra 884.

Jordan

JORDAN, in Hebrew called Jarden; in Greek, Jordanes; and in Latin, Jordanis; a river of great note in the sacred writings. Some assert, that it derives its name from the Hebrew Jor, which signifies a spring, and Dan, which is a small town near the source of this river; or, according to others, it derives its original from the two rivulets Jor and Dan. But these Etymologies are very dubious. 1. It is not true that the river Jordan is formed out of two rivulets, nor that one of them was called Dan, tho the geographical Maps for the most part so describe it. The visible origin of the river Jordan is a little stream, the source whereof is in mount Libanus, and upon which the little town of Dan is situated, four leagues higher than Cesarea Philippi, where properly the Jordan begins. The other source of Jordan, and that the most considerable one, tho the least apparent, is the lake Phiala, about four leagues to the south of Cæsarea Philippi. This lake has a communication under ground with Jordan, and furnishes Cæsarea with such large supplies of water, that it might even there pass for a river. See Josephus of the wars of the Jews, l. 1. c. 16. & l. 3. c. 18. p. 860.

The name of Dan is certainly much more modern than that of Jordan. We [Judg. xviii. 1, 2, 3— 29.] know that a Colony of the Tribe of Dan having got possession of the town of Laish, called it by the name of Dan out of regard to the head of their Tribe. This did not happen till after the death of Joshua, and during the Anarchy which ensued upon the death of those Elders of Israel, who had seen the wonders of the Lord. Now before this time the Jordan was very well known; nor can we tell whether it was ever called by any other name. We may perhaps with more reason derive the name of Jordan from the Hebrew Jarad, to descend, by reason of the fall and rapid course of this river.

The Jordan from its source, which we suppose to be at Cæsarea Philippi, runs thro' a space of about fifty leagues, till it discharges itself into the Dead Sea, otherwise called the Asphaltite Lake, where it is lost. In its course it forms the lake Semechon, at five or six leagues distance from its spring. From thence it enters the lake of Tiberias, and passes quite thro' it. It overflows its banks about the time of barley [Josh. iii. 15. Ecclus. xxiv. 29.] harvest, or the feast of[1] the Passover. The banks of Jordan are covered with rushes, reeds, willows and other trees; so that in the summer time the [Maundrell.] water of it is scarce discernible. It is reported, that there are, as we may say, two channels of the Jordan, distinct from one another. The first is that wherein this river runs in its natural state, the second that which it fills when it overflows.

Travellers observe, that Lions, during the summer, hide themselves in the trees and reeds which grow along this river, and are obliged to go from thence when the river begins to swell. The Prophet Jeremiah alludes to this, when he is comparing [Jer. xlix. 19.] the enemies marching to attack Jerusalem or Babylon, to lions which come up from the swelling or inundation of Jordan; that is, which are driven away from their covers by the inundation of this river. Zachary represents the Princes of Judah as afflicted at the consideration of being remote from Jerusalem, like lions roaring when they see the pride or height of Jordan spoiled. Maundrel in his Journey to Jerusalem, says, that the river Jordan at Jericho, was, when he saw it, about sixty foot wide, and so rapid that a man could not swim over it.

On both sides along Jordan there is a [Vide Joseph. de Bello, l. 5. c. 4.] great plain, which extends itself from the lake of Tiberias as far as the Dead Sea. Josephus says, that this plain is twelve hundred furlongs in length, and an hundred and twenty wide. He adds, that it is extremely dry in the summer time, and that the air of it is unwholesom by reason of the excessive heat. The banks of Jordan [Joseph. de Bello. l. 3. c. 18.] only may be said to have any moisture, all the rest is a wilderness. We know from Scripture what miracles were performed in the river Jordan: how it was divided to [Josh. iii. 13, &c. 2 Kings ii. 8, & 14. 2 Kings vi. 6, 7. Matth. iii. 16.] leave a free passage for the Hebrews under the conduct of Joshua; how Elijah and Elisha walked over its waters; how Elisha made the iron belonging to his axe, which fell into it, swim; how when the Saviour of the world was baptized in the same river, the heavens opened, and the holy spirit descended upon him.

Little Jordan, is only Jordan nearer to its spring head, and before it is enlarged by the waters of those springs and rivulets, [Vide Joseph. Antiq. l. 5. c. 2. & l. 8. c. 3. & Reland Palæst. t. 1. p. 273. Joseph. de Bello, l. 4. c. 1. initio, p. 863.] which discharge themselves into it. Josephus says, that the marshes of the lake Semechon extend as far as the delicious plain of Daphne, the fountains whereof feed little Jordan, and convey it into great Jordan below the Temple of the golden ox, or golden calf. It is my opinion, that instead of Daphne we should read Dan; [Pietro del-la Valle.] and that Dan should be placed much nearer to the lake Semechon than generally it is.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year 3120, before J.C. 880, before the vulgar Æra 884. the

Joseph (I)

I. JOSEPH, the son of Jacob and Rachel, and brother to Benjamin, was born in [Gen. xxx. 22, 23, 24.] Mesopotamia, in the year of the world 2256, before J. C. 1741, before the vulgar Æra 1745. Joseph was favoured by God from his youth, with revelations and prophetick dreams. His father Jacob, who begat him in his old age, loved him more tenderly than his other sons, and made him a coat of divers colours. His brothers observing these little marks of affection, grew jealous of him; and Joseph, without thinking of it, still farther encreased these evil dispositions, by accusing his brothers of some enormous crime[1], or by speaking to their disadvantage, and reporting the wicked discourses which they had together. The Septuagint (and in this particular they are followed by the Greek Fathers) read on the contrary, that his brethren the sons of Bilhah and Zilpah, defamed Joseph to his father. But what made them most averse to him was, his relating certain dreams[2], and telling them; that in a dream he had seen twelve sheaves belonging to his brethren, that did obeysance to his sheaf which stood upright in the field; and another time, that he had seen the Sun, and Moon, and twelve Stars do obeysance to him. Jacob heard all this without saying any thing; but Joseph's brethren could not bear it.

One day as his brethren were feeding their flocks near Shechem, Jacob sent him to visit them. A man whom Joseph met with in the field told him, that his brethren were gone from Shechem, and were at Dothan. Thither he went; and they seeing him at a distance coming towards them, said one to another; Behold this Dreamer cometh; come, let us kill him, and throw him into an old cistern; and we will give out that he was devoured by wild beasts. They laid hold on him therefore and stript him; but did not kill him: Reuben opposing the resolution they had taken of murdering him, they threw him into an old well, which had no water in it: but soon after perceiving a caravan of Ishmaelite and Midianitish Merchants coming from the mountains of Gilead, and carrying spices and gums into Egypt, they sold Joseph to them, and sent his coat to Jacob, dip'd in the blood of a kid, which they had killed; and told him, that this was what they had found, and desired him to consider whether it were his son's or not. Jacob remained inconsolable [Gen.xxxix. 1,2,3, &c.] for the death of his son, whom he believed to be indeed devoured by beasts; and Joseph's brethren kept every thing extremely secret.

The Merchants above mentioned sold Joseph as a slave to Potiphar, Pharaoh's eunuch or officer, the general or captain of his guards. Joseph so insinuated himself into his master's confidence, that he made him steward of his House, and committed the care of all his domestick affairs to him. But Potiphar's wife having conceived a criminal passion for this young slave, solicited him more than once to gratify her wicked desires. Joseph always refused. At last she pressed him one day so closely, that he could no otherwise get out of her hands, than by leaving his cloke behind in her possession. She seeing herself thus despised, began to cry out, and to complain that the young Hebrew had attempted to ravish her. And shewing his cloke which she held in her hand, she easily persuaded her husband, that Joseph would have offered violence to her. Potiphar therefore put Joseph into prison[3]. But whether at last he had discovered his innocency, or that he had only compassion on him for his misfortune, he made him overseer of the other prisoners, and treated him with great gentleness, without, however, setting him at liberty.

Now it happened, that two of the King of Egypt's officers, his butler and his baker, having incur'd their master's displeasure, were likewise put into prison with Joseph[4]. After sometime they had each of them a dream, which described what was to befal them. They related their dream to Joseph, who explained it to them. The butler dreamt, that he pressed grapes into a cup, and presented it to Pharaoh. Joseph foretold that in three days he should be restored to his imployment, and at the same time desired him not to forget the service which he did him, and to procure his liberty. The baker dreamed, that he had a basket upon his head with all sorts of baked meats and bread, with which he was used to serve the King's family, and the birds came and eat them. Joseph foretold him, that he should be beheaded, and afterwards fastned to a cross, upon which the birds would rest and devour his carcase. These predictions were soon followed with their effect. The butler was restored to the dignity he before enjoyed; but did not remember his benefactor, nor said any thing at that time to Pharaoh concerning Joseph.

Two years after[5] Pharaoh had a dream, which no one was able to explain to him. He thought he saw seven fat and seven lean Kine; and that the lean eat up, [Gen. xli. 1, 2, 3.] and intirely consumed the fat. While he was sleeping he saw seven ears of corn full and good, and seven thin and whithered; and the empty ears consumed the seven that were full. This dream making him very uneasy, his butler at last remembred Joseph, and told the king in what manner he had explained the baker's dream and his. At the same time Pharaoh commanded Joseph to be brought to him. He was accordingly taken out of prison, shaved, new dressed, and presented to the King. The King related to him his dreams, and Joseph interpreted them, telling him, that the seven kine, and the seven ears, signified the same thing; that by them it was meant, that there should be first seven years of great plenty, which should be succeeded by seven years of great barrenness, that people should neither sow nor reap; and that to prevent the calamity of a famine in the last seven years, it was necessary to choose a wise and understanding man, who during the seven years of fertility should gather into the King's granaries the fifth part of the several grains, which the earth should produce, and lay them up as a reserve against the seven years of famine.

This council was well received by the King and all his officers; and Pharaoh said to Joseph, since you have discovered to us what will happen, where can I find a more proper person than yourself for the employment you propose. I give you therefore the government of my house and of all Egypt, all my people shall obey you, and I will be your superior only in the throne. At the same time he put the ring which he wore on Joseph's finger, clothed him in a robe of fine linen, or cotton, put a chain of gold about his neck, made him ride in the chariot next to his, and gave orders, that an Herald should proclaim before him, that he was the governor of all Egypt. He changed his name, and appointed him to be called[6] Zaphnath-paaneah, which in Egyptian, signifies, says S. Jerom, Saviour of the World: Others translate it, He who discovers things concealed. He married him to Aseneth the daughter of Potipherah the Priest of On or Heliopolis. As to this Potipherah, the Fathers and Interpreters are of different opinions. Some believe[7] him to be the same as Joseph's first master, who put him into prison. Others [Chrysost. homil. 63. in Genes. alii plures. August. qu. 136. in Genes.] think him to be another; and indeed his name is written in a manner something different from the first. S. Austin does not venture to decide any thing concerning this question, and we should imitate his reserve in a point wherein the Scripture does not supply us with proofs strong enough to determine us. Joseph had two sons by his marriage, Manasseh and Ephraim, who were born before the beginning of the famine. As to Asenath we find a long fable concerning her marriage with Joseph, in the Historical Mirror of Vincent de Beauvais, l. 2. c. 118. See likewise the Scholastick History.

During the seven years of plenty, Joseph took care to lay up great stores of corn and grain of all sorts, as he himself had advised. And after this, the famine came according to his prediction. It did not afflict Egypt only, but was felt in other parts of the world, particularly in the land of Canaan, where Jacob lived with his sons. People came from all places to buy corn in Egypt, and Pharaoh referred them all to Joseph, designing him to be the sole distributor of it, and that nothing should be done without his orders. Jacob therefore sent his sons into Egypt, as well as others,[8] to buy provision there; he kept only Benjamin with him, being apprehensive lest some accident might happen to him by the way. Joseph knew his brethren very well, tho they did not discover him. He spoke roughly to them, told them they were spies, detained Simeon in bonds, probably because he had been the warmest of his enemies, and would not suffer the rest to depart, but upon condition that they should bring their youngest brother with them; whom they had mentioned to him. When he dismissed them, he ordered their sacks to be filled with corn, and every man's money to be put in the bottom of his sack, without their perceiving any thing of it.

As the famine every day encreased, Jacob was constrained, notwithstanding his reluctancy, to send his sons again into Egypt, and to consent that Benjamin should go with them[9]. When they were come to Joseph, and he saw his brother Benjamin with them, he commanded his people to prepare an entertainment for these strangers, because he intended they should dine with him that day. In the mean time he went about his affairs, and did not return till towards noon. When he came in, his brethren all prostrated themselves before him, and offered him the presents which Jacob sent to him. He asked them how their father did, and whether the young man whom they had brought with them was their younger brother. Having saluted Benjamin, he immediately went out, because he was not able to restrain his tears. After this, he ordered dinner to be served in. Joseph and the Egyptians had theirs separately from the Hebrews, who had a table on the other side: for the Egyptians do not eat with the Hebrews, and look upon them as profane and unclean persons. Joseph directed his brethren to be placed acording to their age, and that Benjamin should have a portion five times larger than the rest, which mightily raised their admiration.

The next morning their corn was put into [Gen. xliv. 1, 2, 3, &c. Gen. xlv. 1, 2, 3, &c.] their sacks, and into Benjamin's, Joseph's cup was privately conveyed. They were scarce got out of the city, when Joseph sent in great haste after them, with instructions to reproach them bitterly for their way of using him, by thus taking the Governor's cup, who had done them so many good offices, and shewn them so much honour. Benjamin's sack was opened, and in reality Joseph's cup was found in it. They were all in confusion at this accident, and returned with Benjamin to the city. Judah entreated Joseph to receive him for his slave in the room of Benjamin, and remonstrated to him, that if he returned to his father, without bringing back his favourite son, he would dye with grief. Joseph could no longer forbear weeping, and commanding all the strangers that were there, to leave the room, he lifted up his voice, and with tears plentifully flowing, told his brethren, that he was Joseph, and asked if his father were living. But they were so amazed, that none of them were able to return any answer. He therefore obliging them to come nearer, added, Fear not, nor be afflicted that you sold me. God hath sent me into this country for your preservation. Go make haste to my father, and desire him from me, to come to me here in this land. I will give you the land of Goshen, where you shall dwell with your families and flocks; for the famine must continue some years longer. After this he embraced them all, and principally Benjamin, and let them go.

When they came into the land of Canaan, they told Jacob that his son Joseph was living, and that he was in a manner the King of all Egypt. Jacob upon hearing this news, was as it were awakened out of a deep sleep, and without losing time, prepared to go and embrace his son in Egypt. When he arrived upon the frontiers of this country, he sent Judah [Gen. xlvi. 1,2,3, &c.] before him to give Joseph notice of his coming. Joseph immediately got up into his chariot, and came as far as the land of Goshen to meet his father. They embraced one another with all the transports of joy and tenderness imaginable

[Gen. xlvii. 1,2,3, &c.] and Joseph going to Pharaoh, told him that his father and brethren, who were shepherds, were come from the land of Canaan. At the same time he presented Jacob to him, and some of his brethren. The King saw this venerable old man with pleasure, and commanded Joseph to give them the land of Goshen, and choose such of his brethren to be overseers of his flocks, as he thought most proper for this employment. Joseph therefore gave Jacob and his sons the land of Goshen, where the city of Rameses was situated, that they might dwell there with their flocks.

The famine still encreasing continually, Joseph drained all the money which the Egyptians had into the King's coffers; and when they had no more wherewith to purchase corn, he demanded their cattle; and after this their lands; and last of all their persons. Thus having procured all the country to be made over to the King's use, he told the Egyptians that he would restore their lands and cattle to them, with corn for seed, upon condition that they would pay the fifth part of all that they should reap to the King. This they consented to; and from hence arose the custom which was afterwards observed, of paying the fifth part of all the fruits of Egypt to Pharaoh, excepting from the produce of the lands belonging to the Priests, which were exempted from this duty.

Jacob having spent seventeen years in Egypt[10], and perceiving the time of his death to draw near, sent for Joseph, and said to him, [Gen. xlvii. 29.] If I have found favour in thine eyes, put thine hand under my thigh, and promise me not to bury me in this land. Joseph did what his father desired, and promised to bury him in the land of Canaan, in the Sepulchre of his Fathers. After this Jacob worshipped God with his head turned towards his bolster[11]; or, according to the Septuagint, he worshipped the top of Joseph's staff or scepter which he carried in his hand; or lastly, according to some modern Interpreters, he lay down again, and leaned upon the bolster of his bed. It is certain that the Hebrew may be translated in these different significations, according to the different ways of reading it. Some time after, Joseph was informed that his Father grew worse; wherefore taking his two sons with him, Manasseh and Ephraim, he went to visit him. Jacob told him, that he adopted his two sons, that they should be like Reuben and Simeon in his family. After this he called for Manasseh and Ephraim to come near him, embraced, and blessed them; and putting his hands upon their heads, Joseph observed his left hand to be placed upon Manasseh's head, tho he was the eldest, and his right upon Ephraim, who was the youngest. Joseph therefore was desirous to remove them. But Jacob told him, that he knew perfectly well what he did; that Manasseh should be the Father of a great people, but that Ephraim should be the most powerful. After he had blessed Ephraim and Manasseh, he told Joseph, that he gave him one portion above his brethren, the field near Shechem, which he had conquered with his sword and with his bow. He meant, in all probability, the field situated near the town of Shechem, [Gen. xxxiii. 18, 19.] which he bought of the children of Hamor, at his return from Mesopotamia. But how comes he to say, that he had taken it out of the hands of the Amorite, with his sword and with his bow? This, perhaps, he may say, because after his retreat from Shechem upon the score of the violence exercised by his sons against the inhabitants of this city, he was obliged to recover the possession of this estate by forcibly driving out the Amorites, who had made themselves masters of it. See the Commentators upon Gen. xlviii. 22.

After this Jacob called all his children, and gave each of them a particular blessing. To Joseph he said, Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall. The archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him. But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong, by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob: even by the God of thy father who shall help thee, and by the Almighty who shall bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts and of the womb. The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitours, unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills.

[Gen. l. 1.] As soon as Jacob expired, Joseph fell upon his face, and melted into tears. Afterwards he had him embalmed by the Physicians of Egypt, whose trade it was to perform this office. They were thirty days about it, after which they put him forty days more in nitre, in order to dry his flesh more perfectly; and during these seventy days, there was a general mourning over all Egypt for Jacob: The time whereof being expired, Joseph requested that the King would please to give him leave to go and bury his father in the land of Canaan: the King permitted him, and Joseph at the funeral had the company of the chief of Pharaoh's court, and of the rest of Egypt. When they came to Atad's threshing floor, they mourned again seven days; after which they put his body in the double cave, or in the cave of Machpelah, which Abraham had purchased of Ephron the Hittite. Now after Joseph was returned to Egypt, his brethren being apprehensive, lest he should have harboured some resentment against them, sent messengers to him, saying, Your Father commanded us before his death to entreat you to forgive what we did to you; we therefore now desire this favour. Joseph wept; and when they were in his presence, he said to them, Are we able to resist the will of God? God hath changed the evil designs which you had formed against me into good. Fear not: I will nourish you and your little ones.

Joseph, after he had lived an hundred and ten years, and seen his grand-children of the third generation, fell sick, and said to his brethren, God will visit you after my death, and bring you out of this land, unto the land which he promised to our fathers. Promise me therefore with an oath, to transport my bones with you, when you shall depart hence. This they promised him; and after his death[12], his body was put into a coffin in Egypt; and Moses carried it away with him, when he delivered the Israelites out of that country. [Exod. xiii. 19. Josh. xxiv. 32.] It was committed to the care of the Tribe of Ephraim, and by them buried near Shechem, in the field which Jacob, a little before his death, had given to Joseph, as his particular property. The Rabbins[13] have told abundance of stories concerning Joseph's coffin, which the Egyptians, they say, had concealed under ground, in the channel of the river Nile, lest the Hebrews should carry it away; knowing very well, that as soon as they were possessed of this body, the Egyptians would be no longer able to detain them in their country. But notwithstanding Moses discovered it, and carried it away in spite of them.

The Author of Ecclesiasticus has made an encomium on the Patriarch Joseph in [Ecclus. xlix. 16, 17.] these terms, Of Jacob was this man of mercy born, who hath found favour in the eyes of all flesh. He was born to be the Prince of his brethren, and the support of his family; to be the head of his kinsmen, and the firm support of his people. His bones were visited, and prophesied after his death. His meaning is, that his bones were removed out of Egypt, and that this fell out as a consequence of his prophecy, that God would visit the Hebrews, and bring them into the promised land.

[Origen. Philocalia p. 29. edit. Oxon. & in Joan. t. v. p. 77. Artapan. apud Eus. l. 9. c. 23. Præparat.] We read in the Testament of the twelve Patriarchs several particulars of Joseph's life, which are absolutely apocryphal, as well as the prophecy, which he there makes of the blessed Virgin's birth, who, says he, shall be of the Tribe of Judah and Levi, and will bring into the world the Lamb of God. Joseph afterwards enjoins his sons to carry away the bones of Zilpah, and bury them in the Land of Canaan near Rachel's Sepulchre. Many learned men[14] have been of opinion, that the Egyptians worshipped Joseph under the names of Apis, Osiris, and Serapis, and even under the names of Hermes, Tammuz, and Adonis. There is a book ascribed to Joseph, entitled, Joseph's Prayer, which is cited by Origen in more places than one. Trithemius speaks of a magical book, whereof Joseph is said to be the author; the title of it is Joseph's Mirrour[15]. Artapanus, who is quoted in Eusebius, says, that Joseph coming into Egypt shewed the Egyptians the way of dividing lands, and cultivating each his own peculiar portion, whereas before, every one tilled what he thought proper, all the lands being then in common: he adds, that he invented likewise measures; for which he deserved extraordinary honours from this people. Mahomet in his Alcoran, Surat. xii. relates the history of Joseph at length, but blends it with many fabulous circumstances, which have been very much improved by the eastern people, See Maracius's notes upon the Alcoran.

We have taken notice of Joseph's marriage with the daughter of Potipherah under the article Asenath. The Mahometans [Bibl. Orient. p. 696. Jousouf. Ben Jacob.] have several books containing the supposed amours of Joseph with Zoleikah, daughter to Pharaoh King of Egypt, and wife to Potiphar. They make use of the name and example of Joseph, to raise their hearts to a love of God. Joseph and Zolei-kah are with them, what the bridegroom and the spouse are in Solomon's Canticles, that is to say, Jesus Christ and the Church, or God and a faithful soul: under the allegory of common love, the heart is exalted to a divine and supernatural affection.

[Alcoran ch. of Joesph.] Mahomet relates the history of Joseph in a manner different from Moses. Joseph having mentioned to his father his dream of the Sun, Moon, and twelve Stars, which worshipped him; Jacob said to him, My son, tell nothing of thy dream to thy brethren; the Devil is the declared enemy of mankind; thou shalt be the Lord's elect, &c. Joseph's brethren observing, that he was more beloved than all of them by their father, resolved to kill him. They one day asked Jacob why he did not send Joseph into the fields with them; they assured him they would take great care of him, and that he would be pleased and diverted. But I am afraid, said he, that you will be negligent, and not have the concern for his safety which I desire. Are you then afraid said they, that wolves should devour him with us, and we not have the courage to defend him? In short, they carried him with them in the morning and threw him into a well. In the evening they returned to their father's with their eyes bathed in tears, and told him with a counterfeit sorrow, that they were playing, and contending who should run best, and while Joseph continued with their clothes, a wolf came and devoured him: and as Jacob would believe nothing of the matter, they shewed him his bloody shirt. Jacob hereupon said to them, You have done this yourselves, you will be responsible for it before God, who is my protector; and so took it patiently without making any outcries.

The same day a caravan passed near the well, and the people belonging to it had a mind to draw water for their drinking. They let down their bucket, and Joseph fastened himself to it in order by this means to get out. They gave him clothes, carried him away privately, and sold him cheap for ready money. He who bought him in Egypt commanded his wife to take care of him, telling her, that one day he might be fit for their service, and would be to them instead of a child. When he was come to twenty years of age, Zoleikah his master's wife conceived an irregular passion for him. She shut him up one day in her chamber, and would have tempted him to sin. God forbid, said he, that I should deal treacherously with my master, and be guilty of such lewdness; and at the same time fled towards the door. His mistress stop'd him, and pulled him by the tail of his shirt. She happened to meet her husband near the door, and said to him, what does he deserve who has attempted to dishonour his master's house, what but to be cast into prison and severely punished? My lord, said Joseph, 'tis she who tempts me; this child who is in the cradle will be my witness. The child hereupon said, If Joseph's shirt is tore before, then she tells truth; but if it be torn behind, then Jo-seph tells truth, and she is a liar. The husband seeing Joseph's shirt tore behind, acknowledged his innocence, and his wife's malice.

The report of this action was soon spread throughout the city, and the ladies said, that the rich man's wife had endeavoured to debauch her servant. This coming to the ears of Joseph's mistress, she made a splendid entertainment for them. When they were at table she sent for Joseph to come in; as soon as he appeared they were amazed at his extreme beauty, and so confounded, that they knew not what they did, but instead of cutting their meat they cut their fingers, and said among themselves, This is not a man, but an angel. Here, said Zoleikah, as it were to excuse herself, is the man whom I have loved so passionately. Some time after she sollicited him afresh, and Joseph shewing the same firmness as before, she ordered him to be committed to prison, where he explained the dreams of Pharaoh's butler and baker.

Joseph continued in this confinement nine years, after which the King had his dream of the seven kine and seven ears of corn, which was explained by Joseph, not to Pharaoh, but to the king's butler, to whom he had before interpreted the dream of the grapes, the juice whereof was pressed by him into Pharaoh's cup. This man, who was then at liberty, desiring Joseph to explain the King's dream, Joseph satisfied him, and the butler went directly and gave an account of it to Pha-raoh. This Prince took Joseph hereupon out of prison, and appointed him superintendant of his revenues.

Mahomet relates afterwards, how Joseph's brethren came into Egypt to buy corn, how Benjamin was stop'd, and Joseph at last discovered himself to his brethren, saying, unto them, Return to your father, and carry this shirt to him; throw it over his face, and he will recover his sight; this family done come back, and bring your whole family with you. The caravan was got half way on its return when Jacob said to those who were about him, I perceive the smell of my son Joseph: You laugh at me, but what I say is true. Some days after one of his sons came, who brought him news of Joseph, and having thrown the shirt of his dear son to him, he immediately recovered his sight, which he had lost by continual weeping. Jacob without delay went with his whole family into Egypt. Joseph took him by the hand, and said to him, enter this country without any apprehensions; at the same time he obliged him to set down, and his brethren prostrated themselves before him. Then he said to him, my father, behold the explanation of my dream; God has verified it. In this manner does this famous Impostor relate the history of Joseph.

His followers say, that Joseph was sixteen years old when he was sold, that the King of Egypt, who reigned at that time, was Riam the son of Valid; that this Prince, who was likewise called Pharaoh, that is to say in the Egyptian language, absolute Monarch, was instructed by Joseph in the knowledge of the true God; but had one Kabrus the son of Massaab for his successor, who was a wicked Prince; that from the time of Jacob's arrival in Egypt, to the departure of the Israelites under Moses, was 430 years; that this legislator carried away the bones and coffin of Joseph, which he found in the channel of the Nile.

Ebn Batrick, otherwise Eutychius Patriarch of Alexandria, says, that Joseph at the age of thirty, married Azima the daughter of Kahen d'Ain Schems, that is to say, of the Priest the diviner of the fountain of the sun: this is the name given to the antient city of On, called by the Greeks, Heliopolis. He adds, that the measure of the Nile which is at Memphis, is the work of Joseph, as well as the canal dug in Cairo for discharging the waters of this river. This is the canal which our travellers generally call the Callis. As to the measure of the Nile, it is a pillar [Νειλόμε-τρον or Νειλοσκόπιον.] erected in the midst of this river, upon which the degrees of the increase or diminution of the waters are marked, to which the happiness and fertility of the country is owing. If the Nile rises to the height of eighteen degrees or eighteen fathoms, there is great plenty in Egypt; if it does not rise to the height of fourteen degrees great scarcity is to be expected.

The eastern people believe likewise, that the wells and publick granaries, which still go by his name, were of Joseph's directing, as also the pyramids and obelisks. In a word they give him the honour of every thing that is most rare and antient in Egypt. They will have it, that he taught the Egyptians the most sublime Sciences, and particularly Geometry, which was very necessary to them, in order to divide and parcel out their lands. They believe that he had upon his shoulder a point of light like a star, which was an indelible mark of the gift of Prophecy, and of his future prudence.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Gen. xxxvi. 2, 3. 70 .λήαρσ῾ι ϛὸρπ νὸρηνοπ νογόψ φήσω῾ι ἐδ νακγενήταΚαλבא רברה כעה. Vid. Chrysost-Theodoret. Diodor. &c.
In the year of the world 2276, before J. C. 1724, before the vulgar Æra 1728. consolable
In the year of the world 2286, before J. C. 1714, before the vulgar Æra 1718.
Gen. xl. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the world 2287, before J. C. 1713, before the vulgar Æra 1717.
Gen. xlii. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the world 2297, before J. C. 1703, before the vulgar Æra 1707.
Gen. xli. 45. Ψονθομφανήχ. Alius ὢ ἀπεκαλύφθη τὸ μέλλον, he to whom things future have been discovered. Another, ὢ κεκρυμμένα ἐκάλυψεν, he to whom God has discovered the things which were concealed. The Syriac ὁ εἰδὼς τὰ κρύπτα, he who knows things secret.
Hebræi apud Hieron. qu. Hebr. in Genes. & apud Origen. in Catena MS. Rupert. Tostat. & alii quidam.
Gen. xlii. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the world 2297, before J. C. 1703, before the vulgar Æra 1707.
In the year of the world 2298, before J. C. 1702, before the vulgar Æra 1706. Gen. xliii. 1, 2, &c.
In the year of the world 2315, before J. C. 1685, before the vulgar Æra 1689.
Gen. xlvii. 31. 70 .ῦοτὺα εδβάῤ ϛῆτ ϛορκᾶ ὸτ ἰπὲ εσηνύκεσορΠהמטה וישתחו על ראש. Ita & Paul. Hebr. xi. 21.
In the year of the world 2269, before J. C. 1731, before the vulgar Æra 1735.
See the life of Moses published in Hebrew and Latin by M. Gaulmin.
See S. Paulin. Natali xi. S. Felicii v. 100. Rufin. l. 2. c. 23. Hist. Ecclef. &c. Braun. l. 4. c. 13. Select. Sacra Sgambat. Archiv. V. T. in Joseph.
See Naude's Apology for those great men who have been accused of magic, c. 15.

Joseph (II)

II. JOSEPH, the son of Tobias, and a sister of the High-Priest Onias[1]. This High-Priest, who governed the Jews as head of the nation, both in Civil and Ecclesiastical affairs, was extremely avaricious, and was withal one of a mean genius, and very little prudence. He had neglected for some years to pay the tribute of twenty talents to the King of Egypt, which had been paid regularly by his predecessors, as a sort of homage to that Crown. The King sent Athenio one of his courtiers to Jerusalem, with a design of compelling the Jews to pay all the arrears, which amounted to a considerable sum, threatning them, if they did not comply with his demands, that he would send soldiers who should drive them out of the country, and divide the lands among them. Onias, who was become almost insensible with age, was not yet moved at these menaces, but they caused a terrible alarm in Jerusalem.

Joseph, Onias's nephew was at that time at his country house. His mother wrote him an account of what was passing; whereupon he immediately returned to Jerusalem, talked with his uncle Onias, remonstrated to him the danger to which he exposed the whole nation, told him that there was but one resolution to be taken, which was, to go with all speed to Egypt, and endeavour to accommodate the affair, by addressing himself directly to the King. Onias being neither in a condition nor disposition to undertake the journey, Joseph offered to charge himself with the commission, and wait on Ptolemy; to which Onias easily consented.

This consent being thus obtained, he convened the people in the outward court of the Temple, laid before them what he had done with his uncle, and told them, that if they would approve the choice which his uncle had made of him, they might set their hearts at rest, and did not doubt but he should reconcile this matter. The people were very thankful, and in treated him to continue his design. When he left the assembly he went to Athenio, carried him to his house, entertained him magnificently, made him considerable presents, and beg'd of him to assure the King, that he would forthwith make a journey to court, and would take care that he should be satisfied.

Athenio returned to Alexandria, charmed with the obliging behaviour of Joseph, and spoke of him in a way so advantageous, that the King was desirous of seeing him, and was prepared to receive him, in the most agreeable manner that was possible.

As soon as Athenio was gone, Joseph borrowed twenty thousand drachmas of a broker of Samaria, which make about ten thousand pound, supposing the drachmas to be gold, at ten shillings value each; with this money he provided himself an equipage, with which he departed, in order to proceed on his way to Alexandria.

Upon the road he met with people of the first quality of Cœle-Syria, and Palestine, who likewise were going thither, and performed the journey with them. Their design was to take the great farms of these provinces. As they had a magnificent train with which they proposed to make a figure at court, they ridiculed that of Joseph, which came not near it. He bore their pleasantries with great spirit, observing what they said concerning the quality and revenues of their country, and got such light into them, as enabled him to be merry in his turn, for the whole remainder of his life at their expence.

When they came to Alexandria, they understood that the King was gone to make a tour to Memphis. Joseph without losing time set forward on the way to him, and met him as he was returning with the Queen and Athenio in his chariot. Athenio knew him again, and told the King, that this was the young man, Onias's Ne phew, of whom he had discoursed to him. The King took him up in his chariot, and talked to him of his dissatisfaction with Onias, on the score of his bad payment of the tribute money. Joseph excused his uncle in the best manner he could, and wrought so much upon the King, that this Prince ordered an apartment to be provided for him in the royal palace at Alexandria, and obliged him to eat with him at his table.

The day of adjudging the royal farms being come, when those of Cœle-Syria and Phœnicia were in turn, Joseph's fellow tra vellers offered but eight thousand talents for the provinces of Cœle-Syria, Phœnicia, Judea and Samaria. Joseph who during his journey had observed all they had said on this subject, and understood by them that these farms were worth double this Sum, reproached them with lowering the King's revenues, and offered twice as much, or sixteen thousand talents, whereof the farmers were used to make their own advantage, and which he offered to remit into the treasury. Ptolemy extremely pleased to see his revenues so considerably augmented, but fearing that Joseph was not in a condition to pay as proposed, asked him what security he would give him? Sir, replyed he, I will give you such as shall content you, and I flatter myself that you and the Queen will be responsible for me. The King laughed at this unexpected proposal, and adjudged the Farm to him.

After this he borrowed five hundred ta lents at Alexandria, with which he paid the King what his uncle owed him; and having procured himself to be declared receiver general of the King's taxes in the Provinces above mentioned, he had a guard likewise assigned him of two thousand men, which he demanded for his security in the execution of this new imployment, and immediately left Alexandria, to go and take possession of it. When he came to Ascalon which was in his partition, he required what was due of the King's money to be paid him; but he met with insolent and rude language, and payment was refused. He ordered therefore his soldiers to take twenty of the greatest mutineers, and chastise them as they deserved, and sent the King two thousand talents out of their confiscated estates. This example, and another of the same kind, which he made at Scythopolis, where likewise he met with some resistance, so much intimidated all the rest, that he found no more opposition in levying the King's taxes. He was continued two and twenty years in this employment, probably till these Provinces were conquered by Antiochus the great King of Syria; about the year of the world 3802. Joseph therefore must have entred upon this imployment in the year 3780.

King Antiochus the Great, having mar ried his daughter Cleopatra to Ptolemy Epiphanes King of Egypt in 3812, and en dowed her with Cœle-Syria, Phœnicia, Judea and Samaria: Joseph in all probability resumed his employment of receiver of the King's tribute money, and kept it still for some time, since upon Queen Cleopatra's lying in of a son, about the year 3817, all the people of quality and distinction in Cœle-Syria and Palestine went to Alexandria, to compliment the King and Queen on this occasion, but Joseph not being in a condition to perform the journey, sent his son Hircanus thither, of whom we have spoken above in the article Hircanus.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joseph. Antiq. l. xii. c. 3, 4. Onias II. entered upon the exercise of the high priesthood, in the year of the world 3771, before J. C. 229. We do not know the year wherein Joseph took upon him the farm here mentioned.

Joseph (III)

III. JOSEPH, the son of Jacob, and [Matth. i. 15, 16.] grandson of Matthan, the blessed Virgin's spouse, and foster-father of Jesus Christ. All that is said of his age, and of the other circumstaances of his life, excepting what is read in the Gospel, having no better foundation than apocryphal authorities, we shall not insist upon them: Many of the Antients were of opinion, that before his marriage with the blessed Virgin, he had another wife, whose name was Escha, or Mary, by whom he had S. James the lesser, and the rest who are called in Scripture the brethren of Jesus Christ. But this is an absolute contradiction to those who maintain, that Joseph kept always his virginity intire; an opinion favoured by S. Jerom against Helvidius, and generally received at this day by the Latins. Besides, the opinion declaring S. James the lesser to be the son of Joseph and Mary, supposed to be the blessed Virgin's sister, is not maintainable, since Mary the mother of James was still living at the time of our Saviour's passion, unless any one will say, that she was [Mark xv. 40.] divorced by Joseph, in order to marry the blessed Virgin, or that this Saint was married at the same time to two sisters; which is entirely contrary to the Law. See note [Levit. xviii. 18.] the 3d of M. Tillemont concerning S. James the lesser.

The apocryphal Gospel of the Virgin's birth, followed by Epiphanius, and several others, imports, that Joseph was very old when he married the blessed Virgin. Epiphanius says, he was above fourscore, [Epiphan. hæres. 51. c. 10.] and that he had had six children by a former wife. He married the blessed Virgin not out of choice, but by lot; not with any design of using her as his wife, but to be only the guardian of her virginity. Others think that he was obliged to marry her, as being her nearest relation, and next heir. The blooming rod which the Painters place in Joseph's hands, denotes the rod which he presented to the High Priest, with others of the house of David, who might pretend to [Vid. Grot. ad Matt. i. 16. Casaubon. ad Baron. 1. n. 37. alii ex Epiphan. 78. c. 7. Hieron. in Matth. i. 2. Matth. i. 21. Matt. i. 19.] marry Mary. Of all these rods none but Joseph's blossomed. This is the sign whereby God generally declared his will concerning marriages of this kind, with virgins who were consecrated to him. But let us say no more of these odd conceits taken from apocryphal Books, as S. Jerom calls them, and let us keep close to what we learn in the Gospel concerning Joseph.

Joseph, says the Gospel, was a just man: [Matth. xiii. 55. Οὐχ οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ τοῦ τέκτονος υἱός. Apud Theodoret. hist. Eccles. l. 3. c. 18. Sozom. l. 6. c. 2, &c. Ambros. in Lucam l. 3. n. 2. ex Theophil. Antioch. in Matt. xiii. Justin Martyr. Dialog. cum Tryphon. p. 306.] this is the greatest encomium which any one could make of his virtue, since Justice comprehends all virtues. He married the blessed Virgin, whose resolution of keeping her Virginity was very well known to him, and consequently his resolution was the same. His ordinary abode was at Nazareth, particularly after his marriage; for there are some authors, who believe that the true place of his birth was Capernaum, others think it was Bethlehem. He lived by the labour of his hands, and worked at his trade; tho what that trade was is not agreed. Some will have it he was a Carpenter, others a Lock-smith; others a Mason; Justin the martyr says, that he worked upon yokes and ploughs. The Apocryphal Book Of the infancy of Jesus, which is of very great antiquity, relates a miracle wrought by our Saviour in his father's shop, who was a carpenter. S. Ambrose says, that he was employed in felling and cutting trees and in building houses: but at the same time he speaks of the utensils belonging to a smith, which he handled, and made use of. Libanius asking a Christian in the way of raillery, what Jesus Christ was doing, he replied, that he was making a coffin for the Emperor Julian. The author of an imperfect work upon S. Matthew[1], S. Thomas, and a great number of modern interpreters, assert likewise that he was a Carpenter.

