We have already observed that Monceau[9] thought the Golden Calves of Jeroboam were an imitation of the Cherubims, which Moses had placed upon the Ark of the Covenant, and were looked upon as the Lord's Throne: So that Jeroboam and the Israelites of the ten Tribes were to be considered rather as Schismaticks than Idolaters. And it must be confessed that all Israel did not renounce intirely the Worship and Religion of the Lord, by adopting the Worship of the Golden Calves, and by ceasing to go up to the Temple at Jerusalem. God did not altogether abandon Israel; he sent Prophets to them, and preserved to himself a great number of faithful Worshippers, who were in a capacity to be saved. But when Jezebel, in Ahab's reign, introduced the Worship of Baal and Astaroth, and other Gods of the Canaanites, then Elijah complained bitterly to God, that all the world had forsaken his Worship, and that he only remained. I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts; for the Children of Israel have forsaken thy Covenant, thrown down thine [1 Kings xi. 40. 1 Kings xix. 10. 1 Kings xiv. 9. Hosea x. 5. Vide & xiii. 3. 1 Kings xviii. 21.] Altars, and slain thy Prophets with the sword; and I, even I only am left. The God of Israel therefore had before his Prophets and Altars in Ahab's Kingdom; and when the same Elijah had assembled the people on Mount Carmel, he bad them choose either the Lord or Baal. How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him. This is what is said to justify the Worship of the Israelites belonging to the ten Tribes.

But S. Jerom[10], and the generality of Commentators thought it was Jeroboam's design with his Golden Calves to imitate the worship of the Ox Apis, which he had seen practised in Egypt during the time of his abode there, towards the end of Solomon's reign. This Prince's crime is not any thing of an ambiguous nature; the Scripture reproaches him in an hundred places, with having made Israel to sin, Jeroboam the Son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin. When at any time the Scripture would describe a bad Prince, it says, that he imitated the sin of Jeroboam. It says, that Jeroboam drew Israel from following the Lord, and made them sin a great sin. The Prophet Abijah tells this Prince's Wife, Thou [2 Kings xvii. 21.] hast gone and made thee other Gods, and molten Images, to provoke me to anger, and hast cast me behind thy back. How often did the Prophets bitterly exclaim against the false Worship of the Golden Calves? Hosea by God's direction threatens them saying, The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear, because of the Calves of Bethaven .... the high places of Aven, the sin of Israel, shall be destroyed.

I confess there were Saints and Prophets in Israel, who were faithful to the Lord, and might attain to Salvation, but they did not worship the Golden Calves, nor were any ways concerned in the Schism, nor in the new Worship introduced by Jeroboam; either they went privately to the Temple of Jerusalem, as Tobit, or they worshipped [Tob. i. 5.] God in their houses, and un [2 Kings iv. 23.] der the direction of some Prophets, as the woman of Shunam.

The Septuagint and the Greek Fathers generally read Golden Cows instead of Golden Calves; and some speak as if there had been the head only of a Cow or Calf. Some think that Menahem King of Israel was obliged to send one of his Golden Calves to Pul, thereby ingaging him to come to his [Hosea x. 5, 6. Vide Osee v. 6. 2 Kings xv. 19, 20.] assistance. The[11] Rabbins relate, that Hosea King of Israel having been under a necessity of sending one of the Golden Calves to Salmanesèr King of Assyria, in order to make up the sums, which he demanded, the Priests belonging to this idol, instead of the Golden Calf, sent him another of brass well covered over and concealed. The people who knew nothing of their cheat, mourned, and very much lamented the loss of their Golden Calf; but the Priests privately rejoiced, believing their fraud to be well secured from discovery. To this is applied the passage of Hosea, where he says, The people [Hosea x. 5.] mourned over it, and the Priests thereof rejoiced on it. But Salmanesèr having examined the present, which was sent him, and finding a brazen Calf only instead of a golden one, marched against Samaria, and carried away the Golden Calves with all the people, who adored them.

S. Jerom[12] informs us of another Tradition among the Jews, concerning the Golden Calves, in his explanation of these words of Hosea, Divisum est cor eorum. Nunc interibunt. While the people of Israel, and their Kings were agreed upon the Worship of the Golden Calf, God suspended his vengeance: The people had an excuse; they obeyed their King. But Hosea the last King of Israel, being less addicted to the Superstitions of the country than his Predecessors, and declaring that he did not design to force any one, but left them at liberty to go and worship at Jerusalem, the people shewed great opposition, and said they would not use this liberty. This produced a division among them: Divisum est cor eorum. Wherefore the Lord resolved to destroy them: Nunc interibunt.

In the Article of Jeroboam, we shall mention what happened at the ceremony of this Prince's dedicating the Altar of the Golden [1 Kings xii. 23. xiii. 1, 2, 3, &c.] Calf at Bethel; as the Man of God, who was sent from Judah, pronounced this Prophecy against the Altar, “O Altar, Altar, thus saith the Lord, “A Child shall be born unto the house “of David, Josiah by name, and upon “thee shall he offer the Priests of the high “places, that burn incense upon thee, “and mens bones shall be burnt upon thee, “Behold the Altar shall be rent, and “the ashes that are upon it shall be pour-“ed out. The King hereupon stretching out his hand, it immediately dried up; but was restored at the Prophet's prayer. See 1 Kings xiii. 1, 2, 3, &c. Josephus[13] speaks of the Temple of the Golden Calf, which was still in being in his time, somewhere towards Dan, and not near Daphne on the lesser Jordan, as the printed Copies of this Author have it.

[Hosea xiii. 2.] As the Glory of Israel was their God, their Law, and their Ark; so the Adorers of the Golden Calves consider'd these Idols as theirs. The Priests thereof rejoiced on it for the Glory thereof, because it is departed from them. They valued themselves for worshipping them, which indeed should have overwhelmed them with confusion. Wherefore the Prophets used to say to them in the way of raillery[14], Ye who worship Calves, come and sacrifice Men. Can there be any greater madness? Ye adore Calves and sacrifice Men to Moloch and Saturn. The Septuagint, They say, we want Calves, sacrifice Men. We have no more Calves to sacrifice, let them bring us Men. The Hebrew may be interpreted in another sense, Let them who would sacrifice, come and kiss or adore the Calves. This is what Jeroboam said to the Israelites of the ten Tribes.

[Hosea viii. 5, 6.] Hosea foretold the destruction and captivity of the Calves of Samaria in the following terms; Thy Calf, O Samaria, hath cast thee off, mine anger is kindled against them .... It was Israel who invented this Idol. .... The Calf of Samaria shall become as contemptible as spiders webs. The Assyrians having got possession of Samaria, carried off the Golden Calves which the people worshipped; these vain Deities were of no more service to them than spiders webs; they could not secure them from the hands of their enemies. The Hebrew Text, which is translated Spiders Webs[15], is very intricate. The Septuagint translate it, the Calf of Samaria is deceitful, or mistaken; Symmachus, is inconstant; the fifth Edition, is gone astray, all which is much to the same purpose. The Rabbins; it is as it were dust, sawdust. The generality of modern Interpreters; it is broken to pieces. S. Jerom was inform'd by his Hebrew master, that it signified Spiders Webs, which float in the air and are soon dispersed.

Several Questions are proposed, relating to the Golden Calf formed by Aaron in the Wilderness. Some of the Rabbins are willing to excuse Aaron from the Sin committed by him in making it. They pretend that it was not he, but some Magicians of Egypt, and certain Proselytes of the same Nation, not truly converted, who, who had it made, contrary to the intention of Aaron. Josephus has concealed the matter, and omitted this story of the Golden Calf. The Septuagint say,[16] that Aaron [Exod. xxxii. 4.] described it with a graving Tool, but that the People made and cast it. Some of the Jews are of opinion, that at first a wooden Calf was formed, and that afterwards it was covered with Golden Plates. Selden[17] conjectures, that he used a graving Tool to draw those marks upon the Golden Calf, which distinguished the Ox Apis; that is to say, a Crescent on the side, and a white square spot upon the Forehead.

Some are of Opinion, that his design in casting it, was in order to draw the work out into length, and that the Idol coming out of the Furnace might have nothing beautiful and glittering in its appearance. Others on the contrary will have it, that Aaron left nothing undone to make it as beautiful and perfect as possible; and that for this reason he is said to have used a graving Tool. Formavit opere fusorio. In the Hebrew[18], He formed a calf for them with a graving tool. But the Chaldee Paraphrast differs widely from both these Versions: Aaron, he says, received their Ear-rings from them, tied them up in a Purse, and made the Golden Calf of them. Bochart maintains, that this is the best Translation of all, and that the Hebrew Charet signifies a Purse, and not a graving Tool[19].

The Mahometans[20] have a singular Tradition relating to the Golden Calf: They assert, that this Figure, which was only a Body without a Soul, made a noise like an Ox. Which Fable they dress up in the following manner. The Israelites having borrowed of the Egyptians, before their departure out of Egypt, many Vessels of Gold and Silver, and gathered abundance of rich Spoils belonging to the Egyptians, who were drowned in the Red Sea, and cast upon the Shore, began to traffick among themselves with these Jewels. Sameri, one of the principal Heads of the Hebrews, informed Aaron of it, who commanded in the absence of his Brother Moses, and told him that he did not think this kind of Commerce lawful. He required him therefore to get all these Ornaments immediately together, and keep them safe in his Possession, till the return of Moses, who was then upon Mount Sinai.

Sameri, who was very well skilled in melting down Metals, thought it would be an advantage to have all this Gold and Silver reduced into one mass, that Moses might afterwards imploy it in what man-

Yyyy ner he should judge most proper. He did so, put all these jewels into a Crucible, and without any design of his, there came out a kind of molten Calf. At the sight of this Figure, which chance had produced, the Israelites, who were accustomed to Idolatry in Egypt, conceived some respect for it, and Sameri desirous to increase their veneration for it, took dust, and threw it into the Calf's Throat, which immediately began to bellow; whereupon the Hebrews fell prostrate before it, and paid their Adorations to it. And how came Sameri by this miraculous Dust! why, he took it, they say, from under the Horse's Feet belonging to Gabriel the Arch-angel, who marched at the head of the Hebrews in the Wilderness.

The fatted Calf, mentioned in some places of the Scripture, as in Prov. xv. 17. 1 Sam. xxviii. 24. Luke xv. 25. Jer. xxvi. 21. was fatted particularly for some certain Festivals, or extraordinary Sacrifices. The Heathens had the same custom[21].

Pascitur in vestrum reditum votiva Juvenca. Calf of Lebanon spoken of in Psal. xxviii. 6. Comminuet eas tanquam vitulum Libani, may be taken simply to be a Calf or young Bullock feeding upon Libanus. The Voice of God, is Thunder, the Tempest breaketh a Cedar of Libanus, with as much ease as it oversets a Calf of Libanus. The Hebrew may be otherwise translated; The voice of the Lord maketh the Cedars of Libanus to skip like a Calf bounding in the meadows: He will shake the mountains of Libanus and Sirion like a young Unicorn.

[Hosea xiv. 2.] The Calves of the Lips mentioned by Hosea[22], We will render the Calves of our Lips, signifies Sacrifices of Praise, Prayers which the Captives of Babylon addressed to God, being no longer in a condition to offer Sacrifices in his Temple. The Septuagint read the Fruit of our Lips, instead of the Bulls of our Lips, and their reading is followed by the Syriac, and by the Apostle to the Hebrews, Ch. xiii. 15.

Jeremiah speaks of a remarkable ceremony, which is not taken notice of in the historical Books of Scripture: The Lord says, I will give the men which have transgressed my Covenant, that have not performed the words of the Covenant which they had made before me, when they cut the calf in twain, and passed between the parts thereof. When this Covenant was sworn to, and upon what occasion, no one can tell: So much however is probable, that it was not of any long date, since they who formerly had sworn to it, were still living. The custom of cutting a Victim in two, of putting the several moieties upon two different altars, and making those who contracted any Covenant pass between both is well known in Scripture and profane Authors. See Gen. xv. 9, 10, 17.

Calves

CALVES. There is very frequent mention in the Scriptures of Calves, because they were made use of commonly for Sacrifices. But Vitulus on several occasions is put for an Heifer, which, according to our way of speaking, would not be termed meerly a Calf. Vitulus de armento, a Calf of the Herd, is in all probability set in opposition to a sucking Calf, still under the care of its Dam. Vitulus is sometimes taken for a grown Bull, Circumdederunt me vituli multi. The fatted Calf, vitulus saginatus, was a Calf fatted particularly [Luke xv. 23.] for a Wedding, or some religious Feast.

To CALL. This word is taken frequently for to be. He shall be called Wonderful, the Mighty God, Counsellor, and Everlasting Father, &c. He shall possess all these Qualities, he shall be truly wonderful, the mighty God, &c. And in S. Luke, He shall be called the Son of the most High. He shall in reality be so. And again, speaking of John the Baptist, Thou shalt be called the Prophet of the Highest.

To be called by name to the Assemblies, [Numb. xvi. 2.] was a particular mark of distinction: The People were called thither by a general cry, but the Heads of the Tribes, and Princes of the People were called by name. The Hebrew [1] imports Men of name, celebrated, noted Men. God called Bezeliel by name: He designed to imploy him in making the Tabernacle. He called Abraham by name; he appointed him for his Service. God called Cyrus by name, &c.

To call in the Sense of a vocation to an Imployment, to the Christian Religion. S. Paul says, that he was called to the Apostleship. Jesus Christ, that many are called, but few are chosen. We are exhorted to live in a manner worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called. And, let every man abide in the calling wherewith he is called; and that he give diligence to make his calling sure, by doing good works. 1 Pet. i. 10.

To call any thing by its name. To give it a name, to fix a name upon it, is an exercise of Authority: The Father names his Son, the Master his Servant. God giveth the Stars a name, and calleth them by their names, Psal. cxlvii. 4.

To call the Name of any one upon ourselves [Isai. iv. 1.] or another; Let thy name be called upon us. Let us only be in the Quality ¹ 70 .ἰοτσαμονὸ ϛερδνἍαϖ אנשי שם. of thy Wives. Thy name, O Lord, is invoked or called upon us. We are known under the Name of the People of God. Let the name of Jacob be named on them, they [Gen. xlviii. 16.] shall be esteemed as Sons of Jacob. And the Psalmist, The rich have called their name upon their lands; they have denominated them by their own Names. And in [Gen. xxi. Psal. xlix. 11.] Genesis, In Isaac shall thy seed be called; the Sons of Isaac shall pass for thy true Posterity.

To call, shews Authority; as a Master calls his Servants. God calleth a Famine upon the Earth, 2 Kings viii. 1. and Psalm 1. God calleth the Earth to judge it. And in Haggai i. 11. The Lord called for a drought upon the Land. And in Amos v. 8. He calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth. And Jerem. xxv. 29. He calls for a Sword or War upon the Land, &c. He calleth the stars, and they say, here we be. Baruch iii. 34.

To Call, taken in the sense of an Invitation to a Feast, is commonly met with in the Scripture. And vocati, the called, denotes sometimes the Guests.

To call upon the name of God, to call him to our Assistance, to sue to him in our Necessities. Enos began to call upon the name of the Lord. Others translate the Hebrew, Then the name of God was profaned, by giving it to Idols. See the Article Enos.

Let thy name be called upon us. Let us have the honour to belong to thee, to be [Gen. xlviii. 16.] called thy People, thy Servants. Let my name be called on them; let them be called the Sons of Israel; let them be reputed to be my Children. Isaiah speaking of a particular time when the Land would be very much deserted, and Men very rare, says in a sort of proverbial manner, Seven women shall take hold of one man, saying, We will eat our own bread and wear our own apparel, only let us be called by thy name; take us for your Wives, and let the World own us in this Quality; free us from the reproach of Celibacy. Come and stand before me in this house, whereupon thy name is called. This Temple known by the name of the Temple of the Lord. O my [Dan. ix. 18.] God, open thine eyes and behold the city whereupon thy name is called; Jerusalem known by the name of the holy City, the City of the Lord.

To call upon God, is an expression sometimes used to signify all the acts of Religion, for the publick Worship of God. [Rom. x. 13.] Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. Whosoever shall believe, hope, love and pray, as he ought to do, shall be saved. God in some sort takes it for an Honour, that we should call upon him; he is in some sort jealous of our Adorations; he requires that we should call upon no other God besides himself. [Ps. l. 15.] Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee; and thou shalt glorify me. Thy deliverance, and the confidence which thou hast reposed in me, shall redound to my Glory.

Calvary

CALVARY, or Golgotha[1], that is to say, the place of Skulls. A little Mountain to the North of Mount Sion[2], went by this name, probably by reason of the similitude it bore to the figure of a Skull, or Man's Head. Many of the Ancients were of opinion[3], that this Mountain was called Calvary, because the Head of the first Man in the world was buried there; and that our Saviour was crucified in the same place, that his blood running down upon the body of this person, who was the first of mankind, he might thereby be restored to Life, and the favour of a Resurrection procured by it. To support this Tradition, they tell us, that Noah having put his Body in the Ark, distributed the Relicks of it to his Children, and as a particular favour gave the Skull or Head to Shem, who was to be the Parent of that holy Stock, from which the Messiah was to descend; that Shem with a spirit of foresight buried this Skull at Calvary, where he knew the Messiah would be crucified. But neither the ancient Fathers, nor any modern Authors, that mention these Traditions, were ever well persuaded of the truth of them, and we may, without any disrespect to them, take these to be apocryphal Stories.

Mount Calvary was very near to Jerusalem, and was the place, in all probability, where criminals were generally executed. After the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans in the reign of Titus, it was by degrees rebuilt, and the Jews were very numerous there, when Barchochebas revolted against the Romans. Adrian, or his Generals were forced to besiege it, and having taken it they entirely destroyed it[4]. After this Turanus Rufus, or Tinnius Rufus, who was then Governour of Judæa, plowed up the ground, on which the Temple formerly had stood[5], to shew that this place was never to be rebuilt, without a particular Decree of the Senate. When the War was ended, Adrian forbad the Jews ever to set footing in Jerusalem, upon pain of death to those who should act contrary to this order[6]. He settled a Roman Colony in the place, and called the City Ælia Capitolina. This new City was not built upon the ruins of the old, but more to the North; so that Mount Calvary, which before lay out of the City, was almost in the center of Ælia. There was but a small part of old Jerusalem included within this City. Mount Sion, where the Temple stood before, was either cultivated as a field, or was covered with ruins[7].

At present the City of Jerusalem is in the same place, where Adrian built it. But whereas this Prince had profaned Mount Calvary, and in particular the place, where Jesus Christ was crucified, and that where his body had been buried, the Empress Helena, Mother to Constantine the Great, erected there a stately Church, which is still in being, and enriched it with abundance of magnificent ornaments. So that the Cross and Sepulcher of Jesus Christ, and Calvary, are more honoured by all Christians, than old Jerusalem ever was by the Children of the Synagogue .

Cambyses

CAMBYSES, the Son of Cyrus, succeeded his Father in the year of the world 3475, before the vulgar Æra 529. This Prince was violent, passionate, and cruel; he had sometimes fits of passion which proceeded to downright madness. We do not here take upon us to set down the History of his whole Life: It is sufficient to observe what may have a relation to the Scripture, and the Jewish History. As soon as he came to the Crown, the Samaritans, who in the reign of Cyrus never ventured to attack the Jews any otherwise than privately, and in an indirect manner, now set upon them directly and openly, and wrote to [Ezra iv. 6.] Cambyses, whom they call Ahasuerus, to follicit him, that he would forbid the Jews to carry on their works any farther in rebuilding of their Temple. What the motives were, which they made use of, we cannot tell; but it is certain, that Cambyses put a stop to the works, and for the remaining seven years and five months of his life, no one was employed upon this Edifice.

In the second year of his reign, he prepared to make war against Egypt. One of the King of Egypt's Eunuchs, who betrayed his Master, and delivered up the bridges and avenues of the Country to Cambyses, made his entrance into Egypt, [In the year of the world 3478, before the vulgar Æra 526.] and the conquest of it easy to him. After five years continuance in this Country, he was obliged to leave it and return to Babylon, where the Magus Pathizites had placed his own Brother Smerdis on the throne of Persia, pretending that he was Smerdis the Brother of Cambyses. Cambyses was at Ecbatane in Palestine, at the foot of Mount Carmel, when news was brought him, that Smerdis had usurp'd the Empire. Whereupon in great transports of rage he mounted his horse with precipitation, and his sword by accident falling out of its scabbard wounded him in the thigh. Twenty days after, seeing himself to be near the point of death, he called the principal men of Persia about him, and told them, that he had put to death his Brother Smerdis, and that he who reigned was an Usurper. He exhorted them that they would not suffer his crime to go unpunished, and that they would hinder Smerdis from translating the Empire from the Persians to the Medes[1]. For Smerdis was by birth a Mede. After this he died at Ecbatane, as the Oracle had foretold; not at Ecbatane in Media, as he imagined, but at Ecbatane in Syria.

What Ezekiel says of the Wars of Gog and Magog against Israel, and the judgment which God was to exercise against the enemies of his people, we think may be referred to the time of Cambyses. And what the Prophets say of all those misfortunes which were to befal the Israelites after the return from their Captivity, is, probably, all applicable to this event. See for example, Joel ii. 30, 31. iii. 2, 3, 4, 5, 15, 16. Isai. xli. 15, 16. Micah iv. 11, 12, 13. Lastly, some Authors[2] refer the History of Judith to the time of Cambyses. The Reader may consult our Dissertation upon Gog and Magog, prefixed to Ezekiel.

Camel

CAMEL, an Animal very common in Arabia, Judæa, and the neighbouring Countries. It is called Gamal in Scripture; and as to the signification of its name there is no difficulty. Moses ranks it among those creatures that were unclean. We [Deut. xiv. 7. Levit. xi. 4. Ezek. xxxviii. xxxix.] may distinguish three sorts of Camels: Some are large and full of flesh, and fit only to carry burthens; it is said that they will carry a thousand pound weight. Others there are, which have two bunches upon their backs, like a natural saddle, which makes them fit either to carry burthens, or for men to ride on. Lastly, there is a third kind, which is leaner, and of a smaller size; these they call Dromedaries, because of their swiftness. These are the Animals generally made use of by men of quality to ride on. The Arabians, Persians, and other people eat the flesh of Camels, and it is served up at the best tables[1]. But the use of it was forbid the Hebrews, as we have observed already. Eliezer, Abraham's servant, vant, made his Camels kneel down to rest themselves near a well of water. Camels keep Water a long time in their Stomach for their Refreshment. Nature has given them for this purpose a very large Ventricle, round about which are many bags closed within the Coats of it, wherein it is very probable that these Animals keep water in reserve. It is confidently said, that they will continue ten or twelve days without either eating or drinking.

But what is usually said of these Bags to be found about the Stomach of Camels, and their reserving water for many days in them, is contradicted by the physical Observations of the Jesuits made in China, where they dissected several Camels, and found nothing like them. As soon as a Camel is born, they tie his four Feet under his Belly, put a Carpet over his Back, and Stones upon the Borders of it, that he may not be able to rise for twenty days together. Thus they teach him the habit of bending his Knees to rest himself, or when he is to be loaded or unloaded. He has a large solid Foot, but not a hard one; in the Spring all his Hair falls off in less than three days time, and his Skin remains quite naked. At such times the Flies are extremely uneasy to him, and there is no remedy besides belabouring his Body. They dress him with a Switch instead of a Curry Comb; with this they beat him as they wou'd a Carpet, to clear it of the dust. When he is upon a Journey, his Master follows him singing and whistling, and the louder he sings, the better the Camel goes.

Cameleon

CAMELEON. Moses forbids the Hebrews to eat the Flesh of a Cameleon, it being an unclean Animal. The Cameleon is a [Levit. xi. 30.] little creature like a Lizard, but with a larger and longer Head. It has four Feet, and on each Foot three Claws. Its Tail is long; with this as well as with its Feet it fastens itself to the Branches of Trees. Its Tail is flat, its Nose long, and made in an obtuse Point; its Back is sharp, its Skin plaited, and jagged like a Saw from the Neck to the last Joint of the Tail, and upon its Head it has something like a Comb. In other respects it is made like a Fish; that is to say, it has no neck. Some have asserted, that it lives only upon Air; for which reason Tertullian[1] calls it a living Skin: But they who have observed it more nearly, take notice that it feeds on Flies, which it catches with its Tongue; its Tongue is about ten lines long, and three large, made of white Flesh, round, and flat at the end; or it is hollow and open in some sort like an Elephant's Trunk. In like manner it shrinks or grows longer. This Creature darts it upon Flies, draws it back immediately, and there they stick upon it as it were upon Glew.

It is said likewise to assume the colour of those things, to which it is applied;[2] that it grows white upon any thing that is white, and black or red on any thing black or red. But our modern Naturalists assure us, that its natural colour when it is at rest, and in the Shade, is a blueish grey. There are some yellow, and others green, which are of the smaller kind. When it is exposed to the Sun, this grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to a dun colour; and its parts which have least of the light upon them, are changed into different colours, which form spots of the bigness of about half an Inch. The grain of its Skin when the light does not shine upon it, is like Clothes mixed with many colours. Sometimes as we handle it, it seems to be speckled with dark spots inclining to green. If it is put upon a black Hat, it appears to be of a Violet colour. Sometimes again, if it is wrapped up in Linen, when it is taken off it is white; but it is not true that it takes the colour of those Stuffs which it is covered with: It changes colour in some parts only of the Body. This is what is said of the Cameleon.

But we very much question, whether the Hebrew term, which the Author of the Vulgate has translated Camelion, and which Moses forbids the Hebrews to eat, as an unclean creature, be truly a Cameleon. Bochart, who has considered with much application what relates to the Animals, which the Scripture mentions, is of opinion, that the Hebrew[3] hakoah signifies a sort of large strong Lizard, found often in Arabia, which attacks Serpents in their Holes, drives them out, and kills them. The Arabians call it Aluarlo.

Camelo-Pardus

CAMELO-PARDUS, or Camelo- Pardalus, an Animal like a Camel and a Panther; the use whereof the Hebrews [Deut. xiv. 5, 6.] were allowed by Moses. It derives its name from the resemblance it bears to a Camel in its Size, and a Panther in its Hair, having its Skin speckled with white upon a reddish ground. It is said to be produced by the Copulation of a she Panther with a Camel, or rather of a Panther with a female Camel: But both are equally improbable.

Others translate Camelo-Pardalus, Giraffa, which is a Beast found in the East Indies, beyond the River Ganges. Its Neck is long and slender, about a Fathom in length: Its Ears are slit, and its Feet cloven; its Tail is round, and does not reach below its Houghs: Its Legs are taller than any other Animal's, so that it cannot drink without stradling. It is described with two little Horns. Others maintain, that it is a chimerical Animal, which has no real existence any where. Bochart is of opinion that Moses did not intend to mention either the Giraffa or the Camelopardus; because these were Animals which the Hebrews had no knowledge of, and were not to be found any where but in Countries too remote from theirs. Moreover he says, that the Camel being an Animal which was declared unclean by the Law, it is not probable that a Beast compounded of a Camel and a Panther should be allowed of. Lastly, He thinks the Hebrew Zamor signifies a wild Goat. Others translate it an Elk or wild Goat.

Caminus

[Jerem. xxxvi. 22. Exod. ix. 8.] CAMINUS, Furnace, Hearth, Chimney[1]. We are not to imagine, that either the Hebrews or Egyptians had Chimneys like ours, nor that Caminus signifies properly a Chimney made after our manner. In Palestine, Arabia and Egypt, People use very little Fire to warm themselves, because these Countries are very hot; and whenever they do warm themselves, it is at a Hearth or foot Stove filled with Coals. King Jehoiakim was seated in his winter Apartment, with a Fire on the Hearth before him, when Jeremiah's Roll was presented to him. He cut it with a Pen-knife, and threw it into the Fire which was upon the Hearth. When it is said in Exodus, that Moses took Ashes out of the Chimney, Plenas [Ex. ix. 8.] manus cineris de camino, the Hebrew reads Furnace[2], or Forge, de fornace. The Scripture speaks frequently of Caminus, or the Forge or Crucible wherein Gold or Silver are refined, and Metals are melted; and the sad and deplorable condition of the Poor, of Slaves, and [Prov. xvii. 3. Rev. i. 15. Eccl. ii. 5.] People under Oppression, is by a Metaphor called, the Furnace of Humility, Poverty and Servitude. Moses says, that God delivered the Hebrews out of the Iron Furnace, out of Egypt; an expression which we find repeated [Jer. xlviii. 10. Eccl. ii. 5. Rev. ii. 15. Deut. iv. 20. 1 Kings viii. 35. Jer. xi. 4.] in several places of Scripture. See hereafter the Article Punishments for the fiery Furnace into which Daniel was cast.

Canaan

CANAAN, the Son of Ham. The Hebrews[1] believe, that Canaan having first discovered Noah's nakedness, gave notice of it to his Father Ham; that Ham diverted himself with it, and acquainted his Brothers Shem and Japhet with it, who with Respect covered their Father: That Noah when he awoke, having understood what had passed, cursed Canaan, who was the first Author of this indecency. Others are of opinion[2], that Noah, not knowing how to do any thing more sensibly displeasing to his Son Ham, than by cursing Canaan, resolved thus to punish him in the person of his Son. Some, instead of Cursed be Canaan, a servant of Servants shall he be unto his brethren, read, Cursed be Ham, &c. or supply, cursed be the Father of Canaan: The effect of Noah's curse appeared in the Anathema pronounced by God against the Canaanites, and in the severity wherewith he required his People to treat them, when they had made a conquest of their Country. The Canaanites were not reduced only to suffer [Vide Deut. vii. 2, 26. xiii. 15. and xx. 17. Vide Lev. xvii. 25. Deut. xviii. 9. and xx. 16, 17. Gen. x. 15, 16, 17.] the most cruel slavery, but were intirely extirpated, put to the Sword, or driven out of their own Land.

The Posterity of Canaan was very numerous. His eldest Son was Sidon; who at least founded, and peopled the City of Sidon, and was the Father of the Sidonians and Phœnicians. Canaan had besides ten Sons, who were the Fathers of so many People dwelling in Palestine, and in part of Syria, namely the Hittites, the Jebusites, the Amorites, the Girgasites, the Hivites, the Arkites, the Sinites, the Arvadites, the Zemarites, and Hamathites. Of each of these People we shall say something under their particular Articles. ticles. It is believed, that Canaan lived and died in Palestine, which from his name was commonly called the Land of Canaan, and formerly his Tomb was shewn there, of five and twenty Feet in length, in a Cave belonging to the mountain of Leopards, as they termed it, not far from Jerusalem.

The Mahometans are of Opinion, that Canaan perished by the Waters of the Deluge; he refusing to go into the Ark. Mahomet makes God speak to Noah after the following manner: Take and carry with you into the ark two couples of all creatures male and female, and all your family, excepting Him, who has already been condemned by your own mouth (that is to say Canaan). Receive likewise with you the faithful, and even unbelievers; but of these very few shall enter. In pursuance of this Command Noah admitted fourscore persons into the Ark, and observing that his Grandson Canaan did not embark with him, and as yet not knowing that he was of the number of Unbelievers, he called to him, Come aboard with us, my Son, and be not among Infidels. Canaan replied, I will save my self upon the Mountain, where the water will not reach me. But Noah answered, Nothing but the Mercy of God can save you. While they were thus talking together, a Wave separated them, and covered Canaan, who was immediately drowned. After this manner Mahomet corrupts the holy Scriptures, by mingling his own imaginations with them.

Canaanites

CANAANITES, People descended from Canaan, and the eleven Sons of this Patriarch. Their first habitation was in the Land of Canaan, where they multiplied extremely. Trade and War were their principal Occupations: These gave rise to their great Riches, and the several Colonies scattered by them over almost all the Islands, and maritime Provinces of the Mediterranean. The measure of their Idolatries and Abominations was compleated, when God delivered their Country into the hands of the Israelites, who made a Conquest of it under Joshua. As God had commanded this People, long before cursed by him, to be treated with the utmost rigour, Joshua extirpated great numbers of them, and obliged the rest to fly, some into Africk, others into Greece. Nay, there are some Writers, who seem persuaded, that many of them came into Germany and Sclavonia, and that others retired into America.

But their Opinion seems to be the best founded, who affirm that they withdrew into Africk. The Rabbins assure us, that the Girgasites took this resolution: But they do not inform us to what part of Africk they retired. Procopius[1] says, that they first retreated into Egypt; but not thinking themselves to be secure there, they advanced farther into Africk, where they built many cities, and spread themselves over all those vast Regions, which reach as far as Hercules's Pillars, preserving their old Language, with some little alteration. This Author adds, that in the Province called Tingitana, and in the very antient city of Tingis, which was founded by them, there were two great Pillars to be seen of white Stone, erected near a large Fountain, with an Inscription in Phœnician characters, to this purpose, We are People preserved by flight from that Rover Jesus the Son of Nave, who pursued us. In S. Athanasius's time the Africans still said, they were descended from the Canaanites; and when they were asked, what was their Original, they answered, Canani[2]. It is agreed, that the Punic tongue was almost intirely the same as the Canaanitish and Hebrew Language.

The Colonies which Cadmus carried to Thebes in Bœotia, and his Brother Cilix into Cilicia, came from the Stock of Canaan. The Isles of Sicily, Sardinia, Malta, Cyprus, Corfu, Majorca, and Minorca, Gades and Ebusus, are thought to have been peopled by the Canaanites. Bochart, in his large Work, intitled Canaan, has set all this matter in a good light. We too have taken some pains in enquiring particularly to what Country the Canaanites retired, after their expulsion from their own by Joshua, and we have examined the several Arguments produced by those who affirm, that they settled in Armenia. See our Dissertation prefixed to the Comment upon Joshua.

Candace

[Acts viii. 26.] CANDACE, the name of an Ethiopian Queen, whose Eunuch coming to Jerusalem to worship the Lord, was baptized by Philip the Deacon, near Bethsura, in the way to Gaza, as he was returning to his own Country; as we shall relate in the Article of Philip the Deacon. Some are of opinion, that the word Candace signified Sovereign Authority, and that this was the common name of all those Queens, who reigned in the Island, or Peninsula of Meroë; for this is the Country here meant by Ethiopia. Pliny[1] testifies, that the Government of this Country was generally in the hands of Women, and that there had already been a great number of this name Candace, who had reigned there. Some of the Fathers were of opinion,[2] that the Eunuch's name was Candace; whether the Copies which they used, might so express it, or that this was a mistake occasioned by forgetfulness. getfulness, it is said, that Queen Candace was converted, and believed in Jesus Christ, persuaded hereunto by the preaching of her Eunuch.

Candlestick of Gold with seven Branches

CANDLESTICK of Gold with seven Branches: This was made by Moses to be put into the Tabernacle: It was of hammered [Exod. xxv. 31, 32.] Gold, a Talent in Weight. It had one Foot of the same Metal, and a Stock with seven Branches, adorned at equal distances with six Flowers, like Lilies, with as many Bowls and Knops placed alternately. Upon the Stock and six Branches of the Candlestick were the golden Lamps which were immoveable, wherein there was put Oil and Cotton. These seven Lamps were lighted every Evening, and extinguished every Morning. The Holy, wherein the Candlestick was placed, was as it were the Antichamber to the Sanctuary, and received no light from any other place, but from the Candlestick. It was placed on the South side in the Holy, and served to illuminate the Altar of Perfume, and the Table of Shew-bread, which were in the same place.

When Solomon had built the Temple of the Lord, he was not satisfied with placing one golden Candlestick there, but had ten put up of the same form and Metal with that described by Moses; five on the North, and five on the South side of the [1 Kings vii. 49.] Holy. The Tongs and Snuffers belonging to the golden Candlesticks, as well to that of Moses as to those of Solomon, were of very pure Gold. David seems to have designed Silver for making Silver Candlesticks, as well as Gold for others of this Metal. But we do not find that his Intentions [1 Chr. xxviii. 13.] as to this particular were executed; unless Solomon made some of Silver for the use of the Temple, different from the golden ones which were placed in the Holy.

After the Jews returned from their Captivity, the golden Candlestick was again placed in the Temple, as it had been before in the Tabernacle by Moses; and in [Zech. iv. 2. 11. 1 Macc. iv. 49, 50.] Zechariah there is express mention of it, as well as in the Books of the Maccabees. Josephus says, that after the Romans had destroyed the Temple, the several things which were found within it, were carried in triumph to Rome, viz. the golden Table, and the golden Candlestick with seven Branches. But then he adds, that the Candlestick was fashioned in a different form from that which was used in his Nation; for it was made in the shape of a Pillar, raised upon a Basis, from the shaft of which Pillar there came out as it were six sorts of Sticks, or very slender Branches, which ended in a triangle, and bore each a Lamp. The Table and Candlestick were lodged in the Temple built by Vespasian, and consecrated to Peace; and at the foot of Mount Palatine there is a triumphal Arch still visible, upon which Vespasian's Triumph is represented, and the several Monuments, which were carried publickly in the Procession, are engraved, among the rest the Candlestick with seven Branches is to be observed on it[1].

The golden Candlestick with seven Branches seen in a Vision by the Prophet [Zech. iv. 2, 3. Exod. xxv. 31. xxxvii. 17, 18. 1 Kings vii. 4.] Zechary, was like that of Moses, and those provided by Solomon: All the difference was this only, that in the others the Priests poured the Oil separately into each crystal Glass; in this the Oil was communicated equally to the seven crystal Glasses through seven Pipes, which received it from one common Bottle placed at the head or upper part of the Candlestick; and this Bottle was filled with Oil which dropped down within, through two kinds of Tunnels, which received it from two Olive Trees placed on the two sides of the Candlestick. We do not believe that this Lamp ever was in being: But there is no difficulty in the Composition of it. In our Comment on the Prophet Zechary, we have explained the riddle concealed under the vision of this Candlestick.

Canon

CANON. This term signifies Rule, according to the import of the Greek: It is particularly used in the language of the Church, to signify such Rules as are prescribed by Councils, concerning Faith, Discipline, and Manners. It is made use of likewise to denote those Books of Scripture, which are received as inspired, and canonical, and to distinguish them from either profane, apocryphal, or disputed Books. For example, we say, that Genesis is part of the sacred Canon of the Scriptures, and is acknowledged to be canonical by both Jews and Christians. On the contrary, the Book of Wisdom is said to be in the Christian Canon, but not in that of the Jews. Lastly, it is said, that particular Books have been for some time contested, and have not been received into the Canon with the unanimous consent of all Christian Churches, till after some ages ; such as Books of Wisdom, Eccle- Ecclesiasticus, Tobit, Judith, the two first Books of Maccabees and Baruch; and for the New Testament, the Epistle to the Hebrews, the second of S. Peter, the second and third of S. John, and the Revelations.

GOLDEN CANDLESTICK WITH SEVEN BRANCHESX. 2.

THE GOLDEN CANDLE-STICK WITH SEVEN BRANCHES.seen by Zechariah in a Vision. Zech. IV.

The Hebrews admit no more than two and twenty Books into their Canon of the Scriptures, or at most but four and twenty, supposing Ruth to be separated from Judges, and the Lamentations from Jeremiah: The manner of their distributing them in their Bible, may be seen under the Article Bible. They believe generally that the Canon of Scripture was not closed, as they term it; that is to say, that the number of inspired Books which it includes, was not fixed in the manner we have related, till the time of Esdras, who, with the consent of the General Council of the whole Nation, collected all the sacred and inspired Books, which were acknowledged as such by the Jews, composed one Body of them, and regulated, what we call the second Canon of the Scripture[1]. So that ever since the Jews have not admitted any Book among those, which they hold to be canonical: At least they have received none, which have the same degree of Authority with them as the former: This we learn from Josephus[2], who tells us, that from Moses to the reign of Artaxerxes King of Persia, the Jews had received two and twenty Books from the Prophets, which they looked upon to be divine,[3] and did not dare to make any the least alteration in them; and that after the time of Artaxerxes, they continued with the same diligence to write down every thing memorable, which happened to their Nation; but that the Books which have been so composed, are not allowed to have an equal degree of Authority with the first.

Genebrard and Serranus are of opinion, that after Esdras, the Jews of the great Synagogue admitted Books into the Canon, which were composed after this time; such as Wisom, Ecclesiasticus, Tobit, Judith, and the two Books of the Maccabees; nevertheless, that their Authority was not the same with them, as that of the old ones, tho' these too were held by them to be inspired. But this is not without some Difficulty; for first, it is very probable, that the Books of Tobit and Judith were written before the Captivity. Secondly, If the Jews thought they were inspired, why did they not receive them into the Canon, and own them to be of equal Authority with the rest? The reason which Josephus gives for it[4], which is, that from the time of Artaxerxes, there was no succession, as there had been, of the Prophets, is of no weight: For if they had men among them, who were acknowledged to be inspired, and had written the Books which we are speaking of, could not these inspired persons have added their Books to the Canon, which was composed by Esdras? Had not Mattathias, Judas Maccabeus, Simeon and Jonathan his Brothers, had not they Authority to do so? And John Hircanus, whom Josephus himself declares[5] to have been a Man particularly favoured by God, and supernaturally enlightned, could not he too have done the same thing? The Author of the second [2 Macc. ii. 14.] Book of Maccabees[6] says, that Judas Maccabeus imitated the zeal and care of Nehemiah in collecting those Books, which contained the History of what had happened to the Jews, during the War against the Syrians. Why did not Judas insert these Monuments in the Canon, since he thought them so much to deserve his care and consideration?

It may be perhaps suspected, that the Jews, who retained the use of the Hebrew Tongue, might have expunged these Books out of the Canon, because they were not written in Hebrew, which is the sacred Language. But they received without scruple Daniel and Esdras, wherein there are several large passages to be found, which are written in Chaldee: Now it is certain, that Ecclesiasticus, Tobit and Judith, and at least the first Book of Maccabees, were originally written in this Language. Might not the envy conceived by the Hebraizing Jews, against the Hellenistical part of this People, have been the cause of this diversity, and have induced the Hebraizing Jews to exclude those very Books out of their Canon, which the Hellenists esteemed to be inspired? Or, lastly, the vain superstition of the Jews might have been the reason of their doing so; since out of a mistaken respect for the disposition made by Esdras, they might not venture to touch that Canon of the Scriptures, which he had formed. However this may be, the Christian Church received these Books without doubt from the Jews, and probably from the the Hellenists too, and she certainly would never have received them as inspired, and as such have inserted them into her Canon, if they, from whose hands they were conveyed to her, had not themselves acknowledged them to be inspired and Canonical.

If particular Churches have sometimes deliberated, whether they should range them among the sacred Writings; if some Doctors and Councils have not included them in their Catalogues of the Scriptures; and others have formally rejected them, this ought not to offend any one; for such a conduct is a proof of nothing but the great circumspection, which the Church has used, and the care which it has taken to receive nothing into its Canon, but what really was inspired; and this reserve should be a demonstration to us, that if at last it has determined to receive them, there were good reasons for its doing so. Time was necessary to examine the Tradition of the Churches in order to be well assured of it, and to fix the doubts of such particular Churches, as from the beginning had not received them. Those among the Ancients who did not admit the Books, which we are speaking of to be canonical, kept close to the Canon of the Hebrews, the Christian Church as yet having none solemnly approved of by a general Council. But since the Council of Trent there is a perfect uniformity in the Church , both of language and opinions in this matter.

Canthara

CANTHARA. Simon Canthara the Son of Simon Boethus, was advanced to the dignity of High Priest of the Jews, by the favour of Agrippa, firnamed the Great, by whose procurement he succeeded Theophilus the Son of Jonathan[1]. He enjoyed this dignity for about two years[2] at two several times. The first for one year, having been obliged to resign in favour of Matthias the Son of Ananus[3], and the second time he succeeded Elimæus. After the death of Agrippa, Herod King of Chalcis deprived him of this dignity, in order to confer it upon Joseph the Son of Camith[4].

Canticles

[Exod. xv. 1, 2, &c.] CANTICLES, or Songs. The Hebrews had a custom of composing Songs upon important occasions; for example, Moses made one after the passage of the Red Sea, to thank God for the deliverance of his people, and celebrate the greatness of this Miracle. David composed a mournful Song upon the death of Saul and [2 Sam. i. 18. 2 Sam. iii. 33.] Jonathan, and another upon the death of Abner. Jeremiah wrote his Lamentations, which are a Song, wherein he deplores the ruin of Jerusalem; and made another upon the death of Josiah King of Judah. Deborah [2 Chron. xxxv. 25. Judg. v. 1, 2, 3, &c. 1 Sam. ii. 1, 2, &c. 2 Sam. xxxviii. 10, 11. & seq. Judith xv. 1. 2. 1 Kings iv. 32.] and Barak made a triumphant Hymn after the defeat of Sisera, and Judith after the defeat of Holofernes.

The Canticles, and the xlix Psalm, are Songs to celebrate a wedding, such pieces as the Greeks call Epithalamia. Hannah the Mother of Samuel, and King Hezekiah, returned thanks to God for the favours they had received in solemn and spiritual Songs. The Canticles composed by the Blessed Virgin, by Zachary the Father of John the Baptist, and old Simeon, are of the same nature. They are thanksgivings to God, for blessings received from him. The Scripture says[1], that Solomon had composed five thousand Songs, whereof we have that only remaining which is intitled, The Song of Songs, which we shall now speak of in a distinct Article.

Canticles (II)

II. CANTICLES, or the Songs of Solomon. This is a sacred Book in Scripture, by the Hebrews called Schir Haschirim, the Song of Songs, or the most excellent of all Songs. It is believed that Solomon composed it upon the occasion of his own Marriage with the King of Egypt's Daughter, and that it is, as it were, his Epithalamium; but they who would penetrate the meaning, and comprehend the whole mystery of it, must raise their conceptions above things relating to flesh and blood, and contemplate in it the espousals of Jesus Christ with human Nature, with the Church, and with good and faithful Souls. This is the Key of this divine Book, which is a continued allegory, wherein under the terms of a common Wedding, a divine and supernatural Marriage is expressed.

[Gen. xxix. 22. Judg. xiv. 12, 15, 17. Tob. viii. 23.] It is observed that seven nights and seven days are very distinctly set down in this Song; because Weddings among the Hebrews were celebrated for seven days. This Song relates the adventures of these seven days, but in a poetical manner and in a way very different from a common and historical narration. The Hebrews apprehending it might be understood in a gross and carnal manner, very prudently forbad the reading it before the age of thirty[1]. This rule has been followed even among Christians: and nothing is more dangerous than to read it with carnal thoughts and dispositions; People not only being liable to the hazard of losing thereby all the esteem which they ought to have for this Book; but of even wounding the Soul instead of edifying it.

The Christian Church as well as the Synagogue, has always received this Book among the Scriptures as generally owned to be canonical[2]. In all Antiquity we know of none but Theodorus of Mopsuesta that rejected it, and declared it not to be canonical. Some Rabbins questioned whether it were written by inspiration; and the Anabaptists lay it aside as a dangerous composition. But in opposition to these we plead the Authority both of the Synagogue and the Christian Church, which have at all times ranked it among the least dubious parts of Scripture. If it be objected, that neither Christ nor his Apostles have ever cited it, and that the name of God is not once to be found in it, we answer, that there are several other Sacred Books, which our Saviour has not expresly quoted; and that in an allegory, wherein the Son of God is concealed under the figure of an Husband, it is not necessary that he should be expressed by his proper name. If he were by name mentioned, it would cease to be an allegory.

It was still to be seen in the seventh and eighth Ages, as is manifest from the travels of Adamnanus, and S. Willibaldus. Adamnanus says, that it extended itself from West to East, having a Mountain to the North, and the lake of Tiberias to the South; our Saviour preached frequently at Capernaum, and wrought many Miracles there: But the Inhabitants were not the better for all his instructions; wherewith he reproaches them sharply, telling them, that tho' they were exalted unto Heaven, they should be [Mat. xi. 23.] brought down to Hell; and that if he had done as many Miracles in Tyre and Sidon, as he had performed in that City, Tyre and Sidon, which were heathen places, would have been long before converted. At Capernaum, Jesus Christ called S. Matthew, [Mat. ix. 9.] and invited him to follow him.

Caphtor

CAPHTOR, the Island Caphtor, [Deut. ii. 23. Jer. xlvii. 4. Amos ix. 7. Gen. x. 14. Deut. ii. 23.] whence came the Caphtorims. Otherwise called, Cretims, Cerethims, or Philistines. The generality of Interpreters believe, that by Caphtoris was signified Cappadocia, and by Caphtorims, the Cappadocians; and that the Philistines and Cerethims came from thence. In the first edition of our Comment upon Genesis chap. x. 14. we said, that the Caphtorims came from the Isle of Cyprus. But we have since endeavoured in a particular dissertation printed before the first Book of Samuel, to shew that they were originally of the Isle of Crete. The reasons which persuaded us, that Caphtor is the Isle of Crete, are these following. The Philistines were Strangers in Palestine; this the Scripture observes expressly. The Septuagint [Gen. x. 14 Jerem. xlvii. 4. Amos ix. 7. Ezek. xxv. 16.] always translate this name Allophuloi; that is to say, Strangers. Their proper name was Cherethims, as we may see by Ezekiel, Zephaniah, and the first Book of Samuel. Ezekiel speaking against the Philistines has these words, I will stretch out mine hand upon the Philistines, and I will cut off the Cherethims, and destroy the remnant of the sea coast. Zephaniah inveighing against the same People, Wo unto [Zeph. ii. 5.] the inhabitants of the sea coasts, the nation of the Cherethites. And the Sacred Historian says, that the Amalekites made an Irruption, [1 Sam. xxx. 14, 15.] into the country of the Cherethites; that is to say, of the Philistines, as the sequel of the discourse proves: And afterwards the Kings of Judah had foreign Guards called Cherethites and Pelethites, who were of the number of the Philistines.

[Ezek. xxv. 16. 2 Sam. xv. 18. See the Comment.] The Septuagint, under the name of Cherethites, understood the Cretans, and by *Chereth, Crete*o. Besides, the Scripture says, that the Philistines came from the Isle of Caphtor[1]. Now we see no Island in the Mediterranean, wherein the marks, whereby the Scripture describes Caphtor and Cherethim, agree better than in the Isle of Crete. The name Cretim or Cherethim is the same with that of Cretenses. We know of a River there called Kairat, of the Goddess Ceres[2]; of the Curetes who brought up Jupiter on mount Ida; and of Curetis the name given to the whole Island. The Cretans are one of the most antient and celebrated People which inhabited the Islands of the Mediterranean. They pretended to have been produced originally out of their own Soil: This Island was already well peopled in the time of the Trojan War; Homer calls it the Island with a hundred Cities[3]. The City of Gaza in Palestine went by the name of Minoa[4], because of Minos King of Crete, who coming into that Country, called this antient City by his own name.

Herodotus[5] acknowledges, that the Cretans were originally all Barbarians, and did not come from Greece. Homer says, that a different Language was spoken in the Isle of Crete, that there were Greeks there, true Cretans, or antient Cretans, Pelasgians, &c. The antient Cretans are the same as the Cherethites, the Pelasgians are the Philistines or Pelethites of the Scripture. Their Language was the same with that of the Canaanites or Phœnicians, that is to say, Hebrew: they were descended as well as Canaan from [Gen. x. 6, 13, 14.] Ham by Misraim.

The Manners, Arms, Religion and Gods of the Cretans and Philistines were pretty near the same. The Arms of both one and the other were Bows and Arrows. Dagon the God of the Philistines was the same as the Dictimus of the Cretans. Stephen the Geographer says, that Marnas of Gaza, is the Jupiter of the Cretans. The God Belzebub, or the God Fly was in all probability in memory of the Bees which fed Jupiter on mount Ida, and were rewarded by this Deity, with several Prerogatives, particularly he changed their black colour into that of Brass bordering upon Gold[6].

It may be objected against our opinion[7], that in Abraham's time the Philistines were already settled in Palestine, and that the Isle of Crete could not then be very well peopled, much less send Colonies into Palestine; I answer, that Abraham's time, that is to say, the year of the World 2090, or thereabouts, was four hundred and thirty four years from the Deluge, and about three hundred and twenty years from the dispersion of the People at Babel. Mizraim, Grandfather to the Philistines and Caphtorims, had a numerous Family. He was the immediate Son of Ham, and peopled Egypt betimes. The passage from Egypt to the Isle of Crete is neither long nor difficult; and what may not be done in the space of three or four hundred years? Aptera a City of Crete has a sensible relation to Caphtor; this name was given it by King Apterus. Near this City it was, that the Syrens being conquer'd by the Muses, lost their wings.

Capitation of the Jews

[Exod. xxx. 30.] CAPITATION of the Jews. Moses ordained, that every Israelite should pay by the head half a shekel for his Soul, or for his Redemption, that there might be no plague among the people when they were numbred. And many learned Interpreters are of opinion, that this law was designed by Moses to take place, as often as the people were numbred; and that David having failed in the payment of the half-shekel per Head, when he appointed an enquiry to be made into the number of his subjects, God therefore punished this neglect with the death of so many of them. But the generality maintain, that Moses here laid this tax upon all the people, payable every year, to provide for the expences of keeping up the Tabernacle, for the sacrifices, wood, oil, wine, flour, habits, and subsistence of the Priests and Levites. In our Saviour's time this Tribute was paid very exactly to the Temple. See hereafter Didrachma.

[Nehem. x. 32.] The Israelites at their return from the Captivity of Babylon obliged themselves to pay one third part of a Shekel to the Temple, they in all probability not being in a condition at that time, by reason of their poverty, to do more. After the destruction of the Temple by the Romans[1], the Jews were compell'd to pay the half Shekel to the Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, which had been customarily given to the Temple of Jerusalem. They levied it throughout all the Provinces where any of them were settled, and they had Procurators who carried it to Jerusalem. Cicero remarks[2], that Flaccus would not suffer that to be conveyed thither which was collected among the Jews in Italy, and Titus speaking to the Jews[3], reproaches them with their ingratitude, for employing this tax against their Benefactors, and in carrying on the War with the Romans, which the Emperors of Rome had by a particular indulgence permitted them to levy.

The Rabbins observe, that even the Priests and all the Jews in general, except Women, Children under thirteen years of age, and Slaves, were liable to pay the half Shekel. The Collectors demanded it in the beginning of the month Nisan, but used no compulsion with any one till the Feast of the Passover: then they either constrained those to pay, who had not hitherto complied with the demand, or took security from them. The half Shekel was worth about eighteen pence of our money. Moses says, that it was paid according to the Measure of the Sanctuary, that is to say, according to the justest Measure, the standard whereof was kept in the Temple. See hereafter [See 1 Chr. xxiii. 29.] Weights of the Sanctuary.

Captivity

CAPTIVITY. God generally punished the vices and infidelities of his People, by different Captivities or Servitudes whereinto he permitted them to fall. The first of these Captivities or Bondages is that of Egypt, from which Moses delivered them, and should be considered rather as an effect of Providence, permitting it for the manifestation of his own Glory, than as a punishment of the sins whereof the Israelites were guilty. As to the Duration of this Captivity, see hereafter Exodus.

After this there are reckoned six Bondages or Captivities during the Government of Judges: the first under Chusham-Rishathaïm King of Mesopotamia, which continued about eight years: the second under Eglon King of Moab, from which they were delivered by Ehud: the third under the Philistines, out of which they were rescued by Shamgar: the fourth under Jabin King of Hazor, from which they were delivered by Deborah and Barak: the fifth under the Midianites, from which Gideon freed them: lastly, the sixth under the Ammonites and Philistines, during the Judicatures of Jephthah, Ibzan, Elon, Abdon, Eli, Samson, Samuel.

But the greatest and most remarkable Captivities of the Hebrews were those of Judah and Israel, which happened under [2 Kings xv. 29.] the Kings of each of these Kingdoms.

Tiglath-pilezer, in the year of the world 3264, took several Cities belonging to the Kingdom of Israel, and carried away a great number of Captives, principally from the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half Tribe of Manasseh. Next to him Salmanesar took and destroyed Samaria, after a siege of three years, in 3283, and transplanted the Tribes, which had been spared by Tiglath-pileser, to the Provinces [2 Kings xxii. 6 xviii. 10, 11.] beyond the Euphrates. It is generally believed, that there was no return from this Captivity, and that the ten Tribes never came back again after their dispersion. Josephus[1] assures us, that they never returned after their exile, and that in his time they were still known in the Provinces beyond the Euphrates, where, says he, they are so numerous, that there is no computing their multitude. And S. Jerom writing upon the following words of the Prophet Hosea[2], Call her name Lo-ruhamah; for I will no more have mercy upon the house of Israel, but I will utterly take them away, says, that the Captivity of the ten Tribes still continued, and that in his time they were subject to the King of Persia: Usque hodie Persarum regibus serviunt, & nunquam est eorum soluta captivitas.

Nevertheless when we examine carefully the Writings of the Prophets, we find the Return of Israel from the Captivity pointed out in a manner almost as clear as that of the Tribes of Judah and Benjamin. The same Hosea, who is cited to prove, that the ten Tribes did not return from [Hosea i. 10.] their Captivity, says elsewhere, The number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the Sea which cannot be measured nor numbred; and it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people; there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the Sons of the living God. [Hosea xi. 11.] And again, They shall tremble as a bird out of Egypt, and as a dove out of the land of Assyria, and I will place them in their houses, saith the Lord, &c. And Amos, [Amos ix. 14.] And I will bring again my people Israel from their Captivity, they shall build their ruined Cities and inhabit them, &c. Obadiah: [Obadiah v. 18. & 20.] The house of Jacob shall be a fire, and the house of Esau for stubble, and they shall kindle in them and devour them. The captivity of this host of the Children of Israel shall possess that of the Canaanites even unto Zarephat, &c.

[Jerem. iii. 18.] The great Prophets Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, are no less clear to the same [If. xi. 13, 14. See likewise xxvii. 12, 13.] purpose. Isaiah: The Lord shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth. Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim. Ezekiel received an order from God, to take two pieces of wood, and write on one, for Judah [Ezek. xxxvii. 16.] and for the Children of Israel. And upon the other, for Joseph and for all the house of Israel, to join these two pieces of wood, that so one might be made of them, and this to shew the re-union of Judah and Israel. Jeremiah is as express, The house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the North, to the land which I have given for an inheritance unto their fathers. See likewise Jeremiah xxxi. 7, 8, 9, 16 17, 20. xvi. 15. xlix. 2, &c. The Reader may consult Zachary ix. 13. x. 6, 10. and Micah ii. 12.

If with the Prophecies we join the historical Books of Scripture, we shall there see the Israelites as well as those of Judah and Benjamin, were to return from the [Tobit. xiv. 6. Vide & xiii. 12, 17.] Captivity. Tobit assures his Son, that the word of the Lord is not faln to the ground, that his Brethren of the ten Tribes, which were dispersed out of the land of Israel, should return thither. Among those who came back with Zerobabel from Captivity, those of Ephraim and Manasseh are reckoned, [1 Chron. ix. 34.] who settled at Jerusalem, with others belonging to the Tribe of Judah. When Esdras numbred those who returned from the Captivity, he made no other enquiry than whether they were of [Ezra ii. 59.] the race of Israel: Utrum ex Israel essent. And at the first Passover, which was then celebrated in the Temple, there was a Sacrifice of twelve He-goats for the whole house of Israel according to the number of [Ezra vi. 16, 17. viii. 35.] the Tribes. Under the Maccabees, and in our Saviour's time, we see all Palestine peopled with Israelites of all the Tribes indifferently. The Samaritan Chronicle[3] asserts, that in the 35th year of the Pontificate of Abdelus, the Israelites by the permission of King Sauredius, returned from their Captivity to the number of three thousand, under the conduct of Adus Son of Simon.

The Captivities of Judah. They are generally reckoned to be four: the first falls out in the year of the world 3398, under King Jehoiakim, at which time Daniel and his companions were carried captive to [2 Kings xxiii. 36. 2 Chron. xxxv. 5, 6. Jerem. xxvi. 1, &c. 2 Kings xxiv. 2. Jerem. lii. 28.] Babylon; the second in the 3401, in the seventh of Jehoiakim, when Nebuchadnezzar carried with him 3023 Jews to Babylon; the third in 3406, and in the fourth year of Jehoiachin, when this Prince together with part of his people was sent to Babylon; lastly, the fourth and last in the year of the world 3416. Under Zedekiah; from this Period begin the seventy years Captivity foretold by the Prophet Jeremiah [Jerem. xxv. 11. xxix. 10. Jerem. xxxii. 4. xxxiv. 3. Ezek. xii. 13.] .

The Jews were removed to Babylon and Babylonia, by Nebuchadnezzar, who designing to make this City the Capital of the East, transplanted thither very great numbers of the several people subdued by him in different Countries, in order to the better peopling of it. The Jews had Judges and Elders there, who governed them, and decided juridically in all contests according to their Laws. A proof of this we see in the story of Susanna, who was tried and condemned to death by the Elders of her own Nation.

[Dan. xiii. 41, &c.] King Cyrus in the year of the world 3457, and in the first year of his reign at Babylon, permitted the Jews to return into their own Country; but they did not obtain leave to rebuild the Temple of Jerusalem, and the perfect completion of the Prophecies, which foretold the end of the Captivity after the expiration of seventy years, was not seen till the year of the world 3486, when Darius the Son of Hystaspes, by a particular Edict, allowed them to rebuild the Temple. Lastly in 3537 Artaxerxes Longimanus sent back [Ezra vii. 1, 7, 8.] Nehemiah to Jerusalem. The Jews assure us, that none but the bran, the refuse of their Nation return'd from the Captivity, the principal of them continued in the places where they had settled near Babylon, and the country belonging to it, where indeed they grew very numerous after the transplanting of them thither under Nebuchadnezzar.

Since the destruction of the Temple by the Romans, the Hebrews boast, that they have always had their Heads or particular Princes.

Princes of the Captivity in the East and West. The Prince of the Captivity in the East governed the Jews who dwelt at Babylon, in Chaldæa, Assyria, and Persia; and the Prince of the Captivity in the West governed those who dwelt in Judæa, Egypt, Italy, and in other parts of the Roman Empire[4]. The Jews make a great difference between the Patriarchs of Judæa and the Princes of the Captivity at Babylon. The first are called Rabban, and the other Rabbana; these descended from David in a direct line by the Males, whereas the Patriarchs descended from him only by the Females. They say moreover, that the house of David is in all its vigour, because there are illustrious persons of this Family at Bagdad, among whom the Princes of the Jewish Nation are chosen, as has been always the custom from time immemorial. This is the Story the Jews tell us.

The Prince of the Captivity who resided in Judæa, resided commonly at Tiberias, and assumed the title of Rosch-Abboth, Head of the Fathers or Patriarchs. He presided in Assemblies, and in the Synagogues; he decided the important affairs of the Nation, and cases of Conscience. He levied taxes to provide for the expences of his visits; he had Officers under him, who were dispatched through the Provinces for the execution of his orders. The Jews maintain, that the Institution of these Patriarchs preceded the destruction of the Temple by an hundred years; for they reckon, that thirty years before the Birth of Jesus Christ, Hillel sirnamed the Babylonian came to Jerusalem, was consulted concerning the celebration of the Feast of the Passover, which fell out this year upon Saturday, and that people were so well satisfied with his decision, as to make him Patriarch of their Nation, and that his posterity succeeded him till the fifth Age of the Christian Church, in which the Patriarchs of Judæa were abolished.

The Jewish Authors are not agreed concerning the number of these Patriarchs; some reckon thirteen from Hillel, others only ten. Their names are as follow:

Hillel the Babylonian. 2. Simeon his Son. 3. Gamaliel the Son of Simeon. 4. Simeon II. Son of Gamaliel. 5. Gamaliel II. Son of Simeon. 6. Simeon III. Son of Simeon II. 7. Judas Son of Simeon III. 8 Gamaliel III. Son of Judas. Judas II. Son of Gamaliel III. 10. Hillel II. Son of Judas. 11. Judas III. Son of Hillel II. 12. Hillel III. Son of Judas. Gamaliel IV. Son of Hillel. See Basnage's History of the Jews, l. iv. c. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. where he gives a very large account of these Princes of the Captivity in the West, and examines particularly whatsoever the Jews relate of them, shewing that in the whole there is a great deal false and dubious.

As to the Princes of the Captivity of Babylon or the East[5], we know neither the original nor succession of them; it appears only, that they were not in being before the end of the second Century. They did not concern themselves about making Princes of the Captivity while the Temple subsisted; the Eastern Jews as well as Western continued subject to the High Priest. No Historian has said any thing of these supposed Princes of the Captivity before the destruction of the Temple. The first of these Princes who appeared upon the stage, was Huna, who did not live till the close of the second Century, and from Huna to the perfection of the Talmud, that is to say, for the space of three hundred years, they scarce produce three. The Jews affirm, that among these Princes of the Captivity of Babylon, who were all of the tribe of Judah and race of David, was found the Scepter of Judah mentioned by the Patriarch Jacob, and that in Judæa, among the [Gen. xlix. 10.] Patriarchs spoken of above, was found the Law-giver taken notice of in the same place.

The

The Jewish Authors describe very pompously the manner of appointing the Prince of the Captivity in the East[6]. The Heads of the neighbouring Universities, the Senators and People came in crowds to Babylon. The Prince of the Captivity was seated on a Throne, and the Head of the University of Syria harangued him, exhorting him not to abuse his power. The Thursday following the Heads of the several Universities laid their hands on him in the Synagogue. On Saturday morning he was conducted in great Ceremony to the Synagogue ; there he made a sermon, and gave the blessing to the people. Some days after he went to the King of Babylon's Audience, who did him very great honours.

The Princes of the Captivity in the East have sometimes dwelt at Mahazia, but their residence was transferr'd from thence to Babylon or Bagdad.

There there were ten Courts of Justice in which he presided. There were likewise eight and twenty Synagogues, among which that of the Prince was distinguished by the beauty and magnificence of the Structure. Before the press, wherein the Law was shut up, was a Pew raised ten steps from the ground, in which seats were placed for the Prince of the Captivity and his Family. His Dominion extended over all the Jews dispersed throughout Assyria, Chaldæa, and the whole Kingdom of the Parthians. Benjamin of Tudela, who lived in the twelfth Century, says, that he found even in his time a Prince of the Captivity there. But there have been none known there since, and perhaps they were suppressed before.

It were to be wished, that the Succession and History of these Princes of the Captivity, both in the East and West, were better proved, and more connected: the Jewish Historians are very unaccurate, and Historians that are not of their Nation say nothing at all relating to these Princes of the Captivity. I except the Patriarch of the West, of Palestine, or Egypt, of whom the Emperor Adrian, Origen, S. Jerom, and the Theodosian Code make mention ; but they take no notice of the Prince of the Captivity at Babylon, because he lived under the dominion of the Persians.

After the first intelligence brought to Portugal, of the discovery which had been made of Prestejan or King of Ethiopia, which reported this Prince to be of the race of Solomon[7], that all his subjects were circumcised, that they observed the Sabbath, and abstained from swine's flesh, and had diverse other Jewish customs, it was immediately believed, that these people were Jews. As there were two Jews chosen among others to make this discovery, they did not fail to aggravate all these circumstances to those of their own Nation. This was sufficient without any thing more to persuade them that there was a Jewish King in Africk: from whence they drew all the consequences that might most favour their prejudices.

Rabbi Abarbanel who was then at Lisbon, in some places of his Comments on the Prophets, made use of the first relations given by the Portugueze, concerning the great number of Jews found by them in the Indies. They of Constantinople had a Spanish Translation printed of a suppostitious Letter from Prestejan in Hebrew characters, and it was every where dispersed in several languages. But it was not long before the falsity of this opinion of the Jews was discovered ; for the Portugueze having got admittance into Ethiopia, discovered, that notwithstanding these people had many Jewish practices, for which some modern Authors have in vain endeavoured to justify them, they were nevertheless Christians. Thus the whole system which had been built on this foundation, to prove that the Scepter was not yet departed from Judah, of itself fell to the ground.

Caraites

CARAITES, a sort of Sect among the Jews. This name comes from the Hebrew, Caraï, or Caraim[1], which signifies persons consummate in the study of Scripture, and adhering closely to the Text and Letter of Scripture. This is the distinguishing mark of the Caraïtes. They are opposite to the Rabbinists in this particularly, that whereas the Rabbinists admit of all the Traditions of the Ancients, the Caraïtes strictly keep to the Text and Letter of the Scriptures, and do not easily receive what others would pass upon them for Traditions, till they have first carefully examined them, and are well assured, that they are really transmitted from the Ancients, and contain nothing contrary to the Text and Spirit of Scripture[2].

The Caraïtes are said to glory in a descent from Esdras, and to prove the Succession of their Churches by an exact Catalogue of all those persons, who have either taught, or contended against Caraïsm. There are some who boast of a still greater Antiquity ; Antiquity; for they who live at present in Poland and Lithuania, pretend to be descended from the ten Tribes, which were led into Captivity by Salmanesèr. The Rabbinists, who always run counter to the Caraïtes, inform us, that the Sect of the Caraïtes was in being at Jerusalem in the time of Alexander the Great; that Jaddus, who was Principal of the Rabbinists performed a miracle in the presence of this Prince, which Ananus and Crescanatus the Chief of the Caraïtes could not do. All this deserves not to be any way regarded. It is believed[3], with more probability, that the Caraïtes did not appear till about the eighth Age, or at least that their Sect was then restored by Ananus, when the Talmudists endeavoured to authorize their Traditions, and rank them with the most sacred truths and practices of Religion. At that time there was a good number of the Jews, who were zealous for the Law, that opposed this attempt, and were therefore called Caraïtes, as people adhering only to the Text of Scripture.

The Rabbinists charge the Caraïtes[4] with the generality of those Errors, that are maintained by the Sadducees; as the denying the Immortality of the Soul, and the Existence of Spirits. But the Caraïtes reject these accusations, and shew the purity of their Faith, and their particular sense of these Articles. There are some very good Caraïte Authors, who may be consulted with advantage, by enquirers into the true meaning of the Scripture; but few of them are printed; for the most part they are in manuscript, and lye concealed in great Libraries. They expect the Messiah, whom with the rest of the Jews, they look upon as a temporal King; they forbid all computation of the years wherein he is to appear. They reject all those books, which are not in the old Canon of the Jews, and require an implicit faith in the Holy Scripture, without permitting to examine, whether any article of the Law be true or false. They have neither Phylacteries, nor Parchments upon the doors of their houses, nor those Frontlets, which the Jews wear upon their fore-heads. They call the rest of the Jews, bridled Asses, when they see them thus in their Synagogues with Parchments on their forehead; the passages, wherein these Phylacteries are mentioned, and which are understood literally by other Jews, they explain figuratively. There are Caraïtes not only at Constantinople, in Syria, Palestine, and beyond the Euphrates; but in Poland also and Lithuania.

Wolfius in his account of the Caraïtes[5], describes likewise their Original, Progress and Fall, from the Memoirs of Mordecai one of this Sect. Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews having put to death all the Doctors of the Law, and almost all the learned Men of the Nation, occasioned the Schism which divided the Jews. Simeon the Son of Setah, and the Queen's Brother, having been rescued by his Sister from the King's fury, fled into Egypt, where he imagined the system of pretended Traditions. At his return to Jerusalem he spread abroad his Visions, and interpreted the Law after his mode, making his boasts of being entrusted with those particular notices of things, which God communicated to Moses. He had many Disciples and Opposers: the latter of these asserted, that all which God spake to Moses was written. This division produced two Sects, that of the Caraïtes, who adhered only to the Text, and that of the Traditionists, who supported the Traditions. Hillel distinguished himself among the latter, and Judah the Son of Sabbaï among the former.

Wolfius places the Scribes and Sadducees mentioned in the Gospel among the Caraïtes; but the Traditionists otherwise called Rabbinists or Pharisees, were the strongest and had the advantage of the Caraïtes. They had sunk intirely in the eighth Century, had they not been supported by some of their Sect, and in particular by Rabbi Anan. In the ninth Century Rabbi Solomon, the Son of Jeruchamı, imitated the zeal of Anan, and attacked Saadias Gaon. The following Ages were not less fortunate to the Caraïtes, and produced several celebrated Writers. Their Sect has become something weaker ever since the fourteenth Century.

Trigland, who printed a Treatise at Delph in 1703. concerning the Caraïtes, explains the original of them in a manner something different from Wolfius. In some short time after the Death of the Prophets, the Jews were divided concerning works of Supererogation; some maintaining that they were necessary, according to the Traditions; others adhering to what is written in the Law; these last gave birth to the Sect of Caraïtes, who value themselves upon their descent from the Prophets Haggai, Zachary, Malachi, and Esdras. One of their principal Authors[6] says, that after much search he had discovered, that in the time of John Hircanus and Alexander his Son King of the Jews, Rabbi Judah the Son of Thaddai, set up in opposition to Rabbi Simeon the Son of Setach, who endeavoured to introduce a new Law; this Judah therefore is one of the first Authors of the Caraïtes. The Mishnah makes mention of this Sect where it speaks of the Tephilims; which shews their Antiquity.

Caraites

CARAITES. We have again another History of their Original from Dr. Prideaux[1]. The compilation of the Talmud appearing in the beginning of the sixth Century, all people of good sense were so shocked with the trifles, the Stuff, the ridiculous and incredible fables it was cram'd with, and to see at the same time a set of men should dare to assert all this to come from God, that many gave it up, and were resolved to found their Faith only upon the Word of God contained in the Scriptures, looking upon the Talmud as a meer human composition, not to be received without examination. This refusal to admit the Talmud an as irrefragable rule of Faith, did not however for a long time produce any Schism amongst them.

But about the year 750 Anan a Babylonish Jew of the race of David, and his Son Saul, declared openly for the written Word of God alone, exclusive of Traditions which were not conformable to it. Their declaration produced a Schism: they who maintained the Talmud with all the Traditions, being almost all Rabbins, or Disciples of the Rabbins, were called Rabbinists: the others who rejected human Traditions, receiving the Scripture only for a Rule, were called Caraïtes, or Scripturists, from the word Cara, which in the Babylonish language signifies Scripture.

The Jews[2] pretend, that the true cause of this Schism proceeded from the Ambition of Anan, who exasperated at his being refused the degree of Gaon, that is to say, Excellent, (for this is a title given to certain Doctors,) and out of humour at his disappointment in pursuing after the office of Prince of the Captivity, to which he had pretended as one descended from David, gave the first rise to the Schism we are speaking of.

The Caraïtes pass for the most learned of the Jewish Doctors: there are few of them in the West: the greatest part of them are in Poland, Muscovy, and the East. About the middle of the last Age there was a particular account taken of their number: there were two thousand of them in Poland, at Caffa in Crim Tartary twelve thousand, at Cairo three hundred, at Damascus two hundred, at Jerusalem thirty, in Babylon an hundred, in Persia six hundred: in all four thousand, four hundred, and thirty: the whole of them together makes but a very small number, compared with the gross of the Nation which is of the Rabbinists party.

The Rabbinists or Traditionists have so great an aversion for the Caraïtes[3], that they will have no alliances, nor even any conversation with them; they treat them as Mamzerim, or bastards, because they observe none of the constitutions of the Rabbins in their marriages, divorces and purifications of their Wives. Their aversion is such, that if a Caraïte would turn Rabbinist, the other Jews would not receive him.

To give an example of the Method of the Caraïtes, we may take what is said in [Deut. vi. 8, 9. Exod. xxiii. 19. xxxiv. 26. Deut. xiv. 21.] Moses: Thou shalt bind my words upon thy hands, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes, and thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house and upon thy gates. The Rabbinists understand all this literally, and practise it accordingly. The Caraïtes on the contrary believe, that God by these words intended nothing more than that the Law of God ought always to be present to the mind of every Israelite, whether they go in or out, &c. In like manner Moses forbids them to seeth a kid in his mother's milk; which the Rabbinists understand literally, or as if the eating both the flesh and milk at the same meal were a thing prohibited. The Caraïtes on the contrary explain this by another [Deut. xxii. 6.] passage in Deuteronomy, Thou shalt not take the dam with the young, &c. It is a precept of humanity given by God to his people.

Rabbi Caleb, a Caraïte, reduces the particulars wherein the Rabbinists differ from the Caraïtes, to three points. 1°. The Caraïtes deny that the oral Law comes from Moses, and reject the Cabbala or Traditions. 2°. They have an abhorrence for the Talmud. 3°. They observe the Sabbath much more rigorously in many things than the Rabbinists. Moreover, they set no limits almost to the prohibited degrees of Marriage; and as to their copies of the Law, they have them as well as the Rabbinists, but concern themselves little about dictions full or defective; they are nevertheless of opinion according to Peringer, that the vowel Points are derived from Moses.

The word Carmel signifies the Vineyard; and S. Jerom informs us, that the top of this Mountain abounded with good pastures. Upon it an old Deity was worshipped, called likewise Carmel[2]: but there was, as Tacitus says, neither Statue nor Temple belonging to it; there was only an Altar there, and religious worship was paid to this Divinity: Nec simulacrum Deo aut Templum; sic tradidere majores; Aram & reverentiam. Jamblichus tells us, that Pythagoras went often to this Mountain, and remained alone there in the Temple. On the side next towards the Sea, there is a cave shewn, where some suppose the Prophet Elijah desired Abab to bring Baal's false Prophets, and fire from Heaven to have descended upon the burnt Sacrifice, which he [1 Kings xviii.] prepared there.

We know very little of the Life of Carpus. The Greeks tell us a great many particulars of it, which are very uncertain. They affirm that he was one of the seventy Disciples, that he propagated the truth in several places, that he wrought abundance of Miracles, that he was S. Paul's assistant in preaching of the Gospel, and was imployed by him in carrying his Letters. They make him to be Bishop of Beræa, and say he died in peace[3]. The Latins commemorate him, on the 13th of October, and the Greeks on the 26th of May.

Cart

CART. In Latin Traha, or Plaustrum, made use of in Palestine, to force the Corn out of the Ear, and bruise the Straw. There is frequent mention of it in the Scripture; for example Isaiah: Triturabitur Moab sicut teruntur paleæ in plaustro. And in another place, chap. xxviii. v. 27. For the fitches are not threshed with a threshing instrument; instrument; neither is a cart-wheel turned about the cummin. And again, chap. xli. 15. Ego posui te sicut plaustrum triturans novum habens rostra serrantia. And Amos i. 3. Eo quod trituraverit in plaustris ferreis Gelaad. These Carts or Drays were born upon very low and very thick Wheels, bound with Iron, which were rolled up and down upon the Sheaves and Straw, in order to break them, and force the Corn out. This is the Description which S. Jerom gives of them in his comment upon Isaiah, chap. xxv. Sunt autem carpenta ferrata rotis per medium in terrarum modum se volventibus, quæ stipulam conterunt, comminuunt in palea.

There were several sorts of these Machines; in some places they were large wooden Rollers, armed with Iron Spikes or Stones drawn over the Sheaves. Virgil speaks of these Machines called Plaustra, tribulæ, trabeæ.

Tardaque Eleusinæ matris volventia plaustra, Tribulaque, trabeæque. Whereupon Servius remarks, that trahea is a Cart without Wheels, tribula a kind of Cart armed every where with Teeth, omni ex parte dentatum, made use of principally in Africk to thresh Corn.

The Septuagint[1] and S. Jerom sometimes call these Carts a kind of Saws, [Isai. xii. 15. 70.] Plaustrum habens rostra serrantia[2]; because in reality the superficies of them was all thick set with Teeth like those of a Saw. David having made himself Master of Rabbah the Capital of the Ammonites, ordered all the Inhabitants of it to be crushed to pieces under Wheels bound about with Iron, and under such sort of [2 Sam. xii. 31. Amos i. 3.] Carts as we are speaking of, Populum adducens serravit, & circumegit super eos ferrata carpenta. Amos says, that the King of Damascus treated the Israelites of the Land of Gilead in this manner. This had some relation to the practice of the Romans, Carthaginians, and antient Germans, who used to execute People, by putting them under Hurdles loaded with great

Casluhim (II)

II. CASLUHIM. One of the Sons of Mizraïm. There is a great diversity of opinion concerning the place of his abode, and the Nation whereof he was the Founder. The Paraphrast Jonathan explains Casluhim by Pentapolitans, the Inhabitants of the Pentapolis or Cyrenaïca; the Jerusalem Paraphrast understands it as meaning the Inhabitants of Pentaschœnos in the lower Egypt. And in the Arabick Translation it is rendered the Inhabitants of Saïs, in the Thebaïs. Bochart, and many others after him, understand it of the Colchians. Herodotus[1] says, that the People of Colchos were circumcised, as well as the Egyptians, that they were of a tawney Complexion, that their hair was black and curled, and that their Language and way of living were the same as were in use among the Egyptians. He assures us, that Sesostris King of Egypt left a Colony of his Troops in the Colchis. He confesses notwithstanding, that the Egyptians had no remembrance of the Colchians being originally of their Country.

These are plausible Reasons. But altho' we were to allow all that Herodotus says, it would not prove the Colchians and the Casluhim to be the same People. Nor, supposing it were certain, that Sesostris left a Colony of Egyptians at Colchos, would it follow, that he had left there the whole Nation, or the greatest part of the Casluhim? Will any one affirm that before Sesostris Colchis did not bear this name, and that it began to be so called only after the coming of these pretended Casluhim? Moses tells us, that the Philistines and the Caphtorim were descended from the [Genes. x.] Casluhim; and the Prophets Jeremiah and [14. Jer. xlvii. 4. Amos ix. 7.] Amos inform us, that the Philistines came from Caphtor. In order therefore to reconcile Moses with these two Prophets, it must be said, that the Caphtorim sprang immediately from the Casluhim, and the Philistines from the Caphtorim.

We have shewn before, under the Article Caphtor, that the Isle of Crete was called by this name. The Casluhim therefore must have sent a Colony from the Cyrenaica into the Isle of Crete, and the Philistines must have come from thence; who nevertheless had been long in Palestine before Sesostris and his supposed Colony at Colchos. In our Comment on Chap. x. 14. of Genesis, we have proposed some other Conjectures concerning the Country of the Casluhim, and have there said, that the Casluhim may have dwelt upon the western Coasts of the Red Sea, opposite to the Island of Colocasitus or Coloca. These different opinions ought no way to surprise People: In matters of this obscure nature, it is very allowable to propose conjectures; which sometimes make way for discoveries of consequence.

Caspian

CASPIAN. Caspian Mountains. This term is not to be met with expressly in the Text of the whole Bible, unless Esdras intended to have mentioned it in the following [Ezra xiii. 17.] passage, Misi eos ad Eddo, qui est primus in Casphiæ loco. I sent them to Iddo, the chief of those who dwelt at Casiphia. Esdras being upon the point of departing, in order to undertake a Journey into Palestine, desired to have some of the Nethenims to do service in the Temple of the Lord. He sent therefore to Iddo, the head of these Nethenims, who in all probability worked at the Mines in and about the Caspian Mountains, situated between Media and Hyrcania. In these Mountains many place the Caspian Gates, which are a very narrow strait, through which People pass out of Media into Albania, westward of the Caspian Sea. According to others, the Caspian Gates are in Mount Taurus, and make the Communication between Assyria and Media. The eastern People[1] are of opinion, that Alexander the Great ordered a very long Wall to be built, so contrived at Places where the Mountain opened, as to shut up the Passage into Persia against the northern People, called by them Gog and Magog. There is a city near called Derbend, which in the Persian Language, signifies the Passage stop'd, or Barrier. The Turks give it the name of Demircapi, Iron Gates. The Wall which was built by Alexander sirnamed Dhoul- Carnein, different from Alexander the Great, is called by the Arabians, Alexander's Bank, or Gog and Magog's Rampart.

It was destroyed by Time, or some attempt of the Scythians, but Jezdegierd Son of Baharam King of Persia repaired it, and Chosroës, sirnamed Nuschirvan, one of his Successors, compleatly fortified it. The Province wherein the City of Derbend and the Wall we are speaking of stand, is called Schirvan. Formerly it went by the name of the Throne of Gold; because the King of Persia permitted the Governor of this Province to sit, while he was administring Justice, upon a Throne of Gold, in consideration of the Importance of the Post he held. It is said,[2] that Artaxerxes Ochus having taken part of Judea, or rather having conquered Egypt, transplanted a great number of Jews from thence into Hyrcania, near the Caspian Sea. Orosius tells us, that the Jews transplanted upon the Coasts of this Sea, were very much increased there in his time, and were in hopes of returning from thence to people Judæa; and the Author of the History says, that Alexander the Great having found a great number of Jews in this Country, shut them up within the Caspian Gates above-mentioned.

The Caspian Sea, is a kind of large Lake, which has no Communication with any Sea; it is called a Sea, by reason of its vast extent. The Hebrews name all great Lakes thus, as that of Sodom and Genesareth. We have lately received an exact description of this Sea, and the Country adjacent, from the Memoirs sent by the late Czar of Muscovy, to the Gentlemen of the Academy of Sciences at Paris. The Waters of the Caspian Sea are salt and bitter, like those of other Seas, excepting on the Coast of Hyrcania, where they are neither sweet nor salt: This Sea abounds extremely with Fish. Several great Rivers, as the Volga, the Araxes, the Jaik, the Chesel, and the Jehan lose themselves in the Caspian Sea, and yet it [Eccl. i. 1, 7.] never seems to increase or diminish; and in this rather than any other, what Solomon says is sensibly verified: All the rivers run into the sea, yet the sea is not full. It is the conjecture of some, that these waters run through subterraneous Channels, either into the Persian Gulph or Black Sea, or that they rise in several places in order to produce the Rivers Euphrates and Tygris, and that in their passage under Ground they are filtrated, and lose their saltness.

Cassius

CASSIUS, firnamed Longinus, was Quæstor to Crassus in Syria, while this General was upon the famous Expedition against the Parthians. Crassus having been defeated, and put to death, Cassius gathered up the broken remains of the Roman Army, and drove the Parthians out of Syria, into which Province they had marched as far as Antioch. From thence he went to Tyre; and after he had put affairs on this side in order, he proceeded towards Judæa[1], and laid siege to Tarichæa upon the Lake of Genesareth, in which place Philolaus had shut himself up with the remains of Aristobulus's Faction, whose Party he had of late embraced. Cassius carried the Town, and made Slaves of all the Persons whom he found in it, excepting Philolaus, whom he ordared to be executed, by the advice of Antipater, as the most certain means of destroying Aristobulus's Faction. He afterwards obliged Alexander the Son of this last named person to sue for Peace, which he granted him, and marched towards the Banks of the Euphrates against the Parthians, who threatned an Invasion.

After the murder of Julius Cæsar committed by Brutus and Cassius, these two Heads of the Conspirators resolved to restore the Liberty of the Commonwealth. Cassius went into Syria, where he was in great esteem, and soon saw himself at the head of eight Legions. He afterwards marched into Phœnicia and Judæa, and secured both without much trouble[2]. While he was there, four Legions passed through Palestine, sent by Cleopatra Queen of Egypt, to the assistance of Dolabella, who was of the Party opposite to Cassius. The latter hem'd them in with his Troops, engaged them to come over to his party, and by this means encreased his Army to twelve Legions.

To support these Troops, he was obliged to levy large Sums upon the Province. Judæa for its share was taxed [In the year of the World 3961.] at seven hundred Talents. Antipater had the care of seeing this Sum levied speedily by his two Sons Phasael and Herod, together with one Malichus and others, to whom he assigned particular divisions. Herod was the first who brought his part, which procured him the favour of Cassius.

The Cities of Gophna, Emmaus, Lydda, Thamna, and some others not having furnished their Contingents in proper time, Cassius ordered all the Inhabitants to be sold by Auction, to raise the Sums which were to be supplied by them; and Malichus thought he should be made to answer with his Head for the neglect with which he had acquitted himself of his Commission. Hircanus rescued him from this danger, by sending an hundred Talents to Cassius out of his own Purse. The rest of Cassius's History has no relation to the Scripture, nor the affairs of the Jews. He was defeated with Brutus at Philippi in Macedonia, and constrained to kill himself in the year of the World 3963, before Jesus Christ 37, before the vulgar Æra 40.

Castor and Pollux

[Acts xxviii. 11.] CASTOR and POLLUX. It is said in the Acts of the Apostles,[1] that the Vessel which S. Paul embarked in when he was carried to Rome, in order to appear before the Emperor, had the Sign of Castor and Pollux. Now, Castor and Pollux were two Brothers, Sons of Jupiter and Leda, who sprung, as they say, from the same Egg; for which reason they were represented each with half an Egg Shell in his hand. Jupiter was thought to have conversed with Leda in the form of a Swan. Castor and Pollux were in great Reputation for their Valour, and particularly for the War which they made against Corsairs and Pirates. For this piece of merit they had Divine Honours paid them, and Seamen particularly shewed a great deal of Devotion to them. They were called upon in all Storms, and People made Vows to them when they took shipping. The Vessel which S. Paul sailed in, was called Dioscuri, or Castor and Pollux; because their Images were either painted or carved upon the Prow. There was besides some other Deity upon the Stern; and these were looked upon as the Patrons and tutelary Gods of the Vessel. See our Comment upon the Acts, xxviii. 11.

Cataracts

CATARACTS. The Latin word Cataracta comes from the Greek, Cataractes, which signifies something that falls with swiftness and impetuosity. A fall of Water, a Cascade, or River which runs with rapidity down some rock, are what is principally so called. The Cataracts of Nile, which fall from a very high precipice, are celebrated. Moses says, that God opened the Cataracts of Heaven, and caused a deluge of water to fall from [Gen. vii. 11. viii. 1. ατκαῤῥαταK ארבות,] thence in order to drown the wicked world. The Hebrew word Aruboth, which is translated Cataracts, may be taken for Windows, Openings contrived in some elevated place; and the Scripture makes use of the same term to denote a Storm or abundance of Rain falling from the Heavens. It is said that the Cataracts of Heaven were opened for this purpose. Isai. xxiv. 18. Mal. iii. 10.

The Psalmist, to express the misfortunes with which he was as it were overwhelmed, [Ps. xlii 9. לקול צנורין] says, One deep calleth another at the noise of the Cataracts of Heaven which were opened, in order to drown him. The Hebrew word made use of in this place, is different from that used in the other passages, where we meet with the word Cataracta. That in Psalm xlii. is Zenor, which signifies Channels, Gutters. The deep of the waters in the Sea hath called the deep of the waters of Heaven, at the noise of thy gutters, to overflow me. The waters of the Sea, and those of Heaven are, as I may say, called, that they may altogether overwhelm me.

Catholick (II)

II. CATHOLICK, or Canonical Epistles. They are seven in number, namely, that of S. James, two of S. Peter, three of S. John, and that of S. Jude. They are called Catholick, because they are directed to all the Faithful, and not to any particular Church; and Canonical, because they contain excellent rules of Faith and Morality. There is some difference with relation to the order, wherein these Epistles stand at present in our Bibles, and that wherein they were placed formerly among the Greeks[1]. As to this particular, the Reader may consult our general Preface to these Epistles. The Ancients were divided about the number of them. Some received all the seven; others three only, and rejected the second of S. Peter, the second and third of S. John, and that of S. Jude[2]. The principal design of these seven Epistles is to confute the Heresies of Simon, Nicholas, Cerinthus, and other primitive and arch- Hereticks: who abusing the liberty which the Gospel hath procured for us, denied the Necessity of good Works[3].

Cedar-Tree

CEDAR-TREE, a Tree much celebrated in the Scriptures. There are some still growing on Mount Libanus, but in a very small number above, Byblos and Tripoli to the East; and there are none elsewhere to be seen in all these Mountains. But it is probable, that in former times there was a much greater abundance of them, since they were made use of in so many great buildings. These Trees are prodigiously thick and tall. There are some among those which are at this day to be seen on Libanus, that are five and thirty and forty feet in the girt. The Cedar-tree shoots out its branches at ten or twelve feet from the ground. Its branches are large and at a distance from one another; its leaves are something like those of Rosemary; it is always green and distils a kind of gum, to which different effects are attributed. The wood of it is incorruptible, beautiful, solid, and inclining to a brown colour, It bears a small Apple like that of the Pine, except that the outward skin of it is finer, smoother, and not so open[1].

There are Cedars growing not only on Mount Libanus, but in some places also of Africk, in the Isle of Cyprus, and in that of Crete, or Candia. Cedars were used in making Statues, which were designed for long duration. The Temple of Jerusalem, and King Solomon's Palace were built with Cedar; and there was so great a quantity of it in the Temple, that it is sometimes called Lebanon: Open thy doors, O Lebanon; [Zech. xi. 1.] Aperi, Libane, portas tuas: and the house which Solomon dwelt in at Jerusalem, is called the house of the forest of Libanon, [1 Kings vii. 2. and x. 10.] Domus saltûs Libani. The roof of the Temple of Diana at Ephesus was likewise of Cedar, according to the account we have of it from Pliny[2]. Josephus says, that Solomon planted Cedars in Judæa in so great a quantity, that there were as many of them in that Country as there were Sycomores, which are very common Trees there.

The Cedar loves cold and mountainous places, and if the top of it is cut, it dies. The branches which it shoots out at distant spaces and certain intervals lessening continually as they grow higher, form as it were a kind of wheel, and rise in the form of a pyramid[3]. Bruyn in his journey to the Holy Land says, that the leaves of the Cedar point upwards, and that the fruit hangs downwards. The Fruit grows like Persian Apples, but longer, harder, and fuller, and is not easily to be separated from the stalk. It contains seed like that of the Cypress-tree, and casts out a glutinous thick sort of rosin, transparent, and of a strong smell, which does not run, but falls drop by drop. This Author tells us, that having had the curiosity to measure two Cedars of Libanus which to him appeared to be the largest there, he found one to be fifty seven palms about, and the other forty seven. The Naturalists distinguish several sorts of Cedars; but we confine ourselves to that of Libanus, which is the only one the Scripture speaks of.

They made use of this wood not only for the beams and planks which covered edifices, and serv'd for cielings to apartments, but they placed them likewise in the substance of their walls, and so disposed them and the stone together, that there were, for example, three rows of stone, and [1 Kings vi. 36. and vii. 12. and Ezra vi. 3, 4.] one of Cedar-wood. Sometimes these planks were laid from one course of the wall to the other[4] alternately with rows of stone, which went likewise from one course to the other, and at every course made a sort of chequer-work.

The Cedar was thought in all probability to have a purging quality, since Moses ordains, that in the purification of a Leper this wood, together with hyssop, should be used in making up a Wisp, wherewith the [Lev. xiv. 4.] Leper was to be sprinkled. The manner of making this Wisp was as follows: they took a branch of Cedar, another of Hyssop, and a clean Bird: the whole was tied up together with a purple or crimson ribbon, so however that the bird's head should be beside the handle: this Wisp they dip'd in water wherein the blood of another clean bird had been distilled, and with it sprinkled the Leper, then they loosed the living bird and set it at liberty. They used much such a Wisp, excepting only that no live bird was fastened to it, in the aspersions made on the great day of Expiation with [Numb. xix. 6.] the blood of a red heifer.

Cendebeus

CENDEBEUS, General of the Troops belonging to Antiochus Sidetes, the Son of Demetrius King of Syria. This Prince having quarrelled with Simon the High Priest and Prince of the Jews, took from him the government of the Coasts along the Mediterranean, and gave it to Cendebeus, with orders to fortify Cedron, and to make all the havock he was able in Judæa. Cendebeus came [1 Macc. xv. 38. In the year of the world 3866, before J. C. 134, before the vulg. Æra 138.] therefore to Jamnia, fortified Cedron, and made excursions upon the lands belonging to the Jews. John gave notice to his Father Simon of all that passed, who sent his two Sons John and Judas with Troops to oppose Cendebeus; he himself not being in a condition to undertake this March, by reason of his great age. John ingaged the Enemy, and as soon as the sacred Trumpets were sounded, Cendebeus fled with all his forces. John and Judas pursued them, and killed many of them. The rest with their General Cendebeus got safe into Cedron, which he had so lately fortified.

We shall here add some Observations relating to the defeat of his Troops by John Maccabæus the Son of Simon.

[of Cendebeus by John Maccabæus the Son of Simon. Macc. 1. i. ch. xvi. Observations on the Defeat] □ The Book of Maccabees is that of all others in Scripture, wherein we may learn most of the Art military; and here I observe almost all the same principles with those in the Tacticks of the ancient Hebrews. Nothing is finer, more instructive, [1 Macc. xvi. 1.] or more capable of forming a Christian Hero, and an excellent General. God favours men of great Courage, noble and intrepid Souls, without respect of persons; he makes use of them in the execution of his will and intentions, either for the punishment, or for the preservation and glory of his people; so that, if I am not mistaken, I see no where in the sacred Writings, that he made choice of a Man, who wanted bravery to carry on the Wars ordained by him, or suggested to some particular people for the punishment of others. All the Maccabees were Heroes; the Father of them was the first who brought his name into so great reputation, and the Sons shewed they were not unworthy of it, they acquired no less Glory than their Ancestor by military atchievements. It is something wonderful and uncommon, for the Sons of Heroes to resemble their Fathers.

The Book of Maccabees is more particular; let us hear what the Scripture says, John gives notice to his Father Simon of all that Cendebeus had done against their people. Simon hereupon sends for his two Sons, and tells them, I and my brethren, and all my father's house have humbled and defeated the enemies of Israel; from our youth we have fought against them unto this day, and affairs have succeeded under our conduct, we have several times delivered Israel. Here we have three generations of Heroes and great Generals; not one Son only of this miraculous Stock, but all resemble their Fathers and their Grandfathers. If any one should discover something so extraordinary in any other place besides the book of Maccabees, I should be much surprized; I do not know that I ever read any thing like it in any Historian. A decrepit Father, worn out with fatigues and age, exhorts his Sons to imitate his glorious Actions, and those of the Heroes of their name. John animated by his Father, takes the field at the head of an Army of twenty thousand men, and marches to the Enemy with all the hope, courage, and resolution possible; and possessed with his Father's principles and maxims, begins with an Action worthy of so great a General; nor was his success owing to chance or fortune, but to order and good conduct. Victory, say some, is on the side of those who have the most numerous Squadrons; but certainly they are mistaken, it declares often for the lesser number, provided they be well conducted and led on; if so, they must necessarily get the better of the others; for in War number does nothing, on the contrary it is very contemptible, even with good conduct, if another power that is weaker opposes with more dexterity and skill. Thus the maxim which favours greater numbers falls of itself; but this may be disagreable to many Generals, who are prepossessed with it.

Cendebeus's Army was superior to that of John, and had besides the advantage of a Brook which separated the two Armies, and was to be passed necessarily by the Hebrews, before they could engage their Enemies.

John, says the Scripture, caused his Troops to advance towards them; and when he saw his people were afraid of passing over the brook, he went first over himself, which the Troops perceiving, followed him. Here is a General who himself first begins to give the example, in order to cure his Soldiers of the fears they had of some disadvantage. But this is not what the people who understand military Affairs should, like others, most admire in this new General, whose first attempt was managed by him like an old Soldier, that is to say, was a Master-piece; but rather the order and disposition of his Forces which are what we rarely meet with. I have published a Dissertation in my new Discoveries relating to War; wherein I shew the folly of placing the Cavalry on the wings, and the Foot in the center. For it is the Foot which, like a very strong armour, should rather secure and cover the wings of Horse. I think this example very rational and important, and am sorry that I forgot to produce it as a proof of my opinion.

John having passed the brook with very great expedition, (for so he must have done to be so soon formed on the other side,) divided, says the sacred Author, his Infantry into two Bodies, and placed his Cavalry in the middle; as to the Enemy, they had a great number of Horse.

It is probable that Cendebeus, who knew nothing of the order wherein his Enemy was to be disposed, followed the military discipline used generally by the Asiatick Nations; for this is a disposition which enters not into the heads of those who are sticklers for the common method; he should therefore have lodged his Horse upon the wings, and his Foot in the center; for to change his order in the presence of the Enemy was too ticklish a movement; it appears that he did not so much as think on it, since he marched directly to him. This Order of Battle observed by John must have surprized Cendebeus and his Army. The Infantry, who saw the Cavalry confronted against them instead of Infantry, must be very much amazed, which was sufficient to discourage them; for it is common for the Foot, who are not accustomed to fight the Horse, to apprehend adversaries whom they think more formidable in a plain than in reality they are. It is the same with the Horse against the Foot; but the latter would be too hard for the Horse and continually beat them if they knew their own strength. In this affair it seems as if the eyes of the people in Cendebeus's Army had been first conquered, and that John's Victory almost without a conflict was owing to this; for if any will have it to have been a Miracle, it is no more than this, that God favours those always who undertake the defence of Justice and Religion.

Cephas

CEPHAS. S. Paul in his Epistle to the Galatians says, that being come to Jerusalem, he confer'd with the Apostles, lest by any means he should run or had run in vain; the Apostles having acknowledged that God had committed to him the care of preaching to the Gentiles, as he had given the Apostleship to Peter for the circumcised. James, Cephas, and John who seem'd to be pillars of the Church gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship, that we should go unto the Heathen and they unto the Circumcision. ... But when Cephas was come to Antioch I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed. I said unto Cephas before them all, If thou, being a Jew, livest after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews?

There is a considerable difficulty proposed with relation to these words, which consists in knowing, whether Cephas here reproved by S. Paul is the same with S. Peter, or a different person. We have examined this Question in a particular Dissertation prefixed to S. Paul's Epistles, the x Plin. l. v. c. 19. & l. xxxvi. c. 26. the sum whereof I shall here lay before you, because we have been informed, that the opinion of S. Peter's being different from Cephas, made a progress in the World, and that it was of importance to put a stop to it.

The most plausible Arguments therefore that can be produced in favour of this opinion are these. First of all, the Hypotyposes of Clemens Alexandrinus[1], who distinguishes Peter from Cephas. S. Chrysostom[2], S. Jerom[3], Gregory the Great[4], Oecumenius, and the Author of the Comment on the Epistle to the Galatians, under the name of S. Anselm, evidence that some doubted whether Cephas were the same with S. Peter; Dorotheus of Tyre[5], and the Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle,[6] speak of one Cephas among the seventy two Disciples; the Person, they say, whom S. Paul resisted to his Face.

To these Authorities the following reasons are added. If he whom S. Paul resisted to his Face, is S. Peter, it must be said, that the Prince of the Apostles was fallen into Heresy, since at Antioch he taught the Faithful by his Example the quite contrary of what had been decided in his presence at the Council of Jerusalem. But we cannot lay such an Accusation to the charge of this holy Apostle; besides St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Galatians, calls S. Peter twice by his name, Peter, and speaks of him with suitable respect: How then in the same Epistle, and the same discourse, should he call him Cephas, and value himself upon having resisted him to his Face? The Text of this Epistle intimates, that St. Paul looked upon Cephas as much inferior to Barnabas. Cephas, says he, withdrawing from the Gentiles, and designing to eat no more with them, the other Jews imitated his disguise, insomuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation. What wonder could it be for Barnabas to imitate the Prince of the Apostles? But to have followed the example of Cephas, a vulgar Man, despised, and of no Reputation[7], might indeed have given S. Paul some uneasiness.

Another proof that Cephas was not S. Peter, is S. Paul's reproving him with haughtiness, in publick, and with Authority, which he never would have done to the Prince of the Apostles. F. Hardouin, who has written expressly to maintain the opinion which distinguishes Cephas from S. Peter, believes the Cephas mentioned by S. Paul in his first Epistle to the Corinthians, whom our Lord appeared to, who preached at Corinth, and led about a Sister [1 Cor. i. 12. iii. 22. ix. 5 xv. 5.] with him, to be the same Cephas whom S. Paul resisted at Antioch. It is observed likewise as a consequent reason, that in the Vulgate, declared authentick by the Council of Trent, they have departed from the Greek Text, and the Antients, who read Petrus instead of Cephas, v. 9, 11, 14.

Lastly, endeavours are used to shew, that S. Peter was at Jerusalem, when S. Paul resisted Cephas to his Face at Antioch, and that the Journey to Jerusalem performed by Paul and Silas, which was followed with convening the Council of Jerusalem, did not happen till some Months after this event; but nevertheless, in the same year of Jesus Christ 49.

Let us now see what is urged in opposition to this opinion. S. Jerom[8] remarks, that no one had ever thought of distinguishing S. Peter from Cephas, had not the reproaches of Porphyry, and some other Enemies of Christianity, obliged them to it, who pretended to make an advantage of this Dispute between two principal Apostles of the Christian Religion, in order to accuse one of Error, the other of Pride, both of Falshood, and the Christians of vain Credulity. The antient Fathers, in their reply to the Objections proposed by the Enemies of our Religion, have had recourse to different mediums. Some have said, that this Dispute between the two Apostles was only a kind of feint, which they had both concerted together for the instruction of the Faithful, and particularly of the Jews. Others distinguished Peter from Cephas: But this last Party continued almost unknown, and buried in forgetfulness, till these latter Ages, when some Men of Learning, as we have shewn, renewed it.

The Antients who are alledged in favour of this distinction, either proposed it with some doubts, or expressly confuted it, or are of themselves so little worth our Consideration, that they scarce deserve to be confuted. The Book of Hypotyposes, whether it was Clemens Alexandrinus's, or any other Clemens's, is now not in being. Photius[9] who had seen it, speaks of it with the utmost Contempt, as a work abounding with Faults, gross Errors, Fables, and impious Opinions. S. Chrysostom, who has not concealed the force of those Arguments, which might be offered against the common opinion, nevertheless concludes, that all that goes before and follows, demonstrates the whole place to be understood of S. Peter. S. Jerom having related Porphyry's objection, and the opinion which distinguishes Ce phas from S. Peter, concludes with saying, that he knows no other Cephas besides him, who in the Gospel, and S. Paul's Epistles, is indifferently called sometimes Peter, sometimes Cephas; and if any to answer Porphyry would allow of a second Cephas, several Passages of Scripture must be erased, which this Enemy of our Religion attacks for no other reason, but because he does not understand them.

S. Gregory the Great confutes the opinion, which distinguishes Peter from Cephas. Oecumenius does not adopt it, no more than the Author of the Comment printed under the name of S. Anselm. Dorotheus of Tyre is a Writer of no Authority; the Alexandrian Chronicle not of much more; and after all, they produce no proof for what they advance. The chronological Order invented by F. Hardouin, to shew that S. Peter was not at Antioch, when the Dispute in question was there stated, is purely arbitrary, and founded upon no solid Argument. The other reasons which are reported, with a design of destroying the common opinion, are only decencies, which cannot be of any force against a Fact clearly set forth in the Text of S. Paul. To pretend that S. Peter never was called Cephas in the Scripture, excepting in the passage only where our Saviour says to him, Thou art Simon the son of Jonah; thou shalt be called Cephas; which is by interpretation a stone, or a Rock, is strange.

If Cephas, whom S. Paul speaks of in so many places of his Epistles, was a Man of so little consideration in the Church, as hitherto to have been almost forgotten, why is the Apostle so concerned to cite him, and make use of his Authority and Approbation? [Gal. ii. 9. Gal. ii. 14.] Why does he with so much care precaution the Faithful against the Impression of his example? Why lay so much stress upon the appearance of our Saviour to Cephas, as a solid proof of his Resurrection? [1 Cor. xv. 5.] How comes this Cephas to have been so neglected by the Evangelists, as not to have been ever mentioned by them? We know the respect and veneration which is due to S. Peter, and to the Pope his Successor; we have all the inclination and interest possible to support his Rights, his Primacy, and Prerogatives: But should this prevent our owning, that S. Peter denied Jesus Christ? and that he was liable to reproof at Antioch? But here is enough of the matter for this Dictionary. If any one would be more particularly informed with relation to this difficulty, he may consult F. Hardouin's Dissertation, M. Abbot Boileau's, that of M. Deling. t. 2. Observ. c. 45. and that which we have printed on the same Subject before S. Paul's Epistles.

Cerastes

CERASTES, that is to say, cornu, a kind of Serpent so called, because it has, as they say, four pair of horns upon its Head. It hides itself in the Sand, without suffering any thing to appear besides its horns, which the Birds take for Flesh, and when they offer to come near and eat it, the Cerastes makes a Prey of them. It is said farther to be of a sandy colour; it walks, or rather crawls slanting on its side, and seems to hiss, when it is in motion. This is what is said of the Cerastes. This word is to be found but once in Scripture, Dan shall be a serpent in [Gen. xlix. 17.] the way, a cerastes[1] in the path. The Hebrew term for Cerastes is Schephiphon, which some interpret Asp, others Basilisk. But Bochart, to whose Authority in matters of this nature we very readily pay great deference; Bochart, I say, is of opinion that we should keep to the Translation, which renders it Cerastes.

Ceremonies

CEREMONIES. This word comes from the Latin ceremonia, which signifies the external rites and manner wherein the Ministers of Religion should acquit themselves of their sacred Functions. The true Worship of God, the essential Worship which he requires is the Sacrifice of our [John iv. 24.] Hearts and Minds. They that worship God, must worship him in spirit and in truth. Notwithstanding this no way hinders but that Ceremonies, and external Worship may make a part, and that too a necessary and essential one of Religion, when we conceive Mankind to be united in the same holy Society, and forming one Body of a Church or Religion, of what nature soever it may be[1]. Without this their Religion would be nothing but Confusion, and their Worship would easily degenerate into Superstition, while every one followed only his own fancy or inclination:

By By which means that Union and good understanding would be soon lost, which ought to be the Soul of it.

In the old Covenant, God first of all delivered the great Precepts of his Law, which included the essential obligations of Mankind towards God and towards their Neighbour. He prescribed no Ceremonies till afterwards. By this multitude of external Observances, he intended to check the Inclination, which the Hebrews discovered to Idolatry, and oppress them, as I may say, with the yoke of Ceremonies; that [Acts xv. 10.] hereby they might be induced to desire their Liberty with more ardour, and the coming of their great Deliverer. In the new Covenant, neither Jesus Christ, nor the Apostles, who were directed by his Spirit, have scarce any where injoined Ceremonies. They looked upon these as accessories only to Christianity; they were not ignorant, that this Religion, how holy and spiritual soever it might be, could not intirely be without them; but they thought they should be imployed as means only to keep up the internal Worship of God, and in condescention to the weaker part of Mankind.

The term Ceremony is to be met with often in the Vulgate of the Old Testament; but S. Jerom, who is the Author of this Translation, has not always used the same word to express the Hebrew, which he sometimes translates ceremonia; and indeed the Hebrews have not one which exactly signifies the same thing with the Latin, ceremonia. The words which Moses makes use of, signify Worship, Service, Ordinances, Statutes, Precepts; all [Gen. xxvi. 5. he renders Levit. v. 15.] which are sometimes translated ceremonia.

It is a great Question, whether the Ceremonies of the Jews are Imitations of those practised by the Egyptians, or those of the Egyptians on the contrary copied from the practice of the Jews. The Conformity which has in all times been observed between the Laws, Observances and Ceremonies of these two People, has divided the generality of learned Men. In the reign of the first Roman Emperors,[2] the Jewish and Egyptian superstitions were commonly confounded, and were equally odious to Strangers. Sir John Marsham[3], and Dr. John Spencer[4], both Englishmen, have attempted to prove, that Moses in many things imitated the Egyptians. Their Opinion has had many followers among the Learned.

It may be remarked at first view, that indeed there is a great deal of resemblance between certain Ceremonies which are common to both these people. And again, that in other particulars there is a very great difference, which appears to be even studied and affected. Besides, there seems to be a very great strangeness reciprocally between these two People, and notwithstanding a very great propensity in the Israelites, to imitate the Worship and Superstitions of the Egyptians, and in proportion a very strong passion in the Egyptians to introduce the Ceremonies of the neighbouring people into their Religion. These so opposite inclinations must have necessarily produced on one part many Laws and Ceremonies intirely opposite between the two Nations, and on the other many absolutely alike.

When after all, we come to an Examination of the Laws and particular Ceremonies of both People, there are certain Ceremonies to be distinguished, wherein Moses intended, out of condescention to the humour, inclination, custom, prejudices, and even hardness of the Hebrews Hearts, to permit, or disallow of certain practices, which were permitted or forbidden among the Egyptians; for example, he might have conform'd to them in the point of Habits and Ornaments peculiar to the Priests, in the choice of some Sacrifices, their Hair, Sex, Age, and manner of offering them: He might have borrowed something from the form of their Temples and Altars. So likewise as to the judicial Laws, there are many in use among the Hebrews, which seem to have been copied from those of the Egyptians. And the reason of this is easily to be understood: The Israelites continued for a long time in Egypt: They began to form a People in this country; they were obliged to follow the Laws of this Nation. Moses like a prudent and discreet Legislator, preserved many profitable, or even indifferent things, to which the People were accustomed, contenting himself with suppressing or condemning such Laws and Usages as were contrary to Justice, Modesty, and Religion.

Hence so many Regulations and Ceremonies were derived, the causes and motives whereof we are scarce able to discover, and so many others which seem frivolous, and of no importance to us. They are very wisely established, and very serious as to the design of them, which was to alienate the Hebrews from the opinions, customs and superstitions of the Egyptians, and to keep these two People at such a distance as was necessary to secure the Jews from Idolatry, and to cure them of their inclination to imitate the Worship and Abominations of the Egyptians. We do not enter here into a detail of the particular Ceremonies, Laws and Sacrifices of the Hebrews, there would be no bounds to such an undertaking; some Examples of them we shall produce in the course of this Work.

Cesennius Gallus

CESENNIUS GALLUS, or Gallus only, according to the Greek, Commander of the twelfth Legion of the Roman Army in Syria, was sent by Cestius to reduce Galilee[1]. He took Sephoris, and several other places, and defeated a great Body of the Jews, who had intrenched themselves on mount Azamon in Galilee.

Cestius Gallus

CESTIUS GALLUS, Governour of Syria for the Romans. The Jews began their Rebellion under his Government. Florus Governor of Judæa had quite tired out the patience of this People, by his repeated Injuries, Vexations and Cruelties. He desired nothing more, than to see them in Rebellion, and to have a War kindled in this Country, knowing very well, that if his Conduct were at any time examined, he could not possibly escape punishment with Death. For this reason he omitted nothing which might tempt the Jews to be the Aggressors, by forcing them in some measure to take Arms against the Romans[1]. Cestius Gallus coming to Jerusalem at the Passover in the year of J. C. 66, the Jews made great Complaints to him against Florus[2]. He encouraged them to hope that Florus would behave himself better; but he laugh'd at this, and as soon as Cestius was returned, began afresh to torment the Jews; which reduced them to despair.

While Cestius was at Jerusalem, as he saw the Province very much disposed for a Revolt, he had a mind to know the number of the Jews who were come up to the Passover; by which means he might be able to inform Nero, that this Nation was not so contemptible as he believed it to be. He desired the Priests therefore to reckon up the Lambs which were sacrificed on this solemn Commemoration of the Passover, from three to five a Clock in the Evening[3]. None but the Jews sacrificed any, and of the Jews none eat of them besides those who had been purified. A Lamb sometimes served twenty Persons, and never fewer than ten. Upon a computation of the Lambs which were then killed, there was found to be two hundred fifty five thousand and six hundred of them; which allowing ten persons only to each Lamb, made two Millions five hundred and fifty thousand persons.

In some short time after the return of Cestius, the Jews revolted, and took Arms. Cestius upon intelligence of this, advanced with a powerful Army towards Palestine. He first of all sent Cesennius Gallus into Galilee, who reduced it. He then took Lidda and Joppa in his way, and incamped near Gibeon, at two leagues distance from Jerusalem s. The Jews neglected the Feast of Tabernacles, which was then celebrated, and fell upon Cestius with so much vigour and impetuosity, that they gave the Roman Army a great shock, and had almost broke it. Cestius continued three days in this place, encompassed with Jews, and in danger of sustaining great loss, whenever he attempted to remove. But Agrippa having sent proposals to the Jews of Peace and Pardon, upon Condition that they would lay down their Arms, a division hereupon arose among them; and Cestius taking this opportunity, pushed them so briskly, that he put them into disorder, and pursued them as far as Jerusalem.

He remained three days incamped in a place called Scopos, or the Centry-box, at a good quarter of a league from the city, without however attacking it, as if he had believed, that the Jews would of themselves surrender. Upon the fourth day, which was the thirtieth of October, he advanced in order of Battel, and so terrified the Seditious, that they shut themselves up within the last inclosure of the City, and in the Temple, abandoning the rest, which he set Fire to. It was agreed, that if he had then given the Assault, he had carried the City, and had on that day finished the War. But he was diverted from it by several of his Officers, who, as Josephus believes, had been corrupted by Florus.

For the five days following he fought for some weak place in the Walls which he might force, but found none, the Seditious keeping a good guard every where. On the sixth day, which was the fifth of November, he gave orders for assaulting vigorously one of the Temple Gates; which so frightned the Seditious, that they were ready to forsake the City and retire; and the People, who desired Peace, were disposed to open the Gates to the Romans. But on a sudden Cestius, who knew nothing of his advantage, put a stop to his Assault, left the City, and returned to the Camp at Scopos. The Seditious pursued him, and killed many both of his Horse and Foot in their retreat.

The next day he decamped from Scopos, with a design to reach his first Camp at Gibeon: But he was continually harrassed by the Jews, who attacking him in Flank and Rear, killed a great number of his Soldiers, and took a great part of his Baggage. He halted two days at Gibeon, without knowing what to resolve on: At last, upon the third day, which[4] was the eighth of November, observing the number of the Jews to be every day increasing, he begun to march, abandoning the Baggage, and killing all the beasts of burden, excepting those which carried the Machines and Javelins. The Jews pursued them but very faintly, till they came to a very narrow descent, where they attacked them in the Front, and on every side. The combat lasted till night: The Romans lost four thousand Foot, and about four hundred Horse. The night gave the Romans an opportunity of retiring to Bethoron.

But Cestius seeing himself every way encompassed by the Jews, did not think it convenient to wait for day light to decamp; but broke up in the dark, and left four hundred Men in Bethoron, with orders to get upon the Platforms of the Houses, and every now and then to cry as the Centinels do in the night time. By which means the Jews might believe the whole Army to be there still. The next morning the Jews fell upon these four hundred Men, cut them in pieces, and began to pursue Cestius. But he had marched with so much speed, that they could not overtake him. He left them his Machines, which were afterwards very useful to them, during the Siege of Jerusalem. Cestius survived this Defeat but a very little while: He died the next year, of J. C. the 67th.

Chabalon

CHABALON, Chabelon, or Chabulon, or Cabul. There is mention in the first [1 Kings ix. 13.] Book of Kings of the land of Cabul[1]. Thus Hiram King of Tyre called the twenty Cities whereof Solomon made a present to him, in acknowledgment for the great services he had done him in building of the Temple. There are some disputes concerning the signification of Cabul, and the situation of this Country. Josephus says[2], that Cabul in the Phœnician language, signifies that which is displeasing, others, that it signifies a barren, sandy, dry Soil; or as others on the contrary say, a miry wet Soil, over-run with weeds. The Septuagint have it, He called them from the frontier, as if they had read Gabal instead of Cabul. Others think, that Cabul in Hebrew may signify something of no value, Cabul, quasi nihil.

As to the situation of Cabul, Josephus says, that the Cities of Cabul were in the Neighbourhood of Tyre. Others place them beyond Jordan in the Decapolis[3]. Grotius is of opinion, that the Cities which Pharaoh had conquered from the Philistines, and yielded up to Solomon, were comprised among the Cities of Cabul. [Josh. xix. 27.] The generality are persuaded, that the City of Cabul, mentioned in Joshua, was one of these, and it was probably on this occasion that Hiram gave this name to the other Cities, whereof Solomon had made a cession to him. Now Cabul was in all probability the same as Chabalon, or Chabul, which Josephus places in the neighbourhood of Ptolemais, south of Tyre.

The Chaldee interprets it Pearls; others think that the Onyx, Ruby, Carbuncle, Chrystal, or Diamond is meant by it: Every one according to their particular conjectures.

Chaldæa

CHALDÆA, a Country in Asia, near the Place where the Tigris and Euphrates meet, the Capital whereof was Babylon. The name of Chaldæa is no where to be met with in the Hebrew Text, but that of Chasdim; whether the Chaldæans derived this name from Cased, the Son of Nahor, Abraham's Brother, or from any other, who was more ancient. Chaldæa in itself was originally included within a narrow compass, but the Empire of Chaldæa being afterwards very much inlarged, the name of Chaldæa is likewise taken in a more uncertain and extensive meaning.

Chaldæans

CHALDÆANS. This name is taken either for the people of Chaldæa, and the subjects[1] subjects belonging to the Empire of Chaldæa, or for a sort of Philosophers or Soothsayers, who were called Chaldæans, and in Hebrew, Casdim. The principal employment of these Philosophers was the study of Mathematicks and Astrology : they pretended by an inspection of the Stars to know the good or bad destiny[2] of men, who were born under certain constellations.[3] Chaldæ[4] non ex artis sed ex gentis vocabulo nominati, diuturnâ observatione siderum, scientiam putantur effecisse, ut prædici posset quid cuique eventurum, a quo quisque fato natus esset. They gloried in having astronomical observations among them for four hundred and seventy two thousand years[5] ; Cicero says[6], for four hundred and seventy thousand ; Epigenes, as he is cited in Pliny[7], for seven hundred and twenty thousand ; lastly, they who are lowest in their computation of their Antiquity, make their observations to be of four hundred and fourscore thousand years standing.[8] But this Antiquity has always been suspected to be false. Aristotle, who was curious to know the truth of it, wrote to Callisthenes, who was at Babylon with Alexander, desiring him to give him the most certain account of this matter, that he could procure in the Country. Hereupon Callisthenes sent him celestial Observations for nineteen hundred and three years ;[9] from the beginning of the Chaldee Monarchy to the reign of Alexander the Great. Now if we go back from Alexander, that is to say, from his Victory over Darius in 3674, we find the year of the world 1771, which comes very near the time, wherein the Tower of Babel was founded.

As to the Empire of the Chaldæans, we know it began under Nimrod, but the sequel [Gen. xiv. About the year of the World 2092.] of it is what we are not particularly acquainted with. In the time of Abraham, we find a King of Shinar, who in all probability was King likewise of Chaldæa[10]. Julius Africanus says *Evecho*üs reigned in Chaldæa two hundred and twenty four years before the Arabians, that is to say, in the year of the world 2242, when Isaac was living. The Arabians conquered the Empire of Chaldæa in 2466, and kept possession of it for two hundred and sixteen years till 2682. Belus the Assyrian succeeded the Arabians. He reigned five and fifty years before the Foundation of the Assyrian Empire laid by Ninus.

The Chaldæans continued under the dominion of the Assyrian Kings till the [Isai. xxxix. 1.] time of Sardanapalus. In the year of the world 3254, before J. C. 750, Arbaces Governor of Media, and Belesis Governor of Babylon, rebell'd against Sardanapalus, compell'd him to shut himself up in Nineveh, and there burn himself. Belesis freed the Chaldæans from the dominion of the Assyrians, and was acknowledged King of Babylon[11]. He is the same person, who in Scripture is called Baladan and Nabonassar in Hipparchus, Censorinus and Ptolemy. He was succeeded in the Kingdom of Chaldæa by Berodach-Baladan, or Merodach-Baladan, who is mentioned in [2 Kings xx. 12.] the second book of Kings, and sent Ambassadors to Hezekiah King of Judah.

It appears that the Babylonians soon fell again under the power of the Assyrians, since in the year of the world 3378 under the reign of Josiah King of Judah, Nabopolassar having been established Governor of Babylon by Chinaladanus or Sarack King of Assyria, rebell'd against his King, and having entred into a confederacy with Cyaxares Governor of Media, they laid siege to Nineveh, took it, killed King Chinaladanus, and divided the Assyrian Empire between them[12]. Cyaxares had Media and Armenia; and Nabopolassar Assyria and Chaldæa. It was properly under Nabopolassar that the great and famous Monarchy of Chaldæa began, which subsisted under the several Kings Nabopolassar, Nebuchadnezzar, Evilmerodach, and Belshazzar, till the reign of Darius the Mede, who was succeeded at Babylon by Cyrus.

Chamanim

CHAMANIM. Thus they call that in Hebrew, which the Greeks name Pyræïa, or Pyrateria, and S. Jerom in Leviticus[1] [Lev. xxvi. 30. Isai. xxvii. 9.] has translated Simulachra, in Isaiah i Delubra. These Chamanim were, according to Rabbi Solomon, Idols exposed to the Sun upon the tops of houses. Abenezra says, they were portable Chapels or Temples, made in the form of Chariots in honour of the Sun.

What the Greeks call Pyræïa were Temples consecrated to the Sun and Fire, wherein a perpetual Fire was kept up. They were built upon eminences; and were large enclosures without covering,[2] where the Sun was worshipped. Herodotus[3] and Strabo[4] speak of them, and the Guebres or Worshippers of Fire in Persia and the Indies have some of these Pyræia still at this day. Strabo says, that in his time there were many of these Temples to be seen in Cappadocia, consecrated to the Goddess Anaïta and the God Homanus: Anaïta is in all probality the Moon, and Homanus the Sun. The word Chamanim is derived from Chaman, which signifies to warm, to burn.

Chamarim

CHAMARIM. We meet with this word in several places of the Hebrew Bible, and generally it is translated, the Priests of the Idols, or Priests cloathed in black, because Chamar signifies black or blackness. S. Jerom in the second Book of Kings[1] renders [2 Kings xxiii. 5. Hos. x. 5. וכמריו Zeph. i. 4.] it Aruspices. In Hosea and Zephaniah he translates it Æditui, Churchwardens; but the best Commentators are of opinion, that by this word we are to understand the Priests of the false Gods, and in particular of the Worshippers of Fire[2], because they were, as they say, dressed in black; or perhaps the Hebrews gave them this name in derision, because as they were continually employed in taking care about the fewel and keeping up the Fire, they were as black as Smiths or Colliers. We find Priests among those of Isis called Melanephori, that is to say, that wear black. But I cannot tell whether this might be by reason of their dressing in black, or whether it were because they wore a certain black shining Vail in the Processions of this Goddess.[3] Quæ longe lateque meum confutabat obtutum pallanigerrima, splendescens atro nitore. Camar in Arabic signifies the Moon: Isis is the same Deity. Grotius thinks the Roman Priests called Camilli, came from the Hebrew, Chamarim. They among the Heathens who sacrificed to the infernal Gods, were dressed in black[4].

Chamos

CHAMOS, or Chemosh, the Idol or God of the Moabites. The name of Chamos comes [כמוש Chamos.] from a Root, which in Arabic signifies to make haste: For which reason many believe Chamos to be the Sun, whose precipitate course might well procure it the name of swift, or speedy. Others have confounded Chamos with the God Hammon; adored not only in Libya and Egypt, but also in Arabia, Ethiopia and the Indies[1]. Macrobius shews that Hammon was the Sun,[2] and the Horns [xxv. 1, 2, 3, &c.] with which he was represented, denoted his Rays. We are of opinion, that the God Hamanus, and Apollo Chomeus, mentioned by Strabo[3] and Ammianus Marcellinus[4], was the very same as Chamos or the Sun. These Deities were worshipped in many of the eastern Provinces. Some who go upon the resemblance of the Hebrew term Chamos, with the Greek Comos, have believed Chamos to signify the God Bacchus, the God of Drunkenness, according to the signification of the Greek Comos[5]. S. Jerom v, and with him most Interpreters take Chamos and Peor for the same Divinity. But we have made it appear, that Baal Peor was the same as Tammuz or Adonis; so that Chamos must be the God whom the Heathens call the Sun.

[כמס Chamos occultarit. חמוּתhemus.] They who derive this word from the Hebrew Camos with a Caph, Mem, and Samech, pretend that it signifies the hidden God, or Pluto, whose abode is in Hell; in this sense it will be the same as Tammuz, which signifies the same thing, and is taken for Adonis, because this God was adored as one that had been conceal'd and buried in a Coffin, then rais'd from the dead, and appearing alive again. But the God Chamos is never written in Scripture after the manner we have been speaking of, so as to signify the hidden God.

These are particulars which may be seen more at length in our Dissertation on Baal- Peor and Chamos prefixed to our Comment on the Book of Numbers.

Chanters

CHANTERS, or Singing-men. In the Temple of Jerusalem there was a great number of Levites, who were imployed in singing the Praises of God, and in playing upon Instruments before his Altar. In the reign of David there were four thousand Singing-men, with their Heads and Presidents. Asaph, Heman, and Jeduthun were Masters of the Musick belonging to the Temple in the Reigns of David and Solomon. Asaph had four Sons, Jeduthun six, and Heman fourteen. These four and twenty Levites, the Sons of the three principal Musick Masters, were set at the head of four and twenty Companies of Singers. Each of these had eleven Masters of an inferior Order under him, who presided over other Singers, and instructed them: Those of Kohath's Family were placed in the middle of the Temple, those of Merari's on the left, and those of Gershon's on the right. They seem to have been farther distinguish'd by the Instruments of Musick which they used. The Sons of Jeduthun played on the Kinnor or Harp, those of Asaph on the Nabal or Psaltery; and those of He man on the Mislothaim, which was a sort of Bell.

The Chanters and Levites, who were employed in singing, playing upon Instruments, and other Functions of the Temple, had no habits distinct from the rest of the People. Nevertheless, in the Ceremony of removing the Ark to the Temple of [2 Chr. v. 12.] Jerusalem built by Solomon, the Chanters appeared dressed in Tunicks of Byssus or fine Linnen. Josephus[1] remarks, that in King Agrippa's time, they obtained the favour from this Prince of wearing a Linnen Robe in the Temple like the Priests. Agrippa believed it would be for the Honour of his Reign, to signalize it by so considerable a change as this. The other Levites imployed in different Exercises under the Command of the Priests in the Temple, procured likewise permission to learn to sing, to the end that they might enjoy the same Privileges with their Brethren. This was contrary to the Laws of God, says Josephus, which were never violated with impunity.

Chaos

CHAOS. This is the name whereby we call that Confusion, wherein matter lay, when newly produced out of nothing at the beginning of the World, before God, by his Almighty Word, had put it into the order and condition wherein it was after the six days Creation. Moses makes use of the Terms Tohu and Bohu[1], to express this [Gen. i. 2.] Chaos, which the Septuagint translate invisible, and in disorder; Symmachus, a Mass without motion, and in disorder; Aquila and Theodotion, a void and nothing. Ovid describes the Chaos very well in these verses.

----Rudis indigestaque moles, Nec quidquam nisi pondus iners, congestaq; eodem Non bene junctarum discordia semina rerum.

Chaos is taken likewise for an Abyss, an impenetrable Space, which prevents any one's passing from one place to another. Thus Abraham told the rich Man, that [Luke xvi. 26. Μέγα χάσμα.] there was a great Chaos or Gulf (or as in the Greek a great Hollow) which separated them. Inter vos & nos chaos magnum firmamentum est.

Chariots of War (I)

I. CHARIOTS of WAR. The Scripture speaks of two sorts, one was for Princes and Generals to ride in, the other to break the Enemies Batalions, by letting loose these Chariots against them, armed with Iron, which made terrible havock in the Troops. The most antient Chariots of War whereof we have any knowledge, are Pharaoh's, which were drowned in the Red Sea. The Canaanites, whom Joshua engaged with at the waters of Merom, had Cavalry, and a multitude of Chariots. Equi & currus immensæ multitudinis. Sisera, Jabin the King of Hazor's General, had nine hundred Chariots of Iron in his Army. The Tribe of Judah could not get Possession of the lands belonging to their partition, because the antient Inhabitants of the Country were strong in Chariots of Iron. The Philistines in the War carried on by them against Saul, had thirty thousand Chariots, and six thousand Horsemen. David having taken a thousand Chariots of War from Hadadezer King of Syria hamstrung the Horses, and burnt nine hundred Chariots, reserving only an hundred to [1 Chr. xxiii. 4. & 2 Sam. viii. 4. 1 Kings x. 26.] himself.

It does not appear that the Kings of the Hebrews ever made use of Chariots in War. Solomon had a considerable number of them; but we know of no military expedition wherein they were employed by him. He had, says the Scripture, fourteen hundred Chariots, and twelve thousand Horses. As Judæa was a very mountainous Country, Chariots could be of no use but in the Plains, and the Hebrews often made them needless, by combating upon their Mountains; and from hence in all probability it came, that they never were very curious of having any in their Armies.

[2 Macc. xiii. 2.] In the Books of the Maccabees there is mention made of Chariots armed with Scythes, which the King of Syria led against Judea. The Descriptions which the Antients give us of these Chariots, is much after the following manner[1]. The Beam to which the Horses were fastened, was armed with Pikes having iron points to them, which projected forward; the Yokes of the Horses had likewise two long points of three Cubits. To the Axle-tree also were fixed iron Spits, armed at their extremities with Scythes; between the Spokes of the Wheels were placed Javelins, and the very fellows of the wheels were furnished with Scythes, which tore every thing they met with to pieces.

The Axle-tree was longer than usual, and the Wheels stronger, that they might be able to resist the shock of the motion, and the Chariot be less subject to overturn. The Driver's seat was a kind of little Tower made of very solid Wood, and raised breast high. The Charioteer was armed all over, and covered with Iron. Sometimes several Men well armed were put in the Chariots, who fought with Darts and Arrows. Any one may judge what dreadful Shocks were caused by these Machines, when once they were in motion, and met the Enemies Troops[2].

The Kings of Israel, when they went to War, were generally mounted on their Chariots; they fought thus, and issued out their orders; and there was always a second Chariot empty which followed them, that if the first were broke, they might immediately [2 Chron. xxxv. 24. 2 Kings xxiii. 31.] get up into the other.

Chariots were sometimes consecrated to the Sun; and the Scripture observes, that Josiah burnt those which had been offered to the Sun by the Kings his Predecessors. This superstitious custom was an imitation of the Heathens, and principally of the Persians, who had Horses and Chariots consecrated in honour of the Sun. Herodotus, Xenophon, and Quintus Curtius[3] speak of white Chariots, crowned, which were consecrated to the Sun, and among the Persians in their Ceremonies, were drawn with white Horses consecrated to the same Luminary.

The Rhodians threw a Chariot every year into the Sea, in honour of the Sun; because they believed, that every day he travelled round the Earth riding in a Chariot. Festus in Octobri.

Chedorlaomer

CHEDORLAOMER, King of the Elymæans or Elamites, who were either the Persians, or People bordering upon [Gen. xiv. 1, 2, & seq.] them. Chedorlaomer was one of the four confederated Kings, who made war against the five Kings of the Pentapolis of Sodom, and who after having defeated them, and made themselves Masters of a great Booty, were pursued and dispersed by Abraham, in the year of the World 2092, before the Birth of J. C. 1908, and before the vulgar Æra 1911.

[Before J.C. 1909. before the vulgar Æra 1933. See Mat. iv. 15. Isai. ix. 1.] This Prince, after he had for twelve years kept five Kings subject to his Dominion, viz. Bera King of Sodom, Birsha King of Gomorrah, Shinab King of Admah, Shemeber King of Zeboïm, and the King of Bela, which is Zoar: They at last revolted from him about the year of the World 2091. Chedorlaomer gathered a great Army, and entring into a Confederacy with Amraphel King of Shinar, Arioch King of Ellasar, perhaps Thalassar, near Assyria, in the Province of Eden, and with Tidal King of the Nations; probably the Nations which lay beyond Jordan, in Galilee of the Gentiles: These four Kings with their Troops marched towards the Land of Canaan; in their way they attacked some People of the Countries beyond Jordan, such as the Rephaims, Giants, who possessed the Land lying between the Brook Jabbok and the Arnon: They took and pillaged Ashteroth Karnaim, a famous City situated eastward of the Sea of Galilee.

They likewise defeated the Zuzims, the same probably with the Zumzummims, antient Inhabitants of the Country afterwards [Deut. ii. 20, 21. Deut. ii. 20, 21. Josh. xiii. 19, 21. See Judg. x. 5. and the Notes on Gen. xiv. 5. Gen. xxxii. 3. & xxxvi. 20.] possessed by the Ammonites. Moses says, the Zuzims were beaten at Ham, perhaps Chamin, an antient City of the same Territory. They farther routed the Emims in Shaveh Kiriathaim. The Emims are an antient People, who dwelt originally in the Country which was afterwards possessed by the Moabites; and Shaveh Kiriathaim is a City in the same Land, which afterwards belonged to King Sihon. Lastly, in the Mountains of Gilead, the Horites, a famous People descended from Seir the Horite, whose Country was afterwards seized by the Edomites. They carried on their Conquests as far as the Plains of Paran in Arabia Petræa. From thence they returned towards Kadesh-Barnea, where is the Fountain of Mishpat, which however did not go by this Name till the time of Moses. [Numb. xx. 13.] They ravaged the Country of the Amalekites, who inhabited part of Arabia Petræa, and defeated the Amorites, whose settlement was at Hazezon-tamar, which some believe to be the same as Engeddi, a City adjacent to the Pentapolis and Gomorrha; thus the four Kings, who were Allies, began to destroy the Power of the several People bordering upon Sodom and Gomorrha, that so these Cities having no more assistance to expect from this Quarter, might not be able to escape their vengeance.

The five revolted Kings seeing the Allies drawing towards their City, took the Field with their Army, and put it in order of Battel in the very Plain, where their [About the year of the World 2092.] several Towns were situated. Now there were many Wells in this Plain, out of which People got Bitumen, a circumstance which might have rendred the access to it more difficult and dangerous to the Enemies Horse. Here the Battel was fought, and the Kings of Sodom, Gomorrha, Zeboim, Admah, and Zoar, were put to flight; one part of their Army was cut in pieces, and the other fled to the neighbouring Mountains, leaving their Cities a Prey to the Conquerors. Sodom, Gomorrha, and the other places were pillaged, and the Enemy loaded with Spoil and Captives returned by the way of the Euphrates.

[Observations on the Battel between the five confederate Kings and Chedorlaomer in the Valley of Woods. Gen. xiv. 8.] I shall not enquire much about this Battel; for how can we discourse upon facts of such remote Antiquity? It will be hard for any one to cure me of an opinion entertained by me, that at this time, and ever before, the People of Asia were not so ignorant and unskilful as we may imagine. In the manner wherein the Scripture speaks of them, they may be said to make War very well; for even then we perceive there was military Discipline regulated with a great deal of good Sense and Knowledge. If you were to hear certain Persons, you would say that Armies in the time of Abraham fought as the Hottentots would have done. If the World be not older than is generally supposed, it must be surprizing to find People who were able, in so short a time, to make so great a progress in War. This is what I shall make appear to be very remarkable in my Dissertation on the Tacticks of the Hebrews and People of Asia; but this is not a proper place to do so.

The Scripture says not one word concerning the disposition of the two Armies; but this does not prevent us from putting them in order of Battel: Because we cannot be unacquainted with their Tacticks. It is certain that they fought in great Bodies, drawn up with a great depth: This a thousand Examples will demonstrate. The order of Abraham's Troops, who upon notice of the loss of this Battel, marched against the five victorious Kings, is a good proof that they engaged in this manner; that is to say, in Portions or Divisions of a Phalanx, and often in a perfect Phalanx: For the so much boasted Phalanx of the Greeks differed in name only from that of the Asiatick People.

I range therefore the Troops of these five Kings in so many Bodies of a great depth, according to the method of these old times, which shews a better Understanding, and more Judgment than ours. It is probable Chedorlaomer's Army was disposed in the same order to make head against them. Let no one object that these two Dispositions are imaginary: For, as I have already said, we are acquainted with their method of fighting, and this is sufficient to give us a competent insight into such other Orders of Battel as are not explain'd by the Sacred Writers, which yet is very rare. It would be easy for an Author, who would make a plan of the Battel of Lens a thousand years hence, to draw up the Army in this Plain, tho' our method of fighting now in use were to be lost, provided he was not a Stranger to the French Tacticks, and those of other People in these times. We have no Plan of the Battle of Cannæ; nevertheless since Polybius acquaints us with the Disposition of it, we cannot be mistaken in the Plans of both the Carthaginian and Roman Armies, whose method is well known to us; and although that of the latter be not intirely conformable to the common Disposition of their Cohorts, yet the Historian explains it to us so clearly, that it is impossible for one, who has any little degree of Experience, to be mistaken in the Plan which he would give of it. The Scripture does not set forth the particular Circumstances of this Battel between Chedorlaomer and the five Kings; the latter were beaten, and consequently put to flight, which is all we learn from it.

[Gen. xiv. 14.] After the defeat of the five Kings by Chedorlaomer and his Allies, Lot who had retired to Sodom, was involved in the Calamity of this City. He was plundered of all he had, and was himself carried away with the other Captives. Hereupon one who had preserved himself by flight, went and gave intelligence to Abraham of what had passed. Abraham dwelt at that time in the Valley of Mamre, and had made a kind of offensive and defensive League with Mamre, Eshcol, and Aner, who all dwelt in the same Plain. As soon as he heard this News, he gave Intelligence of it to his Allies, and exhorted them to be assisting to him in the deliverance of his Nephew Lot: They armed their People; Abraham put himself at the head of three hundred and eighteen of his Servants, all Men of Resolution, and began to pursue the Army of the four victorious Kings. They marched near seventy Leagues without being able to overtake them; at last they joined them at Dan, near the Springs of Jordan. Abraham formed several Bodies out of his own People, People, and those of his Allies, and falling upon the Enemy by night, he struck their Camp with great Terror, routed, and pursued them as far as Hobah, or Abila, to the north of Damascus, in the Valley between Libanus and Antilibanus. He brought back his Nephew Lot with him, and all that belonged to him, the captive Women, and all the Booty which Chedorlaomer and his Allies had taken upon defeating the five revolted Kings, and plundering Sodom and Gomorrha.

[Observations on Abraham's surprizing Chedorlaomer's Camp.] There was a great Battel fought in the Vale of Siddim: Chedorlaomer King of the Elamites, and three other Kings his Allies, obtained a signal Victory over five Kings, who were confederated against them. [Gen. c. xiv. v. 14.] Abraham being informed that his Nephew Lot was taken in this Battel. without losing a moment's time, immediately prepared to rescue him; He armed his trained Servants, says the Scripture, born in his own house, three hundred and eighteen, and pursued them unto Dan.

To translate Persecutus est eos usque Hoba in a true military Sense, I would say, that Abraham fell upon the Conquerors in their March; for the word pursue would signify, that Abraham had already broken them, whereas it was another Enemy, an Enemy quite new, who followed them in their Rear, and concealed his March, that so he might prevent discovery and surprize them. He was too weak to attack them in broad day light; he therefore waited for the night, which is the refuge of Generals, who have small Armies, and the most commodious time for surprising Camps. And having divided his People into several Troops, he fell upon the Enemy by night, defeated them, and pursued them as far as Hobah, which is on the left hand of Damascus.

The Stratagem was good, and it is always most advisable in Attacks by night, to find employment for the Enemy in several places. Not only darkness encreases the Terror, and the Surprize magnifies every thing for the worse; but the Enemies Forces are not known, and they are believed always to be more considerable than in reality they are, because it cannot be imagined that a handful of People would venture upon attacking a great Army; and this opinion in Surprizes is very common.

Abraham therefore drew up in several small Bodies, divisis sociis; the number of them is not particularly expressed in Scripture: I believe these three hundred and eighteen Men might do some execution in four little Bodies. We may easily comprehend, that he might beat his Enemies; Night and Surprize, are two things of more dangerous Consequence in great than in small Armies; because they are more subject to pannick Frights. The example of the defeat of the Bavarians near Rhinsfelt, who had just before obtained a remarkable Victory over the Duke of Weimar, is a demonstrative proof of this maxim: For he having got together again the sad remains of his Defeat, rallied them, and making a good March by night, fell suddenly upon the Bavarian Camp; whereupon the whole Army fled, without offering to come to action. It is probable Abraham might set fire to the Camp, after having given the Plunder of it to his victorious Troops.

Cherem

[Cherem, Anathema. Niddui.] CHEREM, Anathema. The Hebrews distinguish three sorts of Excommunications. The first is Niddui, Separation, the lesser Excommunication. The second is Cherem, the greater Excommunication, or 5 H Ana- חמשה*Schammathab. Anathema*; and the third Shammathah, to which the punishment of Death is annexed[1]. The Cherem, whereof we are here speaking, deprives the excommunicated person of most of the Advantages belonging to civil Society. He can have no Commerce with any one, he can neither buy nor sell, except such things as are absolutely necessary to Life, nor resort to the Schools, nor enter the Synagogues. No one is permitted to eat or drink with him. The Sentence of Cherem was to be pronounced by ten persons only, or at least in the presence of ten persons. But the excommunicated person might be absolved by three Judges, or even by one, provided he were a Doctor of the Law. The form of Excommunication was loaded with a multitude of Curses and Imprecations, taken from different places of the Scripture. See *Bartolocci's Bibl. Cherethim

CHERETHIM, or Cretim. These terms are Denominations of the Philistines, as we see by Ezekiel and Zephaniah: I will stretch out mine hand upon the Philistines, and will cut off the Cherethim, and destroy the remnant of the sea coast, says Ezekiel. And Zephaniah [Ezek. xxv. 16.] exclaiming against the Philistines, says, [Zeph. ii. 5.] Wo unto the inhabitants of the sea-coasts, the nation of the Cherethites. It is said in the first Book of Samuel, that the [1 Sam. xxx. 14.] Amalekites made an Invasion upon the South of the Cherethites; that is to say, of the Philistines. David, and some of the Kings of Judah his Successors, had foreign Guards, called Cherethites and Pelethites, [2 Sam. xv. 18.] who were of the Philistines Country.

[See our Comment on this place.] It has been a Question, whence the Philistines or Cherethites came when they removed into Palestine. The Scripture expressly says, that the Philistines came from the Isle of Caphtor. We have endeavoured [Jer. xlvii. 4. Amos ix. 7.] to shew in a Dissertation made particularly on this place,[1] that the Isle of Caphtor signified the Isle of Crete. The Septuagint translateth it Cherethim, Cretenses, and Chereth, Crete. There are many Footsteps of their Original from Crete to be observed. from the Religion and Customs of the Philistines. There is reason therefore to believe, that they came originally from this Island. Others bring them from Cappadocia, as we have shewn in the Article Caphtor.

Cherub (II)

[Ezek. i. 10. compared with Ezek. x. 14, כרוב Cherub.] II. CHERUB, Cherubim. The term Cherub in Hebrew is sometimes taken for a Calf or an Ox. Ezekiel sets down the Face of a Cherub as synonymous to the Face of an Ox. The word Cherub in Syriac and in Chaldee, signifies to till or plough, which is the proper work of Oxen. Cherub also signifies strong and powerful. The strength of an Ox, is what every one is well acquainted with. Grotius says, that the Cherubins were Figures much like that of a Calf. Bochart thinks likewise, that the Cherubins were more like the figure of an Ox, than of any thing besides; and Spencer is of the same opinion. Lastly, S. John in the Revelations calls Cherubins Beasts. And round about the throne were four beasts. Josephus[1] says, the Cherubins were extraordinary creatures, and of a figure unknown to Mankind. Clemens of Alexandria[2] believes, that the Egyptians imitated the Cherubins of the Hebrews, in the Representation of their Sphinx's, and their hieroglyphical animals.

All the several descriptions which the Scripture gives us of Cherubins differ from one another; but all agree in representing a figure composed of various creatures, as a [Ezek. i. 5, & seq. x. 20, 21. Isai. vi. 2.] Man, an Ox, an Eagle and a Lion. Such were the Cherubins described by Ezekiel. Those which Isaiah saw, and are called Seraphins by him, had the figure of a Man with six wings, with two whereof they covered their Faces, with two more they covered their Feet, and with the two others they flew. Those which Solomon placed in the Temple of Jerusalem must have been pretty nearly in the same form, [Rev. iv. 6, 7. Rev. iv. 6, 7.] 1 Kings vi. 23. Those which S. John describes in the Revelations, were all Eyes before and behind, having each six Wings. The first was in the form of a Lion, the second of a Calf, the third of a Man, and the fourth of an Eagle. They cried continually day and night, Holy, Holy, Holy. [Exod. xxv. 18, 19, 20.] &c. Those which Moses placed upon the Ark of the Covenant, are not well described to us in the Scripture, no more than those which God posted at the entrance of that delightful Garden, out of which he [Gen. iii. 24.] had driven Adam and Eve. But it is very probable, that both one and the other had a human figure, since it is said of those which were placed at the entrance of Paradise, that they had their Station there assigned them to guard [Gen. iii. 24. Ezek. xxviii. 14.] the entrance to it, and held a flaming Sword in their hands. And Ezekiel compares the King of Tyre to the Cherubin that covered the Ark of the Covenant, upon the holy mountain; that is to say, that he was like this Cherub glittering all over with Gold and Glory. Moreover, Moses says, that two Cherubins covered the Mercy-seat with their Wings extended on both sides, and looked one upon another, having their Faces turned towards the Mercy-seat, which covered the Ark.

The result of all that I have said is this, that the figure of the Cherubins was not always uniform, since they are differently described in the shapes of Men, Eagles, Oxen, Lions, and in a composition of all these figures [Exod. xxvi. 1.] put together. Moses likewise calls those symbolical or hieroglyphical Representations which were represented in Imbroideries upon the Veils of the Tabernacle, Cherubins of costly work[3]. Such were the symbolical Figures which the Egyptians placed at the gates of their Temples, and the Images of the generality of their Gods, which were nothing commonly but Statues composed of Men and Animals[4].

[Gen. xxxvii. 2, 3, 4, &c. 1 Chr. xiii. 9. Gen. xxii. 5. Psal. xviii. 46. Isai. ii. 6. Gen. xliv. 20. Isai. lxv. 20.] CHILD, puer or filius. In the Scripture Disciples are often called Children or Sons. Solomon in his Proverbs gives this name to his Disciple, Audi; Fili mi, &c. The Children of the Devil, the Sons of Belial are those who follow the maxims of the World and the Devil. The descendants of a Man, how remote soever they may be, are called Sons or Children; for example, the Children of Edom, the Children of Moab, the Children of Israel. This Expression, the Children of the Wedding, the Children of Light, the Children of Darkness, is sometimes used to signify those who are invited to the Wedding, who follow Light, who remain in Darkness; the Children of the Kingdom, those who belong to the Kingdom.

Persons who are almost of Age, are often called Children. For example, Joseph is called puer, tho' he were at least sixteen. Isaac was above twenty, when Abraham still gave him this name. Benjamin of the age of above thirty, is still called puer parvulus. The Hebrews as well as the Greeks and Latins, called their Servants and Slaves pueri. Lastly, Men of full age have often the name of Children given them: The strange Children shall fail. They pleased themselves in the children of strangers. The child shall die an hundred years old; that is to say, Men shall die at the age of an hundred years; there shall be no more untimely deaths seen.

Children

[Psal. lxxxii. 6. Job i. 6. ii. 1.] CHILDREN, Sons of God. By this name the Angels are sometimes described: for example, Now there was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, and Satan came also among [Psal. lxxxix. 6.] them. And in the Psalms, Who among the sons of the mighty can be likened unto the Lord? Good Men, in opposition to the wicked, are likewise called by this name, the Children of Seth's family, in opposition [Gen. vi. 2.] to the Race of Cain. The Sons of God saw the daughters of men and they were fair; and they took them wives of all that they chose.

Judges, Magistrates, and Priests are likewise termed Children of God. I said ye are Gods, and the children of the Most High. He speaks to Judges. And in another place, directing himself to Priests, he says, Give unto [Psal. xxix. 1.] the Lord, O ye Children of the mighty, give unto the[1] Lord glory and strength. All this in the way of opposition to the sons of men, who are the common part of Mankind, ordinary People, Men in general.

[Wisd. v. 5. Hos. i. 10. See John xi. 52.] The Israelites are elsewhere called Sons of God, in opposition to the Gentiles, whereas before it was said unto them, ye are my people, they shall be called the children, the sons of God. Sometimes the Elect, the Blessed, have this name given them. How is he numbred among the children of God, and his lot is among the Saints!

[John i. 12. Rom. viii. 14.] In the New Testament, Believers are commonly called children of God by vertue of their adoption, and the prerogatives which Christ acquired for them, by assuming human flesh, and communicating this quality to us by Baptism, and a participation in the merits of his death. He hath given us, says S. John, power to become the sons of God. And St. Paul in several places extols the advantages of being adopted to be the Sons of God, which adoption we have received by the holy Spirit. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God---the Spirit it self beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God. And in another place, [Gal. iii. 26.] Ye are all the children of God by faith, &c.

Children, Sons of Men. This name is given to the Men of Cain's family, who lived before the Deluge, and in particular to the Giants, those violent and corrupt Men, who before the Deluge had corrupted their ways, and drew down the most terrible effects of God's anger upon the Earth. Afterwards the impious, the wicked, bad Israelites, were called the Sons of Men: [Psal. iv. 3. Psal. xii. 1. Ps. lvii. 4.] For example, How long will ye love vanity, O ye Sons of men? And, The faithful are minished from among the children of men. And, The sons of men, whose teeth are spears and arrows. But very often, by the Sons of Men, mankind are to be understood without any odious notion. What is man, [Ps. viii. 4. Psal. xi. 4. Ps. cxlv. 12.] that thou art mindful of him; or the son of man, that thou visitest him? And, His eye-lids try the children of Men. And again, To make known to the sons of men his mighty Acts.

China

CHINA, is one of the finest Countries in Asia. The Arabians write it Sin; the Persians, and other eastern People Tehin. They tell us, that this Country derives its name from one of the Sons of Japheth[1], called Sin. He was, say they, the eldest and most understanding of Japheth's Children; he had likewise the best partition, and the large Country of China for his Inheritance. He it was who taught his Sons painting, sculpture, and the art of preparing Silk, so as to make different sorts of Stuffs with it. In a word, some assert, that the Works so much in vogue in China, and so much valued by Foreigners, are for the most part of his Invention.

His eldest Son was Matchin, who peopled the southern part of China, wherein we comprehend Cochinchina, Tunquin, and the Kingdom of Anan, together with those of Siam and Pegu. The antient Histories of the Persians say, that Feridoun King of the first Dynasty, called the Peichadians, gave China and Furkaston to his Son Tour for his Inheritance, with the title of Fagfour, which has continued hereditary to the Kings of this Country, like Pharaoh to those of Egypt. It is a very antient Tradition among the eastern People,[1] that there is a very great number of Jews in China, and that they removed thither in the time of Joshua, God having opened a way thither for their arrival. But there is much more probability, that they who are to be met with in this part of the World, went thither after the Captivities of Israel under Salmanesèr, and the other three Kings of Assyria. In reality the passage thither is not very difficult from the Territories of the Medes and Persians.

It cannot be denied, that formerly there was a great number of Jews in China; the oldest relations[2] that we have of this Country declare, that at the general desolation of it, principally at the taking of Cumdan, there was a great number of Christians and Jews massacred. But when, and upon what occasion the Jews came thither, we do not know. The Chinese Histories give us no intelligence in this[3] this particular, either because the settlement of this People was made there insensibly, and without noise, or because the Chinese Historians, with whom it is a maxim to take no notice of foreign affairs, did not think proper to make mention of them.

At present there are few of them in China, where they lye dispersed in several Provinces, and particularly in the trading Cities. F. Ricci relates, that a Jew of Caisamfu coming to Pekin, in order to take his degrees there, had the curiosity to visit him, upon receiving information that he adored one God only, and was not engaged in the Superstitions practised by the Idolaters of that Country. F. Ricci carried him to a Chapel, where there was a picture of the Blessed Virgin holding the Child Jesus in her arms, and S. John Baptist near him. The Jew imagined these to be Rebekah, Jacob and Esau. He made the like judgment of a Picture representing the four Evangelists. This Father afterwards proposed several Questions to him, and discovered by his Answers, that he was Professor of the old Law, and owned himself to be an Israelite, not a Jew; whereupon he concluded, that he was a descendant of the ten Tribes, which were led into Captivity.

Father Ricci shewed him afterwards the Polyglot Bible of Antwerp; the Jew found out the Hebrew Characters in it, but could not read them; because, as he confessed, he had neglected the study of this Language, and had applied himself to that of the Chinese Letters, upon which account he had been like to be expelled out of the Synagogue. He was likewise informed by him, that there were ten or twelve families of Jews in the same City, where they had a handsom Synagogue, and had preserved the Pentateuch written in Volumes or Rolls for about five or six hundred years; that there was likewise in the Province of Chequiang a greater number of Israelites, and a Synagogue; but that in the other Provinces, their number was very much diminished, and they had no Synagogue.

Father Adam Shaal, a famous Missionary, wrote from Pekin, that he had seen Jews in the Kingdom of Kaschemir, who had preserved Judaism and the Old Testament, and knew nothing of the death of Jesus Christ; that they shewed an inclination to choose this Jesuit for their Chakam, provided he would abstain from eating Swine's flesh.

Another Jesuit, whose name is Gozani, mentions the discovery of a Synagogue in the Province of Heman in China. He believes that there were Jews in this Country before Jesus Christ: They were acquainted with Esdras and Jesus the Son of Sirach (probably Jesus the Son of Sirach, author of Ecclesiasticus) and followed the method of the Talmudists in their explanations. But all this is more proper to persuade us, that these Jews are modern, than that they are derived from the old dispersion of the ten Tribes; for neither the Talmudists nor Ecclesiasticus, nor the History of Judith, could have been known to them.

There is a long Letter from the Jews of Cochin[4], written to the Synagogue of Amsterdam, wherein they say, that they retired to the Indies at the time when the Holy Land was conquered by the Romans; that they have had seventy two Kings succeeding one another, for the space of a thousand years; that a division arising between two Brothers, who contended for the Kingdom, the neighbouring Princes subdued them: From which time they have continued subject to the Kings of China; that by their constant fidelity to these Princes they had merited many marks of esteem and confidence; that in the year 1640, Samuel one of their brethren died Governor of Cochin, and left his Office to a Jew of the same name.