They who maintain that Joseph was a Smith or Farrier cite S. Hilary, S. Peter Chrysologus, venerable Bede, and the He- Hilar. in brew Gospel of S. Matthew published by Matth.

Chrysolog. Tilius. Cardinal Hugo makes him a Gold-Serm. 48. smith; but does not disapprove their opin- Beda ven-

erab. in ion, who say he was a Mason. Theophilus

Marc c. 6. of Antioch, and S. Ambrose, are not against his being a Smith, since he worked, Hugo in

Marc. as they say, with fire and bellows. vi.

The mystery of the son of God's incarnation was not at first discovered to Joseph; and this holy man having observed Mary his espoused wife to be big with child, and not knowing what to attribute it to, was inclined to dismiss her privately, by giving her a bill of divorce, instead of publickly dishonouring her. But while he continued in this resolution, the Angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream, and said to him, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife; for that which is conceived of her is of the Holy Ghost. She shall bring forth a Son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus, or Saviour; for he shall save his people, and deliver them from their sins. After this Joseph took Mary to his own house, and kept her there as his wife.

About six months after, Joseph was obliged to go to Bethlehem, the place of his original, there to be registred[2] with Mary his wife, in pursuance of an order issued from the [Luke. ii. 1,2,3,&c.] Emperor Augustus, which appointed the whole empire to be numbred. While they were in this place, the time when Mary should be delivered came, and she brought her Son Jesus Christ into the world. Forty days after the Child's birth, it being the time of Mary's purification, she and Joseph carried him to Jerusalem, and performed all that the Law appointed upon such occasions. As they were preparing to return to Bethlehem, the Angel of the Lord advised Joseph in a dream, to carry the Child into Egypt, because [Matth. ii. 13,14.] King Herod sought to kill him. How long they continued in Egypt we cannot tell, but it is very probable that they did not sojourn there a long time, since Herod died about the feast of the Passover, some few months after the massacre of the Innocents. Then the Angel again advertised Joseph, that he might return into Judea. When he came thither, being informed that Archelaus had succeeded Herod, and fearing lest this Prince might have inherited his Father's cruelty, instead of going to Jerusalem or Bethlehem, he retired to Nazareth in Galilee, which did not belong to Archelaus's kingdom, but to that of Herod Antipas. There he abode till his death, imployed in the business of his trade, living with great simplicity, and practising with great exactness the observances of the Law. He carried Jesus at the age of twelve years with Mary to the Passover at Jerusalem, and they had the misfortune to lose him for three days. When they found him, as they did at last, in the Temple, the Virgin said to Jesus, My Son, [Luke ii. 42,51.] why hast thou done so with us? Behold thy Father and I have sought thee sorrowing. But Jesus answered them, Why was it that ye sought me? knew ye not that I was about my Father's business? Or, according to another translation, Did ye not know that the place where I was to be sought for, was my Father's house. But they did not understand this saying: He returned with them to [Luke ii. 49. Ὅτι ἐν τοῖς τοῦ πατρός μου δεῖ εἶναί με. Vide Epiphan. hæres. 78. c. 10 Ambros. in Luc. xxiii. & alios.] Nazareth, and was subject to them.

This is what we learn from Scripture concerning Joseph. It is believed with great probability, that he died before Jesus began to preach the Gospel. Joseph does not appear either at the marriage of Cana, or in any other circumstance of [Mark xv. 40. Matth. xiii. 53. xxvii. 56. Hegesip. apud Euseb. l. 3. c. 11. hist. Eccles. See above the article of S. Joseph. Acts i. 23. Acts i. 13, 14.] our Saviour's preaching; and Jesus Christ upon his Cross recommends his blessed mother to S. John, which, without doubt, he never would have done, if her Husband had been living. Travellers affirm, that his Sepulchre is in the valley of Jehoshaphat, to the east of Jerusalem; but the Antients say nothing of it. There are no relicks of his body shewn any where, but only some particular things which belong'd to him, such as his wedding-ring, which they pretend to have at Perouze in Italy, and in some other places. His name is to be found in very antient Martyrologies upon the 19th of March: but it was very late before any began to keep his festival. The Carmelites are thought to have brought it from the east, and introduced it in the western Churches; and the particular devotion which S. Theresa had for Joseph, contributed not a little in the last age to increase the solemnity of his worship.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Auth. Operis imperfecti in Matth. homil. I.
In the year of the world 4000. The year of J. C. birth.

Joseph (IV)

[Acts i, 21, 23.] IV. JOSEPH, or Joses, the son of Mary Cleophas, was brother to S. James the less, and a near relation to our Lord Jesus Christ after the flesh, being the son of Mary the blessed Virgin's sister, and Cleophas Joseph's brother, or son to Joseph himself, as several of the Antients suppose, who have asserted, that Joseph was married to Mary Cleophas, or Escha, before he was married to the Virgin. There are some who believe Joseph the son of Mary Cleophas to be the same with Joseph Barsabas, sirnamed the Just, who is mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles, and was proposed with S. Matthias to fill up the traitor Judas's place. But there is no certainty at all in this. We learn nothing particular in Scripture concerning Joseph the brother of our Lord. If he was one of those among his near kinsmen who did not believe in him, when they would have persuaded him to go to the Feast of Tabernacles, some months before his death, it is probable that he was afterwards converted; for it is intimated in Scripture, that at last all our Saviour's brethren believed in him; and S. Chrysostom[1] says, that they were signalized for the eminency of their faith and virtue.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Chrysost. in Matth. homil. 5. p. 59. b. in Acta homil. 3. p. 38. in Joan. homil. 20. p. 134. e.

Joseph Barsabas (V)

V. JOSEPH BARSABAS, sirnamed Justus, is one of Jesus Christ's first Disciples, having been with him from the beginning. He was one of the seventy-two Disciples[1]. S. Peter having proposed him, together with S. Matthias, to fill the traitor Judas's place, S. Matthias was preferred. Joseph continued in the Apostolick ministry to the end; and Papias informs [Papias apud Euseb. l. 3. c. 39. Hist. Eccles.] us, that this Saint having drank poison, was by the grace of Jesus Christ secured from death. The Martyrologies of Usuardus and Ado place his festival on the 20th of July, and say that he suffered a great deal from the Jews, and that at last he died in Judea, and had a glorious end.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Vide Eufeb. l. 1. c. 10. Clem. Alex. Beda, Epiphan. de Christi carne, c. 4.

Joseph of Arimathea (V)

V. JOSEPH of Arimathea, or of Ramatha[1], a Jewish senator, and privately a disciple [John xix. 51. Luke xxiii. 51.] of Jesus Christ. He was not consenting to the designs of the rest of the Jews, particularly of the members of the Sanhedrim, who condemned and put Jesus Christ to death; and when our Saviour was dead he went boldly to Pilate and desired the body of Jesus [Mark. xv. 43. John xix. 38.] , in order to bury it. He obtained it, and buried it after an honourable manner, in a Sepulchre newly made in a garden, which was upon the same mount Calvary where Jesus had been crucified. After he had placed it [Matth. xxvii. 60. John xix. 40, 41.] there, he closed the entrance of it with a stone, cut particularly for this purpose, which exactly filled the open part of it.

The Greek Church keeps the festival of S. Joseph of Arimathea on the 31st of July. We do not meet with his name in the old Latin Martyrologies, nor was it inserted in the Roman, till after the year 1585. The body of Joseph of Arimathea, was, they say,[2] brought to the Abby of Moyenmontier, by Fortunatus Archbishop of Grada, to whom Charlemain had given this Monastery under the denomination of a Benefice. Here the body of this Saint was honoured till the tenth Age; but then the Monastery being given to canons, who continued seventy years there, the Relicks of this Saint were carried away by some foreign Monks, and were lost with many others. I do not relate here what we read in the spurious acts of Joseph of Arimathea. As to this, any one who pleases may consult the Bollandists on the 17th of March.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Eusebius upon the word Ramah says it is the same with Arimathea, and upon the name Armathem Sepha, he says it is the same as Arimathea mentioned in the Gospel. S. Jerom in S. Paula's Epitaph says, that Arimath- ea, is not far from Diospolis or Lidda. It is therefore the city of Rama or Ramula between Joppa and Jerusalem.

Richerii Senonienf. Monachi Chronic. l. 2. c. 7, 8. & Joan. de Bayon. Chronic. MS. Mediani Monasterii. These authors make Fortunatus to be Archbishop of Jerusalem, but without doubt he is the same as Fortunatus Archbishop of Grada, under Charlemain. See le Cointe Annal. Franc. t. 6. p. 817.

Joseph (VI)

VI. JOSEPH, husband to Salome, Herod the Great's sister, was appointed governor of Judea in the absence of this Prince; and when he departed, in order to go and justify himself to Mark Antony, with relation to the death of young Aristobulus, Mariamne's brother, he left a severe order with Joseph, that in case Antony should put him to death, he should not fail likewise to kill Mariamne, lest after his decease she should fall into the power of any other. But Joseph having imprudently Joseph. Antiq. discovered the order which he had l. 15. c. 4. p. 515,

516. received, to Mariamne, thinking thereby to convince her of the extreme passion which Herod had for her, Mariamne thereupon conceived a fresh aversion to her husband, and Herod no sooner returned, but she bitterly reproached him for it. From that moment Herod began to distrust his wife's fidelity, and to suspect Joseph of having had too great familiarity with her; because he revealed a secret to her of such importance. Wherefore without so much as hearing him, he immediately dispatched him.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joseph Caiphas (VII)

VII. JOSEPH CAIPHAS. See Caiaphas.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joseph (VIII)

VIII. JOSEPH, the son of Ellem, was for one day substituted in the room of the High-Priest Matthias; because while the latter was dreaming in the night, he imagined that he was lying with a woman and polluted himself. This pollution rendring him incapable, according to the law, of performing his functions Joseph his relation was for that day [c. 8. p. 597. Deut. xxiii. 10. Levit. xxii. 4, 5. Joseph. Antiq. l. 17.] appointed to exercise them for him.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joseph (IX)

IX. JOSEPH, the son of Canæus, High-Priest of the Jews, from the year of the world 4048 to 4050.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joseph (X)

X. JOSEPH, sirnamed Cabei or Gaddis, made High-Priest of the Jews by Agrippa, in the year of the world 4066, and deprived the same year.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joseph (XI)

XI. JOSEPH, the son of Antipater, and brother of Herod the Great, was killed in a battle which he fought with Antigonus the Asmonean, contrary to the express prohibition of his brother Herod. See Antiq. l. 14. c. 27.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joseph-Ben-Gorion (XII)

XII. JOSEPH-BEN-GORION, or Joseph the son of Gorion: This Author, whose age, birth and profession are not exactly known by us, gives himself out to be a Priest and Prince of his people, who was particularly qualified for war, and received the spirit of wisdom and understanding, of council and fortitude, of knowledge and the fear of God; one who gave his life for the people of God, for his sanctuary, and for his nation. This is the testimony he gives in favour of himself. He adds, that one of his soldiers cried out to him one day, Thou art the man of God; blessed be the Lord God of Israel who hath created the soul that animates thee, and hath filled thee with wisdom. When he was taken, they asked one another in the enemy's army, Is this the man so formidable to the Romans? How came he to be taken who alone spread terror thro' our army, and hath filled the Universe with the fame of his valour? When Jerusalem was taken, Titus did justice to the excellent qualities of the son of Gorion, and raised him above all the Priests and Levites of his nation.

Thefe commendations so extravagant, and heaped together with so much affectation, prejudice us very much to his disadvantage, who bestowed them so liberally on himself. But the Jews who are used to set an extreme value upon every thing that proceeds from them, have discerned nothing excessive in these praises. Rabbi Than, who published the history of the [In the Edition of Constantinople 1490. 1510. and at Venice in 1544.] spurious Josephus, affirms, that all the words of this writer are truth and justice; that there is not one falshood in his writings; that he comes nearer the old Prophets than any writer that hath appeared; that the hand of the Lord rested upon him, while he composed his work; and that his words may be said almost to be the words of a God incarnate. Sebastian Munster, a Lutheran Author, who has given us the same History, has curtailed almost half of it, perhaps out of tenderness to the honour of this Historian; but the editions of him which have been since published, enable us to judge for ourselves of the merit of this work. You have here some speci-mens of it.

Joseph says, that he was born 134 years after the Cæsareat, which the Greeks call Imperiosia, was instituted among the Romans; and that he was one and fifty years old when Julius Cæsar came into the world. He says, he had seen Julius Cæsar, who is the first king, called by the Latins Imperius, or the first Cæsar, he who resettled the Cæsareat a third time among the Romans. He says likewise, that he was contemporary with Jesus the son of Sirach, a Prince among the Jews. How is all this Chronology to be reconciled? one contemporary with Jesus the son of Sirach, 51 years old at the birth of Julius Cæsar, and born 134 years after the establishment of the Roman Empire?

His father Gorion survived the taking of Jerusalem; for he departed out of the city when Titus had made himself master of it. Gorion therefore must have been then at least 240 years old. Joseph composed a great number of books in the time of Julius Cæsar. He published, as he says himself, a large Book, intitled Josephus. It was a Roman Chronicle or History, wherein was particularly to be seen what had passed, while the Consuls governed the Commonwealth. It was not sufficient for him to have related past events, his concern extended to what was yet to come, and he foretold what was to befal this great city till the total destruction of it. Nevertheless he did not set up for a Prophet; but he reported what he had learned from the Sages who had lived with the Prophets, and from the Heathens, who are true and sincere in their conjectures. He had obliged us, if he had told us, who these Sages are whom he had seen, and who lived with the Prophets. There is besides a great interval from the time of the old Hebrew Prophets to that of Julius Cæsar. As for the rest, it was easy for him, who did not live till the eleventh century, to write the Revolutions of the city of Rome, and give an account of what had been transacted so many years before.

intitled, Wisdom; wherein he spoke only of the Sages and Doctors who had gone before him. This book, as well as the preceding one, is in all probability a chimerical work which never was in being.

Afterwards he made an apology for his nation and family against the Heathens. He values himself upon having written something like Josephus the Greek historian's book against Apion, whereof the son of Gorion was certainly never capable.

Lastly, he published the famous History which we are speaking of, whereof no one had any knowledge till the twelfth Century[1]; no ancient Author having taken any notice of it. This work may be considered as a Chronicle of what was done under the second Temple. The Author persuades himself, that he should be esteemed by posterity as the Prince of Historians. He exalts himself above Livy, whose faults he pretends to correct. He relates that he had several other Authors before him, from whom he had extracted part of what he delivers. He says that he had read Livy, Trogus Pompeius, Strabo, Porophyus, probably Porphyry; the books of Cainan son of Enos, those of the Medes, Macedonians, and Assyrians; Alexander's Letters to Aristotle; the book of the Greeks, that of the Roman alliances, and of Kirker's, or Cicero's works, who had been an eye-witness of the hardships put upon the Priests by Pompey at the taking of Jerusalem; the Calendar which Julius Cæsar composed for the Greeks and Nazarens; the Chronicle of the Roman Cæsars; the Collection of Roman Laws, that Vespasian kissed upon the day of his Coronation. What falshoods and impostures are here?

I will now give you a specimen of his knowledge in the Roman History. He says he lived when Julius Cæsar made himself master of the Roman Empire, and that this was the third time of the Romans having this form of Government established among them. Tarquin was the first Cæsar, Alexander the Great carried his conquests into Italy; made himself master of Rome, and reigned there. Imperius, son of Ptolemy Philadelphus King of Egypt, got possession of it long afterwards, and then settled the Cæsareat or Empire. This Monarchy subsisted there, till Antony being in love with Cleopatra violated the rights of the people, who thereupon rebelled.

The Romans, after they had expelled Antony, bound themselves by oath, as they had done in the time of Tarquin the first of the Cæsars, never more to endure a Cæsar. Julius notwithstanding having obtained from the Senate the command of their armies in the west, as Pompey had that of their forces in the east, this young Hero at the age of nineteen beat the French and Britons, and in four years subdued all the Kings in the west. He returned to Rome elated with his successes, and declared insolently to the Senate, that he would become Cæsar. The Senate opposed him in a long and tedious harangue, which is reported by Joseph the son of Gorion, and is of his making. Cæsar made use of threats and violence, menaced all the Senators with a general massacre of them, beat Pompey, and was the first Emperor of the third Dynasty. This is our Author's historical system of the Roman Empire.

His History of Alexander the Great is a collection of fables and gross errors; there never was a Romance more mistaken, or fuller of silly trifles. The Author boasts of having extracted his history from this Prince's genealogy, written by the Egyptian Magi the year immediately following his death. M. Gagnier has lately published a Latin book with this title, The Actions of Alexander, together with a Latin translation of Joseph Ben-Gorion. The Latin Author agrees in almost all the facts with Joseph the son of Gorion, and says as he does, that he hath taken his History from the Memoirs of the Egyptian Magi. But it is hard to decide which of the two is most ancient; the Latin writer is some small matter less stuffed with fables. He is not ancient; but the Hebrew seems to be more modern. He often speaks of Britany, mentions Normandy, the Loire, Amboise, Chinon, France, Lombardy, England, Hungary, and Turky.

He speaks of the Burgundians, Bulgarians, of the inhabitants of Cracow, of the Croats or Crevats, of gold florins, &c. which are incontestable proofs of novelty. It is remarkable that he had read Josephus the Historian only in Rufinus's translation. No one doubts but that he was by original, a Frenchman, and wrote in France, but whether in Tourain, Britany, or Normandy, is a question. See the editions of this Author particularly that of Gotha and Lipsick, by M. Frederick Briethaupt[2]; and M. Basnage's Hist. des Juifs. t. 7. l. 10. c. 7.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Solomon Jarchi, a French Jew, who lived about the year 1140, is the first that ever spoke expressly of it. After him we find it cited by Aben-Ezra, Abraham Ben Dior, and David Kimchi, who lived about the same time.

Translators' note. This Mr. Breithaupt who published the history of Joseph Gorionides*, with his own* Latin translation, was counsellor to the Emperor and Elector of Saxony. He has inserted a preface and annotations in this edition, to prove this was the genuine work of Flavius Josephus*, who wrote his history in* Hebrew before he translated it into Greek. M. Gagnier has fully confuted this opinion, in a Latin piece printed by him on this subject.

Joseph (XIII)

[Joseph. de Vita sua, p. 998. & Antiq. l. 20. c. 9.] XIII. JOSEPH, Josephus, the historian, a Jew, sirnamed Flavius, the son of Matthias, of the race of the Priests, was born at Jerusalem in the first year of the reign of Caius, of J. C. 37. He was so well instructed, and made so early a proficiency, that at fourteen years of age the very High Priests consulted him in matters relating to the Law. From the age of sixteen to nineteen he busied himself in very laborious exercises in the wilderness, under the conduct of one Banes; and after having well examined the three principal sects which were then in repute among the Jews, he adhered to that of the Pharisees. At nineteen years [Idem de Vita sua,p. 998. De Vita,p. 998, 999. De Vita,p. 998, 999.] of age, that is to say, in the year 56 or 57 of J. C. he returned to Jerusalem, where he began to enter upon publick business. About the year 65 of J. C. being above six and twenty, he made a journey to Rome, to serve some of his friends. In his voyage he was shipwrecked, and out of more than six hundred persons, who were in his vessel, he and fourscore others only were saved by swimming all night. He obtained his friends liberty by Poppæa's means, whom Nero had married in the year 62. It appears that he had three wives. He tells the Jews, that his wife was at Jerusalem. In another place he says, that Vespasian made him marry one of Cæsarea, whom he soon forsook to marry another woman of Alexandria.

[De Vita sua, p. 1030. De Vita,p. 1000. De Bello, l. 2, c. 42. &seq.] In the beginning of the war between the Jews and Romans, and in the year of J. C. 66, he was sent into Galilee, in quality of Governor. There he performed many memorable actions which he has himself particularly described in his books concerning the Jewish wars. Vespasian besieged him in Jotapata, a city of Galilee, where he defended himself in such a manner, as was admired even by the Romans. When they had taken the place, Josephus fled into a very private cave; where he found forty of the Jews, who [De Bello, l. 3. c. 24 p. 850, 851.] had already retired thither. They were discovered there at three days end; and Vespasian, who desired extremely to have him alive, sent three times to offer him his life. Josephus made some scruple of relying upon the veracity of the Romans; but at last determining to trust them, his companions opposed his resolution, and declared to him, that it was necessary for him either to die by his own hands or theirs. He made a fine discourse to them upon this occasion, to shew the unlawfulness of self-murder, and that it is a weak not a generous action. They were not to be wrought upon by his arguments; and all that he could prevail with them to do, was to draw lots who should die first: They drew, and the lot so happened, that all the rest being dead, he was left alone with one other, whom he persuaded without much difficulty to prefer life to death.

He surrendred therefore to Vespasian, [De Bello, l. 3. 27. p. 854.] who was inclined to keep him, in order to send him to the Emperor Nero at Rome. Josephus being informed of his design, desired to speak with Vespasian in private. He had an audience at which Vespasian only was present, with Titus and two of his intimate friends. Josephus foretold that he would be advanced to the Empire after Nero, and some others who should immediately succeed him: and to convince him of the truth of this prediction, he told him, that he had foretold the day upon which Jotapata would be taken; which by the relation of the Jewish prisoners happened accordingly. Altho Vespasian at that time did not much reckon upon the prediction of Josephus, the event shewed the truth of it soon after, for he was proclaimed Emperor in the year of J. C. 69. Sometime after he held an assembly at Berytus, wherein after he had publickly commended the courage of Josephus, he ordered his chains to be broken which hitherto he had been bound with; that so he might do him honour as well as give him liberty; for it was a custom thus to break those fetters which [De Bello, l. 4. c. 38, 39. p. 900, 901.] were put on unjustly.

Josephus attended Titus at the siege of Jerusalem, and he endeavoured several times to bring the Jews to a consideration of their interests, and engage them to have recourse to the clemency of the Romans. His remonstrances and discourses were all in vain: the Jews answered him only with affronts and curses. One day as he [De Bello, l. 5. c. 35. p. 939.] was speaking to them pretty near the walls, he received a blow with a stone, which laid him senseless on the ground. The Jews run out in haste to take him, but the Romans being the strongest carried [In the year of J. C. or the vulgar Æra 70. De Vita, p. 1031, 1032.] him off, and had his wound dressed. After the city was taken he procured the liberty of several Jews, and Titus besides gave him the sacred Books, which he desired of him. The war being at an end, Titus returned to Rome, and carried Josephus thither with him, in 71. Vespasian appointed him a lodging in the house which belonged to him before he was Emperor, made him a citizen of Rome, assigned him a pension, gave him lands in Judea, and always shewed him a great deal of affection. Titus expressed as much to him. He assumed the name of Flavius which was that of Vespasian's family, because he looked upon himself as the Emperor's freedman.

Amidst the leisure which he enjoyed at Rome, he employed himself in writing the history of the Jewish war, from memoirs which he had prepared for this purpose: he composed it first of all in his own language, which was a kind of Syriac; and this work soon spread among the Arabians, [Joseph. de Bello, Prolog. p. 705.] Adiabenians, Babylonians, Parthians, and Jews beyond the Euphrates. Afterwards he translated it into Greek for the benefit of the Romans. At what time he learnt the Greek language is not known. He confesses that he never could pronounce it well, because he did not learn it when he was young; the Jews having very little esteem for the study of [Antiq. l. 20. c. 9. p. 703.] languages. He calls upon all those as witnesses to the truth of his narration, who had been present in this war. And as soon [Joseph. de Vita, p. 1026. Hieronym. de Viris illustr.] as this work was finished, he presented it to Vespasian, Titus, and King Agrippa, who all approved and highly commended it. Titus ordered it to be placed in a publick Library, and signed the copy, which was to be lodged there; with his own hand; as being the original out of which the history of the destruction of Jerusalem was to be learned. We are the more concerned to remark these circumstances, in that the history of the war of the Jews shews the accomplishment of those predictions, which Jesus Christ before his death had delivered, and a just punishment of the sin committed by the Jews in crucifying him.

[Matth. xxiv. Luke xix. 43, 44, &c.] After Josephus had written his history of the war between the Jews and Romans, he undertook to draw up a general history of his nation, beginning from the original of the world, and carrying it down to the twelfth year of Nero; of J. C. 66, wherein the Jews revolted. He undertook this work at the instance of one Epaphroditus paphroditus, who is believed to be[1] Nero's celebrated freedman, whom Domitian put to death in the year of J.C. 95. Josephus finished this work in the fifty sixth year of his age, the thirteenth of Domitian, and the 93 of J.C. He professes neither to add nor diminish any thing of what is contained in the sacred Books from whence he had taken what he relates. But complaints have been made against him, that he has not strictly kept to his promise, but has on several occasions, either suppressed, altered, or disguised some facts which are [Possevin. Apparat. p. 967. 968.] plainly set down in Scripture. Possevin has made a catalogue of the faults which are to be observed in Josephus, and many more might be added to them.

[Antiq. l. 20. c. 9. p. 705.] With his Antiquities he has joined the Books, which he wrote relating to his own life, at a time, wherein several persons were still living who were able to contradict him, if he had varied from the truth; and this account has passed for part of the twentieth book of his Antiquities. It is inscribed to the same Epaphroditus, to whom he dedicated his ten books of the Jewish antiquities. Epaphroditus dying in the year of J.C. 95, the book containing his life must be of the year 93 or 94. The principal part of this work is employed in describing what he did, while he was Governor of Galilee.

As several persons seemed to question what he had said concerning the antiquity of the Jews, and the history of them composed by him, he undertook a new work intitled Against Appion; or according to Eusebius and S. Jerom, Of the Antiquity of the Jews. He dedicated it to the same Epaphroditus, of whom we have made mention. Herein by a great number of [Contra Apion. l. 1. p. 1033. Eufeb.hist Eccl. l. 3. c. 9. de Præparat. Evang. l. 8. c. 7. Hieronym. de viris illustr. c. 13.] passages taken out of profane Authors, he shews the antiquity of the Hebrew nation, and the agreement of several antient and foreign writers, in relating many great events described in the history of the Jews. Lastly he makes an apology for his nation against Appion, and against some others who slandered it.

To conclude, there is a very eloquent discourse cited under his name with this title Of the empire of reason, which in some Greek Bibles is intitled, The fourth book of Maccabees; because in this he speaks of the Martyrdom of the seven brothers, the Maccabees, the history of whom is related in a more simple and concise manner in the second canonical book of the Maccabees. But [2 Macc. vii.] we can scarce believe this work to be Josephus's. First by reason of the difference of Style. Secondly, Because Josephus no where cites or speaks of it, as he does of his other works. Thirdly, because there are many things in it contrary to the Scripture, and the true history of the Maccabees. See our Preface to the fourth book of Maccabees, p. 420, 421.

Josephus has spoken very advantageously of Jesus Christ, saying that he was [Antiq. l. 18. c. 4. t. 621, 622.] the Messiah, and the Christ foretold by the Prophets; that he wrought many miracles; that after he was put to death, he appeared again within three days alive; that he had many Disciples, and that the sect of Christians, who took their name from him, [Blondel des Sybill. l. 1. c. 7. p. 28, 29.] was still in being. Some of the moderns have questioned the truth of this passage, but the Antients having cited it, and it being in all the copies of Josephus, we see no reason to give it up. You may consult, if you please, concerning this place, Francis de Roye, M. Huet in his Demonstratio Evangelica, & M. de Tillemont, note 40. upon the destruction of the Jews; and [Huet. Demonstr. Evangel. propos 3. art. xi.] lastly a little piece published in 1661 by Christopher Arnoldus, wherein he hath collected thirty letters from several learned men, who give their opinions on this subject, and nine and twenty extracts from different works relating to the same thing.

[Antiq. l. 18. c. 7. Antiq. l. 20. c. 8. Photius Codice 47. Hieronym. de Viris illustr. Euseb. Hist. Eccl. l. 3. c. 9. Vide apud Grot. l. 7. c. 6. Origen. in Matth. Græc. p. 223.] Josephus has likewise given testimony to S. John Baptist in a very advantageous manner, and to S. James minor, bishop of Jerusalem, whom he describes by the name of the brother of Jesus called the Christ. It was before mentioned in his history, that the Emperor Claudius expell'd the Jews out of Rome, and that the Jews imputed the destruction of Jerusalem to the death of S. James minor. It is surprizing that he has said nothing concerning the murder of the Innocents; but there are many other things which have been omitted by him. The old Latin version of Josephus's works still extant, is thought to be Rufinus's, Priest of Aquileia. Photius expresses a great esteem for the history of Josephus; and S. Jerom makes a magnificent encomium on him: calling him the Livy of the Greeks. Lastly Eusebius says, that his statue was erected at Rome in consideration of his writings. We do not meet with his name in any of the sacred books. But as we cite him frequently in this Dictionary, and have borrowed many particulars from him, we thought ourselves obliged to mention him somewhat at large in this place.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Pearson, Opera posthum. p. 172. Dio, l. 67. p. 766. Tellemont's destruction of the Jews, art. 81.

Joseph (XIV)

XIV. JOSEPH, sirnamed the Blind[1], was, as is said, a Professor in the university of Sara, about the year 351. The Jews call him the Great Light, or Saghi-Nabor. He is [Ganz Tze-mach David ad an. 113.] likewise sirnamed Sinai, because he gloried in having a perfect knowledge of all the traditions, which had been delivered to Moses on mount Sinai. He is said to be the author of the Chaldee Paraphrases upon the Psalms, Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Solomon's song, Ruth and Esther. But it is not universally agreed, that the Paraphrases upon all these Books are by the same Author, there being so [Huet de claris Interpret. § 6.] visible a difference in his style and method; for sometimes he is too close and concise, and sometimes again too copious and diffuse. For example, He is very long upon the Canticles and Ecclesiastes, but much shorter upon the other Books. His style is neither pure nor correct; and the fables of the Mishna and Talmud are to be observed in his works, The names of Turks and Constantinople are to be met with in them, for which reason F. Morin, says, that they are of a much later composition than the Jews will allow. Elias the [Morin. Exercit. l. 2. exercit. 8. c. 2.] Levite says, that there are several footsteps of the Babylonish, Greek, Latin, and Persian [Elias Levita Præfat. in Meturgamin.] languages to be discerned in them.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. He is indeed commonly called Josephus Cæcus, or Josephus the Blind: but this is not to be understood as if he were blind of both eyes: for then he could not have done this work. The word in Hebrew, by which he is so de- nominated, signifieth Luscum, one that is blind of one eye, as well as Cæcum, one that is blind of both eyes, Prid. Connect. &c. Part ii. Book viii.

Joshbekashah

JOSHBEKASHAH, the son of Heman, a Levite and singer. Of the four and twenty classes of Levites, he was of the seventeenth. 1 Chr. xxv. 4. 24.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joshua

JOSHUA, the son of Nun, by the Greeks called *Jesus the son of Nav*è, was of the Tribe of Ephraim. He was born in the year of the world 2460, before J.C. 1540, before the vulgar Æra 1544. He devoted himself to the service of Moses, and in Scripture he is commonly called the servant of Moses. His [Exod. xxiv. 13. xxxiii. 11. Deut. i. 38, &c.] first name was Hosea, and we find him mentioned by this name in the book of Numbers xiii. 9, 17. Some believe that Moses changed his name by adding that of God to it. Hoseah[1] signifies Saviour, Jehosua, the Salvation of God, or he will save. His quality of servant of Moses, is no blemish or dishonour to his memory. On the contrary, it is one of the greatest honours which he could receive, and a very particular mark of distinction from Moses, to have chosen him for his minister. In the heroick times, great men had servants in this manner, who were people of eminent quality and known worth. Thus in Homer, Patroclus [2 Kings iii. 11.] was the servant of Achilles, and Meriones Idomeneus's servant. Now Patroclus and Meriones were two Grecian Princes of great consideration in the army before Troy. Elisha was Elijah's servant, and poured water on his hands; notwithstanding which he was a great Prophet.

The first opportunity which Joshua had to signalize his valour, was in the war which he made by God's order against the Amalekites[2]. He beat them, and routed their whole army. God afterwards commanded Moses to write down this event, and to inform Joshua, that he was resolved to cut off Amalek from under Heaven. When Moses went up mount Sinai, in order to receive the Law of the Lord, and remained there forty days and forty nights without eating or drinking, Joshua abode there with him, tho in all probability not in the same place, nor with the same abstinence; and when Moses went down from the mountain, Joshua immediately heard the noise of the [Exod. xxiv. 13. Exod. xxxii. 17.] people, who were playing and dancing about the golden calf. He thought it was the cry of people engaged in battle; but Moses soon discovered what it was; he knew that they were fallen into Idolatry.

Joshua was very constant at the tabernacle of the congregation; he had the care and [Exod. xxxii. 12. Numb. xi. 28, 29.] custody of it; he seems to have dwelt in it, or very near it. Having one day observed two persons, who prophesied in the camp, without Moses's laying his hands on them: he informed Moses of it, and desired him to restrain them. But the holy Legislator answered, Why art thou envious for my sake? Would to God, that all were Prophets! When the people came to Kadesh-barnea[3], Joshua, with twelve others, was deputed to survey the land of Canaan; and when these deputies returned, and had represented the difficulties in conquering it to be greater than they were, Joshua and Caleb maintained it to be an attempt more easily practicable, provided the Lord were with them. For this cause God swore that all the murmurers should die, and excluded all of them from the land of promise; but at the same time he promised Joshua and Caleb, that they should enter into it, and divide it among the twelve Tribes.

When Moses was near his end, he prayed [Numb. xxvii. 18.] unto the Lord to appoint some person who should succeed him in the government of his people; and God commanded him to lay hands on Joshua, to communicate to him part of his spirit and glory[4], to the end that the people might hearken to him and obey him. After the death of Moses[5], he took upon him the command of the Israelites; and God favoured him upon all occasions. He immediately sent spies to take a view of the city of Jericho, [Josh. ii. 1, 2, 3, &c.] and as soon as they were returned, and had acquainted him with the condition of the city, and the consternation which the Canaanites were in, he ordered the whole army of Israel to pass the river Jordan[6]. The priests marched at the head of the people with the ark of the Covenant, and [Josh. iii. 1, 2, 3, &c.] as soon as they had set footing in the river, the waters which came from above stood still like a mountain, and those below ran into the Dead Sea; so that the river remained dry for about two leagues in extent. The priests continued in the middle of the channel, till all the people had passed over Jordan; and Joshua took twelve stones out of the midst of the river, which he placed at Gilgal, and set up twelve likewise in the midst of Jordan, that both might serve as monuments of the miracle which had happened.

Some few days after the passage of Jordan, Joshua caused all those to be circumcised, who had been born in the wilderness, and who by reason of their changing place frequently, had not been able to receive circumcision since their departure out of Egypt. After this, they [Josh. v. 10, 11, 12, &c.] kept the feast of the Passover on the 14th of the month Nisan, in the year of the world 2553. Then they began to eat of the ears and new corn of the land of Canaan, thereby as it were to put themselves in possession of this country; and the manna upon which they had hitherto subsisted, fell no more. Now while Joshua [Josh. v. 13, 14, 15.] was in the territory of Jericho, he saw a man standing before him with a naked sword in his hand: He went to him, and said art thou for us, or for our adversaries? The man answered, I am captain of the host of the Lord, and I am come here to thy assistance. Joshua fell with his face to the earth; and the angel said to him, take off thy shoes, for the place where thou standest is holy ground.

[Josh. v. 1, 2, 3, &c. Josh. vi. 1, 2, 3, &c.] Within few days after, he received orders from the Lord to lay siege to Jericho. There are some who are of opinion, that this siege was carried on during the seven days passover. The six first days, the whole army of Israel, with the Priests and ark at their head, marched round the city once a day without saying any thing: On the seventh day they marched seven times round it; and at the seventh time of their taking this circuit, the Priests beginning to sound the sacred trumpets, all the people gave a great shout, and the walls of the city were overthrown, so that every man entred at the place which was opposite to him. They carried fire and sword with them through all places, without sparing either men or beasts. The metals only were reserved to be consecrated to the Lord; and Rahab with her family was preserved, because she had secured the spies, who were sent into the place by Joshua. See Rahab. Joshua then uttered this imprecation against Jericho: Cursed be the man who shall rebuild Jericho: Let his first born dye while he is laying the foundation of it, and let him lose his youngest son when he has set up the gates of it. The accomplishment of this prophecy was seen many ages after. See above Hiel, and 1 Kings xvi. 34.

After this Joshua sent three thousand men against Ai: but this small army was repulsed with the loss of six and thirty men. The Israelites upon this check were very much dejected. Joshua made his complaint to the Lord, who told him, that Israel had violated the anathema pronounced against Jericho, and that the people would not be able to stand against their [Josh vii. 1, 2, 3, &c.] enemies till this crime were expiated. The people hereupon were convened; they drew lots, and the lot fell on Achan the son of Carmi. Achan confessed his fault. They run to his tent to look for a wedge of gold, which he had hidden there, a scarlet cloke, and two hundred shekels of silver. He and all who belonged to him were stoned, and every thing that he had was burnt. See the article Achan. After this Joshua with ease made himself master of Ai. The city was first pillaged, and then burnt; all the inhabitants of it were put to the sword, and the King fastned to a gibbet, upon which he hung till evening.

God had commanded, that after the Israelites had passed the river Jordan, they should erect an altar to him on mount [Deut. xxvii. 45, &c.] Ebal. Joshua in pursuance of this order, after the taking of Jericho and Ai, led the people to the mountains of Ebal and Gerizim[7], where he appointed the blessings and curses which are mentioned by Moses [Josh. viii. 32. משנה תורת70. משה To Δευτερονόμιον νόμος Μωσῆ, &c.] to be pronounced, and an altar of unpolished stones to be raised, which he directed to be plaistered over, and a copy of the Law to be written upon it, that is to say, the Decalogue, which includes a short abstract of the law; or the blessings and curses which are set down by Moses in Deut. xxvii. 4, 5, 6, &c. or an abridgment of Deuteronomy. The Hebrew term which is translated Deuteronomy, signifies the copy, or duplicate of the law. Upon this altar burnt sacrifices were offered and the people returned to Gilgal, where for some time the whole body of the Israelites lay incamped. Eusebius and S. Jerom have placed Ebal in the plain of Jericho: but it is certainly near the city of Shechem.