[Isai. xlix. 12.] Manasseh-Ben-Israel, who was persuaded that there was a great number of Israelites in China, applied the following Passage of Isaiah to them;[5] Those from the land of Sinim shall come from far; that is to say, according to him, from the land of the Chinese. S. Jerom translates it from the land of the south. The Septuagint from Persia; but the Hebrew Sin signifies dirt, and the City of Pelusium, or Damietta; so that the Prophet in all probability intended to describe Damietta and Egypt by these words from the land of Sinim.

As to what the eastern People say of Schin or Sin the Son of Japheth, and Father of the Chinese, we believe there is no great account to be made of it, the sacred Books taking no notice of him. Hereafter, under the Article of S. Thomas, we shall speak of the Christians of China, and the famous inscription found in this Country.

Chittim

CHITTIM. Isaiah speaking of the destruction of Tyre by King Nebuchadnezzar, says, Howl ye vessels of the sea, for the place where the ships were used to sail is destroyed, its ruin shall come from the land of Chittim. If the land of Chittim signifies Macedonia, as we have shewn in our Comment on the tenth Chapter of Genesis, and in this Dictionary, how can it be said here, that the destruction of Tyre occasioned by Nebuchadnezzar, should come from the land of Chittim? might it not be more properly interpreted as relating to the destruction of this City by Alexander the great? A modern Author[1] by the word Chittim understands the Cuthæans, Inhabitants of the Suziana near Babylon, and Subjects to Nebuchadnezzar, who marched under the Conduct of this Prince, and contributed to the siege of Tyre, with the other People who composed his Army. But in what place of Scripture are the Cuthæans described by the name Chittim? Bochart supposes the Romans to be meant by Chittim; but the Romans were not concerned in the Siege of Tyre, here mentioned by Isaiah, and Tyre under the Roman Empire was not an object worthy of their indignation.

[Isai. xxiii. 1.] We are of opinion, that in this place, as well as every where besides, the Macedonians are intended by the word Chittim, and we translate the Hebrew of Isaiah after the following manner, Howl ye ships of Tarshish, because Tyre is destroyed within; it is open on the side where people enter who come from Chittim. They come from Macedonia to Tyre from the Sea-ward. The City was thought to be impregnable on this side, because it was built upon a Rock washed every way by the Sea. Notwithstanding the Prophet foretels, that it would be taken, laid waste, and open on this side: Moreover that it should be ravaged from within, by its own Inhabitants; division would arise among the Citizens, or Soldiers who defended it.

Isaiah adds, v. 12. Thou daughter of Zidon, city of Tyre, arise, pass over to Chittim, there also thou shalt have no rest. Seek for refuge in Macedonia in a remote and maritime Country; yet even thither God will pursue you; his hand will not suffer you to rest there.

Jeremiah reproaching the Israelites with their inconstancy in the Religion of [Jer. ii. 10.] their Forefathers, says to them, Pass over the isles of Chittim and see; and send into Kedar and consider diligently, and see if there be such a thing. Hath a nation changed their gods which are yet no gods? The Prophet speaks of the Isles of Chittim, of the Country of Macedonia, under the name of an Island, after the manner of the Hebrews, who call thus Peninsulas and maritime Countries.

Chiun

[Acts vii. 4. 3. Amos v. 26.] CHIUN, or Chevan. We meet with this word in the Hebrew of the Prophet Amos, cited in the Acts of the Apostles. S. Luke reads the passage thus: Ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Remphan, figures which ye made to worship them. The import of the Hebrew is as follows, Ye have born the Tabernacle of your kings, and the pedestal (the Chiun) of your images, the star of your gods, which ye made to yourselves. The Septuagint in all probability read Repham or Revan, instead of Chiun or Chevan, and took the pedestal for a God. Others are of opinion, that three false Deities are to be distinguished here, Moloch, Chiun and Remphan. Others again affirm, that the three mean only one God, adored under so many different names; and that this God was Saturn, and his planet. Salmasius and Kircher assert, that Kiion is Saturn, and that his Star is called Keiran among the Persians and Arabians, and that Remphan or Rephan signified the same thing among the Egyptians. They add, that the Septuagint, who made their Translation in Egypt, changed the word Chiun into that of Remphan, because they had the same signification. See the Article Remphan and our Dissertation upon the Idolatry of the Hebrews in the Wilderness, prefixed to the twelve Prophets. M. Basnage in his Book intitled, Jewish Antiquities, after having discoursed a good deal upon Chion or Remphan, concludes, that Moloch was the Sun, and Chion, or Chiun, or Rephan, the Moon. t. 2. p. 576--- 581, 611, 614, 617.

Nor can it be the Chærogryllus or Hedgehog, because it does not chew the cud. Bochart believes it to be a kind of large Rat, common in Arabia, good to eat, and called Aliarbuho. These animals chew the cud, dwell in rocks, and go in troops; qualities which the Scripture ascribes to the [See the Hebrew Psal. civ. 18. Prov. xxx. 26. Levit. xi. 5.] Schaphan.

Christ

CHRIST. This word comes from the Greek, Christos, which signifies anointed, and answers to the Hebrew Messiah. This is the name attributed by the Hebrews to that Saviour and Deliverer whom they expected, and who was promised to them by all the Prophets. As the holy Unction was given to Kings, Priests and Prophets, by describing the promised Saviour of the World, under the name of Anointed, or Messiah, it was sufficiently evidenced, that the qualities of King, Prophet and High-Priest, would all eminently meet in him, and that he should exercise them not only over the Jews, but over all Mankind; and in a particular manner over those who should believe in him, and acknowledge him for their Saviour, their King, their Priest and their Prophet. We shall in another place speak of Jesus Christ the true Messiah and Redeemer of Mankind. See the Article Jesus Christ, and that of Messiah.

Christian

CHRISTIAN, Christianus, Disciple of Jesus Christ. Christians were distinguished from Jews first at Antioch, and there were called Christiani, or Disciples of Christ. [Acts xi. 26.] They were generally called Brethren, Faithful, Saints, Believers. The name of Nazarens and Galilæans, was likewise given them by the Gentiles. It has been the opinion of several, that Christian was derived originally from the Greek, Chrestos, good, useful; and Suetonius[1] speaking of Claudius, and of his expelling the Jews out of Rome, says, that he banished them thence, because they were continually quarrelling concerning Christ. Judæos, impulsore Chresto, assidue tumultuantes, Româ expulit. Christ, as Lactantius says, is no proper name, but one denoting power[2]; for the Jews were used to give this appellation to their Kings, and called them Christs, or anointed by reason of the Sacred Unction received by them. But, as he adds, the Heathen by mistake call Jesus Christ Chrestus: Sed eum, immutata littera, Chrestum solent dicere. And Tertullian[3], The name of Christian comes from the Unction received by Jesus Christ; and that of Chrestianus, which you sometimes through mistake give us, (for you are not particularly acquainted with our name) signifies that Gentleness and Benignity whereof we make profession: Sed & perperam Christianus pronuntiatur a vobis (nam nec nominis certa est notitia penes vos) de suavitate vel benignitate compositum est.

Christians of S

CHRISTIANS of S. John. They whom Travellers call Christians of S. John, and the Eastern people Sabians[1], are not a particular Nation, as that might be of the Sabeans in Arabia, but they who make profession of a particular Religion, prevailing pretty much in the Provinces of the East: It is not easy to demonstrate in what particularly this Religion consists, the eastern Authors being very little agreed about it; but this is evident, that the Religion of the Sabians, is one of the three to which Mahomet granted his protection in the Alcoran; which three Religions are Judaism, Christianity, and Sabiism. See the Article Zabians or Sabians.

The Christians of S. John, or Sabians, have borrowed many observances from the Christian Religion; they have a kind of Baptism, and great veneration for S. John Baptist, whose Disciples they call themselves. They read not only the Book of Psalms, which they call Zebour, but another Book also, which they attribute to Adam, and look upon as their Bible, the characters whereof are very particular, but the language of it is almost intirely Chaldee.

The Arabian Authors tell us[2], that these people are descendants of the most antient Nation in the World, that they still at this day, in their Books at least, speak the language used by Adam and his Sons; that they hold their Religion and their Law from Scheith and Edris, who are the Patriarchs Seth and Noah, whose Books abounding with moral instructions are still in their possession. They pray to God seven times a day, and intermix no other action with this exercise. They fast during the whole course of a Moon, and take no nourishment from the rising to the setting of the Sun. This fast always ends at the vernal Equinox, which answers very nearly to the Jewish Passover.

They honour the Temple of Mecca, and have likewise much respect for the Pyramids of Egypt; because they believe Sabi the Son of Enoch to be buried in the third. Their principal Pilgrimage is performed at a place near Haran in Mesopotamia, which some maintain to be the place of Abraham's birth; but is certainly that from whence he departed when he set out upon his journey to Palestine. Others are of opinion, that this place is honoured by them, by reason of Sabi the Son of Mari, who lived in Abraham's time, and from whom probably they derive their original, much rather than from Sabi the Son of Enoch, who is not known to us in the Scripture, and must have lived before the Deluge.

Another Arabian Author[3] says, that the Religion of the Sabians was not only the most antient, but farther, the general and only Religion of the World, till the time of Abraham, from whom all other Religions are descended. They say, that the antient Persians, Chaldæans, Assyrians, Greeks, Egyptians, and Indians, were all Sabians, before they embraced Judaism, Christianity, or Mahometanism. And the eastern Christians make no scruple of affirming that Constantine the Great forsook the Religion of the Sabians, to espouse that of the Christians.

M. Chardin[4] in his travels into Persia, says, that the Disciples of S. John are inconsiderable in number, and scattered over Arabia, Persia, and along the Persian Gulph; that they come originally from Chaldæa, and were the antient Disciples of Zoroastres, many of whose opinions are maintained by them: they received the Baptism of S. John, and blended the Doctrine of Christianity with Jewish practices, and the extravagancies of Mahometanism. They esteem S. John Baptist to be the Author of their Creed, their Rites, and even of their Books. They receive every year the Baptism of S. John, who, with his Father and Mother, is their great and only Saint. They place his Tomb near Chuster the Capital of Chusistan; where likewise they suppose to be the source of Jordan. They do not hold Jesus Christ to be the Son of God, but only for a Prophet, and the Spirit of God. Their veneration for the Cross proceeds almost to idolatry.

They have a Book called Divan, which they esteem sacred: There we may read that God is corporeal, and that he has a Son whose name is Gabriel, by whom he hath created the World. He created also Angels with bodies, and of different sexes, capable of engendering. It is said, that they consecrate, or believe they consecrate Bread kneaded with Wine and Oil, and that after they have carried it in procession, they eat it. They have Bishops and Priests who succeed one another from Father to Son; their Priests marry young Virgins. Some assure us, that once every year they sacrifice a Hen upon the banks of some River; they sacrifice also a Ram.

They receive their Baptism every year with aspersion or immersion, as they please, and in the name of God only; for they acknowledge neither the Son nor Holy Ghost. Polygamy is permitted among them. They are almost as scrupulous in observing Purifications as the Jews. Such are the pretended Christians of S. John.

Christians of the Girdle. In the East[5], they call the Nestorians or Jacobites, and sometimes even the Maronites by this name, tho' the latter are Catholicks: The original of this denomination is as follows. Motavakel, tenth Caliph of the house of the Abbastides, was the first Mahometan Prince who obliged the Christians and Jews of his Dominions to wear a black leathern Girdle[6], which they continue to do at this day, principally in Asia, in order to be distinguished from Mahometans. From this time the Christians of Syria and Mesopotamia, who are almost all Nestorians or Jacobites have generally worn it; for which reason they are called the Christians of the Girdle. When any of these people were excommunicated, their Girdle called Zonar was cut, and with it some stripes were given them upon the shoulders. When the eastern Poets intend to praise their Princes, and exaggerate their conquests over Christians, they say they have silenced their Bells, and cut their black Girdles in a thousand pieces.

Chronicles

CHRONICLES. The two Books, by the Greeks called Paralipomena, and by the Hebrews Dibrei-haiamim, or words of days go under this name. See Paralipomena.

The Jews have Chronicles or Histories in their Language, but they are uncorrect, and very modern. We have discoursed concerning the History of Joseph Ben- Gorion under the title of this Author. Besides this, there are seven Chronicles or historical Books among the Jews, whereof it may be proper to say a word or two in this place.

1°. Seder-olam-Rabba, that is to say, the great Chronicle, or the great order of the Age, so called, to distinguish it from the small Chronicle, which goes under the name of Seder-olam-Seutah; because this is shorter, and a later composition[1]. It is thought Rabbi Jose Son of Caliptha is the Author of Seder-olam-Rabba; he lived a little after the beginning of the second Century, and was, as is reported, Master to Rabbi Judah the Holy, who composed the Mishna. But Rabbi Azarias in the third part of his Meor-enaim, says, he had seen a Manuscript of it, wherein it was asserted, that the Author lived seven hundred seventy two years after the destruction of the Temple at Jerusalem, which answers to the year of Jesus Christ 832. It is very certain, that he did not write till after the Babylonish Talmud, for it contains abundance of fables, and extravagant conceits, which may be clearly discerned to have been taken from thence. The Author scarce speaks of any thing but events which are recorded in the Scripture. Buxtorf says, that it descends to the time of Adrian; and the victory obtained by this Prince over Barchochebas: What proves R. Jose not to be the Author of it is, that he is cited in many places of it. The Author affirms, that the Prophet Elijah, after his transportation, wrote ten letters to King Jehoram; that he wrote the history of the World in the place of his abode; that Job was the Father of Balaam; that Joshua, after the passage of Jordan, wrote the Law in seven Languages, upon the twelve stones which by his order were taken out of Jordan.

The second Chronicle of the Jews is intitled Teshuvoth R. Sherira Gaon. The answers of R. Sherira the sublime Doctor. This is an historical treatise written by way of Questions and Answers; the Work is very short. The Author was President at Babylon, and head of all the Schools and Academies in this Country. He entred upon his office in 967, and was thirty years in possession of this dignity, which he resigned to his Son R. Haia, the last of those who bore the title of Gaon or Sublime Doctors. It was in his time, in 1037, that the King of Babylon, who was a Mahometan, banished all the Jews out of his Dominions; so that all their Schools were forsaken. Sherira wrote the History of these Academies, and inserted the Succession of the several Rabbins who had appeared in them from the Talmud to his time.

The third Chronicle is intitled Sederolam-Zutha, or the lesser Chronicle, to distinguish it from the Seder-olam-Rabbah above-mentioned. The lesser Chronicle was written 1053 years after the destruction of the Temple; that is to say, in the year of Jesus Christ 1123; who the Author of it is we know not. He gives us a very short abridgment of History from the Creation of the World, to the year of Jesus Christ 522. From this time it is continued further for eight Generations, but without mentioning any thing besides names.

The Title of the fourth Chronicle is, Sepher Kabbalah R. Abraham Levitæ Ben -Dior, the Book of Tradition composed by Rabbi Abraham the Levite, Son of Dior. The principal design of this Work is to give an account of the succession of those through whose hands the Traditions of the Jews passed from Generation to Generation, from Moses down to the Author, who was living in the year of Jesus Christ 1160. He follows very much Josephus the Son of Gorion, and is one of those who brought him most into vogue.

The fifth Chronicle is, Sepher Juchasin, or the Book of Genealogies. This Work is larger than any of the four abovementioned. He begins with the Creation, and continues the History down to the year of Jesus Christ 1500. The Author of it was Abraham Zacuth, who published it at Cracow in Poland in the year 1580. he describes with great care the Succession of the Jewish Traditions from mount Sina, and the names of those eminent Doctors, who taught them as low as his own time.

The Title of the sixth Chronicle is Shalsheleth Haccabalah, or the Chain of Tradition. It is an historical Book of the same kind with that preceding. The Author was Rabbi Gedaliah, the Son of Jechaiah, who published it at Venice in 1587.

The seventh Chronicle is Zemah David, or the branch of David. It begins at the Creation, and descends to the year of Jesus Christ 1592, when it appeared at Prague in Bohemia. The subject is the same with that of the two last preceding. The Author was David Ganz a Bohemian Jew. William Henry Vorstius Son of Conrad Vorstius, translated it into Latin, and published it at Leyden in 1644.

The Chronicle of the Prophet Moses, intitled in Hebrew, Dibrei-Hajamina-Schel -Mose, is a fabulous Book concerning the life of Moses, printed at Venice, in 1544, translated into Latin by M. Gaulmin.

The Samaritan Chronicle was published by M. Bernard, and communicated to the Journalists of Lipsick. M. Basnage[2] has inserted it with some remarks in his History of the Jews. It begins at the Creation of the World, and continues to the taking of Samaria by Saladin 1187. It is very short and unaccurate. See the Article Samaritans.

Church

CHURCH. The Greek word Ecclesia signifies Assembly: It is taken both for the place where the Assembly is held, and for the persons there assembled. We find it made use of to signify either a profane, or a sacred and religious Assembly. In the Books of the New Testament it generally stands for the Church of Christ, which is the Congregation of the Faithful; who under the conduct of lawful Ministers, make but one Body, whereof Jesus Christ is the Head. Particular Churches are likewise meant by it, as that of Corinth, Ephesus, Thessalonica and others.

[Ibid. v. 8.] In the Books of the Old Testament, Ecclesia is sometimes taken for the Society of the Jews; for example, Cur eduxisti Ecclesiam [Numb. xx. 4.] Domini in solitudinem? Why hast thou brought the Assembly, the Body, the multitude of God's People into the Wilderness? And elsewhere: Eunuchs, [Deut. xxiii. 1, 23, &c.] Bastards, the Ammonites and Moabites shall not be admitted into the Church of God. They shall not be received into the Land; the Israelites shall neither marry with them, nor permit them to dwell among the People; or they shall not be received as Proselytes to profess the Religion of the Lord: This shews an extreme aversion and contempt for these People; they were looked upon as profane persons, with whom the Hebrews were to have no commerce, either in civil or religious affairs.

But as to the Edomites and Egyptians, Moses suffers them to enter into the church of the Lord after the third generation; that is to say, if an Egyptian or Edomite settle in the Land, and is willing to become there a sojourning Proselyte[1], his Children after the third generation, may marry Israelitish Women, and be let into the privileges of the Hebrews: Or otherwise, if an Hebrew marries an Edomite or Egyptian Woman, his Children cannot be esteemed true Israelites till the third Generation: They cannot marry an Israelitish Woman, and be admitted into the Temple, and publick employments.

The Church is likewise taken for a Communion in the Society and Prayers of God's People; to be excluded from the Church, signifies Excommunication: For example, it is said, that he, who after he had touched a dead body, or been present at a funeral, should not purify himself with lustral water, wherein were cast the ashes of a red Heifer sacrificed for that purpose, should be cut off from among the congregation, [Numb. xix. 20, 21.] because he had defiled the Sanctuary: He should be excommunicated and shut out from the Congregation of Israel; he should be looked upon as a profane and uncircumcised person. The Rabbins understand this as meaning bodily death, a sudden, or violent death; or the death of the Soul, or of both Body and Soul, according to the grievousness of the crime, and the importance of the matter.

The Church is likewise used for the holy place, the Tabernacle, Temple, or Synagogue, where the People of the Lord assembled. The Elders of Israel performed their Prayers in the Church or [Judith vi. 21. Psal. xxii. 23, 26.] Synagogue of Bethulia. Intra Ecclesiam oraverunt. And the Psalmist, I will praise thee in the Church; I will publish thy praises in the church of the Saints; in a great Church; that is to say, in the Temple, where the Saints, the Israelites, and in a word, all the People assembled together.

By the Church is sometimes meant the society of the Faithful, who have preserved the true Religion committed to their care, from the beginning of the World to this day, and will preserve it to the consummation of Ages. The Succession of this Church hath been delivered down to us by Moses, from the beginning of the World unto his time; and from Moses to the coming of Jesus Christ, we have the sacred Writings of the Hebrews, and their Histories, which inform us of the different Revolutions that have happened in Religion among the Israelites. Adam instructed his Sons in the true Religion; but corruption of manners soon crept into his family: Two Churches were hereupon formed, one composed of the Children of God, descended from Seth, the other of the Children of men issuing from the Race of Cain. Both continued till the Deluge, after which Noah inspired his Sons with such sentiments of Religion, as he himself abounded with: But how long these were preserved by them, we cannot tell.

Moses is our Guide from Shem down to Abraham the Father of the Faithful; but he does not inform us, whether the true Religion was preserved by the Descendants of Ham and Japheth, nor how long it subsisted among them: But on one side we see, that Abraham's Ancestors worshipped Idols in Chaldæa, and on the other we know, that [Gen. xx. 3, 4, 5. כירים Gen. xii. 17, 18, &c. Kiraim,] the fear of the Lord was not intirely banished out of Palestine and Egypt, when Abraham came thither: For the King of Gerar, as well as the King of Egypt, feared God, and had a great abhorrence of sin. The High Priest Mel-chisedech is a farther Proof Χυτρόποδες of what we have been saying. The same [Gen. xiv. 18. כיור Gen. xviii. 23, 24, 25.] Abraham imagined, that there were at least ten or twenty righteous persons in Sodom. From Abraham down to Jesus Christ we find a continued succession of the true Church among the Jews, and other descendants of this Patriarch; for it is very credible that the Sons of Abraham, by Hagar and Keturah, did likewise for some time preserve the depositum of the Faith, which they had received from their Father. Job, who was one of Esau's Posterity, and his friends, knew the Lord. The Ammonites and Moabites, descended from Lot, did not probably fall immediately into that Idolatry wherein we see them plunged so early as in the time of Moses.

The Ishmaelites Sons of Hagar and Abraham, value themselves upon having adhered always to the worship of the true God, and extended the knowledge of him in Arabia, as Isaac did in Palestine. We do not credit them upon their bare word; for it is certain, that in the time of Mahomet, and long before, they had forsaken the true Faith; but it is impossible to shew exactly the particular period of their perversion. As to the Descendants of Isaac, we have indubitable proofs, that notwithstanding so many revolutions as happened in their Nation, the frequent transgressions of the Law by most of their Princes, and the almost continual Infidelities of the Israelites in general, God was at all times known among them, and reserved to himself a good number of true worshippers. And lastly, that we are to look for the true Church in Israel, till the formation of the Church of Christ.

Translators' note. There were two sorts of Proselytes among the Jews, the Proselytes of the Gates, *and the Proselytes of Justice. CHUSHAN-RISHATHAIM, King of Mesopotamia, oppressed the Israelites

[From the year of the World 2591, to 2599. Judg. iii. 8, 9, 10.] for eight years. At the end whereof, the Hebrews cried unto the Lord, and he raised up a deliverer for them; Othniel, the Son of Kenaz, and Son-in-law of Caleb. Othniel marched against Chushan-Rishathaim, and the Lord delivered him into his hands.

Chytropodes

[Levit. xi. 35.] CHYTROPODES, Skillets or Pots. We meet with this term in Leviticus xi. 25. where God commands the earthen Pots to be broken, into which any unclean thing should fall. The Hebrew word Kiraim, which S. Jerom has translated Pots, is understood by others to mean an Hearth, or Oven, a Cistern or Bason to wash ones feet in. Kiraïm is of the dual number, and signifies a vessel composed of two pieces.

Cicer

[Concha, Luter. A Bason, a Cistern.] CICER, Chich Pease. The antient Hebrews made use of chich Pease as their common provision, when they took the field. They parched them, and so eat them. Among other provisions wherewith Barzillai supplied David in his flight, [2 Sam. xvii. 28. Account of Ethiopia.] parched Pease is reckoned, frixum cicer. And still at this day in Egypt, when people undertake a journey, they lay in a good stock of chich Pease parched in a Frying-pan. c Bellon assures us, that at Grand Cairo and Damascus there are abundance of Shops, where people do nothing else but fry Pease, it being a sort of Provision wherewithal they furnish Travellers. In Ethiopia they take Barley with them roasted in the same manner. In Turky they lay in a stock of Rice on these occasions, which they prepare and shell. The Hebrew term cali signifies properly any thing roasted in general, and by it is understood roasted Pease, Rice or Barley. Some will [2 Kings vi. 25.] have even Coffee to be meant by it. There is a sort of chich Pease called Dove's Dung, which will be spoken of in its proper place.

Cidaris

CIDARIS, the Mitre used by the Jewish High Priests. Whenever there is mention [Exod. xxviii. 4. מצנפת Misnepheth, Cidaris. מגבעות] of the High Priest's Mitre, the Hebrew word made use of to express it, is always Miznepheth, and Mygbaoth, to signify the Bonnet belonging to common Priests. The Rabbins say, the same thing is meant by both these terms, and that the Bonnet used by Priests in general, was made of a piece of [Pileus.] linen cloth sixteen yards long, which covered their heads like an Helmet, or a Turbant; and they allow no other difference to be between the High Priest's Bonnet, and that of other Priests than this, that one is flatter, and more in the form of a Turbant, whereas the other worn by ordinary Priests, rose something more in a point. I say nothing here of c Bellon l. ii. c. the plate of Gold, which was an Ornament peculiar to the High Priest's Mitre.

Josephus says[1], that the Bonnet worn by private Priests, was composed of many rounds of Linen Cloth turned in and sewn together, so as to appear like a thick Crown made of Linen wove together. The whole was intirely covered with a piece of Linen Cloth, which came as low as the Forehead, that so the deformity of the seams might be concealed. As to the High Priest's Bonnet, he says it is like that which we have been describing, but that another was put over it of a Violet colour, which covered the hinder part of the Head, and the two Temples, and was encompassed with a triple Crown of Gold, wherein were small Buttons of henbane Flowers. This circle of Flowers was interrupted in the fore-part of the Tiara, at that place where the plate of Gold, with the name of God on it was fixed.

S. Jerom assures us, that the Priest's Bonnet was round, like that with which Ulysses was generally painted, as if a Sphere were cut in two, and one half of it were made use of for a Bonnet[2]. There was no point upon the top of it, nor did it cover the whole head of hair, but left one third part of it before bare: And to prevent its falling off, it was fastened with a Ribbon, which was hid behind. It was of fine Linen, and so neatly covered with a Linen Cloth, as to hide all the Seams. This he takes to be what the Hebrews called Miznepheth; and that this kind of Bonnet was used both by the Priests and High Priest. Pileo de quo diximus; tam Sacerdotes, quam Pontifices utebantur.

It appears from all that we have said, that the form of these Bonnets is not now well understood, the descriptions which are given us of them being so various and different. Moses expressly tells us, that the High Priest's Tiara was made of Schesh, that is Cotton, and that of other Priests, of Linen only. The Tiara and the Priests Bonnets were tied with a Ribbon, which Ezekiel calls Crown; but that used by the High Priest was richer, and remarkable for the plate of Gold, with the name of God engraven on it, which was placed on the fore-part of the Tiara, and covered some of the High Priest's Forehead; the Ribbon was tied behind his Head. Lastly, the Hebrew term Migbaoth, whereby the Bonnet of the common Priests was expressed, and which S. Jerom translates Mitra, intimates, that this Bonnet had some resemblance with an Helmet. And that of Miznepheth, which denotes the High Priest's Tiara, and is translated Cidaris by the same S. Jerom, was probably of another form, and perhaps like those strait Tiaras, which were worn by the Kings of Persia[3]. We see in Isaiah, that the Kings of Judah wore a Bonnet on their Heads called Zenuph, which is derived from the same root as Miznepheth. It is to be observed, that the Hebrew Priests never appeared in the Temple without covering their Heads. And still at this day it is reckoned an incivility in the East, and a mark of contempt, for any Man to pull off his Hat or Turbant to another, or to shew his naked head before any one.

Cignus

CIGNUS. The Swan is a large water Fowl, that has a long and very straight Neck; it is very white, excepting when it is young. Its Legs, Feet and Bill are black; its Bill is very like that of a Goose, but something rounder, and a little hooked at the lower end of it; the two sides below its Eyes are black and shining like Ebony. This Bird stretches its Wings like Sails, that the wind may drive it along, when it is in the water. It feeds upon herbs, and some sort of grain like a Goose. It is very long lived, and some there have been which are said to have lived three hundred years. There is a sort of Swan, the right foot whereof is like the talons of a Bird of prey; this it makes use of in catching Fish by diving for them; but its left foot is like that of a Goose, and is of use only in swimming. There is besides another species, which has all the feathers of its head towards the breast marked at the ends with yellow points like Gold, inclining to red[1]; and in all probability this is the species of Swans which Horace[2] calls purpurei, and by which he represents the Chariot of Venus to be drawn. The Swan was consecrated to Apollo as to the God of Musick, because it was thought to sing melodiously[3] when it was near expiring. The Latin Text of Scripture speaks no where of the Swan, but in the enumeration of the Birds which were forbidden to be eat.

[Lev. xi. 18. תנשמת70 .Πορφυ -ρίωνα.] Moses reckons the Swan among the unclean creatures; at least S. Jerom thus translates the Hebrew Tanschemeth, whereby by the Septuagint understood the Porphyrio to be meant, which is a Bird, the bill whereof and legs are red like Porphyry. Onkelos the Samaritan Translator, and Bochart, explain it by the Owl. We have offered some conjectures on Isaiah, xiii. 21. to shew, that the Hebrew, Bath-janah was the Swan. This Bird loves the water; it is very cruel; it is celebrated for its mournful way of singing, and the shrill cries which it sometimes sends forth with so much force, and for so long a time, as to kill itself[4]: Which has given room for the observation made by many, of its singing, when it is upon the point of expiring.

[Lev. xi. 16. Deut. xiv. 16.] Sic ubi fata vocant udis abjectus in herbis Ad

vada Mæandri concinit albus olor.

Moses ranks the young of the Haiana, which is generally translated Ostridge, among the unclean Animals.

Cilicium

CILICIUM, a sort of habit made of coarse stuff, of a black or dark colour formerly in use among the Hebrews in times of mourning and distress. It was called Cilicium, because it came from Cilicia, or rather because the Cilicians invented this kind of habit, made of Goats hair, and used principally in Camps and Ships, by Soldiers and Mariners[1]. The Septuagint and Hebrew call that Sackcloth, which S. Jerom translates Cilicium, either because Sacks were made of this sort of stuff, or because Hair-cloths were strait and close like a Sack. S. John in the Revelations shews plainly, that these Sack-cloths, or Hair-cloths were black, when he says, that the Sun became black as Sack-cloth made of hair. Sol factus est niger tanquam saccus cilicinus.

It is said in Scripture, that Jacob put on [Gen. xxxvii. 34. 2 Sam. xxi. 10. 1 Kings xxi. 27.] Sackcloth, when he was told that his Son Joseph was dead. Rizpah Saul's Concubine lay on Sackcloth, while she guarded her Sons, whom the Gibeonites had hanged. Ahab cloathed himself with Sackcloth, when he heard how terribly the Prophet Elijah had by God's Command threatned him. The same Prince put Sackcloth on his [2 Kings vi. 29, 30] flesh, while the Syrians besieged Samaria; and having understood that a Woman had eaten her own Child, he tore his royal Robes, and all the people saw the Sackcloth which he wore upon his flesh. So that these Hair-cloths were very different from what we call at present by this name. The old Monks were very often cloathed with these Hair-cloths of the old fashion; that is to say, with coarse rough habits of a darkish colour, much like the habit of the Capuchins. Paulinus speaking of S. Martin, says[2],

Cinnamomum

CINNAMOMUM. God commands Moses to take Cinnamon, and several other sweet Spices, and make a perfumed Oil with them, to anoint the Tabernacle, and all the vessels belonging to it. The Cinnamomum is a shrub, the bark whereof has an admirable scent; several of the Moderns confound it with the Cinnamon Tree and Cassia Aromatica. Others distinguish these Species. It is certain that the true Cinnamomum is very rare. Matthiolus assures us, that whatever inquiries he had made after it, he could never find any of it; and in Galen's time it was so scarce, that it was hardly to be found any where but in the Emperor's Cabinet. Pliny[1] says, that it was formerly valued at a thousand Denarii; but that the price of it was raised to double what it had been by the great waste made by the Barbarians, who had burnt all these Trees. Matthiolus is of opinion, that the Cinnamomum is quite lost in Arabia, as the Balsam Tree in Judæa. Some Rabbins by the Hebrew Cinnamon suppose Aloes to be understood.

[קנמוןKinnamon. 70. Κινναμώμον.] No one at present makes the least question, but the Cinnamomum spoken of so confusedly by the Antients, is Cinnamon; now Cinnamon is a long thin Bark, rolled up together, of a dark red colour, of a poignant taste, aromatick, and very agreeable. The fine Cinnamon comes all from the Isle of Ceylon. Some other Barks are likewise called Cinnamon, such as Clove Cinnamon, white Cinnamon, and the Cassia Lignea. Clove Cinnamon is the bark of a Tree to be found in the Isle of Madagascar, and called Ravendsara. White Cinnamon is the bark of a Tree which grows in America, at Jamaica, and S. Domingo. The Cassia Lignea is the Bark of a Tree called by the People of Malabar Katoukarva. Some believe it to be the second Bark of the wild Cinnamon Tree.

But there is no probability that Moses intended to speak of the Cinnamon of Ceylon, nor those of America, which was an unknown Country, and in all likelihood not peopled in his time, and Trade was not as yet opened with the Isle of Ceylon, or Tapobrana. But there might be Cinnamon in Arabia, or Ethiopia; or however, the Hebrew word Cinnamon made use of by Moses, signifies something else besides Cinnamon. The Hebrew reading is Kinnamon here and [Exod. xxx. 23.] in Cant. iv. 14. Matthiolus tells us, that the Cinnamomum has failed in Arabia, in like manner ner as the Balsam Tree in Judæa. This should seem to be rather a Gum or Oil, than a Bark or odoriferous Wood.

Cinnereth

CINNERETH, or Ceneroth, or Cinneroth, a City in the Tribe of Naphtali, to [Josh. xix. 35. Josh. xi. 2. xii. 3. Deut. iv. 49.] the South whereof there lay a great Plain, which reached as far as the Dead Sea all along the River Jordan. Many believe, with a good deal of probability, that Cinnereth was the same as Tiberias; and as the Lake of Genezareth, which in Hebrew is called the Lake of Cinnereth, is without doubt that of Tiberias, there is some reason to believe that Cinnereth and Tiberias are likewise the same City. See Tiberias, where we relate some reasons for the contrary opinion.

The Lake of Cinnereth, the Sea of Cinnereth or Tiberias, or the Lake of [1 Macc. ii. 67.] Genezareth, or Genezar[1], are so many names given to it from the situation of the City Cinnereth or Tiberias, lying upon the western Shore, and towards the southern Extremity of it; and because the Canton of Genezar lies upon the eastern coast of it. It is called likewise the Sea of Galilee, because the north and east sides of it are enclosed by Galilee. In Josephus's Account of it, it is an hundred Furlongs in length, and forty wide; that is to say, about twelve Miles or four Leagues and an half long, and two over. The water of this Lake is very good to drink, and breeds abundance of Fish. There S. Peter, S. Andrew, S. John, and S. James, who were Fishermen, carried on their Trade. The River Jordan passes through this Lake, and is continually bringing into it a fresh supply of water. The Country which borders upon the Sea of Galilee is very beautiful and fruitful.

Cinyra

[כנורCinnor. Κιθάρα, ψαλτήριον, κινύρα. Gen. iv. 21. 1 Sam. xvi. 16, 23. Psal. cxxxvii. 2. 1 Kings x. 12. & 2 Chr. ix. 11.] CINYRA. This, and the Hebrew, Cinnor, which is generally translated Cithara, or Lyra, or Psalterium, are the same. This instrument was in use before the Flood, and Jubal the Son of Lamech was the inventor of it. It was upon the Cinnor that David played before Saul, and it was this the captive Levites hung upon the Willows of Babylon. It was made of Wood, and was played on in the Temple of Jerusalem. The Prophet Isaiah intimates, that the sound of it was sad and mournful, when he says, Isai. xvi. 11. my bowels shall sound like the Cinnor or Harp. Hesychius observes, that Cinnyros in Greek signifies sad and lamentable. Josephus says, that the Cinyra of the Temple had ten strings, and that it was touched with a Bow[1]. In another place he says,[2] that Solomon made a great number of them with a precious kind of Metal called Electrum; wherein he contradicts the Scripture, which informs us that [1 Kings x. 12.] Solomon's Cinnors were of Wood.

The first Book of Maccabees seems to distinguish the Cithara from the Cinyra; Templum renovatum est in Canticis & citharis & cinyris. Others confound them. It is certain, that there was very little difference in these Instruments, and all that there was, consisted perhaps in the number only, or disposition of the strings. For among the Antients there were Citharæ or Harps of several sorts. So much seems to be out of all dispute, that the generality of the Instruments, whereof the Antients make any mention, are derived from the Cinnor of the Hebrews, and even those too which are in use at present, as the Harp, the Guitar, Psaltery, Lute, Violin, Base Viol, &c. What the Greeks tell us of the invention of the Harp by Mercury, and the perfection it was brought to by several Musicians, relates to Greece only. Musick, and the Instruments of it were known in perfection among the Hebrews long before Mercury, Orpheus, Linus, Terpander, Simonides, and Timotheus.

Circumcision

[Gen. xvii. 10.] CIRCUMCISION. This Term is taken from the Latin, circumcidere, which signifies to cut all round, because the Jews who circumcised their Children, cut off the little skin after this manner, which covers the Prepuce. God enjoined Abraham to use Circumcision, as a sign of that Covenant which he had entered into with him. This is the covenant, says the Lord to Abraham, which ye shall keep between me and you, and thy seed after thee. Every male child among you shall be circumcised. And ye shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin, and it shall be a token of the covenant betwixt me and you. And he that is eight days old shall be circumcised among you, every man-child in your generations, he that is born in the house or bought with money of any stranger, which is not of thy seed. And the uncircumcised man-child whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that soul shall be cut off from his people: he hath broken my covenant. In pursuance of this order, Abraham, who was then ninety nine years of age, was circumcised; he circumcised also his Son Ishmael, and all the Slaves in his family.

God repeated the Precept of Circumcision to Moses, and ordained that all those who intended to partake of the Paschal Sacrifice, should receive Circumcision, and that this operation should be performed on Children newly born, on the eighth day after their birth. The Jews have been always very exact in observing this Ceremony, and it appears that they did not neglect it in Egypt. But Moses, while he was in Midian with Jethro his Father-in-law, did not circumcise the two Sons which he had in that Country; and dur ing the journey of the Israelites through the Wilderness, the Children who were then born, were not circumcised: Probably by reason of the danger which their lives might have been exposed to, because they were not fixed in any one place, and were obliged very often to change their habitation.

The Law has ordained nothing either concerning the Minister, or the Instrument of Circumcision. The Father, or any other Relation, or a Surgeon, or any other whom they had a mind to choose, might perform this Ceremony. They generally made use of a Knife or Razor. Zipporah the Wife of Moses circumcised her Son Eliazer with a sharp Stone. Joshua made use of the like [Exod. iv. 25.] Instrument in circumcising those who had not received Circumcision in the Wilderness. [Josh. v. 3. Exek. xvi. 6.] It is very probable that the Egyptians with these Stones fashioned like Knives, opened the bodies of such persons as they embalmed[1]. Some pretend that the Knives of this kind are much less dangerous than others made of Brass or Iron, and that they do not cause so great an Inflammation in the Wound. The Galli who were the Priests of Cybele, the Mother of the Gods, castrated themselves with a sharp Stone, or with a broken pot-sherd, not knowing how to do it otherwise without endangering their Lives[2].

The Ceremonies now observed in Circumcision by the Jews, are such as these. When a Son is[3] born in any Family, it is customary for some to put little Notes in the four corners of the Chamber, with these words inscribed, Adam and Eve; Lilith, be gone. (The Jews assert, that Lilith was Adam's first Wife, who upon her separation from him, took up her habitation in the air, where she still continues, and is a great enemy to the delivery of Women, and new born Children.) They write likewise in these Notes the names of three Angels, in order to defend the Child from all sorts of Witchcraft. But all do not observe these superstitious Practices.

The Father is obliged to have his Son circumcised upon the eighth day, unless the weakness or indispolition of the Child oblige him to defer it. The night before Circumcision is called watching; because the whole Family is awake to guard the Child; and the Father and Mother are visited by their male and female Friends: On which occasions abundance of Joy and Civility is expressed. The Godfathers and Godmothers are chosen some time before. The Godfather holds the Child while the Operation is performing, and the Godmother carries it to the Synagogue. As to the person who circumcises, they choose for this purpose whom they please. The Father himself may do this Office, if he is capable of it. It is esteemed a great honour among the Jews to be Mohel; that is to say, a Circumciser. It is not necessary to go to the Synagogue in order to perform this Ceremony; the Child may be circumcised at home, if the Parents please.

Two Seats are provided for this purpose, with two silk Cushions: One of the Seats is for the Godfather who holds the Child; the other is left empty, and is designed, as some say, for the Prophet Elias, whom they believe to be invisibly present at all Circumcisions, so great was his Zeal for the observance of the Law. He who circumcises comes with a dish, wherein are the Instruments, and other things necessary for that Operation, such as the Razor, the astringent Powders, the Linen Cloth, the Lint, and Oil of Roses. They who are present sing some Songs, while they wait for the Godmother, who brings the Child upon her arms, and is attended with a company of Women. But not one of them go beyond the door of the Synagogue: There they deliver the Child to the Godfather, and immediately all who are there cry, Baruch haba welcome.

The Godfather sits down upon his Seat, and settles the Child in a proper posture on his Knees; then he who is to circumcise him, opens the Blankets. Some make use of Silver Tweezers to take up so much of the Prepuce as they design to cut off. Others take it with their Fingers. Then he who circumcises holding the Razor in his hand, says, Blessed be thou, O Lord, who hast commanded us to use Circumcision. And while he is saying this, he cuts off the thick Skin of the Prepuce; then with his Thumb nails he tears off another finer Skin still remaining. He sucks the Blood two or three times, which flows plentifully upon this occasion, and spits it out into a Cup full of Wine. After this, he puts some Dragon's Blood upon the Wound, some Coral Powder, and other things to stop the bleeding; to all which he adds Bolsters of Oil of Roses, and covers all close. In the next place, he takes the Cup into which he had spit the Blood sucked by him from the Wound, blesses that and the Child, gives him the name appointed for him by the Father, at the same time pronouncing these words of Ezekiel, I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, live; and then moistens his lips with the Wine which is in the Cup. After which they repeat the 128 Psalm, Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord. This being over, the Godfather returns the Child to the Godmother, who carries him home, and returns him to his Mother. All those who were present at the Ceremony, say to the Father as they take their leave, May you thus be present at his Wedding. The Child is commonly cured of the Wound received by Circumcision in four and twenty hours. If he dies before the eighth day, there are some who circumcise him after death, by cutting off the Foreskin with a Reed.

As to the Girls born of Jewish Parents, they receive not Circumcision; but with relation to them, this custom is observed. The Mother continues in her House for [Levit. xii. 5, 6.] fourscore days; after which she goes to the Synagogue, and the Chanter blesses the little Girl, and names her as the Father or Mother desires. In some places, the Child is not carried to the Synagogue, but the Chanter goes to the House of the lying in Woman, and there performs the Ceremony. They do not now observe what the Law appoints, that the Mother who had a Son or Daughter, should go to the Temple Gate, or to the door of the Tabernacle, and offer a Lamb, a young Pigeon, or a Turtle Dove. Since the destruction of the Temple, this Ceremony is no longer practicable.

It is matter of dispute, whether Circumcision took away the guilt of Original Sin, or was a mark only of distinction between Jews and Gentiles. The old Fathers, who lived before S. Austin, set bounds to the effects of Circumcision, and allowed it only to imprint a sensible mark upon the Hebrews, whereby they were distinguished from other People, who were not in Covenant with God. This is the opinion of S. Justin the Martyr[4], of S. Irenæus[5], S. Chrysostom[6]. S. Epiphanius[7], of Hillary the Deacon[8], S. Jerom[9], and John Damascen[10]. But S. Austin a maintained, that Circumcision procured the Remission of Original Sin; and he founded his opinion on the Scripture, which declares those to be utterly cut off from God's People, who were not circumcised upon the eighth day. [Gen.

xvii. 12. 14] Now, what other Sin besides that which is original, could such Children be guilty of? Gregory the Great[11], venerable Bede[12], Fulgentius, Prosper, S Bernard, have followed this opinion of S. Austin. Our Dissertation on this subject may be consulted, which is prefixed to our Comment on S. Paul.

Circumcision was in use not only among the Hebrews, but likewise among the Arabians, Ethiopians, Egyptians, and Idumæans. There are some Authors of Reputation, who assert, that all other people received this practice from the Egyptians. Celsus and Julian the Apostate affirmed, that Abraham learnt this Ceremony in Egypt[13]. Marsham[14], and M. le Clerc[15], have adopted this opinion: But the Authority of Herodotus[16], who assures us that Circumcision was known to those People only, to whom the Egyptians had communicated it, does not deserve credit in this instance on his bare word, or rather upon that of the Egyptian Priests, who imposed upon him with a vain-glorious relation of their Antiquity and Ceremonies. The Scripture speaks of the Institution of Circumcision, when first it was enjoined Abraham, as of a thing intirely new. It informs us, that this was the Seal of that Covenant which God had made with this Patriarch. And how should Circumcision be a mark to distinguish Abraham and his Posterity from the rest of Mankind, if it were then common among the Egyptians, Ethiopians, Phœnicians, and so many other People who had before practised it?

We are not at all perplexed in discovering the original of Circumcision among the Arabians, Saracens and Ishmaelites. These People as well as the Hebrews sprung from Abraham; but they never looked on Circumcision as an essential Ceremony which obliged them, upon pain of being cut off from their People. They received it rather out of devotion than necessity. Circumcision was introduced with the Law of Moses among the Samaritans and Cuthæans. The Idumæans, tho' descended from Abraham and Isaac, never were circumcised, till they were subdued by John Hircanus, and compell'd by him to receive both Circumcision and the Law of Moses[17]. They who assert, that the Phœnicians were circumcised, mean probably the Samaritans; for we know from other hands, that the Phœnicians did not observe this Ceremony.

As to the Egyptians, Circumcision never was of general and indispensible obligation upon their whole Nation. Some certain Priests only, and particular Professions were obliged to it. Philo[18] gives none but natural or symbolical reasons for this Practice. Westing[19], an eminent Physician, is of opinion, that there were some natural reasons for the Egyptians, both men and Women, receiving Circumcision. Artapanus, as he is cited in Eusebius[20], assures us[21] us, that Moses communicated this Rite to the Egyptians. *Origen*1 thinks, that Circumcision became so much in vogue among Strangers upon a Belief entertained by them, that there was an Angel, who put those to death, that were not circumcised, and had no power over those who had received Circumcision. Many are of opinion, that the Egyptians began to be circumcised in the reign of Solomon. Others, as Bochart, suspect, that the Egyptians borrowed this custom not from the Jews, but from the Arabians. Lastly, it is generally supposed, that the Hebrews were the first who ever practised it. See Spencer de Legib. Ritual.[22]. i. c. 4. and our Dissertation on the Original of Circumcision prefixed to our Comment upon Genesis.

As to the Circumcision of Women, it never was in use among the Hebrews, but only among the Egyptians, and in some places of Arabia and Persia. S. Ambrose[23] asserts indefinitely, that the Egyptians circumcise both Men and Women in the beginning of the fifteenth year. Strabo[24] says likewise, that the Egyptian Women receive Circumcision. But those Travellers and Physicians[25] who inform us, that this Custom is still at this day common in Egypt, do not tell us that it is general there, or of any obligation. It is founded only upon natural reasons, which are not applicable to all the Women of this Country. Chardin[26] says, it is binding only in some particular Countries of Arabia and Persia; as towards the Persian Gulph and the Red Sea, where both Sexes are circumcised with equal regularity. But with this difference, that the Males may be circumcised at five, six, nine, or thirteen years of age. But for the Women, they were not circumcised till they were passed their youth, because before, there was no excrescence to be cut off.

The Question is, whether Circumcision is sometimes repeated? Never by the Hebrews, no more than we ever rebaptize those who have once received Baptism in a due manner; but when the Jews admitted a Proselyte of any other Nation, wherein Circumcision has been customary, as a Samaritan, an Arabian or Egyptian, if he had already received Circumcision, they were satisfied with drawing some drops of Blood from the part usually circumcised; and this Blood was called the Blood of the Covenant. S. Epiphanius[27] says, that the Samaritans when they became Jews, were circumcised again, as was Symmachus, who embraced Judaism. Three Witnesses were present at this Ceremony, in order to make it more authentick: They blessed God, and recited the following prayer, O God, grant we beseech thee, that as thou hast received this Man into thy Covenant, we may find good Works and thy Protection in the Law.

The Jews who renounced Judaism, endeavoured to erase the mark of Circumcision, as may be seen in the Book of Maccabees[28], They made themselves uncircumcised, and forsook the holy Covenant. The Rabbins pretend, that Esau was the first who put in practice this way of disguising his Circumcision, when he deserted the Covenant of the Lord, and the Religion of Abraham and Jacob. Some are of opinion, that the Israelites in the Wilderness had likewise concealed the mark of their Circumcision, which obliged Joshua to circumcise them a second [Josh, v. 2.] time. It is said, that many Jews used some Art to make their Foreskin grow, during the Persecution which they suffered under the Romans, after the destruction of the Temple; but that Barchochebas made them all be circumcised again. It seems as if S. Paul apprehended, lest the Jews who were converted to Christianity should bethink themselves of doing the same, Is any man called being circumcised? let him not become [1 Cor. vii. 18.] uncircumcised.

It is true, S. Jerom[29], and some others[30] after him, have affirmed, the mark of Circumcision to be so indelible, that nothing was capable of suppressing it in the flesh of the circumcised person: Neque enim potestatis nostræ est adducere præputium post circumcisionem. And that what is said in the Maccabees, should be understood of those Fathers, who would not circumcise their Sons. Origen[31] somewhere says likewise, that it is impossible to make the Skin which is once cut in Circumcision grow again, but in another place[32] he acknowledges, that many, in order to conceal the deformity of their Circumcision, put themselves into the Surgeons hands to recover their Skin again.

Epiphanius[33] speaks of the instruments used by Physicians for this purpose, and the means practised by them in making the Skin which had been so curtailed grow again. The celebrated Physician Cornelius Celsus has a whole Chapter particularly upon this Opinion: And Galen mentions it much in the same manner as Celsus. Bartolin[34] cites Ægineta and Fallopius, who taught the secret of covering the marks of Circumcision; and Buxtorf the Son, in his Letter to Bartolin, cites a great number of Jews, who speak of this practice, as customary among Apostates from their Religion.

Cisleu

[Jer. xxxvi. 23.] CISLEU, the ninth month in the Ecclesiastical year, and the third in the Civil or political year among the Hebrews. It answers pretty nearly to November. The seventh of Cisleu is a great Fast day with the Jews, in memory of Jehoiakin's piercing the Book of Jeremiah's Prophecies with a Penkife, and throwing them into the fire that was on the hearth. On the fifteenth of the same month, they afflict themselves before the Lord; because on that day Antiochus Epiphanes profaned the Temple of Jerusalem, and placed the [1 Mac. i. 57.] Statue of Jupiter Olympius in it. On the twenty fifth of Cisleu Judas Maccabæus purified the Temple, and dedicated it [2 Macc. i. 18.] anew: The memory whereof is religiously preserved; and in S. John, we see, that Jesus Christ was present at the Festival which was every year celebrated on this [John x. 22.] occasion. And it was at Jerusalem the feast of the dedication, and it was winter. It is said likewise, that on the thirteenth of this month, Nehemiah offered a solemn Sacrifice, and sprinkled the Victim with muddy water, which had been found in the place, where before the sacred fire had been hidden. A flame from Heaven by God's appointment descended on the Altar, [2 Mac. i. 19, 20.] and kindled a fire there.

Cistern

CISTERN. There were Cisterns all over the Country in Palestine: There were some likewise in Cities and private Houses. As the Cities for the most part were built on Mountains, and the Rains fall regularly in Judæa at two seasons of the year only; in Spring and Autumn, People were obliged to keep water in Cisterns in the Country, for the use of their Cattel, and in Cities for the conveniency of the Inhabitants. There are Cisterns of very large dimensions to be seen still at this day in Palestine: Some whereof are an hundred and fifty paces long, and sixty wide; others an hundred and two and twenty paces long, and fifty four wide. There is one to be seen at Ramah of two and thirty paces in length, and eight and twenty in width. Wells and Cisterns, Fountains and Springs, are generally confounded in the Scripture Language.

Cithara

CITHARA. The Hebrew term Kinnor is frequently translated Cithara. Now [כנור Kinnor. Cithara.] the Cithara or ancient Harp, is an Instrument which is no longer in use. It was composed of a base or hollow sounding belly, and of two Branches raised perpendicularly on the two sides of this belly. Above these Branches was a piece of Wood, which went across, and was fastened to each of them. To this piece of Wood were fixed three, six, or nine strings, which made a very harmonious sound as often as they were either play'd upon with the fingers, or touched with the Bow. See above Cinyra.

Claudia

CLAUDIA, a Roman Lady converted [2 Tim. iv. 21.] by S. Paul. Some believe her to have been the Wife of Pudens, who is named immediately before her in S. Paul's second Epistle to Timothy. Martial speaks of one Claudia the Wife of Pudens.[1] Others think, that Claudia was the wife of Pilate, that she returned to Rome with her Husband, and persevered in the Faith, which she had received, during her abode in Palestine. But this is absolutely apocryphal. We know not so much as the name of Pilate's Wife; and tho' we did know that she was called Claudia, yet what proofs have we, that she ever embraced the Christian Religion? Others will have it, that Claudia was an English Woman, and the Wife of Aulus Rufus Pudens. But these are vain conjectures.

Claudius (I)

I. CLAUDIUS. The Emperor Claudius, of whom there is mention made in some places of the Scripture, succeeded Caius Caligula, in the year of J. C. 41, and reigned thirteen years eight months and nineteen days, and died in the year of J. C. 54. King Agrippa contributed a great deal by his persuasions, to his accepting, and keeping possession of the Empire, which was tendered to him by the Soldiers. As an Acknowledgment of this Service, he gave Agrippa all Judæa, and the Kingdom of Chalcis to his Brother Herod[1]. He put an end to the dispute which had been for some time on foot between the Jews of Alexandria, and the other Freemen of that City, confirmed the Jews in the possession of their Right of Freedom, which they had enjoyed from the beginning, and every where maintained them in the free exercise of their Religion and Laws[2]; but he would not permit them to hold any Assemblies at Rome[3].

King Agrippa dying in the fourth year of Claudius, and of J. C. 44, the Emperor [Acts xviii. 2.] again reduced Judæa into a Province, and sent Cuspius Fadus to be Governor. About the same time the Famine happened, which is mentioned in the Acts of the [Acts xi. 28, 29, 30.] Apostles[4], and was foretold by the Prophet Agabus. In this extremity the Christians of Antioch assisted those of Jerusalem, and sent Alms to them by the hands of Barnabas and Saul, in the year of J. C. 44. Claudius the year following ordained, that the High Priest's pontifical Robes should remain in the possession of the Jews[5]; whereas the Governors of the Province had a mind to have the keeping of them.

At the same time Herod King of Chalcis obtained the favour from the Emperor of having Authority over the Temple, and the Money consecrated to God, with a power of deposing and establishing the High Priests. At length, in the ninth year of Claudius, and of J. C. 49, the Emperor published an order for expelling all Jews out of Rome. It is very probable that the Christians, who were at that time confounded with the Jews, were banished thence likewise; and[6] Suetonius plainly intimates it, when he tells us, that Claudius drove the Jews out of Rome, by reason of the continual disturbances which were then excited by them, at the instigation of Chrestus: Judæos, impulsore Chresto, assidue tumultuantes, Roma expulit. This is almost all that we can find in the Reign of Claudius, particularly relating to the affairs of Jews and Christians, and which is proper to be inserted in a Dictionary of the Bible. Claudius was poisoned by his Wife Agrippina, and was succeeded by Nero.

Claudius Lysias (II)

II. CLAUDIUS LYSIAS, Tribune of the Roman Troops, which kept guard at the Temple of Jerusalem. He observing the Tumult which was raised upon S. [Acts xxi. 27, 28, &c. xxii. 1, 2, 3, &c.] Paul's account, whom the Jews had seized on, and designed to put to death, came seasonably to Paul's assistance, and rescued him out of their hands. He ordered him to be bound with two Chains, and carried him to the Fortress Antonia, where the Roman Cohort was in Garrison. Then Lysias being desirous to know what the reason was of this animosity which the Jews expressed against St. Paul, ordered him to be extended on the ground, with a design of putting him to the Torture by whipping him. But S. Paul having demanded whether it was lawful to treat a Roman Citizen after this manner, Lysias was afraid, and directed those to withdraw, who were preparing to scourge him. The next day the Tribune sent for the Priests, and the whole Council of the Jews, to learn particularly the reason of that Commotion which had happened the day before. S. Paul was permitted to speak to them; and understanding that the Assembly was composed of Pharisees and Sadducees, he cried out, that he was a Pharisee, and that the accusation which was brought against him, proceeded from his believing the Resurrection of the dead. This was enough to sow division among those who made up this meeting. The Pharisees took Paul's part; and as the Tumult increased, Lysias sent Soldiers with Orders to carry off Paul by force out of the Assembly, and convey him to the Tower of Antonia, where he was imprisoned.

The day after, above forty of the Jews having engaged themselves in a Conspiracy to kill Paul; notice was given him of their design by his Nephew, his Sister's Son. And the Tribune, upon receiving intelligence of it by the same person, commanded a good Guard to be provided the night following, in order to conduct Paul to Cæsarea. This is what we know of Lysias, so far at least as relates to our purpose.

Claudius Felix (III)

III. CLAUDIUS FELIX, the Successor of Cumanus in the Government of Judæa. Felix found means to sollicit Drusilla, [In the year of the vulg. Æra 53.] young Agrippa's Sister,[1] to leave her Husband Azizus King of the Emessenians, and marry him. Drusilla consented, and was divorced from Azizus. Felix sent to Rome Eleazar, the Son of Dinæus, Captain of a band of Robbers, who committed great Ravages in Palestine[2]: He likewise procured the death of Jonathan the High-Priest, who took the liberty sometimes to represent his duty to him[3]. He defeated a body of three thousand Men, which an Egyptian, a false Prophet, had got together in the Mount of Olives[4]. Lastly, S. Paul being brought to Cæsarea, the place where [Acts xxiii. 26, 27, &c. xxiv. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the vulg. Æra 58.] Felix kept his usual Residence, he treated him very well, and permitted his friends to see him, and do him what services they pleased, hoping that S. Paul would procure his Redemption with a sum of Money. He did not think it convenient either to condemn him, or to set him at liberty, when the Jews accused him; but chose rather to adjourn the determination of this Affair till the arrival of Lysias, who commanded the Troops at Jerusalem, where he had taken Paul into custody, and who was expected at Cæsarea.

Felix being one day with his Wife Drusilla, who was of the Jewish Religion, sent for S. Paul, and desired him to explain [Acts xxiv. 24.] to him the Religion of Jesus Christ. S. Paul on this occasion spoke with his usual boldness; and as he discoursed to him concerning Justice, Chastity, and the last Judgment, Felix was terrified, and sent Paul back to the place of his Confinement. He had S. Paul thus brought to him from time to time, and heard him, as if he were disposed to receive some benefit from his Instructions. For this reason he detained S. Paul two years at Cæsarea, without terminating his affair, and besides was glad of this opportunity to oblige the Jews, who were otherwise extreamly dissatisfied with him. He was recalled to Rome in the year of J. C. 60, and many of the Jews going thither to complain of the Extortions, and several acts of violence committed by him in Judæa, he had certainly been executed, if the credit of his Brother Pallas, who had been Claudius's Slave, and was made free by him, had not preserved him.[5] Felix was succeeded by Pontius Festus.

Clauthmon

CLAUTHMON. This is a Greek word, which signifies Tears, and answers to the Hebrew, Bochim, and the Latin, Locus [Bochim. Κλαυθμῶν. Ps. lxxxix. 6.] flentium, Judg. ii. 1. An angel of the Lord came up from Gilgal to Bochim, ad locum flentium. There is mention of the same place in 2 Sam. v. 24. When thou hearest the sound in the top of Bochim, thou shalt bestir thyself. Lastly, the Psalmist seems to speak of the same place, when he says, Who going through the vale of misery. Others translate the Hebrew, Bochim, Mulberry-trees, or Pear-trees, and instead of the Vale or place of Tears, read, the vale or place of Mulberry-trees.

The difficulty consists in fixing the place of Bochim, whether we understand by it Mulberry Trees or they who weep. Some fix it at Shiloh, because the People were assembled at the place where the Angel came to find them, and there they sacrificed. Now, it was not lawful to sacrifice any where but at the Tabernacle. It is very probable therefore that Clauthmon and Bochim are the same as Shiloh, where the Tabernacle at that time was. Others place Bochim near Jerusalem. It is certain, that the Battel between David and the Philistines in the Valley of Bochim, 2 Sam. v. 24. was fought near Jerusalem. Wherefore, unless two places are distinguished by the same name Bochim, it must be confessed, that this was near Jerusalem.

CLAVUS. Moses told the Hebrews, that if they spared the Canaanites, these People would prove to them quasi clavi in oculis, & lanceæ in lateribus. Or, according to some Interpreters, They shall be pricks in your eyes, and thorns in your sides. By the word Clavi, those Stakes are often [Numb. xxxiii. 55. If. xxxiii. 20. Isai. xxii. 23.] meant, which were fixed into the Earth for the support of Tents. Isaiah speaking of the new Jerusalem, under the allegory of a Tent newly set up, says, Non auferuntur clavi ejus in sempiternum, & omnes funiculi ejus non rumpentur. And elsewhere speaking of Eliakim the Son of Hilkiah, Figam illum paxillum in loco fideli--- & suspendens super eum omnem gloriam domus patris ejus. I will fasten him as a nail in a sure place, and they shall hang upon him all the glory of his Father's house.

Clavi

CLAVI. Jesus Christ without doubt was fastened to the Cross with Nails, and his Hands and Feet were pierced with them: The Text of the Gospel clearly [John xx. 26. Luke xxiv. 39. Ps. xxxii. 17.] shews the truth of this. The Psalmist had foretold long before, that they should pierce his Hands and Feet. But there are disputes concerning the number of the Nails. The Greeks represent our Saviour always to be fastened to the Cross with four Nails; in which particular Gregory of Tours agrees with them[1], one at each Hand and Foot, and under his Feet a kind of Basis, to prevent his Body's sinking with its weight, and the Hands from being torn. Gregory of Tours adds, that the Empress Helena had two of them put into the Bit of a Bridle, which her Son Constantine made use of when he rode on Horseback, and that she threw another of them into the Adriatick Sea, to calm the violent agitation of it. Others[2] tell us, that she put another of these Nails into Constantine's Helmet.

But others are of Opinion, that our Saviour's Hands and Feet were pierced with three Nails only, viz. one at each Hand, and one at both his Feet; and the custom of the Latins is rather for this last opinion: For the generality of the old Crucifixes made in the Latin Church, have only three Nails wherewith Christ was nailed to the Cross. Nonnus[3] thinks, that our Saviour's Arms were besides bound fast to the Cross with Chains; and S. Hilary speaks of the Cords wherewith he was tied to it. The Nails, or rather parts of the Nails with which our Lord was pierced are shewn in several Churches. But from hence it cannot be concluded, either that these Relicks are all false and uncertain, or that more than four Nails were used to fasten Jesus Christ to the Cross. Those which are to be seen in the Treasuries of several Churches, are but parts of the Nails which we are speaking of; and some of them perhaps were used, not in piercing our Saviour's Hands and Feet, but in nailing together the several pieces of the Cross, the Foot-board on which his Feet rested, and the Inscription which Pilate appointed to be placed on the upper end of the Cross: These might all afterwards have been confounded with the Nails which pierced the Hands and Feet of Jesus Christ. The Figure of them may be seen under the Article Thorns.

It has been questioned, whether the weight of our Saviour's Body fastened to the Cross was sufficiently stayed by the Nails made use of in fixing him to it; and it has been the opinion of some, that to supply what was wanting in this particular, and prevent its being dragg'd down by its own weight, as also his Hands from taring asunder, there was a necessity to put a kind of Basis or Prop under his Feet; and besides this, a piece of Wood between his Thighs, or a seat to uphold him[4]. But Bartholin has very well observed, that not a living person only might be held while he is hanging upon the Cross by two Nails grove through his two Hands, but a dead Man likewise; that indeed they did sometimes place something under the Feet, or in the middle of the crucified Bodies, that so Malefactors might continue long after death upon the Cross, even when their Bodies were so rotten and putrified, that they could not be stayed nor continue fastened by Nails only. The Reader may likewise see Nicholas Fontaine's Letter on the same subject, wherein he produces some examples of Persons who remained hanging by the Hands, or by even one Hand alone, or by the Skin of the Side.

Clement

CLEMENT. There is mention of Clement in S. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians [Philip. iv. 3.] . S. Paul says, Clement's name is written in the Book of Life. The generality of the Fathers and other Interpreters make no question, but that this is the same Clement who succeeded S. Peter after Linus and Cletus, in the Government of the Church of Rome, and the Church seems to intimate the same thing, when in the Office on S. Clement's day, it appoints this part of the Epistle to the Philippians to be read. Grotius on the contrary is of opinion, that Clement, whom S. Paul speaks of, was no more than a Priest of the Church of Philippi.

We find many things relating to the Life of Clement in the Recognitions and Constitutions called Apostolical: But as these Works are not believed to be authentick, tho' there may be many truths in them derived from the Tradition of the first Ages, we dare not lay any great stress upon their Testimony. S. Chrysostom[1] thinks, that Clement whom S. Paul speaks of in his Epistle to the Philippians, was one of this Apostle's constant fellow Travellers. S. Irenæus[2], Origen[3], Clemens of Alexandria[4], and others of the Antients, assert, that Clement was a Disciple of the Apostles; that he had seen them, and heard their Instructions. S. Epiphanius, Jerom, Rufinus, Bede, and some others were of opinion, that as the Apostles S. Peter and S. Paul could not be continually at Rome, by reason of the frequent Journies which they were obliged to make to other Places, and it was not proper that the City of Rome should be without a Bishop, there was a necessity to supply the want of them, by establishing Linus, Anaclet, and Clement there. The Constitutions[5] inform us, that Linus was ordained by S. Paul.[6] Tertullian and Epiphanius[7] say, that S. Peter ordained Clement. Rufinus v tells us, that this Apostle chose S. Clement for his Successor: But Epiphanius believes, that after he had been made Bishop of Rome by S. Peter, he refused to exercise this Office, till after the death of Linus and Anaclet; he was obliged to take upon him the care of the Church: And this is the most generally received Opinion. The immediate Successor of S. Peter was Linus; Linus was succeeded by Anacletus, and Anacletus by w S. Clement, in the year of J. C. 91, which was the tenth of Domitian's reign.

During his Pontificate, the Church of Corinth having been disturbed by the spirit of division, S. Clement wrote a large Letter to the Corinthians, which is still remaining, and was so much esteemed by the Antients, that they read it publickly in many Churches; and some have been inclined to range it among the Canonical Writings. The Emperor Domitian intending to declare War against the Church of Jesus Christ, a revelation of his design was made to Hermas, and he ordered to give a copy of it to Pope Clement[8], that he might communicate it to other Churches, and exhort them to provide against the Storm. We have no certain Accounts of what happened to S. Clement during this Persecution, but we know, and are very well assured,[9] that he lived to the third year of Trajan, which is the hundredth of J. C. His Festival is set down by Bede, and all the Latin Martyrologies on the twenty third of November. The Greeks honour him on the twenty fourth or twenty fifth of the same Month. Rufinus and Pope Zozimus give him the Title of Martyr, and the Church in its Canon places him among the Saints who have sacrificed their Lives for Jesus Christ.

We read in an antient History, to which however there are some exceptions, that S. Clement was banished by Trajan to the Chersonesus, beyond the Euxin Sea: That he produced a Fountain by his Prayers, for the service of other holy Confessors, who were banished to the same place with him; that after about a year's abode there, he converted all the Country round about; that Trajan sent an Officer thither, by whose order Clement was drowned in the Sea, with an Anchor fastned to his neck; that the Sea afterwards retired as far as the place where his Body was thrown into it, which was at a full league's distance from the Shore, and that the Christians going thither, found his Body in a Stone Monument under a Temple all made of Marble; and that every year the Sea retired in the same manner on the Festival day of this Saint, and left the Faithful the liberty of visiting his Grave.

Cleopas

[Luk. xxiv. 13—35.] CLEOPAS, according to the antient Fathers, who speak of him[1], was brother to Joseph, and both of them the Sons of Jacob. He was the Father of S. Simeon Bishop of Jerusalem, of S. James the lesser, of S. Jude, and Joseph or Joses. Cleopas married Mary Sister to the Blessed Virgin: So that he was Uncle to Jesus Christ, and his Sons were Cousin Germans to our Saviour. Cleopas, his Wife and his Sons were some of the faithful Disciples of Jesus Christ, and of their number, who looked upon him as the Redeemer and Salvation of Israel. But Cleopas did not sufficiently understand the mystery of the Cross, and what Jesus had so often told his Disciples, that it was expedient that he should die, and return unto his Father. Cleopas having beheld our Saviour expire upon the Cross, lost all hopes of seeing the Kingdom of God established by his means upon Earth.

He departed from Jerusalem two days after our Saviour's death; that is to say, on the very day of his Resurrection; and as he was going to Emmaus with another Disciple[2], while they were entertaining themselves with what had passed during the Feast, particularly with respect to Jesus Christ, our Saviour joined them in the form of a Traveller, asked what they were discoursing upon, and encouraged them, convincing them from the Scriptures, that it was necessary Christ should suffer death. When they came near Emmaus, Jesus made a shew as if he intended to go farther: But Cleopas and his Companion detained him, and made him sup with them. Jesus, while they were at Table, took Bread and blessed it, brake it, and presented some of it to them. Hereupon their Eyes were opened, and they knew him: But he disappeared and left them.

Immediately they returned to Jerusalem, and sought for the Disciples, whom they found assembled in the same place. They related what had happened to them. The Apostles and Disciples in their turn declared to them the reason which they had for believing Christ's Resurrection, and how he had appeared to Peter. While they were yet talking, Jesus appeared standing in the midst of them, tho' the Doors were shut. He saluted, blessed and encouraged them, shewed them the wounds in his Hands and Feet, eat in their presence, expounded the Scriptures to them, and directed them to go and preach the Gospel throughout the World.

We do not know particularly the actions of S. Cleopas during the remainder of his Life. But Usuardus and Ado tell us, that he suffered Martyrdom, and was buried in the same house where he had received Jesus Christ at his Table. It is indeed the opinion of S. Jerom,[3] that Cleopas abode generally at Emmaus, and that it was in this house that he invited our Saviour to continue with him. Some believe, that afterwards a Church was built there. But supposing Cleopas to have been the Brother of Joseph, and Father of S. James, S. Jude, Simon and Joses, it is more probable that he was a Galilæan, and that his habitation was in some City of Galilee. However this may be, the Latins honour Cleopas as a Saint upon the twenty fifth of September. The Greeks make mention of him on the thirteenth of October, or rather on the thirtieth, and give him the Title of Apostle.

CLEOPATRA. There are many Princesses of this name, who are either tacitly or expresly mentioned in the Scripture.

Cleopatra (I)

I. CLEOPATRA, the Daughter of Antiochus the Great, and Wife of Ptolemy Epiphanes King of Egypt. Antiochus the Great having formed the design of making himself Master of Egypt, gave his Daughter Cleopatra in Marriage to the young King Ptolemy, with hopes that she would espouse his interest, and so render the conquest of her Husband's Kingdom more easy to him: But it fell out quite otherwise. Cleopatra preferr'd the Interest of her Husband to the unjust views of her Father[1]. We are of opinion, that this Princess is described in these words of Daniel; He shall [Dan. xi. 17.] be confirmed in his design of getting possession of the whole kingdom belonging to the king of the South, the King of Egypt, he shall pretend to act uprightly with him; he shall give him his daughter (Cleopatra) in marriage, in order to destroy him: But she shall not stand on his side, neither be for him.

II. CLEOPATRA, Daughter of the Cleopatra we have been speaking of, and Ptolemy Epiphanes King of Egypt. She married Ptolemy Philometor her own Brother. There is mention of this Cleopatra and Ptolemy her Husband in the Book of Esther, xi. 1. where it is said, In the fourth year of the reign of Ptolemeus and Cleopatra, Dositheus, who said he was a Priest and Levite, and Ptolemeus his son brought to the Jews of Alexandria the Book of Esther, or the Epistle of Pharim, translated out of Hebrew into Greek by Lysimachus the Son of Ptolemy. This happened in the year of the World 3827, of the Julian Period 4537, before J. C. 177, before the vulgar Æra 181.

Cleopatra (III)

III. CLEOPATRA, the Daughter of Ptolemy Philometor, and the Cleopatra we have been last speaking of, married first of all Alexander Balas King of Syria. Four years after her Father Philometor took her from Balas, with an intention to give her to Demetrius Nicanor, who likewise was King of Syria. But Demetrius remaining a Prisoner with the Parthians, against whom he had made War, and having married Radeguna the Daughter of Arsaces his Conqueror, Cleopatra was wedded to Antiochus Sidetes, the Brother of Demetrius Nicanor. At last Demetrius Nicanor returning into Syria, and re-ascending the Throne of his Ancestors, Cleopatra was reconciled to him, and returned with him. There is no express mention of this Princess in the sacred Writings; but she is sometimes spoken of in the Comments on the Maccabees. She had laid a design to poison her Son Gryphus, but he prevented her, and obliged her to drink the draught which she had provided for him[1], in the year of the World 3882, before J. C. 118, before the vulg. Æra 122.

Cleopatra (IV)

IV. CLEOPATRA, the Sister and Wife of Ptolemy Physcon. She, after the death of her Husband Ptolemy was desirous to place Alexander the youngest of her two Sons upon the Throne of Egypt: But the great Men of the Kingdom having obliged her to follow the Law of Nature, and make Lathyrus King, she so embroiled his affairs, that he was compelled to retire to Cyprus. This Princess had a particular confidence in the Jews of Egypt, and gave the command of her Troops to Chelcias and Ananias, who were both of this Nation:[1] She pursued her Son Lathyrus into the Isle of Cyprus, whither he had fled. He went into Palestine, to which Country he had been invited by the Inhabitants of Ptolemais, that they might have the benefit of his assistance against Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews, who was then besieging them. We shall have occasion to say more of this Princess in the Articles of Ptolemy Physcon, and Ptolemy Lathyrus.

[In the year of the World 3901, and 3902. In the year of the World 3902 before J. C. 98, before the vulg. Æra 102. Antiq. l. iii. c. 21.] Alexander Jannæus, who knew how ill disposed Cleopatra was to Lathyrus, invited this Princess to enter into an alliance with him against Lathyrus. The Queen was easily induced to do so[2], and sometime after, sent her Army under the command of Ananias, against the City of Ptolemais. Thither she came soon after in person; and having taken the City, Alexander Jannæus visited her there, and brought presents for her. The Enemies of Alexander would have persuaded her to possess herself of the Country of the Jews; but Ananias diverted her from it, by remonstrating to her, that if she were guilty of so perfidious an action, all the Jews in the World would be her Enemies. Cleopatra therefore made an alliance with Jannæus in the City of Scythopolis. She died in the year of the World 3916, before J. C. 84, before the vulgar Æra 88. As she had formed a design to rid herself of her Son Alexander King of Egypt, he prevented her, and put her to death[3]. This Alexander reigned eighteen years with his Mother. See Ptolemy Lathyrus.

Cleopatra (V)

V. CLEOPATRA, the last Queen of Egypt, Daughter of Ptolemy Auletes, that is to say, the player on the Flute, sacrificed her two Brothers, and her Sister Arsinoë to her ambition. She had such an ascendant over Mark Antony, that he put away Octavia the Sister of Augustus to marry her. She was no way concerned in the religious Affairs either of the Jews or Christians; and her name is not to be met with in the Bible: But there was an intimate Friendship between her and Alexandra the Mother of Mariamne, and Motherin-law to Herod the Great; who, having received some Mortifications at her Son-in-law's Court, wrote to Cleopatra concerning them, and was invited by her to come with her Son Aristobulus into Egypt[1]. This being known by Herod, extremely provoked him against Alexandra, and contributed not a little to the resolution which he took, of putting her to death, and which he executed some years after, first against Aristobulus, and afterwards [In the year of the World 3970, before J. C. 30.] against Alexandra.

Cleopatra never ceased solliciting Antony, to revenge this wicked act committed by Herod against Aristobulus. Antony hereupon commanded Herod to attend him, and give an account of his Conduct. But Herod wrought on Antony by his Presents, and engaged him in his Interests. About the end of this year 3970, Cleopatra passed through Judæa in her return from a Journey she had made with Antony, as far as the Euphrates. Herod received her with all imaginable Magnificence; she endeavoured to inspire him with Love, and solicited him to converse criminally with her: But Herod always appeared to be insensible of her allurements, and deliberated with his Friends, whether he should not take this opportunity to dispatch her. But they dissuaded him from any such attempt. He conducted her therefore as far as Pelusium, and loaded her with Presentsh. Soon after the Battel of Actium was fought, wherein Antony was overcome by Augustus: Antony upon this defeat fled to Cleopatra in Egypt, and Augustus followed him. Cleopatra killed herself with the sting of an Asp, in the Year of the World 3974, before J. C. 26. before the vulgar Æra 30.

Clerus

CLERUS, comes from the Greek, [1 Pet. v. 3.] Cleros, which signifies Inheritance. Neither as being Lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock. Neque ut dominantes in Clero, sed forma facti gregis ex animo. Others readi, Neque dominantes in Clero, and explain it as a prohibition directed by S. Peter to the Bishops, forbidding them to exercise a too despotick Authority over Priests, Deacons, and others of the Clergy, who are subject to them.

[Psal. lxviii. 13.] We find the same term Cleros in the lxvii. Psalm of the Vulgate Translation. Si dormietis inter medios Cleros, pennæ columbæ deargentatæ, & posteriora dorsi ejus in pallore auri. Which may be rendered thus, Tho' ye have lien still amidst the lands allotted you, yet shall ye be like pigeons with silver wings and gilded feathers. And it is our opinion, that the Psalmist in this place speaks to the Tribes of Reuben and Gad, which were not present in the Battel fought by Deborah and Barak with Sisera. He tells them; it is true, O ye Pigeons with silver Wings, and gilded Feathers, that upon this occasion ye had no share in Deborah's victory, when the Lord put to flight the confederated Kings. You continued in the quiet Injoyment of your Inheritance amidst your Streams and Rivers; yet are you become there white as Snow in Salmon: You have made yourselves illustrious by other gallant Actions.

Cloud (I)

I. CLOUD. When the Israelites departed out of Egypt, God gave them a Pillar of Cloud to direct them in their march. It attended them from the time of their leaving Succoth, according to S. Jerom in his Epistle to Fabiola, or from Ramesses, according to others, or only from Ethan, till the death of Aaron, as the Hebrews say, or as far as the Passage over Jordan, as the generality of Commentators will have it. This Pillar was commonly in the front of the Israelitish Army. But when they were come to the Red Sea over against Pihahiroth, and the Egyptian Army appeared before them, the Pillar of Cloud which stood before the Camp of Israel, placed itself between that and the Camp of the Egyptians, so that the Egyptians could not come near the Israelites all night.

But in the morning about break of day, seeing the Cloud moving on toward the Sea, and following the Israelites who had passed through its Channel, which was left dry for them in the night time, the Egyptians resolved upon pursuing them, and were all covered with the waters of the Red Sea, which returned upon them and destroyed them.

This Cloud continued always from that time to attend the Israelites in the Wilderness. It was clear and bright during the night, in order to give them light when it grew dark, and in the day time it was thick and gloomy, the better to defend them from the excessive heats of the Arabian Desarts, through which they performed their Journey. It appears that the Angel of the Lord governed the motions of this Cloud, since it is said, Exod. xiv. 19. The Angel of God which went before the Camp of Israel, removed and went behind them; and the pillar of the cloud went from before their face, and stood behind them. Where we may observe, that the Angel and the Cloud made the same motion.

The same Cloud by its motions gave likewise the signal to the Israelites, either to encamp or to decamp; so that where that stayed, the People stayed, till it rose again, then they broke up their Camp, and Exod. xiii. 21, 22. Exod. xiv. 19, 20. Numb. ix. 15, 16, 17, &c. x. 34, 35. and Exod. xl. 34, 37. e Joseph. Antiq. l. xv. c. 2. In the year of the World 3969. before J. C. 31. before the vulg. Æra 35. f Joseph. de Bello l. i. c. 13. Antiq. l. xv. c. 5. and followed it till it stopped. It was called a Pillar by reason of its form, which was high and elevated as it were a Pile and Heap of Fogs. There are some Interpreters, who will have it, that there were two Clouds[1]; one to give light to, the other to cover and shade the Camp of Israel [1 Cor. x. 1, 2.] . S. Paul says, that the Pillar of Cloud was a figure of Baptism. In effect it enlightned the Israelites in the night time, as Baptism enlightens us, and makes us Children of Light. It protected them, and was a continual earnest of God's Power and Protection, in like manner as Baptism procures both these advantages for us. See the Commentators upon Exodus xiii. 21, 22. and xiv. 19, 20. and the Dissertation by Christian Mandenus, De Columna nubis & ignis. At Goslar 1712.

The Lord appeared at Sinai in the [Exod. xix. 9. xxxiv. 5.] midst of a Cloud; and after Moses had built and consecrated the Tabernacle, the Cloud filled the Court round about it, so that neither Moses nor the Priests could [Exod. xl. 32, 33. 2 Chr. v. 13, and 1 Kings viii. 10.] go in. The same thing happened at the dedication of the Temple of Jerusalem by Solomon. When the Cloud appeared upon the Tent, before which were held the Assemblies of the People in the Desart, it was then believed that God was present. [Exod. xvi. 10. xxxiii. 9. Numb. xi. 25.] The motion of the Cloud which rested upon this Tent, was the sign of God's presence. The Angel descended in the Cloud, and from thence spoke to Moses, without being seen by the rest of the People. See Exod. xvi. 10. Numb. xi. 25. xxi. 5. It is common in Scripture, when there is any mention of God's appearing, to represent him always, as incompassed with Clouds, which serve him for a Chariot, and cast a Veil before his dreadful Majesty, Job xxii. 14. Isai. xix. 1. Mat. xvii. 5. xxiv. 30, &c. Isai. xlv. 8.] II. CLOUD is used sometimes for morning Mists, Your goodness is as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away. And Isaiah xviii. 7. Quasi nubes roris. The Scripture represents the Clouds as Conservatories of Water or Rain, which are scattered upon the Earth at God's Command. Qui ligat aquas in nubibus suis. God confines the Waters in the Clouds as in a Bottle, he scatters them afterwards on the Earth as it were [2 Sam. xxii. 12.] through the Nozzle of a watering Pot; Cribrans aquas de nubibus cœli. Job speaking of the matter of the Chaos, which covered the whole Earth at the beginning of the World, says, that God had [Job xxxviii. 9.] hem'd in the Sea or the Waters as it were with a Cloud, and covered it with darkness, as a Child at nurse is wrapped up in its Blankets. The Author of Ecclesiasticus uses the same expression. Quasi nubicula texi omnem terram. Isaiah prays to God to hasten the coming of the righteous One, and to command the Clouds to pour him down upon the Earth. Et nubibus pluant Justum. When the sacred Writers speak of the coming of the Son of God at his second Advent, they describe him to us as descending upon the Clouds, and encompassed with all his Majesty.

Clysma

CLYSMA, or Clisma, or Colsum. This is the place, where the Israelites passed the Red Sea, as is expresly shewn by Eusebius[1], Philostorgius[2], Cosmas the Egyptian a Monk[3], and Gregory of Tours[4]. Clysma, according to S. Epiphanius[5], was one of the three ports which lay upon the Red Sea. The first was Ailat; the second Berenice; and the third at the Castle of Clysma. Some[6] place it to the East, others[7] to the West of the Red Sea; but we are persuaded it should be placed eastward; and that Clysma is the same with the present Colsuma. And as the whole western Coast of this Sea received its name from Clysma; so in like manner at this day the Arm of this Sea, which extends towards Egypt, and is opposite to the Gulf of Elat or Ailath is called the Sea of Colsuma, or Baharel-Colsum. Clysma lay towards the extremity, or point of the Red Sea: But I cannot exactly tell the distance, which there was from Clysma to the extremity of this Sea. Gregory of Tours, Paulus Orosius, and some others assure us, that still in their time, at the place where the Hebrews passed the Red Sea, the remains of Pharaoh's Chariots, and the tracks of their Wheels were to be seen.

According to Abulfeda's account of Colzum[8], It is a small Town situated upon the northern extremity of the Red Sea, in the forty fourth degree and ¼. Others say in the forty sixth degree of Longitude and ½, and in the twenty third degree of Latitude and ⅓. It lies to the west of Ailat or Elat; both being almost in the same Latitude. Ailat is seated on the extremity of the eastern Arm or Channel, and Colsum at the extremity of the western Channel. Between Ailat and Colzum is Mount Al-tour or Sinai, which is more southern than Colzum. They who come from Sinai in their way to Egypt, must necessarily pass through the Neighbourhood of Colzum. The Red Sea, at some distance beyond Colzum, extends it self on both sides towards the South and East, till its Channel from one Shore to the other becomes about sixty thousand paces wide; and this place, which is one of the widest, is called Barka Gorandal. Clysma and Colzum are the same.

Coa

COA. There is mention of Coa[1] in 1 Kings, x. 28. and 2 Chr. i. 16. and it is said in these places, that Horses were brought to Solomon from Coa at a certain price. Some by Coa understand the Isle of Coos, celebrated for the Silks and Woollen Stuffs that were wrought there. But this is no proof that there were fine Horses there, or that any were brought from thence to Solomon. Others are of opinion[2], that these Horses came from the City of Coa in Arabia Felix. Others[3] bring them from Co a City of Egypt, and Capital of the Province called Cypopolitana.

The Hebrew may be thus translated; They brought horses to Solomon from Egypt and from Michoe[4]. Pliny assures us[5], that antiently the Country of the Troglodytes near Egypt was called Michoë. Others translate the Hebrew thus.[6]They brought Horses to Solomon out of Egypt, and the King's merchants bought thread for Money. They pretend that the Hebrew Mikoa, signifies Thread. Jarchi supposes a string of Horses to be meant by it, fastned by the tail to one another; and this Interpretation is followed by several modern Expositors[7]. Bochart[8] by Mikoa understands Tribute, and his Translation of this passage runs thus. They brought Horses for Solomon out of Egypt; and as to the Tributes, this Prince's Farmers received them at certain rates.

Coccus

COCCUS, Coccinum, Coccineus color, Crimson, or according to others, Scarlet. Moses often makes use of coccum bis tinctum, of Scarlet twice dyed, because in reality Scarlet or Purple was twice dyed[1].

Nec quæ bis Tyrio murice lana rubet.

In the Hebrew it is Tolahat Schani; that [תולעת שני S. hani. Tolahat.] is to say, the double Worm, or the Worm Schani, as if Schani were the proper name of this Worm. I shall set down here the account which Bellonius gives us of the Worm which is made use of in dying Crimson[2]. There is abundance of Coccus in the Isle of Crete, with which they drive a great Trade there. It is found in the month of June, upon a sort of small Oak, the Leaves whereof are prickly, and are covered with certain small Berries about the bigness of a little Pea, and full of little red Worms, no larger than Nits. These Berries are plucked from the Leaves, and the little Animals come out through a hole on that side, which was fastened to the Leaf. These little Animals are separated from the Berry by a Sieve, and are put together and pressed gently. They make balls of them about the size of a Pullet's Egg. The Arabians call these Worms Charmes, whence the French word Cramoisy or Crimson is derived; because they are of use in dying this colour. See hereafter Ver, Vermiculus.

Cock

COCK, Gallus, a tame Bird very well [xxxviii. 36. Vulg.] known to every one. It is said in Job, Quis dedit Gallo intelligentiam? Which, as some explain it[1], relates to the exactness with which the crowing of the Cock distinguishes the hours of the night; for he generally crows three times in a night, at Midnight, two hours before Day, and at break of Day. But the Hebrew term[2] translated Cock, signifies, in the opinion of many Interpreters[3], the Soul, and Understanding. The Septuagint seem to understand by it a Woman well skilled in embroidering.

[Prov. xxxi. 31. זרז מתנים] In the Proverbs the majestick gate of a Cock is commended, Gallus succinctus lumbos[4]. Several Interpreters translate the original word, Leopard, Greyhound, War-Horse, or Bee: But there are many too, who interpret it Cock.

[Isai. xxii. 17.] Isaiah[5] threatens Shebna with being transported out of his own Country, as a Cock is carried to Market. Dominus asportari te faciet sicut asportatur gallus gallinaceus. S. Jerom says, that the Rabbi who taught him Hebrew, inform'd him, that the term in the Original, which generally signifies a Man, stood in this place for a Cock. But this has not prevented several Interpreters from keeping to the common signification of this word, and translating the verse thus, The Lord will cause thee to be transported to some other place, O man of war; or, he will make thee to forsake thy Country like a warrior, &c.

The Jews in the evening before the solemn Expiation, take a white Cock[6], if they can find one of this colour, and never a red one, imagining a white Cock to be a mark of Innocence, a red one of Sin. After having pronounced some Prayers, they strike themselves three times on the head with the Cock, using at the same time this expression, May this Cock be sacrificed in my stead; he shall suffer death for me, he shall be my expiation, and re conciliation. This done, they kill the Cock, cut off his neck, throw him against the ground, take out his Bowels, and throw them upon the top of the House, and roast him. In every one of these particulars some figurative significations are implied, which it is not necessary to collect in this place. Leo of Modena[7] says, that the Jews of Italy, and in the Levant, scarce ever practise this Ceremony; because they own it to be a piece of superstition, without any foundation. But it appears by Buxtorf, that it is still observed in Germany.

Cocytus

COCYTUS, a River of Arcadia; it takes its rise from the Styx, and the Poets feigned, that it was one of the four Rivers of Hell. There was one of the same name in the Campania, which fell into the Lucrine Lake. The Latin Translator of the Book of Job has inserted this term in his Translation, in order to describe the descent of the wicked into Hell, Job xxi. 33. There is nothing in the Hebrew, or in the old Versions, which has any relation to Cocytus, and there is no probability at all, that Job ever intended to speak of it. These fables are of a much later invention, than the time he lived in. In the Hebrew it is said only, The clods of the Valley shall be sweet unto him, whereas in the Vulgate we read, Dulcis fuit glareis Cocyti. His presence was agreeable to the Banks of Cocytus.

Coele-Syria

COELE-SYRIA, in Greek Coile-Syria, hollow Syria. The Valley between Libanus and Antilibanus, was principally called by this name[1]. It reaches in length from North to South, from the entrance of Emath as far as beyond Heliopolis or Baal -Bek. Dionysius the Geographer supposes it to lye between Libanus and Mount Casius.

But in the larger sense, the whole Country southward of Seleucia, and extending as far as Egypt and Arabia, is called Cœle- Syria. Josephus places the Country of Ammon in Cœle-Syria[2], and Stephens the Geographer fixes the City of Gadara in it, which is eastward of the Sea of Tiberias. You have here a list of the several Cities in Cœle-Syria, according to Ptolemy's account of it; Abila, Lysanium, Saana, Inna, Damascus, Samulis, Abida, Hippos, Capitolias, Gadara, Adra, Scythopolis, Gerasa, Pella, Dium, Gadara, Philadelphia, and Canatha. Whereby we see that it included several Cities of the Peræa.

Cœle-Syria is distinguished by no particular name in Scripture, but is comprized under that general one of Aram; and perhaps Syria of Soba, or Aram Soba [Genes. xiv, xv.] reached to Cœle-Syria; of which notwithstanding I do not know that there are any good proofs; for we cannot tell where the City of Soba was, whence Aram of Soba is supposed to take its name; unless it be the same with Hobah mentioned in Genesis, or Chobal, as the Septuagint reads it, whence Abyla is derived, which is seated at the entrance of Cœle-Syria.

Coenaculum

COENACULUM, in Greek, Hyperoon, signifies properly an upper Room, or an apartment wherein people generally eat. Our Saviour, the evening before his Passion, directed his Disciples to go and provide a supper for him in Jerusalem, and told them that they would find a large upper Room furnished. Cœnaculum grande stratum, a Dining-room, with Beds for the accommodation of the Guests at Table. In after Ages there was a great Room shewn at Jerusalem, which was converted into a Church by the Empress Helena, where it was supposed that our Saviour eat his last Supper, and instituted the Eucharist. But there is great reason to question, whether this Room were preserved, when Jerusalem was so totally ruined by the Romans.

Coenomuya

[Ps. lxxvii. 50. civ. 31] COENOMUYA, or Cynomya, or Cinomuia. This word is differently written in the Psalms. At present we read Cœnomyian. But the old Latin Copies read Cynomyian, Dog's fly, as the generality of the Greek Copies do at this day. The proper and right reading is that of the Vulgate, which has Cœnomyian, a mixture of all sorts of flies; this agrees with the Hebrew[1], and the old Greek Copies. Some old Latin Psalters, such as those of Rome, Milan, and S. Peter of Chartres read, Muscam Caninam, which literally expresses the Greek, Kynomyian. S. Jerom in Exodus viii. 21. translates it Omne genus muscarum. But the Septuagint at the same place read Dog's Fly, Cynomyian. Now this Fly is a very dangerous Insect, which fastens principally upon Dogs, and the sting of it is very malignant.

Cohort

COHORT, in Latin, Cohors, in Greek, Spira. A military term in use among the Romans. A Cohort was generally composed of six hundred foot Soldiers. A Legion consisted of ten Cohorts, every Cohort of three Maniples, and every Maniple of two hundred Men; and a Legion consequently of six thousand. Others allow but five hundred Men to a Cohort, which if we suppose, there would be then no more than five thousand in a Legion. It is very probable, that Cohorts among the Romans, as companies among us, often varied as to the number whereof they were composed.

Colossæ

COLOSSÆ, a Town in Phrygia the greater. Some believe that S. Paul never was in this place[1], tho' he preached in Phrygia; but the Colossians received the Faith in all probability from Epaphras their Bishop. S. Paul having been informed that there had been false Apostles at Colossæ, who had preached the necessity of Circumcision, and other legal observances, and out of a mistaken humility, had recommended the superstitious worship of Angels, telling the People there, that they were to address their Prayers not to God the Father or Jesus Christ, but to the Angels, who were Mediators between God and Man; the Apostle, I say, being informed of all this, either by Epaphras, who was then a Prisoner with him at Rome, or by a Letter from the Laodiceans, wrote the Epistle to them, which we now have, wherein he insists upon Jesus Christ, being the only Mediator of Christians, the Reconciler of Mankind with God, and the Head of the Church, from whom all his Members receive Action, Sense, Life and Spirit. He attacks the false Apostles, and with great solidity confutes their Doctrine concerning the obligation of observing Circumcision, and the legal Ceremonies; and afterwards delivered lessons to them of the most excellent and sublime Morality.

The Apostle was then a Prisoner at Rome, in the year of J. C. 62, there were with him besides Epaphras, Timotheus, Aristarchus, Marcus, Luke, Demas, and Jesus, firnamed Justus. The Letter was carried to the Colossians by Tychicus his faithful Minister, and Onesimus, whom Philemon had sent to attend him in his Confinement. Several Greek Copies, instead of Colossæ read Colassæ; and some Criticks there are, who maintain this last reading to be the best. But the Latin Copies do not vary, and constantly read Colossæ. There have been some Greek as well as Latin Writers[2], who have been of opinion, that this Epistle was written to the Faithful of Rhodes, a City famous for the Colossus of the Sun.

Colossus

COLOSSUS. The Colossus of Rhodes was a brazen Statue of such a prodigious height, that Ships with full Sails might pass between its Legs. It was one of the seven wonders of the World[1], was seventy Cubits, or an hundred and five Feet high. Chares, disciple to the famous Lysippus, cast it in a mould. There were few People who could encompass the Thumb of it: It was consecrated to Apollo or the Sun. King Demetrius, after he had besieged the City of Rhodes for one whole year, without being able to get Possession of it, concluded a Peace with the Inhabitants, and upon his return presented them with all the warlike Machines made use of in the Siege. These they sold some time after for three hundred talents, which with other sums added to them, they imployed in making this Colossus. Chares was twelve years at work upon it. It was begun in the year of the World 3700, and overthrown by an Earth-quake sixty years after it had been erected.

The Rhodians pretending that they design'd to set up the Colossus again, made gatherings over all the States of Greece, and begg'd of all the Kings[2] of Egypt, Macedonia, Syria, Pontus and Bithynia; they so far aggravated their loss, that the Collection which was raised for them, amounted to five times as much as their real damage. Instead of imploying these Sums in restoring their Colossus, they gave out, that the Oracle forbad it absolutely, and so kept the Money for themselves. The Colossus continued thus broken down as it was for 894 years, at the end whereof, in the year of Jesus Christ 672, Moravias, sixth Caliph of the Sarracens, having taken Rhodes, sold the Brass of the Colossus to a Jewish Merchant, who had as much of it as loaded nine hundred Camels: Which reckoning eight Quintals to a Load, amounted to 7200 Quintals, or 720000 Pounds. See Rhodes.

The Rhodians generally represented on one side of their Medals the head of Apollo, or the Sun, and on the other a Rose, with this Legend, POΔIΩN, belonging to the Rhodians. It has been affirmed, that the Jews gave some of these pieces to Judas, as the reward of his treachery. See Rhodium and Rhodes.

Common

COMMON. By Common is meant sometimes profane, unclean. To eat with common hands; that is to say, without washing ones Hands. Communibus [Mat. vii. 2, 5. Acts x. 4, 15.] manibus, id est, non lotis manducare. I have never eaten any thing common, says S. Peter, but he heard a voice from Heaven saying unto him, What God hath purified, that call not thou common: Quod Deus purificavit, tu commune ne dixeris. And S. Paul, Rom. xiv. 14. There is nothing in its own nature common or profane: Nihil commune per ipsum, nisi ei qui existimat quid commune esse. Moses, almost in the same sense calls a Vineyard common or prophane, which all the World was permitted to eat of. What man is he that hath planted a vineyard, and hath not yet made it common? If there be such an one, he may return to his [Deut. xx. 6.] House, because the first fruits of Trees and Vines were reckoned unclean, or rather were consecrated to the Lord, and the owner was not allowed to touch them, till after the fourth year. See hereafter [Lev. xix. 24, 25.] Profane.

Compunction

COMPUNCTION. This is a word particularly set apart in the Language of the Church, to signify sorrow for our Sins. Have Compunction[1] in your Bed for what you have said in your Heart. [Psal. iv. 4. Ps. cix. 17] The wicked hath persecuted the Poor, he hath mortified him, whose heart is full of Compunction, Compunctum corde mortificare.

But the Septuagint use frequently the word Catanuxis, which signifies Compunction, in a very different sense for Sleep, Heaviness, Stupefaction, Hardness, Insensibility. For example, Isaiah; The [Isai. xxix. 10. רוח תרדמה Vulg. Spiritum soporis. 70. πνεῦμα Κατανύξεως.] Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, of heaviness, of dulness. The Septuagint translate it the spirit of compunction. And S. Paul hath followed them, Rom. xi. 8. Dedit eis Dominus spiritum compunctionis. Thus in Psalm. lx. 5. where we read in the Hebrew, Thou hast made us to drink the wine of astonishment, Wine which intoxicates, and takes away the Senses, such as was given to persons condemned to death. The Septuagint read the Wine of Compunction. Lastly, in the passage above cited, of the beginning of this Article, In cubilibus vestris compungimini, Psal. iv. 4. The Hebrew imports, Speak in your hearts upon your beds, and continue in silence. The Septuagint, Be touched with compunction on your beds.

In all these instances we must recur to the original, and by the word Compunction in Isaiah xxix. and Psalm lx. must understand deep Sleep, such as disturbs and clouds our reason. In some other places; for example, Acts ii. 35. Compuncti sunt corde. And Psalm cix. 17. Compunctum corde mortificare, we are to understand by it Compunction of Heart. But in other passages, Psalm xxix. 13. Ut cantet tibi gloria mea, & non compungar; the Hebrew reads, Et non taceat, that my Glory may publish thy praises, and not be silent. And Psal. xxxiv. 16. Dissipati sunt nec compuncti, the Hebrew reads, They tore me to pieces with their malicious tongues, and were not silent.

CONCORDANCES of the Bible. By this name we call a sort of Dictionary, wherein the words of the Bible are ranged in alphabetical order, with the several Books, Chapters, and Verses quoted, in which they are contain'd; we have discoursed of them at sufficient length in the Preface to this Dictionary, and in the Bibliotheca Sacra, which is placed at the end of it.

Concubine

CONCUBINE. This term in Latin Authors signifies commonly a Woman, who tho' she be not married with a Man, yet lives with him as his Wife. But in the sacred Writers, the word Concubine is understood in another sense; it means a lawful [פלגש Pilgesch, Pellex, Concubina.] Wife, who has not been wedded with the common Ceremonies and Solemnities; a Wife of the second rank, inferior to the Matron and Mistress of the House. The Children of Concubines did not inherit their Father's Fortune; but the Father in his life-time might provide for them, and make presents to them. Thus Sarah was Abraham's Wife, of her he had Isaac, the Heir of all his Wealth: But he had besides two Concubines, namely Hagar, and Keturah; of these he had other Children, whom he distinguished from Isaac, and made presents to them. As Polygamy was tolerated among the Jews, it was a common thing to see one, two, or many lawful Wives in every Family; and besides these, several Concubines. David had seven Wives, and ten Concubines. Solomon had seven hundred Wives, who all lived in the quality of Queens, and three hundred Concubines. Rehoboam his Son had eighteen Wives, and sixty Concubines. [2 Sam. i. 2, 3. xx. 3. 1 Kings xi. 3.] Ever since the Abrogation of Polygamy by Jesus Christ, and the reduction of Marriage to its primitive Institution, the abuse of Concubines [2 Chr. xi. 21.] has been concondemned and forbidden among Christians; notwithstanding which clandestine Marriages were a long time tolerated, and the Women so married were frequently called Concubines.

Concupiscence

CONCUPISCENCE. This term is made use of by S. John, to signify an irregular love of Pleasure, Wealth, and Honours, comprehended by this Apostle in the following words, All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life. Concupiscence is not a Sin; but it is the effect and cause of Sin. And as in both Testaments bad desires, as well as bad actions, are equally forbidden; the first and principal care of every Man who would please God, is to restrain his Concupiscence. This word is generally taken for a disorderly appetite to any thing whatsoever. The Hebrews demanding of Moses change of Diet in mutinous terms, and with an irregular desire, God punished many of them with death, and the place hereupon was called the Graves of lust. God prohibits the desiring any thing, with a love of Concupiscence, which belongs to our Neighbour. [Exod. xx. 17. Deut. v. 21.] Concupiscence is most generally understood in a bad sense, particularly for the inclinations of the flesh; but sometimes it is taken in a good meaning; for example, for the love of Knowledge and Wisdom; Initium sapientiæ, verissima est disciplinæ concupiscentia [Wisd. vi. 18, 20.] ; and a little after, Concupiscentia sapientiæ deducit ad regnum perpetuum; and in Psalm lxxxiii. 3. Concupiscit & deficit anima mea in atria Domini. And Psalm cxviii. 20. Concupiscit anima mea desiderare justificationes tuas. The Lord says to Cain, who envied the favours which Abel had received from him, thy Concupiscence shall be subject to thee, and thou shalt rule over it. Sub te erit appetitus ejus, & tu dominaberis illius. Thus this passage is generally understood; but others explain it in another sense, referring ejus not to Sin, but to Abel; as if God had said to Cain, what art thou afraid of, and why doest thou suffer thyself to be so dejected? If thou doest well, doest thou not receive the reward of it? and if thou doest evil, Sin is at thy door. Abel shall be subject to thee, and thou shalt preserve thy right of Seniority over him. Thus S. Chrysostom[1] explains it after the Septuagint, and this passage has a manifest relation to that, whereby God gives Man the Superiority over Woman, Gen. iii. 16. Thou shalt be under the power of the man, and he shall rule over thee. The Hebrew, Ad virum tuum concupiscentia tua, & ille dominabitur tui.

To CONDEMN, declare guilty; is an expression used not only in judicial Acts but in every other thing likewise, which relates to them. The Priests condemn'd Lepers of impurity; that is to say, they declared them unclean, Daniel i. 10. Condemnabitis caput meum morte. Thou shalt be the cause of my being condemned to lose my Life. My mouth shall condemn me, God shall judge me by my own words. The righteous which are dead, shall condemn the [Wisd. iv. 16.] ungodly that are living. The conduct of the Righteous who are dead, is a condemnation of the disorders of the Wicked. It is much in the same sense that the criminal and idolatrous Jerusalem justifies Sodom and Gomorrha; she makes them appear righteous in comparison of her. Thou hast justified [Ezek. xvi. 51, 52.] thy sisters in all thy abominations.

Confession

CONFESSION. The publick or private Declaration which any one makes of his Sins to a Minister, who has the power of absolving, in order to receive Penance and Absolution, is called Confession. S. Matthew [Mat. iii. 6.] says, that the Jews came from all parts to confess their Sins to John the Baptist, and receive Baptism; S. James requires us to confess our Sins to one another, that so we may be saved; and S. John says, that if we confess our Sins, God is faithful and just to forgive them.

The Confession required by S. John Baptist, of those who desired to be partakers of his Baptism, was not only a general Declaration, whereby they acknowledged themselves to be sinners, or an indefinite Confession of faults committed by them in thought or deed, or by omissions; but it was a definite and particular Declaration of such Offences as they might have committed against the Law, like that which the Hebrews made when they put their hands upon the head of the Sin-offering. Moreover, the Baptism of John did not really remit the Sins which were thus confessed: he only promised the forgiveness of them, which was received by the Baptism of Jesus Christ. Ut ab eo baptizatis in spe remitterentur peccata, re-ipsa vero in Domini baptismo id fieret[1]. He was not satisfied even with this Confession, and the inward Sorrow which was to accompany it, he required [Mat. iii. 8. Acts xix. 18.] fruits meet for repentance.

We see in the Acts of the Apostles, that the Gentiles who were converted, came and confessed their Sins at the feet of the Apostles: Multi credentes veniebant confitentes & annuntiantes actus suos. The Jews at present confess much after the same manner as the Romanists on their Death-bed[2]. The most ignorant have a general form of Confession, which they repeat. Others express their Sins more particularly. They confess likewise their Sins in the beginning of the year, standing in a Tub full of water. There are two and twenty words in their form of Confession, as many as there are Letters in the Alphabet; and as often as they pronounce any word in the Confession, one who is present thrusts their Heads into the water, and the Penitent smites his Breast with his right Hand[3].

THE CONFESSION OF THE JEWS.

Upon the great day of Expiation, they confess themselves after the following manner[4]. Two Jews retire into a corner of the Synagogue, one bows very low before the other, with his Face turned towards the North: He who performs the Office of Confessor, gives the Penitent nine and thirty blows upon the back with a leathern strap, repeating these words, God being full of [Ps. lxxvii. 38.] Compassion, forgave their iniquity, and destroyed them not; yea many a time turned he his Anger away, and did not stir up all his Wrath: And as there are but thirteen words in this verse recited in the Hebrew, he repeats it three times, and at every word strikes one blow; which makes nine and thirty words, and as many Lashes. In the mean time the Penitent declares his Sins, and at the Confession of every one, beats himself upon his Breast. This done, he who has performed the Office of Confessor, prostrates himself on the ground, and receives nine and thirty Lashes from his Penitent.

Grotius[5] on S. Matthew explains himself in a remarkable manner, with relation to private Confession. As to the Question, says he, which is proposed among learned Men, namely, whether the Passages in Numbers and Leviticus, wherein mention is made of Confession, refer to a Man's confessing himself to God only, or whether every one ought to declare his Sins to the Priests: I hold their opinion to be very probable, who maintain, that a particular Confession was made by every one of his Sins to the Priests, in cases which did not expose the guilty to the penalty of Death; for in other cases it was sufficient for them to accuse themselves in general; and it is very credible, that the same thing was observed with still more Piety and Confidence, by those who came to John the Baptist, who was both Priest and Prophet; and besides, one whose fidelity was very well known .

Confessor

CONFESSOR, Confession. In the language of the Church, the name of Confessors is given to those who have confessed the name of Jesus Christ before Judges, or have undergone some punishment for defending the Faith. If they died under their Torments, they were called Martyrs. Jesus Christ says, he will confess those before his heavenly Father, who shall have confessed him generously before Men; [Mat. x. 32. 1 Tim. vi. 12. 1 Tim. vi. 13.] and S. Paul commends Timothy for having confessed a good Confession; that is to say, for having, at the hazard of his Life, given a glorious Testimony to the Truth. The same Apostle says, that Jesus Christ witnessed a good Confession before Pontius Pilate.

[Lev. xvi. 6.] We find two sorts of Confessions in the Old Testament; the Confession of Praises, and the Confession of Sins. Nothing is more common in Scripture, than these words, Confitemini Domino; confitebor Domino, &c. that is to say, Praise the Lord, I will praise the Lord. Confession of Sins too both in publick and private, was in use among the Israelites. They confessed their Sins to God and the Priests. In the Ceremony of the solemn Expiation, the High Priest confessed in general his own Sins, the Sins of other Ministers of the Temple, and those of [Ib. xvi. 21.] all the People; and upon all other occasions, when any Israelite came to offer a Sacrifice for Sin, he put his hands upon the head of the Victim, and confessed his faults. There are some Interpreters, who believe, that it [Levit. iv. 1, 2, 3, 4, &c.] was not sufficient for him to declare himself in general a Sinner; but that he was to confess in particular the Sin for which he offered this Sacrifice. We are assured, that the Jews still at this day make a private Confession of their Sins upon the day of solemn Expiation, by them termed Cippur.

Confirmation

[Acts viii.] CONFIRMATION. The Sacrament of Confirmation is that which makes us perfect Christians, and impresses an indelible Character upon us after Baptism, and imparts to us the spirit of Fortitude, whereby we are enabled to confess Christianity, even at the hazard of our Lives. It is frequently called by the Antients, laying on of Hands, because it is conferred by imposition of Hands. The administration of this Sacrament was in the beginning reserved to the Apostles, or the Bishops their Successors, who only are the ordinary Ministers of it. We see the practice of it in the Acts of the Apostles, where it is [14, 15, 16, &c.] said, that the Apostles being informed, that the People of Samaria had received the word of God, and had been baptized by Philip the Deacon, S. Peter and S. John went thither, and laid their hands upon all the Faithful there, who immediately received the Holy Ghost. S. Paul speaks likewise of the effects of this Sacrament, saying to the Ephesians, Grieve not the holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.

[Acts x. 44, 45, 46, &c. Acts viii. 9. 14, 16, 17, 18. 1 Cor. xii, xiii. Rom. xii. 6, 7. Ephes. iv. 7.] In the Infancy of Christianity, the laying on of Hands by the Apostles, or Confirmation, was attended generally with miraculous Gifts and Graces, and with external Gifts of the Holy Ghost, such as that of Tongues, Prophecy, Miracles, and healing of Diseases. This is what manifestly appeared at the Baptism of Cornelius, the Holy Ghost descending upon those who like him desired Baptism, and by such an extraordinary Dispensation of Providence preventing Imposition of Hands. The Jews who came with S. Peter to Cæsarea, were amazed at it; and beheld those Gentiles with admiration, who spoke divers Languages, and glorified God as they did, who had been baptized, and received Imposition of Hands. And when the Apostles came to Samaria, to confirm the Faithful who imbraced Christianity on S. Philip's preaching, they laid their Hands on them, and gave them the Holy Ghost. Hereupon Simon the Magician observing the wonderful effects wrought by their thus laying on their Hands, offered them a Sum of Money, to procure this surprising Power from them of conferring the Holy Ghost. Lastly, S. Paul in his Epistles speaks very often of these supernatural Gifts granted to the Faithful, by the laying on of Hands. And it appears by the Fathers[1], that this extraordinary Power continued in the Church so long as to the third and fourth Ages.

As to the manner of Confirming made use of by the Apostles, the Scripture speaks only of Prayer, and Imposition of Hands. The most antient of the Fathers, and the oldest Rituals, do likewise take notice only of the laying on of Hands. In the eastern Churches, the Bishops and Priests for a very long time, have confirmed by anointing with the holy Oyl; and in the Latin Church the Bishops, who only are the ordinary Ministers of this Sacrament, confer it by laying on of their Hands, and by anointing the Forehead with the holy Chrism, using at the same time this Prayer, I sign you with the Sign of the Cross, and confirm you with the Chrism of Salvation, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

Conscience

CONSCIENCE, is the Testimony or secret Judgment of the Soul, which gives its approbation to Actions that it thinks good, or reproaches itself with those which it believes to be evil. It is a Consequence of the light of Nature, which judges of the good or ill tendency of our Actions. Est [Prov. xii. 18.] qui promittit & quasi Gladio pungitur conscientiæ, says the Wiseman. There are People who engage themselves too easily, and have no sooner promised than they are touched with remorse for doing so: Such was Herod, who promised Salome the Daughter of Herodias all that she should ask, and had very soon the Mortification to hear, that she desired the Head [Mat. xiv. 6, &c.] of John the Baptist. A troubled Conscience, an evil Conscience, presumes always that some misfortune must follow. Semper præsumit sæva perturbata conscientia. [Sap. xvii. 10.] S. Paul says, that they who are without the written Law, have their Conscience, which gives them an inward Testimony of the Good and Evil performed [Rom. ii. 15.] by them. He requires Christians to be submissive to secular Powers, not only for fear, but also for conscience sake: Non solum propter iram sed etiam propter conscientiam. In another place, he permits the faithful to go and eat at the houses of the Gentiles, if they are invited thither, and to partake of every thing which is served up at their Tables, without making particular inquiries out of any scrupulosity of Conscience; asking no questions for Conscience sake. But if any one says to them, this has been sacrificed to Idols, do not eat of it, says he, for his sake who gave you this Information; and likewise lest you wound not your own, but another's Conscience: Conscientiam autem dico, non tuam sed alterius. If he who gives you this notice is a Christian, and notwithstanding the Information so given you forbear not to eat; he will condemn you in his heart, or will eat of it after your example against his own Conscience, and so the guilt of his Sin will be imputed to you. If he is an Heathen, who thus advertises you, and he sees you eat of it, he will conceive a contempt for you and your Religion.

Consecrate

CONSECRATE, Consecration. To consecrate is to offer or devote any thing to God's Worship and Service. In the old Law, God ordained that all the first born both of Man and Beast should be consecrated. [Exod. xiii. 2, 12, 15. xxxiv. 19. Numb. iii. 12. Exod. xix. 6. 1 Pet. ii. 9. Numb. i. 49. iii. 6. & seq. Deut. x. 8.] He likewise consecrated the whole Race of Abraham particularly to his Worship. Lastly, he devoted the Tribe of Levi, and the Family of Aaron in a more especial manner to his Service. Besides these Consecrations which God thus ordain'd by his own absolute and sovereign Authority, there were others which depended on the good will of Men, who consecrated themselves, or the things belonging to them, or the persons depending on them, to the service of God for ever, or for a time only.

Joshua devoted or consecrated the Gibeonites [Josh. ix. 27. Ezra viii. 20. & ii. 58. & 1 Kings ix. 20, 21. 1 Sam. i. 11.] beonites to the service of the Tabernacle. David and Solomon in like manner devoted the Nethenims, who were some remains of the Canaanites, to the service of the Temple; they thus devoted them and their Descendants for ever. Hannah, Samuel's Mother offered her Son to the Lord, to serve all his life-time in the Tabernacle. [Luke i. 15.] The Angel who promised Zachary a Son, commanded him from God, to consecrate him to the Lord, and to take care, that he observed those Laws for his whole life, [Numb. vi. 1, 2, 3, &c.] with the Nazarites, who are likewise consecrated to God, tho' but for a certain time, observed during this time of their Consecration.

The Hebrews sometimes devoted their Fields or Cattle to the Lord; after which they were no longer in their power. If they had a mind to enjoy them again, they [Levit. xxvii. 28, 29.] were obliged to redeem them. David, and the Kings his Successors, often vowed and consecrated to the Lord the Arms and [1 Chr. xviii. 11.] Spoils taken from their Enemies. As to the consecrating and devoting, as they did [2 Chr. xxiii. 9.] sometimes, their Enemies, their Cities, and their Country to intire ruin, the Reader upon this Point may consult the Article Anathema.

In the New Testament we see in proportion the same Consecrations, as in the Old. All the Faithful are consecrated to the Lord; they are his holy Race, his chosen [1 Pet. ii. 9.] People. Bishops and other sacred Ministers are devoted to him in a more peculiar manner, than common Christians, and they who consecrate themselves to God by solemn Vows, and the exercise of a Religious Life, come very near to the perpetual Nazarites of the Mosaic Law. Churches, Church-yards, Religious Houses, Monasteries, Sacred Vessels, and every thing belonging to the Worship of God, are likewise things consecrated , which deserve more or less Respect, as they relate more or less to the unbloody Sacrifice of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, who is offered for us upon our Altars, is the Holy of Holies, and sanctifies every thing that comes near him.

Consistory

CONSISTORY, Consistorium Palatii, mentioned in Esther, is called likewise [Est. v. 1.] Basilica Regis; in Hebrew, the Kingdom's House. It is to be observed, that in the King of Persia's apartment there were three principal pieces of Work. The first was the outward Court, Atrium exterius, where the Courtiers met, who came to Court, Esth. vi. 4. The second was the Hall, or inner Court, Atrium interius, where every one was forbid to come on pain of Death, unless he were called, Esth. iv. 11. The third was the Cabinet, or a sort of corner or alcove, wherein was the King's Throne, called Consistorium Palatii, or Basilica Regis, Esth. v. 1, 2.

Consummation

CONSUMMATION, Consummatio. This word does not signify only the Finishing, the End, the Perfection of any thing, but it likewise denotes frequently the utmost Misery. Numquid iratus es nobis usque ad consummationem? Art thou angry with us so far as to destroy us without hopes of recovery? And Psalm lviii. 14. Annuntiabuntur in consummatione, in ira consummationis, & non erunt: It will be every where published, that thou exercisest thy Vengeance in the day of Wrath, and they shall not subsist any longer. And Isaiah x. 22. Consummatio abbreviata inundabit justitiam; consummationem & abbreviationem faciet Dominus: The Justice of God shall be poured out upon Sinners, like a Deluge of Water; their ruin is resolved on, he will in a little time exterminate and destroy them: Consummatio abbreviata, or rather according to the Hebrew Consummatio or desolatio decisa, resolved, fixed, determined Destruction. The Prophet Nahum speaking of the ruin of Nineveh, In diluvio prætereunte consummationem faciet---- consummationem faciet, & non consurget duplex tribulatio: God will overflow this City with the Flood of his Wrath, he will destroy it, and will do it at once.

Jeremiah iv. 27. Deserta erit omnis terra, sed tamen consummationem non faciet: The Lord will reduce the Land to a meer solitude, but will not intirely destroy it. And Ezekiel xi. 13. Heu, heu, heu, Domine Deus, consummationem tu facis reliquiarum Israel: Alas! Lord, thou art going to annihilate the remains of Israel. We may observe expressions much alike in Isaiah xxxviii. 22. Jeremiah v. 10,18. xxx. 11. xlvi. 28. Ezekiel xx. 17. Daniel ix. 27, &c. In Psalm cxviii. 96. there is a more difficult passage, which however comes to the same. Omnis consummationis vidi finem, latum mandatum tuum nimis: I have seen, I have gone through the greatest dangers and misfor tunes, I have been exposed to utter Destruction; but thy Commandments have set me free, have protected me. The Hebrew, Latitudo mandatorum tuorum, is opposite to finis consummationis, or extremæ consummationis.

Contradiction

CONTRADICTION. Waters of Strife, or Contradiction. This is the name of the place where Moses encamped when he smote the Rock with his Rod, and water thereupon issued out of it, where also he expressed some diffidence of God's Promises: For which reason God declared to him, that he should never enter into the Land of Promise. This happened in the Desert of Paran, when the Israelites were encamped at Kadesh; and these Waters were called the Waters of Strife; because they rebell'd against Moses, and murmured against the Lord.

Contrition

CONTRITION, or Sorrow for our Sins, attended with a sincere resolution of reforming them[1]. The Scripture never uses this term in this sense; but there are many expressions to be observed in it, which are equivalent, and prove that without Contrition there is no Repentance, and without Repentance no Remission of Sins: A broken and contrite heart, O God, thou shalt not despise. Psal. li. 17. I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul. Isai. xxxviii. 15. But if from thence thou shalt seek the Lord thy God, thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with all thy heart, with all thy soul, or, with all the sorrow of thy soul. See likewise Deut. iv. 29. xxx. 1, 2. S. Paul speaking to Agrippa, said, I have shewed unto the Jews and Gentiles that they should repent, and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance.

In those places generally where we meet with the words conterere and contritio, they signify to bruise, Bruising, Humiliation, Grief, Ruin, Destruction. For example, Contrition and Unhappiness are in the way of the Wicked; that is to say, God shall destroy them, and overwhelm them with Misfortunes. Pride goeth before Contrition; that is to say, Pride and Elevation are commonly followed with a Fall, with Destruction, &c.

CONVERTERE. Every one knows, that the literal signification of this word denotes changing, Thou hast turned my tears into joy. Turn ye not unto Idols: Ad idola [Lev. xix. 4.] nolite converti. But Converti is often taken in Scripture for returning from the Babylonish Captivity. When the [Ps. cxxvi. 1. Jer. xxiii. 3. Jer. xxxii. 44.] Lord hath turned the Captivity of Sion; when he hath delivered his People from Captivity. I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds: Et convertam eos ad rura sua. Corban CORBAN, Mark vii. 11. or Corbona, Mat. xxvii. 6. This word comes from the [קרבKarob. קרבן Corban.] Hebrew, Karab, or Hekerib to offer, present. It stands for an Offering, a Gift, a Present made to God, or his Temple. The Jews sometimes swore by Corban, or the [Mat. xxiii. 18.] Gifts offered unto God. Whosoever sweareth by the Gift that is upon the Altar, is bound. Theophrastus says, that the Tyrians forbad the use of such Oaths as were peculiar to Foreigners, and particularly of Corban; which, as[1] Josephus informs us, was in use only among the Jews.

Jesus Christ reproaches the Jews in the Gospel with the cruelty which they shewed towards their Parents, and says that to excuse themselves from giving any part of their fortune to them, they would tell them, May what you ask of me be corban,[2] and consecrated to God, or, May all that I am able to give you, be corban, and devoted to God in such a manner, that neither you nor I may be able to employ any thing of it to our use; or, lastly, I swear by corban, or the Gift which is made to God, that I will not assist you in any thing whatsoever. S. Matthew expresses much after this manner the reply which Children made to their Parents; It is a Gift by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me[3]. The Offering which I make to God will be of service to you, I have devoted that to God, which you ask of me; it is no longer either yours or mine, but you will share in the merit of my Offering.

Josephus[4] remarks, that among the Hebrews, Men and Women sometimes made themselves Corban; that is to say, consecrated themselves to God, or certain Ministries in his service. When Persons of this sort were desirous to releasc themselves from the obligation which they had thus imposed upon themselves, or the Ministry to which they had devoted themselves, they gave a sum of Money to the Priest, a Man fifty, a Woman thirty Shekels. If they were not in a condition to pay this sum, they agreed with the Priest, and gave him so much as he was satisfied with.

Philo[5] speaking of those who devote themselves to God, relates what Moses says in Leviticus, ch. xxvii. 2, 3, 4. and following verses, He who has devoted his soul, his Life, his Person to God, shall pay the price estimated by the Priest. A man from twenty to fifty, shall give fifty shekels, according to the measure of the Sanctuary; and a woman thirty. From five to twenty a boy shall pay twenty shekels, and a girl ten. From a month old to five years, five shekels shall be given for a male child, and three for a female. From sixty and above, a man shall give fifteen, and a woman ten shekels. If he who has made the vow is too poor, he shall present himself before the Priest, and shall pay according to the estimation which shall be made of him. What is the reason, says Philo, that in all this there is no consideration of the age, wealth, or other qualities of those who make the Vow? To this he answers, The reason is first, because the Vow is of equal dignity, let the condition of those who make it be what it will. 2°. It is not decent to value those who make Vows, as we do Slaves, who are rated according to their beauty, their graceful stature, or good health. The third and principal reason is this, that equality of Conditions, which is despised by Men, is considered and esteemed by God.

[Lev. xxvii. 9, 10, &c.] Moses speaks farther of different sorts of Corban, or Dedications made by the Hebrews, of some part of their Estates, which was afterwards redeemed, or if it consisted in Cattle was sanctified, in the manner appointed by the Legislator.

[Acts xxiii. 12. Mat. vii. 11.] When a Man had devoted all his fortune, he was forbidden to make use of it; if all that he was to give his Wife, or his Father and Mother, was declared Corban, he was no longer permitted to allow them necessary subsistence. They who in the Acts of the Apostles made a Vow neither to eat nor drink, till they had killed S. Paul, in some sort made every thing Corban that belonged to them; or every thing that might supply them with Meat and Drink. The Sons mentioned in the Gospel, who declared every thing Corban that they could contribute to the support of their Father and Mother, were induced to this cruelty by some transport of Passion only; for had they done so through avarice, what could they have gained by devoting that to God which they refused their Parents? But without devoting it to God, they were satisfied with declaring it to be Corban with respect to those to whom a part of it was due; for example, they said, my whole fortune as to you is Corban, I can give you no share of it: I have made a Vow to communicate nothing of it to you[6].

To facilitate the practice of these Vows, which were so contrary to Charity and Religion, or rather to confirm and increase the spirit of Superstition in the People, the Jewish Doctors did not require them to be pronounced in the most formal manner; it was of little consequence whether the word Corban were so much as mentioned, tho' this was most in use, provided something was said which might come near it. These are the Vows, thus imperfect in the terms of them, which the Talmudists call Handles[7] °, because, as it is sufficient to take a Vessel by the handle, in order to lift it up all intire; so to compleat a Vow, it is enough to pronounce any word of it; and if any said, May this be as the Temple to me, or as the Altar, or as the Fire, or lastly, as the Sacrifice this was not to be dispensed with. They permitted even Debtors to defraud their Creditors, by consecrating their debt to God[8], as if the thing were theirs, and not their Creditors.

Corbona signifies also the Treasury of the the Temple, where the Offerings which were made in Money were deposited. The Jews taking up the Money which Judas cast into the Temple, after he had betrayed Jesus Christ, made a scruple of laying it up in the Treasury of the Temple, [Mat. xxvii. 6.] because it was the price of Blood; and an Offering of such a nature was esteemed to be impure. They resolved therefore to purchase a field with it, to be a burying place for Strangers.

Cord

CORD, Funiculus is often used for Inheritance, I will give thee the land [Psal. cv. 11. Ezek. xlvii. 13.] of Canaan the Cord of thine inheritance. Joseph hath a double Cord, a double Portion: Which expression had its Original from their custom of measuring land with a Cord; so Joshua distributed to every Tribe a certain number of Cords or Acres, [Ps. xv. 6.] &c. Funes ceciderunt mihi in præclaris, my Lot is fallen in an excellent Country.

The cords of hell compassed me about; or [2 Sam. xxii. 6.] as the Hebrew reads it, the cables of Hell, of the Grave, closed me in. He alludes to the Fillets which were bound about dead Bodies: He farther calls them in the same place, the bands of death. The Septuagint, instead of cables of Hell, have translated it in Psalm xviii. 6. the pains of death. S. Peter says, [2 Pet. ii. 4.] that God dragg'd the rebellious Angels into Hell with the Cables of Hell, thereby meaning Cords of such a solidity and strength, as nothing is capable of resisting.

[cxix. 61.] The Cords of Sinners, funes peccatorum circumplexi sunt me, are the snares with which they catch weak and innocent People. The Cords of Sins mentioned by the wise Man, Prov. v. 22. are the consequences of crimes and bad habits: Sin never goes unpunished, either in this World or the other; and the bad habits which are contracted, are as it were indissoluble bands, from which it is almost impossible to secure ourselves.

[Baruch vi. 43.] Baruch speaks of a very extraordinary custom among the Babylonians. The women with cords about them sitting in the ways, burn bran for perfume: but if any of them drawn by some that passeth by lie with him; she reproacheth her fellow that she was not thought as worthy as herself, nor her cord broken. He alludes to the ceremony mentioned by Herodotus[1]; the Babylonian Women, says he, have a custom of prostituting themselves once in their lives, in honour of Melitta: they stand near the Temple of the Goddess with Cords about their heads, as marks of their devoting themselves: They are separated from one another by lines; into these separations Strangers enter, carry off those whom they like best, and break the Cords which hang about their heads.

To stretch a cord or line about a city, signifies to ruin, to destroy it intirely, to level it with the ground. Jeremiah, Lament. ii. 8. The Lord hath purposed to destroy the wall of the daughters of Zion; he hath stretched out a line, he hath not withdrawn his hand from destroying.

The Cords extended in setting up Tents, do likewise furnish several Metaphors; for example, the Cords of Jerusalem shall not be broken, nor the [If. xxxiii. 20, 23.] nails which fasten them be pull'd out. And in another place, Thy cords are loose, they could not well strengthen their mast. And Jeremiah ch. x. v. 20. My tabernacle is spoiled, and all my cords are broken.

Corner

CORNER, Angulus, is taken for the extremity of any Land, Country, Habit, of the Beard and Hair, of a People, Building, Table, Altar, &c. Ye shall not round the corners of their heads, neither shalt thou mark the corners of thy beard, says Moses. [Lev. xix. 27.] Thou shalt not cut it off intirely towards the ears, at the extremity of the Chin. All Israel, all the extremities of the people, omnes anguli populorum; and all the Tribes assembled together at Mizpeh. In the opinion of some, by the extremity of [Judic. xx. 2.] the people, is meant all the People without exception, from one end of the land to the other. Others think this expression denotes the principal and first[1]. See likewise 1 Sam. xiv. 38. Draw near all ye chief (or corners) of the people. And Isai. xix. 13. They have reduced Egypt, even they who are the stay (corner) of all the tribes thereof. And Zephaniah iii. 6. I have cut off the nations, their corners are desolate. In all these passages the Corner of the People seems to denote the whole Body of the People from one Corner to another.

The Corner sometimes signifies the most devoted place, the part of the Edifice most in sight. Zachary speaking of the Tribe of Judah after their return [Zech. x. 4.] from the Captivity, says, Out of him came forth the corner, out of him the nail. This Tribe shall afford Corners, Heads; it shall produce the Corner Stone, the Messiah reproved [If. xxviii. 16. Psal. cxvi. 22. Mat. xxi. 42, &c.] and rejected by the Jews, but exalted to great Glory by his heavenly Father. Corner is taken likewise for the most obscure place of a House, Prov. xxi. 9. xxv. 24. It is better to dwell in a corner of the house top, than with an angry woman in a wide house; and Acts xxvi. 26. S. Paul speaking before Agrippa of matters relating to our Saviour and his resurrection, calls him to witness, and tells him, that these things are known sufficiently, and that they were not transacted in a Corner.

Corinth

CORINTH, a celebrated City, the Capital of Achaia seated on the Isthmus which separates the Peloponnesus from Attica. S Paul came to preach at Corinth [Acts xviii. 1, 2, & seq.] in the year of J. C. 52. This City was one of the best peopled, and most wealthy of all Greece. Its situation between two Seas drew thither the Trade of both the East and West from all parts. Its Riches produced Pride, Ostentation, Effeminacy, and all manner of Vices, which are the consequences of too great Plenty. Lasciviousness particularly was not only tolerated there, but in some sort consecrated, by the worship of Venus, and the publick prostitution of those who were devoted to her. The Corinthians as well as other Greeks, pretended to Philosophy, Politeness and Learning. Such was the condition of Corinth, when S. Paul arrived there: These were the Monsters which he was to encounter.

He lodged there with one Aquila and his Wife Priscilla, who, as well as he, made Tents; thus he got a Livelihood by the labour of his own hands, to prevent his being burdensome to any one. He preached every Saturday in the Jewish Synagogues, and converted some who heard him. From Corinth he wrote his two Epistles to the Thessalonians in the year of J. C. 52. Some time after, observing, that the Jews of Corinth, instead of being benefited by his Instructions, opposed him with very blasphemous language; he shook his Raiment, and said, Your Blood be upon your own heads, I am clean; from henceforth I will go unto the [Acts xviii. 6, 7, 8.] Gentiles. He went therefore and lodged with Justus sirnamed Titus, who was a Gentile indeed, but one who feared God: And many of the Gentiles afterwards embraced the Faith. S. Paul suffered a great deal at Corinth, but Jesus Christ appeared one night to him, and said, Be not afraid, for I have much People in this City. Encouraged by these words, he continued eighteen Months at Corinth, or in the [Acts xviii. 11.] neighbouring places.

He departed from thence in the fifty fourth year of J. C. and went to Jerusalem. About two years after, that is to say, in the year of J. C. 56. He wrote his first Epistle to the Corinthians from Ephesus, where he was at that time. Herein the Apostle reproves some particular Persons, who disturbed the Peace of this Church, and, upon pretence that there were different Sects and Parties in the Church, as well as among the Philosophers, called themselves the followers of Paul, of Peter or Cephas, and of Apollos, according to their different affections. He complains likewise that there were some disorders in their Assemblies, that there were Law-suits among them, and that a Christian had committed Incest with his Mother-in-law his Father's Wife. This Letter was sent by Stephanus, Fortunatus and Achaicus. It had all the Success S. Paul could hope for, since it produced a saving sorrow, great vigilance against the vices wherewith he had reproached them, and a very beneficial dread of God's anger. They repaired the scandal which had been given, and expressed abundance of zeal against the Crime of the incestuous person.

[2 Cor. vii. 9, 10, 11.] S. Paul having understood the good effects which his first Letter had produced among the Corinthians, wrote a second to them, in the year of J. C. 57. He wrote from Macedonia, and probably from the City of Philippi. He expressed his satisfaction at the Conduct they had observed with regard to the incestuous person; justified himself in those particulars, which the false Apostles had objected to him, and exalted the Gospel Ministry above that of Moses. He glories in the Labours and Persecutions which he had suffered; and lastly, exhorts the Corinthians to prepare their Alms which they designed to send to the Faithful in Judæa. This second Epistle was carried by Titus, and another Brother, whom the Churches had associated with him, in order to col lect the Charity of the Faithful. Some think this Brother to have been S. Luke, others Barnabas. There is a great deal of probability, that S. Paul came himself to Corinth, towards the end of this fifty seventh year[1].

Cornelius

CORNELIUS, Centurion of a Cohort belonging to the Legion sirnamed Italian. [Acts x. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, &c.] He was a Gentile, but one that feared God, was constant at his Devotions, and did many charitable Acts. His whole Family served God as he did. He had learned these pious Practices in all probability from the Jews, who were very numerous at Cæsarea, where he was in Garrison. While he was one day fasting and praying, about three a clock in the afternoon, he saw an Angel in a vision very distinctly, who enter'd into his Chamber in the form of a Man, cloathed in a bright glittering Robe,and called him by his name, saying, thy Prayers and thine Alms are come up for a memorial before God: Send therefore presently to Joppa, and call for Simon Peter, he shall tell thee what thou must do, that thou and thy whole Family may be saved. After this the Angel informed him where Peter lived, and so withdrew.

When the Angel was departed, Cornelius called two of his Servants, and a Soldier, who feared God: To these he related what had happened, and sent them to Joppa with a request to Peter, that he would come to him. They immediately set out upon their Journey, and the next day arrived there, about noon, or something later. Before their arrival, Peter went upon the Terrass of the House where he lodged, and while he was there praying, he fell into an extasy, and saw something like a large cloth held by the four corners, which descended to him from Heaven. In this cloth were Beasts, Birds, and creeping things of all kinds; and he heard a voice, saying, Rise, Peter, kill, and eat. The meaning of which words was, that there was nothing impure which God declared to be pure. He excused himself from touching any thing, because he had never tasted any thing unclean. But the voice answered him, Call not that unclean which God has purified. The same thing was repeated three times, and then the Cloth was drawn up into Heaven.

At the same time the three Men arrived at Joppa, whom Cornelius had sent thither; and the Holy Spirit inwardly suggested to him, that they came by his direction, and that he should make no difficulty of going with them. Peter therefore received them, detained them that day, and the next departed with them. The next day about three in the afternoon they reached Cæsarea. Cornelius waited for S. Peter with all his most intimate Friends and Relations, whom he had got together for this purpose. As soon as he understood that he was near, he went out to meet him, and threw himself at his Feet. But S. Peter raised him, saying to him, I my self also am a Man. They proceeded therefore to the house, and entered it conversing together. Cornelius gave him a particular Relation of what had happened to him, and told him, that he, and all who were there present, expected him to declare what God should reveal to them by his mouth.

Then Peter in few words told him, that Jesus Christ had been sent by God for the Salvation of all Men, to be Judge both of the quick and dead, and to grant remission of Sins to such as should believe in him: That the Jews had unjustly crucified him, but that God had raised him from the dead, and his Disciples had eat and drunk with him after his Resurrection.

[Acts xi. 1, 2, & seq.] While S. Peter was discoursing in this manner, the Holy Ghost, which had purified their Hearts by Faith, descended on all those who heard him; and they began to speak divers Languages, and glorify God; which extremely surprized the believing Jews, who came from Joppa with S. Peter. Then said he, Can any one refuse these People Baptism, who have already received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ. Cornelius desired S. Peter to stay some days with him, which he did without any difficulty. The news being brought to Jerusalem, that one uncircumcised had been baptized, the Faithful there were very much offended; for hitherto the door of Faith had not yet been opened to the Gentiles. But S. Peter returning to Jerusalem, and relating what had passed to them, they were appeased, and glorified God, who had thus imparted the Gift of Repentance to the Gentiles, in order to prepare them for that inestimable one of eternal Life.

Usuardus and others of the Latins, make Cornelius Bishop of Cæsarea in Palestine. The Apostolical Constitutions take notice likewise of one Cornelius, as Bishop of this City next after Zachæus[1]: But they do not tell us that he was the Centurion, of whom we are now speaking. Eusebius, who was Bishop of this Church, does not reckon him among his Predecessors. We have the Acts of Cornelius, but they are not an original or authentick piece. Some modern Greeks make make him Bishop of Illium, others of Scepsis, which is not far from it. The Greeks in their Menologies, treat him as a Martyr. They keep his Festival on the thirteenth of September, and the Latins on the second of February. S. Jerom says, that the House which Cornelius lived in at Cæsarea, was afterwards changed into a Church, which S. Paula visited with great Devotion in the year of J. C. 385.

COSTOBARUS, an Idumæan descended from one of the most illustrious Families of the Country, whose Ancestors had been Priests of the God Chosen, who was worshipped by the Idumæans, before they were subdued by John Hircanus, and by him compell'd to receive Circumcision[1]. Herod the Great, to whom Costobarus had been very serviceable, gave him his Sister Salome in Marriage. But Costobarus, pushed on by an unmeasurable ambition, intended to persuade the Idumæans to shake off the Jewish Yoke, and wrote to Queen Cleopatra, desiring her to ask this Kingdom of Mark Antony, imagining that this Princess would set the Crown upon his Head. Herod, upon a discovery of this Conspiracy, determined to put Costabarus to death: But Salome his Sister, and Costobarus's Wife, obtained his Pardon, and preserved his Life.

Sometime after, Costobarus having quarrelled with Salome, she separated from him, and accused him afterwards to Herod, of being concerned in the Conspiracy, which Antipater, Lysimachus, and Dositheus were engaged in, and of saving and receiving into one of his Castles the Children of Babas, whom Herod had commanded to be executed, when he took Jerusalem. These Accusations upon enquiry proving true, Herod put Costobarus to death[2], in the year of the World 3978. before the vulgar Æra 26.

Cotton

COTTON, in Latin Gossypium, a kind of white soft Wool, which is found in a sort of brown Nut, growing upon a Shrub, the Leaves whereof are like those of a Sycomore Tree, and almost of the same Figure. This Plant puts forth abundance of beautiful yellow Flowers, finer than those of that kind of Mint which smells like Musk; the ground of this Flower is of a Purple colour, and all striped within. There is an oval Bud that appears in the middle, and grows in time as big as a Pigeon's Egg. When it is ripe, it turns black, and divides itself at top into three parts; the Cotton of it looks as white as Snow, and with the heat swells to the largeness of a Pullet's Egg. There are three black Berries in the bud as big as Lupines that stick close together.

[שש Schesch, Byssus. Exod. xxv. 4.] It is our opinion, that the Scripture speaks of Cotton under the Hebrew name Schesch, which in Latin is translated Byssus. The word Xylinum, which signifies Cotton, may be derived from Schesch or Xes and Linum, and that of Gossypium, which signifies the same thing, may be formed from the Hebrew Ægos, a Nut, and Pioth, Mouths, because the Nut, which produces Cotton, opens itself, and shews the Wool which it is filled with. See our comment upon Exodus xxv. 4. p. 333.

Covenant

COVENANT. The word Testamentum is often used in holy Scripture, and Diatheke in the Greek, to express the meaning of the [בריתBerith. Fœdus. Græc. διαθήκη Testamentum.] Hebrew word Berith, which signifies Covenant; from whence come the words Old and New Testament, to denote the Old and New Covenant. The first Covenant with the Hebrews, is that sworn between God and Abraham, when the Lord chose Abraham and his Posterity for his People, and gave them Circumcision for a mark of his Covenant with them; which was solemnly renewed at Sinai, where principally the Old Covenant begins, as comprehending all those who observe the Law of Moses. The New Covenant, whereof Jesus Christ was the Mediator and Author, and which was cemented by his Blood, comprehends all who believe in him, and are in his Church. This succeeded the Old Covenant, and will subsist to the end of Ages.

The first Covenant between God and Man, was that which he made with Adam at his Creation, when he required him to [Gen. ii. 16.] forbear the use of the forbidden Fruit. The Lord took the man, and put him into the garden, and commanded him saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die, or you shall become mortal. This, says S. Austin, is the first Covenant which God made with Man.[1] Testamentum autem primum quod factum est ad hominem primum, profecto illud est: Qua die ederitis, [Eccl. xiv. 17. according to the Greek. 1 Cor. xv. 22.] morte moriemini: Hence it is written, Testamentum a sæculo morte moriens.

The second Covenant, is that which God made with Man after his Fall, by promising him not only forgiveness, provided he repented; but also the coming of the Messiah, who should redeem him and all his Race from the death of Sin, and from the second death, which is that of Eternity. St. Paul in many places speaks to us of this Covenant, whereby the second Adam has redeemed and delivered those from Death, who had been condemned to die, by the procurement of the first Adam. As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive. And in another place, As by [Rom. v. 12.-- 19.] one man sin entred into the world, and death by sin, and so [Gen. iii. 15. Heb. ii. 14.] death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned---- as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one many shall be made righteous. And God said to the Serpent, I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel. The Woman's Posterity which should bruise the Serpent's Head, is the Messiah, who by his death hath been the destruction of the Devil, who had the power of Death.

[Gen. vi. 18. With thee will I establish my Covenant.] A third Covenant, is that which God made with Noah, when he directed him to build an Ark, or large Vessel, wherein he might preserve all the Animals of the Earth, and convey a certain number of Men into it, that by their means the new World after the Deluge might be repeopled.

[Gen. ix. 8, 9, 10, 11.] This Covenant was renewed an hundred and one and twenty years afterwards, when the Waters of the Deluge having fallen, and Noah with his Wife and Children left the Ark, God said to him, Behold I establish my Covenant with you, and with your seed after you; and with every living creature that is with you, from all that go out of the Ark, to every beast of the earth: so that all flesh shall not be cut off any more by the waters of a flood: and I will set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be a token of a covenant between me and the earth.

[Gen. xii. 1, 2, 3, &c. xv. 4, 5. --18.] All these Covenants were generally between Adam and Noah, and all their Posterity. But that which God made afterwards with Abraham, was more limited, it concerned this Patriarch only, and his Family, which should be derived from him by Isaac. The other Descendants of Abraham by Ishmael, and the Sons of Keturah, were to have no share in it.

The Mark and Seal of this Covenant was the Circumcision, which all the Males of Abraham's Family were to receive, [Gen. xvii. 10, 11, 12.] upon the eighth day after their Birth. The Effects and Consequence of this Covenant are discernible throughout all the History of the Old Testament; the coming of the Messiah is the Consummation and End of it. The Covenant of God with Adam forms what we call the State of Nature; that with Abraham explained farther in the Law of Moses, constitutes the Law in all its rigour; the Covenant of God with all Mankind, through the Mediation of Jesus Christ, makes the Law of Grace. In common discourse, we seldom speak but of the Old and New Testament, of the Covenant between God and the Posterity of Abraham, and of that which he hath made with all Men by Jesus Christ, because these two Covenants contain in the way of Eminence all the rest, which are Consequences, Emanations, and Explanations of them: For example, when God renewed his Promises to Isaac and [Exod. ii. 24. vi. 4,7. ib. xix. 5, 6, &c. xx. 1, 2,5,&c.] Jacob, and made a Covenant at Sinai with the Israelites, and gave them his Law: When Moses a little before his death, received the Covenant which God had made [Deut. xxix.] with his People, and recalled to their remembrance all the Miracles which he had wrought in favour of them: When Joshua [Josh. xxiii, xxiv. 25.] perceiving himself to be near his end, swore with the Elders of the People, that they would observe an inviolable Fidelity to the God of their Forefathers; all this was no more than a consequence of the first Covenant made with Abraham. Josiah [2 Kings xxiii, 1, 2, 3.] , Esdras, and Nehemiah renewed in like manner at different times their Engagements and Covenant with the Lord; [2 Chr. xxxiv. 26. Esdr. x. 3. Neh. ix. 38.] but this renewal of them was only an Act of Zeal, and a promise of observing the Law already given to their Fathers with more Fidelity.

The greatest, most solemn, most excellent, and most perfect of all the Covenants which God ever made with Men, is that which he entred into with us through the Mediation of Jesus Christ: That eternal Covenant which must subsist to the end of Ages, whereof the Son of God is the Guarantee, which is cemented and confirmed with his Blood, the End and Object whereof is Eternal Life, the Priesthood, Sacrifice and Laws whereof are infinitely more exalted than those of the Old Testament. See S. Paul in the Epistles to the Galatians and Hebrews.

Covering of Legs and Feet

COVERING of Legs and Feet, used by the Hebrews. The Hebrews, commonly speaking, had their Legs and Feet covered, particularly in the Field and in Cities; but in their Houses, and in private very frequently, they wore no Covering to these parts. Sometimes they laid it aside [Exod. iii. 5. Josh. v. 15.] out of respect, as Moses before the burning Bush, Joshua before the Angel, who appeared to him in the Plain of Jericho, the [Ex. xxx. 19.] Priests in the Temple during the time of their Service; sometimes out of a Principle of Sorrow and Repentance, as David did when he departed from Jerusalem, during Absalom's Rebellion, and the Jews upon [2 Sam. xv. 30.] the great day of Expiation, and in the time of mourning. God forbids Ezekiel to undress his Legs, and mourn for his Wife who was just dead. Isaiah received Orders [Ezek. xxiv. 17.] to go barefoot, and pull off his Clothes, to denote in a more express manner the future Captivity [Isai. xx. 2. Mat. iii. 11. John i.27. Mark vi. 9.] of Egypt.

Some of the Antients believed[1], that our Saviour had no Shoes, and generally walked barefoot; but others maintain the contrary. S. John Baptist says, that he was not worthy to bear or to untye our Saviour's Shoes; and it is not credible, that in a matter so indifferent, he would depart from the Custom of his Nation, or permit his Apostles to wear Shoes, if he himself had worn none.

[Judith x. 3. xvi. 11.] Women of Quality covered their Feet and Legs with something very rich, as we may see by the Spouse in the Canticles, Judith and Ezekiel, who places precious materials for this use among the Presents which he made his Wife, meaning by her his People. The Scripture says, that Judith, with the Finery of this part of her Dress, raised the Eyes of Holofernes. The Shoes which the Lord gave his Spouse, [Ezek. xvi. 10. Amos ii.6. viii. 6.] were of a Purple colour.

The matter of this Covering for their Feet and Legs, was of Leather, Linen, Rush, or Wood; for we have nothing certain in this particular; what they generally used was of a very low price; and it was said in a proverbial way among them, as vile, as contemptible as his Shoes. They sold the poor for a pair of shoes, says Amos. The Scripture testifies the disinterestedness of Samuel, that he received not so much as a Shoe from any one. Soldiers sometimes [Ecclus. xlvi. 20. Deut. xxxiii. 25.] wore Brass and Iron upon their Feet and Legs: Ferrum & æs calceamentum ejus. See the Article Sandals.

Council

[Acts xv. 7,8,& seq.] COUNCIL, in Latin, Concilium. This word is sometimes taken in general for all sorts of Assemblies; sometimes for the meeting of the Sanhedrim, at others for a convention of Pastors met together to terminate Ecclesiastical Affairs, whether they relate to Faith, Discipline or Manners. Thus the Assembly of the Apostles and Priests at Jerusalem, called together to determine, whether the yoke of the Law should be imposed upon the Gentile Converts, is reputed the first Council of the Christian Church. The same Apostles, soon after the Ascension of our Saviour, were cited, and appeared before the Sanhedrim, which ordered them to be scourged, and forbad them to preach the Doctrine of Jesus Christ. But they did not submit to this Sentence, and departed out of the Assembly, thinking themselves happy to have suffered something for the name of their Divine Master. See hereafter [Acts v. 41.] Sanhedrim.

Some Authors give us an account of a Succession of the Jewish Councils, which they they believe to have been held before and after the coming of our Saviour: But there is no mention of these pretended Councils in the Scripture. As to the first Council convened at Jerusalem, after which it has been proposed to model all those that have been since assembled, it ordained, that the yoke of Circumcision should not be imposed upon the Gentile Converts, nor any other legal Observances; but that they should be obliged to abstain from Meats sacrificed to Idols, from Fornication, from things strangled, and from Blood. I say nothing here of other Councils held in the Church since the time of the Apostles, because there is no mention of them in the Scripture. Some believe, that the Apostles met in Council to compose the Creed: This is a particular which we shall examine under the Article Symbolum.

Counsel

[Ps. xxxiii. 11. Ps. lxvi. 5. Ps. cvii. 11. Gen. xlv. 8.] COUNSEL. Besides the common signification of this word, we may observe, that it is used frequently in Scripture for the Decrees of God, the Orders of his Providence. Non vestro concilio, sed Dei voluntate huc missus sum: It is an effect of God's Decree, and by the direction of his Providence, that I was brought hither, rather than by any design concerted by you. God frustrates the Counsel, the Views, the Designs of Princes; but the counsels of the Lord stand for ever. His Desires, his Will, his Resolutions are executed, without any thing's being able to oppose them. The counsels of God are terrible against the children of men, his Views, his Designs. They have contemned the counsel of the most High; they have opposed his Will. I have declared unto you all the counsel of God, his Will, his Doctrine. The Jews rejected the [Acts xx. 27. Luke vii. 30.] counsel of God against themselves, the Favours of God, his Designs of saving them. God will manifest the counsels of the Heart, the Designs, Thoughts, the most secret [1 Cor. iv. 5.] Resolutions. Jesus Christ in Isaiah ix. 6. according to the Septuagint, is called Magni consilii Angelus; the Angel, the Minister, the Executor of this great and admirable Design of God, for the Salvation of Mankind.

COUNTRY, Patria. By this word is meant the Land where we were born, and the Town where we dwell.

It is taken likewise for Family; for example, [Ps. xcv. 7.] Afferte Domino patriæ gentium; bring Sacrifices unto the Lord, O ye Kindreds of the People; ye People of foreign Nations come and offer your Sacrifices unto the Lord. Patria in Greek signifies a Race, a Nation.

The Heavenly Country, denotes the happiness of Heaven, which is hoped for by all Christians: We have here no continuing city, but we seek one to come, says S. Paul, Hebr. xiii. 14.

[2 Mac. vii. 8, 21, 27. xii. 37. xv. 27.] Patria voce in the Book of Maccabees, signifies the Hebrew tongue, or Syriac, Respondit voce Patria? He answered in his Mother tongue in Hebrew, which was the language of his Country. The Author makes this distinction, because this whole Affair of the Martyrdom of the Maccabees was transacted before the Greeks, and even in the midst of Antioch, where Greek was spoken.

Court

COURT, in Hebrew, Chazer; in Latin, Atrium. The great Courts belonging to the Temple of Jerusalem were three, the first called the Court of the Gentiles, because the Gentiles were allowed to enter so far, and no farther. The second was called the Court of Israel, because all the Israelites, provided they were purified, had a right of admission. The third Court was that of the Priests, where the Altar of Burnt-offerings stood, where the Priests and Levites exercised their Ministry. Common Israelites, who were desirous to offer Sacrifices, were at liberty to bring their Victims as far as the inner part of the Court, but they could not go beyond a certain Vail of separation, which divided it into two; and the Laity withdrew as soon as they had delivered their Sacrifices and Offerings to the Priest, or had made their Confession, with the Ceremony of laying their Hand upon the Head of the Victim, if it were a Sin-offering.

As to the Form, Ornaments, and Dimensions of the Court of the Temple, see the Article Temple, and the Plans which have been made of it.

[Esth. iv. 11. v. 1. vi. 4. Mat. xxvi. 58. John xviii. 15. Luke xi. 21.] Before the Temple was built, there was a Court in the Tabernacle, but not near so large as that in the Temple, and encompassed only with Pillars, and Vails hung by Cords. See the Article Tabernacle. These Courts were intirely after the fashion of the Egyptian Temples, belonging to which there were large Courts surrounded with Colonnades. The same in proportion were visible in the Palaces of Kings, and the Houses of great Men, wherein there were great Courts, as appears from the Palaces of Solomon, and King Ahasuerus mentioned by Esther. The Evangelists in the History of our Saviour's Passion, speak of the High Priest's Court; and S. Luke mentions the strong armed Man who guardeth the palace; that is to say, the Guard, who continues always armed at a great Man's door, as we see Swisses at the Gates of great Houses.

Court

[Ezek. xlvii, 17, xlviii. 1.] Court, Atrium, is often used for a City; Atrium Ennon, Atria Netophati, the Cities of Ennon and Netophath. In the Hebrew this is still much more frequent; for all the Towns, with the word Hazer are so called, as if it were said, the Court of Suza, &c. Hazer-Suza, Hazer-Shual; in like manner also Hazera, Huzerim, Haziroth, are names of Towns, and signify Courts. The Courts of Jerusalem are put for the City itself; Stantes erant pedes nostri in atriis tuis, Jerusalem.

Cozar

COZAR. The Oriental Historians relate[1], that Chozar, or Khosar, the seventh Son of Japheth, having separated from his Brethren, who were settled in different places of the Countries included within Great Tartary, came as far as the Banks of the River Volga, and there built a City which he called by his name, and sowed Millet round about it, which is the only Grain that grows in that Country. The Land has retained the name of Chozar, and the Inhabitants are known by that of Chozarians. It is situated to the north of the Caspian Sea, and extends itself from the Volga eastward. The Caspian Sea, by the Persians called the Sea of Chozar, borrowed its name from him.

The Jewish Authors[2] pretend, that Cozar or Chozar was Grandson to Japheth by Thogorma, that he founded the Kingdom of Cozar, whereof the City of Thogorma is one of the principal in the Country. The Rabbin Petachias[3] assures us, that he continued eight days in this Kingdom, which a Vein of the Sea separates from Tartary; that from the Frontiers of this Kingdom issue seven great Rivers; that there are two Seas separated a day's Journey from one another. There is such a stench arises from one, that all who sail that way are killed by the bad scent. The City of Thogorma is situated upon the Mountains of Ararat. The Law of Mahomet is observed there. You go from thence to Nisibe, which is eight days Journey distant from it There are three Synagogues there.

Another Jewish Traveller[4], being inquisitive to know whether the Scepter continued still in Judah, and there were still any Country in the World where the Jews enjoyed regal Rights, was informed by a Jew, Physician to a certain Prince, that in the Kingdom of Cozar the King made profession of the Law of Moses, and he was confirmed in this opinion, when he saw the Letters of Joseph King of Cozar, to a Spanish Rabbin.

Abulfaragius writes, that the Cozarians and Georgians[5] are the same People, and Eutychius Patriarch of Alexandria says, that the Emperor Heraclius procured considerable succours against the Persians, from the King of the Cozarians, and that in return he promised them a Throne; that is to say, an honourable seat in the Assemblies at his Imperial Palace. Edrissi in his Geography relates, that among the Cozarians every Man follows the Religion which appears best to him, and that they enjoy an intire liberty of Conscience, that there are Mussulmen, Christians and Jews mingled among them. It is affirmed, that the Caliph Abdalmelech made War with the Cozarians in Armenia, that he burnt them in their Churches, that he defeated them at the Iron Gates, and that they who remained turned Christians.