[Josh. ix. 1,2,3, &c. Josh. x. 1, 2,3,4, &c.] About the same time, the Gibeonites came to make an alliance with Joshua, pretending that they were come from a distant country, and were none of the people of Canaan, who were devoted to the curse. Joshua and the elders of Israel received them, and made a covenant with them, without consulting the Lord; but three days after they understood that they were Canaanites, and dwelt in the cities of Gibeon, Chephirah, Beeroth, and Kirjath-jearim. The people murmured against the elders; and it was resolved, that their lives should be preserved, since this they had been promised in the name of the Lord; but that they should be condemned to cut wood, and carry water for the service of the people. Hereupon Adonibezek King of Jerusalem, seeing that the Gibeonites had surrendred to the Hebrews without striking a blow, confederated with four other Kings of Canaan, and went to attack Gibeon. But Joshua being informed of it, marched all night, and in the morning fell upon them so briskly, that he put the five Kings to flight, and cut a great number of their troops in pieces. And as the enemies fled along the way that goeth up to Bethoron, the Lord caused a shower of large hail-stones to pour down upon them as far as Azekah, which killed abundance of them. Then Joshua said, Sun, stand thou still over against Gibeon, and thou moon, in the valley of Ajalon. And the sun and moon stood still, till the people of the Lord had taken vengeance on their enemies. We have written particular dissertations upon the shower of hail-stones and the sun and moon's standing still, which may be consulted before our Comment upon Joshua.

The five Kings having fled into a cave near Makkedah, Joshua ordered great stones to be rolled against the mouth of it till the army had entirely dispersed the enemy. Towards the close of the day, the army returned to Makkedah. Joshua killed these five Kings, and hung their dead bodies upon gibbets, where they remained till evening. Joshua taking the advantage of the consternation which the Canaanites were in, attacked and took several cities belonging to their country; such as Makkedah, Libnah, Lachish, Eglon, and Hebron, set fire to them, killed their Kings, and put every living creature which they found there to the sword. He pillaged all the land from Kadesh-barnea to Gaza, and all the land of Gozen as far as Gibeon, that is to say, all the southern part of Palestine. At length he returned with the whole army to Gilgal.

The year following a the King of Hazor, who dwelt above the lake Semechon, in Galilee, confederated with several Kings of [Josh. xi. 1,2,3, &c.] Canaan, to endeavour, if they could, to oppress the Israelites with their great number. They met at the waters of Merom, to the south of mount Carmel. Hereupon Joshua marched against them; and having charged them on a sudden, defeated and pursued them as far as great Zidon, the waters of Misrephoth, and Mizpeh, towards the east. The Hebrews killed all that fell in to their hands: they ham-strung their horses, and burnt all their chariots as the Lord commanded them. From thence Joshua returned to Hazor, took it, burnt it, and killed the King, and all the inhabitants thereof. He took and destroyed in like manner all the cities round about, and killed their Kings. All this was not done in a day, nor even in a year. Some years were necessary to reduce the whole country to obedience; for he was obliged to make war with all these Kings, none of them surrendring without coming to a battle.

It was not therefore till the sixth year after the Israelites had entered into the land of Canaan[8], that they began to divide the [Josh. xiii, xiv, xv, xvi, xvii.] conquered lands; Caleb first of all demanded to have his portion assigned him in the mountains of Judah and Hebron, as the Lord had commanded; and what he desired was granted to him. See Caleb. After this a division was made to every Tribe by lot, of such ground as was convenient for them: first to Judah, then to Ephraim and the half Tribe of Manasseh, which hitherto had not received its partition; for the other half of this Tribe had its lot beyond Jordan.

[Josh.xviii.] After this[9], the people were assembled at Shiloh, to make a division of what was[10] [Josh. xxii. Ecclus. xlvi. 1.] to be given to the other Tribes. Joshua sent surveyors throughout all the country; and upon their return lots were drawn, and the Tribes of Benjamin, Simeon, Zebulon, Issachar, Asher, Naphtali, and Dan had their portions assigned them. And lastly they gave to Joshua for his inheritance Timnath-Serah in the mountains of Ephraim. They then appointed six cities of refuge for those who had committed casual and involuntary murder, and six and forty cities as [Josh. xx. xxi.] dwelling places for the Priests and Levites. Lastly, the Tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the Half Tribe of Manasseh, having performed their promises, and assisted their brethren to make a conquest of the land of Canaan, they returned to the country beyond Jordan, where Moses had assigned them their inheritance. But as soon as they came upon the banks of Jordan, they erected a monument as a memorial to future generations, that they were the same people with the other Tribes on this side the river. Joshua having been informed of this undertaking, and fearing lest it might be made an idolatrous monument or altar, and the worship of the Lord be thereby opposed, sent to them to know what they intended to do with that altar. But the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and Manasseh, having declared their real intentions to the Deputies, they returned in peace to Joshua.

This great man seeing his end drawing near,[11] summoned all the Tribes of Israel, at Shechem, and ordered the ark of the covenant to be brought thither. Then, after he had represented to the Israelites the favours which they had received from God, and exhorted them to continue faithful to him, he made a covenant on the part of God [Josh. xxiii. xxiv.] with the people, and the people reciprocally engaged to serve the Lord, and in all things to obey him. Joshua reduced the act of it into form, and wrote it in the book of the law of the Lord; and in order to preserve the memory of what was done, he erected a monument with one very large stone, which he placed under the oak, which was near Shechem. After this he died at an hundred and ten years of age, in the year of the world 2570, before J.C. 1430, before the vulgar Æra 1434. The Holy Spirit hath made his encomium with the pen of Jesus the son of Sirach, in these terms, "Jesus the son of Nave was "valiant in the wars, and was the [Ecclus. xlvi. 1, 2. &c.] successor of Moses in prophecies, who "according to his name (he hath perfectly fulfilled the name of Saviour "which he was called by) was made great "for the saving of the elect of God, "and taking vengeance of the enemies "that rose up against them, that he "might set Israel in their inheritance. "How great glory got he, when he did "lift up his hands, and stretched out his "sword against the cities! (See Joshua "viii. 18. Leva clypeum, &c.) Who be- "fore him so stood to it? for the Lord "himself brought his enemies unto him. "Did not the sun go back by his means, "and was not one day as long as two? "He called upon the most High Lord "when the enemies pressed upon him on "every side, and the great Lord heard him. "And with hail-stones of mighty power "he made the battle to fall violently upon "the nations, and in the descent of Bethoron he destroyed them that resisted, "that the nations might know all their "strength, because he fought in the fight "of the Lord, and he followed the mighty "One."

The book which bears the name of Joshua is generally attributed to this great man. All the copies of it go under his name. It is said in the last chapter, v. 26 that Joshua wrote all these things. Jesus the son of Sirach says, that he succeeded Moses in the prophetick ministry. Lastly, both the Church and Synagogue agree, in making him the Author of this work, and, acknowledging it to be canonical; nevertheless it must be owned, that there are certain terms, names of places, and particular circumstances in history, which do not agree with Joshua's time, and induce people to believe, that the book has been since revised, and that additions and corrections have been made by the transcribers. But there are few books of Scripture, wherein something like this is not to be observed. They who please may consult our Preface to Joshua, and the authors who have written Prolegomena on the sacred Books.

The Samaritans have a Book of Joshua, which they preserve with respect, and make use of to support their pretensions against the Jews: but this book is very different from that which the Jews and Christians esteem to be canonical. It contains seven and forty chapters, filled with an infinite number of fables and childish stories. It begins there, where Moses chooses Joshua to succeed him in the government of the people. It relates the history of Balaam the diviner, who was called to curse the Israelites, speaks of the war which Moses made against the Midianites, of the occasion of it, of Balaam's death, of the death of Moses, and the lamentation which was made for him. It relates the passage of the river Jordan very much at large, and the taking of Jericho, and adds a great number of miracles which are not in the genuine book of Joshua. It describes a certain war which it mentions to have been carried on against Saúbec the son of Heman King of Persia, with the addition of a thousand fabulous circumstances. After the death of Joshua, this book names one Tersico, of the Tribe of Ephraim for his successor. The author includes within his history what concerns the Judges and Kings of Judah, Jaddus, and Alexander the Great, and the siege of Jerusalem by Adrian. He concludes with what relates to Nathanael, and his sons Babarraba, Akbarus, and Phinehas. This book is not printed. Joseph Scaliger, to whom it belonged, left it as a legacy to the Library of Leyden, where it is at present in Samaritan characters, but in the Arabian language [See M. Fabric. Apocryph. V. T. p. 876, 877, &c.] translated from the Hebrew.

The Jews make Joshua the author of a prayer, which they repeat either in tire or in part, as often as they go out of their Synagogues: It begins thus, It is our duty to praise the Lord of the Universe, and to celebrate the creation of the World; for he hath not made us like unto the nations of the Earth, and hath prepared for us an inheritance infinitely richer and greater, &c. See Wagenseil, Tela ignea Satanæ, p. 223, 227. They likewise ascribe to Joshua ten rules which were to be observed in the [Vide apud Selden. de jure nat. & gent. l. 6. c. 2.] land of promise. The first is, that it is lawful to feed small but not large cattle in forests, the trees whereof are large. The second, that all Israelites are allowed to pick up little pieces of wood, such as briars or the like, in another man's field; provided nevertheless, that they find them upon the ground, and do not cut them. The rest of these regulations are much of the same nature. We do not read any where, that Joshua was married or had children. After his death the elders of Israel governed the people in a sort of Aristocracy. But we do not know whether there was any one among them who was first in rank, nor who he was. Nevertheless it is believed, that Othniel had the principal share in the government at this time. The Mahometans believe, that Joshua was [Bibl. Orient. p.494. Joschoua.] sent by God in order to fight the Giants, who possessed the town and country of Arika or Jericho. He gave them battle on friday in the evening, and as night came on, and he could not combate them on the sabbath day, he beg'd of God to prolong the day, that he might have time sufficient to defeat them. His prayer was heard, and the Sun continued an hour and an half above the Horizon longer than it should do. This was one motive which obliged the Musselmen to choose this day for their festival, preferably to saturday. They add, that Joshua drove the Philistines, or rather the Canaanites, out of their country, and obliged them to retire into Africk.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hoseah. Jehosuah. There is some dispute concerning the time when Joshua began to be so called. Some think it was after the defeat of the Amalekites, others not till after the return of the Commissioners appointed to survey the promised land. The Greek instead of Hosea reads Ausem.

Exod. xvii. 9, 10. In the year of the world 2513, before J. C. 1487, before the vulgar Æra 1491.

In the year of the world 2514, before J. C. 1486, before the vulgar Æra 1490.

In the year of the world 2552, before J. C. 1448, before the vulgar Æra 1452.

In the year of the world 2553, before J. C. 1447, before the vulgar Æra 1451.

In the year of the world 2553, before J. C. 1447, before the vulgar Æra 1451.

Josh. viii. 3. In the year of the world 2553, before J.C. 1447, before the vulgar Æra 1451.

In the year of the world 2559, before J. C. 1441, before the vulgar Æra 1445.

In the year of the world 2560, before J. C. 1440, before the vulgar Æra 1444. to

In the year of the world 2554, before J. C. 1446, before the vulgar Æra 1450.

In the year of the world 2570, before J.C. 1430, before the vulgar Æra 1434. 2 Chr. xxxv. 3. Chrysost. in 1 Cor. ii. homil. 7. Idem in Matth. ii. homil. 9.

Josiah

[2 Kings. xxii. 1, 2, &c.] JOSIAH, the son of Amon King of Judah, and Jedidah the daughter of Adaiah of Bocslath. He began to reign when he was eight years of age, in the year of the world 3363, before J. C. 637, before the vulgar Æra 641. He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the ways of David without turning either to the right hand or the left. He began to seek after God from the eighth year of his reign, which was the sixteenth of his age, of the world 3370; and in the twelfth year of his reign, which was the twentieth of his age[1], he purged Judah and Jerusalem of the high places, groves, idols, and superstitious images. He burned the bones belonging to the Priests of the false Gods upon the Altars of their Idols. Nor was he satisfied with thus destroying the remains of Idolatry in his own dominions, but visited in person the cities of Ephraim, Manasseh, Simeon, and Naphtali, and did not return till he had overthrown all the monuments of Idolatry.

[2 Chr. xxxiv. 13. ספר תורת יהוה ביד משה] After this he made it his business to repair the Temple of the Lord, which in the preceding reigns had been very much neglected. But as they were removing the money which had been offered by the Israelites at the Temple, in order to give it to the workmen and undertakers, the High Priest Hilkiah found in the treasury-chamber a book of the Law of the Lord given by Moses. It is thought[2], that this was the original of the Law, and that it was found either in some wall, or chest, or beside the ark; for it appears, that it was not then in the Sanctuary, since Josiah commands the Priests to restore it to its place, and forbids them to carry it about any more. S. Chrysostom says somewhere, that this book was found in a heap of filth and nastiness; and in another place, that it was found in a hole under ground, and almost defaced. He is of opinion, that the book of Deuteronomy was then only discovered, probably because it is said, that Moses ordered this book of the Law to be placed beside the [Deut. xxxi. 26.] Ark.

Shaphan the Scribe gave notice to the King of the discovery which they had made of the book of the Law; and Josiah [2 Kings xxii. 9,10, 11, &c. & 2 Chr. xxxiv. 18, 19,20,&c.] having appointed it to be read to him, and heard the words of the Law, rent his clothes, and said to the High Priest and principal officers of his court, Go, consult the Lord concerning what relates to me and my people, upon the late discovery of this book; for the anger of the Lord is kindled against us, by reason of our Fathers sins. They went therefore to Huldah the Prophetess, the wife of Shallum, and asked her what was to be done upon this occasion. Huldah answered them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, I will pour out upon the inhabitants of this place all the evils which the King of Judah hath read in the book of the Law, because they have forsaken me, and sacrificed to strange Gods. But for the King of Judah who hath sent you, you shall say thus unto him, Because you have been afraid upon reading the book of the Law, have humbled yourself, rent your garments, and wept before me, I have heard your prayer, you shall be buried in peace with your fathers, and your eyes shall not behold the evils which I will bring upon this city.

The messengers returned to the King with an account of what the Prophetess [2 Kings xxv. 1, 2, 3. & 2 Chr. xxxiv. 29,30,&c.] had said to them; and the King having convened all the Elders of Judah and Jerusalem, went up to the Temple of the Lord with them. He read the book to them, which he had lately found, and made a covenant with God, thereby engaging himself to walk in his ways, and to observe his precepts and ordinances. He obliged himself hereunto with an oath, and made all those who were in the assembly promise the same thing. He afterwards gave orders for destroying all remains of superstitious and idolatrous monuments in Jerusalem, and throughout all Judah. He cut off the Soothsayers, and those who worshipped the stars, and the Sodomites who prostituted themselves in honour to their false Gods. He enjoined those Priests who had offered sacrifices in the highplaces, to forbear all exercise of their sacred functions. He defiled Topheth and the valley of Hinnom, and profaned all the places which had been consecrated to superstition and idolatry, filled them with dead mens bones, and broke down the statues which were in them. He demolished the altar which Jeroboam the son of Nebat had erected at Bethel, dug up the bones of the false Prophets and Priests of the Golden Calves, but spared the sepulchre of that Prophet, whom the Lord sent against Jeroboam, the same who [1 Kings xiii. 31,32.] was deceived by another Prophet, and violated the command which God had given him to forbear eating there. That other Prophet, who was buried in the same place, was likewise spared for his [2 Kings xxiii. 17, 18. 2 Kings xxiii. 21, &c. 2 Chr. xxxv. 1, 2, &c.] sake.

Josiah afterwards a commanded all his people to keep the Passover, according to what was written in the book of the Law concerning it. The Scripture says, that from the time of the Judges, and during the reigns of all the Kings of Judah and Israel, no Passover was ever kept like that which was celebrated in the eighteenth year of Josiah; and that there was no King before him like unto him, nor turned as he did to the Lord with all his heart, with all his soul, and with all his strengh. Notwithstanding the anger which the Lord had conceived against Judah, was not appeased; for Pharaoh Necho King of Egpyt, desiring to pass thro Judea,[3] in order to go and attack the city of Carchemish upon the Euphrates, Josiah opposed his passage, and gave him battle at Megiddo, at the foot of mount Carmel. Here this good Prince was mortally wounded; and being carried to Jerusalem, died there of his wounds. The people mourned very much for his death, and Jeremiah composed an elegy upon this occasion. Josiah was buried with the Kings his predecessors at Jerusalem. The people of Judah took Jehoahaz, otherwise called Shallum, one of Josiah's sons, and made him King in his room.

Jesus the son of Sirach speaks highly of King Josiah in these following words, " [Ecclus. xlix. 1, 2, 3, &c.] The remembrance of Josiah is like the composition of the perfume that is made " by the art of the Apothecary; it is sweet " as honey in all mouths, and as musick " at a banquet of wine. He behaved " himself uprightly in the conversion of " the people, and took away the abomination of iniquity; he directed his heart " unto the Lord, and in the time of the " ungodly he established the worship of " God. All except David, Hezekiah, and " Josiah were defective."

There were several prophets in Judah while Josiah reigned; Jeremiah and Baruch, Joel and Zephaniah, and the Pro phetess[4] Huldah. Many[5] have been of opinion, that the Lamentations of Jeremiah, which are still in our hands, were composed at the death of Josiah; and that these are the Lamentations mentioned in the second [2 Chr. xxxv. 24, 25.] book of Chronicles, which were so celebrated at that time, and which all the singing men and singing women continued still to sing a long time after. The mourning of the people upon the death of this Prince, passed, as it were, into a law, and proverb; and the Prophet Zachary speaking of the [Zach. xii. 11.] lamentation which in future ages, would be made at the death of the Messiah, alludes to that of Josiah, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddo. Josiah, it is well known, received his death's wound at Megiddo near Hadadrimmon. He left four sons, Jehoahaz, otherwise Shallum, Eliakim, or Jehoiakim, Zedekiah, otherwise Matthanias, and Johanan. This last, in all probability, died young; the other three reigned. See their titles.

There are some difficulties formed relating to the history of Josiah: first, in that he was not satisfied with abolishing Idolatry in Jerusalem and his own dominions, but went [2 Kings xxiii. 15.] likewise into the territories of the Kingdom of Israel, overthrew the altar which Jeroboam the son of Nebat had erected there, cut down the groves, and destroyed the high places where the people sacrificed to the golden calves; he did the same in all places depending on the Kingdom of Samaria; he destroyed the places consecrated to superstition and idolatry, killed all the Priests of the high places, burnt dead mens bones upon the Altars, in order to pollute them, and so returned to Jerusalem. It is true, the Kingdom of Israel at that time was not in being, the ten tribes having been transplanted beyond the Euphrates[6]; but there was still a great number of inhabitants in the land, as well Israelites, who were left behind there, as Cutheans and other people sent thither by the Kings of Assyria. However, it seems certain, that Josiah was not the sovereign of the country, which was in subjection to the Kings of Assyria: how then could he exercise the rights of sovereignty?

To this we may answer, 1. that Josiah in this particular did not so much follow the rules of policy, as the motions of his zeal and piety. 2. It is very credible, that he who was a wise Prince, and well advised, did nothing without consulting the wisest and most understanding men [2 Kings xxiii. 29, 30. & 2 Chr. xxxv. 20.] of his kingdom. 3 We see by the sequel of Josiah's history, that this Prince was in alliance with the Kings of Chaldea since he opposed Necho King of Egypt, who marched against the city of Carchemish. It is therefore very probable, that Josiah possessed the territories of Samaria, as well as those of Judea, and that the Kings of Chaldea had given him the sovereignty over the miserable remains of that kingdom. The Scripture indeed tells us nothing of it; but does not say the contrary. 4. Lastly, the Cutheans and other people, whom Esar -haddon had sent into this country, might not concern themselves much in maintaining the religion of the Israelites of the ten Tribes; and they of the ten Tribes who remained there, were not in condition to resist Josiah, nor even to complain to the Kings of Chaldea; since their continuance in the country was by toleration only, and without allowance.

[Author. tradit. Hebr. in Paralipp. & Grot. & alii. 3 Esdras i. 28.] The second difficulty relates to Josiah's expedition against Necho King of Egpyt. Necho, upon what notice we know not, marched against the city of Carchemish situated upon the Euphrates, and belonging to the Kings of Babylon or Assyria, as the second book of Kings imports. Josiah put himself at the head of his army, and intended to oppose his passage. The King of Egypt sent Ambassadors to him, saying, What difference is there between me and thee? I have no designs against thee; but I make war upon another house, against which God hath commanded me to march with all expedition. Cease therefore to oppose God, who is with me, lest he make thy attempt fatal to thee. Josiah refused to acquiesce in what Necho had said to him from the mouth of God: He attacked him at Megiddo, and was there mortally wounded. Herein the Scripture plainly expresses itself, as if Necho had really been ingaged by God's order to march against the city of Carchemish.

It is the opinion of some, that the Prophet Jeremiah, or some other Prophet of the Lord, had spoken to Necho, and enjoined him to commence hostilities against this city. The third book of Esdras says, that Josiah would not regard the Prophet's word on this occasion. But what interest could this Prince have in opposing the King of Egypt, who demanded nothing of him? It is very probable that Josiah was either an ally, or even subject and tributary to the Kings of Chaldea, successors to those of Assyria, to whom his father*Manasseh* had been delivered, and was restored to the crown only upon condition of continuing faithful to the Kings his benefactors. Josiah without doubt had entred into the same ingagements. It was therefore not only consistent with policy, but with justice too, to forbid the King of Egypt passage thro his country, who was going to attack a place belonging to the Empire of Chaldæa. If he seemed not to respect sufficiently God's orders upon this occasion; it was because he believed not God to be the author of this expedition, and was not obliged to take his enemy's word for it.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

2 Chr. xxxiv. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the world 3324, before J. C. 626, before the vulgar Æra 630.

Joseph. Antiq. l. x, c. 5. Ἐντυγχάνει ταῖς ἱεραῖς βίβλοις τῶ Μωσέως ἐν τῷ ναῷ κειμέναις, Grot. Jun. Pisc. Hebræi, alii plures.

2 Kings xxiii. 29. & 2 Chr. xxxv. 20, 21. In the year of the world 3394, before J. C. 606, before the vulgar Æra 610.

In the year of the world 3381, before J. C. 619, before the vulgar Æra 623.

Hieronym. in Zach. xii. Chald. Interp. Raban. Maldonate, Thomas Bonavent. Hugo, Vat. Jun. &c. We have declared for the contrary opinion in our Preface to the Lamentations.

The Kingdom of Israel was destroyed in the year of the world 3279, and Josiah did not ascend the throne till 3363, he did not undertake the reformation we are speaking of, till about the year 3381, before J. C. 619.

Josiphia

JOSIPHIA returned from Babylon with sixty persons. See Ezra viii. 10.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Iota

IOTA, a Letter in the Greek Alphabet, which derives its name from the Jod of the Hebrews, or the Judh of the Syrians. Jesus [Matth. v. 18.] Christ said in the Gospel, that there would not be one Jota or tittle in the Law which would not have its accomplishment; that is to say, that whatsoever was foretold or figured in Moses and the other sacred Books would be fulfilled. This seems to have been a kind of proverb among the Jews, as it is one among us, to say there is not an Iota wanting; that is to say nothing at all. And this, because an Iota is the smallest letter in the Greek Alphabet, as Jod is in the Hebrew: [I Iota יJod.] Iota unum, aut unus apex. Now apex is properly a stroke, a point, or the extremity of certain [μία κεραία Unus apex.] Hebrew letters, which exceed others in length, as Lamed, Schin, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jotapata

JOTAPATA, a city of Galilee. Josephus [Joseph. in vita, p. 1017.] says, that it was forty furlongs from Gabara, or perhaps Gadara. It was the strongest place in Galilee, being situated upon a mountain, and rocks every where inaccessible, excepting on the north side, through which there was a way to it. It was taken and destroyed in the [De Bello, l. iii. c. 4.] 67th year of the vulgar Æra. Many believe it to be the same with Gath-hepher, the place of the Prophet Jonah's nativity; but of this there is no certainty. In the Council of Jerusalem held in 536, we find the subscription of a Bishop of Jotabé in Palestine. Whether this were the same as Jotapata or not, we do not know.

The city of Jotapata is celebrated for the siege sustained there by Josephus the historian, against Vespasian then General of the Roman army, and afterwards Emperor. This affair was transacted in the manner following: Vespasian having resolved to make war in person upon the Jews, entred Galilee with a design of terrifying Jerusalem and all Judea, and giving them just reason to repent of their rebellion. He marched directly against Jotapata, having first ordered the ways that led thither to be levell'd, which were of very difficult access to the foot, and unpassable for the horse. He was at the head of about sixty thousand men, without reckoning a great number of servants, who having attended their masters in the midst of dangers, and warlike [Joseph. de Bello, l. iii. c. 5.] exercises, might pass for good soldiers.

Josephus being informed of Vespasian's design, threw himself into Jotapata upon the 21*st* of May, in the year of the world 4070. Vespasian was overjoyed at this, believing that by taking him he should soon make himself master of all Galilee; wherefore he sent immediately Placidus and Ebutius, two captains of great bravery and experience, with a thousand horse, in order to invest the place on every side, and prevent Josephus's [Ibid. c. 11. Ibid. c. 13. Ibid. c. 15. Ibid. c. 23.] escaping. The next day he came thither with his whole army and began the day following to attack it: but meeting with a resistance, which he did not expect, he thought it necessary to lay siege to it in form. The Jews made continual sallies, burnt the machines; and destroyed all the Roman works; so that Vespasian looked upon himself as besieged in his own camp.

Observing therefore that all his efforts, and all his works were of no advantage to him against the Jews, and that he made no advances, he determined with himself to take the city by famine or drought, for he knew the people within it wanted water; but Josephus, in order to disappoint these hopes, directed abundance of clothes all dripping with water to be hung upon the battlements of the walls, which so afflicted and surprized the Romans, that, never imagining people who wanted water would consume it so unprofitably, they returned to their first design of firing the town.

To this end Vespasian ordered all his machines to be set up against the City, the ram opened a breach in the walls, very terrible assaults were made, and several actions passed on both sides with extraordinary valour. At last Vespasian was informed by a deserter in what condition the place was, and that the most favourable time for storming it was about break of day, because that the besieged, who were spent with so long and obstinate a siege, and overwhelmed with their fatigues, were then almost all fast asleep. Vespasian made good use of this intelligence, and sent Titus and the Tribune Sabinus, with some choice soldiers, who killed the centinels; these were followed by Cerealis and Placidus, and all together entred the town long before the inhabitants were awake, or perceived any thing of the matter, and killed all they met without distinction. The city was taken upon the first day of July, in the thirteenth year of Nero's reign, after a siege of seven and forty days. Josephus fled to a private cave, where he found forty of his people; but being discovered, they chose rather to kill one another than to surrender. Josephus only remaining with one more, delivered himself into the enemies hands, and was brought to Vespasian, who intended to send him to Nero; but changed his design in consideration of Titus, whose good graces his prisoner had won by foretelling, that both he and his father would be Emperors.

[Observations on the siege of Jotapata, Josephus, l. iii. c. 2, &c.] The siege of Jerusalem, so celebrated in history, and placed among the most memorable of Antiquity, both for the attack and the defence of it, is in the opinion of good judges, who examine things with most accuracy, much inferior to that of Jotapata. In this we meet with instances of every thing great and profound that art could produce, all the opposition that could be made to an attack carried on with the most consummate skill and conduct, all the ingenuity and cunning that the wit of man could invent, and all the most daring boldness that could be without rashness or imprudence. Josephus, one of the most eminent and accurate historians of Antiquity, in his history of the war between the Jews and Romans, has given us a particular and wonderful account of the siege of this place, which he himself defended, with all the valour, artifice, and understanding that could be desired in a soldier of great skill and experience in one of the nicest and most learned parts of knowledge in military affairs; and it is no small matter to come off with honour, when one has to deal with a vigorous, bold, and enterprizing enemy, who excels particularly in the attack of places. For the Romans more especially had the advantage over other people in this part of soldiery, and this was what made Josephus's defence more glorious.

[Joseph. de bello, l. iii. c. 12.] Vespasian was chosen by the Emperor Nero, to reduce the Jews; he thereupon immediately entred Galilee at the head of sixty thousand men, and sat down before Jotapata, which Josephus describes after the following manner: This city is built intirely upon a steep rock, and encompassed on three sides with valleys of such a depth, that there is no looking down upon them without dazzling the eyes: the only side on which it is accessible lies towards the north, where people had built upon the declivity of the mountain; but Josephus had fortified, and inclosed it, that the enemies might not be able to come near the top of this mountain, which commanded the city; and other mountains which surrounded the city, concealed the view of it in such a manner, that no one could perceive it till they were within it. Such was the strength of Jotapata.

We see by this description, that it was capable of making a great resistance; but if we consider the Roman works, how far they were carried, and the furious assaults which were made, we cannot forbear admiring the great courage of the besieged, and the admirable conduct of their Commander; for this does indeed exceed imagination. The city of Jerusalem was infinitely stronger in the height and thickness of its walls, when Titus besieged it: and what is still more remarkable, the troops which were within exceeded those without in number, which was far from being the case of Jotapata. The valour and resolute boldness of the besieged were equal in both; but in the defence of Jotapata, we see a great deal of skill joined with the most wonderful good conduct, which we do not observe in that of Jerusalem. The virtus indocta of Vegetius, that is to say, rage and fury, were to be found in the latter; but in the other the Commander, who was of eminent capacity, and the soldiers who were intrepidly brave, opposed the Romans who were both well disciplined and well commanded, with a prudent temerity; that is to say, with valour beyond common bounds, which produces such a desire of conquering in the hearts of soldiers, that a Governor may push them on so far as to perish rather than yield in an extremity, wherein the preservation of all is at stake.

As the Romans were imperious and violent in every thing they undertook, it often happened, that they engaged in rash and imprudent designs, out of an opinion of their strength and courage, and a contempt of the people with whom they were at war, (I mean here the people of Asia) for they acted with less circumspection against these than against others, except the Parthians. Their discipline was so admirable, their Generals so able, and so experienced, particularly in the art of sieges, the whole mystery whereof was so perfectly known to them, that we are not to think it strange that they sometimes departed from the rules of prudence against enemies so much inferior to them. Their war with the Jews gave them some uneasiness, the desperate valour of this people seemed formidable to them; but as they then wanted Generals, and consequently fought only in a tumultuary way, and without discipline, they thought they should every where find them the same, and were very much mistaken at Jotapata.

Vespasian invested the city; and as he was desirous to answer the good opinion which which the Emperor had conceived of him, by speedily terminating a war which might have bad consequences; for it was to be feared, that if it were drawn out into any length, the neighbouring people would declare in favour of the Jews, or underhand assist them; for these reasons Vespasian resolved, notwithstanding the strength of the place, the capacity and valour of the Commander, and the number of inhabitants and troops which had thrown themselves into the town, to attempt an escalade, and take it at the first onset; but he met with a brisk opposition, and was vigorously repulsed; the next day they began to batter the city. Josephus seems here to set out ill, or the [Joseph. de Bello, l. iii. c. 11.] Translator is not accurate. It appears visibly by the following chapter, that the town was not battered till after many attacks and repeated onsets; but that at first they endeavoured to carry it by storm, sword in hand; wherefore he should have said, The next day they began to attack the city. The Romans met with a surprizing resistance, all their efforts were vain, they were repulsed with shame; and as they were more susceptible of this than fear, they were piqued, returned the day following to the attack, and were forced to retire with as much dishonour, and as much ground got as the day before. They were too fierce and resolute to sit down thus, and the besieged too brave and too well conducted not to teach them how to make a better judgment of them; accordingly they were not discouraged; for they sustained five assaults one after another, and to show they wanted bridles more than spurs, they made vigorous sallies, while others of them were defending the ramparts; which was matter of humiliation to the Romans, who with such powerful forces, every where received a check; wherefore Vespasian saw very well, that there was nothing to be got against such daring and brave people, and that he should never master them but by a regular and formal siege.

The preparations of the besiegers to make sure of this conquest, are surprizing, and their works almost incredible; for they were to proceed step by step, by trenches or parallels made of hurdles, and raise terrasses or cavaliers of a prodigious height, to command the walls of the city. Against these works Josephus built a wall still higher, with towers and battlements, and that he might carry on his works under cover, he fixed large pieces of timber upright in the ground to which he hung curtains made of the hides of oxen just killed, which protected his people from the enemy's arrows, broke the force of the stones which were flung against them from the machines, and deadned that of the fire with their moisture.

The Romans undertook this siege with such a provision of machines to throw darts and stones, that nothing could be more surprizing. Vespasian, says the Jewish author, [Joseph. de Bello, l. iii. c. 12.] disposed an hundred and sixty machines, which were continually throwing darts against those who defended the walls; and other larger machines for battery, were likewise placed there, some whereof lanced javelins, others stones of a very great size; and at the same time, ordered his people to cast so much fire, and his Arabian and other archers to shoot so many arrows, that the whole space between the walls and the terrass was so full of them, that it seemed impossible to come near them; but the Jews were not to be surprized at any thing: they notwithstanding this made their sallies, wherein after they had taken away every thing which covered the workmen, and had compelled them to quit the place, they destroyed their works, and set fire to their burdles, and other things which were a cover to them. It is probable that the vigorous defence of the besieged, and the frequent sallies which they made upon the Roman works, might hinder the enemies from bringing the ram sooner near the walls, in order to batter and make a breach in them; and it is strange, that Josephus should lose all hopes of preserving the place, before the battering ram had been plaid; for he held a council with his principal officers about retreating. Had he a mind by this means to sound the garison and inhabitants? He was convinced of their resolution to defend themselves. Was there any want of salt? this was no insupportable misfortune; but the greatest misfortune was the want of water, which he was obliged to distribute among his people by measure: but the inhabitants, says he, who discovered Ibid. c.14. his design, came in crowds, and conjured him not to forsake them, and to consider, that their whole confidence was placed in him: that he alone might preserve them by continuing with them, because while he was at the head of them they would fight with joy to the last, &c. A brave and couragious governor at the head of such people is without doubt happy; and what is still more to be admired, they kept their words. I cannot tell whether Josephus with the reasons which he alledged to them, had any good assurance, that if he went out of the city he should be able to levy an army strong enough to succour them against the power of the Romans; but it is plain they were not satisfied with his reasons: there was not one, even among the women and children, who did not conjure him to stay with them, and these very women and children were as useful in this memorable siege, as the most vigorous men. Josephus therefore thought no more of retiring but only of defending himself to the last extremity. From words he proceeded to effects: He made a sally [Joseph. de bello, l. iii. c. 14.] with the bravest of his people, pushed the Roman guards, forced their intrenchments (the trenches) fell even upon their camp, threw down the skins under which the soldiers lodged, and set fire to their works. He did the same thing the next and the following days, and continued still for some days and nights to act with the like vigour, without being at all cooled by such an extraordinary fatigue. Vespasian was in admiration at such surprising valour and boldness; these people, says he, are desperate, and are to be avoided rather than encountred; but these desperados got great advantages over their enemies, and in defences nothing is more to be apprehended than despair well conducted by such as have the Command.

Great precautions are to be used against people who defend themselves in this manner. The Romans proceeded slowly, and advanced little, good platforms were necessary to secure the rams; they were placed for battering, and supported by an infinite number of archers, posted upon the towers and terrasses, who were continually shooting arrows. The wall was vigorously battered, the Jews put sacks full of straw to oppose them against the shock of the ram, these they let down to the place where it was to fall, and so broke the force of the [Ibid. c. 15.] blows. This invention, says the Jewish author, retarded very much the Romans: for on what side soever they turned their ram, it met with sacks full of straw, which made the strokes of it of no use; but at last they found a remedy for this by cutting the cords, to which these sacks were fastned, with scythes tied to long poles. The Romans would have been sufficiently embarrassed, if instead of cords the besieged had made use of chains to hang their sacks; but probably they had none.

Nothing is more admirable in Sieges than all the machines of the ancients made for throwing things, I mean, their catapultæ, and balistæ; those particularly which threw stones with such force and violence, that as Josephus says, they beat down the battlements, made breaches at the angles of the towers, and in the places where the besieged were most crouded, they killed those who were behind the rest, without their being in a condition, who were before them, to [a Commentaire sur Polyb. tom. 2, 3. in quarto, Paris.] secure them any way from the effects of them. This is not at all surprizing, when we understand the force of these machines. We see in several authors, and particularly in Polybius a, whither I refer the reader, effects still more astonishing of the prodigious force of these machines, and the immense weights which they threw out, and carried for above an Italian mile.

The battering rams, and machines, quite discouraged the besieged; the walls were already upon tumbling, when they bethought themselves of gathering together all the combustible matters they could; with these they mixt bitumen, pitch and sulphur, set fire to them, and at the same time, hurl'd all this at three different places upon the machines, and into the works of the Romans, which had cost them so much time and pains to raise, and were burnt in less than an hour without a possibility of hindring it. Josephus at the same time seeing every thing succeed, made a vigorous sally with all the choice men he had in the city, and taking lighted torches in their hands, they went as far as the Roman camp, and burnt all the machines, huts, and works of the tenth Legion, which was the most formidable body of the Roman infantry.

The Romans, not dispirited by so many misfortunes, repaired their works, brought new rams again for battering, and played them against the wall which was already shaken, so vigorously, that they overthrew it, and made a breach wide enough for an assault. I shall not here enter upon particulars, the description which Josephus has made of it is admirable, and shews it came from a soldier: I shall only say, that never was any breach assaulted with more vigour, nor better defended. The Romans were repulsed as in all the assaults which they had hitherto made; always beaten and never discouraged, tho they lost an infinite many brave soldiers. Vespasian saw well, that he must come to new works. He set people therefore upon making his platforms higher, and erecting wooden towers upon them of fifty foot in height, all covered with iron to strengthen them by this addition of weight, and make them proof against fire. Upon these, beside the light machines made for throwing stones and arrows, he put the most expert of his archers and slingers. Wherefore as these towers and terrasses commanded the ramparts, the Jews were compell'd to abandon the breach; but they charged and vigorously repulsed the Romans, tho with loss, who attempted to mount it.

In short the inhabitants of Jotapata had, against all probability, sustained a siege of forty seven days, and with invincible courage, endured fatigues, miseries, and all the most dreadful calamities, when a deserter from the city was the cause of its destruction. He came and gave Vespasian an account of the condition of the place, of the small number of people that remain'd for its defence, and that if he had a mind to surprize it, and make himself master of it, he had nothing more to do than to attack them by break of day; for then it was, that they endeavoured to get some rest, after so many fatigues; and that even they who were upon guard not being able to hold up, were almost asleep. This relation was suspected by Vespasian; but as he run no great hazard in believing the intelligence of this traytor, who told him what was but too true; he put him into custody, and gave orders for the attack. Thus at an hour appointed, Titus with some officers at the head of a troop of chosen soldiers marched forwards without noise, and finding all asleep, killed the Sentinels, cut the throats of the main-guard, and made themselves masters of the fortress. The whole army afterwards entering the town, put its unfortunate inhabitants to the sword, who were for the most part buried in sleep; and the remembrance of the mischiefs they had suffered, having erazed all sense of compassion out of their hearts, they committed unheard of cruelties, without sparing any one.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jotbah

JOTBAH, a city in the tribe of Judah, where Meshullemeth was born, the mother of Ammon King of Judah. 2 Kings xxi. 19.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jotbathah

JOTBATHAH, an encampment of the Israelites in the wilderness between Gidgad and Ebronah, Numb. xxxiii. 34. It is our conjecture, that this may be the same incampment as the graves of lust. Ie-taabatha, signifies an heap of lust.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jotham (I)

I. JOTHAM, or Joatham, Gideon's [Acervus Concupiscentiæ.] youngest son[1]. He escaped the slaughter which the inhabitants of Ophrah made of seventy of his brethren, killed in the presence and by the orders of Abimelech, Gideon's bastard-son. The people of Shechem having made this same Abimelech King, because he was their countryman: Jotham, who had notice of it, went up to the top of mount Gerizim, and from thence addressed himself to the inhabitants of Shechem, who were assembled without their city, in order to proceed to the coronation of the King, and said: Hearken unto me, ye men of Shechem, that God may hearken unto you. The trees went forth on a time to anoint a King over them; and they applied themselves to the Olive-tree, who thanked them. They went afterwards to the fig-tree and the vine, who did the same. At last they had recourse to the bramble, who answered them: If you wou'd in reality make me your King, come and rest under my shade; if not, let fire come out of the bramble and devour the cedars of Lebanon. He added, Consider whether you have treated the house of Gideon as you ought to do; that Gideon, who exposed his life in your service, and rescued you from the slavery of the Midianites? And whether you have had reason to make Abimelech your King, who is the son of his handmaid, and has murdered seventy of his lawfully begotten children. If your conduct is just, may Abimelech and you be happy in one another; if not, may fire come out from Shechem and devour Abimelech. When he had said thus, he fled to Beer, left Abimelech should kill him. We do not know what became of him after this time, but his prediction, or imprecation against the inhabitants of Shechem and Abimelech were soon after accomplished. See Abimelech.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the World 2768, before J.C. 1232, before the vulgar Æra 1236.

Jotham (II)

II. JOTHAM, the son and successor of Uzziah, otherwise called Azariah King of Judah. Uzziah having been smitten with a leprosy for undertaking to offer incense, which function was reserved to the Priests, [2 Chron. xxvi. 16, 17, &c.] the government of the kingdom was committed to Jotham his son, in the year of the world 3221, before J. C. 779, before the vulgar Æra 783. He governed five and twenty years to the year of the world 3246, before J. C. 754, before the vulgar Æra 758. Then he assumed the title of King, and reigned absolutely, to the year of the world 3262, before J. C. 738, before the vulgar Æra 742: So that he governed the kingdom of Judah one and forty years: sixteen years alone, and five and twenty years in his father's life-time. The Scripture says, that he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, and that he imitated the piety of his father Uzziah. Nevertheless he did not destroy the high places, and the people continued going thither to sacrifice: He built the great gate of the Temple, and carried on other works upon the walls of Jerusalem, in that quarter which was called Ophel. He caused forts and [2 Kings xv. 33. 2 Kings xv. 33,34, 35. 2 Kings xv. 37,38. 2 Chron. xxvii. 2, 3, 4, 5, &c. Judg. ix. 5, 6, &c. 2 Chron. xxvi. 7, 8.] castles to be erected on the mountains, and in the forests of Judah.

The Ammonites, who had been overcome and brought into Subjection by Uzziah his father, having shewn an inclination to revolt from him; he defeated them, and imposed a tribute of an hundred talents in silver upon them, and ten thousand measures of wheat, with as many of barley. Towards the end of his reign, the Lord sent Rezin King of Syria and Pekah king of Israel against him. The particulars of these wars are not known to us, but it appears from Isaiah, i. 1, 2, 3, 4. that the land of Judah was in a very melancholy condition in the beginning of the reign of Ahaz, the son and successor of Jotham[1].

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jotham died in the year of the world 3262, before J. C. 738, before the vulgar Æra 742.

Ira (I)

I. IRA, of the family of Jair, or the Son of Jair. The text of scripture says, [2 Sam. xx. 26.] that he was David's Priest[1]. Here take the name Priest in the common and strict signification of it, it must be said, that Ira was not of the famous Jair's family, who was descended from Manasseh. Many are of opinion, that he was not a Priest. The Chaldee and Rabbins tell us, that he was David's Doctor, Rabbin, or Counsellor.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. The English translators render it, he was chief ruler about David. היה כהן לדודFor כהן*signifies Princeps as well as* Sacerdos.

Ira (II)

II. IRA, the son of Ikkesh, of the city of Tekoah, was one of the gallant officers in David's army, 1 Chron. xi. 28.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Irad

IRAD, the son of Enoch, and grandson of Cain. Gen. iv. 18.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Iram

IRAM, the last Duke of Edom, of Esau's family. Gen. xxxvi. 43.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Irijah

[אתקשתי נתתי בענן] IRIJAH, arrested the Prophet Jeremiah, as he was going from Jerusalem in order to retire to Anathoth, the place of his nativity; and carried him to Zedekiah, who delivered him to the great men of his court, with orders to put him into prison. These let him down into a well full of mud, where he must have died very soon, if Ebedmelech with the King's permission had not taken him out. Jer. xxxvii. 13, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Iris (I)

I. IRIS, the rain-bow. God having made a Covenant with Noah, and promised that he would no more drown the world with an universal deluge, gave him the rain-bow as an earnest of his promise. I do set my Bow in the clouds, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth. Whereby it is not meant, that there was no rain-bow before the deluge; but after the Deluge this sign which before was purely natural, by God's institution became a supernatural sign, and a certain proof, that God would no more send a deluge on the earth. The word Iris comes probably from the Hebrew or Chaldee, Ir, [עירVigil.] one who watches, an Angel, a Messenger. Iris was the messenger of the Gods.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Iris (II)

II. IRIS. The septuagint translate the Hebrew word Kiddah, Iris, which S. [קדהKidda, Casia.] Jerom translates Stacte, or the oyl that sweats out of myrrh. Ezek. xxvii. 19. There is an essence of an excellent sweet smell extracted from the Iris.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Iron (I)

I. IRON, a city of Naphtali. Joshua xix. 38.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Iron (II)

II. IRON. Moses forbids using any stones about the Altar of the Lord, which had been touched with iron; as if iron [Deut. xxvii. 5. Deut. viii. 9.] communicated some pollution to them. He says, that the stones of Palestine are of iron, cujus lapides ferrum sunt; that is to say, are of an hardness equal to iron, or that being melted, they form iron. The bondage of the Hebrews in Egypt, is in [Deut. iv. 20. 1 Kings viii. 51. Deut. xxvii. 48. Prov. xxvii. 17. Ps. cv. 18. Lev. xxvi. 19. Josh. xvii. 16, 18. 1 Kings xxii. 11. & 2 Chr. xviii. 10. If. xlviii. 4. Ps. ii. 9. Rev. ii. 27, xii. 5. Jerem. i. 18.] several places called Fornax ferrea, a furnace of iron, or rather a furnace or smith's forge. An iron yoke, denotes a hard and insupportable yoke or dominion. Iron pierced the soul of Joseph, when he was unjustly put in prison. Iron sharpneth iron, says the wise man, So a man sharpneth the countenance of his friend. The presence of a man, of a friend, gives us more confidence and assurance. God threatens his ungrateful and perfidious people with making Heaven with respect to them iron, and the Earth brass, to make the earth barren, and the air to produce no rain. Chariots of iron, are chariots arm'd with iron, with spikes and scythes. See Chariots. The false Prophet Zedekiah made himself iron hornes, to persuade Ahab, that he would overcome Syria. To govern with an iron rod or scepter, signifies to govern with an absolute authority; and this is not spoken of an harsh or cruel reign, but of the reign of the Messiah. Thy neck is an iron sinew, thou art as hard and inflexible as iron. God said that he would make Jeremiah as stiff as a pillar of iron. Ego dedi te hodie in columnam ferream.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Irpeel

IRPEEL, a city in the tribe of Benjamin. Josh. xviii. 27.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Iru

IRU, the son of Caleb. 1 Chron. iv. 15.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Isaac

ISAAC, the son of Abraham and Sarah. His name signifies laughter, and Sarah gave it him, because when the Angel promised that she should become a mother, tho she was not of an age to have any children, she privately laugh'd at the [Gen. xviii. 10, 11, 12.] prediction. And when the Child was born, she said[1], God hath made me to laugh, so that all that hear will laugh with me. She suckled him herself, and would not suffer Ishmael, whom Abraham had had by his maid-servant Hagar, to inherit with him. One day having seen Ishmael, jesting with Isaac, perhaps in a jeering and too rough a manner; she prevailed with Abraham to turn him and his mother Hagar out of doors[2]. When Isaac grew to be about five and twenty years of age[3], the Lord tempted Abraham, and commanded him to sacrifice his son to him. Abraham therefore took Isaac, and set out with two of his servants, on his way to the place which the Lord should shew him. On the third day, discerning this place at a distance, he said to his servants, tarry here, while I and my son go yonder, and after we have worshiped, we will return to you. He provided himself with wood for the burnt-offering, placed it upon his son Isaac, and took fire in his hand, and a knife. As they were going together, Isaac said to his father, behold the fire and the wood, but where is the burnt offering. Abraham without opening himself farther, answered him. My son, God will provide one for himself.

When they were come to the place appointed, which is, as is believed[4], mount Moriah, where afterwards the temple of Jerusalem was built: the Samaritans think it was mount Gerizim, called likewise according to them Moreh or Morah; and it is certain that Morah was in the neighbourhood of Shechem; when he was come [See Gen. xi. 6. & Deut. xi. 30.] thither Abraham put the wood in order, bound Isaac with an intention to make use of him for a victim; and taking the knife, he stretched forth his had, with a design to kill his son. But the Angel of the Lord called unto him and said, lay not thine hand upon the lad; for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son. He therefore unbound Isaac, and in his room sacrificed a ram, which he found near the place where they were, with his horns entangled in a thicket. After this, the Angel of the Lord said unto him; I have sworn by myself, saith the Lord, that since thou hast done this act, I will bless thee and multiply thy seed as the stars of Heaven, and all nations shall be blessed in him who shall proceed from thee.

When Isaac was forty years of age[5], Abraham thought of providing him a wife; and as he was not willing that he should marry any of the Canaanites, he [Gen. xxiv.] sent Eliezer the steward of his House, into Mesopotamia, to procure one for him, who was of his brother-in-law Laban's family. Eliezer succeeded in this journey, and conducted Rebekah to Isaac. Isaac married her, and brought her into his mother's apartment, who died some years before. [In the year of the world 2145. Gen. xxv. 21, 22, &c.] Rebekkah being barren, Isaac prayed for her, and God granted her the favour of conception. She conceived, and was delivered of twins[6], Esau and Jacob. Isaac had more inclination for Esau, and Rebekah for Jacob. Now there happened to be some years after[7] a great famine, which obliged Isaac to retire to Gerar, [Gen. xxvi. 1, 2, 3, &c.] where Abimelech was King: he told the inhabitants of the place, that Rebekah was his sister; and she was very soon taken away from him, by reason of her uncommon beauty, in order to be the king's wife. But Abimelech having observed, that Isaac behaved otherwise with Rebekah, than he would have done with his sister, restored her to him. In the mean time, Isaac grew very rich, and the number of his flocks multiplying every day, the Philistines, who were the inhabitants of Gerar, were so envious at it, that they filled up all the wells which Isaac's servants had dug in the country. Abimelech himself desired him to go from thence, because he was become too powerful. He withdrew therefore, and pitched his tent in the valley of Gerar, where he dug new wells, and was put to some difficulties again in this point. At length he returned to Beersheba, where he [Gen. xxvi. 23, 24, &c.] fixed his habitation.

The Lord appeared to him, and renewed the promises which he had already made to him, of blessing him, and multiplying his seed. Abimelech king of Gerar came thither likewise, in order to make an alliance with him[8]. Now Isaac being grown very old, (for he was an hundred and thirty seven years of age[9],) and his sight being extremely weakened, he called Esau his eldest son and said, You see that I am old, and know not the day of my death; take therefore your arms, go a hunting, and when you have got something, dress it for me in the manner which you know to be agreeable to me, and bring it, that I may bless you before I dye. But while Esau was gone a hunting, Jacob by surprize stole Isaac's blessing, as we have related in the articles, Jacob and Esau. Wherefore when Esau presented himself before Isaac, in order to receive his blessing, he found that he had been prevented by his brother Jacob.

Isaac lived yet a good while after this. [Gen. xxvii. 1, 2, &c. Gen. xxvii. 1, 2, &c.] He sent Jacob into Mesopotamia, there to take a wife of his own family, and that he might not marry among the Canaanites, as his brother Esau had done. When Jacob returned out of this Country, at the end of twenty years, Isaac was still living, and continued so three and twenty years longer; then he died at the age of an [Gen. xxxv. 28, 29.] hundred fourscore and eight years, in the year of the world 2288, before J. C. 1712, before the vulgar Æra 1716; and was buried with Abraham, by his sons Esau and Jacob. The Hebrews say, that Isaac was instructed in the study of the law, by the Patriarchs Shem and Eber, who were then living; and that when Abraham departed, with a design to go and sacrifice [Sgambat. Archiv. V. T. l. 2. p. 197.] Isaac, he told Sarah, that he was carrying his son to Shem's school. They believe likewise, that Abraham composed the prayers which they repeat usually in the [Vide Fabric. Apocry. V. T. p. 434. Ita Hebræi, & alij post eos. Hieronym. in Isai. l. iii. c. xx. ex Hebræis.] morning; Isaac their noon day, and Jacob their evening prayers.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Gen. xxi. 6. In the year of the world 2108, before J. C. 1892, before the vulgar Æra 1896.
In the year of the world 2113, before J. C. 1887, before the vulgar Æra 1891.
Gen. xxii. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the world 2133, before J. C. 1867, before the vulgar Æra 1871.
Ita Hebræi & Christiani antiq. & recentiores passim.
In the year of the world 2148, before J. C. 1852, before the vulgar Æra 1856.
In the year of the world 2168, before J. C. 1832, before the vulgar Æra 1836.
In the year of the world 2187, before J. C. 1813, before the vulgar Æra 1817.
About the year of the world 2240, before J. C. 1760, before the vulgar Æra 1764:
In the year of the world 2255, before J. C. 1755, before the vulgar Æra 1759.

Isaiah

ISAIAH, the son of Amos, the first of the four great Prophets, was, as is said, of the royal family, if it be true that his father Amos was son to king Joash, and brother to Amaziah King of Judah. S. Jerom says, that Isaiah gave his daughter in marriage to Manasseh king of Judah; which we cannot easily believe: because Manasseh did not begin to reign till sixty years after Isaiah's entring upon the prophetick office. The beginning of Isaiah's prophecies we date immediately from the death of Uzziah[1], and the death of this prophet we place in the reign of Manasseh, who began to reign in the year of the world 3306, before J. C. 694, before the vulgar Æra 698. The Jews believe, that Amos, Isaiah's father, was a prophet, as well as his son, according to this rule, which passes for a very certain one among them, viz. that when the scripture mentions the name of any prophet's father, this is a proof, that his father was a Prophet. [Aug. l. 18. c. 27. de Civit. Dei.] But this rule is certainly very fallible. S. Austin supposed the Prophet Amos, whose writings we have, to have been Isaiah's father; but besides that, his name is written in a different manner[2]; these two Prophets Amos and Isaiah were contemporaries, both living under Uzziah. It is true, Amos began to prophesy in the three and twentieth year of Uzziah, of the world 3215, and Isaiah, according to our hypothesis, did not begin to prophesy till after the death of this Prince in 3246, and consequently one and thirty years after Amos: so that there could be no inconveniency in this particular to say, that Amos was Isaiah's father, if there were otherwise any good evidence of it. But we have shewn in the article Amos, that this Prophet was neither a man of quality, nor of the tribe of Judah. Wherefore he could not be Isaiah's father.

[Isai. viii. 5.] Isaiah's wife is called a Prophetess, and the Rabbins from thence conclude, that she had the spirit of prophecy. But it is very credible, that the Prophets wives were called prophetesses, as the priests wives were called priestesses, only from the quality of their husbands. The scripture mentions two sons of Isaiah, one called Shear Jashub, the rest shall return, the other Hash-baz, hasten to the slaughter. The first shewed, that the captives who should be brought to Babylon, should return from thence, after a certain time, and the second, that the kingdoms of Israel and Syria should in a short time be ravaged. The prophecies of Isaiah may be divided into three parts. The first part includes six chapters, which relate to the reign of Jotham, the six following to the reign of Ahaz: and all the rest to the reign of Hezekiah. The great and principal object of Isaiah's prophecies, is the captivity of Babylon, the return of the Jews from this captivity, and the reign of the Messiah. For this reason the sacred writers of the New Testament, have cited [Aug. l. 18. de Civit. c. 29.] him more than any other Prophet, and the Fathers say, that he is rather an Evangelist than a Prophet[3].

In the six first chapters, which contain but one discourse, Isaiah inveighs strongly against the disorders of Judah, and threatens them with very great misfortunes. In the six following chapters, he speaks of the siege of Jerusalem, form'd by Pekah and Rezin. He promises the birth of the Messiah to Ahaz, under the name of Emmanuel, and foretels the evils which threatened the kingdoms of Israel and Syria; he inveighs against the Assyrians, whom God made use of as a scourge for the punishment of the wicked. In the xith and xiith chapters, he concludes with promising a just, wise, and valiant monarch, who should restore all things. In the beginning of Hezekiah's reign[4], he pronounced many severe prophecies against Babylon, the Philistines, Moab, Damascus, Samaria [If. xiii, xiv, xv, xvi, xvii, xviii, xix. Ch. xx, xxi, xxii, xxiii, xxiv.] and Egypt. Sometime after he prophesied again against Egypt, Babylon, Kedar, Arabia, Jerusalem, Tyre, and all Judea.

Sennacherib's war against Hezekiah gave[5] [Isa. xxix. to xxxvi.] occasion for many of Isaiah's prophesies. He foretold this siege, was a witness of it, declared the end of it, and threatned the authors of those mischiefs which Judah was to suffer, with divine vengeance. He promises Hezekiah, and all the people of Judah success and perfect liberty. The happy reign of this Prince, and the peace which Judea enjoyed after the defeat of Sennacherib's army, are described in a manner which cannot otherwise be literally verified than in the reign of Jesus Christ over his Church.

The xl, xli, xlii, xliii, xliv, and xlv Chapters contain a long discourse, which is a demonstration of God's existence, of the truth of the Jewish Religion, and the vanity of Idolatry. In the four following chapters, Isaiah foretels the reign of Cyrus, the deliverance of his people, the destruction of Idols, the fall of Babylon, and the return of the Jews. From the xlix chapter to v. 9. of the lvi chapter, Isaiah, as it were representing the Messiah, informs us, that he was appointed by God from his mother's womb, to publish the return of Jacob from captivity, and the conversion of the Gentiles. He afterwards describes the persecutions and troubles of the Messiah, the call of the Gentiles, the reprobation [If. xlix. 1, 2, 3.] of the Jews, and the establishment of the Church. This in general is the order wherein the things contained in this book are written; and what we have of his life now follows.

He tells us, that the Lord had called [If. l. 4.] him from his mother's womb, that he remembred his name, that he had given him a tongue like a sharp cutting sword, that he had hidden him under the shadow of his hand, and put him like a chosen arrow into his quiver: and elsewhere, that God had given him the tongue of the learned, capable of administring comfort to those whose courage is broken: that when he received his mission for prophecy, he saw the [If. vi. 1, 2, 3.] Lord seated on a high throne, encompassed with Cherubims, and with all the earth for his foot-stool. Then he said: " wo is me for I am undone, " because I am a man of unclean lips, " and I dwell in the midst of a people " of unclean lips: for mine eyes have " seen the King, the Lord of hosts. At " the same time," continues he, " one of " the Seraphims which were before the " Lord flew unto me, having a live coal " in his hand, which he had taken with " the tongs from off the altar. And he " laid it upon my mouth, and said, lo " this hath touched thy lips, and thine " iniquity is taken away, and thy sin " purged. Then I heard a voice saying, " whom shall I send, and who will go " for us. And I answered, here am I, " send me? He therefore said unto me, " go, and tell this people, hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye " indeed but perceive not. Blind the " heart of this people, make their ears " heavy, and shut their eyes, lest they " see with their eyes, and hear with their " ears, and understand with their heart, " and turn and be healed." By this was meant, that he should speak, and preach to them; and that they should not hear, nor be converted.

[If. xlix. 1.] During the course of his preaching, he had an infinite deal of contradiction to endure from the Jews. He complains of it in several places, but God encourages and supports him. In the fourteenth year of Hezekiah[6], Sennacherib King of Assyria, being come with a design of making war in Judea, sent Rabshakeh his cup-bearer with a summons to Hezekiah, requiring him to submit to his dominion. Rabshakeh in his harangue spoke in a very insolent and blasphemous manner. Hezekiah having a report hereof made unto him by his officers, rent his clothes, went to the Temple of the Lord, and sent messengers to inform [If. xxxvi, xxxvii.] Isaiah of what had passed. Isaiah answered him, " hear the " word of the Lord, fear not the blasphemous words wherewith the King " of Assyria's servants have dishonoured " me: behold I will send a blast upon " him, and he shall hear a rumour, and " return to his own land, and I will " cause him to fall by the sword in his " own land."

[If. xxxvii. 21,22,&c.] Soon after, Sennacherib being informed that King Tirhacah was marching against him, went to meet him, and sent Rabshakeh again to Jerusalem, where he uttered almost the same blasphemies as before.

" Hereupon Isaiah sent to Hezekiah, " saying: thus saith the Lord God of " Israel against Sennacherib; the virgin, " the daughter of Zion, hath despised " thee, and laughed thee to scorn, the " daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her " head at thee. Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed? and against " whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and " lifted up thine eyes on high? even against the holy one of Israel. By thy " servants hast thou reproached the Lord, " and hast said, by the multitude of my " chariots am I come up to the height " of the mountains to the sides of Leba- " non, and I will cut down the tall cedars " thereof, and the choice fir-trees thereof: I have digged and drunk water, " and with the sole of my feet have I " dried up all the rivers of the besieged " places. Hast thou not heard long ago, " how I have done it, and of antient " times, that I have formed it? I know, " thy abode, and thy going out, and " thy coming in, and thy rage against " me: therefore will I put my hook in " thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips; " and I will turn thee back by the way " which thou camest. As for thee, Hezekiah, take courage; thou shall eat " this year, such as groweth of it self: " and the second year, that which springeth of the same; and in the third year " sow ye, and reap, and plant vineyards, " and eat the fruit thereof: for then " thou shalt be intirely out of trouble. " Thus saith the Lord, the King of Assyria shall not come into this city, nor " shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shields, nor cast a bank " against it; by the way that he came, " by the same shall he return, and shall " not come into Jerusalem." Accordingly the Lord caused an hundred fourscore and five thousand men of Sennacherib's army to perish by the hand of the destroying Angel; and this Prince was obliged to fly to Niniveh, where he was killed by his own Sons.

At that time[7] Hezekiah fell dangerously ill, and Isaiah coming to visit him, [If. xxxviii. 1, 2, 3, &c. See likewise 2 Kings xx.] said, set thine house in order, for thou shalt die and not live. Then Hezekiah prayed unto the Lord, " and shed abundance of tears: but Isaiah was " scarce got out of the King's presence, " when the Lord said to him, Go say " unto Hezekiah, thus saith the Lord, I " have heard thy prayer, and I have seen " thy tears; behold I will add unto thy " days fifteen years: I will deliver thee " out of the power of the Assyrians, and " will protect this city from his arrows. " And this shall be a sign unto thee, that " the Lord will do this thing that he " hath spoken. Behold I will bring again the shadow of the degrees which is gone down in the sun-dial of Ahaz " ten degrees backward, by which degrees it was gone down." Then Isaiah directed a lump of figs to be laid upon Hezekiah's boyl, and he was so perfectly cured, that in three days he was in a condition to go to the Temple.

Soon after this, and in the beginning of the reign of Esarhaddon, Sennacherib's successor, Isaiah received orders from the Lord,[8] to walk three years barefoot and naked, to denote in a more express manner the approaching captivity of Egypt, and the land of Cush, which extended itself into Arabia Petræa, and is generally translated Ethiopia. It is the constant tradition both of Jews and Christians,[9] that Isaiah was put to death with a saw in the beginning of the reign of Manasseh King of Judah. It is said, that the pretence made use of by this impious Prince for executing of him in this manner, was an expression of Isaiah in chap. vi. 1. I saw the Lord sitting on a throne; which he affirmed to be a contradiction to what is said in Moses, Exod. xxxiii. 20. No man shall see me and live. It is said that his body was buried near Jerusalem, under the Fuller's oak, near the fountain of Siloam; from whence it was removed to Paneas near the sources of Jordan, and from thence to Constantinople, in the reign of Theodosius the younger, and in the year of J.C. 442. He prophesied a long time. They who say he began his predictions in the five and twentieth year of Uzziah, make him to perform this function for fourscore and five years. But we are of opinion, that more than threescore years cannot be allowed, since he did not enter upon the prophetick office till the beginning of Jotham's reign, in 3246, and died in the first year of Manasseh, of the world 3306, before J.C. 694, before the vulgar Æra 698.

Isaiah is esteemed to be the most eloquent of all the Prophets. S. Jerom says, [Hieronym. Præfat. in Isai. Grot. in 4 Reg. xix. 2.] that his writings are, as it were, an abridgment of the Holy Scriptures, a collection of all the most uncommon knowledge, that the mind of man is capable of; of natural philosophy, morality and divinity: quid loquar de Physica, Ethica & Theologica? Quicquid Sanctarum est Scripturarum; quicquid potest humana lingua proferre, & mortalium sensus acci- pere, isto volumine continetur. Grotius compares Isaiah with Demosthenes. In this Prophet we meet with all the purity of the Hebrew tongue, as in the orator whom we have mentioned, there is all the delicacy of the Attick taste. Both are sublime and magnificent in their style, vehement in their emotions, copious in their figures, and very impetuous when they set off things of an enormous nature, [Quintil. l. x. c. 20.] or that are grievous and odious. Isaiah was superior to Demosthenes in the honour of an illustrious birth, and the advantage of belonging to the royal family of Judah. What Quintilian says of Corvinus Messala may be applied to him, that he speaks in an easy flowing manner, and in a style which shews him to be a man of quality. Gaspar Sanctius [Gasp. Sanct. Prolegom. in Isai.] thinks Isaiah to be more florid, and to have more of ornament, and at the same time to be more weighty and nervous, than any other writer that we have, whether historian, poet, or orator, and that in every kind of discourse he does so much excel, as to be superior to every author, either Greek or Latin.

Besides the writings of Isaiah which are in our possession; this Prophet wrote a book concerning the actions of Uzziah, which is cited in the Chronicles, and is not now extant. [2 Chro. xxvi. 22. Origen. in Matth. xxiii. & Epist. ad African. Epiph. hæres. 40, & 67. Hieron. in Isai. lxiv. p. 473. Ambros. in Ps. cxviii. t. 1. Oper. p. 1124.] Origen, Epiphanius, and S. Jerom speak of another book, intitled The ascension of Isaiah. Some of the Jews ascribe to him the Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Solomon's Song, and the book of Job. S. Ambrose cites one particular of Isaiah's life, which is this, that the Prophet being in prison and in great danger of dying, the Devil appeared to him and said, say that you did not speak by the Spirit of God, and I will deliver you and change the hearts of those who hate you. But Isaiah chose rather to dye than to speak what was not true. The author of an imperfect work upon S. Matthew tells us, that this Prophet going to see Hezekiah, [Auth. Oper. imperf. in Matt. homil. 1.] while he was sick, this Prince sent for his son Manasseh, and gave him very good instructions in Isaiah's presence. But the Prophet told him, he was very much afraid that nothing which he had said, had reached his heart; for says he, I myself must be put to death by his order. Which when Hezekiah heard, he was determin'd to kill his son Manasseh: But Isaiah withheld him, and said, God grant that this resolution may be vain. Lastly we have a long dialogue in the Talmud, between Isaiah and Hezekiah, in the time of this Prince's sickness, when the Prophet came to visit him. But as these [Gemarr. Berachot. c. 1.] particulars are taken out of apocryphal and uncertain authors, we lay no stress upon them. The author of Ecclesiasticus makes an encomium of him in these few words. Isaiah the Prophet was great and faithful in his vision; in his time the Sun went backward, and he lengthned the King's life. He [Eccl. xlviii.] saw by an excellent Spirit what should come to pass at the last, and he comforted them that mourned in Sion. He shewed what should come to pass, and secret things or ever they came.

The Eastern Christians tell us in their history, that the Prophet Isaiah forfeited the gift of prophecy 28 years, for not opposing King Uzziah, when he resolved to enter the sanctuary, where was the altar of incense. The same authors make him to have lived 120 years.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the world 3246, before J. C. 754, before the vulgar Æra 758.

עמוץ*Hamoz, Isaiah*'s father. ,אמוץ*Amos*. The Prophet Amos.

Gen. xxxi. In the year of the world 2265, before J. C. 1733, before the vulgar Æra 1737.

Hezekiah began to reign in the year of the world 3278, before J. C. 722, before the vulgar Æra 726. occasion

Aug. ibidem. Hieron. Ep. 117. Item Præfat. in Isai. Theodoret. Præf. in Isaiam.

In the year of the world 3291, before J. C. 709, before the vulgar Æra 713.

In the year of the world 3291, before J. C. 709, before the vulgar Æra 713.

Is. xx. 1, 2, 3. Some think he walked thus three days only, which signified three years.

Origen. in c. 23. Matth. & Epist. ad Jul. African. & homil. in Isai. Tertul. de patientia c. 14. Justin. contra Tryphon. Chrysost. ad Cyriac. Hieronym. l. 15. in Isai. Aug. l. 18. de Civit. c. 24, &c.

Iscah

[Gen. xv. 12] ISCAH. Many are of opinion[1], that she is the same as Sarah, daughter of Haran, Lot's sister, and both neice and wife to Abraham. But there is some difficulty in this; for Sarah is never called Iscah, and Abraham does not say she was his niece, but his sister. She is indeed my sister, says he, the daughter of my father, but not the daughter of my mother. The Hebrews say commonly, that Sarah was the daughter of Terah as well as Abraham; and Saïdes Batricides patriarch of Alexandria, tells us upon the tradition of the Eastern people, that the first wife which Terah married was Jona, by whom he had Abraham; and that he had a second, Teehevita, by whom he had Sarah.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 6. Aug. contra Faust. l. 22. c. 35. Hieron. Tost. Geneb. alii passim.

Iscarioth

ISCARIOTH: Eusebius and S. Jerom speak of the village Iscarioth in the tribe of Ephraim, where the traytor Judas is said to have been born. Others are of opinion, that he was of the tribe of Issachar, and that Iscariothes is put for Issachariothes; lastly, some will have it, that he was of Carioth or Kerioth in the tribe of Judah. See Joshua xv. 25.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ishbah

ISHBAH, the son of Ezra, and father of Eshtemoa of the tribe of Judah. 1 Chron. iv. 17.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ishbak

ISHBAK, the fifth son of Abraham and Keturah. Gen. xxv. 2.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ishbibenob

[2 Sam. xxi. 16, 17.] ISHBIBENOB, or Ishbi the son of Ob, of the race of the giants or Rephaims. The iron of his spear, or rather his spear, as the Hebrew implies, weighed three hundred shekels, that is to say, an hundred and fifty ounces, or twelve pounds and a half, at twelve ounces to the pound. This giant being upon the point of killing David, who was fatigued in the battle, was himself killed by Abishai the son of Zerviah. Hereupon David's people made this protestation to him; we will not suffer thee any more to go out unto the war with us, least thou put out the light of Israel.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ishbosheth

ISHBOSHETH, otherwise Ishbaal, the son of Saul, and his successor in the throne. His true name was Ishbaal. But the Hebrews, who abhored strange Gods, to avoid pronouncing the word Baal, in the room of it placed Bosheth, which signifies confusion. Thus instead of Mephibaal, they said, Mephibosheth. Abner, Saul's kinsman, and General of his troops, so managed things, that Ishbosheth was acknowledged King[1] by the greatest part of the tribes of Israel, while David reigned at Hebron over the tribe of Judah. Ishbosheth settled his residence at Mahanaim, beyond Jordan. He was four and forty years of age when he began to reign, and he reigned two years pretty peaceably. At the end of this [2 Sam. ii. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, &c.] term[2], there was a little skirmish between Ishbosheth's troops command by Abner, and David's commanded by Joab, wherein Abner had the worst. From that time there was war between the house of Saul, and that of David[3]. The house of David was continually making progress, and gathering more strength; and the house of Saul on the contrary grew weaker every day.

Now Saul had had a concubine named Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah. Abner was accused of having abused or married her; for the scripture is not sufficiently clear in this particular. Ishbosheth said therefore to Abner; why hast thou come near my father's concubine? Abner was strangely provoked at this reproach, and swore that he would do all he could to transfer the crown belonging to the house of Saul to that of David. Accordingly he sent to David, telling him, that if he would admit him to a share in his friendship, he was ready to offer his services for the uniting all Israel under his dominion. David accepted these proposals; and Abner spoke to the Elders of Israel, with a design of disposing them to acknowledge him for King. After this he came to wait on David, and acquaint him with the dispositions which he found them in. But as he was upon the point of bringing all Israel in subjection to David; Abner was treacherously killed by Joab, in the manner related by us under the article of Abner.

Ishbosheth being informed that Abner was killed[4], lost courage; and all Israel fell into great disorder: for Abner had been hitherto the only support of Saul's family; and Ishbosheth almost at the same time was assassinated in his own house, by two captains of the troops, that were in his service, who coming into his palace, while he was sleeping on his bed during the heat of the day, thrust their poniards into his groin; then cutting off his head, they came and presented it to David at Hebron, thinking to receive some considerable reward for such an action. But he said to them, as the Lord liveth, who hath delivered me from many imminent dangers, if I slew him who declared to me the death of Saul at Ziklag, how much more will I now revenge the blood of an innocent Prince, murdered by wicked men in his own house, and upon his own bed? At the same time he commanded the two murderers to be killed, and their hands and feet to be cut off, and hung near the pool in Hebron. The head of Ishbosheth likewise he ordered to be placed in Abner's sepulchre at Hebron. Such was the end of Ishbosheth, and of the royal dignity in the house of Saul.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the world 2549, before J. C. 1051, before the vulgar Æra 1055.
In the year of the world 2951, before J. C. 1049, before the vulgar Æra 1053.
2 Sam. iii. 1, 2, 3, &c. For about five years, from the year of the world 2951, to 2956.
2 Sam. iv. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the world 2956, before J. C. 1044, before the vulgar Æra 1048.

Ishmael (I)

I. ISHMAEL, the son of Abraham and Hagar. Sarah, Abraham's wife, seeing [Gen. xvi. 1, 2, 3, &c.] God had given her no children, desired her husband to take her handmaid Hagar, that by her means at least she might have children[1]. This was a sort of adoption, whereof we see examples in the conduct of Rachel and Leah, who likewise gave their maid servants to be wives to Jacob their husband, that they might have children [Gen. xxx. 3, & 9.] from them. Hagar therefore having conceived, began to despise her mistress. Sarah, who thereupon made her complaints to Abraham, and Abraham told her, that she might treat her servant as she pleased. Sarah therefore using her ill, she fled from her. The Angel of the Lord appeared to her in the wilderness, and said to her, return to thy mistress, and humble thyself under her hand; thou hast conceived and shalt bring forth a Son and call his name Ishmael, that is to say, the Lord hath hearkened; because the Lord hath heard thee in thy affliction. He shall be a fierce savage man, whose hand shall be lifted up against all men, and the hands of all men against him. He shall pitch his tents over against his brethren, and he shall occupy the country near to theirs. Hagar returned therefore to Abraham's house, and brought forth a Son, who was named Ishmael[2].

Fourteen years after[3] the Lord having visited Sarah, and Isaac being born to Abraham, Ishmael, who till then had been looked upon as Abraham's sole heir, saw his hopes disappointed. One day, Isaac being about five or six years old[4], Ishmael jested with him in a manner which was displeasing to Sarah; who therefore addressed herself to Abraham, and said; drive away this servant with her son; for Ishmael shall not inherit with my son Isaac. Abraham thought this hard. But the Lord commanding him to hearken to Sarah, he sent away Hagar with her son, giving them some provisions for their journey. Hagar departing with Ishmael, wandered in the wilderness of Beersheba, and the water which she carried with her in a vessel failing, she placed her son under a tree hard by, and went to the distance of a bowshot from him, saying, I will not see my child dye. While she was here she heard a voice from heaven, which said to her, fear not, the Lord hath heard the child's voice from the place where he now is. Rise, and take him; for I will make him the father of a great people. She rose, and God having shewn her a well, she drew water out of it, gave some to her son, and carried him farther into the wilderness of Paran, where he abode. He became expert in shooting with his bow, and his mother married him to an Egyptian woman, of whom he had twelve sons; viz. 1. Nabajoth; 2. Kedar; 3. Adbeel; 4. Mibsam; 5. Mishma; 6. Dumah; 7. Massa; 8. Hader or Hadad; 9. Tema; 10. Jetur; 11. Naphish; 12. Kedemah. He had likewise a daughter whose name was Mabeleth or Bashemath, Gen. xxxvi. 3. who married Esau, Gen. xxviii. 9. We have said something of all Ishmael's sons under their particular articles. From the twelve sons of Ishmael are derived the twelve tribes of the Arabians, which are still subsisting. S. Jerom says, that in his time the Arabians called the cantons of Arabia by the names of the several tribes which dwelt in them: The Gentiles call the Heads of the Arabian tribes Phylarchs, and the Arabians Scheich-Elkebir. The descendants of Ishmael [Hieronym. qu. Hebr. in Genes.] inhabited the land which lies from Havilah to Shur. Havilah lies towards the place where the Tigris and Euphrates join; and Shur borders on the Isthmus, which separates Egypt from Arabia. The descendants of Ishmael are mentioned in History under the general [See Thevenot, l. ii. c. 32. part 1.] name of Arabians and Ishmaelites. Particular notice is taken of the Nabathæans, Kedarens, Hagarens, &c.

Since the seventh age they have almost all embraced the Religion of Mahomet, and we call them Turks or Musselmen. Ishmael died in the presence of all his brethren, says the vulgate, or according to [Gen. xxv. 18.] another translation, his inheritance lay opposite to that of all his brethren. See Gen. xvi. 12. The year of his death is not known to us.

The Mahometans will have it, that Ishmael was the favourite son of Abraham, and he in whose behalf God made such magnificent promises to this Patriarch. They believe, that Abraham intending to sacrifice Ishmael, the Angel Gabriel, by God's order prevented him, and substituted in his room a ram, which the father and son sacrificed to the Lord in the very place where afterwards they built the Temple of Mecca. This Temple was not built till after the death of Hagar; it went at first by the name of Caabah; or the square house, by reason of its form, and afterwards by that of Beith-allah, or house of God. The Arabians of Abraham's time fastned the horns belonging to the ram, which had been sacrificed by Abraham, to the gutter on the top of the Temple, from whence Mahomet afterwards removed them, to take away all occasion of Idolatry from these people.

Ishmael after having lived some time at Jathrab, called at this day Medina, retired to Yemen, where he settled and married. Besides the twelve sons of Ishmael mentioned in Genesis; the Arabians say he had another called Thor, or Thour, who gave his name to mount Sinai, which they still call Thour, and Thour Sinai, as well as to the city which lies at the foot of this mountain upon the borders of the red sea.

Arabia was peopled by old Arabians, before the sons of Ishmael settled there, and it was not till after long disputes with the Giorhamides first possessors of this country, that they at last agreed about the Temple of Mecca. The race of the old Arabians is not extinct in this country. It subsists at present blended with that of the Ishmaelites. See above what we have said of the Arabians. These historys of the Mahometans are very disagreeable on the score of that little regard they have for the rules of history, and destroying the recitals of the old and new Testament, in order to substitute their own extravagancies and traditions in the room of them; which have no foundation in antiquity, and are owing only to the ignorance of their false Prophet. This man having heard some talk of the sacred histories of the Jews and Christians, has related them after his own way; his followers have added still new fables, and new circumstances to them; and when any would call them back to the ancient and authentick Scriptures, they treat them as spurious and corrupt.