Notwithstanding all these Testimonies, there are still some Men of Learning[6], who question much whether there be in reality any such Kingdom as that of Cozar, or rather who maintain it to be evident, that there is none, that whatever is said of it is founded only upon Fables, and that neither Jews nor Christians have hitherto been able to shew the Situation of it. I should choose rather to say, that this Country at present is not known to our Geographers by the name of Cozar; but after the Testimonies which we have produced from the Oriental Authors, can there be any doubt of there being such a Country, and that it is well known to them?

However this may be, it is related, that about the Year of Jesus Christ 740, a certain King of Cozar desiring, in consequence of a dream which he had[7], to make himself acquainted with all Religions, that so he might be able to discern which was best, sent for a Philosopher, a Christian and a Mahometan, disputed with each of them; and was not affected with any of their Reasons. After this he sent for a Jew, whose name was Sangari, who succeeded so well as to persuade him, that the Jewish Religion was the only true one.

We

We have Sangari's supposed Conference with Cozri, wherein certainly such things are to be read, as are very improper to convince an Infidel. But at last Cozri being converted, discovered his secret in confidence to the General of his Army; both of them departed privately from Cozar, and came fortunately to certain Mountains, where the Jews were celebrating the Sabbath. There the King and his General received Circumcision, made profession of Judaism; and upon their return to the Capital, engaged the People of the Country to take the same resolution. If the Letter from Joseph King of Cozar, to the Spanish Rabbi Chardac, were genuine, we should be obliged to own, that Judaism subsisted in the Kingdom of Cozar, till the end of the fourteenth Century, since this Rabbi lived about the year 1394. See Bartolocci Bibl. Rabbin. t. 2. p. 853.

But both this Letter from King Joseph and the pretended Conversion of the King of Cozar, are very dubious; it is very probable that the Book called Cozri, which the Jews so much value, that they would have it all got by heart; that this Book, I say, which includes the History of this Conversion, and Rabbi Sangari's Arguments, is a pure Romance. The Jewish Author of the Hebrew Book entitled, Meor-enaïm[8], questions whether there ever were such a King of the Cozarians, who embraced the Religion of the Jews. This Confession from an Author of this Nation, in a matter of such consequence, is very remarkable.

Crassus

CRASSUS[1]. When Marcus Crassus [In the year of the World 3950, before J. C. 50. before the vulgar Æra 54.] was upon the expedition against the Parthians, he came into Judæa, and took eight thousand one hundred Talents of Gold, and two thousand Talents of Silver out of the Treasury of the Temple at Jerusalem; and as he intended farther to carry off the sacred Vessels, and richest Vails of the Temple, the Priest Eleazar, who had the keeping of them, told him, that he would shew him a Beam of massy Gold, if he would promise him upon Oath, that he would touch nothing else. Crassus swore, he would not; whereupon Eleazar discovered a golden Beam to him, which weighed three hundred Mina's; now a Mina is two pounds and an half Hebrew. This Beam lay concealed in another hollow one of Wood, upon which were hung the richest Vails of the Temple. But the avarice of Crassus was not yet satisfied with all this Wealth; for after this he carried off all the Gold that was in the Temple. It was not long ere the vengeance of God overtook him, and punished him severely for his Sacrilege: For having invaded the Territories of the Parthians, he perished there with the greatest part of his Army.

CREATOR, Creation, to create. These Terms properly signify a Passage from Non-entity to Being; the production of something out of nothing, or the Act of God, producing things out of nothing. Crescens

CRESCENS. S. Paul in his second Epistle to Timothy, chap. iv. v. 10. says, Crescens is departed to Galatia, or Gaul[1], and Titus to Dalmatia. Eusebius, Theodoret, Epiphanius, the Chronicon Alexandrinum, Nicephorus, an anonymous Author cited by Oecumenius, and Dorotheus maintain, that Crescens preached in Gaul. S. Jerom, Usuardus and Ado affirm the same. It is believed by some, that he founded the Church of Vienne in Dauphiny; and this is a Tradition handed down in this Church. Serrarius in his History of Mentz, says, he was the Apostle of the Church of Mentz, and cites Abbot Rupert to justify his Opinion: But he confesses, that neither the Missal nor Breviary of this Church, nor any antient Monument whatever, speaks of Crescens as Founder of the Church of Mentz.

The Tradition of the Church of Vienne is not much better grounded. This Tradition is not very antient; it is not two hundred years since the name of S. Crescens was first put into the Litanies of this Church. In the Disputes which were afoot between the Churches of Arles and Vienne, concerning the right of a Metropolitan, no one ever thought of taking any advantage from the Mission of S. Crescens. It is true, there is a Letter produced from Pope Paul I. to Charlemain, wherein he says, that Crescens, a Collegue of the Apostles, was Master of the City of Vienne: But this Letter having been produced in these later Times only, there is reason to suspect, that it is spurious. Crescens died, as the Latins say, on the twenty seventh of June, as the Greeks on the thirtieth of July. The Apostolical Constitutions[2] fix his Apostleship in Galatia, and declare that he died there.

Crete

CRETE, the Isle of Crete, now called Candia, in the Mediterranean. S. Paul made Titus, his dear Disciple, Bishop of Crete, and in the Epistle which he wrote to him, charges him to rebuke the People of this Island severely, and in strong terms, to prevent their being fond of Jewish Fables, human Ordinances, and the Observances of the Law: For as he adds, the Cretians, as [Tit. i. 12, 13.] one of their own Prophets or Poets bears witness, are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies. This Cretian Prophet, whom the Apostle speaks of, is Epimenides, a Native of Crete, who asserts this particular so much to the disadvantage of his own Countrymen. St. Chrysostom, Theodoret, and many others, make Callimachus the Author of this remark cited by S. Paul, because there are two verses which are certainly his, the purport whereof is this, The Cretians are always liars, for they have erected a monument to thee, O King Jupiter, who art not dead, but on the contrary art immortal. Notwithstanding the verses quoted by S. Paul are certainly Epimenides's, the first words whereof only were cited by Callimachus.

In the Article Caphtor or Caphtorim, we said, that this was the antient name of Crete; that the Philistines came from thence, and that the name of Ceretim or Cretim, which is so often mentioned in the Scripture, was the same as that of Cretians. See our Dissertation concerning the Origin of the Philistines, prefixed to the first Book of Samuel.

Crocodile

CROCODILE, an amphibious, cruel, voracious Animal, in shape almost like a Lizard, but much larger. It is found principally in the Nile. Some likewise have been seen in the River Darat, in Mauritania[1], and in the Indies[2]. It seems as if there had been some also in Palestine, since Pliny and Ptolemy both speak of a City called Crocodilon, between Ptolemais and Cæsarea in Palestine. The Crocodile is covered with very hard Scales, which are not to be pierced without great difficulty; excepting under the Belly, where the Skin is tender. It has a wide Throat, with Teeth sharp, and separated, which enter one within another; of these it has several rows. It is very low upon its Feet, and crawls almost on the Earth. It runs with great swiftness, but does not easily turn itself. It lives a long time, and is said to grow continually till its death; but this is not at all probable. There are some of fifteen or eighteen Cubits long.

Crocodiles lay their Eggs upon the Ground, or on the Sand near the Waterside. Their Eggs are like Goose Eggs; and sometimes they lay sixty of them. They cover them in the Sand, that the heat of the Sun may contribute to hatch them. When their Bowels are taken out, or they are wounded, they smell very agreeably. There are several ways of taking them. Sometimes they are caught with great Hooks, baited with Hog's flesh, which they love mightily: At other times they are taken in Pits covered with Boughs and Earth, which they fall into, and are not able to get out. It is said, that the Ichneumon or Indian Rat, which is as large as a tame Cat, breaks the Crocodile's Eggs as often as it finds them on the Shore, and that it gets into the very Belly of this creature, while it is sleeping with its Throat open, gnaws its Intrails, and kills it.

The word Crocodile is supposed to come from the Greek, Croco-deilos, which signifies afraid of Saffron; because in reality this creature abhors the Flower and smell of Saffron. Its sight is very piercing, when it is upon the Ground; but in the Water it sees but dimly. The Egyptians we know adored the Crocodile. It is said to spend the four Winter Months under Water, without eating any thing. The Egyptians paid divine Honours to it[3], particularly the Inhabitants of Arsinoe, and they who dwelt in the Neighbourhood of Thebes, and the Lake Mæris. But the People of Tentyra and Elephantis killed and eat them. It is our Opinion, that Job speaks of these People in the following words. Let them curse it that curse the day, who are ready to raise up a Leviathan, or to awake the Crocodile, let them curse the day of my birth. See our Comment on this Passage. See likewise Psal. lxxiv. 15. Thou smotest the heads of the Leviathan in pieces, and gavest him to be meat for the people in the wilderness.

Job gives an admirable description of the Crocodile, under the name of the Leviathan, in the xl. Chapter, the 20 and [Leviathan Κροκόδειλος.] following Verses, and in the xli. 1, 2, &c. See Bochart, De Animal. Sacr. parte 2. l. v. c. 16. Ezekiel, xxix. 3, 4. and xxxii. 2, 3. directs his speech to the King of Egypt, under the name of Leviathan, or Crocodile. Behold I am against thee, thou great dragon, that liest in the midst of thy rivers, which hast said, my river is mine own, and I have made it for myself. There are some[4] who think, that the name of Pharaoh, which commonly denotes the King of Egypt, does properly signify a Crocodile.

Land Crocodile

LAND CROCODILE. This Animal is otherwise called Stinx; it lives partly in the Water, and partly upon the Land; it has four short slender Legs like a Lizard; its Snout is sharp, and its tail short and thin. It is covered with small Scales, disposed in very good order, of a Silver colour, in some places brownish, and particularly upon the Back of Gold colour. It always continues small, and is hatch'd in Egypt, near the Red Sea, in Lybia and the Indies. It has a streak all along its Body, from the Head to the Tail.

In Leviticus there is mention of a kind of Crocodile, in the Hebrew called Choled, [Levit. xi. 27. 70 .ϛοΐασρεχ ϛολιεδόκορΚ חלד .לויתן Gen. xl. 19. Esth. vii. 10. Josh. viii. 29.] which the Septuagint translate Land Crocodile, and is numbered among the unclean Animals. This Land Crocodile is a sort of Lizard, which feeds upon the sweetest Flowers it can find; this makes its Intrails to be very much valued for their agreeable smell. S. Jerom[1] says, the Syrians eat Crocodiles of this kind, which live upon the Land only. Some Interpreters translate the Hebrew Choled, Tortoise, or green Frog. S. Jerom has followed the Septuagint, and translated it Crocodile.

Cross

CROSS. By the word Cross, we understand a Gibbet made of two pieces of wood put cross-wise; whether they cross with right Angles at the top of one of them, or in the middle of their length, or like a S. Andrew's Cross, or fork-wise. The Greek, Stauros, which signifies a Cross, is put often for a piece of Wood only fixed in the Ground, by the Latins called Palus or Vallum: But the Cross properly speaking, resembles a T, and the Cross which Jesus Christ was nailed to, is commonly believed to have been of this sort. The Cross was the punishment of the vilest Slaves; it was called Servile supplicium[1]. To be crucified was a great mark of Infamy to Soldiers, Officers, and Men of Quality. This Penalty was so common among the Romans, that Pains, Afflictions, Troubles, and unprosperous Affairs were called Crosses, and the verb cruciare was used for all sorts of Chastisements, and Pains of Body and Mind.

The Punishment of the Cross was common among the Syrians, Egyptians, Persians, Africans, Greeks, Romans and Jews. Pharaoh's chief Baker was beheaded, according to Joseph's prediction, and his Carcase afterwards fastened to the Cross. Haman prepared a great Cross to hang Mordecai upon, but he was himself executed upon it. Joshua gave orders for hanging the King of Ai upon a Cross. Moses in like manner hung the Princes of Israel upon Stakes or Crosses, who had fallen into the abominations of Baal-peor. [Numb. xxv. 4.] Every one knows, that this Punishment was very common among the Greeks and Romans, and it is needless to produce proofs and examples of it; which are every where to be met with in History.

The Jews confess, that indeed they crucified People in their Nation, but deny that they inflicted this Punishment on any alive: They first put them to death, and then fastned them to the Cross, either by the hands or neck; accordingly many instances are to be met with of Men thus hung upon a Stake after death. But there are indisputable proofs to be produced, of their crucifying men frequently alive. The worshippers of Baal-peor and the King of Ai, whom we have mentioned, were hung up alive, and so were the Descendants of Saul, who were put into the [2 Sam. xxi. 9. Psal. xxii. 17. Zech. xii. 10.] hands of the Gibeonites. The Psalmist speaking of the death of the Messiah, says, They pierced my hands and my feet, I may tell all my bones. The Prophet Zechary says, that at the day of Judgment, the Jews shall look upon him whom they have pierced with Nails. Aspicient ad me quem confixerunt. Josephus[2] relates, that Alexander King of the Jews having ordered eight hundred of his rebellious Subjects to be crucified, commanded their Wives and Children to be executed before their Eyes at the foot of their Cross, while they were yet living. See our Dissertation on the capital Punishments of the Jews, prefixed to the Comment upon Deuteronomy, p. xlii, &c.

SEVERAL WAYS OF CRUCIFYING.1st Gath. Cc.

[Deut. xxi. 22.] The Law ordained, that the persons executed should not be left upon the Cross after Sun-set, because he that is hanged in this manner is cursed by God. His Body shall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou shalt in any wise bury him that day; for he that is hanged is accursed of God. The King of Ai having been crucified by Joshua's Orders, his Body was left upon [Josh. viii. 29, 30.] the Cross no longer than till the evening. The Jews[3] believe, that the Souls of those who remain upon the Gibbet, and without burial, enjoy no peace, and receive no benefit from the Prayers of other People, but wander up and down till their Bodies are buried; which agrees with the notion which the Greeks and Romans had of this matter. Homer Iliad 4. and Virgil's Æneid. 6.

Nec ripas datur horrendas & rauca fluenta Transportare prius quam sedibus ossa quierint.

The Cross which our Saviour was nailed to, was made in the form of a T, that is to say, of the old Samaritan Tau[4], which resembled the Greek Tau, and not that of the present Hebrews. But we are not to understand it so rigorously; for the Tau is one line drawn over another at right Angles, whereas our Saviour's Cross represented a line crossing another at right Angles, and traversing it. . Thus old Monuments, the Coins of the Emperor Constantine, and the antient Crosses describe it to us. S. Jerom v compares it to a Bird flying, a Man swimming, or praying with his Arms extended like a Cross. Besides the Trunk therefore, and the Arms, there was a piece of Wood which rose above them: And on this Pilate ordered the following words to be inscribed, Jesus of Nazareth King of the Jews, which exposed the Crime whereof our Saviour was supposed to be guilty.

Sometimes the Criminal was crucified on a Tree, and fastened to it with Cords: After this manner Tiberius ordered the Priests of Saturn to be crucified at Carthage upon Trees, before the Temple of their God: w Saturni sacerdotes in eisdem arboribus templi sui obumbratricibus scelerum, votivis crucibus exposuit. Ausonius[5] after this manner describes Cupid crucified on a Tree.

Hujus in excelso suspensum stipite Amorem Devinctum post terga manus, substrictaq; plantis Vincula mœrentem, nullo moderamine pœnæ Affigunt.

Sometimes he that suffered was fastned with his Head downwards: Thus S. Peter chose to be crucified, out of respect to his Master Jesus Christ, not thinking himself worthy to be fixed to the Cross like him[6]. Seneca speaks of this punishment[7], Alios converso capite in terram supendere.

Eusebius[8] remarks, that in Egypt the same Punishment was inflicted upon several Martyrs. Sometimes a Fire was kindled at the foot of the Cross, that so the Sufferer might perish by the Smoak and Flame. The Emperor Alexander Severus, commanded one to be executed in this manner, who was a Cheat, a Quack, and a dealer in Smoak, that by this means there might be some relation between his Crime and his Penalty[9]. Præcone dicente: fumo punitur qui fumum vendidit.

The common way of crucifying was by fastening the Criminal with Nails, one at each Hand, and one at both his Feet, or one at each of them; for this was not always performed in the same manner; the Antients representing Jesus Christ to us, as sometimes crucified with four Nails[10], and sometimes with three[11]: They were likewise bound frequently with Cords; and this Penalty which seems in one sense gentler, because it occasions less pain, in another was more cruel, because the condemned Person by this means was made to languish for a longer time. Arbori infelici recte suspendite[12]. S. Andrew is said to have been thus fastened to the Cross with Cords;[13] he continued also three days alive upon it. Our Saviour in the following words, foretold, that S. Peter would die upon a Cross. When thou wast young thou girdest thyselfand walkedst whither thou wouldest: But when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not. They who were going to be nailed in this manner to the Cross, were so girt about:[14] Tunc Petrus ab altero cingitur, cum cruci adstringitur. They were loaded with Fetters, and so led to the place of Execution, where they were fastened to the Cross with Cords[15].

Sometimes they used both Nails and Cords. Lucan speaking of one who had been crucified, who was afterwards taken down from the Cross, says[16], Laqueum nodosq; nocentes Ore suo rupit. Insertam manibus chalybem, nigramq; per artus Stillantis tabi saniem, virusq; coactum Sustulit.

Altho' the condemned person was generally fixed to the Cross with Nails; yet sometimes it was otherwise. The holy Martyr Pionius having been sentenced to undergo this Punishment, stript himself, extended himself upon the Tree, and gave his Members to the Soldiers to be fastened with Nails. When they used both Cords and Nails, there was no inconveniency in lifting up the Person who was to suffer together with the Cross, he was sufficiently upheld by the Cords, and people concerned themselves very little about lessening the Pains and Torments of a Malefactor condemned to die in this manner.

Before they nailed him to the Cross, they generally scourged him with Whips, or leathern Lashes, which was thought to be severer, and more infamous than to be scourged with Cords. Sometimes little Bones, or pieces of Bones were tied to these Scourges, that so the condemned person might suffer more severely. Our Saviour was cruelly scourged during his Passion. Pilate having pronounced Sentence against him, ordered him to be scourged, and delivered him up to be crucified. [Mat. xxvii. 26.] Slaves when guilty of any great Crime, were often fastened to a Gibbet or a Cross; and in this condition they were led about the City, and beaten with Rods.[17] After this manner our Saviour was loaded with his Cross; and as he sunk under the burthen, Simon the Cyrenian was constrained to bear it after him, and with him.

The Criminal was crucified quite naked[18]. The Saviour of the World in all probability, was not used more tenderly than others, upon whom this Punishment was inflicted. The Soldiers divided his Cloaths among them, and cast Lots for his [Mat. xxvii. 3. John xix. 23, 24.] Tunick, which is an under Garment, worn over the Flesh like a Shirt. Christians out of respect, and a principle of Modesty, have represented Jesus Christ covered in a decent manner, sometimes dress'd intirely,[19] sometimes covered from his Loins to his Knees, and sometimes with those parts only covered with a Vail which Modesty requires us to conceal: But this does by no means prove the general practice to be such, nor that they had this regard to Jesus Christ, whom they did not know, and whose design it was to load himself with the Shame and Punishment of our Sins.

Several Questions have been started concerning our Saviour's Cross. Some[20] think that it was made of four different pieces of Wood, viz. Cypress, Cedar, Pine and Box. S. Bernard[21] says, it was made of Cypress, Cedar, Olive and Palm Wood. The Foot or Basis of it was of Cypress, the Top of it of Cedar, the Chapiter of it, if it may be so called, was of the Olive Tree, and the Arms of the Palm Tree. Proba Falconia in her Rhapsodies, says, it was made of Oak.

Ingentem quercum divisis undique ramis Constituunt.

The Author of Historia Scholastica, and many others after him, tell us, that the Queen of Sheba, as she entered Solomon's Palace, which was called the House of Cedar, took notice of a Beam there, which, as she foretold, would at some time or other be made use of in the execution of a Man, who should cause the Destruction of all Israel. Solomon, to prevent this Misfortune, ordered, as they say, that this Beam should be buried in that very spot where the Pool was in the Sheep-Market, which is taken notice of in S. John. At the time [John v. 2, 3, 4.] of our Saviour's Passion, this piece of Wood was discovered, and used in making up his Cross. Others not content with these Fables, add further, that Seth, the third Son of Adam, going to Paradise, procured of the Angel, who kept guard there, three kernels of the Tree of Life, which he planted on his Father's Grave. From these three Kernels sprung three little Wands, which joined together, formed the Beam of Solomon's Palace lately mentioned tioned, which was afterwards used in the Crucifixion of our Saviour. But the bare relating of such Fables, is doing them too much Honour.

Some say, this Cross was fifteen Foot high; that the Arms of it were seven or eight Foot long; that the Top on which the Title or Sentence of Christ's Condemnation was fastened, was a piece of Wood added afterwards, with a Board on which these words were written, Jesus of Nazareth King of the Jews. But it is not easy to get any certain knowledge of these matters, which neither the sacred Writers, nor the primitive Fathers take any notice of. Those Authors who have spoken of them, are too modern to prove a matter of fact of this Nature.

Painters commonly represent the Cross to be pulled down, when our Saviour is fastened to it, and afterwards to be set up again, and the Body of our Saviour to be raised with it: Speculative persons make use of these Considerations to aggravate the excess of pain which he endured at his Crucifixion. But this opinion is not at all probable. Is it common to have the Gibbet first pulled down, when the Criminal is to be hang'd upon it, in order afterwards to put it up again, when the person to be executed is fastened to it? The shaking and motion of the Cross, together with the weight of the Body, might, without any thing else, have broken the crucified person's Hands and Feet, and have loosened him from the Cross with inexplicable Pains. Nonnus, Author of the Tragedy intitled, The suffering Jesus; S. Austin, and the most learned Interpreters[22], are of opinion, that J. C. was nailed to the Cross, as it stood already erected.

It has been the opinion of some[23], that below the crucified Person's Feet, there was a kind of Footstool, or piece of Wood jutting out, upon which his Feet were laid and fastened. S. Gregory of Tours[24] particularly intimates this, and there are many Crosses to be seen made after this manner. It must be confessed, that without this the Criminal could not continue long nailed to the Cross, the whole weight of his Body bearing upon his Hands. But others assert[25], that there are no marks of this Footstool to be seen in the descriptions of the Cross, which the most antient Greek and Latin Writers have left us. But they speak of a kind of wooden Horse, upon which the suffering person was, as it were, mounted, that so his Hands might not be torn asunder by the weight of his Body. This was a large Peg fixed about half way the Cross: As appears very clearly in Justin[26], Irenæus[27], and Tertullian[28]: And the same is asserted by several able criticks[29].

In the Article Wine, we shall speak of the Wine made of Myrrh, which was given our Saviour to drink upon the Cross. Sometimes they who were fastened upon the Cross, lived a good while in that Condition; S. Andrew is believed to have continued three days alive upon it. Eusebius speaks of certain Martyrs in Egypt[30], who were kept upon the Cross till they were starved to death. It is said, that S. Victorinus the Martyr lived three days upon the Cross[31], and that the Saints Timotheus and Maanes lived nine days upon it[32]. Pilate was amazed at Jesus Christ's dying so soon, because naturally he must have lived [Mark xv. 44.] longer, if it had not been in his Power to have laid down his Life, and to take it up again. The Thighs of the two Thieves were broken, in order to hasten their death, that their Bodies might not remain upon the Cross on the Sabbath day, and to comply with the Law of Moses, which forbids [John xix. 31, 32, 33. Deut. xxi. 22.] the Bodies to be left there after Sun-set.

But among other Nations they were suffered to continue there a long time. Sometimes they were devoured alive by Birds and Beasts of Prey[33].

———Cruxillum tollat in auras, Viventesque

oculos offerat alitibus.

And generally they were devoured after their death by Wolves, Dogs, and Birds: If the Crosses were higher than usual, they either were a prey to the Birds, or putrified, and fell in Pieces. Guards were appointed to observe, that none of their Friends or Relations should take them down, and bury them[34]. The History of the Ephesian Matron, and the Soldier who was set to guard the Crosses, is very well known. The Roman Soldiers, who had crucified Jesus Christ and the two Thieves, continued near the Crosses, till the Bodies were taken down from thence.

The Hebrews do not pray for those of their Nation who are left hanging on the Gibbet, or at least they do not pray for them in publick, and in the Synagogue, as is the practice for other dead persons during eleven Months immediately after their decease[35]. Besides, they did not permit the Relations of the Persons executed to place their Kinsmen in the Tombs belonging to their Families, till their Flesh had been first consumed in the publick Sepulchres[36]: Then they were allowed to remove their Bones into private Sepulchres. It was perhaps for this reason, that Joseph of Arimathea desired leave from Pilate, to lodge the Body of Jesus in his own Tomb, that he might not be thrown into the publick Burying-place appointed for Criminals.

[Gal. ii. 19. Idem vi. 14.] Jesus Christ says often in his Gospel, that he who would be his Disciple, must take up his Cross and follow him: The Cross is the sign of Ignominy and Sufferings; it is, as I may say, [Gal. v. 24.] the Device and Glory of Christians. S. Paul says, that he is crucified with Jesus Christ, and that he glories only in the Cross of Christ; that they who are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. Jesus Christ is the way that we are to follow: There is no attaining to that Glory and Happiness which is promised to us by any other means than by the [Exod. xxv. 11. & xxviii. 36, 37.] Cross.

Crown

CROWN. There is frequent mention in the Scripture of Crowns, and the use of them seems to be very common among the Hebrews. The High Priest wore a Crown, which girt about his Mitre, or the lower part of his Bonnet, and was tied behind his head. On the forepart was a plate of Gold, with three words engraven on it, Holiness to the Lord. It seems as if private Priests, and even common Israelites, wore also a sort of Crown, since God commands Ezekiel not to take off his Crown, [Ecclus. xlv. 14. Ezek. xxiv. 17, 23. פאר Peer.] nor assume the marks of one in mourning. Which shewed that the Israelites in their Captivity should act after this manner, and should not be able to express their Sorrow for the death of their Relations. This Crown was nothing more than a Ribbon or Fillet, in Hebrew called Peer, with which the Jews girt their Head; a custom practised by them and several other People in the East, who wore nothing else upon their Heads besides this Fillet or Ribbon, which differed in colour only and value from the Diadem of Princes. When Moses commanded the Israelites to bind the words of the Law for a sign upon their Hands, [See our Comment upon Ex. xxiv. 17. Isai. lxi. 10. Cant. iii. 11.] and to have them as Frontlets fixed between their Eyes, he intimates the use of Crowns and Bracelets among them.

New married People of both Sexes wore Crowns, but richer and more beautiful, than were generally used. In prosperity it was customary for People to put on o Bar. Nachman in Bereschit. Rab. c. 22. Thalmud. tract. Sanhedr. c. 4. p Mishna c. 6, 4, 14, 15. Crowns of Flowers, on Festivals, and other joyful occasions.

[Wisd. ix. 8. 2 Mac. iv. 7. Isai. xxviii. 5. 1 Chr. xx. 2. 2 Sam. xii. 30. 2 Chr. xxiii. 11.] The Crown, Mitre and Diadem, Royal Fillet, and Tiara, are frequently confounded. Crowns were bestowed on Gods, Kings and Princes, as the principal mark of their Dignity. David took the Crown from the God Moloch, or Melcom, which was of Gold, and enriched with Jewels, and placed it on his own Head; or rather he held it suspended over his Head, for it weighed a Talent, that is to say, 173 Marks, six Ounces, three Drams, one half Dram, twenty two Grains and two sevenths. The Amalekite who valued himself upon killing Saul, brought this Prince's Diadem or Royal Fillet to David. The Spouse in the [2 Sam. i. 10. Cant. iii. 11.] Canticles invites her Companions to see King Solomon with the Diadem, whereof his Mother had made a present to him upon his Wedding day. This was a Fillet made of some rich stuff, adorned with embroidery, and wrought in all probability by Queen Bathsheba. The Diadem was placed upon the Head of young King Josiah, when he was presented to the People, in order to be acknowledged by them. Baruch says, the Idols of the Babylonians wore Gold Crowns. Queens too wore Diadems among the Persians. King Ahasuerus honoured Vashti the Queen Consort with this mark of Power; [Baruch vi. 9. Esth. ii. 17. Ezek xvi. 12.] and after he had divorced her, granted the same favour to Esther. God says, that he had put a Crown of Gold upon the head of the Jewish Nation, which is represented by him as his Spouse. Gold Crowns were sent to Kings and Conquerors.

[1 Mac. x. 20, 29. xiii. 33. & 2 Mac. xiv. 4. 1 Mac. xi. 13. Rev. xii. 3.] Kings sometimes used several Diadems, when they were possessed of several Kingdoms. For example, King Solomon having conquered Syria, made his entry at Antioch, and put two Diadems upon his Head, that of Egypt and that of Asia. In the Revelations the Dragon with seven Heads had seven Diadems, one to each Head; and in the same Book, the Beast which sprung out of the Sea with ten Horns, had likewise ten Diadems. Lastly, the eternal Word, the true and faithful [Rev. xix. 12.] One, had many Diadems on his Head. In capite ejus diademata multa.

[Isai. lxi. 10. Ezek. xvi. 12.] New married Men and Women wore Crowns upon their Wedding day, as we have already observed of Solomon. Isaiah gives us a further proof of it, Quasi sponsum decoratum corona. And Ezekiel, Coronas speciosas in capitibus eorum. The same Prophet intimates the same thing for the Spouse. Dedi coronam decoris in capite tuo.

Persons of an elevated Dignity wore the same Ornament. Haman tells King Aha- Ahasuerus, that he whom the King was pleased to honour in an extraordinary manner, should be cloathed in Royal Robes, and have a Diadem on his Head; these Honours were in reality conferr'd on [Esth. viii. 15.] Mordecai: He appeared in publick with a Crown of Gold. Fulgebat vestibus regiis--coronam auream portans in capite.

Lastly, in Feasts, in times of Merriment People wore Crowns or Diadems: but there always was a difference either in form or matter between the Crowns of Kings and great Men, and those of private Persons. The Diadem of Kings was generally a white Fillet bound about their Foreheads, the Extremities whereof being tied behind the Head, fell back upon the neck. Sometimes they were made of Gold Tissue, adorned with Jewels. That of the Jewish High Priest, which is the most antient, whereof we have any description, was a Fillet of Gold, placed upon the Forehead, and tied with a Ribbon of Hyacinth colour, or Azure blue; this Diadem or Crown was not put on till after the High Priest had taken his Bonnet.

Our Saviour's CROWN of Thorns. Pilate's Guard set a Crown of Thorns upon the Head of Jesus Christ, with an intention to insult him, he calling himself King of the Jews. We cannot tell of what matter it was compos'd, whether of white Thorn, buck Thorn, the Thorns of the Barberry or Gooseberry, the Sea Rush, or the Acacia; all which have their several Advocates. See Thorn.

Crown

CROWN, in the figurative Sense signifies Honour, Joy; Much experience is the Crown of old men, Ecclus. xxv. 6. ye are my Joy and my Crown, says S. Paul to the Philippians iv. 1. This word is used likewise for reward, because Conquerors in the publick Games were crowned.

To CRY. The Blood of Abel crieth [Gen. iv. 10. Gen. xviii. 20. Ex. iii. 9.] from the Ground where it was spilt. The cry of the irregularities of Sodom, ascended up to Heaven. The cries of the Israelites oppressed by the Egyptians, went up to the Throne of God. I expected that my Vineyard should produce Fruits of Righteousness, and behold a cry. If my land cry [Job xxxi. 38.] against me, and the furrows thereof complain, says Job. The Emphasis of all these Expressions is such, that the explanation which may be given them, would only weaken them.

[Luke xix. 39, 40.] Jesus Christ in the Gospel, speaking to the Pharisees, who complained that he permitted his Disciples to cry, Blessed is the King who cometh in the name of the Lord, said to them, If these should hold their peace, the stones of the street would cry out against them. In Psalm cxlvi. 9. it is said, that the young ravens cry towards God. Pullis corvorum invocantibus eum. In the Hebrew, clamantibus ad eum. The holy Spirit crieth in our hearts Abba, Father. In all which examples the verb to cry is understood in a metaphorical Sense. God would permit rather that the Stones should cry out, and eccho forth voices, than close the mouths of my Apostles upon this occasion. The work of God must be accomplished; it is time that the Son of God was manifested. The young ravens cry and speak their wants to God after their manner. The holy Spirit crieth in our Hearts, when he inspires us to cry to God, thou art my Father.

There is mention in the Scripture of Cries from the Heart as well as from the mouth. My heart crieth unto the Lord. And in Exodus he says to Moses, Wherefore criest thou unto me, tho' as yet he had said nothing. The Prophets whose stile is generally very bold and figurative animate Beasts, Trees, Mountains, Lands and Cities, and by the help of Prosopopœias, make them speak, whereof we have examples, but not so frequent, in profane Authors.

Lastly, to Cry, especially in the Psalms, signifies to desire earnestly, and with repeated Cries.

Cubit

CUBIT, a sort of Measure in use among the Antients. The Hebrews call it Amma, or as one might say, the Mother of other Measures. A Cubit originally was nothing else but the distance from the Elbow bending inwards to the extremity of the middle Finger. This Measure is the fourth part of a well proportioned Man's Stature[1]. The common Cubit is eighteen Inches. The Hebrew Cubit, according to the computation of Dr. Cumberland, and M. Pelletier of Rohan, which we have followed, is twenty Inches and an half, Paris measure. Many others fix it at exactly eighteen Inches. The Talmudists observe, that the Hebrew Cubit was larger by one quarter, than the Roman. It was Origen's opinion[2], that the Cubit which Noah made use of, when he built the[3] Ark, was equal to six common Cubits. S. Austin[4] has followed Origen in his conjecture, and thinks those objections to be very ridiculous, which some raised against the enormous size, which the Ark must have been of, if these dimensions were observed.

Lewis Capellus, and several others, have asserted, that there were two sorts of Cubits among the Hebrews, one sacred, the other common; the first of three Royal Feet, the second, of a Foot and an half. Moses, Numb. xxxv. 4. assigns to the Levites a thousand sacred Cubits of Land, round about the City, where they dwelt; and in the next verse, he gives them two thousand (common ones). In like manner, 1 Kings vii. 15. the two columns of Brass, which were in Solomon's Temple, are said to be eighteen Cubits high; and in the second Book of Chronicles, iii. 15. thirty five Foot; which is no way to be reconciled without distinguishing two sorts of Cubits, the one whereof is double the other.

Villalpandus, and several Writers after him, allow the sacred Cubit to be but an Hand's breadth above the common Cubit. He supposes Moses to have spoken of the common Cubit, when he said, Deut. iii. 11. that it was of the length or measure of a Man's arm folded inward, Ad mensuram cubiti virilis manus; and that the sacred Cubit was an Hand's-breadth above this other common Cubit, as is plainly observed in Ezekiel xliii. 13. These are the measures of the altar after the cubits; the cubit is a cubit and an hand-breadth.

Notwithstanding these Reasons, we are persuaded, that there was but one sort of Cubit among the Hebrews, from the time of their going out of Egypt to the Babylonish Captivity: And this was the Egyptian Cubit[5]; the Measure whereof was taken some years since from the old Standards of Grand Cairo; and that it is only since the Jews returned from their Captivity, that the Scripture has taken notice of two sorts of Measures, to distinguish the old Hebrew Cubit from that of Babylon, which the Captives were used to during their abode on the other side of the Euphrates. Upon this is grounded the precaution taken by Ezekiel in observing that the Cubit he is speaking of, is the true old Cubit, larger by an hand's breadth than the common Cubit. As to other Passages, they are easily to be reconciled, without having recourse to this distinction of a sacred Cubit, which some suppose to have been double to the common one. See the Commentators.

Cummin

CUMMIN, a sort of Plant very like [If. xxviii. 25.] Fennel, it produces its Blossom and Branches in the form of a Nosegay. Isaiah says, that the Plowman opens and breaks the Clods of the Ground, then sows the Fitches and the Cummin; and threshes it, not with large Flails, and Cart Wheels, but with Rods only. These Seeds, and the manner of threshing them, signify the most gentle effects of God's Justice. God reserves his severe Chastisements for the greatest Sinners. Jesus Christ tells the Scribes and [Mat. xxiii. 23.] Pharisees, that they are very careful to pay Tythe of Mint, Anyse, and Cummin, but neglect good Works, and the more essential practices of God's Law.

Cup

CUP. This word is often taken in Scripture in a proper, and in a figurative sense. In the proper sense it signifies a common Cup, which People drink out of at Meals; or a Cup of Ceremony made use of at solemn and religious Meals,[1] as at the Passover, at which time the Father of the Family pronounces certain Blessings over the Cup, and after having tasted of it, makes all the company, and his whole Family, drink round of it[2].

The word Cup in the figurative sense of it, is taken generally for the Afflictions which God sends. To drink of the Cup, signifies to endure those Punishments which God has determined we shall suffer. Stand up, O Jerusalem, which [Isai. li. 17.] hast drunk at the hand of the Lord the Cup of his fury, says Isaiah. And the [Ps. lxxv. 8.] Psalmist, In the hand of the Lord there is a Cup, the dregs thereof all the wicked of the Earth shall wring them out, and drink them. In the same sense Men are said to be made drunk with Sorrow, with Afflictions, and the Wine of God's Wrath; all which expressions are consequences of this first Metaphor of Cup. It is derived from the custom observed at entertainments, to drink round, and in the same Cup. Such persons as refused the Cup in their turn at Feasts, were not endured: Let him drink or be gone, was a kind of Proverb. When the Sons of Zebedee desired of our Saviour, that they might have the first places in his Kingdom, and be seated at his Table, one on his right hand, the other on his left; he answered them, Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of? &c.

The Cup of Blessing, is that which was blessed in Entertainments of ceremony, wherein the Company drunk round. [Luke xxii. 20.] Thus our Saviour in the last Supper, blessed the Cup, and gave it to all his [1 Cor. xi. 28.] Apostles to drink. The Cup of Salvation mentioned in the Psalms, is a Cup of [Ps. cxvi. 13.] Thanksgiving, which while People drunk, they blessed the Lord, and were thankful to him for his Mercies. We see the continuation of this Practice in the third Book of Maccabees, wherein the Jews of Egypt, in the Festivals which they made for their deliverance, offered [3 Mac. vi. 27.] Cups of Salvation.

[Κώθωνα σωτήριον συστησά-μενοι.] The Jews have still at this day Cups of Thanksgiving, which are blessed in their Marriage Ceremonies, and in Entertainments made at the Circumcision of their Children.[3] Some Commentators believe, the Cup of Salvation to be nothing else but the Wine poured upon the Victims, sacrificed upon Thanksgivings, [See Exod. xxix. 40. Numb. xv. 5. xxviii. 7. 14.] according to the Law of Moses.

The Cup in the Stile of Scripture denotes likewise sometimes Portion. Dominus pars hæreditatis meæ & calicis mei; because at Meals every one had his Cup, which was filled with Wine as often as he wanted any: Or the Prophet speaks of those Cups which were drunk in the way of Ceremony, and by every one in his turn. God is mine Inheritance, and my Cup, I will have no share in the Inheritance, the Feasts, Sacrifices, Portions, Society of the Wicked; God alone is sufficient for me; he is my Portion and my Cup, I desire nothing further.

Joseph's Cup mentioned in the Scripture, [Gen. xliv. 5.] which was concealed in Benjamin's Sack, the younger Brother of this Patriarch, is the subject of many different conjectures, founded on the words of Joseph's Officers. Is not this the cup in which my Lord drinketh? and whereby he divineth? Some question whether Joseph did indeed make use of this Cup in foretelling what was to come, whether his People believed so, or whether this was said by them, according to the common opinion of the Egyptians, who held Joseph for a great Magician, or whether they said so to intimidate Joseph's Brethren, making them believe, that Joseph, whom as yet they knew not to be their Brother, was a Man very expert in the art of divining, and had discovered the Theft which they had committed, by vertue of this art.

All these several opinions have their defenders. It is certain, that the Antients had a sort of Divination by Cups. The eastern People say, that old King Giamschid, who is the Solomon of the Persians, and Alexander the Great, had Cups, by means whereof they knew all things natural, and sometimes even supernatural. The Antients[4] speak of certain divining Cups full of Wine or other Liquors, which were poured out with Ceremony from the side where the handle was, and that from thence they drew presages of what was to come. Pliny[5] speaks of Divinations with Water and Basons. The manner of divining by the Goblet was this, little Plates of Gold or Silver, or some precious Stones with certain Characters engraved upon them, were thrown into it; and after some Invocations, and superstitious Ceremonies, the Demon was consulted. He answered in several ways, sometimes by articulate sounds, sometimes he made the Characters in the Goblet appear upon the superficies of the water, and formed his answer by the order in which they stood. Sometimes he traced the Image of the per son, on whose account he was interrogated.

At other times a Ring was fastned to a thread, and held suspended over the Water in the Cup: The Ring by its different Percussions, shewed the several things which were enquired after. Sometimes likewise drops of melted Wax were cast into the Water, which was contained within the Goblet, these were artificially dispos'd, and formed answers to the Questions that were proposed.

We by no means pretend to prove from hence, that Joseph made use of his Cup in Divinations: He was certainly very skilful in the Science of foretelling things to come; but this knowledge was not acquired, it was no curious and diabolical art, but some supernatural faculty which God had communicated to him, whereby he procured that high consideration he was in throughout Egypt. It is not incredible that the Egyptians, and perhaps some of his own People, might think him to be truly a Magician, and might have spoken of him according to this prejudice, but it does not follow, that he made use of a Cup in divining.

The Hebrew Text of Genesis will bear another Construction. Is not this the cup wherein my lord drinks and searches for so carefully? or, Is not this the cup wherein my lord drinks, and by which he has tried you? He will try whether you are as acknowledging as you ought to be, for the particular favours he has shewn you. This Cup will serve to give a proof of their ingratitude and infidelity.

Curses

CURSES. God from the beginning denounced his Curse against the Serpent, which seduced Eve, and against the [Gen. iii. 14, 17. Gen. iv. 11. Gen. xii. 3.] Earth, which thenceforth was to produce only Briars and Thorns: He cursed Cain also, who had imbrued his hands in his Brother Abel's Blood. The Lord promised to bless those who should bless Abraham, and to curse those who should curse him. The Divine Maledictions are not merely Imprecations, impotent and fruitless desires, they carry their effects with them, and are attended with all the Miseries denounced by God. Balaam being invited to curse Israel, answered, [Numb. xxiii. 8.] How shall I curse whom the Lord hath not cursed? Neither my Curses nor my Blessings will avail any thing, unless God inspires me with both the one and the other, unless he is the first Author of them.

[Jude v. 9.] The Apostle S. Jude relating Michael the Archangel's conflict with the Devil about the Body of Moses, remarks [Gen ix. 25. Gen. xix. 7.] that the Archangel did not venture to curse him, nor use any imprecations against him, but was content with saying to him, The Lord rebuke thee. From whence he concluded, that it is not allowable for the Faithful to utter Blasphemies, Imprecations or Curses against any one. Nevertheless we find, that the Saints sometimes did Curse particular persons: For example, Noah cursed his Grandson Canaan, and Jacob the Fury of his two Sons Levi and Simeon, who massacred the Sichemites, and plundered their City. Moses enjoins the People of Israel to denounce Curses against the violators [Deut. xxxiii. Josh. vi. 26.] of the Law; Joshua cursed him who should undertake to rebuild Jericho; and History informs us, that these Imprecations were not without effect, no more than those which our Saviour pronounced against the barren Fig-tree, [Mark. xi. 21.] which withered that very day, or those written against the Woman, who lay under the suspicion of Adultery, supposing her to be guilty, for the marks of them were soon visible in the Evils which overwhelmed her.

But these Curses are either ordain'd by God himself, or pronounced by Men abounding with his Spirit, or are mere Predictions of what should happen, uttered in the terms of Imprecations. They are not the effects of Passion, Impatience or Revenge. They are not therefore such as God condemns in his Law, and in his Scriptures: For example, he ordains that no one shall presume to curse his Father or his Mother upon pain of death; that no one should curse the Prince of his People, [Exod. xxi. 17. Lev. xix. 14. Exod. xxii. 28. Lev. xxiv. 10, 11. Mat. v. 11. Rom. xii. 14. Luke vi. 28. 1 Cor. iv.

12. 1 Tim. iv. 10.] or one that is deaf; whether a Man really deaf is meant here, or one that is absent, and cannot hear what is said against him; Blasphemy, or cursing of God is punished with death. In the Gospel, Jesus Christ pronounces those of his Disciples to be blessed, who are loaded with Curses, and requires them to bless those who curse them, to render Blessing for Cursing, which in reality is what S. Paul in his Sermons requires to be exercised towards his Enemies, as he himself tells us.

The Hebrews inform us, that Barak cursed and excommunicated one Meroz, who dwelt near the Brook Kison, but came not to the assistance of the Israelites in the Battle which they fought with Jabin. Wherefore Barak excommunicated him by the sound of four hundred Trumpets, according to the expression in [Judg. v. 23.] the Book of Judges, Curse ye Meroz, saith the Angel of the Lord, curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, because they came not to the help of the Lord. Barak himself, they say, was this Angel of the Lord; others believe it was the Archangel Michael, General of the Lord's Army, who cursed Meroz the Angel of the Land of the Canaanites. See Devoting, Excommunication, Anathema.

Cush (I)

I. CUSH, the eldest Son of Ham, and [Gen. x. 8. Gen. x. 7, 8.] Father of Nimrod. The eastern People[1] affirm Cush the Son of Canaan, and Grandson of Ham, to have had a Son whose name was Habaschi or Haboschi, the Father of the Abyssinians, or Egyptians, whom the Persians call Black Indians. The Hebrew Grammarians derive the word Habaschah, which signifies Ethiopia, from Hobouscha, which signifies a People raised from a mixture of different Nations, originally of different Countries, who live together united, and that this is the true derivation of the word Habasch, which comprehends the Abyssinians, Nubians, and the Fongi. The sacred Books know nothing of Cush the Son of Canaan, nor of Habasch the Son of Cush; but only of Cush the Son of Ham, whose Sons they tell us, were Seba, Havilah, Sabtah, Raamah, Sabtecha and Nimrod. Part of Arabia, and that particularly which we call the happy, was formerly comprized under the name of Ethiopia, because the Abyssinians, who conquered it, possessed it for a long time. Dhou-Iren King of Yemen drove them from thence with the assistance of the Persians. We have no other Person in Scripture of this name besides Cush, but there are several Countries that are called by it; whether the same Man may have dwelt in several places: Or that there was some other Cush, whom we know nothing of. The Vulgate, Septuagint, and other Interpreters both antient and modern, generally translate Cush, Ethiopia. But there are many passages, wherein certainly this translation cannot take place. It is necessary therefore to examine the several acceptations of the word Cush.

Cush (II)

II. CUSH, is the name of the Country which was watered by the Araxes. They who on this occasion have translated Cush Æthiopia, have made way for that unwarrantable opinion which some have entertained of the River Gihon's being the Nile. The Nile is too far from the Tigris and Euphrates, to have it said, that it flowed as they did from Paradise. We believe therefore, that by Cush upon the River Gihon, is meant only the antient Country of the Scythians upon the Araxes. Herodotus[1] says, that the first Habitation which these People had, was upon the Araxes, and that being forced from thence by the Messagetæ, they passed this River, and retired into the Country of the Cimmerians. Justin[2] makes the Phasis and Araxes to be as it were the limits of the Scythians on the south side. Diodorus the Sicilian[3] says, that the Scythians who are near Media, abode at first upon the Araxes, and that the Saci and Messagetæ are different Branches of the Scythians. The word Cuthæ and Cutha, whence some have derived Scythæ or Scuthæ, is the same as Cush. The Chaldees generally put the tau where the Hebrews use Schin; they say Cut instead of Cush. The Cuthæans, who came and inhabited the Country of Samaria, were [Chusch. Chutb, or Chutha, whence some have derived Scytha.] originally belonging to that part of the Country of the Medes, which bordered upon the Caspian Sea. They were therefore of the Cush we are speaking of. There are very sensible Footsteps of this name to be met with round about this Country, as the Quitians, the Cetheans, or Coëtæ, the Cytheans; the Cities of Cotatis, Cetemane, Cythanum, Cyta, Cytaïa, Cethyæum, Cethena.

Cush (III)

III. CUSH, Josephus says,[1] that the Ethiopians call themselves by this name, and that the same is given them by all Asia. S. Jerom[2] tells us likewise, that the Hebrews call the Ethiopians by the same name, and the Septuagint give them no [Jer. xiii. 23. Ezek. xxix. 10: Isai. xi. 11.] other. Jeremiah says, Can the Cushæan, or Ethiopian change his skin, then may ye also do good. In Ezekiel, the Lord threatens to reduce Egypt to a desart, from the Tower of Syene, even unto the Border of Cush, or Ethiopia, and in Isaiah, he says, He will recover the remnant of his People, which shall be left from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros and from Cush. All these marks agree with Ethiopia, properly so called, which lies to the South of Egypt.

Cush (IV)

IV. CUSH. Bochart[1] has shewn very clearly, that there was a Country called the Land of Cush in Arabia Petræa, bordering upon Egypt; that this Country extended itself principally upon the Eastern shore of the Red Sea; and at its extremity, to the Point of this Sea inclining towards Egypt and Palestine. The proofs of his opinion are these. Zipporah the Wife of Moses, who was of Midian, is called a Cushite by Moses himself. Now [Numb. xii. 1.] Midian, as Josephus, Ptolemy and S. Jerom all agree, lay upon the Red Sea, to the eastward of it, in Arabia. Cush was therefore in the same [Hab. iii. 7.] Country. Habakkuk mentions the Land of Cush or Cushan, as synonymous with that of Midian, I saw the tents of Cushan in affliction, and the curtains of the land [Job xxviii. 19.] of Midian did tremble. Job speaks of the Topaz of Cush. Now the Topaz is to be found only in an Island of the Red Sea, near the Country which we are speaking [Isai. xviii. 1. Zeph. iii. 10.] of [1]. Isaiah and Zephaniah describe Egypt to us as situated beyond the Rivers of Cush; which cannot be understood of the Rivers of Ethiopia. King Tirhakah, [2 Kings xix. 9.] who marched to attack Sennacherib and Zerah, who at another time made an irruption upon the Land of Judah, were [2 Chr. xiv. 9.] both Kings of Cush, of the Country which we have been speaking of, bordering upon Egypt and Palestine, as all the circumstances of the History demonstrate. Thus there are three Countries of the name of Cush, described in Scripture, and all confounded by Interpreters, under the general name of Ethiopia.

Cuspius Fadus

[In the year of J. C. 48. of the vul. Æra 45.] CUSPIUS FADUS, was sent after the death of Agrippa the Great to govern Judæa. As soon as he came into the Province, he ordered one Ptolemy to be hang'd, who was Captain of a band of Robbers, and plundered Judæa with impunity. After this, being informed, that one Theudas a Sorcerer, pretended to be a Prophet, and had seduced great numbers of the People, whom he had prevailed with to believe, that he would stop the course of the River Jordan with a word only, and would procure them a passage through it, without being wetshod, Fadus sent a Body of Horse against him and his followers. Many of them were killed, and the rest put to flight. Theudas was taken, and had his head cut off[1] in the year of J. Cuthites

CUTHITES, People who dwelt beyond the Euphrates, and were from thence transplanted into Samaria, in the room of the Israelites, who before inhabited it. It is our opinion, that they came [Samaria was taken in the year of the World 3283. before J. C. 717, before the vulg. Æra 721. 2 Kings xvii. 17, 24--- compared with xviii. 34. & xvii. 6. & xviii. 11. & xix. 12, 16. 2 Kings xvii. 25.] from the Land of Cush or Cutha, upon the Araxes, and that their first settlement was in the Cities of the Medes subdued by Salmanefer, and the Kings of Syria his Predecessors; and that the Israelites were removed to those places whence the Cuthites came. The Scripture observes, that the Cuthites upon their arrival in this new Country, continued to worship the Gods formerly adored by them beyond the Euphrates. The Lord provoked by their Sins, sent Lions among them, which destroyed them. The news hereof was carried to Esarhaddon King of Assyria, who succeeded Sennacherib, and he was informed, that the Cushites, who had been sent into Samaria, being ignorant of the way wherein the God of this Country required to be worshipped, he had sent Lions against them, which devoured them.

[About the year of the World 3295. he began to reign in 3293. before J. C. 707.] Hereupon Esarhaddon appointed an Israelitish Priest to go thither, and instruct them in that sort of worship, which was well pleasing unto God. This Priest upon his arrival settled at Bethel, and began to teach the Cuthites the Religion of the Hebrews. But these People thought they might reconcile their old superstition with the worship of the true God. They framed particular Gods for themselves, which they placed in the several Cities where they dwelt. The Babylonians set up Succoth-benoth; that is to say, Tents for the prostitution of young Women, in honour of their false Deities. The Cuthites set up Nergal, those of Hamath, Ashima, the Avites, Nibbaz and Tartak: And the Sepharvites burnt their Children in honour of their Gods Adramelech and Anammelech. The Reader may see our account of these Deities under the particular Articles relating to them.

The Cuthites therefore worshipped both the Lord and their false Gods together, and chose the lowest of the People to make Priests of them in the high Places: And they continued this practice for a long time. But afterwards they forsook the worship of Idols, and adored only to the Law of Moses, as the Samaritans, who are descended from the Cuthites, do at this day. When the Jews returned from their Captivity, In the year of the World 3469, before J. C. 531. ¹ Plin. l. xxxvii. c. 8. Strabo l. xvi. m Antiq. l. xx. c. 2. n Antiq. l. xx. c. 3. Captivity, the Samaritans deputed to them some of their Community, desiring that they might be permitted to assist [Ezra iv. 1, 2.] them in the building the Temple, telling them withal, that since the reign of Esarhaddon, they had worshipped constantly the Lord. But Zerubbabel, and Jeshua the Son of Jozadak, with the Elders of the People answered them, that they could not grant them their request; the King of Persia having given his Licence to the Jews only to build a Temple to the Lord. Hereby it appears that the Cuthites hitherto had no common Temple in their Country; but that in every City they worshipped God, and perhaps Idols in consecrated places, or upon the high places of the old Israelites. Accordingly Josephus[1] informs us, that they were not impowered to build a common Temple on Mount Gerizim, till the reign of Alexander the great. We shall speak more at length of the Cuthites and their Adventures, under the Title of Samaritans.

He made haste to defend his own Country, but was defeated, and divested of the Empire of upper Asia, which the Scythians possessed eight and twenty years. From thence they passed into Syria and Palestine. Some believe, that during this Expedition they made themselves Masters of Bethsan, which was afterwards [Tob.ult.& Dan. ix.1.] named Scythopolis, or the City of the Scythians, and that they plundered the Temple of Venus of Askalon.[2] Cyaxares died after forty years reign, and was succeeded by Astyages, otherwise called Ahasuerus. Cyaxares began to reign about the year of the World 3391, and died about the year 3430.

Cypressus

CYPRESSUS or Cupressus, a very tall strait Tree, that is produced with great difficulty, the fruit of it is of no use, its leaves are bitter, and the very smell and shade of it are dangerous: Arbor natu morosa, fructu supervacua, baccis torva, folio amara, odore violenta ac ne umbra quidem gratiosa, says Pliny[1]. Hence it was, that the Romans looked upon it to be a fatal Tree, and made use of it at Funerals, and in mournful Ceremonies. The wood of the Cypress Tree is always green, very heavy, of a good smell, and never either rots, or is worm-eaten, no more than that of Cedar, Ebony, Yew, Box, and of the Olive Tree. It is averse to Dunghills and watery places, which kill it. The Cypress Tree is distinguished into Male and Female: The Branches of the first are as it were horizontal, and those of the Female are upright; and from this latter it is that People generally take for Palissades of Gardens, and to make Pyramids. The fruit of the Cypress Tree is round, of an Olive colour, and as large as Nuts when they are ripe, and it grows in separate places. The Latins call it Conus, because of its figure. This Fruit is composed of a kind of Scales, in the clefts whereof are hidden little Seeds that are flat and angular. This Tree grows very well from the Seed, and comes on apace. The Cypress Tree is common on Mount Libanus[2]; and the sacred Writers sometimes draw Comparisons from it, as a beautiful and large Tree. I was exalted like a cedar in [Ecclus. xxiv. 13.] Libanus, and as a cypress tree upon the mountains of Hermon. Mount Hermon made a part of Libanus. And in another place, Simon son of Onias the High- [Ecclus. l. 10. The Spouse in the Canticles says, The beams of our house are cedar, and our rafters of cypress, in the Hebrew, Beroth, which by many is interpreted Fir; but it signifies more properly a sort of Cypress called Bruta, which has the smell and solidity of Cedar, but does not grow so tall[3].

Cyprus

CYPRUS, a famous Island in the Mediterranean, and the largest in this Sea; it is situated between Cilicia and Syria: Its Inhabitants were plunged in all manner of Luxury and Debauchery.[1] Their principal Deity was Venus. The Apostles Paul and Barnabas departed from Antioch, imbarked at Seleucia, and landed in the Isle of Cyprus. While they continued at Salamis, they preached Jesus Christ in the [Acts xiii. 4, 5, 6, &c.] Jewish Synagogues; and from thence they went and visited all the Cities in the Island, preaching every where the Gospel: while they were at Paphos, they found there a false Prophet, whose name was Bar-Jesus, who was with Sergius Paulus, the Pro-Consul or Governor of the Island. From him S. Paul met with opposition in his preaching, and by him the Pro-Consul was dissuaded from believing in Christ Jesus. Cyprus

CYPRUS or Cyperus, a shrub mentioned in Scripture by the name of Copher [Cant. i. 13. iv. 13. כפר] in Hebrew, and Cyprus in Latin. It is so common in the Isle of Cyprus, that the Island itself is thought to take its name from it. This Shrub produces a very sweet Flower; but those which grow in the Isle of Cyprus in this particular excell all others.[1] There were some likewise which grew in the territory of Engedi, as the Spouse in the Canticles expresses, who compares her Husband to a bunch of Cyprus growing in the Vineyards [Cant. i. 13. Vulg.] of Engedi. Pliny says, that the best Cyprus was that of Canopus, and next to it that of Askelon in Palestine: Dioscorides says the same thing. There are persons who are of opinion, that the Cyprus and the Ligustrum or Privet, are the same Plant. But it is rather the Alhanna of the Arabians. The eastern People use it with the Leaves of Senna, to blacken their Hair withal[2]. Now the Leaves of this kind of Rush, in Latin, Cyperus odoratus, are like those of the Reed, longer, thinner, and harder than those of a Leek: The Stock of it grows to the height of about two Feet; it is strait, triangular, without knots, at the top of it the Blossoms put out, which have several Stamina collected into large Buttons. The Seed of it is hard, triangular, and covered with a black Skin. The Roots of it are long, knotty, twisted one within another, blackish, and of an agreeable smell. There is another Species of this Rush like the preceding one, with only this difference, that the roots of it are round, about the largeness of an Olive, and many of them joined together.

Cyrene

CYRENE, a City and Province of Libya Pentapolitana, lying between the great Syrtes and the Mareotis. The City of Cyrene is at present called Caïroan, and is in the Kingdom of Barca. The Canton wherein it is situated, is called Mesrata. From hence came Simon the Cyrenian, Father of Alexander and Rufus, on whom the Roman Soldiers [Matt. xxvii. 32. Luke xxiii. 26.] laid our Saviour's Cross. There were many Jews in the Province of Cyrene, and great numbers of them imbraced the Christian Religion. But others opposed it with much obstinacy. [See Acts xi. 20. xiii. 26.] Among the most inveterate Enemies of our Religion, S. Luke reckons those of this Province, who had a Synagogue at Jerusalem, and excited the People against S. Stephen.

After the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, one of the Ruffians or Assassins of Judæa, going to Cyrene, so effectually wrought upon the Jews of that City, as to prevail with them to follow him into the Desart, upon an assurance that he would demonstrate to them by signs and Miracles, that God had suspended his wrath against the Jews,[1] and that they might in a short time rebuild Jerusalem. Catullus, who was Governor of the Country, having intelligence of this, marched against these unhappy People, surrounded the Wood where they were, and cut them all in pieces. He preserved Jonathan from the Slaughter, and made use of him in discovering a pretended Conspiracy, wherein he maliciously included the best Men of the Country.

Cyrene

CYRENE. There is some mention in the Books of the Old Testament, of another Province called Cyrene, different from that in Africk. Tiglathpilesèr transplanted the Inhabitants [2 Kings xvi. 9. Amos i. 5. Amos ix. 7. Vulg.] of Damascus to Cyrene, as the Prophet Amos had foretold about five and twenty years before. Transferetur populus Syriæ Cyrenem. Not certainly into the Country of Cyrene near Egypt, where Tiglath-pilesèr was possessed of nothing, but to Iberia or Albania, where the River Kir or Cyrus runs, which discharges itself into the Caspian Sea. Josephus Antiq. l. ix. c. 12. says, they were transported into upper Media, which falls in with our opinion: For antiently Media was very large.

Amos says, that the Aramæans were originally of Kir. Numquid non ascendere feci Syros (Heb. Aram) de Cyrene? The Prophet intended probably to comprehend under the word Cyr or Kir, the People beyond the Euphrates, and those of Mesopotamia, from whence the Aramæans in reality came, who were descended from Aram the Son of Shem. We have no certain knowledge of their coming in particular out of this Country, where the River Cyrus flows.

Cyrus

CYRUS, Son of Cambyses the Persian, and Mandane the Daughter of Astyages King of the Medes. Astyages dreamt, that there came forth a Vine out of his Daughter Mandane's Womb[1], the Branches whereof covered all Asia: Hereupon he consulted the Sooth-sayers, who told him, that this signified the future power and greatness of the Child who should be born of his Daughter; and farther, that the same Child should deprive him of his Kingdom. Astyages, to prevent the effects of this Prediction, instead of marrying his Daughter to some powerful Prince, gave her to Cambyses, a person of mean condition, and one who was not in a capacity to form great designs, nor to support the ambition of his Son by his own Riches and Authority.

Nor did Astyages stop here: The apprehension he was under, lest Mandane's Son might perhaps find that Assistance in his own Courage, or some lucky circumstances which his Family was not able to supply him with, induced him to take a resolution to dispatch him. As soon therefore as he understood his Daughter to be big with Child, he commanded one of his Officers, whose name was Harpagus, to kill the Infant the moment it was born. Harpagus fearing the resentment of Mandane, put the Child into the hands of one who was the King's chief Shepherd, in order to expose him. This Man's wife was extremely touched with the Beauty of young Cyrus, and desired her Husband rather to expose her own Son, who was born some time before, and to preserve the young Prince. After this manner Cyrus was preserved, and brought up among the King's Shepherds.

One day as the Shepherds were playing together, Cyrus was chosen King, and having used one of his little play-fellows ill, the Child's Parents complained of him to Astyages. This Prince sent for Cyrus, and seeing him, observed something great in his Air, and some Features of his Daughter Mandane. Hereupon he made particular enquiry into the matter, and discovered, that in reality he was his Grandson. Harpagus, who had preserved him, was punished with the death of his own Son; and Astyages believing that the Royalty which the Sooth-sayers had promised to young Cyrus, was that which he had lately exercised among the Shepherds Children, disturbed himself no more about it. Notwithstanding, when Cyrus was grown up, Harpagus discovered to him the whole se cret of his Birth, and in what manner he had delivered him from the cruelty of his Grandfather. He encouraged him to come into Media, and promised to furnish him with Forces, in order to make him Master of the Country, and depose Astyages. Cyrus hearkened to these Propositions, engaged the Persians to take Arms against the Medes, marched at the head of them against Astyages, defeated him, and possessed himself of Media. He carried on many other Wars: At length he sat down before Babylon, and took it after a long Siege. This is a summary account of Cyrus's Life, as we read it in Herodotus and Justin the Abbreviator of Trogus. But the Learned make no difficulty of owning, that this whole recital is so blended with Fables, that it is very hard to distinguish Truth from Falshood.

Xenophon has given us another History of Cyrus very different from that which we have now related: But there is no more certainty in this of Xenophon, according to the Judgment of several Criticks, than in those of Herodotus, Ctesias and Trogus. Plato[2] was not of opinion, that Cyrus was so fine a Model of a Prince as Xenophon imagined; or rather he did not believe that the Portaiture of Cyrus, as it was drawn by Xenophon, was an excellent Pattern of a perfect King. He had his exceptions to it; as for example, that Cyrus was not careful in the good Government of his Family, and permitted his Children to be brought up by Women. In a word, Xenophon may be allowed to have described to us in the name of Cyrus a good General, and a Prince who is a lover of his Country, but not a perfect Prince. This is Plato's Judgment: And Cicero's is not more favourable,[3] Cyrus ille a Xenophonte non ad historiæ fidem scriptus est, sed ad effigiem imperii: Xenophon has not pretended to write the History of Cyrus, but only to describe an accomplished Prince in his person.

Here follows a brief relation of Cyrus's Life from Xenophon.[4] Astyages married his Daughter Mandane to Cambyses King of Persia, Son to Achæmenes King of the same Nation. Cyrus was born in the King his Father's Court, and was educated with all the care his Birth required. When he was of the Age of about twelve years, his Grandfather Astyages sent for him to Court, together with his Mother Mandane. Sometime after the King of Assyria's Son having invaded Media, Astyages with his Son Cyaxares, and his Grandson Cyrus marched against him. Cyrus distinguished himself in this War, and defeated the Assyrians. Cambyses afterwards recalled him, that he might have them near his own Person; and Astyages dying, his Son Cyaxares, Uncle by the Mother's side to Cyrus, succeeded him in the Kingdom of Media.

Cyrus at the age of thirty, was made General of the Persian Troops by his Father Cambyses, and was sent at the head of thirty thousand Men, to the assistance of his Uncle Cyaxares, whom the King of Babylon with his Allies the Cappadocians, Carians, Phrygians, Cilicians, and Paphlagonians were preparing to attack. Cyaxares and Cyrus prevented them, fell upon them, and dispersed them. Cyrus advanced as far as Babylon, and spread terror throughout all the Country. From this Expedition he retired to his Uncle, towards the Frontiers of Armenia and Assyria, and was received by Cyaxares in the Tent of the Assyrian King, whom he had defeated.

After this, Cyrus carried the War into the Countries beyond the River Halys, entred Cappadocia, and subdued it intirely. From thence he marched against Crœsus King of Lydia, beat him in the first Battel, then besieged him in Sardis his Capital. After a Siege of fourteen days Crœsus was obliged to surrender; and Cyrus having condemned him to be burnt, Crœsus upon the funeral Pile repeated three times the cry of Solon, Solon, Solon. Cyrus hereupon being informed, that Solon had said formerly to Crœsus, that no Man should be called happy while he was living, and that Crœsus by these words acknowledged the Truth of this Prediction, set him at liberty, and received him into the number of his Friends and Counsellors.

Cyrus having reduced almost all Asia by the Arms of his Generals, repassed the Euphrates, and made war against the Assyrians. He marched directly to Babylon, at the head of a very powerful Army, composed of Persians, Medes, and auxiliary Troops of the People whom he had subdued. He laid Siege to the City, which the Inhabitants were very little concerned at, because Babylon was a place of great strength, and the besieged were stored with provisions for twenty years. Cyrus encompassed the whole City with a large Ditch, and built Towers and Redoubts at proper distances. But after lying a long time before it, observing no progress to be made in the Siege, he drained the Euphrates in many places, and threw the Waters of this River into large Marshes which were near Babylon; so that the Euphrates being much diminished, Cyrus entred by night into the City with his Army through the Wickets which were an inlet for the Water. Thus Babylon was taken without much trouble.

Cyrus took care to prepare a palace there for his Uncle Cyaxares, whither he might retire, if he had an inclination at any time to come to Babylon; for he was not then in the Army. After all these Expeditions Cyrus returned to his Father and Mother in Persia, where they were still living; and going some time after to his Uncle Cyaxares in Media, he married his Cousin the only Daughter and Heiress of all Cyaxares's Dominions, and went with her to Babylon; from whence he sent Men of the first Rank and Quality to govern all the several Nations which he had conquered. He engaged again in several Wars, and subdued all the Nations which lye between Syria and the Red Sea.

He died at seventy Years of Age, after a reign of thirty years.[5] Authors differ very much concerning the manner of his death. Herodotus[6], Justin[7], and Valerius Maximus[8] relate, that he died in the War against the Scythians, and that falling into an Ambush, which Queen Thomyris had laid for him, she ordered his head to be cut off, and cast it into a Vessel full of Blood, with this expression, Thou that hast always thirsted after human Blood, now glut thyself with it. Diodorus the Sicilian[9] says, that he was taken in an Engagement, and hanged. Ctesias assures us, that he died of a wound which he received in his Thigh. John Malela of Antioch cites a spurious piece of Pythagoras's the Samian, which declares, that he was killed in a Fight with the People of Samos. In Xenophon's account, he is said to die peaceably in his Bed amidst his Friends and Servants. This is certain, that in Alexander's time his Monument was shewn at Pasagarda in Persia, as Plutarch, Quintus Curtius, Arrian, and lastly, Aristobulus, an eye Witness, cited in Strabo, are all Witnesses.

From all which it is easy to conclude, that we are but imperfectly acquainted with the History of this great Prince, the Founder of the Persian, and destroyer of the Chaldæan Empire. We learn fewer particulars of it from Scripture, but then they are more certain than any we have [Dan. viii. 3-- --20.] produced. Daniel in the famous Vision, wherein God shewed him the ruin of several great Emperors, which were to precede the Birth of the Messiah, represents Cyrus to us under the Idea of a ram which had two horns, and the two horns were high, but the one was higher than the other, and the higher came up at last. This Ram pushed westward and northward and southward: so that no beasts might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand, but he did according to his will, and became great. The Ram's two Horns signify the two Empires which Cyrus reunited in his person, that of the Medes, and that of the Persians: The last was greater and more powerful than the Empire of the Medes. Or otherwise, these two horns signify the two Branches of Cyrus's Successors. His Son Cambyses dying, the Empire was transferr'd to Darius the Son of Hystaspes, and was continued down to Darius Codomannus, who is in all probability the great Horn, which the Ram that denotes Alexander, run against. In another place Daniel compares Cyrus to a Bear, with four rows of Teeth in its Mouth,[10] to which it was said, Arise, devour much flesh.

Cyrus succeeded Cambyses in the Kingdom of Persia, and Darius the Mede, by Xenophon called Cyaxares, and Astyages in the Greek of Daniel, in the Kingdom of the Medes, and Empire of Babylon. He was Monarch of all the East, or, as he speaks, of all the World, when he permitted the Jews to return into their own Country, in the year of the World 3466, before J. C. 534, before the vulgar Æra 538. The Enemies of the Hebrews making use of this Prince's affection to his own Religion, prevailed with him by his orders, to put a stop to the building of the Temple of Jerusalem. He always had a particular regard for Daniel, and kept him in his great imployments. The Histories of Bel and the Dragon related in the Greek of Daniel, fell out under his reign. Cyrus, after he had seen the miraculous preservation of Daniel, when exposed to the Lions, published an Edict in favour of the Religion of the Jews.

[Dan. viii. 5, 6. Dan. vii. 5. Dan. xiii. 65. Ezra i. 1, 2. & 2 Chr. xxxvi. 22, 23. Ezra iv. 5. Dan. xiv. 1. Dan. xiv. Dan. xiv. 42. Isai. xliv. 28. Qui dico Cyro: Pastor meus es.] The Prophets frequently foretold the coming of Cyrus, and Isaiah has been so particular as to declare his name above an Age before he was born. Josephus[11] says, that the Jews of Babylon shewed this passage of the Prophet to Cyrus, and that this Prince in the Edict which he granted for their return, acknowledged, that he received the Empire of the World from the God of Israel; and that the same God had described him by name in the Writings of the Prophets, and foretold that he should build a Temple to him at Jerusalem. He is pointed out in Scripture [Isai. xli. 2, 10. xlvi. 11. Isai. xliv. 28. Dan. xiv. 42.] under the name of the righteous Man, and the Shepherd of Israel. He seems to acknowledge the God of Israel in what he says to Daniel. Let all the Inhabitants of the earth fear the God of Daniel, for he is God our Saviour, who worketh signs and wonders upon the earth, and hath delivered Daniel from the mouth of the lions. And elsewhere he says, The Lord God of heaven [Ezra i. 2.] hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth, and he hath charged me to build him an house at Jerusalem. Notwithstanding the Lord says to him in Isaiah, I am the [Isai. xlv. 5.] Lord, and there is none else. I girded thee, though thou hast not known me. Jeremiah calls Cyrus and his People, who overthrew the Babylonish Empire, Thieves and Robbers.

Cyrus we know was a Persian by his Father Cambyses, and a Mede by his Mother's side Mandane: For which reason in an Oracle cited by Herodotus, he is called a Mule.[12] Be afraid, said the Oracle to Crœsus, when the Medes shall be commanded by a Mule. And Nebuchadnezzar some time before his death, filled with a divine Enthusiasm, said to the Babylonians,[13] I foretel a misfortune, which none of your Gods will be able to divert. A Persian Mule shall come against you, who, with the help of your Gods, shall bring you into bondage. It seems as if Isaiah intended to [Isai. xxi. 7, 9.] describe the same thing, when speaking of Cyrus's march against Babylon, he says, that he saw a Man riding in a Chariot drawn by a Camel and an Ass.

The taking of Babylon by Cyrus is clearly set down in the Prophets, particularly in Isaiah, Ch. xiii, xiv, xxi, xli, xlii, xlv. and in Jeremiah, Ch. l, li. Lastly, Daniel evidently foretold the Victories of Cyrus, and the erecting the Monarchy of the Medes and Persians in the vii. and viii. Chapters. We fix the Birth of Cyrus to the year of the World 3405, his first year at Babylon to 3466, his death to 3475, the beginning of the seventy Weeks after which the Messiah was to be put to death, to 3550, before the vulgar Æra 454, before the true time of Jesus Christ's Birth 450. The eastern People have been used to call Cyrus Kiresch.[14] They tell us, that this Prince descended by his Father from Giamasb the Son of Lohosusb, fourth King of Persia, of the Dynasty of the Caïanians; and by the Mother side, from the Hebrew Prophets. He was sent by Bahaman Son of Asfendiar King of Persia to Babylon, to command there in the room of Balthalnaxar Son of Nebuchadnezzar. Bahaman was born, they say, of a Mother, who was of the Tribe of Benjamin, and descended in a direct Line from Saul first King of the Israelites: He married a Wife of the Tribe of Judah, who descended from Solomon by Rehoboam; so that this Prince extremely favoured the Jews; and when he gave Cyrus the Government of Media, Assyria and Chaldæa, he commanded him very expresly to do all the good that he was able to this Nation.

Cyrus did not fail to execute this order, being himself attached to the Jews, to whom he was allied in Blood; for his Mother was a Jew, according to the Persian Authors, as well as his Wife, who was the Daughter of Salathiel, and Sister of Zerobabel, according to Eutychius Abulfaragius Son of Batrik, Patriarch of Alexandria. He therefore sent the Jews back to Jerusalem, and permitted them to rebuild their City and Temple. But all the Traditions of the eastern People, which are not conformable to Scripture, we look upon as fabulous; for if Cyrus had been Son and Husband to a Mother and Wife both Jews, would the Books of the Hebrews have forgotten this Circumstance?

Daberath

[Josh. xix. 12.] DABERATH. Joshua speaks of Daberath a town belonging to the Tribe of Zebulun, or at least in the confines of this Tribe. He shews elsewhere very clearly, that [Josh. xxi. 38.] it is in the Tribe of Issachar. The Tribe of Issachar made a cession of this town to the [1 Chr. vi. 72.] Levites for their habitation. Josephus speaks of it in several places, under the name of [Joseph. de Bello, L. 2. c. 26. & de vita sua. p. 1023.] Dabaritta, or Darabitta, situated in the great plain at the extremity of Galilee and Samaria. DADAN, the second son of Raamah mentioned in Gen. x. 7: The Septuagint in this place read Dadan, and so does the Vulgate and the Hebrew; but in Gen. x. 4. instead of Dodanim they have it Rhodanim; and in Ezek. xxvii. 15. instead of Dedan they read the sons of the Rhodians. Josephus in Gen. x. 4. did not read Dodanim, nor does [Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. p. 14.] he make any mention of this name. And in the same chapter, instead of Dadan he reads Judah, and says that this Judah is the father of certain Jews in the western part of Ethiopia; but the true reading of Gen x. 7. is Dadan. I cannot well tell whether Dedan [If. xxi. 13. In semitis Dedenim. Jer. xxv. 23. xlix. 8. Ezek. xxv. 19. xxvii. 15, 20. xxxviii. 13. Jer. xxv. 23. It must be observed, that in the Hebrew text which is not pointed, the names of Dodan, Dadan, and Dedan are written in the same manner. Arias Montanus places the descendants of Dadan in the Palmyrene, where we find the mountain Aladan, or Alladadan. Bochart places Dadan in Arabia the happy, to the west of Raamah. Dagon

[1 Macc. xvi. 11. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 15.] DAGON, Dog or Docus, a fortress in the plain of Jericho, where Ptolemy the son of Abubus dwelt, and where he treacherously killed his father-in-law Simon Maccabæus, together with Mattathias and Judas his two sons. John Hircanus the son of Simon, who was then at Gazara, went and besieged Ptolemy his brother-in-law in the castle of Dagon: but Josephus relates, that when Hircanus drew near with an intention to assault the fortress, Ptolemy produced his mother and two brothers upon the walls, and ordered them to be scourged cruelly in his sight; withal threatning him, that he would have them put to death, if he continued to distress him. His compassion for his mother's sufferings, was the reason of the siege's drawing out into length; and the sabbatical year coming on, Hircanus was obliged to raise it. Ptolemy took this opportunity and fled to Zeno, surnamed Cotyla, Tyrant of Philadelphia, after having first dispatched Hircanus's mother and two brothers. Which seems to contradict the relation of the first book of Maccabees, which declares, that Ptolemy murdered Mattathias and Judas, together with their father Simon, in the room of entertainment, where they sup'd.

Dagon

[דגן or דגא Piscis.] DAGON, the God of the Philistines. The name of Dagon signifies a fish, and it is our opinion that Dagon was represented like a woman, with the lower parts of a fish,

[Horat. de Arte Poet.] Desinit in piscem mulier formosa superne;

as the Heathens represented the Tritons or Syrens. The Author of the great Etymologicum says, that Dagon was Saturn; others will have it that he was Jupiter, others again Venus. The Egyptians worshipped this Goddess under the form of a fish; because in Typhon's war against the Gods, Venus concealed [Ovid. Metam. l. 5. Fab. 5. Diodor. l. 2. p. 65. seu 92.] herself in this shape. Diodorus the Sicilian says, that at Askelon a famous City of the Philistins, the goddess Derceto, or Atergatis, was worshipped under the figure of a woman, with the 5 K lower parts of a fish. Lucian[1] in like manner describes the goddess Derceto. Now this goddess was the same as Venus. There is therefore a great deal of probability, that Dagon was this deity[2].