The Religion of the Ishmaelites may be considered at four different times. 1. Under Ishmael and his immediate successors, who probably followed the religion which they had learned from Abraham and Ishmael. 2. Under the successors of these who mingling with the old Arabians, inhabitants of the country, imitated their idolatry, and corrupted the purity of worship which their fathers had preserved, by a mixture of strange ceremonies. 3. Many of the Arabians embraced Christianity in the first ages of the Church: we do not know through what channel Christianity was introduced into this country; but we are acquainted with some martyrs of Africk, and know that in 249, a council was held in this country against some Hereticks, who affirmed, that the soul and body dyed and revived together. 4. Lastly, Mahomet appearing in this country, seduced there an infinite number of persons, and made way for the reception of his errors, partly by force, and partly by cunning. The reader may look above in the article Arabians, for the religion of the old Arabians, whom I do not distinguish from the Ishmaelites, after these two people were mingled and confounded. As to the religion of the Mahometans, it has no relation to our subject, since it is so modern, and there is no mention of it in the Scripture.

[Baruch iii. 23.] The Prophet Baruch speaks of the learning and studies of the sons of Hagar; the Hagarens that seek wisdom upon earth. They piqued themselves upon their wisdom, and still at this day the Arabians affect a great composure, and abundance of gravity in their behaviour. The Queen of Sheba came to try whether the wisdom of Solomon was such as fame reported it. The Hagarens and Ishmaelites are named among the people, who made war with the Israelites [Ps. lxxxii. 7. Judg. vii. viii. 24.] in the reign of Jehoshaphat, and under the Judges of Gideon's time. In the reign of Saul the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half Tribe of Manasseh made war against the Hagarens, and defeated them. [1 Chr. v. 10,19,20.] These Hagarens dwelt in Arabia Deserta, eastward of the mountains of Gilead.

The Scripture describes likewise the Arabians by another character, and this is, [Lev. xix. 27.] that they cut their hair round; Moses forbids the Hebrews to copy after the Arabians in this particular, who practised it, [Jer. ix. 25, 26. & xxv. 23. Herod. l. 3. c. 8. & l. 4. c. 175.] they said, in honour of Bacchus, and in imitation of him, Ye shall not round the corners of their heads, neither shalt thou mar the corners of thy beard. Jeremiah threatens those with the wrath of God, who wore their hair cut round, I will punish all them which have the corners of their hair polled; and he mentions in particular Edom, Ammon, and Moab, Dedan, Tema, and Buz, all people of Arabia, among whom Tema was son to Ishmael. The Turks cut off the hair of their head, and leave only a tuft at the top. I cannot tell whether this practice is as ancient as Moses. The Septuagint called the way of managing the hair, mentioned [70. ὁ ποιήσετε σισόνην ἐκ τῆς κόμης τῆς κεφαλῆς ὑμῶν.] in this place by Moses, Zizoe[5]. Now Zizoe is a tuft of hair left behind, or upon the top of the head, when all besides is cut round. See the articles Nabath, Kedar, Tema, Hagar, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the world 2093, before J. C. 1907, before the vulgar Æra 1911.
In the year of the world 2094, before J. C. 1906, before the vulgar Æra 1910.
In the year of the world 2108, before J. C. 1892, before the vulgar Æra 1896. his
In the year of the world 2113, before J. C. 1887, before the vulgar Æra 1891.

Translators' note. Cyprian. Martyr pro σισόνης habet cirrum, l. 3. ad Quirin. Cum Cypr. convenit Theodor. τινὲς, inquit, τὸ σισόνην, τὰς ἐξ ἐπιτηδεύσεως ὅλας γινομένας ἡρμήνευσαν. ἐγὼ δὲ ἄλλο οἶμαι τὸν νόμον ἀπαγορεύειν. Εἰώθασιν Ἕλληνες μὴ ἀποκείρειν τῶν παιδίων τὰς κορυφὰς ἀλλ᾽ ἐὰν τὰς μαλλὰς, καὶ τέτυς μετὰ χρόνον ἀνατιθέναι τοῖς δαίμοσι. Vid. Biblia Lamberti. Bos loc. citat. What the Septuagint translate σισόνην, Hesychius explains to be κυρέα παρὰ φασηλίταις, Tonsura in usum apud gentem Palestinæ finitimam Phaselitarum, &c. eo Israelitis vetita.

Ishmael (II)

II. ISHMAEL, the son of Nethaniah, of the royal family of Judah, treacherously killed Gedaliah[1], whom Nebuchadnezzar had established over the remains of the people, that continued in Judea, after the destruction of Jerusalem. See above Gedaliah. But John or Johanan the son of Carcah, having pursued Ishmael and his company, and overtaken him near the pool of Hebron, charged him, and obliged him to fly. He fled to Baalis king of the Ammonites. See Jerem. xli. 1, 2, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the world 3417, before J. C. 583, before the vulgar Æra 587. See 2 Kings xxv. 25, 26, 27.

Ishmael I (III)

III. ISHMAEL I. High Priest of the Jews, the son of Phabi, or Phabæus, had a brother whose name likewise was Ishmael, and who, as well as he, was High Priest. The former Ishmael succeeded Ananus, and was appointed by Valerius Gratus Governor of Judea, in the year of the world 4027, of the vulgar Æra 24. He was deposed the year following, and Eleazer the son of Ananus succeeded him.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ishmael Ii (IV)

IV. ISHMAEL II. brother to the former, succeeded Ananias the son of Nebedæus by the favour of king Agrippa, The deposed High Priests joining with him[1], pretended to make themselves masters of the tythes and oblations, which were designed for the maintenance of the common Priests. These being supported by the principal of the people, rebell'd against the High Priests; and there was a kind of war between them in the Temple. Ishmael was obliged to go to Rome with Chelcias, and ten of the chief inhabitants of Jerusalem, to desire of Nero that they might be permitted to rebuild the wall which Festus Governor of Judea had caused to be demolished; because it hindred the Roman troops from seeing the Temple, and confined the view from [Antiq. l. xx. c. 7. p. 697. Idem de vita sua, p. 998, 999.] Agrippa's palace. It was upon their account that Josephus the Historian made a journey to Rome, in order to defend them. They procured what they desired by the credit of Poppæa, who favoured the Jews. Ishmael returned no more to Jerusalem; and Agrippa deprived him of the High Priesthood, with a design of giving it to Joseph the son of Simon, firnamed Cabei.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Joseph. Antiq. l. 20, c. 6, p. 696. In the year of the world 4066, of the vulgar Æra 63. with

Ishmaiah

ISHMAIAH, the son of Obadiah, chief of the Tribe of Zebulon in David's time, 1 Chr. xxvii. 19.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ish-Tob

[2 Sam. x. 6.] ISH-TOB, an inhabitant of Tob, or an honest man, or Martyr of the country of the Tubienians. This country was situated at the northern extremity of the mountains of Gilead, towards mount Libanus. [Judg. x. 3, 5.] Jephtha retired into the land of Tob; and this country in the Maccabees is called Tobie, Macc. v. 13.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ishuah

ISHUAH, Asher's second son, Gen. xlvi.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Isis (17)

17.ISIS. There is so often mention made in Scripture of the Gods of Egypt, that we can scarce dispense with ourselves from saying something here of Isis, the principal of these Deities. Isis, according to the Theology of the Egyptians, was the same as Io, beloved by Jupiter, who having been metamorphosed into a cow, through the hatred of Juno, withdrew into Egypt, where Jupiter restored her to her first form. Here she married Osiris king of the country: Osiris and Isis governed with so much gentleness and wisdom, and were so remarkably serviceable to Egypt, that the Egyptians paid divine honours to them. Some say she taught them the art of spinning wooll, and working it up; the art of cultivating land, of gathering in corn, and making bread of it. She likewise gave them laws, and settled their polity.

[Plutarch. de Iside & Osiride.] Others say, that Osiris was brother and husband to Isis, in like manner as Juno was sister and wife to Jupiter. Eusebius [Euseb. Præp. l. iii. c. 5. Lactant. l. i. c. 21.] affirms, that Osiris was husband, brother, and son to Isis. Lactantius and Minutius Felix maintain, that Osiris was the son of Isis. As to the father of Isis, they who confound her with Io say, she was the daughter of Inachus King of Argos. Others tell us Neptune was her father, and Callirhoe her mother. Others suppose her to be the daughter of Argus and Ismene. Others of Mercury or Prometheus. Herodotus says, that the Egyptians took Isis for Ceres, and believed Apollo and Diana to be her children; that Latona was their nurse and deliverer. Apollo was called Orus in the Egyptian language; Ceres, Isis; and Diana, Bubastis.

If any one would collect the opinions of all the several Authors who have written concerning Isis and Osiris, he will find, that these two Deities include all the Heathen Gods. Isis according to them is Ceres, Juno, the Moon, the Earth, or Nature, Minerva, Proserpine, Thetis, the mother of the Gods or Cybele, Venus, Diana [Apul. l. xi. Metamorph.] , Bellona, Hecate, Ramnusia. In a word, she was firnamed Myrionyma, that is to say, the Goddess with a thousand names. Upon an ancient marble at Capua she is styled Goddess Isis, who art all things, te tibi, una quæ es omnia Dea Isis; and in the city of Sais there were the following [Plutarch. de Iside & Osiride.] words to be seen, by Plutarch's relation, upon the pavement of a Temple dedicated to Minerva, who is the same as Isis, I am every thing that has been, that is, and will be; and no one among mortals has hitherto taken off my veil.

[Herod. in Euterpe, c. 41. Philostrat. vita Appol. Thyan. l. i. c. 24. Apul. Metam. l. xi.] Apuleius introduces Isis speaking in these terms: I am Nature, parent of all things, mistress of the elements, the beginning of ages, the Sovereign of the Gods, Queen of the souls of the deceased, the first of the celestial Natures, the uniform face of Gods and Goddesses. It is I who govern the bright sublimity of the Heavens, the salutary winds of the sea, the mournful silence of children; my Divinity which is single, tho represented in several forms, is honoured by different nations, and under different names. The Phrygians call me the Pessinuntian, mother of the Gods; the Athenians, the Cecropian Minerva; those of Cyprus, the Paphian Venus; those of Crete, the Dyctean Diana; the Sicilians, a people who speak three languages, the Stygian Proserpine; the Eleusinians, the old Goddess Ceres; others, Juno; others, Bellona; some Hecate; many call me Rhamnusia; the eastern Æthiopians, the Arians, they who are instructed in the ancient doctrine, I mean, the Egyptians, honour me with ceremonies which are peculiar to me, and call me by my real name, Queen Isis.

The Egyptians represented Isis with the head of a cow, or at least with horns, or with a crescent on her head; and between the horns of the crescent they generally place a globe, which denotes the world. She is represented likewise with a bird upon her head, which is thought to be the Ibis. She is to be seen often with a key, a cross, or a whip in her hand. The worship of her was famous throughout Egypt, but principally at Bubastus, Coptos, and Alexandria.

The ancient Germans likewise adored Isis; but their Isis was different from that of the Egyptians. Some maintained that she she had been wife to Mannus, the son of Thuiscon, from whom the Germans pretend to derive their original. Some learned men have asserted, that under the names of Mannus and Isis these ancient people meant Adam and Eve. Mannus in German signifies Man, as well as Adam in Hebrew; and Isis is the same name as Ischa, or Ischat, the name which our first Parent gave Eve, hæc vocabitur Virago; in the [Gen. ii. 23. Hæc vocabitur Virago. אישה] Hebrew, Ipsa vocabitur Ischa. The same has been believed of Isis and Osiris, adored by the Egyptians.

The question at present is, whether the Israelites worshipped Isis, and what name they gave her. It is worth observing, in the first place, that the Hebrews have no name to signify a Goddess. 2. That since Isis was represented with the head and horns of an Ox, it is credible enough that this may be she, whom the Sacred Books call the golden

Calf, or as the Septuagint read, the golden heifers. Several of the fathers speaking of the adoration of the golden calf, have said that the Israelites adored a calf's head. 3. As the Jews worshipped the Sun and Earth under different names, such as Gad, Meni, Baal, Astaroth, the King and Queen and all the host of Heaven, it is credible, that under these different names they paid their honours to Isis and Osiris.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ismachiah

ISMACHIAH, was probably a Priest or Levite in the time of Hezekiah. He [2 Chr. xxxi. 13.] was one of those whom this Prince trusted with the care of the first fruits and offerings which were brought to the Temple.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ismaiah

ISMAIAH, of the Tribe of Benjamin, and town of Gibeon, a very valiant man, who joined David at Ziklag, 1 Chr. xii. 4.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Israel

ISRAEL. This is the name which the Angel gave Jacob, after having wrestled with him all night at Mahanaim or Peniel. See Gen. xxxii. 1, 2. and 28, 29, 30. and Hosea xii. 3. See likewise the article Jacob. Israel signifies the conqueror of God, or a Prince of God, or according to many of the ancients, a man who sees God. By the name of Israel is sometimes understood the person of Jacob, sometimes the whole people of Israel, the whole race of Jacob; and sometimes the Kingdom of Israel, or of the ten Tribes, distinct from the Kingdom of Judah. Kings of Israel. See hereafter the article Kings.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Israelites

ISRAELITES, the descendants of Israel, who were at first called Hebrews, by reason of Abraham, who came from the other side of the Euphrates, and afterwards Israelites, from Israel the father of the twelve Patriarchs; and lastly Jews, Judæi, particularly after their return from the captivity of Babylon; because the [Vos. de Idololatria, l. i. c. 17, 2. 38. l. ii. c. 24, 27, 36, 56, & l. vii. c. 2. & 10. Gen. xxx. 14—18. Gen. xlvi. 13. Joseph. Antiq. l. x. c. 11. p. 342.] Tribe of Judah was then much stronger and more numerous than the other Tribes, and foreigners had scarce any knowledge but of this Tribe.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Issachar

ISSACHAR, the fifth son of Jacob and Leah. He was conceived after Rachel's purchasing the mandrakes, which Reuben brought to his mother Leah. He was born about the year of the world 2255, before J. C. 1745, before the vulgar Æra 1749. He had four sons; Tola, Phuvah, Job, and Shimron. We know nothing particularly of his life. Jacob when he gave him his blessing, said to him, Issachar is a strong ass couching down between two burdens. And he saw that the rest was good, and the land that it was pleasant, and bowed his shoulder to bear, and became a servant unto tribute. The Chaldee translates it in a quite contrary sense, He shall subdue Provinces, and make those tributary to him, who shall remain in his land. The Tribe of Issachar had its portion in one of the best parts of the land of Cannan, along the great plain, or valley of Jezreel, with the half Tribe of Manasseh to the south, that of Zebulon to the north, the Mediteranean to the west, and Jordan with the extremity of the sea of Tiberias to the east. In the Testament of the twelve Patriarchs we have the several admonitions and instructions which Issachar gave his son before his death. But this we know is an Apocryphal work, and of no authority.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Issus

ISSUS, or Isus, High Priest of the Jews mentioned in Josephus, succeeded Joram and was himself succeeded by Axioram. There is no mention in Scripture of this High Priest, unless he is the same with Azariah in the Chronicles. See Chr. vi. 9.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Isui

ISUI, the third son of Asher. See Jesui.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Itaburius

[כתים Cethim. הובל Thubal.] ITABURIUS or Itaburium. Josephus calls mount Tabor by this name. See l. 4. c. 2. De Bello Jud.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Italy

ITALY. S. Jerom translates the Hebrew word Cethim or Citthim in Numb. xxiv. 24. and Ezek. xxvii. 6. by Italia. But we have shewn upon Genesis x. 4. that by Cethim is meant Macedonia. The same S. Jerom in Isaiah lxvi. 19. translates the Hebrew, Thubal, Italia, tho according to others the Tibarenians are rather signified by it. In the Sacred Books written originally in Greek, there is no ambiguity in the word Italia; it signifies that part of the world whereof Rome is the Capital.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ithamar

ITHAMAR, Aaron's fourth son. We know nothing particularly of his life, and there is no probability that he ever exercised the High Priesthood. He and his sons continued in the rank of sim ple Priest, till the High Priesthood came into his family in the person of Eli High Priest and Judge of Israel[1].

THE MEDITERRANEAN SEA ORaccording to the Jews THE WESTERN OR GREAT SEA A M A P of the CHILDREN of ISRAEL's TRAVELS and MARCHES in the WILDERNESS, from their going out of EGYPT to their passage over the River JORDAN. According to the Author's Scheme

The successors of Eli, of the same family of Ithamar, are Abitub, Abiah, Abimelech, and Abiathar, whom Solomon deposed and forbad to exercise this Office[2].

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

From the year of the world 2848 to 2888, before J. C. 1112, before the vulgar Æra 1116.
In the year of the world 2989, before J. C. 1011, before the vulgar Æra 1015. See 1 Kings ii. 27.

Ithiel

ITHIEL, the son of Isaiah, and father of Maaseiah of the Tribe of Benjamin. Neh. xi. 7.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ithmah

ITHMAH, one of the gallant Officers belonging to David's army, 1 Chron. xi. 46.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ithobal

ITHOBAL, King of Tyre. We do not meet with this name in the Sacred Books of the Old Testament. We read of Ethbaal, who was father to Jezebel, and father -in-law to Ahab. Josephus calls him [Joseph. Antiq. l. 9. c. 6. p. 311, compare 1 Kings xvi. 31. Lib. i. contra Appion. p. 1043. Philostrat. apud Joseph. Antiq. l. x c. ii. & contra Appion. l. i. p. 1046. Ezek. xxviii.] Ithobal. He says in another place, that one Ithobal Priest of Astarte, having killed Phelletes King of Tyre, reigned two and thirty years in his room.

We are of opinion, that the invectives and menaces of the Prophet Ezekiel are directed to this Prince. The old Phœnician Historians call the King of Tyre Ithobal, in whose reign Nebuchadnezzar besieged that city. Ezekiel speaks to him in the following manner. "Because thine heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, I am a God, I sit in the seat of God, and in the midst of the Seas; yet thou art a man and not God, tho' thou set thine heart as the heart of God. Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel, there is no secret that they can hide from thee. With thy wisdom and with thine understanding thou hast gotten thee riches, and hast gotten gold and silver into thy treasures. By thy great wisdom and by thy traffick hast thou increased thy riches, and thine heart is lifted up because of thy riches. Behold therefore, saith the Lord, I will bring strangers upon thee, the terrible of the nations, and they shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom, and they shall defile thy brightness. They shall bring thee down to the pit, and thou shalt die the death of them that are slain in the midst of the seas. Wilt thou yet say before him that slayeth thee, I am God? but thou shalt be a man and no God in the hand of him that slayeth thee. Thou shalt die the death of the uncircumcised by the hand of strangers, for I have spoken saith the Lord."

The Lord said afterwards to Ezekiel: "Take up a lamentation upon the King of Tyrus, and say unto him, thus saith the Lord God, Thou seelest up the sum full of wisdom and perfect in beauty. Thou hast been in Eden the garden of God, every precious stone was thy covering, the sardius, topaz, and the diamond, the beryl, the onyx, and the jasper, the sapphire, the emerald, and the carbuncle, and gold. The most excellent instruments of musick were prepar'd for the day on which thou wast created. Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth; and I have set thee so: thou wast upon the holy mountain of God, thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire. Thou wast perfect in thy ways from the day that thou wast created, till iniquity was found in thee. By the multitude of thy merchandize they have filled the midst of thee with violence, and thou hast sinned: therefore I will cast thee as profane out of the mountain of God; and I will destroy thee, O covering cherub, from the midst of the stones of fire. For their heart was lifted up because of thy beauty, thou hast corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness. I will cast thee to the ground.——I will bring forth a fire from the midst of thee, it shall devour thee, and I will bring thee to ashes upon the earth, in the sight of all them that behold thee. All they that know thee among the people shall be astonished at thee, thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt thou be any more."

[Habak. ii. 12, 13, 14.] We believe likewise that the following words of Habakkuk have a regard to the same Prince. Woe to him who buildeth a town with blood, and establisheth a city by iniquity. The wealth which thou abusest, the city which thou buildest, does not all this come from the Lord? All the labours of the people shall be consumed with fire, and the endeavours of the nations shall be reduced to nothing, because the earth shall be filled with enemies, as the bottom of the sea is filled with its waters, that the glory and justice of the Lord may be known by all the world.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ithream

ITHREAM, the son of David and Eglab, 1 Chron. iii. 3. The Hebrews will have it, that Eglab is the same as Michal Saul's daughter, as we have observed in the article Eglab.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ittah-Kazin

ITTAH-KAZIN, a town in the tribe of Zebulun, Joshua xix. 13. In the Hebrew it is עתה קזין-Ita-Kazin.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ittai

ITTAI, the son of Ribai, sirnamed the Gittite, a native of the town of Gibeah, was [1 Chr. xi. 31.] one of David's most faithful servants. He distinguished himself in the war against [2 Sam. xv. 20, 21, &c.] Absalom.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Iturea

ITUREA, a province of Syria or Arabia, beyond Jordan to the east of the Batanea, and south of Trachonitis. S. Luke iii. 1. speaks of Iturea, and 1 Chron. v. 19. of the Itureans, or of Jethur according to the Hebrew. Now Jethur was one [Gen. xxv. 15. and 1 Chr. i. 31.] of the Sons of Ishmael. Iturea is included in Arabia Petrea.

Aristobulus, King or Prince of the Jews, and son of Hircanus, as soon as he began to [Joseph. Antiq. l. xiii. c. 19.] reign made war with the Itureans; and after he had subdued the greatest part of them, obliged them to embrace Judaism, as Hircanus his father had in like manner some years before obliged the Idumæans; he gave them their choice, either to be circumcised, and embrace the Jewish religion, or to leave the country, and seek elsewhere for a settlement. They chose rather to stay and do what he required of them. They therefore, tho descended from Ishmael, had not continued the practice of circumcision; or perhaps Aristobulus might compel them to receive it on the eighth day, whereas before they might not receive it till the age of twelve or thirteen. Philip one of Herod's sons was Tetrarch or Prince of Iturea, when S. John Baptist entred upon the functions of his ministry. Luke iii. 1.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jubal

JUBAL, the son of Lamech and Adah. He invented instruments of musick before the flood. Gen. iv. 21.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Jubilee

[יובלJubel or Jobel.] JUBILEE, in Hebrew, Jobel. The Jubilee year was the fiftieth year which fell out after seven weeks of years, or seven times [Lev. xxv. 10.] seven years: And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year; it shall be a Jubilee unto you. Notwithstanding the clearness of the text, several Commentators maintain that the Jubilee was celebrated in the forty ninth year, and exactly on the last year of the seventh week of Years. Moses favours this opinion, where he says, Lev. xxv. 8. Thou shalt number seven Sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years, and the space of the seven Sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. They who maintain this shew the inconveniency there would be in celebrating the Jubilee in the fiftieth year, after the Sabbatical year, which falls out in the forty ninth year. These two years rest successively following one another might be attended with dangerous consequences in any country, and produce a famine there.

The Hebrew word Jobel signifies, according to some of the Rabbins, a ram's horn, with which the Jubilee year was proclaimed. But how could a ram's horn which is solid and not hollow, be made use of as a trumpet! It was therefore in all probability a brazen trumpet made in the form of a ram's horn. Others derive the etymology of Jobel, from the Hebrew, Jubal, which formerly signified, as they say, to play upon instruments. We are of opinion, that it comes from the verb Hobil, to bring or call back; because then every thing was restored to its first possessor.

The Jubilee year began on the first day of Tizri, (which is the first month in the civil year, and answered our September) and about the Autumnal Equinox. In this year no one either sowed or reaped; but all were satisfied with what the earth [Lev. xxv. 11, 12, 13, &c.] and the trees produced of themselves. Every one took possession again of his inheritance, whether it were sold, mortgaged, or any way alienated. Hebrew slaves, however they came to fall into a state of slavery, were set free, together with their wives and children; even they who had renounced the privilege, which the Sabbatical year gave them of recovering their liberty. Even all foreign slaves enjoyed the right which was given by the Jubilee. There are some other particulars concerning this year, which may be read in Lev. xxv.

In order to reconcile the two opinions, which divide the Interpreters, relating to the Jubilee; namely, whether it shou'd be celebrated precisely in the fiftieth year, as Moses requires in Lev. xxv. 10. and as Philo, Josephus, Eusebius, S. Jerom, S. Austin, S. Gregory the great, S. Isidore, all the Jews, both Talmudists and Caraites, and a great number of Commentators understand it; or only in the forty ninth year, as Moses mentions pretty clearly in Lev. xxv. 8. and as several good Commentators[1] and Chronologists explain it. To reconcile, I say, these two opinions, it may be said, I think, that the fiftieth year is set down for the forty ninth, for the sake only of making a round number; as we say every day, that there are eight days to a week, thirty to a month, five years to an Olympiad; tho rigorously speaking there are but seven days in a week, sometimes one and thirty, sometimes eight and twenty, nine and twenty or thirty days in a month, and four years only in an Olympiad. Besides, as the Jubilee year began after the conclusion of the forty ninth year, and at the beginning of the fiftieth, it might be called indifferently the forty ninth or fiftieth year.

THE PUBLICATION OF THE JUBILEE AMONG THE ISRAELITES.Lev XXX.8. VOL. I 2.- Gat. A ij

The greatest difficulty consists, in knowing whether in both these years forty nine and fifty the sabbath was observed, and the earth remain'd untill'd, or only in the forty ninth year. One would think there should be too many inconveniences in observing the sabbatical rest for two years successively; the intention of the legislator was complied with, by the rest of one year only. The seventh of the sabbatical years had only more privileges annexed to it, and was more celebrated than the two preceding. By this expedient every thing is reconciled, and all difficulties disappear.

I shall here lay before you some particulars relating to the Jubilee year: it began on the first day of the month Tizri. But neither were the slaves restored to liberty, nor the lands returned to their first owners, till the tenth day of this month. The nine first days [Maimonid. Halaca Schemitta Vejobel.] were spent in joy and pleasures, almost like the Romans in their Saturnalia. During these nine days the slaves did not work for their masters, but they eat, drank, and were merry, and every one put a crown upon their heads. No sooner was the day of solemn expiation come, which is the tenth of Tizri, but the counsellors of the Sanhedrim ordered the trumpets to sound, and at that instant the slaves were declared free, and the lands returned to their old owners.

The motive of this Law was to hinder the rich from oppressing the poor, and reducing them to perpetual slavery, and that they should not get possession of all the lands by the ways of purchase, mortgage, or lastly, usurpation; that debts should not be multiplied too much, and consequently the poor intirely ruined: and that slaves should not continue always, they themselves, their wives and children, in servitude. Besides, Moses intended to preserve, as much as possible, the liberty of people's persons, an equality of fortunes, and the order of families among the Hebrews. Lastly, he designed the people should be tied to their country, their lands, and inheritance; that they should have an affection for them, as estates which descended to them from their ancestors, and they were to leave to their posterity, without any fear of their going for ever out of their families.

Something like this Lycurgus establish-ed among the Lacedæmonians, in his instituting an equality of fortunes; banishing slavery, and promoting as far as he could any one's becoming too powerful and rich. For this reason he appointed Ostracism, which consisted in banishing those citizens from the commonwealth, whose riches or too great power gave umbrage to others. Stolo was desirous of putting a check to the greediness and avarice of the old Romans, by making a law, which forbad any particular person's having more than five hundred acres of land; but fraud soon crept in among them, and destroyed this wise constitution. Stolo himself was the first who violated his own law, and was condemn'd for possessing a thousand, jointly with his son, whom he had emancipated particularly for this purpose.

There were several privileges belonging to the Jubilee year which did not belong to the sabbatical year; and the sabbatical had likewise some small advantages above the [Maimonid. loco citato. Selden. de successsion. in bona, l. iii. c. 24.] Jubilee year: the sabbatical year annulled debts, which the Jubilee did not, but the Jubilee restored slaves to their liberty, and lands to their old owners; besides, it made restitution of the lands immediately upon the beginning of the Jubilee, whereas in the sabbatical year the debts were not discharged till the end of the year. The estates which had been purchased or given returned to their old masters; those which came by right of succession continued with those who enjoyed them: contracts of sale, wherein a certain number of years was expressed, subsisted during all those years, notwithstanding the Jubilee's coming on. But absolute and unlimited contracts were voided by the Jubilee. Houses and other edifices built in walled towns did not return to the proprietor in the Jubilee year.

[Maimonid. Hala. ha Schemitta Vejobel. Cunæus de Rep. Heb. l. i. c. 6. Joseph. Antiq. l. xi. c. ult.] After the captivity of Babylon they continued to observe the sabbatical, but not the Jubilee year. Alexander the great granted the Jews an exemption from tribute every seventh year, by reason of the rest which they then observed. But as to the Jubilee, since it was instituted with a design only to prevent the utter destruction of the partition which had been made by Joshua, and the confusion of tribes and families, it was no longer practicable as before the dispersion of the tribes, those of them which returned from the captivity settling as they could, and where they could, and a great number of families, and perhaps whole tribes, continuing in the place of their captivity.

Usher places the first Jubilee, which was observed after the promulgation of the Law by Moses, in the year of the Julian period 3318, of the world 2609, before J. C. 1391, before the vulgar Æra 1395.

The The second Jubilee in the year of the Julian period 3367, of the world 2658, before J. C. 1342, before the vulgar Æra 1346.

The third Jubilee, in the year of the Julian period 3417, of the world 2707, before J. C. 1293, before the vulgar Æra 1297, and so on. See the Chronological Tables, and reckon, as, if you please, you may, nine and forty years from Jubilee to Jubilee.

In imitation of the Jews, the Christians have likewise established Jubilees ; but they relate only to the forgiveness of sins, and the indulgence which the Church grants to sinners, by virtue of the power of binding and loosing, committed to it by Jesus Christ. These sorts of Jubilees were not established till the time of Pope Boniface VIII. in the year of J.C. 1300, nor did they begin to be called Jubilees till the reign of Sixtus IV. who was made Pope in 1471, and in his Bull dated in the year 1473, gave the name of Jubilee to that plenary and general indulgence which he granted to all the faithful. In the beginning, these Jubilees were appointed only every hundred years: but Pope Clement VI. reduced them to fifty. Gregory XI. fixed them to the space of three and thirty years; and Paul II. finding that this duration was still too long, ordained that there should be a Jubilee every five and twenty years; which from that time has been always practised. This, however, does not hinder the Popes from granting Jubilees likewise in the year of their consecration, and in the great necessities of the Church: but these are rather Indulgences in the form of Jubilees, than real Jubilees. I shall not enter farther into this matter, because it relates but indirectly to my subject; and the New Testament says nothing any where of Jubilees, unless in the way of implication, when it mentions the power of binding and loosing given to the Apostles, and that of using indulgence towards sinners who are truly penitent. See Matt. xvi. 19. and 2 Cor. ii. 10.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Hugo Cardinal. Mercator. Jul. Scaliger. Rador, &c. Cunæus de Rep. Heb. l. 1. c. 6. 3 in

Judah

JUDAH, when named in opposition to Israel, or the Kingdom of the ten Tribes, or Samaria, denotes that of Judah, and David's descendents. One of the principal prerogatives of this Tribe is, that it preserved the true Religion left in trust to it, and the publick exercise of the Priesthood together with the legal ceremonies in the Temple of Jerusalem, while the ten Tribes gave themselves up to Idolatry, and the worship of the golden calves.

Kings of Judah. See the list of the Kings of Judah under the article Kings.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Judas (I)

I. JUDAS, or Judah, or Jehuda, the fourth son of Jacob and Leah, was born in [Gen. xxix. 35.] Mesopotamia, in the year of the world 2249, before J. C. 1751, before the vulgar Æra 1755. It was he who advised his brethren to sell Joseph to the Ishmaelite merchants, rather than to dip their fingers in his [Gen. xxxvii. 26.] blood[1]. He married Shuah, the daughter of a Canaanite, whose name was Hirah, and had three sons by her, Er, Onan, and Shelah. He married Er to a young woman, [Gen. xxxviii. 1, 2, &c.] whose name was Tamar. Er was a wicked man, and God struck him dead for his impieties. Judah required Onan his second son, to marry his brother's widow, Er having died without children, and to raise up seed to him: but Onan in an abominable manner prevented Tamar's becoming a mother. Wherefore the Lord punished him also with death. Judah being afraid to give Shelah his third son to his daughter in law, amused her with promises, without performing them. Wherefore Tamar disguised herself, dressed herself like an harlot, and placed herself in the way which Judah was to pass. Judah therefore went in unto her, and she conceived and brought forth two sons, one named Pharez, the other Zarah. See Tamar, Pharez, and Zarah.

[Gen. xxxviii. 27, 28, 29. Gen. xxxv. 22. Gen. xlix. 8, 9, &c.] Judah was always looked upon as the first and most esteemed of Jacob's children. His Tribe was the most powerful and numerous. The privileges of the first-born seem to have been transfered to him from Reuben, after the incest committed by Reuben with Bilhah his father's wife. The blessing given by Jacob on his death-bed to Judah is as follows, Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren shall praise, thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies, thy father's children shall bow down before thee. Judah is a lion's whelp, from the prey, my son, thou art gone up: he stooped down, he couched as a lion, and as an old lion who shall rouse him up. The scepter shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come, and unto him shall the gathering of the people be. This place contains a promise that the regal power should not go out of his family, and that the Messiah should derive his birth from it. Jacob adds, Binding his fole unto the vine, and his asses colt unto the choice vine; he washed his garments in wine and his clothes in the blood of grapes. His eyes shall be red with wine, and his teeth white with milk: or, according to another version, His eyes are more beautiful than wine, and his teeth whiter than snow. All which described the fruitfulness of his land.

The whole southern part of Palestine fell to Judah's lot; and the Tribes of Simeon and Dan possessed many cities, which at first were given to Judah. This Tribe was so numerous, that at the departure out of Egypt, it was composed of seventy four thousand six hundred men, capable [Numb. i. 26, 27.] of bearing arms. The Crown passed from the Tribe of Benjamin, out of which Saul issued, and Ishbosheth, into that of Judah, which was David's Tribe, and that of the Kings his successors, until the Babylonish captivity. And after the return of the Jews from their captivity, although this Tribe did not reign, it possessed always the first place; it gave the scepter to those who did reign, and in some sort reunited in itself the whole nation of the Hebrews, who from that time were known only by the name of Judæi, Jews, descendants of Judah. The Testament of the twelve Patriarchs introduces Judah pronouncing a Prophecy concerning the Messiah; but it is very visible, that it was made after his time.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the world 1276, before J. C. 1724, before the vulgar Æra 1728. his

Judas Maccabæus (II)

II. JUDAS MACCABÆUS[1], the son of Mattathias, succeeded his father in the charge of Captain of the people, during the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes[2]. He had before given marks of his valour, conduct, and zeal for God's law, by opposing those who forsook the Lord, and sacrificed to Idols. This obliged Mattathias his Father to declare him his successor, and place him at the head of his brethren. One of the first expeditions of Judas Maccabæus was against Apollonius general of [1 Macc. iii. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year 3838.] the Syrian troops, which were in Palestine. Judas marched against him, killed him, cut in pieces, or put to flight his whole army; he took Apollonius's sword, and generally made use of it in times of action during the remainder of his life. Seron, a Syrian Captain, thinking to get honour by defeating Judas; on the contrary did but increase that of Judas by his own [1 Macc. ii. 13, 14, &c.] defeat.

Antiochus, surprized at the valour of Judas, sent three Generals of reputation against him, Nicanor, Gorgias, and Ptolemy the son of Dorimenes[3]. Judas assembled his army at Maspha, prepared for battle by prayer, marched against the Enemy, attacked Nicanor alone, and in the absence of Gorgias, beat him and routed his army. Gorgias coming afterwards, and seeing Nicanor's camp on fire, made haste back again, without daring to engage. The year following[4] Lysias, Regent of the kingdom, in the absence of Antiochus Epiphanes, who was gone beyond the Euphrates, Lysias, I say, came into Judea with an army of sixty thousand [1 Macc. iii. 38, 39, &c. 1 Macc. iv. 21, 29, 30, &c.] chosen men, and five thousand horse. Judas went to meet them as far as Bethoron, and having said his prayers, attacked them, killed five thousand of them upon the spot, and put the rest to flight. Lysias was obliged to return to Antioch, in order to raise a new army.

Judas seeing himself thus master of the field, went up to Jerusalem with his forces[5]. They saw the holy Places quite deserted, the Altar profaned, the courts filled with briars, and the chambers joining to the Temple all destroyed. Judas divided his people, employed part of them in cleansing the holy places, and posted the rest between the Citadel and the Temple, that they might hinder the Syrian troops, which were in possession of the fortress, from incommoding those who were endeavouring to purify the holy Place, and put it once more in a condition to have Sacrifices offered in it. They laid by the stones of the old Altar, which had been profaned, built a new one of rough stones, rebuilt the Holy and the Sanctuary, made new sacred vessels, and on the 25th of the month called Casleu, in the hundred and forty eighth year of the Greeks, which answers to the year of the world 3840, before J. C. 160, before the vulgar Æra 164, they offered the morning Sacrifice upon the Altar of burnt-offerings, and restored the publick worship in the Temple, which had been interrupted for three whole years. They made a new dedication of the Temple with all the pomp they could, according to the present state of their affairs, and celebrated this feast for eight days. The memorial of this dedication is spoken of in the Gospel, [1 Macc. iv. 53, 54, 55, &c.] wherein it is said, that Jesus came to the Temple of Jerusalem at the dedication in the winter, John x. 22.

In a little time after, and probably the same year, Judas again defeated two Syrian Generals, Timotheus and Bacchides, and caused the booty which he had taken from them to be carried to Jerusalem. [2 Macc. viii. 30. and x. 24. 1 Macc. iv. 61. 1 Macc. v. 3, 4, 5, &c. and 2 Macc. x. 24, &c.] Bethsura likewise was fortified by his order, that being a fort of barrier, which covered Jerusalem on the side of Idumea. Judas attacked the Idumeans, the inhabitants of the Acrabatene, the sons of Bean, the Ammonites, and Timotheus, who had entred Judea, and performed every where prodigies of valour: he beat, cut in pieces, and dispersed all his enemies. The people of Gilead[6] having conspired against the Israelites, who were in their country, the Israelites fled into the fortress of Dathema. Judas being informed of it, made haste to their assistance, and at the same time sent his brother Simon to the relief of the Israelites of Galilee, who were threatned with intire ruin by the people of Tyre and Sidon, and other strangers who had invaded their country. He gave Simon three thousand men, and took eight thousand with himself.

Simon worsted the enemy, killed near three thousand men, and taking with him the Jews of Galilee, he brought them into Judea, that they might remain there more in safety. Judas passed the river Jordan, took Bosor, and set it on fire. He arrived at Dathema in the very time when the assault was made, but the enemies no sooner discerned him, than they abandoned their undertaking and fled. From thence he went to Maspha, Casphon, Meged, and Bosor, and took all these cities. Timotheus having again got together some troops, Judas marched against him, and defeated him; he afterwards took Aztaroth-Carnaim, and reduced it to ashes.