Scripture shews pretty clearly, that the statue of Dagon was made in an human figure, at least the upper part of it; for it says that the Ark of the Lord being placed in Dagon's Temple, the next day when the Priests proposed to come into the Temple, they found the head and hands of Dagon upon the threshold of the door, while the rest of the trunk belonging to the statue [1 Sam. v. 4, 5.] continued in its place. See our Dissertation concerning the original, and the Gods of the Philistins, prefixed to our Comment on the first book of Samuel. There was a Temple of Dagon at Gaza, which was pulled down by Sampson. There was another at Azoth, where the Philistins laid up the [Judg. xvi. 23, &seq. 1 Sam. v. 1, 2, 3. Josh. xv. 41. Josh. xix. 27.] Ark of God. There was a city in the Tribe of Judah called Beth-Dagon, or the house of Dagon; and another of the same name upon the frontiers of Asher. Eusebius speaks likewise of a town called Caphar-Dagon, or the Field of Dagon, lying between Jamnia and Diospolis. Philo-Biblius in his translation of Sanchoniathon says, that by Dagon is meant Siton, or the God of [Apud Euseb. præpar. l. 1.] wheat. Dagon does indeed signify wheat in the Hebrew; but who is this God of wheat? It is probably Ceres; for the Hebrews had no feminine name to signify Goddesses: and Elian informs us, that among the several names given to Ceres, Sito was one; as who should say, the Goddess of wheat, because she was believed to be the inventress of agriculture, and of this grain. She was represented with a plow, ears of wheat, fruits and poppies about her head or in her hands; and was joined with Bacchus the inventor of wine. In the mysteries they went together, and their feasts were celebrated jointly.

But we find her likewise described with fish in some medals[3], which answers to the name of Dagon, derived from the root Dag, a fish. In one of these medals which is of the city of Syracuse, the fishes to the number of four, are disposed in the field of the Medal about the Goddess's head, which is crowned with fruits. In another there are fishes to be seen about a bull's head, which is upon the reverse of a Medal likewise of Syracuse with the head of Ceres. In Philo Biblius, Dagon is brother to Saturn, as in the Greek Authors, Ceres is sister to the same Saturn. Ceres enjoy'd the embraces of her brother, according to the Greeks; Atergatis is sister to the same Saturn, according to Philo Biblius.

[Ibidem, P. 93, & 275.] Lastly, Ceres is sometimes described with the attributes of Isis the goddess of the Egyptians, to whom likewise was ascribed the invention of husbandry, wheat, and fruits, and who was honoured as the Moon. In an antique statue of Ceres, found at Toul, there are observed to be ears of corn about her head, in the nature of hair or rays. Berosus, speaking of Oannes, says, that he had the body and head of a fish, that above this head was another, and that below the tail of the fish there appeared the feet of a man. This, say they, is the true figure of Dagon, who had different names [Vaillant Appendic. hist. Ptolemaeorum.] in different countries. We find an Egyptian Medal which represents half the body of a woman with a Cornu-copia in her hands, with the tail of a fish bent behind, and feet made like those of a crocodile or sea-calf. Such might be the figure of the goddess Dagon. The Rabbins vary about its figure, because they speak only by conjecture. Some describe it like a man in the upper parts, and a fish below; others on the contrary like a fish above, and like a man below: others again make it either all man [Diodor. Sic. Bibl. lib. 2.] or all fish.

Diodorus Siculus says, that at Askelon, a city in Palestine, Derceto or Atergatis was worshipped under the form of one having the face of a woman, and all the lower parts of a fish; almost as they describe the Nereids. There was a very deep pond near Askelon filled with fish, consecrated to this Goddess, from which the people of the town abstain'd through superstition, upon a belief that Venus having heretofore cast herself into this pond, was there metamorphosed [Herod. l. 1.] into a fish.

Herodotus relates, that the Scythians having made an irruption into Palestine, with a design of falling upon Egypt, Psammeticus, King of Egypt, diverted this blow by the great sums of money which he brought them. Some Scythians getting into Askelon, plundered the temple of Venus the Celestial, which is one of the most ancient temples that the world ever knew. The Goddess being irritated, sent an ignominious and painful disease among them, the Hemorrhoids, which was communicated to their posterity, as a punishment of the sacrilege committed by them. Here we see that Herodotus calls the very same Goddess Venus the celestial, whom others name Atergatis or Derceto, and we believe to be Dagon. [Salmas. in Solin.] Salmasius is of opinion, that Dagon is the same as Ceto, a great sea-fish. Ceto the sea-monster, to which Andromeda was exposed at Joppa, and Derceto the goddess of the Askelonites, are the same deity. Selden will [Selden de Diis Syr. Syntagm. 2. c. 3.] have it, that Atergatis is the same as Dagon, and that the name of Atergatis is deriv'd from the Hebrew Adir-Dagan, magnificent fish. The name of magnificent is often given to the true God and to false deities. Diana the Persian or Venus, was, as they say, changed into a fish upon throwing herself into the waters of Babylon. Manilius says;

Cum Babylonias submersa profugit in un-

Dalmanutha

[Mark viii. 10.] DALMANUTHA. St. Mark says, that Jesus Christ embarked with his Disciples upon the sea of Tiberias, and came to Dalmanutha [Matth. xv. 39.] . St. Matthew relating the same event, says, that our Saviour went to Magedan, and many manuscripts of St. Mark read it thus. But in the Greek of St. Matthew, it is Magdala. The Syriac, Arabic, and several old Greek Copies read Magdan. The question is where Magedan and [Brocard. Descriptio Terræ Sanctæ, c. 3.] Dalmanutha were situated. Brocard was of opinion that Magedan or Medan was one of the two sources of the river Jordan called Dan, at the foot of mount Libanus. It is [Vide Reland Palæst. t. 1. c. 41. p. 265.] certain, that in the places about the lake Phiala, which is the true source of Jordan, great numbers of Saracens, Arabians, and Parthians keep a fair, and dwell there, invited by the beauty of the situation, and the conveniency of trade: for which reason it is called Medan; that is to say, in Arabic, fair. [Hegesip. p. 108.] Hegesippus calls this place Melda or Meldan, which he interprets fair, or market. Of Meldan may be made Delmana, or Delmanata, or Delmanutha. Thus Medan, Magedan, Delmana, and Delmanutha will be the same thing; and we must say, that Jesus Christ having passed the lake of Tiberias, advanced towards the sources of Jordan, and went to Medan. Eusebius and St. Jerom place Magedan somewhere about Gerasa, beyond Jordan. They tell us, that in their time this canton was still called Magedene. Now Gerasa was eastward of the sea of Tiberias, and on the other side of it. Cellarius and Lightfoot follow that reading, which has Magdala instead of Magedan. They place Magdala in the neighbourhood of Gadara and Tiberias, eastward of the lake Genezareth; and say, that Dalmanutha lay near the city of Magdala. Hammond and some others suppose, that St. Mark intended [Zech. xii. 11. 2 Kings ix. 27. 2 Kings xxiii. 29.] to speak of the city of Megiddo, called Megiddon in Zechary, made famous by the death of two kings, Ahaziah and Josiah, who were killed there. Jesus Christ did not go so far as Magedo, but as far as the confines of Magedan, as the text of St. Mark expresses. We followed this opinion in our Comment on St. Matthew xv. 39. But since what we have found relating to Medan, or the fair held near Phiala, we prefer their opinion who place Dalmanutha there.

DAMA, or Damula, a wild creature, about the size of a roe-buck, with horns almost [Prov. vi. 5.] like a stag's, excepting that they are something flatter, and are not so large. Damascus

DAMASCUS, a celebrated city in Syria. It was for a long time the capital of a kingdom called the kingdom of Damascus, or Aram of Damascus, or Syria of Damascus. It was in being in the time of Abraham; and some of the antients inform us, that this Patriarch reigned there immediately after Damascus the founder of it. So [Gen. xv. 2. In the year of the World 2092, before J. C. 1908. before the Vulgar Æra 1912. Gen. xiv. 15. 2 Sam. viii. 5. and 1 Chron xviii. 4, 5, &c. Joseph. Antiq. l. 7. c. 6. In the year of the World 3027, before J. C. 973. before the Vulgar Æra 977. 1 King. xi. 23,24,25. 1 Kings xv. 18. In the year of the World 3064, before J. C. 936, before the Vulgar Æra 940.] much is certain, that one, whom he had made free, and appointed the Steward of his house, was of Damascus; and pursued Chedorlaomer, and the five confederated Kings as far as Hobah, which is to the left, or northward of Damascus. The Scripture says nothing more of this city till David's time; when Hadad king of Damascus, sending troops to the assistance of Hadadezer king of Zobah, David defeated both, and subdued their country. Josephus says, that this Hadad was the first, who took upon him the title of king in this city; and this he takes notice of from Nicholas of Damascus, the historian of that country, who lived in the time of Herod the Great.

Towards the end of Solomon's reign, God stir'd up Rezin the son of Eliadah, who restored the kingdom Damascus, and shook off the yoke of the Jewish kings. A good while after, Asa king of Judah, implored the help of Benhadad son of Tabrimon, king of Damascus, against Baasha king of Israel, and engaged him to invade his enemy's territories. From this time the kings of Damascus were generally called Benhadad: for example, Benhadad, the son of him, whom we have just mentioned, the same who laid siege to Samaria, attended by two and thirty kings, in the reign of Ahab, [1 Kings xx, 1, 2, & seq.] Ahab king of Israel. Benhadad was obliged to raise the siege, and the year following having set another army on foot, he was [1 Kings xx. 23, 24.] overcome by Ahab; and was obliged to restore those places to the king of Israel, which his ancestors had taken from that crown. Benhadad not having executed faithfully his promise, and refusing to make restitution of Ramoth in Gilead, occasion was hereby given for several wars between the kings of Israel and Damascus.

Benhadad made war with Jehoram the son of Ahab, as he had done before with his father. He besieged Samaria, and undertook several expeditions against Israel; but the prophet Elisha disappointed all his designs, by discovering them to king Jehoram: so that Benhadad sent troops to seize the prophet, and bring him to him. But Elisha struck them with blindness, and without their perceiving it, carried them to Samaria. [2 Kings vi. 13, 14, 15.] Some time after, Benhadad falling sick at Damascus, Elisha went thither, and the King having sent great presents to him by Hazael, the prophet told Hazael, he should be king; and he hereupon returning to Benhadad, stifled him in his bed, and reigned in [2 Kings viii. 7, 8, &c.] his room.

He inherited the aversion which his predecessors had always entertained against the kingdom of Israel, upon which he made war, and committed a thousand ravages throughout all parts of it. He attacked [2 Kings xii. 17.] likewise the kingdom of Judah; and Joash king of Judah, to prevent him from pillaging his country and his capital, was obliged to pay him great sums of money. Benhadad the son of Hazael, followed his father's steps, and made war with success against the [2 Kings xiii. 3, 21, 25.] kings of Israel and Judah. However, Joash king of Israel defeated him in three several engagements, and obliged him to restore the cities which Hazael had taken from his father.

[Judith ii. 17.] Jeroboam II. king of Israel, resumed the old superiority over the kings of Syria. He conquered Damascus and Hamath, the two [2 Kings xiv. 25, &c. Ezek. xxvii. 18.] principal cities of Syria: but after the death of Jeroboam II. the Syrians re-established their monarchy. Rezin took upon him the title of king of Damascus; entred into a confederacy with Pekah, the usurper of the kingdom of Israel, and with him made great havock in the territories of Jotham [2 Kings xvi. 5, &c.] and Ahaz kings of Judah. Ahaz being sensible, that he was not strong enough to resist them; sent to Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, and desired his assistance. Hereupon [2 Kings xvi. 9. Isai. vii. 4, 8. viii. 4. x. 9. xxii. 1, 2, 3. Amos i. 3, 4.] this prince, in order to make a diversion, invaded the dominions belonging to Rezin, took Damascus, destroy'd it, killed Rezin, and sent the Syrians his subjects into captivity beyond the Euphrates, according to the predictions of Isaiah and Amos.

Damascus recovered itself out of all these misfortunes. It is our belief, that Sennacherib took it, when he marched against Hezekiah, as is observed by Isaiah, ch. ix. 9. Holofernes also took it in the time of Manasseh, king of Judah. Ezekiel speaks as if it were a flourishing city in his time. Jeremiah [Jerem. xxv. 9, 10. xxvii. 8. xlix. 23, 24. Zech. ix. 1. Plutarch. in Alex. Q. Curt. l. 3.] threatens it with Nebuchadnezzar's arms, who subdued that, and all the other cities of Syria. After the return from the captivity, Zechary foretold several calamities which should befall it, and which in all probability did then befall it, when it was conquered by Alexander the Great's generals. It seems, as if Jonathan Maccabæus, Simon's brother, had made himself master of Damascus, during the troubles in Syria: but [1 Macc. xii. 32.] it does not appear that he kept it for any time. The Romans took possession of it [Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 4.] about the year of the world 3939, when Pompey made war against Tigranes, and sent Metellus and Lælius thither, who seized upon it. Scaurus came thither some time after; and after him Pompey, who sent for Hircanus and Aristobulus, while he continued in this place, and heard the dispute which was between them concerning their [Antiq. l. 14. c. 56.] title to the crown of Judæa.

Damascus remained under the dominion of the Romans till it fell into the hands of the Arabians. Obodas the father of Aretas [2 Cor. ix. 32. Antiq. l. 16. c. 15. In the year of J. C. 37.] king of Arabia, whom St. Paul speaks of, was already master of Damascus in the reign of Augustus; but tho' he was possessed of it, he was not intirely independant; he, as well as many other kings, being subject to the Romans. Aretas, who had a governour at Damascus, when St. Paul came thither, quarrell'd with the Romans; and when the Jews of Damascus shewed a disposition to lay hands on this Apostle, Aretas was then at war with them. This is as much as it is necessary to know concerning the several states and revolutions of Damascus, at least with relation to the Sacred Writings, the History of the Hebrews, and the New Testament.

Naaman, the king of Syria's general, coming to Elisha, in order to be cured of his leprosy, the prophet bid him go, and bathe seven times in Jordan. But Naaman with some disorder replied, Are not Abana and [2 Kings v. 1, 2, 3, &c.] Pharphar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? may I not wash in them, and be clean? There are some Authors who take Abana to be the Orontes, and Pharphar the Chrysorroas, celebrated rivers in Syria. Benjamin of Tudela says, that the river Abana or Amana waters the city of Damascus, and Pharphar the country about it. Travellers inform us, that the [See Daviti's Syria.] river which runs into Damascus, is still at this day called Tarfar, Tarfaro, Farfaro, or Fer, or Pir. Stephens the Geographer calls the river of Damascus, Baradin; and Maundrel assures us, that [Maundrel's Journey from Alepo to Jerusalem.] the Syrians call it Barrady. The source of this river is in the Antilibanus, and loses itself in the marshes four or five leagues from Damascus towards the south. This Traveller says, that he could find no traces[1] in this country of the names Abana or Pharphar.

At about five hundred paces from Damascus on the south side, upon the highway, the place is shewn, where St. Paul was thrown upon the ground and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? Here a church was built, which at present is intirely ruined. In the same city there is still to be seen the house which is said to be Ananias's, who baptized and instructed St. Paul; it was changed into a Church, but the Turks have made a Mosque of it. Several writers have been of opinion that Cain and Abel dwelt near Damascus, and that this city takes its name from the blood of Abel. For damsak in Hebrew signifies a sack of blood. They still shew in these parts Abel's monument, which is, as they say, forty foot in length. But there is no reckoning upon the truth of such relations.

The Arabians call this city Damaschk or Demeschk, or Scham, which is the name of the province whereof Damascus is the [Bibl. Orient. p. 282, 772, &c.] capital. They generally believe, that this city derived its name from Dameschek Eliezer, Abraham's servant or steward; and that this Patriarch was the founder of it. Notwithstanding there are some Arabian Historians, who make the city of Damascus still more antient than Abraham's time, and pretend that it was founded and named by Demschak the son of Canaan, son to Ham, and grandson to Noah.

The Persian Geographer says, that the Field or Plain of Damascus, which extends itself between Libanus and Anti-Libanus, and is called by the Arabians Ganthah, is one of the four Paradises of the East. The three others are Obilla in Chaldæa, where there is a river of the same name, Scheb- Baoran in Persia, and the Sogdian, which the eastern people call the valley of Samarcand. They assert, that Adam was created near Damascus, of a certain red earth, which is to be seen at the same place, and which to them seemed more proper than any other to form live flesh. Many suppose the terrestrial Paradise to have been in the same place.

The city of Damascus, according to Stephens the Geographer, borrow'd its name from its founder Damascus the son of Mercury and Alcimeda. In the first Book of [Darmasch דרמשקinstead of דמשק Damash.] Chronicles ch. xviii. 5,6. Damascus is call'd Darmasch. Some derive the name of Damasch or Damsak from the Hebrew, Dam blood, and sak a righteous person, as it were to denote that this city was polluted with the blood of Abel. Damascus was a metropolitan See under the Patriarch of Antioch; but at present the Greek Patriarch of Antioch resides there. The Temple of Damascus passes for one of the finest that the Turks have. They say this Temple was first built by the Sabians, Disciples to St. John Baptist, who kept the head of this Saint hung up at the roof of this building: afterwards the Christians made themselves masters of it, and were driven from thence by the Caliph Valid, son of Abdalmelech, who for several years laid out the whole revenue which he received from Syria in embellishing it. There is a magnificent Dome which goes by the name of Aliat's Dome. There are many other Domes of a lesser size about it, one whereof is called the Dome of the Stairs, or of Mahomet's ascension up to Heaven; the third the Dome of the Resurrection of the Dead; and the fourth the Dome of the Balance, or of the last Judgement. Notwithstanding all the revolutions which have happened to Damascus, this city still passes for one of the finest and most considerable in the East.

Dan

DAN, the fifth son of Jacob, and his eldest [Gen. xxx. 4, 5, 6, &c. Gen. xlvi. 23.] by Bilhah, Rachel's handmaid. Rachel seeing that she was not blessed by God with any Children, desired Jacob to take Bilhah her servant, that by her means at least, she might have children. Jacob complied with her request, and Bilhah was delivered of a son. Hereupon Rachel said, The Lord hath judged in my favour, and hath hearkened to my voice in thus giving me a son: and she called him Dan; which signifies, He hath judged.

Dan had but one son, whose name was Hushim; notwithstanding which, he had a very numerous posterity: for when the Israelites went out of Egypt, this Tribe was composed of sixty-two thousand seven hundred men capable of bearing arms, without reckoning women and children. Jacob on [Numb. i. 38. Gen. xlix. 16, 17.] his death-bed blessed Dan in these words; Dan shall judge his people as one of the Tribes of Israel. Dan shall be a serpent by the way, an adder in the path, that biteth the horse's heels, so that his rider shall fall backward. Whereby Jacob meant, that tho' this Tribe was not one of the most powerful, and celebrated in Israel, it would notwithstanding produce one, who should be the prince of his people; which prediction was accomplished in Samson, who was descended from Dan.

Jacob adds, that Dan should be as a serpent by the way, that biteth the horse's heels, so that his rider shall fall backward; whereby he might farther describe his valour and address, in surprizing and conquering an enemy stronger than himself. Others have been of opinion, that Jacob's meaning in these last words, was, that Antichrist should come out of the Tribe of Dan: and this opinion is very commonly to be met with in the Fathers, and other ecclesiastical [Rev. vii.] writers: to support it they alledge, that St. John in the Revelations, among the other Tribes of Israel, takes no notice at all of the Tribe of Dan. But these arguments, tho' countenanced by the authority of several among the Ancients, are nevertheless not very convincing; and the original of Antichrist will always be a very uncertain question, till the event shall clear it.

The Tribe of Dan had its lot in a very fat, and fertil soil, between the Tribe of Judah eastward, and the country of the Philistins westward: but the limits of their land were very narrow, because it was part only of the territories of Judah dismembred from the rest. This obliged the people belonging to this Tribe to look for a country of more extent, whither they might send a colony of several of their families, which had not sufficient room in their own land. They sent therefore five chosen men of the [Judges xv. 1, 2, 3 &c. Josh. xix. 45, 47.] most valiant among them, to seek an habitation which they liked. They advanced as far as Laish near the sources of Jordan, where they found the people lived without any diffidence, and in full security. Of this they came and gave notice to their countrymen, who sent six hundred men well armed, with their families, to make themselves masters of Laish. As they passed over mount Ephraim, they met with a young Levite in the house of Micah, where he kept up a superstitious worship. Him they carried with them to Laish. They made themselves with great ease masters of the city, and there established that wrong way of worship which they saw practised in the house of Micah. At that time the town, which was before called Laish, took the name of Dan, upon the account of its new masters, who were of this Tribe.

[Apud Bartolocci Bibl. Rab. t.1. p.127.] A Jewish historian, by name Eldad, whom some suppose to have lived in the ninth century about the year 880, and others in the thirteenth in 1283, relates, that the Tribe of Dan being unwilling to take arms against their brethren in the reign of Jeroboam, withdrew into Ethiopia, where they made alliances with the inhabitants of the country, and became tributary to the kings of Ethiopia. They went up the river Phison, (he means the Nile) and found people black as crows, of a gigantick stature, who fed upon human flesh. The Tribes of Naphtali, Gad, and Asher followed that of Dan into this country, and having passed the rivers of Ethiopia, settled there, feeding their flocks, and dwelling under tents. They had a king at their head, descended from Oliab, and observed the principal ordinances of the Law. Their prince was able to arm an hundred and twenty thousand horse, and an hundred thousand foot. These four tribes being united, divided the four seasons of the year among themselves; each made war during three months, and brought their booty to the king, who made an equal distribution of it among the other Tribes, who staid behind to guard the country. But this account of their transplanting themselves is a mere fable, without any the least foundation in the sacred history.

Dan

DAN, a town situated at the northern extremity of the land of Israel, in the Tribe of Naphtali. The scripture often uses this way [1 Sam. xxx. 2. 2 Sam. iii. 10. xvii. 11. xxiv. 2. & passim. Euseb. in Δαν & Βηθσαμας.] of speaking, From Dan even unto Beersheba, to denote the two extremities of the land of promise. Dan lay northward, and Beersheba southward. The city of Dan was seated at the foot of Mount Libanus, upon the spring of Dan, or Jordan; and several Authors have been of opinion, that the river Jordan, Jordanes, took its name from the Hebrew, Jor, a spring, and Dan, which was a town situated near the source of it. See the article JORDAN. Dan lay four miles from Paneas, on the side of Tyre. Some have improperly confounded it with Paneas, because [Hieronym. in Ezek. xlviii. Philostorg. hist. l. 7. c. 2. alii. 1 Kings xii. 29.] Dan is near this city. Jeroboam the son of Nebat set up one of his golden calves in Dan, and the other at Bethel.

Daniel

DANIEL, the prophet of the Lord, was descended from the royal family of David, and carried captive to Babylon, when he was yet very young, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim king of Judah, in the year of the world 3398, before Jesus Christ 602, before the Vulgar Æra 606. He was chosen with his three companions Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah to continue in Nebuchadnezzar's [Dan. i. 2, 3, 4, &c.] court; and such an education was given them, as was suitable to the employments for which they were design'd. Daniel and his companions made very great progress in all the sciences of the Chaldæans, and never would consent to pollute themselves, by eating such provision as was served up at the king's table.

[Dan. xiii.] The first occasion on which Daniel made an eminent discovery of his wisdom, was in the deliverance of Susanna, who was accused unjustly, and condemned to die. He made her innocence appear, and laid open the slander of the Elders, her accusers, See the article SUSANNA. Some time after, Nebuchadnezzar having in a dream seen a large statue, composed of several metals, [Dan. ii.] which was beaten to pieces by a stone cut off from the mountain, had a mind to have his dream explained to him. But as he had forgotten it, he insisted, that the Magians should not only interpret it, but should likewise recall it to his memory. As this was what they could not possibly do, they were all condemned to death. Daniel being informed of what passed, divined, and explained the dream, and thereupon was established Governour of the province of Babylon, and chief of all the Magians and Diviners in that country.

At another time Nebuchadnezzar having in a dream seen a large tree, which was [In the year of the World 3434. before J.C. 566. before the Vulgar Æra 570. Dan. iv. 1, 2, 3, &c.] hewn down and cut in pieces, but so notwithstanding, that its root remained; Daniel foretold to him, that he would be soon reduced to the condition of beasts, and should be driven from his palace. The event immediately follow'd the interpretation, and this prince was struck with madness, and imagined that he was become an Ox. He continued seven years in this sad state, after which he re-ascended the throne, and reigned as before.

[Dan. iii. 1, 2, 3, &c.] Some time after he set up a golden statue, and made publick proclamation, that all men, when they heard the sound of musical instruments, should fall down and worship the statue which he had erected. Daniel in all probability was at that time absent from Babylon. But his three companions having [In the year of the World 3444. before J.C. 556. before the Vulgar Æra 560.] disobey'd the king's order, were thrown into a fiery furnace, out of which they came without receiving any hurt. The greatness and evidence of this miracle engaged Nebuchadnezzar to put out an edict in favour of the Jewish religion. He died a little after; and Evilmerodach succeeded him. Daniel under this prince maintained all that credit, which he had possess'd under the king his father.

Belshazzar succeeded Evilmerodach; and in his reign Daniel had the famous visions of the four beasts, which came out of [Dan. vii.] the sea, and represented the four great Empires of the Chaldæans, Persians, Greeks and Romans, or rather of the Seleucidæ and Lagidæ. After this, in the same vision, God discovered to Daniel the Persecutions which the Jews were to suffer under Antiochus Epiphanes; the vengeance of God upon him for so oppressing them; and the victories which the Maccabees would obtain over him. In the following chapter, God shewed [Dan. viii.] to Daniel a ram and an he-goat, pushing at each other with their horns. By the he-goat was meant Alexander the Great, and by the ram Darius Codomannus, the last of the Persian kings, who were the successors of Cyrus. The ram was overcome, and the he-goat became extremely powerful. The prophet described the successors of Alexander, particularly Antiochus Epiphanes, under the representation of horns rising above the head of the he-goat. This was all explained to Daniel in the same vision by the Angel Gabriel.

Belshazzar king of Chaldæa, being killed the very night, wherein he had profaned [Dan. v. 1, 2, 3. In the year of the World 3445. before J.C. 555. before the Vulgar Æra 559. Dan. ix. In the year of the World 3448. before J.C. 552. before the Vulgar Æra 556. Dan. vi. 1, 2, &c. In the year of the World 3448. before J.C. 552. before the Vulgar Æra 556. Dan. x. Dan. xi.] the sacred vessels of God's Temple, Darius the Mede, his great-uncle by the mother's side, succeeded him. This prince having established an hundred and twenty governours over the provinces of his Dominions. raised Daniel above all of them, and designed to give him the general administration of the whole kingdom; which having excited the envy of the other grandees, they engaged the king to make an Edict, forbidding every man to ask any thing of God, or of any other besides the king. The Edict was published, and observed by all the people. But Daniel continued to put up his prayers to God regularly three times a day, with his face turned towards Jerusalem. His enemies immediately gave the king notice of it, who was obliged to order, that he should be thrown into the lion's den. The next day early in the morning Darius went thither, and finding Daniel to be there in perfect health, commanded him to be taken out, and his accusers with their wives and families to be thrown into the same place in his room.

In this prince's reign, Daniel having read in the prophet Jeremiah, that seventy years would be accomplished in the desolation of Jerusalem, he pray'd earnestly to God, and fasted, in order to receive the explanation of them: when he had thus devoutly pray'd, the angel Gabriel appeared to him, and revealed something else of much greater importance, which was the death and sacrifice of the Messiah, which was to happen at the end of seventy weeks, composed each of seven years, and which altogether make the sum of four hundred and ninety years. In the third year of Cyrus's reign in Persia, which falls in with the first of Darius at Babylon, Daniel had another remarkable vision, wherein the angel Gabriel told him, that Michael had assisted him to overcome the king of Persia. that is to say, Cyrus. After this, the angel discovered to him in a manner almost as clear, as if he had related an history, whatever was to happen in Persia, after Cyrus: The coming of Alexander the Great, his conquests, the overthrow of the Persian empire, the erecting that of the Greeks; the long and continued wars between the kingdoms of Syria and Egypt; the persecutions of the saints by Antiochus Epiphanes, the destruction of this persecuting prince; and the victory and happiness of the saints.

[Dan. xii. In the year of the World 3456. before J.C. 544. before the Vulgar Æra 548.] After the death of Darius the Mede, Cyrus ascended the throne of the Persians and Medes. Daniel had always great authority in his dominions. We refer the history history of Bel and the Dragon, who were worshipped by the Babylonians, to the reign of this prince. Bel was a brazen Idol, to which there were offered every day twelve measures of fine flour, forty sheep, [Dan. xiv.] and six large vessels of wine. The Idol was believed to be alive, and to consume all this that was presented to it. Daniel hereupon undertook to undeceive the king. He told him, that not Bel, but others for him, eat what was put before him. The truth was, that there were seventy priests belonging to Bel, without reckoning their wives and children, who were supported this way, and entered by night into the Temple through subterraneous passages, without any one's perceiving it. Daniel therefore coming to the Temple with the king, directed the ordinary quantity of meat, bread, and wine, to be placed upon the altar; then obliging the priests to retire, he spread ashes upon the pavement of the Temple, and going out, shut the door close, and put the king's signet upon it.

In the night time the priests came, as usual, with their wives and children, and eat up the provisions on the altar. The next morning the king came with Daniel, and finding the door shut close, and the seals to be entire, they opened the door, and the king observing that there was nothing remaining of what was left upon the altar the evening before, cried out, Great art thou, O Bel, and with thee is no deceit at all. Daniel hereupon began to laugh, and holding the king to prevent his going any farther, said to him, See this pavement, whose footsteps are these? The king said, I see the footsteps of men, women, and children; and he was extremely angry. He commanded therefore the priests, their wives and children to be seized, and they shewed him the private little doors through which they entred, and eat whatever was put upon the table: the king therefore commanded them to be put to death, and delivered the idol Bel into Daniel's power, who destroy'd him and his temple.

There was a great Dragon in the same city, which the Babylonians worshipped. The king said to Daniel, You cannot say now but this is a god, therefore adore him. Daniel reply'd, I adore the Lord my God; but this is nothing like a deity. Let me have your permission, and I will slay him [Dan. xiv. 22, 23, &c. In the year of the World 3457. before J. C. 543. before the Vulgar Æra 547.] without making use either of staff or sword. The king permitting him, Daniel took pitch, fat, and hair, and seething them together, made lumps thereof; these he put into the dragon's mouth, and the dragon burst asunder. The Babylonians being strangely provoked with this, came to the king and told him, that unless he delivered Daniel to them, they would destroy him and his family. The king therefore was compell'd to put Daniel into their hands, and they cast him into the lion's den, where he remained six days. Now there were seven lions in the den, and every day they gave them the bodies of two men, and two sheep, which then were not given them, to the intent they might devour Daniel.

At that time, the prophet Habbacuc, who was in Judæa, having made provision for his reapers, the Angel of the Lord directed him to carry the dinner which he had prepared, to Babylon, and give it to Daniel, who was in the lion's den. Habbacuc answered, I never was at Babylon, and know not where the den is. Then the Angel of the Lord took him by the crown of the head, and holding him by the hair, carried him through the air to Babylon; there setting him upon the den, he gave Daniel his dinner, and the Angel immediately convey'd Habbacuc back to the place from whence he had taken him.

Upon the seventh day, the king came to bewail Daniel, and as he approach'd near to the den, he saw Daniel sitting among the lions: whereupon he immediately cried with a loud voice, and said, Great art thou, O Lord God of Daniel; and taking him out, he cast those in, who would have destroy'd this prophet, and the lions devoured them in a moment before his face. This is what the Scripture teaches us concerning Daniel: notwithstanding there are some Authors, who maintain, that there were two Daniels, one of David's family, who is the prophet, of whom we have been speaking; the other of the Tribe of Levi, and of Ithamar's family, who is said to be the author of the history concerning the deliverance of Susanna, and of that relating to the death of the Dragon, and the destruction of Bel's Temple. But there is no solid proof of this distinction of two Daniels.

The reputation of Daniel was so great, even in his life-time, that it became a [Ezek. xxxiii. 3. Ezek. xiv. 14, 20. Antiq. l. x. c. 12.] proverb; Thou art wiser than Daniel, said Ezekiel in an ironical way to the king of Tyre; and in another place of the same prophet, God said, Though these three men Noah, Daniel and Job were in it, they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness. Josephus tells us, that God bestowed bestowed many favours on him, and that he was advanced to the rank of the most considerable prophets. He enjoy'd the good graces of the princes with whom he lived, and the affection of the people, to his death, after which his reputation was immortal. Some of the Jews[1] shewed an inclination formerly to exclude Daniel from the number of the prophets; but their dislike to this prophet proceeded from hence only, viz. that his predictions were too clear and too express for Jesus Christ, and that he points out the time of his coming too evidently.

It is believed that Daniel died in Chaldæa, and that he did not take the advantage of the permission granted by Cyrus to all Jews, of returning to their country. The great employments which he possessed in the Persian empire, kept him probably among them. St. Epiphanius says he died at Babylon; and herein he is followed by the generality of Historians. Others think he died at Shushan or Susa, where he passed a good part of his life, and had many visions. Benjamin of Tudela relates, that his monument was shewn at Chuzestan, which is the ancient Susa. Josephus says, that in his time [Antiq. l. x. c. ult.] there was still to be seen at Ecbatane, the Capital of Media, a tower of admirable structure, said to have been built by Daniel. The kings of Persia and Media were buried in it, and the guard of it was committed to a priest of Jewish extraction.

[Hieronym. Præf. in Dan. & in Dan. xiii.] Among Daniel's writings, there are some pieces which have at all times constantly been esteemed to be Canonical; and others which have been long contested. Whatsoever is written in Hebrew, or Chaldee, (for some parts of his works are in Chaldee mixed with Hebrew) is all generally acknowledged to be Canonical both by Jews and Christians. But there has been great opposition to those parts, which are written in Greek only, and were never properly admitted to be Canonical, till after the Decree of the Council of Trent. In St. Jerom's time, the Jews were hereupon divided; some admitted the whole history of Susanna, others rejected it intirely; some again received one part, and rejected another. Josephus the historian has said nothing concerning the story of Susanna, nor that of Bel and the Dragon. But Josephus Ben-Gorion, a Jewish Author, who wrote in Hebrew, relates at full length every thing that has any respect to Bel and the Dragon, and says nothing of Susanna. The reader may see every thing that concerns the canonical Authority of these places treated more at length in our Preface upon Daniel.

The twelve first chapters of Daniel are partly in Hebrew, partly in Chaldee, and the two last in Greek[2]. He speaks Hebrew, where what he delivers is a bare narrative; but he relates in Chaldee, the conversations which he had in this language with the Magians, and the kings Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, and Darius the Mede. In the [Dan. ii. 4. & seq. iii. v. vi. viii. Dan. ii. & iv. 1, 2, & seq. ad 34. Apud Hieronym. loco citato, Vide Hieronym. Præfat. in Dan.] same language he reports Nebuchadnezzar's Edict, published by him after Daniel had interpreted his dream concerning a great golden Image. This shews the extreme accuracy of this Prophet, who relates the very words of those persons whom he introduces as speaking. The third chap. ver. 24, and following ones, as far as the nineteenth, are in Greek, as well as the two last chapters; and it is a great question among the Criticks, whether they were ever writ in Hebrew. The Greek Version which we have of all Daniel, is Theodotion's; that of the Septuagint has been long since lost.

Porphyry pretended, that the Prophecies, which we have in Daniel's name, were falsely ascribed to him; that this work was written by an Impostor, who lived in Judæa, in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, who in order to procure credit, counterfeited an inspired person, and set down those things in a prophetick style, which he had seen with his own eyes, and were transacted in his own time: that if he advanced any thing beyond the time of Epiphanes, he did so by chance, and contrary to truth. This celebrated Enemy of our Religion had observed so much clearness in the prophecies of Daniel, that he took them to be histories. But that Daniel lived at Babylon long before Antiochus Epiphanes, and there wrote the prophecies, which go under his name, is what cannot reasonably be contested. See St. Jerom's Preface to Daniel, and our Preface to the same Prophet.

The Chronology of Daniel we dispose in this order: He was brought to Babylon in the year of the world 3398, at the age perhaps of twelve years. The history of Susanna might have happened in 3401. Nebuchadnezzar's dream of a great statue of gold, in 3402. The same prince's dream of a great tree, which was cut down to the root, in 3434. The year following, Nebuchadnezzar run mad, and imagined himself to be an ox. In 3443 he ascended the throne again. The same year the history of the golden statue erected by this prince might have happened. Daniel had the vision of the four beasts in the beginning of Belshazzar's reign, 3446. Two years after, that is to say, in 3448, he had that of the ram and the he-goat, who pushed their horns one against the other. The visions of Daniel set down in the ix. x. xi. and xii. chapters of his prophecy we refer to the year 3449, in the beginning of the reign of Darius the Mede. Lastly, the history of Bel and the Dragon happened in the reign of Cyrus, about the year 3468. The time of Daniel's death is not known.

The Rabbins, who are out of humour with Daniel, in all probability because his prophecies are too evident proofs, that Jesus Christ is the true Messiah, and that the time of his coming, who is called the desire of all nations, is passed; maintain that he ought not to be ranked among the prophets for two[3] reasons: first, because he did not live in the Holy Land, out of which the spirit of prophesy does not reside: secondly because he spent his life in the court of a great king, in the enjoyment of honours and pleasures, and in a manner very different from the other prophets way of living. Some add that he was an Eunuch, which opinion they ground upon the following words of Isaiah [2 Kings ix. 18.] to Hezekiah; And of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away, and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon. Now the Law excludes all sorts of Eunuchs from the Church or Congregation of the Lord. Non [Deut. xxiii. 1.] introibit Eunuchus Ecclesiam Domini.

It is true, Abenezra and the generality of the Rabbins purge him from this last defect, but the other accusations remain; and many are content to place his writings among the Hagiographa, which are of much less authority than the canonical Scriptures. They add farther another spiteful remark against this Prophet. They pretend that while his three companions Shadrach, Meshech, and [Gemar. Cod. Sanhedr. Coch. Dan. iii.] Abednego resisted the impious orders of the king of Babylon, and were thrown into the fiery furnace, Daniel went into Egypt: what to do? to look for hogs, which he convey'd cunningly and by stealth out of this country. But Josephus testifies the great [Joseph. Antiq. l. x. c. 12. Ezek. xiv. 4. xxviii. 3. Matth. xxiv. 15.] merit of Daniel. The prophet Ezekiel commends him as one of the most illustrious persons of his time; and Jesus Christ in the Gospel clearly acknowledges him to be a Prophet.

Some believed that Daniel returned with Esdras into Judæa; and the eastern people [Bibl. Orient. p. 287.] declare, that he was sent back thither by Bahaman the son of Asfendias king of Persia. They add, that he returned into Persia, and died in the city of Susa. Josephus[4] relates, that Daniel built a famous edifice at Ecbatane, in the form of a castle, which was still in being in the time of this Historian, and was so admirable for its workmanship, that it seem'd to have been but just finished, so well did it preserve its first lustre. In this palace the kings of Persia chose to have the place of their interment, and in consideration of its first founder, the guard of it was still in his time committed to one of the Jewish nation.

Others are of opinion, that he dwelt at Babylon or Susa, and that he never returned into Judæa: his great age, his employments, and the want which his brethren had of his protection in the place of their captivity, might probably excuse him from returning into his own country. There were many men who did not think it convenient to leave Chaldæa, where they lived in repose, and had been long settled, to go and seek for an uncertain settlement in a land reduced almost to a wilderness.

[Bibl. Orient. p. 709. Raml, & 283 Danial.] Some oriental Authors attribute to Daniel the invention of Geomancy, which they call Reml; others ascribe it to Edris, who is the same with the patriarch Enoch. This Geomancy consists in marking many points on tables prepared for this purpose, which they call Raml. These points thus disposed in a certain number in many unequal lines, may likewise be described with a pen on paper; and he who divines by the help of this art is called Rammal.

They likewise make Daniel the author of a volume intitled, Principles relating to the explantion of dreams; and there is another book in the king of France's library with this title, Odmath-al-mantoul ân Danial alnabi, which contains predictions of the prophet Daniel received by tradition from him. This is a work which abounds with falsities, forged by the Mahometans, and founded on the real prophecies of Daniel. They farther assert, that this Prophet preached the Unity of God throughout all Chaldæa; and that he converted the king of Persia, Lohorasb, and Cyrus. That the latter gave Daniel the government of Syria, and the possession of the city of Damascus.

Daphne

DAPHNE. Josephus speaks of a fountain so called, which encreased the waters of Jordan. St. Jerom and the Chaldee read likewise the fountain of Daphne, Numb. xxiv. 11. where in the Hebrew it is said only the fountain, in this manner: And the coast shall go down from Shepham to Riblah, on the east-side[1] of the fountain of Daphnis; in the Hebrew, on the east-side of the fountain.

It is very probable that St. Jerom and the Chaldee Interpreters had in view the fountain of Daphne near Antioch. But they might likewise have some regard to the fountain Daphne, near the lake Semechon, mentioned by Josephus. Nevertheless it must be confessed, that there is some difficulty in the text of Josephus. He says, That the lake Semechon is thirty furlongs wide, and sixty in length; and that the marshes belonging to it reach as far as the plains of Daphne, which are very delicious, and are made so particularly by the fine springs of water, which help to enlarge the lesser Jordan something higher than the Temple of the golden Calf. It is very well known, that the Temple of the golden Calf was at Dan; wherefore it is very probable that instead of the plains of Daphne, we should read, the plains of Dan.

DAPHNE, a Grove, or Suburb near Antioch, the Capital of Syria. This Suburb was not contiguous to the City, but at about forty furlongs, or a league and a half distance from it. It was celebrated for its fine Water, its Wood, and Temple, which was a Sanctuary to all those who retired thither. The high priest Onias III. apprehending the designs of the usurper Menelaus, retreated to this place of refuge. But Menelaus having corrupted Andronicus, who commanded at Antioch in the absence of Antiochus Epiphanes, Onias was treacherously prevailed with to come out of his sanctuary, and massacred by Andronicus's [2 Macc. iv. 33. The Oracle of Daphne, as Sozomen, Theodoret, and St. John Chrysostom tell us, was silent in the reign of the Emperor Julian; and that his brother Gallus, who was a Christian, resolving to purge this place of the Superstition which prevailed there, ordered the body of St. Babylas, who had been bishop of this City, and suffered martyrdom there an hundred years before under the Emperor Decius, to be removed from Antioch to Daphne; and that from the time of this Saint's being present there, the Devil, as had been expected, ceased intirely to deliver Oracles in this place. But Julian designing to make war against the Persians, some time after came to Daphne, to consult the Oracle concerning the success of it: he sacrificed a great number of victims, but all the answer the Oracle gave him, was, that the presence of Babylas had made it impossible to utter any thing. Hereupon the Emperor Julian, in great passion, commanded the body of this holy Bishop to be removed to some other place; but the lightning fell upon the Temple of Apollo, reduced the Altar and Statue of the false God to ashes, and ruined almost the whole Edifice. The Churches of St. Michael and St. Euphemius, were afterwards built at Daphne, by the direction of the Emperor Zeno.

Darcmonim

DARCMONIM. We find this word in the Hebrew of the Book of Ezra ii. 69. and in Nehemiah vii. 70, 71, 72. and it is generally translated, Drachms. Now a Drachm is a piece of money which was current among the Greeks, worth about seven pence[1].

St. Jerom, Ezra ii. 69. renders it Solidos, and the Septuagint in the same place translate it, golden Mina's. In Nehemiah vii. 70, 71, 72. St. Jerom constantly translates it Drachms, and the Septuagint in the same place pieces of gold. We believe with M. Pelletier of Rohan, that the Darcmonim are the same coin as the Adarcmonim, to be met with 1 Chr. xxix. 7. and Ezra viii. 27. and that both signify Daricks, coin made of very fine gold, and, as it is said, stamp'd by Darius the son of Hystaspes, king of Persia, or rather by another Darius more ancient, according to the Scholiast of Aristophanes; for Darius the son of Hystaspes did not appear till [Herod. l. 4. c. 166. the first p. xviii. Scholiast. in Aristoph. Ecclesiast. 598. Gronov. de pecunia vet. l. 1. c. 3.] many years after Ezra.

M. le Pelletier, whom we lately mentioned, values them at eleven livres, eleven sous, nine deniers and a quarter; which, according to his computation, was the value of half a shekel of gold among the Hebrews. But M. Gronovius reckons that they were worth twenty drachms in silver; consequently, that a thousand Darcmonim would make about 550 pounds sterling, and twenty thousand Daricks about 11000 pounds sterling.

DARICKS. See DARCMONIM. The Daricks derive their name from Darius the Mede[1], otherwise called Cyaxares, uncle to Cyrus, who was left by this prince Governour of Babylon, and the territories won by him from the Chaldæans, while he was employ'd in his expedition against Egypt, Syria, and the countries adjacent. As Darius found immense treasures at Babylon amassed by the kings of Chaldæa, he ordered a gold coin to be made out of them; which, for the purity and fineness of it, for there was scarce any alloy in it, was for many ages prefer'd to all the coins of the East: they were scattered even so far as into Greece, where they were very much [Bernard. de pond. & mens. antiq. p. 171.] esteemed. According to Dr. Bernard, who has written concerning the Weights and Measures of the Ancients, a Darick weighed two grains more than a guinea. Other pieces of the same name and value were stamp'd afterwards, and there were even Half-Daricks, which were worth a moiety only of the first, and were but of half their weight.

Darius (I)

I. DARIUS. There are several Princes of this name mentioned in history: but we shall confine ourselves to those only, who are taken notice of in Scripture. Darius [Dan. v. 31. ix. 1. xi. 1, &c. Dan. vi. 31.] the Mede, spoken of in Daniel, was the son of Astyages King of the Medes, and brother to Mandane, the mother of Cyrus, and Amyit the mother of Evilmerodach, and grandmother to Belshazzar. Thus Darius the Mede was uncle by the mother's side. to Evilmerodach and Cyrus. The Hebrew text generally calls him Dariavesch or Darius. The Septuagint give him the name of Artaxerxes in Dan. vii. and the Greek of ch. xiii. 65. of the same Daniel, calls him Astyages. Lastly, Xenophon throughout speaks of him by the name of Cyaxares. This Prince succeeded Belshazzar King of Babylon, his nephew's son, his sister's grandson, who died in the year of the World 3442, before Jesus Christ 558, before the Vulgar Æra 554. Daniel does not tell us that there had been [Isai. xiii. xiv. xlv. xlvi. xlvii. Jer. l. li.] war between them; but the prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah do very clearly, whether they mean the wars between Darius the Mede and the Babylonians, or that which Cyrus declared against them.

Darius having got upon the throne of Babylon, thought fit to appoint an hundred and twenty of the principal Lords in his kingdom to govern the different Provinces [Dan. vi. 1, 2.] of his Dominions. Over all the rest he set three, whereof Daniel was one, to whom the several Governours were to be accountable. As Daniel had more authority than all of them; and the king shewed an inclination to make him Superintendant of the whole kingdom, the other princes conspired to destroy him. To this end they engaged the king to make an Edict forbidding every man to put up any petition either to God or man, excepting to himself. This Edict was published, and obey'd by all the people. But Daniel continuing his prayers regularly three times a day, his enemies obliged the king to give orders, that he should be thrown into the den of lions; because what the king had once ordained with the advice and consent of his great Lords, it was not in his power to reverse. Darius was very much afflicted at Daniel's condemnation, and the next morning early going to the den of lions, and there finding him secure and unhurt, he commanded him to be taken out of the den, and his accusers with their wives and [In the year of the World 3450. before J. C. 550. before the Vulgar Æra 554.] children to be cast into it.

It was in the reign of this Darius the Mede, that Daniel had the famous Vision of the seventy Weeks, after the expiration whereof Christ was to suffer death; and that of the Persecutions which the Jews were to undergo under Antiochus Epiphanes. These visions are related in the ix. x. xi. xii. chapters of this Prophet. Darius the Mede died at Babylon about the year of the World 3456, before Jesus Christ 544, and before the Vulgar Æra 548. He was succeeded by Cyrus in the Monarchy of the Persians, Medes, and Chaldæans, who were once more united under his Empire.

Darius (III)

[Justin. l. 3. Herodot. l. 3.] III. DARIUS, the son of Hystaspes, was one of the seven Conspirators, who killed the impostor Smerdis, and the Magians, who had usurped the kingdom of Persia. Every one knows how Darius the son of Hystaspes came to be acknowledged king. For as they had agreed among themselves, that he should be owned by all the rest as king, whose horse first saluted the rising sun with his neighing, Darius's Groom, the day before they were to meet for this purpose, carried his master's horse with a mare to the place of rendezvous. The next morning the seven Conspirators met there. Darius was there at the sun's rising, and his horse enlivened with what had passed there the day before, began to neigh: whereupon the six Lords, his Competitors, immediately dismounted, and prostrating themselves before him, unanimously vested him with the royal Authority. This fell out in the year of the world 3488, before Jesus Christ 517, before the Vulgar Æra 521.

[Herodot. l. 7. c. 3. Herodot. l. 7. c. 69.] Darius married first of all Atossa the daughter of Cyrus, who had before been married to Cambyses her own brother, and was afterwards to the impostor Smerdis. Herodotus says, that Darius had four sons by her, and that for a long time she had a great share in the government; for which reason it is thought she was not the same as Vashti, who was very early divorced by this Prince. He married besides Aristone, for whom he had a particular tenderness, preferring her before his other wives, and erected a statue to her of hammer'd gold. She and Esther were probably the same. Besides these two wives, he had many others, according to the custom of the eastern Princes. His first wife was the daughter of Gobrias; he married likewise the princess Parmis, daughter to Smerdis the son [Herodot. l. 7. c. 88. Idem ibidem, c. 68, 69. Idem, l. 7. c. 224.] of Cyrus, and Phœdima, daughter to Othanes, and Phralagune, the only daughter of Atarnes, brother to Darius. One of these was probably the person whom he divorced, and who is called Vashti in the book of Esther. I shall not relate this history at length, it will be seen more particularly in the Article Esther, and some account of it has already been given in that of Ahasuerus. We place the divorce of Vashti in the fourth year of Darius, and of the World 3487. Esther became his wife, and was acknowledged to be Queen about the year 3488, before the Vulgar Æra 514.

In the second year of this Prince's reign, and in that of the World 3485, the Jews, encouraged by the exhortations of the prophets Haggai and Zachary, began again to work upon the Temple, in which structure they had made no progress ever since the time of Cyrus. Their enemies gave intelligence to Darius of what they were about, who permitted [Ezra vi. 12, 14.] them to go on with it without interruption. Haman the son of Hammedatha, having abused the king's goodness towards him, by desiring the death of all the Jews who were in his dominions, Darius understanding the injustice of his request, ordered him to be hanged upon the gallows, which he had prepared for Mordecai, and permitted the Jews to take vengeance on their enemies in 3496.

This Prince reduced Babylon after a siege of twenty months. This city, which had been formerly the capital of the whole East, and the mistress of all nations in the reigns of Nebuchadnezzar, his sons, and grandsons, could not bear without great reluctancy, to see itself reduced to the second rank, and divested of its dearest prerogatives, upon the kings of Persia transferring the seat of their Empire to Susa. She resolved hereupon to deliver herself from the yoke of servitude, and revolt from the Persians. Having this [Herodot. l. 3. Justin. l. 1. c. 10. Polyæn. l. 7.] design therefore, and taking advantage of the revolution which happened in Persia, first at the death of Cambyses, and afterwards upon the massacre of the Magians, they began secretly to make preparations for war, and to sustain a long siege. They employ'd four years in these preparations, and when they thought their city abundantly furnished with provisions for several years, they set up the standard of rebellion, and refused to obey Darius the son of Hystaspes.

This Prince levied an army in great haste, and laid siege to Babylon with all his forces. The Babylonians did not venture to expose themselves in the open field against a prince of Darius's valour, but shut themselves up within their walls, which were of an height and thickness that secured them from insults; and as they had nothing to fear but famine, they took the most barbarous resolution that was ever heard of, which was to destroy all the useless persons, and such as were incapable of fighting. They got together all the women and children, and strangled them, every one reserving only the most beloved of his wives, and one servant to perform the offices of their families. Thus the following words of Isaiah were verified, Thou saidst, O Babylon, I shall be always mistress; and thou hast considered carefully what was to befall thee in the end. Hear now, O delicious city, thou that dwellest without fear, and sayst in thine heart; I am, and no other is like me: I shall not be a widow, nor shall I experience thy loss of children; these two evils shall fall suddenly upon thee in one day, both widowhood, and loss of children, &c. And in reality, may not Babylon be said to have suffered these two misfortunes in one day, by the death of her women and children.

Some believe with reason, that the Jews who dwelt at Babylon, were either driven thence by the Babylonians, as too much in the interest of king Darius, who was in all things very favourable to them; or that of themselves they resolved upon departing from thence, when they saw the people determined to rebel. The Prophets had frequently admonished them to fly from this criminal city. Go forth from Babylon, said [Isai. xlviii. 7, 8, 9. Isa. xlviii. 20. Jer. l. 8.] Isaiah, flee from the Chaldæans, declare with a loud voice the Lord hath redeemed his people. And Jeremiah, Remove out of the midst of Babylon, and go forth out of the land of the Chaldæans; for lo, I will raise and cause to come up against Babylon, an assembly of great nations from the northcountry, who shall take it, and Chaldæa shall [Jerem. li. 6, 7, 8, 9.] be a spoil. And again, Flee out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver every man his soul; be not cut off in her iniquity; for this is the time of the Lord's vengeance. Babylon hath been a golden cup in the Lord's hand, that made all the earth drunken; the nations have drunken of her vice, therefore the nations are mad: she is suddenly fallen and destroyd, &c. Lastly, Zachary almost at the same time, that is to say, about the fifth year of Darius, addressing himself to the Jews of Babylon, says, Flee from the land of the north, saith [Zech. xi. 6, 7.] the Lord—Deliver thyself, O Sion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon.

Darius the son of Hystaspes lay twenty months before Babylon, without making any considerable progress; the city was furnished with all sorts of provisions for many years: the height and strength of its ramparts render'd it impregnable, and the resolution of its inhabitants was extreme. Within the inclosure of [Q. Curt. l. 5. c. 1.] Babylon, there was a large void space of land, capable of being cultivated, which was a mighty help to the besieged; so that it could be taken neither by assault nor famine. Zopyrus, one of Darius's Generals, undertook to get possession of it by stratagem. He had his nose and ears cut off, and made several incisions over his whole body, and in this condition threw himself into the place, complaining bitterly of Darius's cruelty, whom he accused with having unjustly treated him in this manner. He so effectually engaged the confidence of the Babylonians, that they trusted him with the government of their city, and the command of their troops. He made use of these opportunities to deliver up the city to the king, who during the remainder of his life, heaped honours and wealth upon him.

He no sooner had Babylon in his power, but he ordered the hundred gates of brass to be taken away, according to Jeremiah's [Jerem. li. 58.] prediction in this particular: Thus saith the Lord, the broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken, and her high gates shall be burnt with fire, and the people shall labour in vain. This is what we have related by [Herod. l. 3.] Herodotus. Darius pulled down the walls of Babylon, not entirely, for he left them fifty cubits high, instead of two hundred, which was the height of them before; and carried off all the gates, which Cyrus, when he took the city, had not done. Lastly, he commanded three thousand of the most mutinous to be crucified; and pardon'd all the rest: and to prevent Babylon's continuing a desart, he took care to have fifty thousand women brought from the neighbouring provinces to supply the place of those who had been killed in the beginning of the siege.

The other wars which Darius the son of Hystaspes was concerned in, and the other events of his reign, have no relation to our subject. We read, that this prince, who appeared always to be very favourable to the Jews, and had married Esther, and advanced Mordecai to great honours, and who consequently must have had some knowledge of the true God, towards the end of his life fell into the errors of the Magians, who were worshippers of fire. Zoroastres coming to his court at Susa, so [Religio vet. Persarum, c. 24, 25, 26.] effectually insinuated himself into the king's favour, and proposed his opinions to him with so much address, that Darius embraced them: and his example was followed by the Courtiers, the Nobility, and all the Persons of distinction in the kingdom. Thus Magianism, or the worship of fire, became the prevailing Religion in Persia, and so continued to be till the establishment of Mahometanism in the same country.

[Porphyr. de abstinentiâ.] Zoroastres attempted afterwards to engage Argasp king of the oriental Scythians, a zealous Sabian, to embrace his religion; and to accomplish this more easily, he made use of Darius's authority.

The Scythian king, enraged at the design of imposing arbitrarily upon him in a matter of this nature, invaded Bactria with an army, beat the troops of Darius, killed Zoroastres, with all his priests to the number of fourscore, and demolished all the Temples of this province. Darius made haste thither, fell upon the Scythians before they had leisure to retreat, made a great slaughter of their troops, drove them out of the country, and rebuilt the Temples which they had destroy'd, particularly that of Balch, which was as it were the metropolis of all the religion of the Magians: Darius restored it with extraordinary grandeur and magnificence, and out of gratitude, it was called afterwards, The Temple of Darius Hystaspis. He is said to have assumed the title of Master of the Magians, and to have required that this title should be engrav'd upon his tomb.

We shall in the article Esther examine the difficulties that are formed with relation to Esther's husband, which quality we attribute to Darius the son of Hystaspes.

Darius Codomannus (III)

III. DARIUS CODOMANNUS was of the royal family of the Persians, but very remote from the crown, and in a low condition, when Bagoas the famous eunuch, who had successively procured the destruction of two kings, Ochus and Arses, [Diodor. l. 17. Diodor. Sic. l. 17.] placed him upon the throne. His true name was Codoman, and he did not take that of Darius till he was made king. He was descended from Darius Nothus, who had a son named Ostanes, father to Arsanes, who begat Codomannus. He was at first no more [Plutarch. de fortuna Alexand. & in vita ejusdem.] than Astande, that is to say, Courier, or at best Post-master-general to the emperor Ochus. But on a certain day, when he was at this prince's army, one of the enemies came and challenged the bravest of the Persians. Codomannus offered himself for [Diodor. l. 17. Justin. l. x. c. 3.] the combat, and overcame him, and for his reward was made governour of Armenia. From hence Bagoas took him, in order to place him on the throne of Persia.

Bagoas soon perceived, that Darius was not of a humour to leave the government to him, and content himself with the bare title of king. He resolved therefore to get rid of him, and prepared poison to destroy him. But Darius having intelligence of his design, obliged him to drink it off himself, and so secured to himself the quiet possession of the crown. History represents Darius to us as one of the handsomest, best-made men in all the Persian empire, and at the same time as the bravest, most generous, gentlest and most merciful.

Alexander the Great having been chosen by the States and free Cities of Greece, to command in chief the army which was designed to act against the Persians, an honour which had been confer'd on king Philip his father, a little before his death; marched into Asia at the head of thirty thousand foot and five thousand horse, and engaging with Darius at the passage of Granicus, who had an army five times stronger than his, he obtained a signal victory over him. He defeated him a second time at Issus; whereupon Darius three several times made proposals of peace to him: but seeing there were no hopes of it, he levied a new army, two hundred thousand strong, which he led towards Niniveh. Thither Alexander followed him: the battle was fought near a little village called Gangamales; Darius lost it; Alexander had not above fifty thousand men. After this defeat, Darius fled towards Media, with hopes of raising such a power in this and the northern provinces of the empire, which continued under his subjection, as might enable him once more to try his fortune.

He arrived at Ecbatane, the capital of Media, where he gathered together the [Arrian. l. 3. Diod. l. 17. Plutarch. in Alex. Curt. l. 5.] broken remains of his army, to which he added some new levies. Alexander having spent the winter at Babylon and Persepolis, took the field to go in search after Darius, who upon notice of his march, departed from Ecbatane with a design of retreating into Bactria, there to fortify himself, and encrease his army: but he soon changed his resolution, stopt short, and determin'd once more to hazard a battle, tho' his army at that time consisted only of forty thousand men. While he was preparing for this encounter, Bessus, Governour of Bactria, and Narbazanes, another great man of Persia, seized upon Darius, loaded him with chains, put him in a covered chariot, and fled, carrying him with them towards Bactria, with a full purpose, if Alexander pursued them, to purchase their peace by delivering him up to his enemy; if not, to kill him, take possession of the crown, and begin the war anew.

Eight days after their departure, Alexander arrived at Ecbatane, and set out upon the pursuit after them, which he continued for eleven days together: at last he stopt at Rages in Media, despairing to overtake Darius: from thence he went into Parthia, where he learned what had happen'd to this unfortunate prince. After a precipitate march of many days, he at length overtook the traytors, who seeing themselves so pressed, did what they could to compel Darius to get on horseback, and save himself with them; but he refusing to comply with them, they stab'd him in several places, and left him expiring in his chariot. He was dead when Alexander came up, who could not forbear weeping at so sad a spectacle. He cover'd Darius with his own cloak, and sent him to Sisigambis the wife of this prince, that she might bury him in the tombs belonging to the kings of Persia.

Thus were verified the prophecies of Daniel, who had foretold the destruction of the Persian monarchy. He had represented this monarchy under the idea of a bear, with three rows of teeth in its mouth, to which they said, Arise, and glut thy-self with carrion. But this beast was kill'd by another like a leopard, with four wings and four heads. The same Empire of the Persians was represented in the statue which appeared to Nebuchadnezzar in a dream, [Dan. ii. 39, 40.] by the breast and arms of silver; and that of Alexander was described by the belly and thighs of brass.

In another place the empire of the Persians is again figured to us under the idea of [Dan. vii. 5, 6. Dan. viii. 4, 5, 6, 20, 22.] a ram, butting with its horns westward, northward, and southward: nothing could resist him; he did what he pleased, and became very powerful. But at the same time a goat, (that is, Alexander the Great) came from the west, and over-run the world without touching the earth: he had a very large horn between his two eyes. He advanced against the ram that had two horns, and springing forward with impetuosity, he run against him with all his force, attack'd him with fury, struck him, broke his two horns, and having thrown him down, trampled him under foot, without any one's being able to rescue the ram out of his power. Nothing can be added to the clearness of these prophecies.

The Greek Authors agree, that the motive of the war undertaken by the Greeks against the Persians, was Xerxes's enterprize against Greece, wherein, according to [Dan. xi. 2. D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 285.] Daniel's expression, this prince stirr'd up all people against Greece. But the oriental Authors relate the matter otherwise. They say, that Darab II. king of Persia, and son of Bahaman, having made war with Philip king of Macedon, obliged him to sue for peace, which he obtained, but not without the following conditions: First, to pay the victorious king a thousand Beizaths, or an annual tribute of a thousand gold eggs. These Beizaths were valued each at forty drams in silver; and in the second place to give him his daughter in marriage. Darab having received king Philip's daughter for his wife, and perceiving on his wedding night that she had an offensive breath, resolved to send her back to her father, tho' she was already with child.

Philip ordered her to be guarded carefully till she was delivered of Alexander, whom Philip declared to be his, and left him his successor in the kingdom. Darab king of Persia died likewise about the same time, and was succeeded by his son Dara, (this is Darius Codomannus) who was a violent and cruel prince, and so alienated the affections of the People, and Grandees of his Court, that they sent a deputation to Alexander, exhorting him to make a conquest of Persia. Alexander therefore refusing to pay the ordinary tribute, and answering those who came to demand it, that the Hen which laid Beizaths, or golden Eggs, was fled to the other world, Dara levied a great army to make war against him. Alexander prepared to give him a good reception, and went even into Persia to meet him; gave him battle, and defeated him. Dara retiring to his tent, two of his Officers, natives of Hamadan, run him through the body with their swords, and fled to the victor's camp. Alexander, upon information of what had passed, came in great haste to Dara's tent, who was still breathing, took his head, placed it upon his knees, lamented his sad fate, and protested to him, that he had no hand in his death. Dara opening his eyes, desired him to revenge him on his servants for their perfidiousness; gave him his daughter Roxana in marriage, and recommended to him not to put the Government of Persia into the hands of Greeks. Thus he died within Alexander's arms, who was his brother, as the Historians relate, being born of Philip's daughter, wife to Darab, as Dara was born of another wife of the same Darab, father to Dara.

Darius Codoman, or Codomannus, reigned but six years, from the year of the world 3668 to 3674. He died in 3674, in the year 326 before the birth of Jesus Christ, and the year 330 before the Vulgar Æra.

Darkness

[Gen. i.] DARKNESS, Obscurity. Darkness was upon the face of the deep; that is to say, the Chaos was plunged in thick Darkness, because hitherto the Light was not created. One of the most terrible sorts of Darkness was that which Moses brought upon Egypt as a plague to the inhabitants of it. It was so thick, as to be, as it were, palpable, and so that no one could discover any object; so horrible, that no one durst to stir out of his [Exod. x. 21, 22.] place; and so lasting, that it endured three days and three nights[1]. The Author of the Book of Wisdom describes it thus: " The Egyptians were " shut up in their houses, the prisoners of " darkness, and fettered with the bonds of " a long night . . . . . The corner that held " them did not keep them from fear: but [Wisd. xvii. 1, 3, 4, &c.] " noises, as of waters falling down, sounded " about them, and sad visions appeared " unto them with heavy countenances. No " power of the fire might give them light, " neither could the bright flames of the " stars endure to lighten that horrible " night. Only there appeared unto them " a fire kindled of itself, very dreadful: " for being much terrified, they thought " the things which they saw to be worse " than the sight they saw not."

The Darkness which happened at our Saviour's death, began at the sixth hour of the day, that is to say, at noon; and ended not till the third hour, that is to say, at three a-clock in the afternoon. Thus it lasted for the whole time almost of our Saviour's being upon the cross, he having been crucified a little before the sixth hour, and dying a little after the ninth. Compare St. Matthew, chap. xxvii. v. 45. with St. John, chap. xix. v. 14. and with St. Mark, chap. xv. v. 25. and see the Commentators and Authors of Concordances on these places. Origen on St. Matthew, Maldonat, Erasmus, Vatablus, and several others were of opinion, that this Darkness covered Judæa only, which is sometimes mentioned by the name of the whole earth. St. Chrysostom, Euthymius, Theophylact, and some others, assert that it extended over our whole Hemisphere, or at least over the greatest part of it. Origen says, that it was caused by a thick mist, which deprived men of the sight of the sun; and it is certain that we can scarce conceive it otherwise, since the moon being then at the full, the eclipse of the sun was naturally impossible.

Julius Africanus, Eusebius, and St. Jerom, in their several Chronicles, refer that eclipse of the sun, which Phlegon mentions, to the time of our Saviour's death. This author says, it was the greatest eclipse that till then had been seen, since at noon-day the stars were discernible in the heavens. This happened in the fourth year of the hundred and second Olympiad, which is the year of Jesus Christ's death. Tertullian refers the Heathens to the publick Archives for an account [Tertull. Apolog. c. xxi.] of that Darkness which happened at noon upon the day of Jesus Christ's death. The Author known by the name of Dionysius [Dionys. Areop. Ep. 7. ad Polycarp.] the Areopagite says, that being in Egypt, and seeing the eclipse which happened at that time, against all the rules of Astronomy, Allophanes, who then studied with him, cried out, These, my dear Dionysius, are supernatural and divine changes. [Suidas in Dionys.] Suidas makes St. Dennis himself say the same thing upon this occasion: God either suffers, or com passionates one who is suffering. Concerning this event, see the Commentators on St. Matthew xxvii. 45. the Ecclesiastical Historians, such as Baronius, M. de Tillemont, and our Dissertation on the Darkness which was observable at our Saviour's death, printed in the new Collection of our Dissertations.

Translators' note. It is the opinion of a very ingenious Author, that this Egyptian Darkness was the Darkness of Hell below, which is called Utter Darkness, and which arose and over-shadowed the land: and herein he says he is authorized by the Wisdom of Solomon, c. 17. v. 14. where he calls it a night, that came upon them out of the bottom of inevitable Hell; and therefore was the more proper to be (as he says after) an Image of that Darkness, which should afterwards receive them.

Darkness (I)

I. DARKNESS, is sometimes put for [Job x. 22. Psal. cvii. 10.] Death. The land of darkness is the Grave. They who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, are the dead. The false Gods of the Heathen, are, says Baruch, like a dead body [Baruch vi. 70. Esth. xi. 8. Job iii. 4, 5.] that is cast into the dark.

II. DARKNESS, Night, Obscurity, signify likewise very frequently the greatest Misfortunes and Calamities. This day was a day of darkness, an unhappy day. Let that day be darkness, let darkness stain it, let it be reckon'd among the unfortunate days. I am encompassed with darkness. I will cover the heavens with darkness. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, &c. All these expressions signify nothing else but very great calamities.

III. DARKNESS, in the moral sense of the word, denotes Sin. The children of light, set in opposition to the children of darkness, mean the righteous in opposition to the wicked; the faithful in opposition to the incredulous and infidels. Ye were once darkness, but now are ye light. Walk as children [Ephes. v. 8, 11. 1 Pet. ii. 9.] of light. God hath called us out of darkness into his marvellous light, &c.

IV. By DARKNESS is meant likewise the kingdom of Satan, who is called the Angel of darkness; and Jesus Christ calls [2 Cor. xi. 14.] the exercise of Satan's power, The power of darkness. The works of darkness are the works of the devil, sin, and all infamous and ignominious actions.

Dathan

DATHAN, the son of Eliab, was one of those who conspired with Korah, Abiram, and On, to deprive Moses and Aaron of the authority which God had given them for the service of his people. Dathan and his accomplices were swallowed up in the earth, and descended quick into the grave.

Dathema

DATHEMA, or Dathman, a fortress in the land of Gilead, whither the Jews beyond Jordan retired, and maintained [1 Macc. v, &c. Joseph. Antiq. l. xii. c. 11. 1 Macc. v. 9.] themselves against the attacks of Timotheus, till Judas Maccabæus came to their relief.

The true situation of this fortress is not known to us; but this is nothing to the history of what passed there. Before the captivity of Babylon, and upon the declension of the two kingdoms of Judah and Israel, the nations which inhabited the land of Gilead, that is to say, the Arabians, Ammonites, and Moabites, assembled together in order to extirpate the Jews out of their country; for after the Edict of Antiochus, obliging them to forsake their religion, all their neighbours and their enemies, thought themselves at liberty to treat them as they pleased, and even joined Antiochus's troops to make war against them: but the Jews having intelligence of their design, retired into the fortress of Dathema, and immediately sent letters to Judas Maccabæus and his brethren, to acquaint them with the condition they were reduced to, and demand speedy succour from them. While they were reading these letters, news to the same purpose was brought them from the Jews of Galilee: Hereupon Judas convened all the people, to deliberate upon what was to be done in these conjunctures. It was resolved that Judas and his brother Jonathan should pass the Jordan, to go to their assistance who were in the land of Gilead; and that Simon their other brother should go into Galilee, to deliver their brethren, who were threatned there with entire destruction. They left Joseph and Azarias in Judæa, to guard the country, with express orders not to fight till their return.

Simon therefore being gone into Galilee, engaged the nations which were enemies to the Jews, in several battles; they were defeated and fled before him: he pursued them as far as the gates of Ptolemais, kill'd [1 Macc. v. 21, 22.] three thousand of their men, and carried off a rich booty.

Judas Maccabæus on his side, and Jonathan his brother, having passed the Jordan, probably at Bethsan, marched three days into the wilderness; and the Nabathæans, people of Arabia, who were not in the plot with those who designed to massacre the Jews, came in a friendly manner to meet them, and being received by them with a peaceable spirit, related to them all that passed in Gilead, with respect to their brethren there, who were shut up in places of the greatest strength, that their enemies still continued to besiege them, and were resolved to march their army the next [Ibid. ver. 27.] day, in order to destroy them all at one time.

Judas having received this intelligence, immediately led his army against Bosor, surprized the city, burnt it, put all the males he found in it to the sword, and 5 O carried away all the booty. From thence he marched all night in order to reach the fortress of Dathema, and he arrived there just at break of day, in the very instant when the attack began with great cries on both sides, and the enemies were mounting to the assault, with their machines and ladders. Hereupon Judas divided his army into three bodies, advanced against the enemy in order of battle, and when he came within reach of them, his troops sounded their trumpets, and cried to heaven, invoking God's assistance. Timotheus's soldiers immediately discovered that it was Judas Maccabæus, they therefore quitted the attack of Dathema, and fled. Judas pursued them, made a great slaughter of them; and near eight thousand were that day left upon the spot.

[Observations on the storming Dathema by Timotheus, and the succour of this fortress by Judas Maccabæus.] The attacking cities by the way of scaling them, is, I believe, as ancient as their fortifications, and all the machines which industry could invent to get possession of them, were produced long afterwards. It is true, that at first, before there was any thought of scaling, people used to block them up, and they often proceeded no further, when at any time the walls of a town were secured by their extraordinary height, from enterprizes [1 Macc. v. 9, &c.] of this kind. Attacks by onset and storm were generally made by the Hebrews all round the place invested; to these they sometimes added sapping, and breaking down of gates, in order to divert the enemy's forces. The Greeks and Romans observed likewise this method; the whole army fell on at the same time, and the very cavalry had their share in the assault. As soon as the army was arrived before any place, the infantry encompassed it on all sides; the flingers and archers formed a second line behind the heavy-armed soldiers, who were commanded to the escalade, and the cavalry formed a third line, which surrounded the two others.

These three lines thus disposed at a certain distance, formed each a circle about the city, and in proportion as they made their approaches, the circle became continually less, so that there was no interval remaining as soon as they were lodged upon the borders of the ditch, which was to be dry for enterprizes of this nature; the archers and flingers poured a shower of stones and arrows upon those who appeared in defence of the walls, while ladders were distributed to the heavy-arm'd soldiers, who descended with great haste into the ditch, advanced to the foot of the walls, fastened their ladders to them, and endeavoured to get upon the top of them. The Romans called this way of attacking, coronâ capere; but certainly they were not the first, who carried on their attacks in this manner, no more than the Greeks: the people of Asia observed this method before they were known in the world. What they called Testudines, the Hebrews were acquainted with, and practised in their sudden attacks and onsets; that is to say, the soldiers covering themselves with their bucklers, which they raised over their heads, and closing their ranks and files, advanced to the foot of the walls without fearing the stones and fires which were cast down upon them from above, and run over them. M. de Brebeuf has very well explained this in his [Lucan's Pharsalia, book 3.] Pharsalia: The Romans joining their shields by consent in the form of a tortoise, march under this cover to the very foot of the ramparts, and leave the stones and darts behind them. This Tortoise, or Testudo, is not so clearly explained in the sacred Books, but we may perceive sufficiently, that the Hebrews were not strangers to it. This seems to me enough to give the Reader a competent knowledge of these sorts of attacks. Let us come now to the action above mentioned, begun under the conduct of Judas Maccabæus.

This enterprize against Timotheus is worthy of so great a General as Judas was: He does not go in search of an enemy, disingaged from all incumbrances, and encamped only before a place; he chuses his opportunity more prudently, waits till Timotheus had fixed his ladders to the walls, and brought all his forces thither, and had nothing to oppose him, that he might the more effectually surprize him, and attack him immediately as soon as his army was divided, so as not to have leisure to unite again, and put themselves in order of battle to resist him. Judas was sensible, that his army was too weak to come openly to a general action; his industry therefore furnished him with an expedient which secured the success of his undertaking: the better to deceive his enemy, he ordered his army to march towards the wilderness of Bosora, and suddenly surprized the city. Timotheus, informed that Judas [1 Macc. v. 28.] was drawing this way, believed without doubt that he had time remaining to take Dathema by assault, and proceed afterwards to the relief of Bosora, but he was mistaken; for this city was immediately taken. After this expedition, Judas marched his army all night with so much secrecy and diligence to succour Dathema, that he arrived there, and at break of day lifting up their eyes, says the [Ibid. ver. 30.] Author of the Book of Maccabees, they perceived an innumerable company of people bearing ladders and other engines of war, in order to get possession of the fortress, and take those within it. He arrived just at the lucky moment he wished, that is to say, when the attack was already begun: in such a surprize, people do not know what to go about, orders are to be issued out, an assault abandoned, the troops which lay round the city to be got together, and put in battle-array; all which is not to be done in an instant. Timotheus was under this perplexity, having the enemy upon his back, and in his very camp.

The Author describes the order wherein [Ibid. ver. 33. Ibid. ver. 58.] Judas engaged. He marched in three bodies behind the enemy; these at the same time sounded their trumpets and cried to God in their prayers. To the surprize of their enemies, they joined valour and good conduct, together with a recourse to him, who is the God of Hosts, and heard them; whereas Joseph and Azarias, who were left to guard the country, envying the happy success of their brethren, and, contrary to their orders, marching their troops towards Jamnia, were beaten by Gorgias, who went out of the city to meet them, and put them to flight. Thus their temerity and disobedience were justly punished, and shewed, that the success of holy wars does not depend on courage or numbers, but that God only is the Author of it, and does not approve the criminal dispositions of those, who undertake things for the service of Religion upon motives of vanity and glory.

David

[1 Sam. xvi. 1, 2, 3, &c.] DAVID, the son of Jesse, of the Tribe of Judah, and little town of Bethlehem. After the rejection of Saul, the Lord sent Samuel to Bethlehem, in order to anoint one of the sons of Jesse, whom he should appoint to be king. Samuel coming to the house of Jesse, and declaring the occasion of his journey, Jesse produced his seven sons one after another; but the Lord revealed to his prophet, that he who was to reign was not among them: David therefore was sent for, who was very young, being no more than about fifteen years of age, and Samuel confer'd on [We fix the birth of David to the year of the World 2919, and his anointing by Samuel to 2934. before J. C. 1066. 1 Sam. xvi. 15, 16.] him the Royal Unction in the midst of all his brethren. After which, David returned to his ordinary occupation, which was that of feeding his father's flocks.

Some time after, Saul falling into a dismal state of melancholy, wherewith an evil spirit troubled him, was advised to send for David, to play to him on some musical instruments, and relieve him, when his distemper came upon him[1]. He was told, that David was a mighty valiant man, and a man of war, and prudent in matters, and a comely person, and that the Lord was with him. David therefore must [In the year of the World 3942, before J. C. 1058. David was then two or three and twenty. 1 Sam. xvii. 1, 2, 3, &c.] have acquired this reputation for valour, between the age of fifteen, when he was anointed king, and two or three and twenty, which was his age at that time. David acquitted himself so well in performing what was required of him, that the king made him his armour-bearer: notwithstanding which, he returned to his father's, as soon as Saul grew better. Some years after, the Philistins took the field, and incamped at Azekah and Shocoh. There was a Giant in their army, of an extraordinary strength and stature, called Goliath, who insulted the Israelites, and challenged any of their number to come out and fight him. The two armies continued incamped in sight of one another for forty days, and not one Israelite was found, who had the courage to undertake the combat with Goliath.