Then Judas having assembled all the Jews whom he could find in the country beyond Jordan, brought them into Judea. On the way he took and pillaged the city of Ephron, which had denied him passage. Being happily arrived at Jerusalem, they went up to the Temple, and there offered sacrifices of thanksgiving. Judas afterwards made war with the Idumeans; he took Hebron from them, entred into the country of the Philistines, took Azotus, run thro' all Samaria, and returned loaded with a rich booty into the land of Judah.

[2 Macc. xi. 1, 2, &c. 27, 28, &c.] In the mean time Lysias came a second time into Judea at the head of a powerful army[7]. He advanced as far as Beth-sura, about six leagues from Jerusalem. Judas marched against him, and when he departed from Jerusalem, an Angel appeared at the head of his troops under the form of a man on horseback, who filled them with joy and courage. They fell upon their enemies, killed eleven thousand foot, and sixteen hundred horse, put the rest to flight, and Lysias himself was forced to save himself with dishonour, and make peace with Judas. Eupator, who succeeded Antiochus Epiphanes, permitted the Jews to live according to their own laws, and to perform all their offices with all sort of liberty in the Temple of Jerusalem.

This treaty having been concluded, Lysias returned to Antioch. But Timotheus [2 Macc. xii. 1, 2, 3, &c. in the same year 3841.] , Apollonius, Hieronymus, Demophon, and Nicanor, who stayed in the country, would not suffer the Jews to rest, and sought all opportunities of interrupting the peace. And the inhabitants of Joppa having invited the Jews, who dwelt in their city, to come aboard their vessels, as it were to divert themselves upon the sea, drowned all of them together with their wives and children. Judas to revenge this perfidiousness marched against them, burnt their ships, and set fire to their harbour; he had done the same to their city, if he had not received news that the people of Jamnia designed likewise to extirpate the Jews out of their city. Judas prevented them, burnt their harbours and their vessels. From thence he went beyond Jordan, where he was attacked by a body of five thousand five hundred Arabians; he beat them, and compelled them to sue for peace. He attacked Caspis or Esebon, took it, sacked it, and there was so great a number slain, that the water of a neighbouring lake was dyed with their blood. He advanced as far as Characa in the land of the Tubienians, but not finding Timotheus there, whom he was in pursuit of, he met him soon after at the head of an hundred and twenty thousand foot, and two thousand five hundred horse. Altho Judas had but six thousand soldiers, he dispersed this army, and killed thirty thousand men. From thence he went to Carnion or Carnaim, and there flew five and twenty thousand persons: he afterwards removed towards Ephron, and killed the same number there. He came to Jerusalem a little before the Pentecost.

After this festival he marched against [2 Macc. xii. 32,33.] Gorgias. The Jews at first had some disadvantage; but Judas having called upon the Lord, put to flight the enemies army: and Gorgias himself escaped not without great difficulty. Judas gathered his people together at Odollam, to celebrate the sabbath; and the day after, when they came to bury the Jews, who had been killed in the battle, they found under the clothes of the dead bodies some particular things which had been consecrated to Idols in Jamnia. And all imputed their death to their stealing what was so impure and profane. Judas made a gathering of twelve thousand drachms of silver, which he sent to Jerusalem, that sacrifices might be offered for the souls of the dead , he having good and holy thoughts concerning the resurrection. For if he had not hoped, that they who had been killed, would one day be revived, he would have esteemed praying for the dead to be an useless and superfluous ceremony.

Antiochus Eupator being made acquainted with the success of Judas Maccabæus[8], came himself into Judea; attended by Lysias, and at the head of an army consisting of an hundred thousand foot, twenty thousand horse, and two and thirty elephants. He laid siege to Bethsura; [1 Macc. vi. 28, 29, &c. and 2 Macc. xiii.] Judas marched to the relief of his brethren; at the first onset he defeated six hundred of the Enemies, and his brother Eleazar with his own hand killed the finest elephant in the army, believing that the King rode upon it. The small number of troops which Judas had with him being unable to make head against the King's forces, retired to Jerusalem. Eupator followed them, and besieged the city, particularly the Temple, which Judas had fortified, and retreated to. The Siege continuing a long time, and Lysias fearing least Philip, who had been declared regent of the Kingdom by Antiochus Epiphanes, might make himself master of Antioch, concluded a peace with Judas, and returned with speed into Syria. Demetrius the son of Seleucus Eupator's Uncle, and lawful heir to the Kingdom of Syria, having put to death Eupator and Lysias, and procured himself to be acknowledged King of Syria[9], gave the High Priesthood of the Jews to Alcimus, and sent Bacchides with him into Judea, with an army, to put a stop to the enterprizes of Judas. Bacchides entered Jerusalem, and fixed Alcimus in the possession of this high dignity. In the mean time, Judas having fled from thence, continued for some time without undertaking any thing. But observing the excesses and many acts of violences, which Alcimus committed, he gathered some troops, and slew those who had forsaken his party. So that Alcimus finding himself not to be the strongest in the Province, fled to Antioch, and accused Judas of several crimes.

Demetrius sent Nicanor with troops into Judea. Before he entred Jerusalem, he dispatch'd deputies to Judas with proposals of peace, which Judas laid before the people and Senators, and all were of opinion to accept them. A day therefore was appointed for the ratification of them. Judas and Nicanor had an interview in the plain; and Judas for fear of a surprize posted armed men in all the advantageous places. The conference passed as it should do. Nicanor continued afterwards at Jerusalem in the citadel, and Judas in the city. Nicanor conceived a very great esteem for Judas, and loved him with a most sincere affection; he requested him to marry, which accordingly he did, and they lived together with great familiarity.

But Alcimus observing the good understanding which was between them, went to Demetrius and told him, that Nicanor betrayed his interests. The King exasperated by these calumnies, wrote to Nicanor, and told him that he took it ill that he had made such a friendship with Judas, and commanded him to send him instantly in chains to Antioch. Nicanor having received these orders, sought an opportunity to execute them. Judas perceiving him to be grown cold, distrusted him; and gathering some troops together, stole privately from Nicanor, and kept the field with his people. Nicanor marched against him, and attacked him at Caphar-Salama: but he was repulsed with the loss of above five thousand men, and obliged to retreat to Jerusalem. He threatned to destroy the Temple, if Judas was[10] not put into his hands; and being departed in order to go to Bethoron, where the Syrian army came and joined him, Judas attacked him with so much impetuosity, that he routed his troops, and Nicanor himself was one of the first who were killed. The rest of his army betaking themselves to flight, were cut in pieces by the inhabitants of the country, so that not one of them remained. Nicanor's head and right hand were hung up over against Jerusalem, and a feast was instituted on the 13th of Adar, to celebrate the memory of this victory. Upon this occasion it was, that Judas in a vision saw the High Priest Onias, who prayed for all the people; and afterwards the Prophet Jeremiah, who presented him with a sword of gold, telling him, that with it he should conquer the enemies of Israel.

[1 Macc. ix. 19, 20, &c.] Demetrius being informed that Nicanor was killed in battle[11], and his army defeated, sent again Bacchides and Alcimus into Judea, with the right wing [1 Macc. ix. 1, 2, 3, &c.] of his troops. They came first of all to Jerusalem, from thence they went to Berea or Beroth, a city in the Tribe of Benjamin. Judas was at Laish, or Bethel, with three thousand chosen men. His people seeing so great an army were terrified, and many fled from the camp; so that not above eight hundred remained with him. Judas finding himself thus forsaken, was discouraged, and said to those who still continued with him: let us go, and, if we can, engage the enemy. As his people diverted him from it, and remonstrated to him, that he should wait for some reinforcement, he said to them; God forbid we should do so. If our hour is come, let us die courageously for our brethren, and not sully our glory with such a blemish. They marched therefore against the enemy. Judas having observed the right wing which Bacchides commanded to be the strongest, attacked it, broke and pursued it, as far as the mountain of Azotus. But they who were in the left wing, followed Judas in the rear, and hemmed him in; so that after a long and obstinate fight, wherein many on both sides were killed or wounded, Judas himself fell dead, and all the rest fled. Then Jonathan and Simon carried off their brother's body, and laid it in their Sepulchre at Modin. All Israel made great lamentations at his death; and said, how is the invincible man fallen, he who delivered the people of Israel. The other wars which Judas was engaged in, and the instances of his courage, are too numerous [Gorionid. l. 3. c. 2.] to be all related. Josephus Ben-Gorion says, that Judas had children, but that they died young. The Scripture says nothing of them; and Judas dying the same year that he was married, it is very credible that he left no issue. This great man was one of the most express figures of the Messiah, the true saviour of Israel; and it is our opinion, that the encomium recorded in Isaiah is to be refer'd to him, as a figure of Jesus Christ, chap. lxiii. Who is he that cometh from Edom, with died garments from Bozrah, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. Judas was called Maccabæus from the motto in his standard, which was this Hebrew sentence taken out of the xvth chapter of Exodus ver. 11. Mi Camo ka Baalim Jehovah, i. e. Who is like unto thee among the Gods O Jehovah. The initial letters of this sentence form the artificial word Maccabi. Thus Senatus populusq; Romanus was expressed in the Roman standards and ensigns by the initial letters of these words S. P. Q. R. They who fought under the standard with the word Maccabi inscribed upon it, were called Maccabees, and he who was the captain of them was more particularly in the way of eminence called by this name. See more in Dr. Prideaux's Connect. &c. Part II. Book III.

In the year of the world 3838, before J. C. 162, before the vulgar Æra 166.

In the year of the world 3839, before J. C. 161, before the vulgar Æra 165.

In the year of the world 3840, before J. C. 160, before the vulgar Æra 164.

In the same year 3840. See 1 Macc. iv. 37, 38, &c. VOL. I. 10

1 Macc. v. 8, 9, 10, &c. In the year of the world 3841, before J. C. 159, before the vulgar Æra 163.

In the year of the world 3841, before J. C. 159, before the vulgar Æra 163. From

In the year of the world 3841, before J. C. 159, before the vulgar Æra 163.

In the year of the world 3842, before J. C. 158, before the vulgar Æra 162.
In the year of the world 3843, before J. C. 157, before the vulgar Æra 161. not
In the year of the world 3843, before J. C. 157, before the vulgar Æra 161.

Judas (III)

III. JUDAS. This is the name given to the fourth of the seven brothers, Maccabees, who suffered martyrdom at Antioch or Jerusalem, under Antiochus Epiphanes. But this name is not to be met with in any authentick writer.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Judas Iscariot (IV)

IV. JUDAS ISCARIOT, or Judas the traitor, having been chosen by Jesus Christ into the number of his Apostles, and intrusted with the alms that were offered to our Saviour and his apostles for their support, he grew so wicked as to betray his God and Lord, and deliver him into the hands of his enemies, in order to be put to death. Mary, Lazarus's sister, having poured out a precious perfume upon our Saviour's feet, Judas was one of those Apostles who murmured most at it; and went soon after to the Priests, undertaking to deliver Jesus Christ to them. They promised him thirty shekels, which make about three pounds eight shillings and three pence farthing; or four pounds ten shillings, if, with Dr. Prideaux, we value a shekel of Silver at three shillings. Before the last supper was ended, he left the room, and went to inform the Priests, that he would that night give up Jesus to them, because he knew the place whither he retired in the night. Several questions are proposed relating to this matter. 1. It is asked, how he came by the name of Iscariot? Euse-bius and S. Jerom[1] think, that he was of the Tribe of Ephraim, and a native of the town of Iscariot situated in this Tribe. Others will have it that he [Hieron. de nominib. Hebr. in Matth. Josh. xv. 25.] was of the Tribe of Issachar; and that from thence was formed the word Issachariothes. Others maintain, that this name is derived from the town of Carioth in the Tribe of Judah. Isch-Carioth, signifies in Hebrew, the man of Carioth.

Another question is, whether he partook of our Lord's body in the last supper which he eat with the Apostles? Several of the ancients, as the author of the Apostolick constitutions, S. Hilary, Innocent III. Victor of Antioch, Abbot Rupert, Theophylact, and some others are of opinion that he was not present at the Eucharist, and that as soon as Jesus Christ had described him as the person who should betray him, he departed, and went away. But [Constit. l. v. c. 13. Hilar. in Matt. Can. 31. Innocent. III. de Myster. alt. l. iv. c. 11. Victor. Antioch. in Marc. xiv. Rupert. in Matt. l. x. & in Joan. l. xii. Theophylact. in Matth. xxvi. Luke xxii. 21.] the generality of both the ancients and moderns[2] assert, that he was present at the institution of the Eucharist; which is confirmed by S. Luke, who having related our Saviour's words at the institution of this divine Sacrament, says, that Jesus pronounced these; The hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table.[3] Some have thought that a piece of bread dipp'd in sauce, and presented by Jesus unto Judas, was the Eucharist; others,[4] that by so dipping the piece of bread, it was unconsecrated. Origen upon S. John relates three opinions concerning Judas's communicating, and declares for one of them. 1. That Judas received the body of Jesus Christ. 2. That the Devil prevented him from doing so. 3. That he received the bread only and not the Body of Jesus Christ. 4. Another question is, how he came to bring back the money to the Priests, which he had received from them in order to deliver up his master. There are some who think, that this did not happen till after the death of Jesus Christ; others that it was before he was condemn'd by Pilate, and at the time when the Priests and Scribes insisted with the Governor, that he should abandon him to them to be crucified; lastly, others pretend, that he did not carry back this money to the Priests till he had heard the sentence of death pronounced against his master. Then he went to them in the Temple, and said to them, I have sinned in that I have betrayed innocent blood? But they answered him, What is that to us? Look thou to that. Hereupon he threw the money into the Temple, went away, and hang'd himself. Some of the Fathers[5] seem to speak in commendation of Judas's repentance; but others look upon it as very defective and unprofitable, since he despaired of God's mercy. Origen and Theophylact writing on S. Matthew, say, that Judas seeing his Master was condemned, and that he could not obtain pardon from him in this life, made haste to get the [Acts i. 18. πρηνὴς γενόμενος ἐλάκησε μέσος, καὶ ἐξεχύθη πάντα τὰ σπλάγχνα αὐτοῦ. Matt. xxvii. 5. Καὶ ἀπελθὼν ἀπήγξατο. Irenæ. l. i. c. 35. Epiphan. hæres. 28. n 1. Theodoret. hæretic. fab. c. 15.] start of him, and wait for him in the other world, in order to beg mercy of him there.

There are some difficulties formed concerning the manner wherein Judas died. S. Matthew says no more than that he hang'd himself; but S. Luke in the Acts says farther, that Judas falling headlong burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out. Theophylact affirms, that having first hang'd himself, as S. Matthew relates, the weight of his body made the tree bend which he was fastned to, and that being assisted, he lived still some time after; but that falling into a dropsy he burst and died. Euthymius tells us, that just as Judas had hanged himself, some person took him down, and put him in a place where for a while he lived; but that he tumbled afterwards from some high place, burst in the fall, and his bowels dropt out. Papias, who is cited in OEcumenius upon the Acts, said, that the halter by which he was fastned to the tree breaking, he lived for some time, and at last burst in the middle. Others think that being thrown into a common sewer after his death, he burst there, as is usual with carcasses which are abandoned in this manner, and all his bowels fell out. Several of the Moderns[6] are of opinion, that the Greek Text of S. Matthew may signify only, that Judas was suffocated with grief, despair, or even a quinsey, and that in the extremity of his disease he fell upon his face, burst and expired; or that being tormented with despair, he threw himself headlong and burst. This is a pretty exact account of what is related on this subject. See the article Aceldema, concerning the field purchased with the money which Judas returned to the Priests.

The ancient Fathers take notice of a spurious Gospel under the name of the Gospel of Judas, which was composed by the Cainites to countenance their extravagant opinions. They acknowledged a superior power to that of the Creator, and contrary to it; that they whom we look upon as the worst men that ever were, such as Cain, Korah, the Sodomites and Judas the traitor, were acquainted with this first principle, and were its Ministers in opposition to the power of the great Creator of the world. Judas alone of all the Apostles, say they, knew this mystery; and in order the sooner to procure the salvation of Israel, he made haste to deliver up Jesus Christ, who had many times declared, that he should die for the salvation of the world.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Euseb. & Hieronym. in Isai. xxviii. 1. Hieronym. in Matth. p. 29.

Origen. homil. 36. in Matth. Victor. Antioch. in Marc. xiv. Cyrill. Hierosolym. Catech. xiii. Cyrill. Alex. in Joan. l. 9. c. 13. Chrysost. homil. 82 & 83. in Matt. Theodoret ad 2 Cor. xi. 23. Hieronym. l. ii. contra Jovinian. Abaelard. Serm. in Pass. Domini. Magister Sentent. l. iv. dist. 11. Alens. Thom. Soto, &c.

Concil. Bracar. 3. c. 1, 2. Jul. Papa, Ep. ad Episcopos per Ægyptum, Diss. 2. de censur. c. 7. Burchard. decret. 5. 1. Ivo parte 2. c. 11. Allat. dist. de Libris Græc.

Dionys. Barsalibas, apud Euseb. Renaudot. t. 4. Perpetuite de la Foi, c. 5. p. 148.

Origen. in Matth. tract. 35. & l. 2. contra Cels. Hieronym. in Matt. xxvii. Ambros. in Luc. l. x. Chrysost. in Matt. homil. 86.

Vide Erasm. Heinsi. Grot. Ham. Gronov. Dissert. de casu Judæ.

Judas (V)

V. JUDAS or Jude, sirnamed Barsabas, was sent from Jerusalem with Paul and Barnabas to the Church of Antioch, to acquaint it with the resolution which had been taken at the Council of Jerusalem, [Acts xv. 22, 23. In the Year of J. C. 54. of the vulg. Æra 51. Acts i. 13. Acts xv. 32, 33.] concerning the observances of the Law. Some are of opinion, that this Jude was the brother of Joseph, sirnamed also Barsabas, who was proposed together with Matthias to fill up the place of the traitor Judas. S. Luke tells us, that Jude Barsabas was a Prophet, and one of the first among the brethren. It is believed that he was one of the seventy Disciples. After he had been some time at Antioch, he returned to Jerusalem. We know nothing more either of his life, birth, or death.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Judas (VI)

VI. JUDAS or Jude, sirnamed Thaddæus or Lebbæus, and the Zealot, is likewise called sometimes the Lord's brother, because he was, as is believed, the son of Mary, sister to the Blessed Virgin, and brother to S. James the Less, Bishop of Jerusalem. He was married and had children; for Hegesippus speaks of two Martyrs, who were his grand-sons. Nicephorus says, his wife's name was Mary. In the last supper, he asked Jesus, why he was to manifest himself to his Apostles, and not to the world. S. Paulinus tells us, that he preached in Lybia, and seems to say, that his body remained there. S. Jerom upon S. Matthew, chap. x. ver. 4. says, that after the Ascension he was sent to Edessa, to King Abgarus. The modern Greeks affirm likewise, that he preach'd in the city of Edessa, and throughout all Mesopotamia. Some will have it, that he preached likewise in Judea, Samaria, Idumea, Syria, and principally in Armenia and Persia. But we know no particulars of his life with any great certainty. We have a canonical Epistle written by him, which is addressed to no particular Church, but to all the faithful who are beloved by the Father, and called by the Son our Lord. It appears by the 17th verse of this Epistle, wherein he cites the second Epistle of S. Peter, and throughout the whole Letter wherein he imitates the expressions of this Prince of the Apostles, as already known to those he is speaking to, that it was his design to write to the converted Jews, who were scattered throughout all the Provinces in the East, in Asia Minor, and beyond the Euphrates. He contends against false teachers, who, as is believed, were the Gnosticks, Nicolaitans, and Simonians, who corrupted the sound doctrine, and disturbed the peace of the Church.

We do not know at what time this Epistle was written, but it was certainly penn'd after the appearance of those hereticks, whom we have mentioned; and S. Jude speaks of the Apostles, as persons who had been dead some time. He quotes the second Epistle of S. Peter, and alludes to S. Paul's second Epistle to Timothy. From whence it is determined, that it was not written till after the death of the Apostles S. Peter and S. Paul, and consequently after the 66th year of J.C. It is pretty credible, that he did not write it till after the destruction of Jerusalem. Some of the Ancients[1] have questioned its being canonical and authentick. Eusebius testifies, that it was very seldom quoted by Ecclesiastical writers: but he observes at the same time, that it was publickly read in many Churches. That which has contributed most to its being rejected by many is, that the Apostle cites the book of Enoch, or at least his prophecy. He cites also a particular fact of Moses's life, which is not to be met with in the canonical books of the Old Testamen, and is thought to have been taken out of an Apocryphal work intitled, The Assumption of Moses. The authorities which he borrows from these two books, were the reasons that for some time it was disputed, whether this Epistle should be received into the Canon of Scripture; but at length it was generally received, and has been so for many ages. S. Jude might know from some other places what he quotes of these Apocryphal writings; or, as he was inspired by the Holy Ghost, he might be able to distinguish the several truths which in these books were blended with many errors. See our Dissertations on the Book of Enoch, and upon the death of Moses.

Grotius was of opinion, that this Epistle was not S. Jude's the Apostle, but Judas's, the fifteenth Bishop of Jerusalem, who lived in the reign of Adrian; a little before the appearance of Barchochebas. He believes that these words, the brother of James, which we read in the beginning of this Epistle, were added by the transcribers; and that S. Jude would never have forgotten to have styled himself Apostle, which however he does not do: Lastly, that if it had been believed that this Epistle had been written by an Apos tle, it would have been received from the beginning. But this Author produces no proof of the supposed addition of these words, the brother of James: S. Peter, S. Paul, and S. John do not always insert their quality of Apostles in the front of their Epistles. Lastly, the doubts which some Churches have entertained concerning the genuine authority of this book, ought to be no more a prejudice against it, than the same suspicions with relation to other canonical books of the Old and New Testament.

There has been a spurious Gospel ascribed to S. Jude which was condemned by Pope Gelasius. We have already observed, that S. Jude had two grandsons who were martyred in the reign of Domitian. They were accused and carried to Rome, as persons descended from [Euseb.Hist. Eccl. l. iii. c. 19, 20.] David, and related to Christ. They who said our S. Jude preached at Edessa, and in Mesopotamia, seem to have confounded him with Thaddæus, one of the seventy Disciples, a person very different from the Apostle S. Jude. Thaddæus was indeed sent to Abgarus by S. Thomas, as Eusebius [Euseb. l. i. c. 13. and l. ii. c. 1. Hist. Eccl.] testifies in several places. Abdias, Fortunatus, Bede, and the Latin martyrologists inform us, that S. Jude suffered martyrdom, and was buried in Persia. Some of the Greeks say, that he died peaceably at Berytus. Their menologies, which place his festival on June the 19th, declare, that he was shot to death with arrows at Arara, probably in Armenia, where is mount Ararat, and the city of Ariaratha. The Armenians by tradition maintain, that he suffered martyrdom in their country.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Euseb. l. iii. c. 25. Hist. Eccl. Hieronym. de viris illustr. c. 4. Amphiloc. carm. ad Seleuc.

Judas (VII)

VII. JUDAS or Joiada, High Priest of the Jews after the Babylonish captivity. He was the son of Eliashib, and father of Jonathan. See Neh. xii. 10.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Judas (VIII)

VIII. JUDAS, whose name we read in chap. i. 10. of the second book of Maccabees, was perhaps Judas the Essenian, or Judas the son of Hircanus, and firnamed Aristobulus, whom we shall next speak of. We have no other knowledge of him, than as we read his name in the beginning of a letter from the senate of Jerusalem to Aristobulus, King Ptolemy's preceptor, written about the year of the world 3880, before J.C. 120, before the vulgar Æra 124.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Judas (IX)

IX. JUDAS, firnamed the Essenian, is taken notice of for the gift of Prophecy [Joseph. Antiq. l. xiii. c. 19.] with which he was endowed. He foretold that Antigonus the Asmonæan, brother to King Aristobulus, should be killed upon a certain day in Strato's tower. On the very day upon which he was to be put to death according to this Prophecy, this young Prince came to Jerusalem, very much elevated with a victory which he had just then obtained. Judas seeing him, said to his Disciples, I wish I were dead, since I must this day be a witness to the falshood of my predictions. How can Antigonus be killed to day at Strato's tower, which is at the distance of above a day's journey from this place? But he did not know that the spirit, which spoke in him, meant not Strato's tower upon the Mediterranean, where afterwards Cæsarea of Palestine was built, but another Strato's tower, which was in the palace, and where Antigonus was in reality killed soon after by King Aristobulus's orders.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Judas (X)

X. JUDAS, otherwise called Aristobulus, eldest son to John Hircanus. See III. Aristobulus.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Judas (XI)

XI. JUDAS, the son of Sarifæus joining with Matthias the son of Margalothus, perswaded his Scholars to pull down a golden Eagle, which Herod the great had ordered to be fixed upon one of the Temple gates. Joseph. Antiq. l. xvii. c. 8: and 11.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Judas of Gaulan (XII)

XII. JUDAS of Gaulan, or the Gaulanite, opposed the enrolment of the [Luke ii. 1. Acts v. 37.] people which was made by Cyrenius[1] in Judea; and raised a very great rebellion; pretending that the Jews were free, and ought to acknowledge no other dominion besides that of God[2]. Wherefore the followers of Judas chose rather to suffer all sorts of torments than to call any power whatsoever upon earth lord or master. The same Judas in the Acts of the Apostles is named Judas the Galileean. Gamaliel speaks of him in these terms, After Theudas rose up Judas of Galilee, in the days of the taxing, and drew away much people after him. He also perished, and all as many as obeyed him, were dispersed. Judas was a Galileean, a native of the city of Gamala in the Gaulanitis; whence he is indifferently called Judas the Galileean and Judas Gaulanites. And as this country was under the dominion of Herod, whereas Judea was subject to the Romans, the Jews called the followers of Judas the Gaulanite, Herodians, and by this name they are mentioned in the Gospel. See above, the article Herodians.

As to what Gamaliel says, that Judas perished with all those who followed him, he must have been ill informed of the state of Judas's party; since it is certain, that it subsisted long after Judas, and long after Gamaliel himself. The sect of the Herodians did not differ much from that of the Pharisees. It was distinguished from it only by its excessive love of liberty. It produced the two factions of the Sicarii or murderers and Zealots, who having kindled the flame of rebellion throughout all Judea, were the cause of the destruction of Jerusalem, and of the whole country. See Joseph. Antiq. l. xviii. c. 1, 2. We do not know either the time or manner of Judas the Gaulanite's death.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. On the banishment of Archelaus to Vienne in Gaul, Augustus having appointed Publius Sulpitius Quirinus (who according to the Greek way of writing that name is by S. Luke called Cyrenius) to be president of Syria, sent him into the East to reduce the country which Archelaus had hitherto reigned over, into the form of a Province; and made Coponius procurator of Judea. The regestring of every man's possession had been made eleven years before by Sentius Saturninus, but the laying and levying of the taxes according to it, was not put in execution till that country was reduced into the form of a Province by Cyrenius then Governour of Syria. The raising of these taxes was opposed by many of the Jews, who were headed by this Judas of Galilee. Prid. Connect. &c. Part ii. Book ix.

Joseph. Antiq. l. xviii. c. 12. In the year of J. C. 10, and 7, of the vulgar Æra.

Judas (XIII)

XIII. JUDAS, S. Paul's host at Damascus; Acts ix. 9, 11. We know nothing particularly of his life.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Judas (XIV)

XIV. JUDAS or JUDAH sirnamed the holy, in Hebrew, Haccados, author of the Mishna, was son to Simon the just, an eminent Jewish Doctor. Judah was head or Rector of the School of Tiberias in Galilee, and was advanc'd to the dignity of president of the Sanhedrim which was held in the same city. He was acknowledged Prince of his nation, and lived under three Emperors, who were favourable to the Jews, namely Antoninus Pius, Marcus Aurelius, and Commodus. The first took possession of the Empire in 138, and the second died in the year of Jesus Christ 194. So that his age may be fixed to the [Vide Ganz. Chron.] middle of the second Century. It is affirm'd, that he came into the world upon the very day when Akiba died, who was, as it were, the setting sun to the Jewish Nation, but at the same time another sun as it were rose, to spread light throughout Israel. According to this account the birth of Judah may be supposed to have happened in the year of Jesus Christ 135 or 136, which is that of the taking Bether, and the death of Akiba.

The place of Judah's death was Tzippari, situated upon a mountain of Galilee, which had formerly been considerable. Some believe that here certain authors, supported by the authority of the spurious Hegesippus, declared Anne the mother of the blessed Virgin, and Hermanna sister to Elizabeth, to have been both born. Simeon the father of Judah circumcised his son the eighth day, conformably to the Law, and contrary to the prohibition of the Emperor Adrian, who had forbidden this practice. Simeon was cited before the Emperor, but before he appeared he went to the house, where the mother of young Antoninus lived, who was then in his cradle, borrowed this young Prince, and left his own son in his room, presented him to Adrian, and proved to him, that the accusation form'd against him was false, since the child whom he saw, was not circumcised. Adrian believed this was young Judah, and dismissed the party accused. At his return Simeon went back to the Princess's house, restored her son to her, and took his own. This is an impertinent story, and against all rules; but such as it is you have it.

Some sirname Judah, Holy by reason of the private circumcision which he then received: others maintain, that he deserved it on the score of the innocency and purity of his life. We do not know particulars enow of it, to judge in this case; and besides this is not a proper place to go to the bottom of this matter, we have nothing to say of it but what relates to the Mishna, whereof he was the Author. Till that time all traditions received from Doctors and Prophets were preserved in people's memory. The Rabbins taught vivâ voce in the Schools, and every one making his particular glosses, additions, or defalcations after his own manner, they began to multiply infinitely, and to be changed insensibly by passing through so many mouths. The Sages resolved therefore to reduce them into writing, and Judah was chosen for this employment. Another reason which still further determin'd them was, the calamities they suffered under Adrian, the dispersion of their Doctors, the ruin of their Schools, the loss of their Books, and the disaster of their Nation. How could the unity of opinions be preserved, and the depositum of traditions, while they were at this distance, and in the midst of so many misfortunes ?

Judah therefore took upon him to prepare the Body of the Jewish civil and canon Law, and to form a kind of course, and system of them, which might be exactly followed in the Schools belonging to their Nation. He called his work Mishna, or second Law. He divided it into six parts, or into six Books, every one whereof contain'd several Treatises. There are sixty three of them in all. Under these sixty three heads, he ranged very methodically all that the tradition of their ancestors had hitherto transmitted relating to tradition and the Law. No sooner did this Book appear, but it was received with profound veneration by all the Jews. The learned men among them, made it the subject of their studies, and the principal of them both in Judea and Babylon set about commenting it. These comments, with the text of the Mishna, compose the two Talmuds, that is to say, that of Babylon, and that of Jerusalem. See hereafter the article Mishna and that of the Talmud. Bartolocci believes, that Judah the Holy died in the year of Jesus Christ 194. M. Basnage places his death in 210 or 215. Rabbi Gamaliel was his son and successor in the dignity of Prince of his Nation.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Judea

JUDEA, a province of Asia called anciently the Land of Canaan or Palestine, and afterwards, the Land of promise, the land of Israel; and lastly Judea. It was not named thus till after the Jews returned from the Babylonish captivity; because then the Tribe of Judah was the principal, and almost only one which made any figure in the country; and the territories belonging to the Israelites of the other Tribes were almost all possessed by the Samaritans, Idumeans, Arabians and Philistines. The Jews, when they returned from the captivity, began to settle again about Jerusalem, and in the division of Judah, from whence they spread afterwards over the rest of the country. See under the article Canaan and Canaanites, what we have said of the ancient inhabitants of Judea. The Philistines were strangers in this country; they came thither from the Isle of Caphtor or Crete. See Caphtor. The Phœnicians, who afterwards kept their ground there, even after the entrance of the Hebrews, were some remains of the ancient Canaanites. These two people, the Philistines to the South, and the Phœnicians to the North, possessed almost all the coasts of the Mediterranean. The Jews were masters of the rest of the country, having Libanus and Syria to the North, Arabia Petræa and South Edom to the South, the mountains of Gilead, East Edom, Arabia Deserta, the Ammonites and Moabites to the East; the Philistines, Phœnicians, and the Mediterranean to the West. The river Jordan divided the whole country into two almost equal parts, and taking its rise at the foot of Libanus, run from North to South, as far as the dead Sea, in which it lost itself.

Judea, before the arrival of the Hebrews, was governed by Canaanitish Kings, who exercised an absolute power, each in his respective city. When Joshua had made a conquest of it, he governed it as the Lord's vicegerent, and the executioner of his orders. The Elders succeeded Joshua for about fifteen years. After which the Israelites fell into a kind of anarchy, which lasted seven or eight years. Afterwards they were governed by Jugdes for three hundred and seventeen years; and last of all by Kings, from Saul to the Babylonish captivity, for the space of five hundred and seven years. After the return of the Jews from the captivity; Judea continued subject to the Kings of Persia, then to Alexander the Great, and after that to his successors. Sometimes to the Kings of Syria, sometimes to the Kings of Egypt; paying nevertheless a great deal of deference, in matters of private government, to the High Priest, and Princes of David's family[1]. From the time of the Maccabees maintaining the Religion, and re-establishing the affairs of the Jews, they continued in possession of the sovereign authority till the reign of Herod the Great, about an hundred and thirty five years[2]. A List of the Governors who governed Judea for the Romans: See Governors. A List of the Judges who governed Judea: See Judges. A List of the Kings who governed Judea, see the article Kings. A List of the High Priests who governed Judea. See Priests.

[Deut. viii. 7. Isai. xxxvi. 17. Exod. iii. 8. Ezek. xx. 6, &c. See Numb. xiii. 28.] As to the quality of the country, nothing can be added to the description which the Scripture gives us of it. That represents it to be one of the most beautiful and fruitful countries in the world, a country flowing with milk and honey. Josephus speaks of it almost in the same manner[3]. Travellers relate with admiration the great fertility of certain parts of it. It is true there are some dry and stony places, and in general it is at present very barren; but this proceeds from the want of inhabitants to manure it. Judea is almost every where high land, but its mountains are not too high, and almost all of them were formerly well cultivated, and abounded with olive-gardens, vineyards, and other trees[4]. The pastures there are excellent, and the fruits extremely fine. There is great plenty of water; and tho the rains fall but seldom, the night dews supply the want of them, and moisten the plains and fields[5].

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

This State lasted about 369 years, from the return from the Captivity in 3468, to the Government of Judas Maccabæus in 3837.

From the year of the World 3837, which is the year wherein Judas Maccabæus began to govern, to the year 3965, which is the year wherein Herod was declared King by the Senate.

Joseph. Antiq. l. xv. c. 5. & de Bello l. iii. c. 2. 18. & 26. & Antiq. l. viii. c. 2. & Hecatæn. apud Joseph. l. i. contra Appion, p. 1049.

Translators' note. See Maundrell's Journey from Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 65, &c.

See M. Reland's Palestin. l. i. c. 57. p. 380, &c.

Judgment

[משפט Mishpat. Κρίσις, Judicium.] JUDGMENT, in Hebrew, Mischpat; in Greek, Krisis; in Latin, Judicium. These terms have different significations in Scripture. They are taken 1. for the power of judging absolutely. Judicium [Deut. i. 17.] est Dei, the power of judging belongs to God; Judges are but his vicegerents: God hath given his Son authority to execute judgment, because he is the son of God. Judicium [John. v. 27.] datum est illis: (Apostolis) Judgment was given to the Apostles.

Judicium is taken for rectitude, equity, and the other good qualities of a Judge. Deus, Judicium tuum Regi da, & justitiam [Ps. lxxi. 2.] tuam filio Regis: Give the King thy judgments, and thy righteousness to the King's son. Honor regis judicium diligit: The honour [Ps. xcviii. 4.] and glory of a King shine forth in the rectitude of his judgments, and in his love for equity. Justitia & judicium præparatio [Ps. lxxxviii. 15.] sedis tuæ: Justice and equity are the support of thy throne.

Judicium signifies very often, the vindictive justice and rigour of God's judgments. [Exod. xii. 12.] For example, In cunctis Diis Egypti faciam judicia: I will exercise my vengeance, my judgments upon all the Gods of Egypt. Quando facies de persequentibus [Ps. cxviii. 84.] me judicium? When wilt thou avenge me of my persecutors? When wilt thou exercise thy judgments against them? Cum feceris judicia tua, in terra, justitiam [Isai. xxvi. 9.] dicent habitatores orbis: When thou shalt exercise thy judgments, thy severity upon the Earth, man will learn to practise righteousness.

Facere judicium & justitiam, denotes the exercise of all virtues; justice, equity, truth and fidelity. Scio quod Abraham præcepturus sit filiis suisut faciant judicium [Gen. xviii. 19.] & justitiam: I know that Abraham will charge his children to act according to equity and justice. Feci judicium & justitiam: [Ps. cxviii. 121.] I have practised justice and equity. Expectavi ut facerent judicium, & ecce iniquitas; [Isai. v. 7.] & justitiam, & ecce clamor: I expected that my vineyard, my inheritance, my people, would exercise judgment and equity, and I see none but unjust actions; that they should practise righteousness, and I hear only the cries of their iniquities.

Judicium is put often for the Laws of God, and particularly for judicial Laws. [Exod. xxi. 1.] Hæc sunt judicia, quæ proponis eis: These are the ordinances which thou shalt propose to them. Narravit Moyses populo omnia [Exod. xxiv. 3.] verba Domini, atq; judicia: Moses proposed to the people all that the Lord had said to him, and all his commandments. Non fecit taliter omni nationi, & judicia [Ps. cxlvii. 20.] sua non manifestavit eis: He has not treated all nations in this manner, nor hath he made them acquainted with his judgments, his ordinances, &c.

Judicium is likewise put for custom, usage. Miserere mei secundum judicium [Ps. cxvii. 132.] diligentium nomen tuum: Have pity upon me, and treat me, as thou art wont to treat those who love thee. This expression, secundum judicium, according to custom, is much more frequent in the Hebrew, than in the vulgate, where it is translated, ut assolet, ut decet, pro more, &c. Levit. v. 10. Hebr. Faciet holocaustum secundum judicium: He shall offer a burnt-offering according to the custom, &c.

[Ps. cxi. 5.] 7. Judicium is put for discretion, wisdom, prudence. Disponet sermones suos in judicio: He shall regulate his discourses with wisdom. Jurabis: vivit Dominus in [Jerem. iv. 2.] veritate, & in justitia: Thou shalt swear: the Lord liveth in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness: that is to say, in truth, so as to say nothing false; in judgment, so as to discern when it is proper to swear; in righteousness: so as to avoid the doing wrong to thy neighbour. But in this passage, in judicio, may very well mean equity, justice, &c.

The High Priest's pectoral was called Pectoral judicii, and sometimes simply Judicium. Aaron gestabit judicium filiorum Israel: Aaron shall wear the judgment of the children of Israel; that is to say, the pectoral, which is the sign of his authority over the children of Israel. The High Priest was the chief person concerned in the administration of Justice among the Hebrews.