In the mean time, Jesse sent David to the camp, where he had three sons in the service, to enquire after them. David, upon his arrival, hearing how this Giant had defied the whole forces of Israel, was inspired with a generous resolution, and declared he would encounter him. His eldest brother reproved him for his rashness; but David's declaration being at last reported to the king, he sent for him, and asked him, if he thought himself able to engage with the Philistin. David replied, he was, and that none ought to be terrified with the discourses and threatnings of this Giant. Saul told him, he was too young to attack a man who had been all his life enured to war. But to this David answered, Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion and a bear, and took a lamb out of the flock: And I went out after him, and smote him, and delivered it out of his mouth; and when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him and slew him. Thy servant slew both the lion and the bear, and this uncircumcised Philistin shall be as one of them.

Saul admiring David's courage, would have dressed him in his own armour: but David having tried it, and attempting to go, returned it, saying, he could not go with it. He took his staff therefore, which he generally carried with him, and having chosen five well-polish'd stones out of the brook, he put them in his scrip, and with the sling in his hand, marched against Goliath, who, advancing near to him, and observing him to be a young man of a beautiful and fresh complexion, despised him, and said, Am I a dog, that thou comest to me with staves? Come, come, and I will give thy flesh unto the fowls of the air, and to the beasts of the field. David, without being at all dismay'd, marched against him, and flung a stone at him, which struck him in the middle of his forehead with so much violence, that he fell down upon the ground: whereupon David run immediately and threw himself upon him, drew Goliath's sword and cut his head off with it. The Philistins therefore seeing their hero was thus killed, fled, and were pursued with great cries by the Hebrews.

When Saul saw David marching against this Philistin, he enquired of Abner, who he was? Abner answered, That he had no knowledge of him. Which is very strange, considering that this prince had seen him so often in his own house, when he play'd before him on his harp, and had made him his armour-bearer. His face, his voice, and air, must have been very much changed since he last appeared before Saul, or else he must at this time have been very intent upon something else. But however this may be, Abner presented David to the king, after the victory, with the head and sword of Goliath in his hands. From this instant Jonathan conceived a great affection for David, and continued ever afterwards to love him as himself. Now it happened, that when Saul and David returned from this expedition, the women of Israel came out to meet them, singing and dancing, and said, Saul has killed his thousands, [1 Sam. xviii. 6, 7.] and David his ten thousands; which so enraged Saul against David, that from this time he no longer looked on him with a good eye. Notwithstanding, he kept him about his person, and would not permit him to return any more to his father's house. He farther gave him the command of some troops; but refused to give him his daughter in marriage, though he had promised her to any man, who should kill Goliath.

The next day Saul returning to his own house, the evil Spirit seized on him, and [1 Sam. xviii. 10.] David play'd upon the harp before him. Saul had a spear in his hand, with which he attempted twice to run David through; but he avoided the blow: from this time Saul began to be apprehensive of him, and defend himself against him. Yet still he promised him his eldest daughter Merab, hoping all along, that he would at last fall into the hands of the Philistins, and that he would be killed by them: but David behaved himself with so much prudence and discretion, that he disengaged himself out of all dangers. Nevertheless Saul, instead of giving him his daughter Merab, married her to Adriel the Meholathite.

Michal, Saul's second daughter, entertained kind thoughts of David; her father was extremely pleased at it, and appointed some persons to tell him, that to merit the honour of becoming the king's son-in-law, he required no more of him, than an hundred foreskins of the Philistins: his design in this demand was, to have him fall into their hands. Some days after, David, with his people, went and attacked the Philistins, killed two hundred of them, and brought their foreskins to the king. Saul therefore no longer could refuse him the marriage of his daughter; but still did not lay aside his intention to procure his destruction. He conversed with his son Jonathan about it, and with the principal persons of his court: and Jonathan diverted him from this resolution.

Soon after the war broke out again; and David defeated the Philistins. He cut in pieces a great number of them, and put the rest to flight. Now it happen'd that the evil Spirit once more possessing Saul, David again play'd upon the harp before him; the king endeavoured to pierce him with his lance by darting it at him, but he avoided once more the intended blow, and fled away that night. Saul sent his guards, as soon as it was light, to seize him; but Michal let him down through a window, and so he made his escape. The next day, when they came with a purpose to lay hold on him, Michal pretended that he was sick; and the king having given his orders that he should be brought even in his bed, Michal discovered to them that he was not there, and shewed them an image in the bed, with a pillow of goat's hair for his bolster.

David being thus happily delivered, went to Samuel at Ramah, and related what had passed to him; from whence they both went together to Naioth, which was not far off, where there was a community of prophets[2]. Saul having intelligence of this, sent people to seize on David; but they upon their arrival at the place where the prophets were, began to prophesy with them. Saul still sent other messengers, who did the same; at last, he went himself, and he too prophesied with the rest of them. Nevertheless, David not thinking himself secure at Naioth, made a visit secretly to Jonathan, and complained to him of his father's conduct towards him. Jonathan gave him encouragement, and desired him to conceal himself in a certain field, with a promise of discovering Saul's real dispositions on the third day after their conference. The next day, which was the first of the month, Saul being at table with Jonathan and Abner, the place which David should have been in, remained void. The king took no notice of it, imagining that perhaps he might have been prevented by some pollution, which he might have contracted. But the day after, Saul asked, why the son of Jesse did not come. Jonathan replied, that he had requested him to give him leave to go to Bethlehem, in order to be present at a solemn Sacrifice made there by his family, and that he had permission from him to go thither. Whereupon Saul was very much enraged with Jonathan, and threatned to kill him with his lance.

Jonathan was assured by this, that the destruction of David was a thing resolved on, and the day following he went to the particular field agreed upon between him and David, with a shew of exercising himself in shooting; and after he had shot some arrows, he dismissed his armour-bearer with his bow and quiver: when he was alone, David came to him, and was informed by him, that Saul had determined to destroy him. The two friends made new protestations to each other of perpetual friendship; after which, David retired to the High-priest [1 Sam. xxi. 1 Sam. xxi. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10.] Abimelech at Nob, to whom he said, that the king had sent him upon an affair which required dispatch, without giving him leisure to take his arms and necessary provision with him. Abimelech gave him Goliath's sword, which was deposited in the Tabernacle, and some of the Shew-bread, which the day before was taken from the golden table. Doeg the Edomite was then at Nob, and some time after discovered what had passed between David and Abimelech to Saul; which was the cause of Abimelech's death, and of the other Priests, who were cruelly massacred by Saul's order.

David believing himself not to be secure in Saul's territories, retired to Achish king of Gath, a prince of the Philistins: but being there soon discovered, he preserved himself by counterfeiting madness, and an epilepsy. From thence he went to Adullam, [1 Sam. xxii.] where his brethren and relations, with many other persons resorted to him, so that he saw himself at the head of about four hundred men. But he did not continue here long. Upon the prophet Gad's, admonition to return into the land of Judah, he went into the forest of Hareth, whither Abiathar the priest followed him, bringing with him the High-priest's Ornaments. At that time the Philistins having made an inroad into [1 Sam. xxii. 20.] the country, and fallen upon [1 Sam. xxiii. 6, 7,] the threshing-floors of Keilah, David came with speed to their assistance, and dispersed the Philistins. Saul having understood that David was at Keilah, marched with an intention to besiege and take him. But David retreated into the wilderness of Ziph, and from thence removed to the desart of Maon. Saul had notice of it, and pursued him with all his people. David lay on one side of the mountain, and Saul on the other. But upon information at the same time, that the Philistins had invaded the land, he desisted from pursuing David, and made haste to oppose them.

[1 Sam. xxiv. About the year of the World 2946. before J.C. 1054. before the Vulgar Æra 1058.] David being delivered out of this danger, retired to the wilderness of En-gedi, whither Saul soon followed with three thousand men in search of him. But going into a cave upon some natural necessity, David, who lay there concealed with his people, cut off the skirt of his robe, without his perceiving any thing of it, and suffered him to go out without doing him any harm. When he was got to some distance, David went out, cried after him, remonstrated his innocence to him, and assured him that he was so far from having any design upon his life, that he had made no attempt upon it at a time, when God seemed to have delivered him up into his hands: and then immediately produced the skirt of his robe, which he had cut off in the cave. Saul was touched with what he said, shed tears, and acknowledged, that David was a more just person than himself. He proceeded to desire of him, that he would promise with an oath not to exterminate his family, whenever he should be advanced to the throne of Israel; and David having sworn this to him, he returned to his house; and David retreated to places of greater security.

[1 Sam. xxv. About the year of the World 2047. before J.C. 1053. before the Vulgar Æra 1057.] While David continued in the Wilderness of Maon, he took a great deal of care to restrain his people from doing any injury to Nabal's flocks, who dwelt not far from him at Carmel, which lies south of Judah, and is very different from another Carmel, situated on the Mediterranean to the south of Ptolemaïs. The time being come, when Nabal was to shear his sheep, David sent some of his people to desire he would give him something. Nabal received his messengers very ill, spoke to them very brutally, and dismissed them without sending any present. David, provoked at this refusal, and Nabal's insolent behaviour, pursued the first fire of his resentment; and swore, that he would that very day utterly destroy Nabal's whole family. And with this resolution he set forward. But Abigail, Nabal's wife, being informed of what had passed, made haste to meet David, made him presents. and stopt the effects of his indignation. David was very thankful to God for sending her, and so preventing him from executing what what he had too rashly sworn to do. Some few days after Nabal died, and David married Abigail.

The Ziphites knowing that David lay [1 Sam. xxvi.] concealed in the hill of Hachilah, gave notice of it to Saul, who marched with three thousand men to take him. But David by night getting into Saul's tent, took his spear, and a cruse of water that was near his bolster, and went away, without any one's perceiving it. When he was got to the other side of the hill, he called to Abner with a loud voice, and told him, that he was a bad guardian; that they had entred into the king's tent, and taken thence his spear and cruse of water; but that he would send some person who should restore them. Saul hereupon acknowledged the integrity of David, and returned to his house.

After all this, that Saul might no longer have any inclination to pursue him farther, David fled for refuge among the [1 Sam. xxvii.] Philistins to Achish king of Gath. This prince gave him Ziklag for an habitation; and while he abode there, he made several excursions on the Amalekites, and upon the people of Geshur and Gezri, and in these expeditions killed all he met with, both men and women, to prevent any one's discovering where he had been: but he brought all the cattle he could take to Achish, telling this prince, that these were what he had found in the southern parts of Judah, Jerahmeel, and Keni; thus disguising things in a manner, which is by no means to be imitated. By this conduct, David so far acquired the confidence of Achish, that this prince made no scruple of carrying him with him to the war which the Philistins declared some time after, against Saul. But the other princes of the Philistins observing him, prevailed with [In the year of the World 2949 before J. C. 1051 before the Vulgar Æra 1055. 1 Sam. xxviii. 1 Sam. xxix.] Achish to send him back, being apprehensive, that in the day of battle he might turn against them, in order to procure a reconciliation with Saul.

There can scarce be any doubt, but that this dismission was very agreeable to David, who was engaged in very nice circumstances, and must either have failed in the performance of his promise, or have fought against his king and country: notwithstanding he politickly pretended to be much concerned at it; and Achish made excuses to him upon this occasion. David [1 Sam. xxx.] therefore returned to Ziklag, and coming thither after a march of three days, he perceived that the Amalekites had pillaged it, set fire to the place, and carried off all the persons they could find there. David and his people pursued them, and meeting with an Egyptian slave, whom his master, who was an Amalekite, had been obliged to leave behind him in the wilderness, because he was not able to follow, they learned from him, where they were who had plundered Ziklag. David, upon this intelligence, fell upon them, cut them in pieces, and recovered all the persons and the booty which they had taken.

In the mean time a battle was fought by the Philistins and Hebrews on mount [1 Sam. xxxi.] Gilboa, wherein Saul was overpowered, and died in the engagement, together with Jonathan his son, and a great number of the [2 Sam. i. 2 Sam. iv, v. In the year of the World 2957. In the year of the World 2959. 2 Sam. xi.] Israelites. Three days after this action, an Amalekite came to Ziklag with the news of it to David, and boasted that he had assisted Saul in dispatching himself. At the same time he presented him with Saul's diadem and bracelet. David and all his people expressed abundance of sorrow for the death of Saul, and the defeat of the Israelitish forces. David composed a mournful song in honour of Saul and Jonathan; and ordered the Amalekite to be put to death, who boasted that he had laid his hands upon the Lord's Anointed.

Then David by God's direction withdrew to Hebron, and the places adjacent, [2 Sam. ii.] with his company; and they of the Tribe of Judah acknowledged him to be their King, and accordingly anointed him. In the mean time, Ishbosheth the son of Saul reigned at Mahanaim beyond Jordan, over the other Tribes of Israel. There were some conflicts from time to time between the parties of Ishbosheth and David, wherein David's [2 Sam. iii. In the year of the World 2956. before J. C. 1044. before the Vulgar Æra 1048.] had always the advantage. Ishbosheth having one day reprimanded Abner, the General of his Forces, he was so exasperated at it, that he went to David, and promised to make him master of all Israel. But Joab growing jealous of him, and fearing lest David might confer on him the command of his army, he treacherously killed him at the gate of Hebron. David was extremely displeased with this Action, but Joab at that time had so much credit with the soldiers, that he could not take a just revenge; he contented himself therefore with declaring publickly his detestation of it, and with making a magnificent funeral for Abner.

Ishbosheth having been assassinated soon after in his bed, David commanded the murderers to be put to death, and was proclaimed king over all Israel. He dispossessed the Jebusites of Jerusalem, and there settled his residence. The Philistins being informed that he was acknowledged king of all Israel, came twice and incamped near Jerusalem; but they were defeated by him, and forced to fly. Some years after he removed the Ark of the Lord from Kirjath -jearim to Jerusalem, into a place, which he had prepared for it in his palace. But upon the death of Uzzah, who was smitten of God for laying his hand upon the Ark, David left it near the city in the house of Obed-edom. Nevertheless he brought it soon after to his own palace; upon which occasion Michal having rallied him for dancing, as she thought, in an indecent manner before the Ark, David replied to her; Yes, before the Lord, who chose me before thy father, to appoint me ruler over all his people, I will play, and will be yet more vile than thus, and will be base in mine own sight, and shall be had in honour for it of all the people.

[2 Sam. viii.] David observing himself to be at peace in his palace, formed the design of building [In the year of the World 2960. before J. C. 1040. before the Vulgar Æra 1044.] a Temple to the Lord. He communicated his thoughts to the prophet Nathan, who applauded him for his intention. But the night following, God discovered to this Prophet, that this was an honour reserved for David's son; and that for his part, he had shed too much blood to be employ'd in so holy a work. David therefore was satisfied with preparing every thing in gold, silver,[3] copper, iron, and wood, which was necessary for this Edifice.

After this, David made war with the Philistins, and freed Israel intirely from these enemies, who had so long molested them. He attacked also the Moabites, and treated them with such a degree of severity, as we shall not venture to condemn, or to approve, because we are not well acquainted with the motives and circumstances of these wars. The Scripture informs us, that he divided them into two parts, one whereof was crushed in pieces by chariots armed with iron and stones, such as were made use of at that time in grinding; and the other part was preserved, and made subject to the payment of a tribute. He subdued likewise all Syria, and obliged Hadadezer to pay him tribute. At his return from an expedition, which he made as far as the Euphrates, he conquered the eastern Edomites in the Valley of Salt, which lies in all probability between Palmyra and Idumæa, killed eighteen thousand of their men, and placed garrisons every where in the country. The particular time of all these wars is not exactly known to us.

Nahash king of the Ammonites being dead, David sent his compliments of condolance to the son and successor of this Prince. But the great men who were about the king, persuaded him, that David sent Ambassadors to him with no other view than to observe his forces, with a design at one time or other of making war against him. The too credulous young prince hereupon commanded the Ambassadors to be seized, their beards to be half shaved, and half their clothes to be cut off. To revenge this affront, David sent Joab the General of his troops, against Nahash, by whom the Ammonites were routed, and the Syrians, whom they had incited to assist them. The next year David marched in person against the Ammonites, who had received succours from the Syrians inhabiting beyond the [In the year of the World 2968. before J. C. 1033. before the Vulgar Æra 1037.] river Euphrates. But both the Ammonites and they who came to their aid, were intirely dispersed. The war however was not yet ended. David therefore the year following resolved to make himself master of the capital City of the Ammonites, and subject them to his dominion. To this end he sent Joab with his army to besiege Rabbah; and for his part he continued at Jerusalem.

David rising one day from his bed after refreshing himself at noon, and walking on his Terrace[4], saw Bathsheba bathing herself in a place provided for that purpose, belonging to her house. She was the wife of Uriah the Hittite, who was at that time in Joab's army beyond Jordan. David sent for her, lay with her, and dismissed her. In some short time after she gave intelligence to him, that she was with child by him: whereupon, to conceal his crime, and secure the honour of Bathsheba, he sent for Uriah, directing him to leave the camp, and come immediately to Jerusalem. When he came, he persuaded him to pass the night at his own house with Bathsheba his wife; but he not complying, David sent him to the Camp again, with Letters directed to Joab, wherein he commanded him so to manage matters, that Uriah might be killed by the Ammonites. These orders Joab executed; and in an assault made upon the Town, Uriah being deserted by the other soldiers, perished by the enemy's sword. As soon as David was informed of this, he married Bathsheba, and sent for her to his own house. This action was extremely displeasing to God. All Israel was scandalized at it; and the very Strangers themselves took from hence an opportunity of blaspheming the name of the Lord.

Nathan, by God's appointment, visited David, and under a parable invented for this purpose, of a rich man, who had taken from from another, that was poor, the only Ewe-lamb [2 Sam. xii.] he had, obliged David to condemn himself, and acknowledge his offence. Nathan threatned him to fill his house with blood, and deliver up his wives to a stranger, who should abuse them in the sight of all the world; and this as a punishment of the crime, which he had secretly committed. He farther added, For your part, the Lord hath transferred your sin, and you shall not die: but the Child which is born to you, shall lose its life; accordingly he died within a few days after. But the year after, Bathsheba had another son, called Solomon, [In the year of the World 2971. before J. C. 1029. before the Vulgar Æra 1033.] and by Nathan named, The beloved of the Lord.

Joab having reduced Rabbah to extremities, invited David to come and take it. David went, took the City and plunder'd it; ordered his people to saw the bodies of the inhabitants asunder, to crush them in pieces under harrows of iron and axes of iron, and throw them into the brick-kilns. We do not pretend to justify David's conduct in this particular. It is very credible, that he fell into this excess of cruelty before his acknowledgement of the crime, whereof he had been guilty with Bathsheba, while he was yet in all the pollution of his iniquity, and forsaken by the Spirit of grace.

[In the year of the World 2972. before J. C. 1028. before the Vulgar Æra 1032. 2 Sam. xiii. In the year of the World 2974. before J. C. 1030. 2 Sam. xiv. 2 Sam. xv. In the year of the World 2980. before J. C. 1020. before the Vulgar Æra 1024.] After this, Amnon, David's son, having conceived a violent passion for his sister Tamar, and forced her in the manner related under the Article Amnon, Absalom, Tamar's own brother, resolved to be revenged of him; and accordingly did take full vengeance for this rape two years after, by procuring Amnon to be killed at an entertainment to which he had invited him. When this was done, he fled to his father-in-law the king of Geshur, with whom he continued three years.

At the expiration of this term, David, by Joab's means was reconciled to him, and invited him to Jerusalem; and was at last prevailed with to suffer him to come into his presence: but he soon abused his father's indulgence, and aspired to the royal dignity. He went to Hebron with a company of people in whom he could confide, and there procured himself to be acknowledged king of Israel. As soon as David was informed of it, he fled from Jerusalem with a design to go beyond Jordan; and was followed by his guards, his best troops, and principal friends. Hushai the Archite intended likewise to accompany him; but David enjoined [In the year of the World 2981.] him to return, and told him, that he would be more serviceable to him in the city, by pretending to adhere to Absalom, and defeating the councils of Ahitophel, who was engaged in his son's party, and gave strange uneasiness to David, who was well acquainted with his abilities.

David had scarce passed mount Olivet, which lies to the east of Jerusalem, before Ziba the servant of Mephibosheth, met him [2 Sam. xvi.] with a couple of asses loaded with provisions, which he presented to the king. David asked him, why Mephibosheth did not come? Ziba replied, that he continued at Jerusalem, and said, To-day shall the house of Israel restore to me the kingdom of my father. David, without examining the matter more particularly, gave Ziba the whole inheritance of his master; and the sequel shewed, that he gave credit too easily to Ziba, who, as it appeared afterwards, would not provide an ass for Mephibosheth, that so he might be in a condition to follow the king.

David being arrived near Bahurim, Shimei the son of Gera, advanced towards him, loading him with curses and injurious language; but David endured all with a truly heroick patience, which shewed very evidently, how deeply he was affected with the sense of his past faults. In the mean while, Absalom came to Jerusalem, and was received there by all the people. Even Hushai, David's friend, waited on him with offers of his service, and protested that he would be his, as before he had been David's. All which was but disguise: for Hushai being called to Absalom's council, opposed the advice that was given by Ahitophel to pursue the king, without allowing him leisure to look about him. Hushai gave intelligence of every thing to David, who understood how to make a proper use of it, and passed the river Jordan without halting, till he came to Mahanaim. Absalom followed him thither the next day, and a battle [2 Sam. xvii. 2 Sam. xviii.] immediately ensued, wherein Absalom's army was defeated, and put to flight, and he hanging by the hair upon a tree, was run through by Joab and killed.

The news of his death being brought [2 Sam. xix.] unto the king, he was overwhelmed with sorrow, and expressed his concern in the most passionate and tender exclamations. Joab represented to him how much his interests would suffer by this conduct, whereupon he shewed himself publickly to the people, and set forward on his journey to Jerusalem. The Tribe of Judah met him; but the other tribes complained with envy, that this tribe seemed solely to engross the king; and some harsh expressions passed on both sides. At last, one Sheba the son of Bichri, began to sound the trumpet, saying, We have no part [2 Sam. xx.] in David, neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse. Every Man to his tents, O Israel. All Israel therefore followed Sheba. But the Tribe of Judah adhered with constancy to David. As soon as this Prince came to Jerusalem, he sent Joab after Sheba, who had retired to Abila, a Town in the country of Maachah, where Joab besieged him.

DAVID CONSULTING THE HIGH PRIEST BY THE URIM AND THUMMIM.2d Gath. A

But a wise woman of the city persuaded the inhabitants to give up Sheba; and his head being thrown over the wall, the siege was raised, and the insurrection quell'd.

God having visited the land with a great famine of three years continuance, the oracle [In the year of the World 2983. before J. C. 1017. before the Vulgar Æra 1021. 2 Sam. xxi.] of the Lord declared, that it was owing to the blood of the Gibeonites which had been unjustly shed by Saul. David sent therefore for the Gibeonites, and asked what satisfaction they required to repair the injury which they had sustained. They demanded seven of Saul's sons, in order to hang them up in Gibeah. David complied with this demand, and they hanged them up accordingly in Gibeah, the place of Saul's birth.

Some years after, David having commanded [In the year of the World 2987. before J. C. 1013. before the Vulgar Æra 1017. 2 Sam. xxiv.] all the people to be numbred, the Lord was offended at it, and the prophet Gad came to him, and said, That he was sent by God to offer him the choice of three scourges which were prepared for him; either that the land should be afflicted with a famine for seven years, or that he should fly three months before his enemies, or that the pestilence should make havock in his dominions for three days. David chose the latter, and the next day it began to rage, and during those three days, seventy thousand persons died. Nor was the sentence executed with full rigour; for God was mov'd by David's prayers, and said to the destroying Angel, It is enough. David, as an act of thanksgiving, erected an Altar in the threshing-floor of Araunah, where the Angel had appeared to him. Some are of opinion, that the Temple was built afterwards in this place.

The king being very old, could scarce receive [In the year of the World 2989. before J. C. 1011. before the Vulgar Æra 1015. 1 Kings i.] any warmth: a young woman therefore, a Shunamite, whose name was Abishag, was brought to him; she lay with him, and attended him in his old age. It is our opinion, that she was really David's wife; though she always continued a virgin. In the mean time, Adonijah began to set up the equipage of a king, and formed a party of the great Men in the kingdom, who upon occasion might be able to support him. Nathan, who knew what promises had been made by David in favour of Solomon, acquainted Bathsheba with what was carrying on, and advised her to go to the king about it. She went, and while she was in conversation with him, Nathan came himself, and remonstrated to him, that Adonijah without his knowledge, and contrary to what the Lord had promised Solomon, intended to have himself proclaimed king. David hereupon immediately gave orders, that Solomon should be mounted on his own mule, and conducted to Gihon, and there should be anointed king. Which was executed without any delay.

David perceiving himself to be now near his end, sent for Solomon, put into his hands the plans and models of the Temple, the gold [In the year of the World 2990. before J. C. 1010. before the Vulgar Æra 1014. 1 Kings ii.] and silver which he had prepared for this purpose; charged him to be constantly faithful to God, and advised him not to let Joab go unpunished, whom too great credit had made insolent, and who besides had committed several actions, whereby he had deserved death. This was what this pious Prince believed was due from him to justice and posterity. He likewise enjoined him to punish Shimei for the ignominious language, which he had given him, while he was flying from Absalom at the time of his rebellion. After this, he slept with his fathers, and was buried in the City of David, in the year of the World 2990, before the birth of Jesus Christ 1010, before the Vulgar Æra 1014. He reigned seven years and an half at Hebron, and three and thirty at Jerusalem, in all forty years. He died in the seventy first year of his Age[5].

[Joseph. Antiq. l. 7. c. ult.] Josephus relates, that Solomon put abundance of riches into David's Monument, and that thirteen hundred years after, the High-priest [In the year of the World 3870. before J. C. 130. before the Vulgar Æra 134.] Hircanus being besieged in Jerusalem by King Antiochus the Pious, and not knowing where to get the money, which he wanted to induce this prince to raise the siege, Hircanus opened David's monument, took out three thousand talents, and gave him part of them. He adds, that many years after, Herod the Great having once more searched this monument, took great sums out of it.

It is very probable that Josephus had read something like this in other Memoirs of his country, and added such improvements as had been made by the tradition of the people. In the Memoirs which are published in the Arabian tongue by M. le Jay in his Polyglot, we read of a report, that Hircanus, while he was besieged by King Antiochus Sidetes, opened a treasure chamber, which belonged to some of David's descendants, and that after he had taken a large sum of money out of it, he still left a great deal in it, and sealed it up again. This is very different from Josephus's account.

Benjamin

Benjamin of Tudela, who wrote about the year 1173, relates, that not above fifteen years before, a wall belonging to Mount Sion, fell down, and the Priests set twenty men at work upon it. Two of these workmen being one day left alone there, when the rest were gone, took up a stone, which opened a passage into a subterraneous place, which they entered. They found there a Palace supported by marble Pillars, and crusted over with gold and silver. At the entrance was a Table, and upon this Table a golden Crown and Scepter. This, says the Jew, was David's Monument, and opposite to it was Solomon's, adorned in the same manner. There too they saw Urns, but could not discern what it was that they contained. As they were attempting to penetrate farther, they were over-set by a whirlwind, and remained there senseless till the evening. Then they heard a voice bidding them rise and be gone. Benjamin assures us, that he had this story from the mouth of one Abraham a Pharisee, who, as he said, had been consulted concerning this event by the Patriarch of Jerusalem; and declared, that this was David's Monument. But this whole account has so much the air of a fable, that it is needless to confute it.

It is certain, that David's Monument was always very much respected by the Jews. St. Peter in his discourse to the Jews, tells them, that this Prince's Sepulchre was still with them: The Heathens themselves knew it; and [Dio in Adriani vita.] Dio informs us, that part of this Mausolæum fell down in the Emperor Adrian's reign. St. Jerom relates, [Hieronym. Ep. ad Marcellam.] that he often went to pray at this holy Prophet's Sepulchre. Cardinal Grimani has given us the representation of this Monument, which some assert to be David's. [Apud Sefinon de Architectura, l. 3. & apud Pinedam de Rebus Salom. l. 8. c. 3. Doubdan, ch. 26. Morizon, &c.] Modern Travellers describe to us some very magnificent Monuments, dug in a Rock, which are said to be those that were made formerly for the kings of Judah[6]. They are doubtless very ancient, but it would be very hard to distinguish David's from the rest.

David is generally reputed the Author of the Book of Psalms, and these sacred hymns are cited under his name. It is certain that he composed a good number of them; but it would be difficult to prove in particular that he composed them all. [Amos vi. 5.] Amos reproaches the voluptuaries of Israel with sleeping in beds of ivory, with diverting themselves in singing to the sound of instruments, and flattering themselves that they had, like David, the gift of writing songs. Sicut David putaverunt se habere vasa cantici. See the Article PSALMS.

The Jewish Doctors have added several particulars to the history of David. They say, that Jesse, the father of David, having sollicited his maid-servant, she informed her mistress of it, who took her servant's place, and conceived David. Jesse believing he was born of a slave, sent him to keep his flocks, and did not think him worthy to appear before Samuel. But Samuel declared to Jesse, that this stone rejected by the Architect, would become the head of the corner. They add, that David came into the world circumcised. This opinion they found upon the title of some Psalms, which have Michtam in the front of them; that is to say, perfectly struck, as having been circumcised with the hand of God. Others say, that he was not circumcised till he was fourteen years of age; and that it was not till this moment that God said to him, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee. He would have died as soon as he was born, if Adam, to whom God had foretold this, had not lent him seventy years of his life.

They tell us, that David was red like Esau, and of a physiognomy not much to be liked; that Samuel having taken notice of him, and designing to reject him by reason of his savage air, God told him, that Esau killed men without the forms of justice, and of his own authority; but that David would not put any one to death, without consulting the Sanhedrim. When David looked askew upon any one, he made a leper of him; thus Goliath, and particularly the front of this giant, was immediately covered with a leprosy. Joab suffered the same fate, and something worse. David himself became leprous, God withdrew from him, and the whole Sanhedrim forsook him, during the six months continuance of this disease.

When he appeared before Saul to go and encounter Goliath, Saul was astonished to see his armour fitted him, though they were of a very different stature. He concluded from thence, that David would be king; but David penetrating Saul's thoughts, excused himself from using his armour.

His son Absalom was damned: of the seven gates through which there is an entrance into hell, he had already passed five of them; but upon David's crying five times, Absalom my son, at each time he repassed one of these gates; and thereupon David sung aloud this verse of the lxxxvi. 17. Lord give me some marks of thy favour, that they who hate me may see it, and be ashamed.

They say, that David had a harp, which when a certain wind blew, play'd of itself all night; this sound sometimes awakened him, and he was used to value himself upon it, observing that he awakened the morning, whereas the morning awakens other kings. We are moreover told, that he married the two sisters, daughters of Saul, both living at the same time, namely Merab and Michal. But we know he never wedded Merab, though she had been promised to him in marriage. They accuse this Prince of having given into the follies of Astrology, Magick, and even into Idolatry, and of having despaired of his own salvation.

THE VIEW AND ELEVATION OF THE SEPULCHER OF THE KINGS OF ISRAEL.2d Gath. B

Rehoboham The Kings of Israel who succeeded Rehoboam were placed in this large Grot This first Grot might have served for Bathsheba and Solomon's 3 brothers by the Mothers side A SUBTERRANEOUS PLAN OF THE SEPULCHERS OF THE KINGS OF ISRAEL, Taken from Serlius l. 3. Architect. Vol. I. 2d Gath. C.

But that which shews the height of their extravagancy, is, the story they relate of this Patriarch's death. He knew by revelation that he should die upon some sabbath-day. He did not like the day, because they could neither mourn for him upon it, nor provide for his funeral. He desired some little delay till the next day, but could not obtain it; all the favour God would grant him, was, not to die till saturday in the evening. The devil waited the moment of his ceasing to read the law, in order to give him his death's wound; but as he did not discontinue the reading of it, Satan bethought himself of going and knocking down apples in the king's garden, and by this means to draw him off.

David run out upon the noise, and as he was descending too hastily by a wooden-ladder, in order to discover the thief, the devil moved it, and the king fell and killed himself.

His dead body remained exposed to the dogs, because no one would venture to stir it on the sabbath-day. The University was consulted to know what was to be done in so melancholy a juncture, and the Doctors directed pieces of bread to be thrown about the dead body for the dogs, till the sabbath was over. The dogs prefer'd the bread to the dead body of the king, and David was buried. Thus the Hebrew Doctors disfigure the most serious histories with their silly impertinences; we should not amuse our selves with relating them, if we were to consult only our own inclination, or the contempt we have of them: but it is one part of wisdom to know the errors and follies of mankind. Transivi ad contemplandam sapientiam, [Eccl. ii. 12.] erroresque & stultitiam, says Solomon.

[Bibl. Orient. p. 284.] The Mahometans have as many fabulous stories as the Jews, when they speak of David. Mahomet says, that this Prince killed Goliath; that God gave him the kingdom, and wisdom, and taught him whatever he desired to know. Hereupon a certain Commentator [Alcoran Cap. Bacrat.] of the Alcoran, says, that Saul's army consisted only of three hundred and thirteen men, whom God had chosen, because they had drunk of the stream only out of their hands. He confounds the history of Gideon with that of Saul. After David had killed Goliath, God gave him the kingdom; because Saul had promised his daughter in marriage and half his kingdom to him, who should dispatch the Giant; and Saul dying soon after, David entred into the possession of his dominions. God gave him likewise wisdom; that is to say, the gift of prophecy, and his Spirit in order to compose the Psalms. Lastly, God taught him every thing he had a mind to know; that is to say, the gift of making coats of mail, of hair-shirts and sackcloaths, which was the common trade of the prophets; and even the gift of understanding the language of birds. Some add, that the birds and stones obey'd him, that iron grew soft within his hands; and that during the forty days of his lamenting his sins, his tears were so copious and so fertile, that they made plants grow.

Translators' note. That Musick should cure settled diseases in the Body, we should hardly believe, if we had not both human and divine Testimony for it. Pliny tells us of the Gout and Sciatica being cured by it; that it had the effect of a good Styptick, and stopt a flux of blood. Plin. l. 28. c. 1. And Theophrastus witnesses, that many in his time, especially the Thebans, used the Pipe for the cure of several sicknesses, which Galen calls καταυλεῖν τῷ τόπῳ, super loco affecto tibia canere; or, Loca dolentia decantare. An ingenious Author assigns the true natural Reason of this Effect to be, that as musical Sounds move the outward Air, so that does the inward, and that the Spirits, and they the Humours, (which are the seat of diseases) by condensation, rarefaction, dissipation, or expulsion of Vapours. As for the cure of the Tarantism by Musick, the experiments of it are too notorious to be denied.

Translators' note. These, as a learned Man observes, were not properly called Prophets, or Foretellers of future things, but religious Persons, who separated themselves from the business of the world, to employ their time in the contemplation and praise of God. Saul's messengers saw the company of Prophets prophesying (that is, saw them together in divine Service) and Samuel standing as appointed over them; Stantem super eos, which the Chaldee interprets Stantem docentem eos, preaching to them. At Bethel and Jericho there were Sons of the Prophets, 2 Kings ii. 3, 5. so called because taught by some great Prophets; or as the Greeks term Physicians Ἰατρῶν παῖδας.

Translators' note. The Sum collected for this use by David is so prodigious, says Dr. Prideaux, as gives reason to think, that the Talents whereby that sum is reckoned, were another sort of Talents of a far less value than the Mosaick Talents. For what is said to be given by David (1 Chr. xxii. 14, 15, 16. and xxix. 3, 4, 5.) and contributed by his Princes (xxix. 6, 7, 8.) towards the building of the Temple of Jerusalem, if valued by the Mosaick Talents, exceeded the value of eight hundred millions of our money. The 3000 Talents of gold which David gave out of his own private fortune, amounted to one and twenty millions of our mon- ey, besides the 7000 Talents of refined silver, which made part of his present. Prid. Connect. &c. P. 1. B. 1.

Translators' note. Some be- lieve the Terrace here mentioned to be a Garden upon the top of David's Palace, the use whereof was very frequent among the Ancients; and that it was so particularly among the Hebrews in David's time, several Texts of Scripture seem to shew; as 2 Sam. xxvi. 22. They spread for Absalom a Tent upon the top of the house, and Absalom went unto his father's concubines in the sight of all Israel. And 1 Sam. ix. 25. Samuel communed with Saul upon the top of the house. It appears from Seneca and Pliny, that this piece of luxury had made its way from Asia to Rome.

Translators' note. It is surprizing to see in what manner the Rabbins treat this great Prince, the man after God's own heart, and the Glory of their nation: They tell us, that he was begotten after a criminal manner; that he lived for some years without a soul; that there was something of Sorcery in his looks; that in his Physiognomy he resembled Esau*; that he was ignorant, proud, hypocritical, and guilty of incest; that he was a Magician, and great dealer in judi- cial Astrology; and that he died in a tragical manner by a stratagem of the devil's See Basnage Histoire des Juifs, l. v. c. 2. Thus it is that the* Rabbins falsify the clearest Histories, and blemish the memory of those, whom in other places of their writings they mention with the greatest honour.

Translators' note. Maundrell describes particularly these famous Grots, call'd the Sepulchres of the Kings: but for what reason they go by that name, is, he says, hard to resolve; for it is certain, none of the Kings either of Jerusalem or Judah were buried here; the Scriptures assigning other places for their Sepultures.

Day

DAY. The Day is distinguish'd four several ways; there is the natural, astronomical, civil, and artificial Day[1]. The natural or solar Day, is the duration of four and twenty hours. The astronomical Day, is the duration of the intire revolution of the Æquator, and of that portion besides of the same Æquator through which the sun passes with its own proper motion in one natural Day. The civil Day is that, the beginning and end whereof is determined by the common custom of any nation. The Hebrews began their civil and ecclesiastical Day from one Evening to another. From Even unto Even shall ye celebrate your Sabbath. The [Lev. xxiii. 32.] Roman Catholick Church still does the same in the ecclesiastical Office, but not with regard to that rest from labour, which it appoints to be observed on festivals. The Babylonians reckoned their Days from one sun-rising to another; which is the practice of the inhabitants of Nuremburg at this day: the Italians from one sun-set to another; the astronomers from noon to noon; the Roman Catholicks from midnight to midnight. Lastly, the artificial Day is the time of the sun's continuance above the horizon, which is unequal according to different times and seasons, by reason of the obliquity of the sphere. The sacred writers generally divide the Day and Night into twelve unequal hours. The sixth hour is always answerable to noon-day in all seasons of the year; and the twelfth hour to the last hour of the Day. But in summer-time, the twelfth hour, as well as all the rest, were longer than the winter hours. See the Article HOURS.

Translators' note. There is another distinction of the Day, which may be term'd Prophetical; the Prophets being the only Persons who call Years, Days; whereof there is an Example in the Explanation which is given of Daniel's seventy Weeks.

To-Day

TO-DAY, does not only signify the particular Day upon which we are speaking, but [Psal. xcv. 8.] but likewise any indefinite time. To-day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. This To day, says St. Paul, denotes [Heb. iii. 13.] our whole life. Daily while it is called to-day. And, This day have I begotten thee; [Psal. cx.] that is to say, from all eternity, and I do not cease to beget thee. And St. Paul, Jesus [Heb. xiii. 8.] Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and to-morrow. And Nehemiah, Behold we are servants [Nehem. ix. 36.] this day: we are so as we have always been. And Ecclesiasticus, Yesterday for me, [Ecclus. xxxviii. 22.] and to-day for thee. You must undergo the same fate as I. And Jesus Christ, in St. Luke, I must walk to-day, and to-morrow, and the day following: that is to say, still a [Luke xiii. 33.] little while.

Deacon

DEACON, comes from the Greek, Diaconos [Διάκονος. Diaconus. Minister. Acts vi. 1.] , which signifies, Minister, Servant. This word is made use of in the language of the Church, to denote those whose office it is to assist the Bishop or Priest in the distribution of the Eucharist, and besides this, in the service of the poor, and administring what is necessary for them. The number of the disciples increasing daily at Jerusalem, the Greeks, that is to say, the Gentile Converts, began to murmur against the Hebrews, and to complain, that their widows were neglected in the distribution of Alms, which was made every day. Hereupon the Apostles called the multitude of Believers together, and said, It is not reasonable that we should leave the word of God, and serve tables: wherefore look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and Wisdom, whom ye may appoint over this business. They therefore chose seven, viz. Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicolas: these they presented to the Apostles, and they were ordained by prayer, and imposition of hands.

[1 Tim. iii. 8, 12.] Saint Paul in his first Epistle to Timothy, requires that Deacons should be chaste, sincere, and blameless; that they should be neither great drinkers, nor given to filthy lucre; that they should hold the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience; that they should be well proved before they were admitted into the sacred ministry; that they should be the husbands of one wife, and should take care of their house and family.

Deaconess

DEACONESS. Such particular Widows and Virgins were called Deaconesses, who served the Church in those Offices, which the Deacons could not exercise themselves; such as, first, keeping the doors of that part of the Church where the women used to sit: for they were not seated promiscuously with the men, but had separate places in the Church assigned them. Secondly, the Deaconesses assisted the women to undress before Baptism, and dress again after this ceremony. Thirdly, They privately instructed those of their own sex, and visited others who were imprisoned for the faith. They were of mature and advanced age, when they were chosen, of good manners and reputation. They were in the primitive times appointed to [Concil. Laodic. c. 11. Rom. xvi. 1.] this office with ceremony, and with the imposition of hands. St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, speaks of Phœbe, Deaconess of the Church belonging to the port of Cenchrea. The same Apostle requires, that [1 Tim. v. 9, 10.] such only should be received as widows for the service of the Church, who were at least sixty years of age, had been married only to one husband, were well reported of for their good works, had brought up their children well, had exercised hospitality, had washed the saints feet, had relieved the afflicted, and had diligently followed all good works. The younger widows were excluded out of this number.

The DEAD. It is our opinion, that the Hebrews by this name sometimes understood the false god Adonis: and in this sense we explain the following words of Moses; [Deut. xiv. 1.] Ye are the children of the Lord your God, ye shall not cut yourselves, nor make any baldness between your eyes for the dead. Which were circumstances practised in the time of [Deut. xxvi. 14.] mourning for Adonis. And in another place, the Israelites coming to present their first-fruits to the Lord, make this profession; I have not eaten thereof in my mourning, neither have I taken away ought thereof for the dead, probably for Adonis. The offerings of the dead, which the Psalmist speaks [Psal. cvi. 28.] of, and whereof he says the Hebrews did partake in the abomination of Baal-peor, are likewise, in our judgment, sacrifices which were offered in honour of Baal-peor. See our Dissertation on Baal-peor, printed before our Comment upon Numbers.

The DEAD. It is not strange that the Hebrews should have a great deal of consideration [Jerem. viii. 2. xxii. 14. Eccl. vi. 3. 2 Macc. v. 10. Tob. i. 20. ii. 10. vi. 18.] for the Dead, since they believed the soul's immortality, and a future resurrection. They esteemed it to be one of the greatest misfortunes that could happen to be deprived of burial, and the best men made it a point of duty to bury the dead, to perform their obsequies, to leave something on their graves to eat, that the poor might have the advantage of it. When an Israelite died in any house or tent, all who were in it, and the furniture belonging to it contracted [Numb. xix. 14, 15, 16.] a pollution, which continued for seven days. All likewise who touched the body of one who either died of himself, or was killed in the open fields; all who touched his bones or his grave, were impure for seven days; and the manner of expiating this pollution was as follows: They took the ashes of a red heifer sacrificed by the High-priest upon the day of solemn Expiation. Some of these ashes they [Numb. xix. 3, 4, 5, 6.] threw into a vessel full of water, and one who was free from all uncleanness dipt a bunch of hyssop in the water, and sprinkled the furniture with it, the chamber and persons that were polluted. This ceremony was performed upon the third and seventh day. But besides this, it was required that he who had contracted this pollution should bathe his whole body, and wash his clothes upon the seventh day; after which he was thought to be perfectly purified.

[Joan. Nicolai de Sepulcris Hebr. l. 2. c 3.] The Rabbins tell us, that no uncleanness was contracted at funerals, unless the dead person was an Israelite; for as to the Gentiles, say they, they pollute those who come near [Basnage's hist. of the Jews, l. 7. c. 25.] them while they are living; but after death, their carcases are clean, and communicate no impurity. The Israelites, on the contrary, while they are living, exhale a pure smell, which sanctifies those who come near them; but after death, their Soul and the holy Spirit having forsaken them, they are then fit only to spread infection and pollution. The rules which we have related for the purification of those, who had touched a dead body, or been present at any funeral, are now no more observed since the destruction of the Temple, and the sacrifice of the red heifer has ceased. The Jews therefore no longer look upon themselves to be polluted by a dead body. See Leo of Modena concerning the ceremonies of the Jews, p. 1. c. 8.

All they who are present in the place where any sick person has just expired, tear their clothes, according to the most ancient custom of the Hebrews; but then they generally tear only the extremities of them, about the breadth of their hand, and this more out of ceremony, than to express a sense of great sorrow. It is an old custom with them to pour out all the water into the street, which is at that time in the house and neighbourhood. The Rabbins say, that the destroying Angel hath in this water washed the sword of execution with which he killed the sick person, whereby the water becomes mortal poison. After this they put the dead body upon a sheet spread upon the pavement, turn his thumb inward to his hand, and light a wax taper at his feet, or head. This done, they wash the body, put a shirt upon it, and over the shirt another garment of fine linnen, which he wore upon the day of solemn expiation; then his taled, which is a piece of square cloth with tufts. Lastly, they put a white cap upon his head, and in this condition he is shut up in his coffin.

It appears to have been a custom anciently in Palestine, to embalm the dead bodies of persons, who were of any distinction, and left a good fortune behind them: but this usage [John xix. 39.] was never general. St. John remarks, that our Saviour was wrapt up in linnen clothes, and rub'd with perfumes, according to the custom of the Jews; as the manner of the Jews is to bury. We read, that either with or near the bodies of some Kings [2 Chr. xxi. 19. xxvi. 14. Jer. xxxiv. 5. Matth. ix. 23. Vide Jer. ix. 17, 18. Joseph. de Bello, l. 2. c. 15. Misna tit. Chetuboth. c. 4.] of Judah abundance of spices was burnt; but we cannot certainly affirm that there was any uniform custom in this particular. After the body has been for some time exposed, the Relations meet in order to carry it to the ground. They carry it out the feet foremost, according to the prescription of the Rabbins. Anciently they had women, who were hired to cry, and persons that play'd on doleful instruments, who walked in the funeral procession. The Rabbins say, that an Israelite was not allowed to have less than two of these Musicians at his wife's obsequies, without reckoning the woman who was hired to cry, and was always to be present upon such occasions. They who met the funeral procession were in civility to join the company, [Gemar. Babyl.] and mingle their groans with those of the Relations to the deceased. To this our Saviour seems to allude in these words, We have [ibidem. Joseph. l. 2. contra Appion. p. 1075. Luke vii. 32. Rom. xii. 15.] mourned to you, and ye have not wept. And St. Paul requires us to weep with those that weep, and rejoice with those who rejoice.

When they come to the place of burial, the coffin is set down upon the ground; then if the deceased be of any consideration, some one of the company makes his Encomium: after which, they walk ten times about the grave, repeating a long prayer, which begins with these words, God is the rock, his way is [Deut. xxxii. 4.] perfect, &c. Then the dead body is let down into the grave, with its face turned towards heaven: the nearest Relations throw the earth first upon it, and then the grave is filled with a shovel. When they depart from the place where the corpse is buried, they walk backward, and pulling up some grass three several times, they throw it behind their backs, with these words, They shall flourish like the grass of the earth. They believe that all the dead bodies of the Jews are conveyed through subterraneous passages [Rab. Salomon in Gen. xlvii. 29. Abarbanel, alii.] to Palestine, and this they call the rolling of the dead, or the rolling of the caves. They hope to rise again and enjoy a state of bliss in this country. They do not believe the Soul of the dead person to be received into the place of rest, before the body is reduced to dust. They imagine that for a year after his decease, it often visits its body in the grave. See our Dissertation on the funerals of the Hebrews, prefixed to the Book of Numbers.

Deaf

DEAF, Surdus; in Hebrew, Cheresch; in [חרשCheresch. κωφος. Surdus.] Greek, Kôphos. Every one knows what natural Deafness is. The Gospel relates many miracles, whereby Jesus Christ cured the Deaf. Deafness produces mutes, because these not hearing the articulate founds, which we utter, cannot bring forth any like them to make themselves understood. Wherefore the Hebrew word Charasch, which signifies to be Deaf, signifies likewise to be mute, or silent. The word Deaf is alfo taken in a metaphorical sense for one, who is not present, or cannot understand. For example: Thou shalt not curse the deaf. Thou shalt not abuse or calumniate him, [Numb. xxx. 8, 12. 1 Sam. x. 28.] who is absent. If a woman makes a vow, and her husband is as though he were deaf; hath made as if he did not understand her, or did not contradict her; she shall be obliged to perform it. The Israelites who did not approve of Saul's Election, brought him no present, And he was as though he had been deaf. He dissembled, made a shew [Isa. xxxv. 5. xlii. 18. xliii. 8.] as if he did not see it. Isaiah says in several places, that the Ears of the Deaf shall be opened at the coming of the Messiah. He means those who are spiritually Deaf; such of his people as had been hitherto Deaf to his word.

Death

DEATH. Man having eaten of the forbidden fruit, incurred the penalty of Death for himself and all his posterity. The Death of the Soul was what he instantly suffered, and he was made liable to bodily Death; tho' this was what he did not undergo till a long time after. Had he continued obedient to God, and not violated the precept which he gave him of abstaining from the forbidden fruit, he had not died, and the use of the fruit growing on the tree of life would have preserved him in a happy state of constant health; and after a long life spent on earth, God would have transported him, as he did Enoch and Elijah, into a life absolutely immortal. The Fathers and Councils teach us, that without sin Adam had not died; but the Rabbins believe, that after he had lived a long time, his soul would have been separated from his body without pain and violence, by receiving a salute from the Lord, and so would have enjoyed a life still much happier in a state of eternity and immortality. It is unquestionable, that Death was brought into the World by the Envy and Malice of the Devil. Invidia Diaboli mors [Wisd. iii. 24.] introivit in orbem terrarum; and that the sin of Adam produced the death of the first of Mankind, and of all his descendants. [Rom. v. 12.] By one man sin came into the world, and death by sin; wherefore death hath passed upon all. St. Austin distinguishes two sorts of immortality in man, the greater and the lesser: the greater and more perfect immortality consists in an impossibility of dying, which is the happy prerogative of God and Angels: the lesser immortality consists in a possibility of not dying: this Adam enjoyed in the state of innocency. By continuing in the obedience which he owed to his creator, he might have avoided Death, and from this lesser degree of immortality he might have arrived at that of not dying, which is the condition of the Blessed after the resurrection. He was therefore driven out of Paradise after his guilt, lest he should eat the fruit of the tree of life, which would have procured for him eternal life. Discerne immortalitatem majorem scilicet à minore, *nam & ista non absurd*è immortalitas dicitur, quâ potest quisque non mori, si non faciat unde moriatur. In hac immortalitate fuit Adam. Hanc immortalitatem merito prævaricationis amisit. Hæc ei subministrabatur de ligno vitæ, à quo non est prohibitus, quando legem bonam ne peccaret, accepit, sed quando malâ voluntate peccavit; tunc enim de paradiso ejectus est, ne extenderet manum ad lignum vitæ, & manducaret, & viveret in æternum.

The Socinians pretend, that Adam was created, and that sin in this particular wrought no change in his condition; and in this belief they affirm, that they have the authority of the Rabbins for their support. But these evidently maintain, that if our first parents had persevered in innocence, they had lived always. Manasseh Ben-Israel, who flourished in the middle of the last Century, asserts, that the immortality of the first man is founded upon Scripture, and that many famous Rabbins who are cited by him, are of this opinion. He shews that this immortality of Adam agrees with reason, since there was no inward cause in him which might occasion his death, and that he had nothing to fear from without, living, as he did, in a delicious and agreeable place, where every thing was subject to him; and that the fruit which he was to feed upon, increased his strength, and preserved his health. The Rabbins maintain that the tree of life was of a prodigious size; that all the waters of the earth issued from the foot of it; that if any one had been to have walked five hundred years, he could scarce have gone round it: these are exaggerations, or figurative expressions. But they do not at all question its having an enlivening virtue, or that the natural quality which God had given it, was sufficient to preserve men in a state of immortality; and they affirm, that to prevent his eating of it, and living eternally, God forced our first parent out of Paradise after his disobedience.

Jesus Christ by his death hath subdued Death, and hath merited for us a blessed immortality. By which I do not mean, that the Soul was before mortal, and by him made immortal, nor that he has merited for us the favour of not dying; for he has not not changed the nature of our Soul, nor thought fit to exempt us from the necessity of dying: but he hath given us the life of grace, and by his resurrection hath merited an happy immortality for us; provided the merits of his blood and death are applied to us by faith, and the use of the sacraments, and that we, through our own fault, do not frustrate his intentions to save all men.

As to the Resurrection of the Dead, we shall speak of it under the title of RESURRECTION.

[Cant. viii. 6.] The word Death is taken in Scripture not only for the death of the body, and soul; for the first death, which is that which happens when the soul is separated from the body; and for the second death, which is that of eternal damnation: but likewise for any great danger, for imminent danger of Death; for the plague and contagious diseases; for poison, and any great misfortune. By the gates of Death, the grave is signified, and the state of the Dead after this life: by the vessels or instruments of death, dangerous and deadly weapons are meant; by the bonds or snares of death, the snares which are laid to destroy an enemy; a son of Death, a man who merits Death, or is condemned to death; by the dust of death, the state to which the dead person is reduced in the grave. Love is strong as death, says Solomon; no one can resist death or love.

She sent for Barak the son of Abinoam, and by God's command enjoined him to get together an army of ten thousand men, to lead them to Tabor, and promised him victory over Sisera, General of Jabin's army. Barak refused to go, unless Deborah went with him. She went, but withal told him, that the success of this expedition would be imputed to a woman and not to him. The event verified her prediction. Sisera was defeated, as has been shewn in the Article of Barak: and after the victory, Deborah and Barak composed a fine thanksgiving-song, which we read in the fifth Chapter of Judges. This victory was obtained in the year of the World 2719, before Jesus Christ 1281, before the Vulgar Æra 1285.

Dedan

DEDAN, a People of Idumæa or Arabia. See above DADAN.

It is very credible, that the two names signify the same thing, and that the people called Dedan or Dedanim in Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, are descendants of Dadan the son of Raamah, grandson of Canaan, Gen. x. 7. or of Dadan the son of Jochshan, grandson to Abraham by Keturah, Gen. xxv. 3. But it is hard to discern one from the other, because the characters which the Scripture gives us of these two are not sufficiently distinct. The Prophets [If. xxi. 3. Jerem. xxv. 23. xlix. 8. Ezek.xxv. 13.] Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, place visibly the Dedanim with the Arabians and Edomites, in the severe prophecies which they pronounce against them. We believe these predictions were accomplished in the time of Nebuchadnezzar, who subdued all [Joseph. Antiq. l. x. c. 11.] these people, five years after the taking of Jerusalem. Ezekiel puts Dedan among the merchants who came to traffick at Tyre. He [Ezek. xxvii. 15, 20.] places them with Gog and Magog, who came to ravage and lay waste the land of Israel. As these people dwelt probably in [Idem xxxviii. 13.] Arabia Deserta, it is impossible to point out exactly the place of their abode. Jeremiah seats them with the Arabians, who cut their hair round. Et Dedan, & Thezna, & Buz, & universis qui attonsi sunt in comam.

Dedication

[Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 25, 26. & Antiq. l. 15. c. 14.] DEDICATION, a religious ceremony, whereby any Place, Temple, Altar, or vessel is consecrated to the worship of God. Moses dedicated the Tabernacle which he [Exod. xl. Numb. vii.] built in the wilderness. He likewise consecrated the vessels which were set apart for the service of the Tabernacle, and the worship of the Lord. Solomon solemnly dedicated [1 Kings viii.] the Temple which he erected. The Israelites, who returned from the Babylonish captivity, dedicated the new Temple [Ezra vi. 16, 17.] which they built, and upon the day of this dedication sacrificed a great number of [1 Mac. iv. 52, 53, 54, &c.] victims. The Maccabees having cleansed the Temple, which had been polluted by Antiochus Epiphanes, again dedicated the Altar; and this is believed to be the Dedication which the Jews continued to celebrate in the winter, and at which our Lord was one day present, as is observed in St. [John x. 22.] John's Gospel. The Temple likewise rebuilt by Herod was dedicated; it was the most beautiful and magnificent of any that were built after the Jews returned from their captivity. Herod celebrated the dedication of it with great solemnity; and in order to make the festival on this occasion more august, he appointed it to be performed upon the anniversary day of his accession to the crown. Now he was declared King towards the end of the year 3964. before Jesus Christ 36. before the vulgar Æra 40. and the Temple which he built was dedicated at the end of the 32d year of Herod, of the world 3996, four years before the birth of Jesus Christ. It is very probably of this Dedication of the Temple, that there is mention made in Saint John, which was celebrated in the winter, and at which Jesus Christ was present. [See Bassage's Antiquit. des Juifs, t. 1. P. 103. Nehem. xii. 27. Deut. xx. 5.]

Not only sacred places were thus dedicated, but cities, walls and the gates belonging to them; and lastly, the houses of private persons. When Nehemiah had finished the walls and gates of Jerusalem, he dedicated them in a solemn manner. The title of the xxix Psalm implies, that it was sung at the dedication of David's house. And Moses ordered proclamation to be made upon the day of battle at the head of the Army, What man is there that hath built a new house, and hath not dedicated it? let him go, and return to his house, lest he die in the battle, and another man dedicate it. This dedication [Vide Chald. ad Deut. vi. Talmud. Maimon. Halac Tephilim. Deut. vi. 9, 10, 11.] was performed principally, according to the Rabbins, by pronouncing a certain blessing, while some particular words of the Law written upon parchment, rolled up in a cane or hollow stick, were fasten'd on the doorpost.

From hence the custom of dedicating Churches, Oratories, Chapels and Altars took its rise among Christians: a custom practis'd among all people of all religions. But we confine ourselves to what relates more particularly to the Holy Scriptures.

[Judg. xvi. 4.] Samson falling in love with her, devoted himself to her, and, as some say, was married to her[1]. The Princes of the Philistins being acquainted with this woman, came to her, and promised each of them to give her eleven hundred pieces of silver, if she could discover whence that extraordinary strength proceeded, which he was master of, and would inform them of it. She assured them that she would use her best endeavours to satisfy them; and accordingly she asked him how he came by this great strength, and how he might be deprived of it. Samson told her, that if they bound him with seven green Withs, that were never dried, he should be as weak as other men. The Philistin Lords therefore brought her seven green Withs, which she had mentioned, with which she bound Samson; and having concealed men in her house, who waited the event of this trial, she cried out, Samson, the Philistins are upon thee. Immediately he broke the Withs, as if they had been threads; so that there was no knowing the cause of his great strength.

Delilah having once more asked, and with more earnestness, wherein it consisted, he answered, If they bind me with new ropes, I shall become as weak as another. She therefore bound him, and cried out as before, the Philistins are upon thee. Whereupon Samson, without any straining at all, broke these cords as if they had been a piece of thread. Delilah asking him the same question a third time, and with more impetuosity, he told her, that if she wove the seven locks of his head with the web, and fastened it with a pin, he should be weak. She did so, and Samson awoke as at other times, and went away with the pin of the beam, and the web, without any trouble.

Then Delilah began to reproach him with want of affection, and with deceiving [Δ Delta.] her three several times. She importuned him with so much obstinacy, that finding no rest to be had without making this discovery, his heart at last was mollified, and he lost all his resolution. He told her therefore, that his head had been never touched with a razor, because he was a Nazarite, and consecrated to God from his mother's womb; that if he were shaved, all his strength would forsake him, and he should be as weak as other men. Hereupon Delilah gave notice to the Philistin Princes, that they should come once more to her house; for Samson had at last discovered the truth to her. They came there with the money, which they had promised her, and Delilah having taken care to have his head shaved, while he was sleeping in her bosom, she pushed him from her with violence, and said, the Philistins are upon thee. Samson hereupon waking, would have put himself into a posture of defence, believing that he had still the same strength as before: but the Philistins hem'd him in, took him, put out his eyes, bound him in chains, and carried him to Gaza, where he continued in prison till his death; as we shall see in the Article SAMPSON.

Delta

[Ps. xxviii. 10. □ Daleth.] DELTA, is the fourth letter of the Greek Alphabet, and comes from the Hebrew Daleth. In Geography, that part of Egypt is called Delta, which is watered by the seven branches of the Nile, from its division as far as the seven mouths through which it discharges itself into the Mediterranean: septemplicis ostia Nili. This part of Egypt is called Delta, because it comes pretty near to the figure of this letter, its point lying towards Grand Cairo, and its basis upon the coasts of the Mediterranean.

Deluge

DELUGE. Not only that terrible Inundation is in Scripture called Diluvium, or Deluge, whereby God destroyed all Mankind, and all the animals of the earth and air, which were not in the Ark; but likewise all sorts of Inundations or collections of extraordinary Waters. Thus the Psalmist speaking of the waters of the sea, or of a violent tempest, expresses it by the word Deluge. Dominus diluvium inhabitare facit. And in another place, that a deluge of water shall not come near the righteous: [Ps. xxxi. 6.] In diluvio aquarum multarum ad eum non appropinquabunt. The same expression may be observed in the common language of the World. All extraordinary Inundations are called Deluges, such as those which happened in the time of Deucalion and Ogyges, and those which we see in our rivers after long rains or unusual storms. In a spiritual and alleallegorical sense we say, an inundation of evil and afflictions. In the style of Scripture, great waters mean often great calamities.

But we understand principally by the word Deluge, that which happened in the time of Noah, wherein, as St. Peter says, there were but eight Persons saved. [Gen. vi.] Moses's account of this matter is as follows. The men of Seth's family having corrupted themselves with the daughters of Cain's race, God resolved upon their destruction, and said within himself, My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh; yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years. These last words may admit of several senses; for example, I will shorten the life of man, and reduce it from between eight and nine hundred years, which was the length of it before, to an hundred and twenty; or else I allow them no more than an hundred and twenty years of life from this time to the Deluge: all which time was required, they say, for Noah's building of the Ark, and collecting all the necessary provisions.

God therefore having determined to destroy sinful man, and the animals which he had created for him, said to Noah, Make thee an Ark of Gophar wood, rooms shalt thou make in the Ark, and shalt pitch it within and without with pitch.——Behold I will bring a flood of waters upon the earth to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life from under heaven: and every thing that is in the earth shall die. But with thee will I establish my covenant, and thou shalt come into the Ark, thou and thy sons and thy wife, and thy sons wives with thee. He performed all that God commanded [Gen. vii. 17.] him. In the six hundredth year of Noah's life, in the second month, the seventeenth day of the month, the same day were all the fountains of the deep broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened—and the flood was forty days upon the earth, and the waters encreased and bare up the Ark, and it was lift up above the earth——All the high hills that were under the whole heaven were covered with it, and the waters rose fifteen cubits above the highest mountains—All men died, and generally every thing that had life, and breathed under heaven.

We have discoursed in another place of the Ark, and every thing relating to it. See the word Ark; as also the article Noah. We confine ourselves here to what regards the Deluge, its Causes, Circumstances, Universality, and Effects. The sins of mankind, the measure whereof was now compleated, were the occasion of the Deluge, as Moses in several places inculcates. But why did God take this method rather than any other? This we are not permitted to search into; and if he had made use of any other way to extirpate sinners, the curiosity of man would not fail to form still other questions as little reasonable as this.

The Commentators are very well agreed as to the Year of the Deluge, which happened 1656 Years after the creation of the World; but there is more difficulty as to the month wherein the Deluge began. Several of the Fathers were of opinion, that it began and ended in the spring; they understood the second month mentioned by Moses to be the second in the ecclesiastical Year, beginning at the month Nisan, which answers to March, about the vernal Equinox. Among other proofs of this, they borrow one from the Dove's bringing back the olive-leaf to Noah, which was, they say, a tender shoot of that year. We believe however with the most learned Chronologists, that the sacred Author spoke in this place of the second month in the civil year, which began in Autumn, about our October, and that this second month answered partly to October and partly to November: so that the Deluge began in Autumn, and in the beginning of Winter. Here follows a Calendar of this melancholy year 1656, according to M. Basnage, who is in some [Antiq. Judaiq. t.2. p.399.] manner of our opinion.

The

The question concerning the universality of the Deluge, is of the most serious and important nature. Some learned men have denied it, and pretended that to maintain it, were an absurdity, and a great argument of want of reason; that to believe God capable of making things contrary to nature and reason, were to form a mistaken idea of his power and greatness; that the universality of the Deluge is contrary to both; that it may be geometrically demonstrated, that although all the clouds in the air were reduced to water, and fell upon the earth, yet would they not cover the whole superficies of it to the height of a foot and an half; and that if all the water contained in rivers and in the sea, were to be spread over the earth, it would never rise to the height of four thousand paces, so as to reach the tops of the highest mountains, unless it was rarified in an extraordinary manner, and then it would not be in a condition to support the weight of the Ark; that if all the air which encompasses the earth were changed into water, this would not make above one and thirty feet of water, which would be very far from what were necessary to cover the whole surface of the earth and the highest mountains so far as fifteen cubits above their tops.

All this seems contrary to Reason, and what follows, to Nature. The rain does not fall upon eminences above 600 paces high: it does not descend from a greater altitude than this, and there can be no rain formed higher which would not immediately be frozen by the cold that prevails there: whence then came the water which was to cover the tops of those mountains that are above the middle region of the air? Will any one say, that the rain found a way back again? How could the plants be preserved so long under water? How could the animals that came out of the Ark, disperse themselves throughout the whole world? Besides, all the Earth was not then peopled: why then should the Deluge be intended to be universal? Was it not sufficient for it to reach those countries which were inhabited? How were beasts brought from the extremities of the world into the Ark?

These are the principal objections which are form'd against the universality of the Deluge[1]. Isaac Vossius mentioned them in a dissertation composed particularly by him, under the title, de Ætate Mundi, in his epistle to Andrew Colvius, and in his answers to Andrew Scotanus, and George Hornius. This opinion was examined while F. John Mabillon was at Rome, in the journey which he made thither in 1685. And the counsellors of the Sacred Congregation de l'Indice having done him the honour to advise with him concerning it[2], he set forth the reasons to them which might be alledged against Vossius, and at the same time those which might be offered to excuse him. He observes, that his opinion contains nothing contrary either to faith or good manners; that Vossius proposed this System with no other design but to reply more easily to the objections of such Libertines, who made use of what was said concerning the universality of the deluge, to destroy the authority of the Holy Scriptures.

That Vossius said nothing exasperating or injurious to the church of Rome, nor against those who maintain the opinion which he opposes, but only declared his own as the most probable: that it is of advantage to receive, or at least tolerate, diverse senses in the explanation of the Scripture, provided they do not contradict the manifest authority of the Sacred Writings, and the Church. That these expressions omnis terra, omnes montes, omnis caro, may be construed with restriction, and so are often understood in Scripture. That some Catholick Doctors, such as Cajetan, believed that the mountain upon which he supposes Paradise to have been situated, was not covered with the waters of the Deluge. That as this opinion of Vossius had hitherto produced no disturbance among Catholicks, and had been attack'd by Protestants only, there was no danger in tolerating it; and that it were better to leave it without censure, than to concern themselves in disputes which are carried on among Protestants: that however, if the Congregation were inclined to stigmatize this opinion by any censure, they should farther censure Hornius's confutation of it, because of his injurious reflexions on the Pope and the Catholick Church. Such was the advice of this wise and learned Monk.

We shall now show whether Vossius had reason to depart in this particular from the common opinion of the Fathers, and of all Commentators, as well Catholicks as Protestants. He visibly departs from the Text of Moses which we have related, and which cannot more clearly evidence than it does, the universality of the Deluge.

But the universality of the Deluge, says Vossius, is impossible and unnecessary; why should the whole Earth be overflowed to destroy all mankind? was it not sufficient to pour forth the waters into countries where there were men? But who told Vossius that the World was not then intirely peopled, after above two thousand years continuance? for, according to the Septuagint, whose Chronology is supported by him, the World was above 2200 years old in the beginning of the Deluge: Was a longer time necessary for the settling inhabitants in all the countries in the World? Besides, did he think to find less considerable difficulties in the system of a particular Deluge? Supposing this, what necessity was there to build at great expence a prodigious Ark, to bring all sorts of animals into it, to oblige eight persons to enter into it? Was all this done to secure them from an inundation which was to cover some part only of the Earth? Was it not more easy to command these people to stay in those countries which the Deluge was not to reach, and by a particular providence to conduct those animals thither, which as yet were not there?

How could the waters continue at the height of fifteen cubits above the tallest mountains of Armenia, for example, Chaldæa or Persia, without spreading into the neighbouring countries? How should such a vessel as the Ark float for many months upon a mountain of water, without sliding by its own weight down the declivity of it? Now Vossius himself confesses, that supposing a particular Deluge, this would be the situation of the Ark upon the waters.

He says, that if the Deluge had extended itself throughout all the World, the plants and trees would have died: that according to his own System they did not, since Noah and his family, and the animals which he had preserved in the Ark, when they went out of it, lived and settled in those very countries, to which, by his confession, the Deluge did extend; that is to say, round about mount Ararat, in Mesopotamia and Chaldæa. If the plants and trees did not die in this country, why should they die elsewhere? And if Noah could have stored the country afresh with them, supposing they did die, why might he not have done the same in the rest of the World in time, and a succession of Ages? And if the waters of the Deluge, which he asserts to have been particular only, corrupted all the trees and plants wherever they reached, whence came the branch or shoot of the Olive-tree, which the Dove brought to Noah? We have many experiments of an infinite fertility of nature in the production and reproduction of plants; we know of many wonderful effects from the preservation of seeds, both under the water in the Earth, and out of the Earth for many years, and which are afterwards as fruitful as before; we know that water, with respect to plants, is a principle of fertility infinitely more proper to preserve than to destroy them: that many plants grow under water, that all require moisture to produce and multiply; the dung [Plin. l. 13. c. 25. See M. le Pelletier of Rohan, his Dissertation on Noah's Ark, c. 33.] of beasts and birds reproduces [Licet. l. 3. c. 7. De his quæ diu vivunt sine alimento. Scalig. in Cardan. Exercit. 14.] those grains in the fields which have been eaten by them; virgin earth exposed to the air produces herbs which were never sown there; earth taken from under the water will do the same. No one can boast that he knows those wise precautions which the Author of nature has taken for the preservation of the species. Trunks of trees have been seen to grow green again, and become fruitful, after having been ten or eleven years plucked up by the roots.

[Gen. viii. 3, 4.] Add to all this, that the waters of the Deluge did not cover the whole surface of the earth for more than about an hundred and ten days: for from the first day of the tenth month they began to discover the tops of the mountains. Noah entered the Ark upon the seventeeth day of the second month, after which the rain fell forty days and forty nights, and 256 days before the end of the Deluge the waters began to rise again in vapours; so that the time of all the seeds and plants continuing under water, was far from being a whole year.

The difficulty of bringing beasts from all places of the world to Noah, is not so great as may be imagined. The number of beasts created in the beginning, is not so considerable as we might believe. God created one man and one woman, and probably a couple of every kind of animals, male and female. From this couple, of horses, for example, of dogs, or goats, all the animals that we know of, of the same species, were born. The difference which is observed between the different sorts of dogs and horses, is not greater than that which we see between the different sorts of men, of whom some are white, and others black, others of an olive colour, others red; some have a beard, others have none.

Besides, there were all the several species of animals in the places round about Paradise, since God brought all sorts of them to Adam, in order to be named by him. It is very credible that the terrestrial Paradise was not far from Armenia, and the source of the Tigris and Euphrates, which are expressly mentioned by Moses in [Gen. viii. 11. Gen. ii. 19. Gen. ii. 8, 9, 10, 11.] his description of this garden. Lastly, there is scarce any doubt to be made, but that Noah's Ark was built in Mesopotamia, somewhere towards Chaldæa. It is very probable therefore, that there were as many animals in this country and the places adjacent, as were necessary to be put into the Ark. If there are some, that through long habit, which becomes as it were a second nature, cannot now live in this part of the world, which however I think very difficult to prove, it does not follow that there were any such in Noah's time. If on a sudden any men or beasts were to be conveyed from the warmest parts of Africk to the coldest places in the North, it is very credible, that both would perish there; but the case would not be the same, if they were to be removed by insensible degrees nearer to these places, or were to be bred there from their being young: and if there are some beasts which are to be found only in particular countries, we are not to infer from thence, that there never were any of them elsewhere. We know very well, that formerly there were many beasts of a particular species in some countries, where at present very few or none at all of the same kind are to be met with, such as the Hippopotomi in Egypt, wolves in England, and beavers[3] in France.

But the strongest objection proposed against the universality of the deluge is taken from the impossibility of finding so much water in nature, as was requisite to cover all the Earth to the height mention'd by Moses; that is to say, of fifteen cubits above the highest mountains, which are supposed be about a thousand or twelve hundred paces in perpendicular height. The question is, whether the waters of the Earth may be sufficient to cover it to such an height; that is to say, whether the waters of the sea, of fountains, rivers, and the conservatories of water upon Earth, together with the clouds in the air, could suffice for the purpose we are speaking of.

It has been believed, that tho' all the air in the world, that is to say, in the atmosphere, which extends itself between us and the moon, were to be condensed into water, it would not yield a depth of water of above two and thirty feet over all the earth; because it has been supposed, that a column of air from the earth to the top of the atmosphere, does not weigh more than two and thirty feet of water: and this supposition is founded upon the best experiments which have been made to prove the gravity of the air. Nevertheless, these experiments are contradicted by other experiments, which seem to be as exact and certain as the former, [Le Pelletier Diffèrt. sur l'Arche de Noë, p. 36.] and leave room to question at least the truth of this principle, viz. that the weight of the air is the cause of the water or quicksilver's continuing suspended in the tubes wherein they have been placed, in an equilibrium with the air. Besides, it is demonstrated, that if it be true, as they say it is, who have carried their experiments of the air's gravity to the greatest perfection, that five hundred fathoms of elevation sink the quicksilver included in tubes stopped at one end, seven and thirty lines and an half, and that the same quicksilver continues suspended at the height of eight and twenty inches and an half, in places which are upon a level with the sea; upon these suppositions, I say, it is demonstrable, that there cannot be more than two leagues and sixty fathoms of air in height, which could gravitate about the terrestrial globe, tho' the philosophers will have it, that the earth is eighty five or eighty six thousand leagues distant from the moon, and consequently a like extent of air which should gravitate like that which is immediately about the earth.

Now supposing that it really does gravitate, and comes to be reduced to water, what quantities of it will it not produce[4]? And if it does not gravitate, there can be nothing concluded from its weight either for or against the universality of the Deluge. The truth is, that the weight of the air is, in my opinion, nothing else but the effort which the air makes to get away from the center of its motion, which is supposed to be circular about the earth; and that the weight of bodies in the air consists only in the pressure of the air, which by the same effort that we have been speaking of, repels them towards the earth, and acts upon them with more or less force, according as these bodies are more solid, dense, and earthy, or more subtile, porous, and airy. And all this is nothing to the question of the Universality of the Deluge, and whether there is in nature so much water as may suffice to cover the whole earth as high as we have mention'd, that is to say, to about twelve thousand feet in thickness quite round the terrestrial globe.

In the beginning of the creation the terrestrial [Gen. i. 2, 3.] globe was all hemmed in with water, the earth was a Chaos, the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, and darkness covered the whole face of the deep, as Moses says. The Psalmist expresses himself in as particular a manner, Thou layest the foundations of the earth, that it never should be moved at any time, thou coveredst it with the deep as with a garment; the waters stood above the mountains. At thy rebuke they fled, at the voice of thy thunder they were afraid. They go up as high as the hills, and down to the valleys beneath, even unto the place which thou hast appointed for them. Thou hast set them their bounds which they shall not pass; neither turn again to cover the earth. Ps. civ. 5, 6, 7.

Here therefore is an universal Deluge clearly described in the beginning of the world; and what prevents its returning a second time? What but the commands of God, who has said to the waters of the sea, [Job. xxxviii. 11.] Hither shalt thou come, but no far [Prov. viii. 27, 29.] ther; and here shall thy proud waves be stayed. And Wisdom in the Proverbs, When he prepared the heavens, I was there: when he set a compass upon the face of the depth.

[Gen. i. 6, 7, 8.] But, it will be said, to reduce things to the first state wherein Moses describes them, God must not only have spread the waters of the sea, fountains, and rivers over the earth, which seems impossible without disordering the whole œconomy of the terrestrial globe; but likewise must have recalled the waters which he had rais'd above the firmament, and have brought them down upon the earth. And God said, Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters. And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament. The waters below the firmament are indubitably the waters of the sea and rivers; the waters above it are those which are rarified in the atmosphere itself: in short, in what place soever these waters may be, and whatsoever may become of them, it is certain that they are not annihilated; that it was altogether as easy for God to reduce them to their first state, and form them into waters at the time of the Deluge, as it was for him in the beginning of the world, to reduce them into air or vapours; however, this demonstrates that there is nothing in the universal Deluge contrary to the laws of nature, nor impossible to the power of God.

Moses, to shew us the change which happened at that time in nature, tells us, That [Gen. vii. 11, 12.] the fountains of the great deep were broke open, and the windows of heaven were opened, and the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights. As if he had said, that the earth was reduced to very near the same state wherein it was in the beginning, that it returned in some sort to a Chaos. The barriers and banks, which restrained the waters of the sea, were broken down; the cataracts of the firmament were opened, the lower and upper waters were again collected together, as in the beginning.

But supposing the Ark to have been rais'd fifteen cubits above the highest mountains, how could the men and beasts in it, live and breathe amidst the cold and extreme subtility of the air in the middle region, wherein some affirm that no animal whatsoever can live long? Two things may be said in reply to this: first, that the arguments and supposed experiments which are produced to prove, that there is no living on the highest mountains in the world, are by no means certain. It is indeed colder, and the air is finer and sharper on the tops of the highest mountains, but it is not true that people die there, as we know from many very certain relations.

Secondly, the middle region of the air ought not to be looked upon as a fixed point, and a limited region, which never either rises or falls; it is with respect to us more or less elevated, according to the greater or lesser heat of the Sun. During winter it is much nearer the Earth than in the warmth of summer; or to speak more properly, the cold which reigns in the middle region of the air during the summer, reigns likewise in the lower region during winter. Thus supposing the Deluge to be universal, it is evident, that the middle region of the air must have risen higher, and removed to a greater distance from the earth and waters; and on the contrary, the lower region must have approached nearer unto both, in proportion as the waters of the Deluge encreased or decreased. So that the Ark was all along in the lower region of the air, even when it was carried fifteen cubits above the highest mountains, and the men and beasts, which were enclosed in it, breathed the same air as they would have breathed on Earth, a thousand or twelve hundred paces lower, if the Deluge had not happened.