[Exod. xxviii. 15, 29. Exod. xxviii. 36. Heb. ix. 27. Joel. iii. 2.] 9. Judicium is taken for the last judgment. Statutum est hominibus semel mori: post hoc autem judicium: It is appointed that all men should die at one time or other, and that judgment should follow. In Joel the Lord says, that he will gather together all the nations in the valley of Jehoshaphat, and that he will enter into judgment with them, in order to avenge his people, whom they have oppressed. See above, Jehoshaphat; and the following article, the Valley of Jehoshaphat. Solomon [Eccl. xi. 9.] says, Scito quod pro omnibus his adducet te Deus in judicium: Know that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment. Non intres in judicium cum servo tuo, quia non justificabitur in conspectu tuo omnis [Ps. cxlii. 2. 4 Esdr. xiv. 35.] vivens: Enter not into judgment with thy servant; for in thy sight shall no man living be justified. Judicium post mortem veniet, *quando iterum revivis*cemus: Judgment shall come after death, when we shall rise again. Any one may see S. Matthew xxv. 31, &c. and S. Paul's first Epistle to the Thessalonians, and that of S. Jude upon the last judgment, and the signs that are to precede it.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Judgment of Zeal

JUDGMENT of Zeal. The Jews pretend, that in particular circumstances, where any one sees a Jew offending against the honour of God, violating the Law with impunity, blaspheming against God, his Temple, or Legislator; or even if any one sees an Heathen, who would ingage the people in irregularities, in Idolatry latry, or the breach of God's laws, they might with impunity kill such an one; and without any form of justice give a loose to their zeal and remove this scandal from amidst the people. They found this law upon the practice of Phinehas the son of Eleazer, who having seen an Israelite go into the tent of a Midianitish prostitute, [Numb. xxv. 6, &c.] took a javelin, followed them, and killed both the guilty persons in the very moment when they were committing the sin. They likewise cite the example of Mattathias the father of the Maccabees, who in his transport of zeal, killed an Israelite, while he was sacrificing to false Gods.

The inconveniences of this sort of judgment are very sensible to all: an inconsiderate multitude, a provoked Israelite, or a fanatick, shall believe themselves allowed to kill any man whom they shall think an enemy to the interests of God and religion. Examples of this are but too frequent in history. It was with this mistaken zeal that they stoned S. Stephen, that they laid [Acts vii. 58. Acts xxi. 27, and Acts xxii. 22, 23. Acts xxiii. 12.] hands on S. Paul, with a resolution to put him to death, and that more than forty men made a vow, that they would neither eat nor drink till they killed him. S. James Bishop of Jerusalem was executed in the same manner, and Jesus Christ had not escaped death in the Temple, upon a certain day when they imagined that he uttered blasphemy, if he had not concealed himself, and retired out of the crowd.

[John viii. 19. Gen.xiv.7.] The Fountain of Judgment, is the same as the fountain of Kadesh, to the south of the land of promise. The waters of Kadesh were called the waters of Strife, because Moses was then contradicted and provoked by the murmurs of the Israelites; and the fountain of Judgment, because God displayed his wrath against Moses, and declared to him that he should not enter into the promised Land, because he had not honoured him in the Eyes of the children of Israel. The Rabbins will have it, that the name of fountain of Judgment came from the neighbouring people's assembling in this place, to receive justice, and terminate their differences.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Judges

JUDGES, in Hebrew Shophetim. They who govern'd the Israelites from Joshua [Gr. Κρίται, Judices.] to Saul were called Judges. The Carthaginians, a Colony of the Tyrians, had likewise Magistrates or Governors, [T. Liv. Decad. iii. l. 7. Suffetes summus erat Poenis Magistratus.] whom they called Suffetes or Sophetim, with an authority like those of the Hebrews, almost equal to that of Kings. Some are of opinion that the Archontes among the Athenians, and Dictators among the Romans, were the same almost as the Judges among the Hebrews. Grotius compares the government of the Hebrews under the Judges, to that which was in Gaul, Germany, and Britain, before the Romans changed it. The Office of Judges was not hereditary among the Israelites. These Governors were no more than God's vicegerents, for he was their only true Monarch: he it was who created the Judges, and gave them all their authority. When the Hebrews desired a King, such as other neighbouring people had, God said to Samuel, They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them. When the crown was offered to Gideon, and his posterity after him, his answer was, I will not rule over [Judg. viii. 23.] you, neither shall my son rule over you; the Lord shall rule over you.

The dignity of Judges was for life, but their succession was not always constant and without interruption. There were Anarchies from time to time, or intervals, during which, the Commonwealth was without rulers and Judges. There were likewise pretty long intervals of servitude and oppression, under which the Hebrews groan'd, while strangers had the dominion over them, and were without either Judges or any Governors. Altho God himself in a particular manner, and by some express declaration of his will, did regularly appoint those, whom he was determined to make Judges of the Israelites: nevertheless the people upon some occasions, without waiting for a particular revelation, chose him, who appeared to them most proper to deliver them from oppression. For example, when the Israelites beyond Jordan chose Jephthah to conduct them in the war against the Ammonites. As it often happened, that the oppressions, which occasioned a recourse to the assistance of Judges, were not felt over all Israel, the power of Judges likewise, who were chosen or raised up to procure deliverance from servitudes of this kind, did not extend over all the people, but over that country only which they had delivered. For example, we do not find that Jephthah exercised his authority on this side Jordan; nor that Barak, for instance, exercised his beyond this river.

The verb to Judge, and the noun Judge, sometimes signify in Scripture to reign, to exercise sovereign authority over any people. Make us a King to judge us, said the Israelites to Samuel. Solomon begs of God such a measure of understanding, as was necessary to judge Israel. Jotham the son of Azariah King of Judah governed the Palace in his father's room, who was a leper, and judged the people of the land. And Absalom, when he was making interest for the Crown, said, Oh that I were made judge in the land! Moreover, the authority of Judges was not inferior to that of Kings: it extended to affairs of peace and war. They decided causes with an absolute authority; but they had no power to make new laws, nor to impose new burdens upon the people. They were protectors of the Laws, defenders of Religion, and the avengers of all crimes, particularly of Idolatry; in other respects they were without pomp or splendor, without guards, train, or equipage, unless their own wealth was such, as might enable them to appear in a figure answerable to their dignity. The revenue of their employment, consisted in presents which were made them; they had no regular profits, and levied nothing upon the people. The time of the continuance of Judges from the death of Joshua to the beginning of Saul's reign, is three hundred thirty nine years. Here follows the chronological order of the Judges, and the several servitudes which the land lay under during this interval.

A list of the Judges in a

Chronological order.

Year of the world.

THE death of Joshua. 2585. The government of the elders for about fifteen years. 2592. An Anarchy of about seven years to 2592.

The history of Micah, the conquest of the city of Laish, by part of the Tribe of Dan, and the war undertaken by the eleven Tribes against Benjamin, are all refered to this time.

The first servitude under Chushamrishathaim King of Mesopotamia. It began in 2591, and lasted eight years to 2599. 2599. Othniel delivered Israel in the forty year after peace established in the land by Joshua.

A peace of about sixty two years, from the deliverance procured by Othniel, in 2599, to 2662. When the second servitude under Eglon King of the Moabites happened. It lasted eighteen years.

Ehud delivers Israel.

After him Shamgar governed, and the land was in peace till the eightieth year after the first deliverance procured by Othniel.

The third servitude under the Canaanites, which lasted twenty years, from 2699, to 2719. 2719. Deborah and Barak deliver the Israelites: from the deliverance procured by Ehud to the end of Deborah and Barak's government, were forty years.

Abimelech the natural son of Gideon is acknowledged King by the Shechemites. He puts to death seventy of his brethren; he reigns three years; from 2768 to 2771.

He died at the siege of Thebaz in Palestine. 2772. Tola after Abimelech governs for three and twenty years, from 2772 to 2795. 2795. Jair succeeds Tola, and governs two and twenty years; from 2795 to 2816. 2799. The fifth servitude under the Philistines, which lasted eighteen years from 2799 to 2817. 2817. The Death of Jair. 2817. Jephthah is chosen head of the Israelites beyond Jordan, he defeated the Ammonites, who oppressed them. Jephthah governs six years, from 2817 to 2823.

The death of Jephthah. 2830. Ibzan governs seven years; from 2823 to 2830. 2840. Elon succeeds Ibzan. He governs from 2830 to 2840.

Abdon judges Israel, eight years, from 2840 to 2848. 2848. The sixth servitude under the Philistines, which lasted forty years, from 2848 to 2888. 2848. Eli the High Priest of the race of Ithamar governed forty years, the whole time of the servitude under the Philistines. 2849. The birth of Samson. 2887. The death of Samson, who was judge of Israel during the judicature of Eli the High Priest.

The death of Eli, and beginning of Samuel's government, who succeeded him. 2909. The election and anointing of Saul, first King of the Hebrews.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

The Book of Judges

THE BOOK OF JUDGES, which the Church acknowledges as authentick and canonical, is by some ascribed to Phinehas, by others to Ezra, or Hezekiah; and by others to Samuel, or all the Judges, who wrote each the history of his time and judicature. But it appears to us to be the work of one single Author, who lived after the time of the Judges. A sensible proof of this opinion is this, that in the second chapter, [Judg. i. 21.] the tenth and following verses, he makes a short abridgement of the whole book, and gives a general Idea of it. There is something to be said for the opinion which attributes it to Samuel. 1. The Author lived at a time, when the Jebusites were still masters of Jerusalem, and consequently before David. 2. It appears that the Hebrew Commonwealth was then governed by Kings, since the Author observes in several places under the Judges, that then there was no King in Israel.

Notwithstanding there are some considerable difficulties urged against this opinion. For example, it is said in the Judges, chap. xviii. 30, 31. And the children of Dan made Jonathan and his Sons Priests in the Tribe of Dan, until the day of the captivity of the land. And they set them up Micah's graven image, which he made, all the time that the house of God was in Shiloh. The Tabernacle or house of God was not at Shiloh till about the time of Samuel's first appearance as a Prophet; for then it was brought from Shiloh and carried to the camp, where it was taken by the Philistines; and after this time it was sent back to Kirjath-jearim. As to the captivity of the Tribe of Dan, it can [1 Sam. iv. 4, 5, &c. 1 Sam. vi. 21, 22, &c.] scarce, one would think, be understood of any other than that which happened under Tigleth-pileser many hundred years after Samuel. And consequently he could not write this Book; unless it be acknowledged, that this passage was since added; which is no way incredible, since there are other proofs, and other examples of the like additions made to the text of the sacred writings.

[Deut. xvi. 18, and xvii. 8, 9. See likewise Ezek. xliv. 24. and Joseph. Antiq. l. x. c. ult.] Ordinary JUDGES for civil and religious affairs. Moses ordained, that Judges and Magistrates should be appointed in every city, to terminate the differences of the people, and that when any affair of greater consequence should happen, they should remove to the place which the Lord should choose, in order to examine there the difficulty before the Priests of Aaron's family, and before the Judge (or Prince of the people) at that time established by the Lord, and he requires all to acquiesce in their judgment upon pain of death. When Jehoshaphat King of Judah resolved upon reforming his dominions; he settled Judges in all the cities, to whom he recommended vigilance and Justice, as exercising the authority of God himself. He likewise set up two courts at Jerusalem, one consisting of Priests and Levites, and the other of the heads and families of Israel. The first had cognizance of the affairs which related to the Law, and the ceremonies of Religion; the second of the King's matters; that is to say, of civil affairs, and the interests of private persons. Such was the polity of the Hebrews before the captivity, as far as we can judge from the sacred books.

But the Jewish Doctors give us a very different idea of these Judges. They maintain, that there was an assembly at Jerusalem consisting of seventy two Judges. This assembly they call the Sanhedrim, which is a word formed with some variation from the Greek Synedrion. They believe that this Council has always subsisted in their nation, ever since the establishment of it by [Numb. xi. 16, 17.] Moses, when he appointed seventy two elders, to whom God communicated his Spirit, in order to assist him in the government of the people. But we are of opinion, that this settlement continued no longer than the time of Joshua's dividing the promised land, and that it was not restored till after the Maccabees. It was in being in our Saviour's time, and lasted, probably, till the destruction of the Temple, but not always with equal authority: for after the banishment of Archelaus, the Romans, having reduced Judea into a province, assumed the right of life and death to themselves alone. See hereafter, Sanhedrim.

As to the inferior courts, we have the following account of what they were in our Saviour's time from the Rabbins and interpreters. 1. There were three Judges in every city, who had the cognizance of lesser faults, such as theft, and the like. 2. There was another court composed of three and twenty Judges, who decided matters of importance and of a more criminal nature, and their sentences were such as generally affected the lives of persons, no causes being brought before them but such as deserved the penalty of death. 3. The great Sanhedrim was at Jerusalem, and had the cognizance of the most important affairs of state and religion, and of those which concerned the King and High Priest. Our Saviour is thought to have alluded to these two last Courts in the words following, Whosoever [Matth. v. 21, 22.] shall be angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the Judgment; [Ruth iv. 1.] that is to say, of the three and twenty Judges. And whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the Council; that is to say, of the great Sanhedrim. See our dissertation concerning the polity of the Hebrews, printed before the book of Numbers. The common place where the Judges assembled was the city gate. See above, Gate. The Sanhedrim met in one of the chambers of the Temple.

[Mishna Tract. Sanhedrin. tom. 4.] I shall here add some remarks taken from the Mishna, and the Commentators of it, relating to the different Judges which were in Palestine, and their jurisdiction. The Rabbins agree, that in every city, where there were reckoned to be at least an hundred persons, there was to be a court held, consisting of three Judges, before whom causes of lesser consequence were pleaded, concerning loss, gain, and restitution. These three Judges had a right only to condemn criminals to be whipt. This tribunal was consulted about the intercalation of months. The three Judges might confer imposition of hands, and receive doctors: they might install Judges, with these words: Thou Rabbi, such an one, hast been honoured with the power of judging and instituting penalties. But for the enjoyment of this privilege it was necessary that at least one of the three Judges had received ordination, that he might have power to give it unto others. The parties named their Judges: one of the parties chose his Judge; the other named a second, and these two Judges took a third, with whom they decided causes.

Josephus gives us a different idea of the polity of the Jews[1]; he says that Moses ordained seven Judges of known virtue to be established in every city, or a body of senators composed of seven Judges, and to these seven Judges two ministers were added out of the tribe of Levi; so that according to this Author, there were in every city seven lay Judges, and two ministers of the order of Levites. Now Josephus certainly is more to be credited in matters of this nature than the Rabbins, because he is much more antient, and was better acquainted with things than the Jewish doctors. Josephus saw the commonwealth of the Hebrews in being, and in a flourishing condition: and the Rabbins came not till long after the destruction of the Temple, and the dispersion of the nation.

The second tribunal was composed of three and twenty Judges, who gave sentence in capital causes, and condemned men to death, and beasts that had wounded any man. I do not find this number of Judges appointed either in Moses or in the sacred Authors. Josephus speaks nothing of them: he says only, that if the seven Judges here mentioned found themselves not to be sufficiently qualified to decide any cause brought before them, they then refer'd it to the High-Priest in [Joseph. loco citato.] the holy city. It may not be improper to represent the manner wherein the Judges of this court were seated, because having some relation to that of the great Sanhedrim, this may be of use to give a more a Ἀρχέτωσαν δὲ καθ᾽ ἑκάστην πόλιν ἄνδρες ἑπτά——Ἑκάστῃ δὲ ἀρχῇ δύο ἄνδρες ὑπηρέται διδόσθωσαν ἐκ τῆς τῶν Λευϊτῶν φυλῆς. Jos. Antiq. l. iv. c. ult. p. 122. exact idea of it, and explain the opinions of the Jewish doctors.

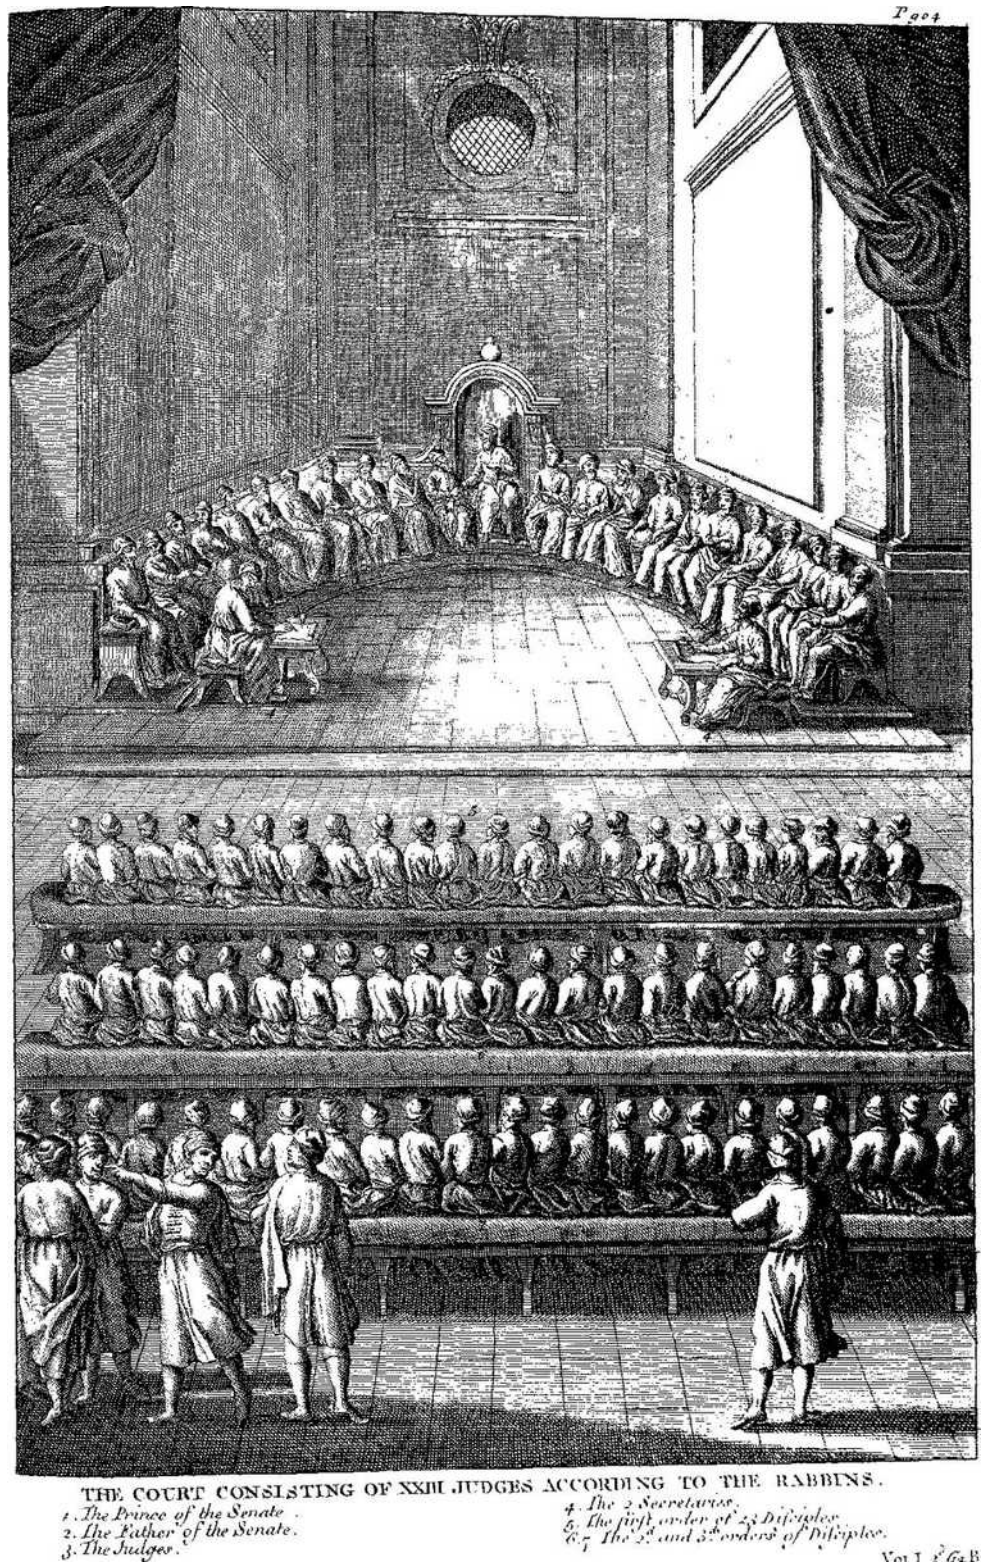
The three and twenty Judges made a semi-circle, the President was seated in the midst, whom they called the Prince of the Senate; his merit and wisdom raised him to this dignity. The father of the Senate was seated at his right hand, and held the second rank; but this charge was imagined by the talmudist Doctors. Every one of the three and twenty Judges took his place at the right and left according to his rank: some say there were three secretaries, one for collecting the votes of those who absolved; the second to gather the votes of those who condemn'd; and the third received both the one and the other. The three orders of Disciples were placed on forms at the bottom of the Hall, every one according to his age and capacity. They brought thither the ablest men from all parts of Judea, removing them from other courts to this of Jerusalem composed of three and twenty Judges; they were placed at first in the lowest class, and the scholars rose afterwards by degrees to the quality of Judges. By this description it appears, that the Rabbins designed to give a high Idea of their magistracy and magistrates. Notwithstanding people seem not inclinable to prefer their authority to that of Josephus, who quite oversets all these ideas.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages



Ἀρχέτωσαν δὲ καθ' ἑκάστην πόλιν ἄνδρες ἑπτά —— Ἑκάστῃ δὲ ἀρχῇ δύο ἄνδρες ὑπηρέται διδόσθωσαν ἐκ τῆς τῶν Λευιτῶν φυλῆς. Jos. Antiq. l. iv. c. ult. p. 122.

Judith

JUDITH, of the tribe of Reuben, daughter of Merari, and the widow of Manasseh, has made herself celebrated for the deliverance of Bethulia besieged by Holofernes. See what we have already said in the article Holofernes, and in that of Bethulia. Judith after she became a widow, [Judith viii. 4, 5, 6, &c.] made a private chamber for herself upon the top of her house, where she remained shut up with the young woman who attended her. She put on sackcloth upon her loins, she fasted every day of her life, except the Sabbath, and other festival days observed by her nation. She was of an uncommon beauty, and her husband left her great riches, a great number of servants, and a great estate in lands, upon which she had numerous flocks of sheep, and herds of oxen. She was very much esteemed by all the world for her piety and virtue, and no one said the least thing to her disadvantage.

Being informed that Ozias, who was the first man in the city Bethulia, had promised to deliver it up within five days to Holofernes, she sent for Chabris and Carmis, elders of the people, and said to them, has Ozias then consented to surrender the the city to the Assyrians unless we are relieved in five days! And now who are you that have tempted God this day? This is not the way to obtain his mercy, but rather to stir up his wrath, and inflame his anger. But let us now have recourse to the clemency of the Lord, let us humble ourselves before him; let us acknowledge that we are intirely his, and wait with patience the effects of his mercy. She added, I exhort you to pray, and recommend all these things to the Lord. For my part, I have resolved to depart this night out of the city with my maidservant; you shall stand at the city gate, you shall open it and let me go, without enquiring after my design, and in some days, I will come my self with an account of what I have been doing. They took their leave of her, and departed.

THE COURT CONSISTING OF XXIII JUDGES ACCORDING TO THE RABBINS.4. The 2 Secretaries. 1. The Prince of the Senate. 2. The Father of the Senate. 3. The Judges.

[Judith ix. 1, 2, 3, &c.] Judith after this, went into her closet; and being covered with sackcloth she put ashes upon her head, and prostrating herself before the Lord, she prayed, begging of God that he would please to humble Holofernes, and the other enemies of Israel, protect his people from the danger which threatned them, and give her charms sufficient to affect Holofernes, constancy enough to despise him, and fortitude enough to destroy [Judith x. 1, 2, &c.] him. When she had finished her prayer she got up, came down from the plat -form into her house, then she took off her sackcloth, laid aside her widows weeds, washed, perfumed, and combed herself, put on a fine suit of head clothes, dressed herself in a very rich habit, put on sandals of great value, bracelets, pendants to her ears, and rings.

In short, she set herself out in all her ornaments; and God still farther encreased her beauty, that she might appear in the eyes of all with an incomparable lustre. She loaded her maid with provisions necessary for the journey, and went with her to the city gate, where Ozias and the elders waited for her. They opened the gates for her without asking any questions, being satisfied with wishing success to her journey, and good resolution.

As she came down from the mountain, the advanced guards of the Assyrians met her; and having asked her whither she was going? she said to them, I am fled from Bethulia, knowing very well that you must soon take and pillage the city, and I am now come in order to discover all the secrets of the Jews to Prince Holofernes, and to put him in a way of taking the town, without costing him so much as one man. They carried her therefore to Holofernes's tent. As soon as this General saw her, he was captivated; and his officers said, certainly the Hebrews are not so contemptible a people, since [Judith xi. 1, 2, 3, &c.] they have such beautiful women. It is very well worth making war with them, if it were only to get possession of such lovely slaves. Judith fell prostrate at the feet of Holofernes, who ordering her to be raised by his people, said to her, Be of good courage, and fear not, for I never did any prejudice to any one who was willing to submit voluntarily to King Nebuchadnezzar. But tell me what at present induced you to come to me.

Judith answered him, that she had fled from the Hebrews, first, because she knew that God being provoked by their sins, was resolved to abandon them to their enemies; and secondly, because, as they were reduced to the last extremity, she thought she could not any way provide with more certainty for her own preservation, nor do him a greater service in the present conjuncture, than to inform him of the state of these things. Holofernes replied, God hath favoured us in a particular manner, by thus sending you to us. If your God should make me master of the whole nation of the Hebrews, as you encourage me to hope; he shall likewise be my God, and you shall have great honours confer'd on you in the house of Nebuchadnezzar, and will be famous over all the earth. Then he commanded her to be conducted to the place, where his treasures were, and that she should be served from his own table. But Judith entreated him, that she might eat no other provisions than such as she had brought, lest she should be polluted by eating any strange food. She desired likewise, as they went into the apartment appointed for her, that she might have the liberty of going out in the night, and before it was day, in order to perform her devotions, which was allowed her.

lived four days in this manner, without being at all distrusted when she was seen to go out of the camp, and to return again after having washed herself in a fountain, and prayed.

[Judith xiii. 1, 2, 3.] But on the fourth day, Holofernes sent Bagoas his eunuch to invite her to pass the night with him, with a design to spend it in eating, drinking, and diverting himself. Judith went decked with all her ornaments. She eat and drank not from Holofernes's table, but what her maid had prepared for her; and Holofernes was so transported with joy at the sight of her, that he drank more wine than he had ever done at any entertainment in his life. The evening being come, his servants returned in haste, every man to his own house; and Bagoas shut the chamber doors and departed. Judith was left alone there with her maid, and Holofernes with excess of wine slept very soundly. Judith therefore therefore appointed her maid to stand without and watch, and at the same time having put up her prayer to God, she took down Holofernes's sabre, which hung upon a pillar at his bed's head, and having drawn it out of the scabbard, she seized him by the hair of the head, and said, strengthen me this day, O Lord. Then she struck him twice upon the neck, cut off his head, wrapt him up in the curtains of the bed, gave Holofernes's head to her maid, and directed her to put it in her bag. After which they both went out according to their custom, as if they were going to pray without the camp.

[Judith xiv.] As soon as they came to the city gate, Judith cried aloud, Open the gates, for God is with us, and hath signalized his power in Israel. They accordingly opened them, and the whole city got about her. She placed herself upon an eminence, shewed them the head of Holofernes, and told them in few words what she had done. Achior was sent for, to whom also they shewed the head of Holofernes. At length Judith spoke to the elders, and all the people, in these terms: Hang this head upon the walls, and as soon as the sun rises, let every one arm himself, and sally out with great noise, but do not descend so low as the bottom of the mountain, make a shew only as if you intended to attack the enemy. Then it will be necessary for the guards to wake the general, and when they find him headless, and bathed all over in his blood, they will be in a consternation, and betake themselves to flight. This is the time for you to march boldly against them; for the Lord will deliver them into your hands.

[Judith xvi.] This advice was followed, and the thing happened as Judith had foretold. As soon as the Assyrians knew that Holofernes was killed, they thought of nothing else but flying; and the Hebrews with loud cries pursued them. At the same time Ozias sent to all the cities of Israel, to inform them of what had passed, that they might fall upon the Assyrians from all quarters. The defeat was extraordinary, and the whole country was enriched with the spoils which were taken upon this occasion. The High-Priest Jehoiakim came from Jerusalem to Bethulia, to compliment Judith upon the victory, which she had procured for Israel. Every thing which they thought belonged to Holofernes they gathered together, his clothes, gold, silver and precious stones, and gave them to Judith. Hereupon this pious widow sung an hymn to the honour of God, as a thanksgiving to him, who was the author of these blessings; and taking all the arms of Holofernes, which the people had presented to her, and the curtain of his bed, she consecrated all of them to the Lord, as a monument of so great a benefit. The name of Judith became afterwards very celebrated in Israel. Upon feast days she appeared in publick with great glory, and after having dwelt an hundred and five years in her husband's house at Bethulia, and made her maid free, she died, and was buried with her husband at Bethulia; and all the people lamented her seven days. The day on which this victory was obtained, was placed by the Hebrews among their festivals. Several learned men are of opinion, that there is no other festival to be met with in commemoration of Judith's victory, beside that which is celebrated for the dedication or renovation of the Temple by Judas Maccabæus on the 25th of Casleu. Leo of Modena, and the Jewish calendar published by Sigonius, [Grot. Cornel. á Lapide, Bellarmin. Salian. Torniel. Part iii. c. 9. Sigon. l. iii. c. 17. de Repub. Hebr.] place it on this day.

The greatest difficulty proposed relating to the Book of Judith, consists in fixing the time wherein the history which it includes, was transacted. The Greek and Syriac seem to prove, that it was after the Jews returned from the captivity of Babylon. The Latin text of the Vulgate may be explained, as refering to the time preceding this captivity: both one and the other labour under great difficulties, in what manner soever we understand it, and in what time soever we place the period of this history. We shall here give a short account of the two systems or opinions, one whereof maintains, that the history of Judith passed before; the other, not till after the captivity. These two opinions are farther subdivided and diversified in a manner which we shall not particularly examine; for this would take up too long and too nice an enquiry.

To remove all difficulties, and answer perfectly all objections which may be formed against this story, seems impossible, what side of the question soever we take, and what system soever we follow. Neither sacred nor profane history, in the time of Manasseh or in that of Zedekiah, either before or after the captivity, say any thing of a King of Niniveh named Nebuchadonozor, who in the twelfth and seventeenth year of his reign conquered a King of the Medes called Arphaxad. It would be very hard to find at this particular time an High Priest of the Jews, whose name was Joachim or Eliakim. Lastly, we should always meet with almost invincible difficulties, whenever we would reconcile the Greek text and the Syriac with the Latin of S. Jerom, and would scan every thing relating to the Geography and other circumstances of this recital. Nor would there be, perhaps, less, were we to adhere only to the Vulgate, and reject the Greek, Syriac, and old Italick Versions.

This is not the only history wherein we meet with difficulties, whether in proper names, dates, or other particulars. It is very usual in the Histories of the East, to find one and the same Prince described under different names in profane and sacred Authors, in Greek and Hebrew Writers, and even in the historians of the country. The learned do not think this at all strange. Thus whether Nabuchodonozor in Judith be called Saosduchinus, or Cambyses, or Xerxes, no one ought to be surprized, no more than to see the name of Phraartes, or any other name of a Median King, to be met with in Herodotus, or any other Greek historian, given to Arphaxad. We reckon therefore these difficulties as resolved already, supposing the name to be the only thing in question.

There is another thing of more consequence to be cleared up, before we proceed farther in this matter, and this is, to know what text to stick to; the Greek or Latin; for as to the Syriac, no one doubts but it was taken from the Greek, and I confess sincerely, that if I were to read the Greek only, I should believe that the story of Judith was translated and written after the captivity; but if we follow the Latin, it may be placed before the Babylonish captivity. The question is therefore, which of the two texts should have the preference. The Greek text is very antient, some suppose it to be Theodotion's who lived under Commodus, who did not begin to reign till the year of Jesus Christ 180: but it is of greater antiquity; for it is cited by Clemens Romanus in his epistle to the Corinthians, written above an hundred and twenty years before. The Syriac is likewise very antient, and translated from some Greek text more correct than that we have at present, but the same as to substance.

The Latin Italick version, or the old Vulgate, is made likewise from the Greek; but it is very defective. S. Jerom's Vulgate, which the Church has acknowledged for authentick, was translated from a Chaldee text, which S. Jerom took to be the genuine original of Judith. He undertook this translation at the request of Paula and Eustochium, but he leaves us matter for dispute, and much perplexity, when he says in his preface, that he rendred the sense without [Hieron. Præfat. in Judith.] adhering to the letter, and that he suppressed the faulty variations which were to be found in different copies. Magis sensum è sensu, quam ex verbo verbum transferens, multorum codicum varietatem

vitiosissimam amputavi, sola ea, quæ intelligentiâ integrâ in verbis Chaldæis

VOL. I. in venire potui, Latinis expressi. S. Jerom without doubt had no great quantity of Chaldee copies; it was not there that he suppressed the faulty variations, but in Latin copies, and he left nothing in his translation but what he found intelligible in the Chaldee. He had therefore the old Latin version before him; from this he pared off what was superfluous, and left all that he found agreeing with the Chaldee; in all probability he added likewise what was wanting; so that his version is rather a reform of the old, than a translation altogether new; and in reality we still observe some words in it, which are taken from the old Italick, and are not borrowed from the Greek: for example; Unxit se myro optimo, Judith x. 3. She anointed herself with excellent perfume: and in ch. ix. 13. Percuties eum labiis charitatis meæ. Thou shalt wound him with the lips of my love; instead of labiis fallaciæ meæ, with the discourses wherewith I shall endeavour to deceive him. [Judith. Grec. ix. 13] The ambgiuity proceeds from the Greek, which reads apates, deceit, instead of agapes, love, as he read it, whose translation S. Jerom had before him.

And as in these translations, which are made with some latitude and without keeping strictly to the original, the only care of the Translators seem'd to be to express the sense, and make their Author intelligible, they sometimes use more liberty than ordinary, and sometimes lay themselves under greater restraints; it were to be wished, either that S. Jerom in the book of Judith had followed the same method which he observed in his other translations, that is to say, that he had kept literally to his text, or that he had apprized us, how far he had carried the liberty taken by him in his version, wherein he is contented, Magis sensum è sensu, quam ex verbo verbum transferre; for who ever told us that he suppressed nothing in the Chaldee, or left nothing in the vulgate, which ought to be expunged out of it? As the Chaldee text which S. Jerom had, has not been delivered down to us, we can make no certain judgment of it; and after all, what certain assurance have we, that this text was the original of the Book of Judith? If this were the first original, it would be a strong prejudice in favour of the opinion, which places this history after the captivity of Babylon; for before this time the Jews did not write in Chaldee.

They who maintain, that the History of Judith contains what passed before the captivity of Babylon, and in Manasseh's time, believe it sufficient to demonstrate, that there is nothing in the history repugnant to this assertion. Now supposing the

II A Nabu- Nabuchodonozor in Judith to be the same as Saosduchinus in Ptolemy, who reigned over the Assyrians and Chaldeans, and succeeded Ezerhaddon King of Assyria; that Arphaxad is the same as Phraartes mentioned in Herodotus; that these two Princes made war with one another in the twelfth year of Saosduchinus; that Arphaxad being overcome, Saosduchinus resolved to subdue all the people, spoken of in Judith, under his dominion; that to this purpose he sent Holofernes at the head of his armies, to reduce those by force who refused to acknowledge him for Sovereign. That at this time Manasseh, who had been a little before delivered from captivity, into which he had been carried to Babylon, dwelt at Jerusalem, concerning himself little with the government, and not daring to declare openly against the Chaldæans, whose power and indignation he had so lately felt, and leaving the care of affairs for the most part to Joachim or Eliakim the High Priest. That the inhabitants of Bethulia resolved with God's assistance to preserve their liberty and Religion, and shut their gates against Holofernes; that Judith seeing the extremities the city was reduced to, undertook to destroy Holofernes, in which design she succeeded, as may be seen in the book that bears her name.

Now supposing all this, I say, there is nothing in it against the laws of History, or contrary to Chronology. The war between Nabuchodonozor and Arphaxad, we place in the year 3347, the expedition and death of Holofernes both in the same year 3348. Manasseh was taken and carried to Babylon in 3329. He returned some years after, and died in 3361.

There are some expressions a little perplexing, taken from the Greek text of Judith, which however are very capable of being set right; for [Judith v. 18. in Græco.] example, Achior says, that the Temple of the Lord was cast to the ground; that after the return of the Jews from their dispersion, they took possession again of Jerusalem, where their Sanctuary is; and again, that they were newly [Judith v. 19. Judith iv. 3.] returned from the captivity, and all the people of Judea were lately gathered together. To all this I say, there may be a reply made, by distinguishing particular captivities and dispersions in Israel, from other general dispersions. Under Manasseh the Temple was profaned, and part of the people carried away into captivity: this Prince and his people both returned from this short dispersion; the Temple was purified; which happened but a little before. This is what the author of the Greek version of this work would describe. Here therefore you have what is alledged for the support of that system which we have followed in our Comment.

The opinion which places the history of Judith after the captivity of Babylon, is founded principally upon the authority of the Greek version. This translation is certainly very ancient, the Italick version, which was the only one in use among the Latins before S. Jerom, and the Syriac, were both made from it. It may pass for an original, there being nothing more ancient and authentick; for it is dubious whether St. Jerom's Chaldee were the original text of this work. Perhaps the Hebrew, mentioned by Origen, was more authentick, but it is not come so low as our time.

If any one would maintain the Chaldee text to be the original, it will follow, as has already been remarked, that this work was written after the captivity, and that the history as probably might be translated at that time. Besides there was no King at that time in the country; there is no mention made of any in the whole course of this History; there is no application made to any but the High Priest, in an affair wherein the King directly was concerned; for the question was about making war, or at least resisting a powerful Monarch, and one able to destroy the Kingdom of Judah. To say that Manasseh, out of fear or policy, dissembled what passed, and left the management of affairs to the High Priest, is to advance a thing almost incredible; besides, it were to attempt imposing upon the King of Chaldæa with child's play, as if this Prince could be ignorant, that there was a King in Judah, that this King was subject to him, and that nothing could be transacted there without his knowledge and participation; and who would be persuaded, that if this affair of Bethulia had taken a different turn from what it did, the King of Babylon would not have made Manasseh accountable for it, upon pretence that he did not appear in it? People do not judge of matters of this kind after such a manner, and are not so easily mistaken.

Besides, where would they find an High Priest in Manasseh's time, whose name was Eliakim? The catalogues preserved in the Chronicles, in Josephus, and what may be gathered out of different places of the Scripture, does not furnish us with any of that name about this time. We find [2 Kings xviii. 18, 26, 37. 2 Kings xxii. 4. & 2 Chr. xxx. Baruch i. 7.] Hilkiah under Hezekiah, and another Hilkiah under Josiah, and an High Priest named Joakim at the time when Jerusalem was taken by the Chaldæans; but we find no one of the name of Joakim or Eliakim under Manasseh. It is true Hilkiah comes pretty pretty near Eliakim, and the Hebrews took great liberties in changing names, particularly when there was little or no difference as to the meaning of them; and there is scarce any between Hilkiah and Eliakim. I am very willing not to insist much on this argument, and to confess, that the same Hilkiah or Eliakim might live under Manasseh and Josiah.

But what seems demonstrative for the opinion which places this after the return from the Babylonian captivity, is the import of the Greek, ch. iv. ver. 2. that the Israelites were newly return'd from the captivity, and all the people of Judea were lately gathered together, and the vessels and the altar, and the house, were sanctified after the profanation. Achior, General of the Ammonites, says the same thing to Holofernes: They were destroyed in many battles very sore, and were led captives into a land that was not theirs; but now are they returned to their God, and are come up from the places where they were scattered, [Judith v. 23. Grec. 18. καὶ ὁ ναὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ αὐτῶν ἐγεννήθη εἰς ἔδαφος, &c. --- καὶ κατῳκίσθησαν ἐν τῇ ὀρεινῇ ὅτι ἦν ἔρημος.] and have possessed Jerusalem where their Sanctuary is. And observe, that this last passage is taken from the Vulgate; but the Greek adds, And the Temple of their God was overthrown (literally) reduced to the pavement, or trampled under foot, and their cities were taken by the enemies,—— and they dwell again in the mountains which were not inhabited. It is in vain to endeavour to correct the sense of these passages, the bare reading of them, and the first impression they make upon the mind, naturally leads any one to say, that this history was translated after the return from the [Euseb. in Chronico. Aug. l. xviii. de Civit. c. 16. Sulpit. Sever. l. ii. Syncell. a Sixt. Senens. Dionys. Carthus. Lyran. Natal. Alex. Estius, &c.] captivity: and thus almost all the ancients, and many of the moderns a, have believed. If they were to be found only in the Greek, their authority perhaps might be rejected. But we have seen the import of the Vulgate, wherein it is said, that the Jews, after they had been dispersed, were at last reunited, and have again taken possession of Jerusalem, where their Temple is. Can these last words be naturally understood of a short captivity, which happened under Manasseh?

Besides some assert, that Phraartes, whom they suppose to be the Arphaxad in Judith, long survived Saosduchinus, whom [See Basnage, Antiq. des Juifs. t. 1. p. 19, 255, 256. c. 19. art. 18, 19.] they would have to be Nabuchodonozor in the same History, who, in Judith's account, shot his adversary Arphaxad, and killed him. Saosduchinus died, according to Petavius, in the year 4067 of the Julian Period, and Phraartes not till the year 4071. If this be true, we must of necessity give up the system we proposed at first, and receive this History after the return from Babylon.

Lastly, It is said to support this opinion, that the text of the Vulgate, as well as the Greek text, implys, that Judith lived an hundred and five years, and that during her life time, and many years after her death, no enemy disturbed Israel. Let them suppose, if they please, that Judith was fifty years of age when she appeared before Holofernes, with a design of making him enamoured with her beauty, nay, that she was five and fifty; how can any one maintain, that for these five and fifty last years of her life, and farther for many years after, the Jews were not molested by any enemy, since we know, that from the year of the world 3347, in which this war with Holofernes is dated, to sixty years beyond this time, there was nothing but a chain of evils to be seen in Judea, and a succession of almost continual misfortunes.

It must be acknowledged therefore, say they, that this history was not transacted till after the captivity of Babylon; and supposing this, opinions are still farther divided: David Ganz, a Jewish historian tells us, that a certain Poet, who wrote the history of the dedication of the Temple, refers this event to the time of the Asmoneans; that another says, it happened in the time of Cambyses son of Cyrus, but, adds Ganz, the wise men of the Age say, this history is to take place at the same time as the miracle of the dedication, meaning the miracle of the multiplication of oil, which lasted for eight days in the lamps. See above, the Feast of Lights. Eusebius supposes it to have happened in the reign of Cambyses, Syncellus in that of Xerxes, Sulpitius Severus in that of Ochus; others, under Antiochus Epiphanes, and in the time of the Maccabees.

And this last opinion doubtless is the most easy to maintain, if they will acknowledge, that a feast was instituted in memory of this event, as we read in the Vulgate, but not in the Greek, nor in the Syriac, nor in the old Italick, which imply nothing like it. The generality of Commentators believe, that this festival of Judith is the same with that of the renovation of the sacred fire, and the new dedication of the Temple by Judas Maccabæus. Leo of Modena is of this opinion, as well as Salianus, Bellarmin, Tornielle, Cornelius a [Leon de Modene, Ceremonies des Juifs. parties. 3. c.9.] Lapide, Grotius, &c.

They cite a passage from Philo, which imports, that the High Priest Jesus instituted the feast of Judith under Darius Longimanus. The intire passage is as follows. Ahasuerus dwelt at Babylon, and the High Priest Jesus went to wait on him, because the governors of Syria had wrote against the Jews; but he was one whole year without obtaining an audience, because the King was too much taken up with the affairs of war. Having been successful, he sent sent Holofernes the year following into Judea, and upon intelligence that the Jews had cut his head off, he forbad them to rebuild the Temple. Darius Longimanus succeeded him, and Jesus returned to Jerusalem. This was he who appointed the festival to be kept every year in honour of Judith. They likewise cite an Hebrew calendar, [Sigon. de Rep. Hebr. l. iii. c. 17.] published by Sigonius, wherein this festival is found upon the 25th day of the ninth month, or of Casleu; which answers to the feast of the dedication of the Temple, and renewing of the sacred fire by Judas Maccabæus. But in reply to the passage of this pretended Philo, it is said that it was taken from Annius of Viterbo, who is known to have been one of the most eminent impostors, in forging spurious books, that ever was: so that it is needless to confute it.

As to Sigonius's calendar, Selden undertakes to prove that it is wrong. Besides the feast of the dedication of the Temple was celebrated on the 25 of Casleu, or the lunar month, which answers pretty near to November, and has no relation to Judith's festival and the deliverance of Bethulia, which must have been about the month September. Lastly, if Leo of Modena and some prayer books printed for the use of the Jews, do mention Judith's victory upon the day of the dedication of the Temple, it does not follow, that the festival on the score of the deliverance of Bethulia by Judith, was kept upon this day. The memory of this event is then recalled by them, as having some relation to what happened under Judas Maccabæus; and besides, some Jewish authors hold, that the Judith mentioned in these hymns or prayers, was sister to Judas Maccabæus, who being beloved by Nicanor general of the Syrian troops, made him drunk, and cut his head off. We believe this adventure to be very false, but some Jews give it out as certain.

If therefore they would maintain the reality of the feast instituted in memory of the victory obtained by Judith over Holofernes, supposing this history to have happened before the Babylonish captivity, it must be allowed, that the Jews have long forborn to celebrate it, or have transfer'd it from the day on which it was of old celebrated, to that on which they keep the dedication of the Temple under Judas Maccabæus.

It is surprizing, indeed, and with reason, that a handful of people, shut up within the little town of Bethulia, tho we should suppose them to have been supported by all the Jews who were at that time in Judea, should dare to resist Holofernes, and all the power of the Assyrians; but we are to consider, that Nabuchodonozor had resolved, not only to subdue all the nations from the Euphrates to Æthiopia, but intended likewise to oblige them to adore him, and acknowledge him alone to be God; Præceperat illi Nabuchodonozor Rex, ut omnes Deos terræ exterminaret, videlicet, ut ipse solus diceretur Deus ab his nationibus, quæ potuissent Holofernis potentiâ subjugari. And in another place, [Judith v. 19. Vulg.] the Princes in Holofernes's army, after they had heard Achior's discourse, exhorted one another to march against Bethulia, that all the Nations, said they, might know, that Nabuchodonozor is the God of the earth, and there is none other besides him. It was a state maxim with the Kings of Persia, to procure divine honours to be paid them: Persas non piè tantum sed etiam prudenter Reges suos inter Deos coluere: Majestatem enim imperii salutis esse tutelam, says Cleon in Quintus Curtius.

We should not think it strange, that the Jews opposed this foolish and impious pretension of Nabuchodonozor and his general; they could not without impiety, and renouncing their religion, submit to the dominion of such a King, and they had reason to promise themselves assistance from God in this war; and if God had permitted them to overcome, this would have been not only very glorious, but likewise very advantageous to them.

As to other questions which are started with relation to the story of Judith. See the prolegomena of Serarius upon Judith, the truth of the history of Judith by D. Bernard de Montfaucon, our preface to Judith, &c. We thought it convenient to fix it before the Babylonish captivity[1]; and according to our hypothesis you have here the chronology of this history. The Chronology of the history of Judith, upon suppofition that it happened in the time of Manasseh.

[The year of the world.] 3285. THE birth of Judith. 3306. Manasseh King of Judah begins to reign. 3347. The war between Nebuchadnezzar and Arphaxad, otherwise Saosduchinus, King of Assyria, and Phraartes King of the Medes. 3348. Holofernes's expedition, the siege of Bethulia, and death of Holofernes.

The death of Manasseh King of Judah. 3363. The death of Ammon King of Judah.
The death of Judith, in the hundred and fiftieth year of her age.

Whether the book of Judith be authentick and canonical, is a point very much disputed. There are an hundred difficulties started concerning the persons, and other circumstances to be met with in this history. We have endeavoured in our preface to this book, to confute the most plausible objections to it, and to prove it to be both genuine and canonical. The Jews read it, and in S. Jerom's time still preserved it among them: S. Clement, who was Pope, hath cited it in his Epistle to the Corinthians, as well as [Clem. Rom. Ep. i. ad Corinth. p. 177. Constit. Apost. l. viii. c. 2. can. 85. alias 76. p. 448.] the author of the apostolical constitutions written in the same S. Clement's name, Clemens Alexandrinus, l. 4. Strom. Origen. homil. 19. upon Jeremiah, and tome 3. upon S. John; Tertullian lib. de monogamia, c. 17. S. Ambrose, lib. 3. de Officiis, & lib. de viduis, S. Jerom quotes it in his Epistle to Furia; and in his preface to the book of Judith[2], he says that the council of Nice received this among the canonical books; not that any canon was made by it on purpose to approve it; for we know of none wherein there is any mention of it; and S. Jerom himself does not produce any: but he knew perhaps that the fathers of this council had approved it, since after this council the fathers acknowledged it, and have citations from it. S. Athanasius, or the author of the synopsis which is ascribed to him, gives a summary account of it, as he does of the other sacred books. S. Austin and the whole African Church received it in their canon. [Aug. l. ii. de Doctr. Christ. c. 8. Conc. Carthag. 3. can. 47. Fulgent. Ep. ii. ad Gallum.] Pope Innocent I. in his Epistle to Exuperus, and Pope Gelasius in the council of Rome, acknowledged it to be canonical. It is quoted in Fulgentius, and by two ancient authors, whose sermons are printed in the Appendix to the fifth volume of S. Austin. I say nothing of the more modern Ecclesiastical writers, who are very numerous and very favourable to Judith : Lastly, the council of Trent hath confirmed the book of Judith to be a part of holy scripture, as the Church before had esteemed it to be. These authorities are more than sufficient to fix our doubts concerning the dispute, whether this book be canonical, tho we were not able to satisfy every objection in particular, which might be formed against it.

The author of the book of Judith is [Hieronym in Agg i. 6.] unknown. S. Jerom seems to think, that Judith wrote it herself; but produces no good proof for his opinion. Others will have it, that the High Priest Joakim or Eliakim, mentioned in this book, was the author of it, which is all affirmed upon mere conjectures.

They who believe that the history of Judith was what happened in the time of Cambyses, and after the captivity of Babylon, suppose that Joshua the son of Josedek, who was then High Priest, wrote it. The author, whosoever he was, does not appear to have been contemporary, with the transactions he relates. He says that Achior's family was still in his time subsisting in Israel, and that the festival instituted in memory of Judith's victory was still celebrated. Expressions which intimate, that this was what had happened long before.

The Jews in Origen's time had the history of Judith in Hebrew, that is to say, they might have it probably in Chaldee, which is often confounded with *He*brew. S. Jerom says, that in his time they still read it in Chaldee, and ranked it among the Hagiographa. Sebastian Munster thinks, that the Jews of Constantinople have it at present in this language. But hitherto we have seen no part of Judith printed in it. The Syriac version [Hieronym. Præfat. in Judith. Seb. Munster. Præfat. in Tobiam Hebr.] which we have of it, is taken from the Greek, but from some Greek copy more correct than that which is at present in our hands. S. Jerom made his Latin version from the Chaldee, and this translation is so different from the Greek, that no one could say they both came from the same source and original. S. Jerom complains very much, of the variety observable among the Latin copies of his time, and we may be easily convinced that his complaints were just, by comparing the several fragments of these translations which have been handed down to us, and the citations from them in the fathers. See our preface to Judith, and the notes which are placed below the Comment.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. Sir Isaac Newton says, that as this expedition against the Jews was undertaken by Holofernes, at a time when the government was in the hands of the High Priest and ancients of Israel, Judith iv. 8. and vii. 23. by consequence it was not in the reign of Manasseh or Amon, but when Josiah was a child, See more to this purpose in his Chronology, &c. p. 289, of the long continued peace, which is said to be procured by Judith. For according to the account given of it in this book it must have lasted eighty years, which is what the Jews never enjoyed from the time they were a nation; and what scarce any other people ever did enjoy, which therefore he allows to be a fiction, tho otherwise inclined to think it a true history.

Hieronym. Præf. in lib. Judith. Apud Hebræos liber Judith inter Hagiographa legitur.——Sed quia hunc librum Synodus Nicæna in numero Sacrarum Scripturarum legitur computâsse, acquievi petitioni vestræ.

Julia

[Origen. in Rom. xiv. 15.] JULIA, a Roman woman, whom some believe to have been the wife of Philologus mentioned by S. Paul, in his epistle to the Romans, immediately before he speaks of Julia. Others take the name to be Julias, and question whether it be not rather a man's. Rom. xvi. 15.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Julian

JULIAN, Mark Antony Julian, governor of Judea, in the year of J. C. 70. See hereafter Marcus Antonius Julianus.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Julias

JULIAS, otherwise Livias; for Josephus generally calls Livia Augustus's wife by the name of Julia. There were two cities of this name in Judea; one built by Herod Antipas at the mouth of the river Jordan in the lake of Tiberias; otherwise called Bethsaida; and in the Gospel it goes by no other name but that of Bethsaida. We are of opinion, that it lay beyond Jordan, in the Gaulanitis. See Bethsaida.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Julius Cæsar

[Vide Plin. l. v. c. 14, 15, & Joseph. l. ii. de Bello. c. 8. & lib. iii. c. 2.] JULIUS CÆSAR. The name of Cæsar is become peculiar to the Roman Emperors after Julius Cæsar, who changed the state of the Roman commonwealth from an aristocracy to a monarchy. The Scripture speaks frequently of the Cæsars, that is to say, of the Emperors, but it rarely mentions their proper name: for example, Is it lawful to pay tribute unto Cæsar? [Matth. xxii. 17. Acts xxv. 11, 12.] Tiberius then reigned; and S. Paul in the Acts, I appeal unto Cæsar. Hast thou appealed unto Cæsar? unto Cæsar thou shalt go. He spoke of the Emperor Nero. And elsewhere, they of Cæsar's household salute thee. He means again the same Em-

[Luke iii. 1. Acts xi. 28.] peror. S. Luke names Cæsar Augustus, Tiberius Cæsar, and Claudius Cæsar. Julius Cæsar, or Caius Julius Cæsar, the first Roman Emperor, no farther concerns us in this work, than as he had some part in the Jewish affairs, and sacred history; wherefore we do not here propose to give his whole history, but only to remark what he did with relation to the Jews. He was the son of Lucius Cæsar and Aurelia the daughter of Cotta. He was born in the year of Rome 654[1], 98 years before Jesus Christ. At the age of 16 he lost his father, and the year after was appointed High Priest of Jupiter. The dictator Sylla had resolved to destroy him; and Cæsar, to avoid being killed, was forced to hide himself, and gain those with money who were ordered to seize on him. Sylla at last forgave him, being over powered by the intreaties of his friends. But he foretold, that this young man would one day ruin the state.

After having passed successively through the offices of Tribune, Quæstor, Ædile, High Priest, and Prætor or Governor of Spain, he at last obtained the consulship in the year of Rome 695[2], and chose the government of Gaul, which he reduced into the form of a province, after he had brought it all under his obedience during the nine or ten years of his government. In the mean time his daughter Julia dying, the good understanding, which there had been hitherto, between him and his son in law Pompey, husband to Julia, was intirely destroyed, because Cæsar being unable to endure a master, and Pompey a companion, they began to look on one another as rivals. Pompey, who was at Rome, opposed all the demands made by Cæsar in his absence; and Cæsar being irritated, entred Italy with his victorious army[3], and so terrified his enemies that they fled, after having regulated the affairs of Italy.

He set at liberty Aristobulus King of Judea, and sent him into his own country with two legions, [Joseph. Antiq. l. xiv. c. 13. Dio Cassius, l. xli.] to support his interests there, as well as in the neighbourhood, in Syria, Phœnicia, and Arabia. But they of Pompey's party found means to poyson him by the way. Alexander the son of Aristobulus had already levied troops in Syria, to join them with his father whom he expected. But Pompey having received intelligence of his designs, sent orders to Scipio in Syria, to have him killed, which was done accordingly. Cæsar in the mean time was gone into Spain, where he defeated Pompey's army commanded by three of his generals. He afterwards return'd to Rome; then passed into Maccedonia, where he beat Pompey at Pharsalia.

He pursued him as far as Alexandria, where being informed that he had been killed, he turned his arms against Ptolemy king of Egypt. Cæsar was shut up in Alexandria, with some troops, where he found himself very much embarassed, and pressed by the Egyptian army. He sent Mithridates, one of his people, into Syria and Cilicia, to procure succours for him. Antipater, father to Herod the great, who govern'd the High Priest Hircanus Prince of the Jews, engaged this, and some Arabian Princes of the neighbourhood, to send [Joseph. Antiq. l. xiv. c. 14, 15.] assistance to Cæsar. He himself march'd into Egypt with three thousand men, with which he joined the troops of Mithridates. They both together attacked Pelusium which they carried. This success was attributed to the valour of Antipater, who was the first that mounted the breach. From thence they advanced towards Alexandria, and Antipater by his own credit, and letters which he carried from Hircanus, oblig'd the Jews in the canton of Onion, to open the passages and declare for Cæsar. Those of Memphis did the same after their Example. Ptolemy sent a flying camp against Mithridates and Antipater, to dispute with them the passage of the Nile, but the king's troops were beaten. Ptolemy followed in person with his whole army: Cæsar did the same. They soon came to a battle, wherein Cæsar obtained a compleat victory, which made him master of all Egypt.

He always preserved a very grateful remembrance of the important service which Antipater had done him upon this occasion. Before he departed from Alexandria, he confirm'd all the privileges which the Jews enjoyed in Egypt, and caused a pillar [Joseph. Antiq. l. xiv. c. 17. & contra Appion. l. ii.] to be erected, upon which he ordered all these privileges to be ingraved, together with the decree which confirm'd them: As he passed through Palestine, Antigonus the son of Aristobulus above mentioned, came and threw himself at his feet, represented to him in a very affecting manner the death of his father and brother, the first poisoned, the second beheaded at Antioch for supporting his interests, and desired to be restored by him to his father's principality. He likewise complain'd of the wrong done him by Antipater and Hircanus, who had all the authority in Judea. But Antipater, who was still in Cæsar's retinue, so well justified his conduct, and that of Hircanus, that Cæsar rejected the accusations of Antigonus, and ordain'd, that Hircanus should keep the dignity of High Priest of the Jews, and the principality of Judea, for himself and successors for ever, and gave Antipater the office of procurator of Judea under Hircanus. This decree he ordered to be ingrav'd in Greek and Latin on brass plates, which were to be deposited in the capitol at Rome, and in the Temples of Tyre, Sidon, and Ascalon in Phœnicia.

[Joseph. Antiq. l. xiv. c. 17.] Some years after[4], in his fifth and last consulship, Cæsar at the request of Hircanus, and in consideration of the services which he had done him in Egypt and Syria, permitted him to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, which Pompey had demolished. There was a decree made at Rome to this purpose, which was no sooner brought to Jerusalem, but Antipater began to set people to work, and the city was very soon fortified, as it was before the demolition of it. Cæsar was killed in a short time after, on the fifteenth of March in the year of the world 3960, before Jesus Christ 40, before the vulgar Æra 44.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year of the world 3906, before J. C. 98.
In the year of the world 3947, before J. C. 57.
In the year of the world 3957, of Rome 705, before J. C. 47.
In the year of Rome 706, before J. C. 46, and of the world 3958.

Julius

JULIUS, a Centurion of the Cohort called Augusta, into whose hands Festus governor of Judea put S. Paul, in order to convey him to Rome, whither he had appealed. Julius had always a great regard for S. Paul. When they came to Alexandria, he put him on board another vessel, which was going to Rome. See Acts xxvii. 1, 2, 3, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Julus

JULUS, Josephus calls the High Priest of the Jews by this name, who succeeded Judeas, and was himself succeeded by Jotham. Antiq. l. x. c. 2. p. 343. The name of Julus is not to be found in Scripture, nor do we know what was the true Hebrew name of this Pontiff.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Junia

JUNIA, or as some copies read it, Julia, is joined with Andronicus in the Epistle to the Roman. Chap. xvi. ver. 7. They were S. Paul's relations. Salute Andronicus and Junia my kinsmen and fellow-prisoners, who are of note among the Apostles. These last words, who are of note among the Apostles, persuade many of the moderns, that the right name is Junias [Pluique in Rom. xvi. 7. Menoch. Tirin. Hamm. vide et Theodoret. in Rom.] , and that this person is a man as well as Andronicus. But S. Chrysostom, Theophylact, and several others take Andronicus for a man, and Junia for a woman, and perhaps the wife of Andronicus. The Greeks and Latins keep their festival on the seventeenth day of May, and distinguish them as husband and wife.[1]

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

In the year before J. C. 44, of the world 3960.

Juniper-Tree

JUNIPER-TREE, a very common sort of tree. There is mention made of it in the Latin text of Scripture, in two places. Elisha [1 Kings xix. 4, 5. Rethem.] flying from Jezebel, went towards Beersheba; and being overwhelmed with fatigue, lay down under a Juniper-tree. The Hebrew Rethem which S. Jerom, after Aquila, translates a Juniper-tree, in the Syriac is rendred a turpentine tree, and in the Chaldee, Broom. The Septuagint keep to the Hebrew word rathem or rhetem, and Symmachus explains it only by a covert or shelter. In the vulgate text of Job there is mention likewise of a juniper tree; the root of the juniper tree was their meat. But as the root of the Juniper-tree is by no means fit to eat, no more than that of the turpentine tree or broom, this translation is very much to be questioned. Wherefore it is probable enough, that the Habrew, rhetem may signify in general any wild shrub or plant.

The Greek rhathamnos, which comes from the Hebrew rathom, signifies in general a young plant, a sucker, a shoot, &c.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ivory

IVORY, in Hebrew Schen, that is to say a [Ezek. xxvii. 15.] tooth; because Ivory is an Elephant's tooth. Ezekiel calls it horns of teeth, because the Elephant's tooth is in the shape of an horn, and has more of the nature of an horn than of a tooth, being manageable, and, like horn, easily to be worked. Varro maintains, that [Varro de Lingua Latina, l.6.] Ivory is improperly said to be a tooth, and that it was really an horn: Nam quos dentes multi vocant, sunt cornua. In the first book of Kings, ch. x. 22. it is said, that Elephants teeth were brought to Solomon from the land of Ophir. Dentes elephantorum; in the Hebrew, Schen-habbim; and Bochar is of opinion, [Schen. habbim.] that Schen-habbim is put for Schen-kahabim, affirming that kahabim signifies Elephants; [Dens furcorum, seu elephantorum.] whereof he produces no proof. It is our opinion, that these two words are to be read separately Schen habenim; teeth or ivory, and Ebony. Habenim signifies Ebony in Ezekiel xxvii. 15. There was an ascent of six steps to Solomon's Ivory throne, and at each of these steps a lion. The Ivory palaces in Psalm xliv. are boxes made of Ivory in the form of houses. The houses of Ivory built in Samaria, Amos iii. 15. and 1 Kings xxii. 39. are palaces where there were any ornaments in Ivory.

Dioscorides writes, that if Ivory is boiled for six hours with the root of mandrake, it softens to such a degree, that any one may do what he pleases with it. The Ivory of the Isle of Ceylan, and of the Isle of Achem, has this particular in it, that it does not grow yellow, as that does of the terra firma and the West Indies; which makes it dearer than the other. The Scripture speaks of red Ivory: rubicundiores ebore antiquo, redder than old Ivory. Homer[1] speaks of making ivory of this colour, which was used in adorning the bridles of horses. Ovid intimates, that Ivory was tinged thus to prevent its growing yellow; as it does generally [Ovid. l. 2. Amor. Eleg. 5.] when it is old.

Aut quod ne longis flavescere possit ab annis, Mæonis Assyrium fœmina tinxit ebur.

The Hebrew of the abovecited passage in Jeremiah is different from the Vulgate. It imports, that their body is brighter or redder than pearls. We know Pearls are white and not red. The Hebrew therefore which generally signifies to be red, must be understood in another sense, to be bright, as it is sometimes understood in Scripture, and even in profane authors; or else we must suppose the redness of the pearl to mean that beautiful carnation red, which is remarkable in the mother of pearl, wherein the red and white are so well mixed, that a white and vermilion tincture may be well compared to them. Candidiores Nazaræi ejus nive, nitidiores lacte, rubicundiores pinnis, seu perulis.

The Scripture speaks likewise of houses of Ivory Amos inveighing against the effeminacy and magnificence of the rich men of Samaria, says, the Ivory houses shall be destroyed. Peribunt domus eburneæ. King Ahab had built one of these Ivory houses, & domus eburnea quam ædificavit. There was mention made of it at large in the Annals of the Kings of Israel. The Psalmist describing the magnificence of the presents which were made to Solomon's wife when she was married, says, that Kings daughters presented her with Myrrh, Casia, and the most excellent spices in Ivory houses, Myrrha & gutta & casia à vestimentis tuis, a domibus eburneis, ex quibus delectaverunt te filiæ Regum in honore tuo. These Ivory chests served to lock up clothes, gold, jewels, and what was more particularly of value; this was in use even among the Heathens; who sometimes made boxes of cedar, as may be seen in Ezekiel xxvii. 24. according to the Hebrew; and in Euripides[2], who calls them houses of Cedar.

As to the Ivory houses mentioned by Amos, and in the first book of Kings, it is very probable that these were real houses, adorned with abundance of furniture in Ivory, such as beds, tables, boxes, and other imbellishments, wherein there was use made of Ivory; these works were probably more common and more in vogue at that time than at present.

[Amos vi. 4.] The same Amos speaks of Ivory beds: qui dormitis in lectis eburneis, & lascivitis in stratis vestris. S. John in the Revelations discoursing of the fall of Rome, which [12.] he describes under the name of Babylon, says, that the vessels of gold, silver, and Ivory which were before to be seen there, shall be seen no more. We have said something in another place of Solomon's Ivory [Ezek.] throne. xxvii. 6. Ezekiel tells us, that the Tyrians carried their magnificence to such an height, as to make the seats on which their rowers sat of Indian Ivory: Transtra tua fecerunt tibi ex ebore Indico. This seems to be a very ill judged Piece of Costliness; and the Hebrew is differently translated; by some, They have made thy hatches of Ivory well troden[3] (literally of Ivory the daughter of steps) and brought from the isles of Chittim. But what can be the meaning of Ivory troden under feet? It is a custom with elephants to hide their teeth under ground, when either by chance or old age they fall from them. Dentes deciduos casu aliquo vel senectâ defodiunt. Others translate this passage thus, They have made thy branches of Ivory wrought in Assyria, and brought from the isles of Chittim, or Macedonia. But Macedonia we know is not a country where Elephants teeth are to be found. There are [Bochart. de animal. Sacr. part.] others who translate it, They have made thy seats of Ivory set in box, brought from the isles of Macedonia. The Hebrews called peninsula's and maritime countries, Islands, as well as the places which properly go by this name; and Macedonia produced box which was much valued. That Ivory was [c. 16.] sometimes set in box may be seen from Virgil. [Virgil. Æneid. x.]

—— —— Quale per artem Inclusum buxo, aut oricia therebintho Lucet ebur.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Homer Iliad. Δ. ὡς δ' ὅτε τίς τ' ἐλέφαντα γυνὴ φοίνικι μιήνῃ

Euripid. Ἐκ δ' ἐλθοῦσα κεδρίνων δόμων Ἑσθῆτα κόσμον' εὐπρεπῶς ἠσκήλαλο.

Translators' note. Kimchi, as Buxtorf observes, thinks אשרים to be the name of a people, and agreeably to this opinion our English Translators render it The company of the Asharites. But in the margin of our Bibles we have another interpretation, which I have here chosen as best expressing the original. For אשרים is an appellative, and, as the learned Buxtorf remarks, is always written with a Dagesch when it is used as the proper name of a nation.

Jupiter

JUPITER. Jupiter was the son of Saturn and Rhea, or Opis, and born at the same birth with Juno, who became his wife. Opis hid him after his birth, in order to conceal him from the knowledge of Saturn, who by virtue of an agreement made between him and his brother Titan, devoured all his male children. He was brought up by the Curetes in a Den at Mount Ida, and fed with the milk of the Goat Amalthea. He afterwards drove his Father out of Heaven, and divided the Empire of the world with his brothers. For himself, he had Heaven and Earth; Neptune had the Sea and Waters; and Pluto Hell. Some assert, that this whole fable includes the History of Noah and his three sons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth. According to this system, Noah is Saturn, who saw all men perish in the waters of the deluge, and who in some sort swallowed them up by not receiving them into the Ark, which he had built for himself and family[1]. Jupiter is Ham; Neptune, Japhet; Shem, Pluto. We have in another place explain'd ourselves more at length on this subject.

The Titans undertook to dethrone Jupiter, as he had dethroned his father. These Titans were Giants, sons of Titan and the Earth; they declared war against Jupiter, and heap'd mountains upon mountains, in order to scale Heaven; but their efforts were unsuccessful; Jupiter overthrew them with his thunder, and shut them up under the waters and mountains, from whence they were not able to get out. These Titans represent to us the old Giants, who built the tower of Babel, and whose pride and presumption God confounded, by changing their languages, and pouring out the spirit of discord and division among them.

The name of Jupiter, or Jovis-Pater, is derived, probably, from Jehovah, pronounced with the Latin termination Jovis instead of Jova. We meet with Jovis in the nominative as well as oblique cases; for example, in Medals, Jovis custos, Jovis propugnator, Jovis Stator. To this Pater was added; and instead of Jovis Pater was used Jupiter; and as Jehovah or Jova is the true name of God, his incommunicable name, that which signifies his essence, God essentially, and in the way of excellency, distinctly from the Gods, Angels, Princes, and Judges who are sometimes so called, because they act in God's name, and exercise part of his authority upon earth; so among the Heathens the first and greatest of the Gods is called Jovis, to shew his independence and superiority; for which reason it is affirmed, that Jupiter is the Baal of the Phœnicians, the Belus of the Assyrians and Babylonians, the Zeus of the Greeks, the Moloch of the Ammonites, the Marnas of the inhabitants of Gaza: in short, the ancients adored all nature under the name of Jupiter.

The ancient Christian Fathers maintained against the heathen, that Jupiter was a mere man, born in the isle of Crete. They [Tullius l. ii. de natura Deorum.] who are called divines, says Cicero, reckon up three Jupiters, the first and second were born in Arcadia; the third is the son of Saturn, who was born in Crete, where his sepulchre is shewn. Tertium Cretensem Saturni filium, cujus in illa insula sepulcrum ostenditur. Some pretend that he reigned in this island, and it is said that there were even two Kings of this name in the before-mentioned island; it being impossible that one man only should have been able to do all that is attributed to Jupiter. For example, it is certain, that the Jupiter who was brought up by the Curetes, is not the same with him who ravished Europa the daughter of Agenor King of Phœnicia, more modern by many ages than the former. Varro, as Tertullian relates, reckoned up three hundred Jupiters. It is [Tertull.] probable that he counted the number of his Epithets, and the places where he was adored; for it is true that he goes by an infinite number of sirnames. The eagle was principally consecrated to him; it is described with Jupiter's thunder in its talons.

The name of Jupiter was not known to the Hebrews till the reign of Alexander the great, and the Kings his successors. Antiochus Epiphanes commanded the idol of Jupiter the Olympian to be placed in the Temple of Jerusalem, and that of Jupiter the defender of strangers in the Temple of mount Gerizim. While S. Paul and S. [2 Macc. vi. 2.] Barnabas were at Lystra, a city of Lycaonia, they were taken for Gods, because they cured one who had been lame from his birth immediately, and with a word only. S. Paul was taken for Mercury, probably by reason of his eloquence, and S. Barnabas for Jupiter, because of his good mien. See hereafter [Acts xiv. 11, 12.] our remarks upon Olympian. Jupiter Olympius.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Lactant. l. i. c. 13. de falsa Religione. Nunc idcirco quod ait vulgus, comedisse filios suos eum, qui extulerit, sepulturæq; mandaverit.

Justice

JUSTICE, is generally put for goodness, equity, that virtue which renders to every man his due; and oftentimes for virtue and piety in general; lastly, for the conjunction of all those virtues which make an honest man. See Ezek. xviii. 5, 9.

Sometimes Justice is placed in opposition to Mercy; as a virtue which severely revenges the dishonour offered to God by sin.

At other times it is taken for the clemency, mercy, and indulgence which God shews to sinners. It is frequently taken [Is. xli. 10. xlii. 6. xlv. 8. lvi. 1. lxi. 10.] in this sense in Isaiah. It is used sometimes when we are speaking of a good natured, mild, indulgent man. Thus S. Matthew a tells us, that Joseph being a just man, was [Vide et Psal. l. 16. and cxlii. 1, &c. Ps. l. 16. and cxlii. 1. 1. Eccl. vii. 17. Rom. iii. 25, 26.] not willing to defame Mary.

It is also taken for alms. Redeem thy sins by justice, says Daniel to Nebuchadnezzar. Dan. iv. 27. See likewise Prov. xxi. 26. and xi. 18. et passim.

It is put for the justice which God does us, and the vengeance which he exercises against our enemys. Judgment is far from us, neither doth justice overtake us, says Isaiah lix. 9. We expected that God would deliver us from oppression, and revenge us on our enemies; but we see no change in our condition.

[Prov. xviii. 15. Isa. v. 23. Isai. liii. 11. Ezek. xvi. 51, 52.] 6. To do judgment and justice is a common expression, describing all the duties of man towards God and towards his neighbour; particularly the being just and equitable to all the world.

To justify any one, signifies often to declare him to be just, to absolve him. God condemns the Judge who justifies the wicked. To justify signifies likewise to instruct, to shew the ways of justice. Lastly, to justify, is to demonstrate another to be less culpable than ourselves. Jerusalem by its errors justified Sodom and Samaria; it hath evidenced, that people may exceed these cities in dissoluteness and irregularities.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Justus (I)

I. JUSTUS, the name of a man. Joseph sirnamed Barsabas had likewise the sirname of Justus. See Joseph and Barsabas. He was proposed with S. Matthias to be chosen in the room of the traytor Judas.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Justus (II)

II. JUSTUS, a Jew, otherwise called Jesus and sirnamed Justus; he was at Rome with S. Paul in the year 62. when he wrote the Epistle to the Colossians. The Apostle in this letter says that Jesus, called Justus, and Marcus, were his only fellow-workers unto the kingdom of God.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Juttah

JUTTAH, a city of Judah. Joshua xv. 55. Bonfrerius is of opinion, that it is the same as Ashan; Joshua xix. 7. and 1 Chron. vi. 59. But there is more probability of its being the same as Ithnam, Joshua xv. 23. Eusebius places Ithnam at eight miles distance from Hebron, towards the east.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Ivy-Tree

IVY-TREE, in Latin, Hedera; an evergreen shrub, which fastens upon walls and trees for its support. The[1] Ivy tree was consecrated to Bacchus, and the figure of an ivy leaf was impress'd with a hot iron upon those who were devoted to this false God. We have observed in the article Jonah, that what the old Greek interpreters translated gourd, cucurbita, S. Jerom translated hedera. We cannot tell how the Hebrews called ivy ; for it is certain that the Hebrew, Kikajon, which we read in Jonah, chap. iv. 6, 7, 9. does not signify this shrub.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Matth. i. 19. See Grot. Drus. Hammon, Prinæ. Camerar, Cnactebul. Toynard. Martianay, Gatak. ad Matt. i, 19, &c.

Ixion

[Raah. Daah.] IXION. A sort of bird mentioned in Deut. xiv. 13. Moses places it among the unclean birds. It is a kind of vultur, is white, and has a very piercing eye. The Hebrew word which S. Jerom here translates Ixion, in Leviticus xi. 14. he has interpreted Hawk. This Hebrew word is raah, or daab ; the transcribers confounding the letter resch with daleth, write raah in Deuteronomy, and daah in Leviticus.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Izates

IZATES, King of the Adiabenians, of whom there is frequent mention in Josephus, some authors make him a Christian, whereas Josephus says, he was a convert to Judaism. Izates was the son of Monobazus King of the Adiabenians, and [Orosius book vi. c. 6. says that Helena the mother of Izates had embraced Christianity.] Helena his wife and sister. Monobazus had a particular affection for Izates; and fearing the effects of envy in this young Prince's brothers, he sent him to Abennerick King of Charax Spasin upon the Tigris, at the head of the Persian Gulph. In this Country Izates met with a Jewish merchant, who taught him to serve the true God. Some time after Izates was sent for by his father, and set over a small Province of Armenia, called Kæron ; where, says Josephus, are to be seen the remains of Noah's Ark. After the death of his father he returned into Adiabene, where his mother Helena procured him to be acknowledged King, and engaged Monabazus one of his brothers to restore to him the diadem. He always continued his affection for Judaism[1], and was very glad to hear, that his mother had embraced [Antiq. l. xx. c. 2. and l. vi. c. 36. de Bello Jud. p. 964.] the same Religion, by the means of another Jew.

Izates would have made an open profession of Judaism and received circumcision; but his mother diverted him from it, apprehending the consequences of such a step as this: Ananias himself (this is the name of the Jew who had instructed him) did not insist on this ; telling him ; that as affairs then stood, God would be content with the disposition of his heart. But another Jew finding him one day reading the book of Moses, demonstrated to him, that he could not observe the law, nor be partaker of the covenant without having himself circumcised ; which determined him immediately to receive circumcision. He declared what he had done to Helena his mother and Ananias. This action was attended with no ill consequence, and Izates continued to reign with great happiness. His brothers and relations did at last likewise embrace Judaism, which caused a defection of the great men of the country, who stir'd up powerful enemies against him, and prevailed with them to declare war with him. But he had the advantage of them, and reigned four and twenty years. He died in the year of J. C. 61. at farthest, in the fifty fifth year of his Age, and left the crown to his son Monobazus. The bones of Izates were sent to Jerusalem, and buried with those of Helena his mother in a magnificent Mausoleum, built by her order near this city. At the last siege of Jerusalem when Titus lay before it, some of Izates's sons and brothers were shut up in the place, whose lives were given them by Titus, in the year of J. C. 70.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Translators' note. There are some who say, that he became a Christian ; but how shall we reconcile his Christianity with the many wives he had, of whom he begat four and twenty sons, besides daughters! Besides, we have no other authority to prove this, than that of Orosius, who produces none himself to confirm the truth of his assertion.

Izehar

[About the year 50. of the vulg. Æra. See the article Helena. De Bello. l. vi. c. 37. p. 964.] IZEHAR, or Izhar, the son of Kobath, and father of Korah, head of the family of the Izeharites, or Izharites, Numb. iii. 19, 27. Compare likewise Exod. vi. 18, 22.

Read this article in its place on the printed pages