We do not however pretend by all these arguments to prove, that the universal Deluge was produced without a miracle; we acknowledge that it was a very extraordinary one, and particularly remarkable in the fall of the waters for forty days, and in their evaporation, or return into the Deep and Air, in what manner soever this may have been effected. We confess that this terrible event does involve almost inexplicable difficulties, as well according to the system which maintains it to be universal, as that which supposes it to be only particular; and since it is necessary to admit a chain of miracles in both systems, we had better, methinks, adhere to the common opinion of the Fathers, and Interpreters in all Ages and Communions, than hunt after new ways which engage us in perplexities equal to those which we endeavour to avoid. For if it is our design, by allowing the system of a particular Deluge, to stop the mouths of Libertines, and secure the authority of the Holy Scriptures; how should we succeed, while we offer violence to the text, and make it say that the Deluge covered but a part only of the Earth, while Moses and all the Sacred Authors, who have spoken of it, shew so distinctly the universality of it? Dr. Thomas Burnet, an English Author, in his book intitled, Telluris Theoria Sacra, Libri duo priores de Diluvio & Paradiso, printed in 4to at London 1681, has pretended to explain in a physical manner, how the Deluge was produced. He supposes the earth to have been in its beginning round, smooth and even throughout, without mountains or valleys; that in the center of the Earth there was a great abyss full of water; that the earth having sunk in many places, the consequence of different shocks and divers earthquakes, and risen in others, had opened a passage for the waters, which issued out with impetuosity from the center where they had been shut up, and spread over all the earth; that these shocks and earth-quakes, and lands confusedly heaped together, formed mountains and valleys; that in the beginning the axis of the Earth kept exactly parallel with the axis of the world, moving always directly under the Æquator, and producing a perpetual Æquinox; that indeed the torrid Zone was utterly uninhabitable, but in return there was a perpetual spring over all the earth besides; that in the first world there were neither seas, nor rain, nor rain-bow; that at last the Earth which we inhabit having passed through fire, will one day re-assume its pristine form, till at the last day of judgment it be changed into a fixed star.

We do not attempt here to confute this system, it is sufficient for us to have proposed it. It appears evidently enough from Moses, that before the Deluge, there were mountains, seas, and vicissitudes of seasons. Leidekker, and some other Protestant Authors have written against Burnet, and these the reader, if he pleases, may consult.

Another English Author, whose name is Woodward, in a Book intitled Naturalis Historia telluris illustrata, &c. printed at London in 1714, asserts, that the whole Mass of the Earth having been dissolved by the waters of the Deluge, a new Earth was afterwards formed, composed of different beds or lays of terrestrial Matter which was swimming in this fluid: That these lays were disposed one upon the other almost according to their different degrees of gravity; so that the Plants or Animals, particularly shell-fish, and other fishes, which as yet were not dissolved as well as the rest, remain'd confounded with mineral and fossile materials, which have preserved them whole, or at least have retained the different impressions of them either raised or hollow.

By this Hypothesis he explains the Shells we meet with in places very remote from the sea, the Elephant's teeth and bones of Animals, the petrified Fishes, and an hundred other things which we find upon the tops of mountains, and in places at a great distance from the sea. He asserts, that these having been all buried in the earth at the time of the universal Deluge, the bituminous matter and salts that are in the earth, penetrated, and preserved them intire, and even sometimes petrified them. The Reader may consult the Author whom we have cited, in whose work he will find many very curious things relating to the Deluge. Halley Dissert. in Actis Philosophicis, Londin. p. 104. The Dictionary of Trevoux, under the words Deluge, Coquillage, Fossiles.

The Mussulmen, Pagans, Chinese, and the very people of America, have preserved the tradition of the Deluge. They all relate it after their own particular manner. Josephus [Joseph. l. 1. contra Appion. p. 1043, 1044. Apud Eu-seb. præpar. l. 9. c. 12.] cites Berosus, who upon the testimony of some ancient monuments spoke of the Deluge much as Moses did. He said something of Noah and the Ark, and of the mountains where it rested. Abydenus relates, that one Sesistrus was informed by Saturn of a Deluge which was to drown all the earth; that Sesistrus having embarked in a covered vessel, sent forth birds to learn in what condition the earth was; and that these birds returned three times. Alexander Polyhistor told the same story with Abydenus, and added withal, that the four-footed beasts, the creeping things and birds of the air, were preserved in this vessel. Lucian in his Book concerning the goddess of Syria, says, that mankind having given themselves up to the utmost irregularities, the earth was drowned with a Deluge, so that none but Deucalion remained upon it, he having taken shelter in a vessel, together with his [Apollodor. Bibl. l. 1. c. 1. Ovid. Metam. l. 1. v. 270, &c.] family and animals of all sorts. Apollodorus, Ovid, and many others have discoursed at large of Deucalion's Deluge; but they have intermixed many circumstances in their recital, which agree only with that of Noah.

The Chinese maintain, that the Deluge did not overflow their country; that it did not reach so far as the Indies. This is what we see in the account given by two Mahometan Arabians, who travelled into this [Renaudot Voyage de deux Arabes en Egypte au neuvieme Siecle, imprimé à Paris 1718.] country in the ninth Century; but the Arabians made no difficulty of believing it.

We have spoken above, under the word Apamæa, of the tradition which asserted Noah's Ark to have rested near this city, which for this reason was called Kibotos, that is to say, the Ark. Two Medals have been published, coined in the same city: one represents on one side the Emperor Philip's Head with this legend in Greek, The Emperor Cæsar Julius Philippus Augustus, and [Octav. Falconer Inscriptiones Atleticæ Rom. 1668. p. 163. Kircher de arcâ Noë, p. 138.] on the reverse is an Ark, wherein Deucalion and Pyrrha, or Noah and his wife, are shut up: upon the top of the Ark are two pigeons, one whereof holds the branch of an olive-tree. On one side of the Ark we read the word Noe: and about the reverse, Under Marcus Aurelius Alexander second Pontiff of the Apamæans. The second Medal resembles the first with this difference, that it represents the Head of Lucius Septimius Severus Pertinax, and that on the reverse we read these Greek letters, NHTΩN upon the Ark; and about the reverse, Under him who presides over the combats of the Magnesians and Apamæans. F. Kircher believed these Greek letters NΩE, which signify Noah, to have been the last letters of the word AΠAMEΩN reversed. Others mention that these medals were forged. It would be necessary to see and examine them: This is certain, that the people of Apamæa in Asia, valued themselves upon having been first founded by Deucalion and Pyrrha, or Noah and his wife, when they came out of the Ark, after the Deluge.

Mahomet speaking of the Deluge, says, [Alcoran. cap. Hond.] That when the time which God had prescribed for the punishment of Mankind was come, and that the oven began to boil and run over, God said to Noah, take and carry two couple of Animals of all kinds into the Ark with you. An oven which begins to boil is in Arabic called Tannour, and the Mahometans tell us, that Eve made use of this oven in baking bread; and that it came by succession down to Noah: it is different from our common ovens, and has a very narrow mouth at the top of it. It is generally made of stone, of a sort of brown freestone. They heat it by throwing wood into it at the top, and the dough is placed without all round the oven, or within on little white flints, with which the hollow of it is half full.

[Coloss. iv. 14.] When therefore the oven began to boil, that is to say, the waters of the Deluge began to rise with impetuosity from the bottom of the earth, God commanded Noah to go into the Ark with his family, and those righteous persons whom he should appoint to enter into it: these were fourscore in number; but Canaan refused to go on board. After six months continuance of the Deluge, for they allow it to have been of no longer duration, God commanded the earth, and said, Earth swallow up thy waters; Heaven draw up those which thou hast poured out. The water hereupon began immediately to diminish, and the order of God was executed. The Ark settled on mount Gioudi, and a voice was heard from heaven, saying, Wo to the wicked. The Interpreters observe, that this verse is the most eloquent and sublime in the Alcoran, both for the sense and words of it.

M. le Pelletier of Rohan in the preface to his Dissertation on Noah's Ark, says, that he demonstrates there the Deluge to have been necessarily universal, as the Scripture describes it, and as the constant tradition of the Jewish and Christian Churches has always represented it. Yet he says the contrary, p. 344. and p. 416.

Demas (I)

I. DEMAS, whom St. Paul speaks of in his Epistles, was of Thessalonica. He was at first one of the most zealous Disciples that this Apostle had. He was very serviceable to him at Rome during his imprisonment. But some years after, (about the year of Jesus Christ 65.) he forsook him to follow a more secular life, and withdrew to Thessalonica, the place of his birth. Epiphanius informs us, that he renounced the faith, and was engaged in the heresy of Cerinthus, Ebion, and others, who held Jesus Christ to be a mere man. Dorothæus in his Synopsis says, that when he came to Thessalonica, he became a Priest to some of [Est. Grot. Menoc. Cornel. in 2 Tim. iv. 2 Tim. iv. 10. Epiphan. hæres. 51.] the Idols of the Country. Others affirm, that he recovered after this fall; and Estius conjectures, that St. Ignatius in his Epistle to the Magnesians speaks of him, calling him, their Bishop worthy of God. But all this is grounded only upon a false supposition, that the second Epistle of St. Paul to Timothy was written during this Apostle's first imprisonment at Rome, and before the Epistles to the Colossians and Philemon.

Demetrius Phalereus (I)

I. DEMETRIUS PHALEREUS, a Peripatetick Philosopher, and the Disciple of Theophrastus. His extraordinary qualities recommended him to the government of the Athenian Commonwealth for ten years, where three hundred and sixty Statues in brass were erected to his honour. But after this he fell into disgrace with the Athenians, who during his absence condemned him to death, and overthrew all his statues. He retired to Ptolemy the son of Lagus, King of Egypt, whom he would have persuaded to exclude his eldest son Ptolemy Philadelphus from his succession to the kingdom, and to substitute in his room the children of Eurydice. But Philadelphus coming to the crown, banished Demetrius out of his dominions, who [About the year of the World 3723, or 3724. Philadelphus ascended the throne in 3721. Diogen. Laert. in Demetrio Phalereo. l. 5. segm. 78, 79. Cicero Orat. pro Rabirio. Vide Menag. notas in Diogen. l. 5.] thereupon killed himself with the biting of an Asp. This is the account which we have from Diogenes Laertius in his life of this Philosopher.

We take notice of him in this Dictionary for no other reason, but because it is by some pretended, that King Ptolemy Philadelphus at his persuasion set people to work upon translating the Scriptures of the Hebrews into Greek. But the bare relation of his life, as we have given it, is intirely contrary to this opinion. Demetrius was never in any favour or credit in Egypt under Philadelphus. This we shall examine more at large in the Article of the Seventy Interpreters.

Demetrius Soter (II)

II. DEMETRIUS SOTER, King of Syria, reigned twelve years, from the year of the world 3842 to 3854, before Jesus Christ 146, before the Vulgar Æra 150. He was the son of Seleucus IV. surnamed Philopater; but did not immediately succeed him, because he was an hostage at Rome, when his father died, and his uncle Antiochus Antiochus Epiphanes, who in the interim arrived in Syria, procured himself to be acknowledged King, and reigned eleven years, and after him his son Antiochus Eupator, two. At length Demetrius Soter was seated in his father's throne, in the year 3842, as we before observed. He is often mentioned in the Books of the Maccabees.

Alcimus, who had intruded into the office of High-priest of the Jews, with some other malecontents of the same nation, so exasperated Demetrius against Judas Maccabæus, that this prince sent Bacchides with an army against him. But Judas [1 Macc. vii. and 2 Macc. xiv.] Maccabæus defended himself with so much bravery, that Bacchides could get no advantage over him. The year following, the King sent Nicanor into Judæa; but Nicanor was intirely defeated, and lost his life in the action. At last Bacchides coming [1 Macc. xv. and 2 Macc. vii. 1 Macc. ix. 2—20. World 3843. before J. C. 157. before the Vulgar Æra 161. 1 Macc. ix. 28.] a second time into Judæa, bore down Judas with the number of his troops, and overwhelmed all the Jews, who had continued faithful to the Lord, with great calamities. Jonathan succeeded Judas in the government of his people. Demetrius endeavoured to surprize and kill him; but Jonathan kept his ground during the whole time of Demetrius's reign, and governed for a long time after him.

Alexander Balas, who called himself the son of Antiochus Epiphanes, having got himself to be acknowledged king of Syria [In the year of the World 3851. before J. C. 149. before the Vulgar Æra 153. 1 Macc. x. 1, 2.] by the garrison of Ptolemaïs, Demetrius put himself at the head of his army, and marched against him. He wrote to Jonathan Maccabæus, and desired troops of him against Balas. But Jonathan prefer'd the offers and conditions which Alexander Balas proposed to him, and embraced his party against Demetrius; who wrote a second time to him on the same subject, but Jonathan would not rely upon his promises. At length Demetrius giving battle, he was killed fighting valiantly in the year of the world 3854, before Jesus Christ 146, before the Vulgar Æra 150. He [1 Macc. x. 49, 50. Joseph. l. 13. Antiq. l. 5. Justin. l. 35.] was succeeded by Demetrius Nicanor, of whom we shall now proceed to speak.

Demetrius Nicanor (III)

III. DEMETRIUS NICANOR, or Nicator, the son of Demetrius Soter, in the beginning of the war against Balas, was sent by his father into the isle of Cnidus, to secure him against all the accidents, which might happen to him during this time. After the death of his father, he continued for some time in repose, waiting an opportunity to declare himself, and recover the kingdom, which was his right. At length, five years after the death of Demetrius, in that of the World 3856, before the Vulgar [1 Macc. x. 68, 69. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 8. Justin. l. 35. c. 2.] Æra 148, young Nicanor passed into Cilicia with some troops. Soon after Apollonius, governour of Cœle-Syria, joined him; and as Jonathan Maccabæus persisted in his alliance with Balas, Apollonius made war against him with very little success. In the mean time Balas's affairs went worse and worse, and Nicanor fortified himself more and more in Syria.

In the year of the World 3858, Ptolemy Philometor came into Syria with an army, in appearance to assist Balas his son-in-law, but in reality to make himself master of his kingdom. He was so fortunate as to get admittance into Antioch, and was there acknowledged King of Syria. But he declared to the Syrians, that they would do a very agreeable thing to him, if they would give the crown to his son-in-law Demetrius Nicanor; (for he had married his daughter Cleopatra to him, after having taken her from Alexander Balas.) Thus Demetrius was once more seated on the throne of his ancestors, and his competitor Balas was [1 Macc. xi. 14—18. Joseph. l. 13. c. 8.] killed soon afterwards.

Jonathan taking advantage of these disturbances in Syria, grew stronger in Judæa, and undertook the siege of the Citadel in Jerusalem, which was still in the possession of the Syrians. Demetrius having notice of it, sent for Jonathan to come and give an account to him of his conduct at Ptolemaïs, where he was. Jonathan went thither with large sums of money, and won so effectually the good graces of the King, that he obtained from him the confirmation of the dignity of High-priest, and liberty for all the provinces in Judæa, upon paying down three hundred talents, which he promised the King.

Demetrius seeing himself peaceable possessor of Syria, gave himself up to all manner of excesses, so that he became odious and contemptible to his subjects. One Diodotus, who had had some command in Alexander Balas's armies, undertook to dispossess Demetrius, and to put young Antiochus upon the throne, the son of Alexander Balas, who was then a child, and lived with Elmachuel, King of the Arabians. Demetrius once more ruined his affairs, by provoking the inhabitants of Antioch, whose arms he had ordered to be taken from them; and in a sedition, which happened upon this occasion, killed a great number of them. As soon as Diodotus, otherwise called Tryphon, appeared in Syria with young Antiochus, the Syrians flocked in crowds to acknowledge him, and offer him their services. He saw himself very soon at the head of a good army, gave Demetrius battel, beat him, and obliged him to fly to Seleucia.

Jonathan Maccabæus sollicited by Tryphon, abandoned Demetrius's party, and espoused that of young Antiochus Theos, who permitted him to make war upon the people and cities of Phœnicia and Syria, which still held out for Demetrius. He was very succesful in his attempts, and both he and his brother Simon acquir'd the reputation of being very brave men.

Diodotus, who had raised young Antiochus to the throne with a design only of reigning under his name, was not satisfied with the honours and power of royalty, but was impatient to wear the title and marks too of it: he therefore put Antiochus to death, and procured himself to be acknowledged King of Syria under the name of Tryphon. He had a little before treacherously killed Judas Maccabæus, who was one of the most powerful supports which that young prince had. Simon, Jonathan's brother and successor, abhorring the cruelty of this Usurper, sent a Crown to Demetrius Nicanor, acknowledged him for King, and intreated him to grant the Jews an exemption from paying tribute. This Prince, who was then, as it were, banished to Seleucia in a corner of his dominions, readily consented to his request, granted him a general amnesty for what was passed, and confirmed all the favours and privileges which had been before granted to Jonathan. So that in this year 3861, before Jesus Christ 139, and before the Vulgar Æra 142, the Jews were intirely freed from all subjection to the Gentiles. [1 Macc. xiv. 38—41. and xiii. 35—42. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 11. In the year of the World 3863 before J. C. 137. before the Vulgar Æra 140. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 9. 1 Macc. xiv. 1, 2, 3, &c.]

Demetrius observing that the Cities generally forsook his party, and that his troops despised him for his negligence, resolved to make war against the Parthians; but he was not successful in it. He was treacherously taken, and put into the hands of the King of Parthia, who treated him with honour, and gave him his own daughter in marriage. Cleopatra his first wife, whom he left at Seleucia with his children, seeing him engaged in another marriage, sent an offer of the Kingdom of Syria to Antiochus Sidetes, brother to her husband Demetrius, upon condition, that he would make her his wife. Antiochus consented, and coming into Syria, assumed the title of King, and wrote to Simon Maccabæus desiring his friendship. He reigned nine years from the year of the world 3865 to 3874. Having undertaken to get his brother Demetrius out of the hands of the Parthians, he declared war against them; but after [Vulgar Æra 139. Vide 1 Macc. xv. 10, &c.] a great deal of good success, he at last perished with his army, and Demetrius returned into Syria, and was once more placed upon the throne. He reigned four years after this, and was killed in the year of the World 3878, before Jesus Christ 122, before the Vulgar Æra 126. He was succeeded by his eldest son Seleucus, to whom he left a dangerous rival in the person of Alexander, surnamed Zebina.

Demetrius (IV)

IV. DEMETRIUS, surnamed Eucærus or Eukairus, the son of Antiochus Gryphus, is not mentioned in the sacred Writings; but Josephus speaks of him, and says he made war against Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews. Alexander Jannæus [Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 21.] was so odious to the Jews, his subjects, that having one day asked them what they would have him do to satisfy them, they answer'd, that the most obliging thing he could do to them, would be to go and hang himself; at the same time they sent to Demetrius Eucærus, desiring troops from him to be employ'd against their own King. Demetrius came with forty thousand foot and three thousand horse, and incamped at Sichem. Alexander marched against him at the head of twenty thousand Jews of his party, and six thousand foreign soldiers. The battle was fought, Alexander was conquered, and obliged to fly to the neighbouring mountains. Whereupon the Jews compassionating the misfortune of their King, resorted to him from all parts, so that in a little time he had a body of six thousand men. Demetrius fearing lest their number should increase, thought it convenient to retire. Eucærus was established in the kingdom by Ptolemy Lathyrus, in the year of the World 3912. He was taken and delivered to the Parthians some years after. Mithridates, King of Parthia, treated him in an honourable manner, and Demetrius died of some indisposition in this Prince's [Antiq. l. 13. c. 22; p. 461.] court.

Demetrius (V)

V. DEMETRIUS, a Goldsmith of Ephesus, whose principal trade it was to make niches or little chapels for Diana of Ephesus, which he sold to foreigners. This man observing the progress which the Gospel made, not in Ephesus only, but in all Asia besides, called together those who got their livelihood, as he did, in making little chapels, and represented the great prejudice their trade would suffer by this new doctrine which St. Paul preached; he told them, that not only their trade would suffer much by it, but the worship of the great Diana of Ephesus would be in danger of being intirely forsaken. At these words they were enraged, and began to cry, Great is Diana of the Ephesians! The whole city was immediately in an uproar, and they seized on Gaius and Aristarchus, St. Paul's companions, and brought them in a tumultuous manner to the Theatre. St. Paul himself had an inclination to be present there, but his friends prevented him.

They afterwards laid hands on one Alexander a Jew, whom they dragg'd to the Assembly; but as soon as he attempted to speak, and it was perceived that he was a Jew, they repeated their cries, and continued them for two hours, so that nothing was heard every where but these words, Great is the Diana of Ephesus! At last the Town-Clerk of the City coming into the Assembly, told them, That no one intended any thing to the prejudice of the Great Diana and her honour; that all the world was convinced of their zeal for her service and worship; and that if they continued their cries in this manner, they might be accused of raising a sedition. Lastly, that if Demetrius had any contest with any one, he might address himself to the magistrates, without filling the City with confusion in such a manner. The Ephesians submitted to these reasons, and every one returned to his own house.

Demetrius (VI)

VI. DEMETRIUS, one whom St. Paul mentions as a very virtuous Christian. Some believe him to be the same person, whom we [Serar. in 3. Ep Joan.] have been just speaking of, and who renounced Heathenism to embrace Christianity. But this opinion wants proof, as well as their conjecture, who make Demetrius a Bishop: I [Catharin. Salmeron.] say nothing of the chronicle written by the pretended Lucius Dexter, which asserts Demetrius to have been brother to that Caius, to whom St. John addressed his Epistle.

Demon

[Δαίμων Dæmon.] DEMON, or Dæmon, comes from the Greek Daimon, which signifies knowing, learned. Good and bad Angels, but much more generally bad angels are called in Greek and Latin, Demons or Dæmones. The Hebrews express the name of Demon by that of Serpent, [שטן Satan. שדים Vastatores.] Satan, or Tempter, Scheddim, or Destroyer; Sehirim, goats or hairy; and in Greek authors we find the names Dæmones, or Diabolus, that is to say, Calumniators, or impure [שעירים Hirsuti.] Spirits, or others of the like significancy. The Prince of Demons or Devils, is called Beelzebub, Sammaël, Asmodæus, Belial, Satan, Dragon, destroying Angel, Prince of the powers of he air.

Several of the ancient fathers, being imposed upon by the apocryphal book of Enoch, which was of great authority with them, and by some passages of the Septuagint, wherein it [Genes. vi. 2.] is said, that the sons of God saw the daughters of men, that they were fair, and took them wives of all which they chose, from whom the Giants descended: several of the ancient fathers, I say, have from hence asserted Angels and Demons to have certain subtile bodies, and particular passions, which can be consistent only with material substances. But the opinion of the Church, which has been commonly followed by the Fathers, is, that good and bad Angels are all Spirits disingaged from matter, that they were all created at the same time and with the same degree of Grace; but that some of them, which kept not their first state, and left their own habitation, were precipitated into hell; and the rest, who continued [Jude 6.] faithful to their Creator, were confirmed in Grace, and established in a fixed state of eternal glory.

The Rabbins are divided in their opinions concerning the nature and original of Demons. [Berefchith Rabb. Sect. 7. col. 3.] Some of them maintain, that they are Spiritual, that God had not leisure to give them bodies, because the Sabbath began at that very instant when he was going to Manasse form such for them. Others pretend that Ben-Israel de creat. they are corporeal, are distinguished by the problem. difference of sexes, are capable of multiplying 23. themselves by generation, and are subject to death. Some teach that they were produced by a conjunction between Sammaël prince of the Demons, and Eve, before Adam knew her. Others say, Adam was their father, and Lilith their mother. They tell us, that Adam having been expelled Paradise, continued an hundred and thirty years under excommunication, and that during all Vide

Jerem. and thirty years of penance were expired,

[Basnage hist. des Juifs, t. 4. l. 6. c. 11. p.170.] Some Jewish Doctors tell us, that after the creation of Adam, God appointed two Angels to descend from Heaven, and attend him every where, one at his right, the other at his left hand. After the Fall, the Angel on the left hand ingendered other Spirits, which peopled the air, and are employed in scourging and afflicting mankind. They moreover believe, that the souls of the damned are for some time changed into Devils, in order to be employ'd in tormenting men; that they visit their graves, and go to see the worms which prey upon their own dead bodies, which is a very grievous spectacle to them; and that after this they return to hell. These Devils have three advantages in common with the Angels; they know what is to come, they have wings wherewithal to raise themselves up into the air, and they fly in a moment from one end of the world unto the other. They have likewise three imperfections in common with mankind; they procreate, and multiply; they eat and drink; and lastly, are subject unto death.

[Excerpta Gemarræ apud Hottinger. p. 124. 1 Kings xxii. 19, 20, 21. Matth. xxv. 41.] The Jews represent the evil Angels at the left hand of God's throne, to receive his orders, while the Angels at his right hand are ready there to execute his will. They seem to have taken this opinion from what is said in the first book of Kings, I saw the Lord sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing by him on his right hand and on his left: and the Lord said, who shall persuade Ahab? And there came forth a spirit and stood before the Lord, and said, I will persuade him. And the Lord said unto him, wherewith? And he said, I will go forth, and be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his Prophets. In the Gospel likewise the Devils and the reprobated part of mankind are seated on the left hand of the supreme Judge.

Other

[Vide Bartolocci Bibl. Rabbin. t. 1. p. 295.] Other Doctors say, that the Souls of men withdraw from the body during the time of sleep, and that the Devils taking the advantage of their absence, steal into the body, in order to produce some pollution. Hence it is that the Jews every morning are very careful in washing themselves, and thank God for vouchsafing to restore their souls to their bodies. Blessed art thou, O Lord, for that thou restorest the souls of men to their dead bodies. They look upon sleep as a kind of death, because in reality the soul at that time shews no sign of its presence; its faculties are as it were annihilated, and they believe that the Devil takes this opportunity of its inaction, to produce such impressions in the body as are capable of altering its purity.

The Scripture informs us, that Sin came into the world through the envy of the [Wisd ii. 24.] Devil: God created man to be immortal, and made him to be an image of his own eternity. Nevertheless through envy of the devil came death into the world: and they that do hold of his side, do find it. This great event is explained by the Rabbins after the following manner. God conversing one day with the Angels, observed that they were envious of man; they maintained that man was nothing but vanity, and that he had done unadvisedly in giving him so great a power over the creatures. God asserted the dignity of his own work with these two reasons; first, in that man was appointed by him to praise him upon earth, as the Angels do in heaven; secondly, that Adam knew the names of all the creatures, wherein he was superior to the Angels, who were not acquainted with them. Sammaël, chief of the rebel spirits, resolved to deprive man of his most valuable prerogatives; to this end he came down upon earth, and having observed that the serpent was the most cunning and subtile of all animals, he made use of him to tempt Eve, and inspire her with notions of independancy and pride. Eve was seduced, and Adam was so complaisant as to imitate the vanity and disobedience of his wife. Here we see that the Jews call the chief of the Devils Sammaël, as we give him the name of Lucifer. They add, that Sammaël came to tempt Eve mounted upon the Serpent, that he corrupted and abused her, and that she thereupon conceived and was delivered of Cain.

It is remarkable, that we do not read the name of any evil spirit in the Hebrew books of the Old Testament, and those written before the captivity of Babylon; but only general names which describe the chief of the Devils, or the Devils his agents. We read there of Satan: but this is a generical name, signifying accuser or calumniator, and has a good deal of relation to the Greek Diabolos, which has the same import. Tobit has taught us the name Asmodeus, and in the Gospel we read of Beelzebub, prince of the Devils. The apocryphal book of Enoch abounds with the names of Angels and Devils: but this book is not of any great antiquity; it does not appear to have been known by the ancient Jews. St. Jude is the first who cited it.

You have here, in the following account, a summary of this famous work: The daughters of men being multiplied, the Egregori or watchful (for thus the Chaldæans call the Angels) said one to another, Let us take wives from among the daughters of men. They were two hundred in number, and Semexias or Semiexas was at the head of them with nineteen others, namely, 2. Lotarenph. 3. Aracie. 4. Chababiel. 5. Orammanes. 6. Ramiel. 7. Sapsick. 8. Zaciel. 9. Balciel. 10. Azalzel. 11. Pharmarus. 12. Amariel. 13. Anagemas. 14. Thausaël. 15. Samiel. 16. Sarinas. 17. Eremiel. 18. Tyriel. 19. Sariel. They engaged themselves by oath to do what they should see Semexias their chief do. They took therefore wives from among the daughters of men, and were polluted with all sorts of vileness. Now from those marriages sprung up giants, of whom all antiquity has so much spoken.

Azalzel, the tenth of these evil Angels, taught men the art of making arms, and of casting metals in order to make money of them. He moreover shewed women the art of using paint, and ornaments in dress. Semexias likewise taught the Giants how to use their strength, and work upon the passions. Pharmarus instructed them in the virtue of Simples, and the force of Poisons, inchantments, bewitching, and in the means of rendring all these useless, whenever they would prevent the effects of them. Balciel taught men astronomy; Chababiel astrology; Zaciel divination by signs in the air; Araciel the signs on the Earth; Sapsick those in the moon. Such were the inventions wherein the rebel Angels instructed their wives and children; and from hence sprung that deluge of mischief and disorder, which spread over the earth, and drew down the utmost effects of God's justice.

The good Angels, captains of the host of Heaven, such as Michael, Gabriel, Raphael and Uriel, being informed of the irregularities committed in the world by their rebellious brethren, complained to the Almighty, who gave them orders to stop the progress of them: Go, said he to Uriel, go to Noah the son of Lamech, and bid him conceal himself for a time: for I must send a deluge upon the earth, which will destroy every thing that is to be met with with upon the surface of it: instruct him what to do in order to secure himself from this calamity, that so he may become the father of a new race.

Afterwards God said to Raphael, Go, bind Azazel, load him with chains, cast him into darkness: open the deepest part of the wilderness of Dudail, and throw in this wicked wretch: lay a heap of rough stones upon him, cover him with darkness so that he may not see the light; and at the day of judgment he shall be cast into the fire. Repair the evil which the Egregori, or watchers, have occasioned upon earth, by that mystery of iniquity which they have taught their wives and children.

After this, the Lord commanded Gabriel to march against the giants, sons of the Egregori, and embroil them together, that so they might destroy one another, and none of them might remain upon the earth.

Lastly, he ordered Michael to bind Semexias, and the rest who adhered to him, and that when they had been witnesses to the violent death of the Giants their sons, they should continue chained in the woods for seventy generations to the day of judgment: then they will be thrown headlong into the eternal chaos, into the fire which will never be extinguished. As for those men who shall imitate their irregularities, and merit condemnation, they shall be precipitated with them into the dark prisons.

According to the account given in this famous work, it was not till long after the creation of the world, that the evil Angels rebelled against God upon the occasion of their marriage with the daughters of men; they are said to be corporeal, capable of shameful passions, and of begetting men; and at present are chained in wildernesses or forests, and so will remain till at the day of judgment they are plunged into hell.

The authority which this spurious book of Enoch has received from many of the Ancients, is the reason of our meeting with several of these opinions scattered in their writings. [Lactant. l. 2. c. 14.] Lactantius believed there were two sorts of Demons, celestial and terrestrial: the celestial are the faln Angels, who having been seduced by the prince of Devils, engaged themselves in impure amours. The terrestrial are they, who issued from the former, as children from their fathers. These last, who are neither Men nor Angels, but are a medium between these two natures, were not plunged into hell, neither were their fathers admitted into heaven. The terrestrial Angels are impure Spirits, and authors of all the evils committed upon earth.

[Hieron Epist. ad Avitum.] Others of the Fathers are of opinion, that God to punish the rebellion of the evil angels, cloathed them with airy bodies. Saint Jerom says, that this was one of Origen's errors: Quòd Dæmones ob delicta aëreis corporibus sunt vestiti. St. Austim seems to be of the same opinion: he says, the [Aug. de Gen. ad Litter. l. 3. c. 17. vide & lib. 15. de civit. c. 23. & l. 1. contra Academic. c. 7. & l. 2.] rebel Angels, before their fall, had celestial and spiritual bodies; but that since they are invested with airy bodies, which render them capable of feeling the impressions of fire. Faustus of Riez had advanced the same thing in an epistle confuted by Claudian Mammert. The Greeks in the Council of Florence maintained, that those Angels who before their fall were spiritual, became [de ordine c. 9. Matth. viii. 28, 30.] afterwards in some sort material and carnal; hence proceeded their inclination for bodies, as may be seen in those who are possessed, and in the Legion of Devils who desired leave to enter into the herd of swine.

There are three different opinions remarkable in those authors, who have written concerning the fall of Angels: some have attributed the cause of it to their pride and vain presumption: others to their envying men: and the third to their irregular love of women. Many join the two first causes, I mean the pride of Lucifer, and his vain complacency in his own perfections, the glory whereof he did not refer to God; and the envy he conceived against man, whom he saw like a little God set over the works of the Lord. This last opinion is almost the only one received at present in the Church; that which we have observed in the book of Enoch, which attributes their fall to their irregular love of women, is absolutely given up by Divines.

Many of the Ancients[1] have allotted to every man an Evil Angel, who is continually laying snares for him, and inclining him to evil, as his Good Angel inclines him to what is good; an opinion borrowed in all probability from Hermas Pastor[2]. The Jews[3] have still the same sentiments at this day; and the same principles may be remarked in some of the old philosophers[4]. Origen[5] thinks that every vice has its evil Angel presiding over it, the Demon of avarice, the Demon of fornication, and the proud man's Demon. The Church prays for the faithful, that they may be delivered from the Demon of fornication. We see in the Gospel, that the generality of uneasinesses and diseases were attributed to the Devil. We find there a dumb Spirit, or a Demon who made the man dumb. Saint [Matth. ix. 32, 33. Luke xiii. 12, 16.] Luke speaks of a woman who had a spirit of infirmity, and whom Satan had bound eighteen years.

We commonly hold that the Devils are in Hell, where they suffer the punishment of their rebellion, and where they exercise the avenging justice of God upon sinners. [Rev. xx. 1, 3.] St. John in the Revelation, says, that God sent an Angel from Heaven with the key of the abyss, and a great chain in his hands; that he laid hold of the Dragon, the old Serpent, who is the Devil, Satan; that he bound him, cast him into the bottomless pit, shut the door upon him, and sealed it for a thousand years. But the ancient Fathers had other sentiments of this matter: they placed the Devils in the air; and St. Jerom says, that it was the common opinion of all the doctors in the Church, that the air which is between heaven and earth is quite filled with evil spirits. Hæ autem [Hieron. in Ephes. vi. 12.] omnium Doctorum opinio est, quod aër iste, qui cælum & terram medius dividens, inane appellatur, plenus sit contrariis potestatibus. St. Austin[6] believes that they fell from the highest and purest region of the air into that which is nearest to the earth, which is nothing but darkness in comparison of the serenity and clearness of that from which they were precipitated.

St. Chrysostom (in Ephes. vi. Hom. 4.) was persuaded that the Devils after their fall, did not forfeit the dominion which God had given them over the air. But others of the Fathers assert, that if they are in the air, it is with design that they should suffer the punishment of their sins there, till the day of judgment came, when they would be plunged into Hell. Several of the Ancients[7] explain what the Apostles St. [2 Pet. ii. 4. Jude 6.] Peter and St. Jude teach us, concerning the present state of Demons, as meaning the lower region of the air, where they suppose them to be banished. These Apostles represent them to us as fettered with the chains of Hell, and cast down into tartarus; Rudentibus inferni detractos in tartarum tradidit cruciandos; but several of the Fathers understand it of the lower air, which with respect to heaven should be considered as an abyss, and place of darkness, a prison, a black dungeon.

The request proposed by the Devils to our Saviour, that he would not send them into the deep, but permit them to enter into the herd of Swine, intimates that these evil [Matth. viii. 29. Luke viii. 31.] Spirits found some refreshment upon earth; and their complaint to our Saviour, that he was come to torment them before the time, shews, that the time of their punishment was not yet come. And when our Saviour pronounces [Matth. xxv. 14. Greg. l. 4. Moral. c. 10.] sentence against the wicked, he does so in these terms; Go ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels. This everlasting fire therefore was only prepared for the Devil, this evil Angel did not as yet endure the pain of it. It is true, many of the ancient Fathers[8] believe that Devils are indeed condemned to eternal torture, but will not in reality be subject to it till the day of Judgment. We are not to believe that at present they suffer nothing; grief, despair, and rage to see themselves fallen from supreme happiness, and condemned to infinite and eternal misery, is to them a very great punishment. The fire which they suffer at present, says Pope Gregory, is different from that which they will endure after the last day. Their sentence is determined, says St. Bernard, but [Bernard. Serm. de transitu S. Malachiæ. Beda in Jacob. iii.] not yet promulged; the fire is prepared for them, but as yet they are not cast headlong into it. Venerable Bede compares the present state of Devils to that of one sick of a fever, who, however he may change his place, or posture, carries his fever and misfortune with him. Ubicunque vel in aëre volitant, vel in terris, aut sub terris vagantur, sive detinentur, suarum secum ferunt semper tormenta flammarum instar febricitantis. And this is the common opinion of Divines at this day.

That the Devil formerly affected divine honours, and that whole nations were so far blinded as to pay them, is what cannot be questioned after the express testimonies of Scripture. They sacrificed to devils, not to God, whom they knew not. And again, They sacrificed their sons and their daughthers unto devils. And Baruch, Ye provoked him that made you, by sacrificing to devils, and not to God. And in Leviticus, God forbids the Hebrews to sacrifice to Devils, to Goats, as they had hitherto done. The Philistins worshipped Beelzebub the prince of Devils, and the King of Israel sent to [2 Kings i. 23. Deut. xxxii. 17. Psal. cvi. 17. Baruch iv. 7. Levit. xvii. 7.] consult this false deity, which was paying him a kind of worship, by believing him capable to foretel what was to come. I confess notwithstanding, that the Hebrews never, that I know, paid any worship to the Devil, in our sense of this word, as we understand by it Satan, the old Serpent, or Sammaël; but in reality as often as they adored Idols, they did in one sense worship Devils, since false Gods are no better than Devils; their worship is an invention of the Devil's; and they adore sin, immodesty, pride, and cruelty. What other Deity besides the Devil could require human victims, like those which were sacrificed, for example, to Moloch? The Hebrew word translated by the Septua [Elilim, vana Idola terriculamenta.] gint and Vulgate dæmonia, signifies properly gods of no value, vain things, scarecrows; and in this sense it may be said with truth, that all the heathen gods are Devils: Omnes Dii gentium Dæmonia.

As for the Heathens, we know they worshipped Pluto, or Hades, the god of [Cicero de naturâ Deorum. Valer. Maxim. l. x. c. 5.] hell, and other infernal Deities, Manes, Furies, evil and pernicious Gods; such as Fevers, Orbona, whom parents invoked to divert the death of their children, Ill Fortune, Paleness, Fear, Tempests, Discord, Impudence, Calumny, Envy, Necessity, and Violence. You may say, if you please, that as the Greeks and Romans had not the same idea of the Devil as we have, they did not pay him divine honours; but they paid them to things which did not better deserve them, and are no less dangerous than [Aug. in Psalm. xciv. 4, 6. & de Civit. l. 5. c. 32. Idem de consensu Evang. l. 1. c. 18.] the Devil; and St. Austin assures us, that Temples were consecrated, and altars erected to the Devil throughout the world, and the Romans enjoined their people to invoke good Genius's, and appease the bad with sacrifices.

It is affirmed, that the Persians, who acknowledged two principles, one good, the other bad; the first called Oromazes, and [Plutarch. de Iside & Osiride.] the second Arimanes; offered sacrifices of thanksgiving to the first, and to the second sacrifices to divert misfortunes. They took an herb called Omomi, which they bruised in a mortar, invoking at the same time the god of hell and darkness: they mingled with it the blood of a wolf which they had killed, and carried this composition to a place, where the rays of the sun never entred; here they threw it down, and left it. It is said that certain people of America pay a superstitious worship to the Devil, that is to say, to this evil Principle, under whose direction they suppose the government of the earth to be.

The Dæmon of Noon-day, mentioned in Psalm xci. 6. Non timebis a terrore nocturno . . . ab incursu & dæmonio meridiano, [Vide Genebrard. in Ps. xc. & Chaldæum.] is differently explained. The Rabbins for the most part understand by it the most dangerous and violent Demon, who dares to attack us in broad day-light; whereas others assault us only in the night. It was the opinion of the common people, say Theodoret and St. Jerom, that there were certain Demons which were dangerous at noon-day. In the hot countries where it is a custom generally to sleep at noon, and none dare expose themselves to the sun in its full force, the common people are afraid of Spectres and Apparitions at noon, as well as at night, by reason of the solitude and silence which prevail at both these times. They do not fear Spirits nor Demons when they are in company, and have people about them. Some suppose a sudden and violent disease to be meant by this expression, such as the plague, which kills immediately; or an epilepsy, which deprives the patient of his senses, and quite overwhelms him; these diseases are imputed to the operation of the Devil. The Hebrew Keteb is a word, the signification whereof is not well fixed.

Vaheb the son of Monbah, a Mussulman of the greatest authority in the point of traditions, which the Mahometans pretend to have received from the mouth of their Prophet, relates, that God before the creation [Bibl. Orient. p. 198.] of Adam, created the Dives or Diss, who are neither Men nor Angels, nor Devils, but Genius's or hurtful Demons. God gave them the World to govern for the space of seven thousand years; after which the Peris, another species of Demons less mischievous than the former, or Hobgoblins, succeeded them for two thousand years under the government of Gianben-Gian, their only monarch. These two sorts of creatures, the Dives and the Peris, having rebell'd against God, God set Eblis over them, who being of a more noble nature, and having something in him of the Element of Fire, had been brought up among the Angels.

Eblis therefore descending from heaven to earth, made war with the Dives and Peris, who united for their common defence. Nevertheless there were some Dives, who submitting to Eblis, continued in this world till the formation of Adam, and even to Solomon's time, who had some of them in his service. Eblis attacked Gian, beat this monarch, and soon made himself master of all the lower world, which was then peopled only by the Dives and Peris. But he forgot his dependance in a short time, rebel'd against God, and began to say, Who is like to me? I ascend up to heaven when I please, and if I remain on earth, I behold it intirely subject to my will.

God provoked at his insolence, resolved to humble him, and create mankind. He therefore formed Adam out of the earth, made him monarch of it, and intended to oblige Eblis and the other Angels to adore this new creature. Eblis, seconded by a company of his people, refused to comply, was divested of his sovereignty, and incurred the curse of God. Upon this account he was called Iba, that is to say, refractory; Satan, which signifies calumniator; and Eblis, or desperate: for his first name was Hareth, which signifies governour or guardian.

According to this system, there were three species of creatures long before Adam; the Angels, the Dives and Peris; the two latter are what the Greeks call good and bad Genius's, or Dæmons.

[Philo de Gigantib. p. 286. & alibi.] Philo believed that Angels, Demons, and the souls of men were of the same nature and quality, and that Angels or spiritual substances by inclination and some natural attraction, came and joined them selves to bodies, and animated them; and that the souls of men, after having been for a long time united with bodies, returned to the place of their first abode in the air.

[Joseph. l.7. de Bello,c.25. p. 181.] Josephus tells us, that the Demons which possess certain persons, and sometimes torment them so far as to kill them, are nothing, else but the souls of the wicked, which have seized on the bodies of those who are [Idem, Antiq. l. 18. c. 2. & lib. 2. de Bello, p. 788.] thus possessed. He says moreover, that the Pharisees have the same notions almost of the soul as the persons just now mentioned in Philo. From whence we may conclude, that these two Authors, as well as many other Jews of their time, held a kind of transmigration, and that they made no other difference between an Angel and a Demon than what consisted in moral goodness or wickedness.

The Scripture represents Demons as continually employ'd in deceiving, tempting, hurting, and tormenting us. Untimely and extraordinary kinds of death, bodily diseases, those especially, which are most obstinate and unknown to us, are attributed [Matth. ix. 32, 33. Luke xi. 14. xiii. 16.] to Demons. We see men in the Gospel, who were made mute, lame, or crooked by some Demon. The destroying Angel put to death the first-born in Egypt, the mutineers in the wilderness, the seven first husbands of Sarah the daughter of Raguel. It was this evil Spirit which tempted Eve in Paradise, Jesus Christ in the wilderness, David in his palace, and inspired him with the design of [1 Chron. xxi. 1. 1 Pet. v. 8. 1 Kings xxii. 21.] numbering all his people. St. Peter represents him to be one that goeth about seeking whom he may devour. In Scripture we read of lying Spirits, of unclean Spirits, of weak and wicked Spirits. St. Paul tells us, that the Devil is like an enemy armed with fiery darts, wherewith he endeavours to [Ephes. vi. 16.] pierce our very souls.

Altho' there is no question made but that there is the same subordination almost among Demons, as among Angels, nevertheless we cannot point out the particular degrees of it, because the sacred Writings say nothing to us concerning it. There is mention [Matth. xii. 24. Luke xi. 15, 18.] made in the Gospel of Beelzebub Prince of Devils; and the Jews accused Jesus Christ with casting out Devils in the name only and by the authority of Beelzebub. Our Saviour denied that he cast out Devils in this manner, and shewed, that if Beelzebub cast out Devils, his kingdom would be divided and destroy'd. He does not however deny, but that there is some kind of subordination among Devils. He seems even to suppose it, when, in the parable of the strong armed [Luke xi. 25, 26.] man, he says, that the Devil being forced out of his house, returns with seven others more wicked than himself. Lastly, St. Paul [Eph.vi.12.] speaks of Principalities, and Powers, of the Rulers of the darkness of this world, and of spiritual Wickedness,or wicked Spirits in high places. The Reader may consult our Dissertation concerning good and bad Angels, prefixed to our Comment on St. Luke.

I do not take notice of the opinions which the Heathens had of Demons, nor shall I relate many things which are to be met with in the Fathers on this subject; because I confine myself as much as possible to the Bible, according to the title of this Dictionary.

Denarius

[Mark xii. 15. Luke xx. 24. Matth. xxii.19.] DENARIUS, a sort of Roman money, generally valued at seven pence three farthings English, and was worth four Sesterces[1]. We do not read the word Denarius any where in the Old Testament, but we frequently meet with it in the New, where it is taken for a piece of money in general; that is to say, for a Shekel, which was the most common coin among the Hebrews, before they were made subject to the Greeks and Romans. St. Mark and St. Luke call that Denarius, which St. Matthew calls numisma census, the piece of money which was paid in Judæa to the Romans in the way of Capitation. But the true value of it is not known to us. The Rabbins by the word [Maimon. Halac. Siclim.c.1. §. 3.] Denarius generally understand a quarter of a shekel, that is to say, about seven pence of our money.

Desart

DESART. This is a word very well known. The Hebrews, by Midbar, Desart, mean every uncultivated place, particularly mountains. There were Desarts intirely dry and barren; others were very beautiful, and abounded with good pastures; for which reason the Scripture in several places speaks of the beauty of the Desart, Pinguescent speciosa deserti, Ps. lxiv. 13. And, Super speciosa deserti planctum assumam, Jerem. ix. 10. And Ignis devorabit speciosa deserti, Joel i. 20. The Scripture names several Desarts in the Land of Promise, and there was scarce a town without a Desart belonging to it, that is to say, without uncultivated places for woods and pastures.

The Desart of Arabia, wherein the Israelites sojourned forty years after their departure out of Egypt, is particularly called the Desart. In the article Incampment, and in the geographical Map, any one may see the different stations of the Israelites during this whole space of time. The Mahometans [Karik. Montekheb] shorten it mightily, by reducing their forty years sojourning to forty days. They do not scruple to say, that Moses, Aaron, and their sister Miriam died there. One of their poets ridiculing the superstition of the Jews, says, that they are always wandering in the Desart.

[Deut. viii. 4.] Moses assures us, that during their journey, their clothes did not wear out; nor were their feet swelled. Vestimentum tuum quo operiebaris, nequaquam vetustate defecit, & pes tuus non est subtritus; en quadragesimus [Justin. Dial. cum Tryphon.] annus est. St. Justin the Martyr, and many Interpreters as well Jewish as Christian, still farther enhance the miracle, by saying, that the children's clothes grew with them, and were proportion'd to their [Hieron. Ep. 38. Nov. Edit. p. 325. Cosmas Monach. in Depleust. l. 5. p. 205. Est. in Deut. viii. Jun. Druf. Cler.] size and stature. St. Jerom reports something still more incredible, which is, that their hair and nails did not grow during these forty years. But others speak in a more credible manner, affirming that the particular providence of God provided so well for the necessities of the Hebrews, that they wanted nothing, neither food nor clothes, nor covering for their legs and feet.

We have observed likewise under the articles Chion and Remphan, that many of the Israelites worshipped Idols in private, during their sojourning in the Desart. And the Psalmist says, that God was grieved forty [Ps. xcv. 10. LXX.] years with this generation: they did nothing but provoke him, offend him and murmur against him.

The Desart of SHUR, lies towards the point of the Red Sea. Hagar being driven from Abraham's house, wandered in this wilderness. The Israelites, after their march through the Red Sea, went into the Desart of Shur. There was, in all probability, a city of this name anciently in these parts.

The Desart of PARAN was in Arabia Petræa, in the neighbourhood of the city of Paran. Ishmael, the son of Abraham, dwelt [Gen. xxi. 11. Hab. iii. 3.] in the wilderness of Paran. Habakkuk says, that the Lord appeared to his people in the mountains of Paran. The Hebrews sojourned a long time in this Desart. See PARAN.

The Desart of SIN. There are two Desarts of this name in Scripture, the first is written with a Samech, this lies between Elim and Mount Sinai. The second is written with a Tzade. It is near Kadesh Barnea; [Exod. xvi. 1. and Numb.

xxxiii. 12. Numb. xx. 1. and xxxiii. 36. Tzin. Exod. xix. 2.] this town was in the Desart of Sin or Zin.

The Desart of SINAI is that which lies about, and is adjacent to Mount Sinai. The people incamped there a long time, and received the generality of those Laws which are written in the books of Moses.

The Desart of ARNON, or AMON, which is in the Wilderness. Arnon is a Brook which runs along the Desart of Gilead, or the frontiers of Arabia deserta.

The Desart of ZIPH, whither David retired when he fled from Saul. See ZIPH.

The Desart of MAON lay in the country, and perhaps near the capital city of the Maonians, or Meonians in Arabia petræa, at the extremity of the inheritance belonging to Judah.

The Desart of KADESH, about Kadesh Barnea, in the southern part of Judah, and in Arabia petræa.

The Desart of EDOM. We cannot exactly point out the extent or limits of it; for Edom itself extended very far into the mountains of Arabia.

The Desart of PALMYRA. Solomon built Palmyra in the Desarts which lie between the Euphrates and the rivers Orontes and Chrysorroas. Palmyra was in Syria incompassed every way with Desarts.

The Desart of DIBLAH, all about this city, which was situated in the land of Moab. Jerem. xlviii. 22.

The Desart of EGYPT, in Ezekiel seems to denote the Desart, wherein the Hebrews sojourned forty years after their departure out of Egypt. Tobit speaks of the Desarts of upper Egypt, probably of the Thebais, where the Demon Asmodeus was banished, and chained up.

The Desart of JUDÆA, where St. John the Baptist preached about Jericho in the partition of the Tribe of Judah.

The Desart of TEKOAH, the Desart of BOSOR, the Desart of GIBEON. See TEKOAH, BOSOR, GIBEON. Their Desarts signify the uncultivated places near these cities.

The DESART, absolutely speaking, signifies very frequently the Desarts of Arabia, which lay between Jordan and the mountains of Gilead, and the river Euphrates: for example, God promised the children of Israel all the land lying between the wilderness and the river, that is to say, all that country which extends itself from the mountains of Gilead as far as the Euphrates. And in another place he promises them all that lies between Libanus, the Desart, the Euphrates, and the Mediterranean Sea.

Descendere

DESCENDERE, to go down, and go up: We go up to Jerusalem: He goes down to Jericho. Abraham came up from Egypt: Jacob went down into Egypt. Go up to Ai: They went down to Cæsarea. By all which nothing more is meant, than that they went to Jerusalem, into Egypt, to Jericho, Ai, and Cæsarea; but the situation of the place they were going to, is described by the words going up and going down.

5 Y Descen-

Descendere in Infernum; to go down to the grave, the place where the dead are. Descendant in infernum viventes. Let them go down alive into the grave, like Corah, Dathan and Abiram. The dead shall not praise thee, O Lord, nor they who go down into Hell, into the Grave. All they who go down to the earth shall worship him: In conspectu ejus cadent omnes qui descendunt in terram. They who go down to the earth, may signify either mortal men who are born in this world, or the poor who go down to the dust, according to the Hebrew; or the dead who go down to the grave, the dust.

[Hosea xi. 12.] Hosea says, that Judah descended with God, Judas testis descendit cum Deo & cum sanctis fidelis. This is interpreted as relating to the Tribe of Judah, which descended first into the red Sea, the other Tribes not daring to venture. It may be understood likewise of the Tribe of Judah, which continued firm to the worship of God, and the house of David; while Ephraim and the other Tribes rebelled against Rehoboam, and forsook the Lord.

Descendere in lacum, that is to say, to die, to descend into the grave. Lacus in this place signifies caves, graves dug in rocks, or under ground, into which the dead were let down.

They who go down to the Sea, are the [Ps. cvii. 23.] merchants who make voyages upon the Sea. Jonah says, that he went down to the very foundation of the mountains; that is to say, to the bottom of the Sea, where the mountains have their basis and foundation.

Destiny

DESTINY, in Latin Fatum. We do not meet with this word in Scripture. By Destiny we understand an order, or chain of second causes, which carries with it a necessity of the event. The Heathen Philosophers not daring, on one side, to impute those misfortunes to the Gods, which befel them, as they pretended, unjustly; and being unwilling, on the other, to acknowledge that they were any way owing to their own faults, forged this chimæra of Destiny, whereof they never had any distinct Idea. The ancient Hebrews ascribed every thing to God, every thing both good and evil, except sin: the just and avenging Deity sent misfortunes, diseases, war, and pestilence; the good and merciful God granted favours and prosperity of all kinds: he made use of good Angels in doing good to mankind, and evil Angels in inflicting evils on them. All evil was sent either for the punishment of our own sins, or of those committed by our parents, princes or children, or to display the works of God. This is the System of the Hebrews, adopted by the Christian Church.

They believed that all events, even those which seemed most casual, were ordained by Providence ; that not so much as a bird fell to the ground without the direction of our heavenly father ; that the hairs of our head were numbred ; that Providence extended to the least animals, and plants. The question here is only, whether the looser and more debauched Jews believed a Destiny, and whether we find any footsteps of this opinion in the Scripture ? It appears that the wicked, whose sentiments are expressed by Solomon in the Book of Ecclesiastes, were of the opinion of the Stoicks, that every thing was ordained by a superior cause, which nothing was capable of resisting. I have seen just men afflicted, as if they had been guilty of all the practices of the wicked, and I have seen wicked men who lived with as much assurance, as if they had done all the good that ever was performed by the most righteous.——I found that man was not able to penetrate the reason of God's works, and that the more he labours to discover it, the farther he is from finding it.——Man doth not know whether he deserves love or hatred. Every thing happens equally to the righteous and the wicked, to the good and bad, to him who sacrifices, and to him who despises sacrifices, &c. I have observed that the race is not to the swift, nor the battel to the strong, nor bread to men of understanding, nor favour to men of skill; but time and chance happen to them all. Here methinks Destiny seems to be clearly described.

Josephus[1] the Historian speaking of the several Sects which prevailed in his time among the Jews, says, that the Pharisees imputed every thing to Destiny, but nevertheless without robbing man of his free will, and the liberty of determining himself, because God uses such a medium with man, that altho' all things happen by his decree or will, man notwithstanding preserves the liberty of chusing either vice or virtue. In another[2] place he says, that the Pharisees attribute all things to Destiny and God: that generally the doing good or evil depends on man, but that Destiny assists him in doing either the one or the other. Here is an Idea of Fate rectified by the Jewish Religion, which acknowledged God to be just, good, merciful and powerful ; but I do not know what he underunderstood by Destiny, nor how far he extended its power, nor allowing this, what could be left for man? Notwithstanding he pretends, that to do good or evil was for the most part in his power. It is doubtless very hard to reconcile all this, and distinguish acurately in one and the same good or bad Action the several parts which God had, Destiny, and Man.

[Bullus Harmon. Apost. Dissert. post. c. 15. See Basnage hist. des Juifs. l. 3. c. 2.] Some have been of opinion, that they attributed necessary events to Destiny, or the influences of the stars, excepting only a very small number, for which they left a kind of liberty; nay, they insisted that God was aiding in free actions. Thus we are to understand the following axiom of the old Rabbins, Every thing is in the hand of heaven, excepting the fear of God. That is to say, that every thing happens necessarily and by an absolute fatality, and that the Will of man is free only in matters which relate to Religion. The Chaldee Paraphrast [Eccl. ix. 2.] explaining the words of Solomon, All things come alike to all, there is one event to the righteous and the wicked, says that this is owing to Destiny; but he adds immediately, that it was so ordained in heaven, and that it was the resolution of God. This has a respect to such events only as we call natural, and not to actions morally good or evil, which are produced by the free Will of Man, but assisted by Destiny, according to Josephus, probably because of the co-operation of God, and the concurrence of second Causes and Circumstances, which help the Will, and remove the obstacles which might determine it to the contrary. The modern Jews allow a great deal to the influences of the stars; they confess that there is no dispute among wise men on this subject: Their wish to their friends upon their wedding-day is, That their planet may be [Maimon. More Nevoch. part. 2. c. 10. Thalmud. in Moed. Katm. fol. 28. Abenezra, Abarbanel, &c.] happy, and they carefully observe under what planet, and what sign of the Zodiack their children are born: notwithstanding all which, they are not induced by it to abstract any thing from the privileges of God's omnipotency, and power over the Heart and Will of Man; but they have not disputed near so much concerning grace and liberty, and the manner of reconciling both, as we have done in the Christian Schools.

Destruction

[Job xxvi. 6.] DESTRUCTION. By this word is generally meant an unhappy death sent by [Deut. xxxii. 35. Job xxi. 30.] God for the punishment of Sin. The day of destruction is at hand. And Job, The wicked is reserved to the day of destruction, they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath. God preserves the wicked only to destroy them, and display his vengeance against them. Destruction is likewise taken for Hell, for the place where the wicked in eternal torments expiate their past sins. Thus Job says, That hell is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering. And again, Destruction and death say, we have heard the fame thereof with our ears. We know Wisdom by fame and reputation only. [Prov. xv. 11.] And the wise Man, Hell, or the grave, and destruction are before the Lord: he knows them, he sees them plainly, how much more then the hearts of the children of men.

[Wisd. v. 7.] The wicked in the Book of Wisdom confess that they have wearied themselves in the way of wickedness and destruction. In Ecclesiasticus it is said, That a thief is better than a man that is accustomed to lye: but they both shall have destruction to heritage; [Hosea xiii. 9.] an unhappy death. Hosea threatens the Israelites with the utmost misfortunes; God will fall upon them like a mad bear, and as a roaring lion. He concludes, O Israel thou hast destroyed thy self, but in me is thy help. Thy misery, thy destruction proceeds only from thy self, it is thine own proper act; and thou hast no succour to hope for but from me: in vain wilt thou seek for it elsewhere.

[John xvii. 12.] In the Gospel, Judas is called the son of perdition, as is Antichrist in like manner by [2 Thess. ii. 3. Matth. vii. 13.] St. Paul. St. Peter says to Simon the Magician, Thy money perish with thee. And our Saviour in St. Matthew; Enter ye in at the strait gate, for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction. The Latin word perditio is most frequently taken for merely loss or waste; for example, Ut quid perditio ista unguenti facta est, Mark xiv. 4.

Devoting

DEVOTING. The most ancient example of Devoting that we have, is that which Balak King of Moab would have had Balaam use against the army of Israel, which was incamped in the borders of his country. [Numb. xxii. 6.] Balak therefore sent Deputies to Balaam with directions to say to him, Come and curse, devote this people, for they are too mighty for me, and I dare not attempt to force them, to the end that I may see if by any means I may engage and drive them from my territories; for I know that he whom thou blessest is blessed, and he whom thou cursest is cursed. Balaam therefore came with Balak's messengers, tho' with a great deal of reluctancy, as may be seen in the Article Balaam. Upon his arrival in the land of Moab, Balak carried him up to the high places of Baal, and from thence shewed him the extremity of the Israelitish camp. Hereupon Balaam appointed seven Altars to be erected, and offered sacrifices, after which he retired by himself, waiting for the inspiration of God. Then the Lord put the following words into his mouth; Balak King of Moab hath brought me from Syria, from the mountains of the east, saying, Come and curse Jacob, make haste, and defy Israel. How shall I curse whom the Lord hath not cursed? or how shall I defy whom the Lord hath not defied? For from the top of the rocks I see him, and from the hills I behold him: lo the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations. Who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel? Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his.

As Balaam, instead of cursing, blessed the Israelites, Balak desired him to be silent, and having conducted him to another place, from whence he could see some part only of the Israelitish camp, he erected new Altars there, and offered sacrifices. But Balaam began again to bless Israel, saying, God is not a man that he should lye, neither the son of man that he should repent. Hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good? He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel*: the Lord his God is with him, and the shout of a king is among them: surely there is no enchantment against* Jacob, neither is there any divination in Israel, &c. or otherwise, there is no Diviner nor Soothsayer against Israel. You endeavour in vain to devote them, and have them cursed: no devoting, no cursing can be of any effect against them: their God is above all the art of Magicians, and all the malice of Devils.

This is the only example of this sort of devoting that we find in Scripture.

[Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 4. & de Bell. l. 1. c. 5.] Josephus has furnished us with another. During the troubles which happened in Judæa between the two brothers Hircanus and Aristobulus, who disputed for the High -priesthood and Dominion over the Jews, Aristobulus with his people being shut up in the temple by Hircanus, who was in Jerusalem with those of his party; the latter sent for one Onias into their army, who was reputed a great saint, and was said to have obtained rain in a time of drought by the efficacy of his prayers: they imagined that his curses would be sufficient to draw down the vengeance of heaven upon Aristobulus and those of his faction.

Onias resisted their importunities for a long time; but at length, finding that they would never cease tormenting him, he lifted up his hands to heaven in the midst of the army, and pronounced these words; O Lord God, who art Governour of the Universe, since they who are with us are thy people, and they who are besieged are thy priests, hearken not unto the prayers of either the one or the other against the opposite party. They who invited him to come were so enraged to see themselves frustrated in their expectation, that they stoned him upon the spot, and so cruelly murdered him.

[Deut. xx. 16, 17.] Several Devotings of another sort are taken notice of in sacred History, as when any people, city, country, or family were devoted to the curse; for example, the Lord devoted the nation of the Canaanites and [1 Sam. xv. 3. Numb. xxi. 3. Joshua vii. 13, 24, 25. Joshua vi. 17.] Amalekites. The Israelites devoted the town of Hormah, the family of Achan, and the city of Jericho. Upon these occasions they generally destroy'd every thing that was in these provinces and cities. As they were not to undertake any war without first consulting God, who was as it were the General and Chief Leader of the Israelitish Armies, in whose name the priests sounded the charge and gave the signal of battle, they were as it were sure of success, provided they were faithful to him, and under such a protection they despised the strange Gods of the enemies: indeed they were not taken for Gods, nor did people condescend to call them forth, or use any the least precautions against them.

[Q. Curt. l. 4.] But the Heathens who admitted a plurality of Gods, and believed them to be subordinate in power to one another, made use of Inchantments and Devotings to bring mischief upon their enemies, their cities and armies. They sometimes called forth the tutelary Deities of cities to deprive their enemies of their protection and defence. It is said, for example, that the Syrians chained the Statue of Apollo, and fastened him to the Altar of Hercules tutelar deity of their city, lest he should forsake them and retire out of the city. Aurea catena devinxere simulachrum, araeque Herculis, cujus numini urbem dicaverant, inseruere vinculum, quasi [Macrob. Saturnal. l. 3. c. 9.] illo deo Apollinem retenturi.

The Romans, says Macrobius, being persuaded that every city had its tutelary Deities, used certain verses to call them forth, believing it impossible to make themselves masters of the town without it; and even when they had it in their power to take the place, they thought always that it would be a great crime to take the Gods captives with it: for this reason the Romans ever kept the real and concealed name of their cities very private, this being very different from that they generally gave [Plin. l. 3. c. 5. l. 28. c. 2. Plutarch. Problem. 2. Macrob. Saturnal. l. 3. c. 9. Solin. c. 2.] them among the people, as likewise the name of the tutelary God of their cities. Pliny informs us, that the secret name of Rome was Valentia, and that Valerius Soranus was severely punished for revealing it. Now the form made use of in calling forth the tutelary God of any city was as follows: " If it be God or Goddess under whose " guard are the city and people of Carthage, " I beseech thee, O Great God, who hast " taken this town and people under thy " tuition, I conjure and entreat thee graciously to abandon the city and people " of " of Carthage, to forsake all their dwellings, " Temples and sacred Places, to cast them " off, to inspire them with fear, terror, " and forgetfulness, and to retire to Rome " among our people; let our Habitations, " our Temples, our Things Sacred, and our " City be more agreeable to thee; demonstrate to us that thou art my Protector, " the Protector of the Roman people, and " of my soldiers. If thou dost this, I engage myself by a solemn vow to found " Temples and institute Games in honour " of thee." We may see in Livy the evocation of the Gods of [Tit. Liv. Decad. 1. l. 5. Plin. l. 2. c. 53.] Veia. The Tuscans called forth the thunder, when they thought they had occasion for it. Numa Pompilius did so often with success. Tullus Hostilius attempting it without making use of the accustomed rites, was himself struck with thunder.

As to the Devoting hostile armies, or besieged places, we have here an example of it [Macrob. Saturnal. l. 3. c. 9.] from Macrobius: " Dis-Pater (this was Pluto) " Jupiter, ye Manes, or by what " other name ye will be called, I earnestly " beseech you to spread fear and terror in " the army I shall mention to you, and " throughout the city of Carthage. May " ye look upon all as devoted and accursed, may ye deprive them of light, " and remove at a distance from this country " all those who shall bear arms against us, " and shall attack our legions and our armies; may all their armies, fields, cities, " heads, and lives be comprized within " this wish, as far as they may be comprized in it by the most solemn Devoting. " Wherefore I devote them, I charge them " with all the mischief that may happen " to myself, our Magistrates, the Roman " People, our Armies and our Legions; that " ye may preserve me myself and those " who employ me, the Empire's legions, and " our army which is concern'd in this war. " If you please to do these things, as I " know and understand them, I promise " you, O Earth, mother of all things, and " you, Great Jupiter, a sacrifice of three " black sheep."

Deuteronomy

DEUTERONOMY, the last of Moses's five Books. The Greeks gave it the name of Deuteronomy, or the second Law, or repetition of the Law; because Moses therein makes a kind of recapitulation of what he had ordained and done in the preceding Books. The Hebrews call it Elle-haddebarim, which are the first words of this Book in the Hebrew Text. Some Rabbins call it Mishnah, that is to say the second Law; others the Book of Reprehensions, by reason of the Reproaches wherewith Moses loaded the Israelites in Chap. i. viii. ix. xxviii. xxx. xxxii. This Book contains the history of what passed in the wilderness from the beginning of the eleventh month, to the seventh day of the twelfth month, in the fortieth year after their departure out of Egypt; that is to say, the history of about six weeks.

Some have questioned whether this Book were written by Moses, because there is mention in it of the death of this Legislator, and the Author speaks of the land beyond Jordan, like one who had written on this side westward of that river. As to the first argument, we allow that the relation of Moses's death was added to this book; and for the second, we believe that the Hebrew [עבר trans, or cis בעבר in transitu. Chap. i. ii. iii. iv.] word Heber, which is translated trans Jordanum, beyond Jordan, may likewise be translated on this side.

In the book of Deuteronomy, Moses immediately harangues the people, and refreshes their memory with a recital of what had passed ever since their coming out of Egypt, till their arrival in the plains of Moab. He speaks to them a second time in the fifth and following chapters, and lays before them the laws of God which he had received at Sinai, adds some others that were new to them, and explains the old. In the xxviii, xxix, and xxx Chapters, he continues to exhort the people to observe faithfully the laws of God. He afterwards declares, that Joshua was by God appointed to succeed him in the government of the multitude. He wrote down what he had been [Deut. xxxi. 9, 10—14.] saying to them, put this writing into the hands of the Levites and Elders of the nation, and charged them to read it every seven years in a general Assembly of the people at the Feast of Tabernacles.

Some few days after, he repeated an excellent Song in the presence of the people, wherein he foretold their future Infidelities. He enjoined them to take copies of it, and to preserve the memory of it, that by this means they might be excited to continue constantly faithful to the Lord. Lastly, God having commanded him the same day to go up mount Nebo, there to die, he convened all the people, and like a good father, gave his Blessing to all the Tribes, and foretold to them separately what should happen to them. After which, he ascended the mountain, and there died. This is a summary account of what is related in the book of Deuteronomy.

Deuterosis

[משנה Mishnah.] DEUTEROSIS. Thus the Jews call their Mishnah, or second Law. Deuterosis in Greek has the same signification almost as Mishnah in Hebrew: both signify second, or [Eufeb. in Isai. i. 22. p. 362. Epiphan. Hæres. 33. num. 9.] rather iteration. Eusebius accuses the Jews with corrupting the true sense of Scripture with the trifling explanations of their Deuteroses. St. Epiphanius says, that there were four sorts of them quoted: the first under the name of Moses; the second under that of Akiba; the third under that of Adda or Judah; and the fourth under the name of the sons of the Asmonæans or Maccabees. It is not easy to say

5 Z whether the present Mishnah is the same with these, whether it contains them all, or only some part, or whether it be different [Hieron. in Isa. viii.] from them. St. Jerom says, that the Hebrews referr'd their Deuteroses to Shammai and Hillel; if it were well proved that they were of this antiquity, it would be considerable, [Joseph. l. 14. Antiq. & l. 15. c. 1.] since Josephus speaks of Sammeas, who is the same with Shammai in the beginning of Herod's reign. St. Jerom speaks always of the Deuteroses with the utmost contempt; he looked upon them as a collection of fables, childish stuff, and obscenities. He says, the principal Authors of these fine decisions, according to the Jews, are Bar-Akiba, Simeon, and Helles. Bar-Akiba is probably the grandfather or father of the famous Akiba: Simeon and Shammai are the same persons, so are Helles and Hillel. See the Article MISHNAH.

Dew

DEW. Dews in Palestine are very plentiful. Hushai compares an army falling upon the enemy to the Dew descending on [2 Sam. xvii. 12.] the ground. It was as it were a small shower of rain, which fell every morning. Gideon filled a bason with the Dew which fell by [Judg. vi. 38. Cant. v. 2.] night upon a fleece of wool. The Spouse in the Canticles says, that his hair was moisten'd with the Dew. Isaac blessing Jacob, wished him the Dew of heaven which fattens [Gen. xxvii. 28.] the fields. In these warm Countries, and in places where it rains but seldom, the night-dews supply in some sort the want of rain. The wise man says, that the clouds are formed of the Dew; Nubes rore concrescunt. [Prov. iii. 20.] Or rather, according to the Hebrew, the clouds produce or distill the Dew. And in another place, that the good humour of the Prince is like the Dew upon the grass: Sicut ros super herbam, ita hilaritas ejus. Isaiah speaks of rain as if it were a Dew, because in [Isa. xviii. 4.] reality it was almost as copious; like a cloud of Dew in the heat of Harvest. The same Prophet says, that the Dew which God [Isa. xxvi. 19. טל אורות טלך] causes to fall upon the people, is a bright Dew, ros lucis, ros tuus: Thy Dew is a Dew which revives, enlightens, and restores liberty to thy captives. He speaks of the captivity of Babylon, as of a state of death. He compares his captive people to withered and dying grass. The Dew refreshes and strengthens it. In like manner, God's visitation of his people will recover them in some sort to life and light. Others translate the Hebrew, Thy Dew is as the Dew of herbs, instead of a Dew of light and dawn. This comparison of God's visitation to the Dew is remarkable in several places of the Scripture. See Hosea vi. 4. xiii. 1. xiv. 6. Micah v. 7.

Diabolus

DIABOLUS. This word comes from the Greek, Diabalos, which signifies a Calumniator. We very rarely meet with it in the Old [Διάβολος, Calumniator. Accusator.] Testament. Sometimes it answers to the Hebrew, Belial; and at other times to the word Satan. The first signifies one who is good for nothing, a Libertine; and the second, an Adversary, or an Accuser in a Court of Justice. The Author of the Vulgate has likewise made use of Diabolus in Habbakuk. Egredietur Diabolus ante pedes ejus, instead of the Hebrew Rescheph, which signifies a coal. The translation therefore should be, Death or the Pestilence shall go before him, and Coals shall go forth at his feet. In the Books of the Old Testament which were written in the Greek, Diabolus is taken for the Devil, or simply for the Enemy: but in the New Testament it signifies always the Devil, the grand Enemy of Mankind.

We have spoken at large in the Article Demons, of the fall of Lucifer and his followers. We have seen that Eblis, according to the Mahometans, was the same with him whom we call Lucifer. It may be proper to add a word or two farther in this place of Eblis, whose name comes pretty near that of Diabolus. The Mussulmen call him likewise Azazel, which is the name in Scripture for the Scape-goat; and is probably the same with that Azazel, whom the Book of Enoch mentions by this name, as one of the chief of the revolted Angels. They maintain that Eblis was called by this name, which signifies refractory, by reason of his rebellion against God; and that having received orders to prostrate himself before Adam, he would not comply, under pretence that he being of the nature of fire, ought not to bend the knee to Adam, who was formed only of earth. They say the Angels were created many thousand years before Adam, and that the fire whereof they were composed, was of a much greater activity than ordinary fire; that it was of the nature of lightning.

We have already observed, that they were capable of ingendering, and in reality did ingender other Genius's of the same nature with themselves, and imitators of their disobedience and rebellion. They believe that Eblis desired of God to have some respite allowed him, before he was to be tormented in hell. God granted the delay he asked, but without declaring to him for what term of time. They add, that it will continue till the sounding of the first trumpet before the day of Judgment; that then Eblis will die, and remain dead forty years, that is to say, to the sounding of the second trumpet, and then will rise again with all men. They never pronounce the word Eblis without adding to it, the Cursed of God, or al-Regim, the stoned, the person driven away with stones.

In the books of the Old Testament, Diabolus signifies sometimes the Devil, as in this place: Invidiâ Diaboli mors introivit [Wisd. ii. 24.] in orbem terrarum. Through envy of the Devil came death into the World. Sometimes it is taken for an accuser, and adversary who prosecutes us before the Judges; for example, Diabolus stet a dextris ejus; [Psalm cviii. 6.] let him appear in judgment; let his accuser be at his right hand, and when he is to be judged, let him be condemned. And elsewhere, [Ecclus. xxi. 30.] Cum maledicit impius Diabolum, maledicit ipse animam suam. When the wicketh curseth his adversary, he curseth himself: He drew this enemy upon himself by his own bad conduct; had he been wise, he would have had no enemy. Others understand it as signifying the Devil: he that curseth the Devil who tempts him, and occasions his falling into sin, should complain only of himself; he has indeed incurred the guilt of sin, but should impute it to his own will only.

Sometimes Diabolus is taken for a wicked man, a libertine, a man who is under no restraints of law or honesty; a child [1 Kings xxi. 13.] of Belial; for example, Adductis duobus viris filiis diaboli: they brought two false witnesses, two of the Devil's children, two forgers of lyes, two sons of Belial. Lastly, in the first book of Maccabees, it is said that [1 Macc. i. 38.] the strangers put a garrison into the citadel of Jerusalem, and that this was a snare, and an evil Devil in Israel[1]; that is to say, it was an occasion of divisions, quarrels, wars, and profanations; it was as it were a snare, and matter of falling, to many.

Dial

DIAL. There is no mention of a Dial in [He began to reign in the year of the World 3262, and died in 3278, before J. C. 722, before the Vulg. Æra 726.] Scripture before the reign of Ahaz; and we do not clearly see, that even after the reign of this Prince, the Jews generally divided their time by hours: they continued to reckon still after their usual manner. The first time that we meet with the word Hour, is in Tobit; where it is said that Tobit and his son Tobias, continued prostrate on the earth for three Hours, which likewise is the reading of the Chaldee. This may serve to confirm their opinion, who maintain, that the invention of Dials came from beyond the Euphrates. Others believe, that this invention [Herod. l. 2. c. 109.] came from the Phœnicians, and that the first footsteps of it in antiquity are what Homer says of it:[1] There is, says he, an Island called Syria, lying above Ortygia, where the revolutions of the Sun are observed: that is to say, in this Island they see the returns of the Sun, the Solstices. As the Phœnicians are thought to have inhabited this Island, it is presumed, that they were the people, who left this monument of their skill in Astronomy.

About three hundred years after Homer, Pherecydes in the same Island set up a Sun-dial to distinguish the hours. Lastly, the Laert. in Greeks confess that Anaximander was the Pherecyd. first who divided the time by hours, and Laert. l. that he introduced Sun-dials among them 2. vide[2]. Usher fixes the death of Anaximander in & Suidam the year of the world 3457, under the reign & Euof Cyrus, and during the captivity of Baby- seb.

Præpar. lon, five hundred forty three years before l. x. the birth of Jesus Christ, and five hundred forty seven years before the Vulgar Æra. As this Philosopher had travelled into Chaldæa, he might have brought with him the Dial and the Needle, which were both in use there.

[2 Kings xx. 2, &c.] To return to Ahaz's Dial, the account the Scripture gives us of it, is this: Hezekiah falling dangerously ill, Isaiah came and declared to him, that he should recover, and in three days time would be in a condition to go up to the Temple. Hezekiah said to him, what shall be the sign that the Lord will heal me? Isaiah answered, shall the shadow go forward ten degrees or go back ten degrees? The King said, nay but let the shadow return backward ten degrees. And Isaiah the prophet cried unto the Lord, and he brought the shadow ten degrees backward, by which it had gone down in the dial of Ahaz. This happened in the year of the world 3291, about twelve years after the death of [Cyrill. in Isai. l. 3. t. 4. p. 496. Hieron. in Isai. xxxviii.] Ahaz.

Interpreters disagree among themselves concerning the form of Ahaz's Dial: St. Cyril of Alexandria, and St. Jerom believe, that it was a stair-case disposed with so much art, that the Sun at his rising shewed the hours upon it by the shadow; and thus [Pagn. Munst. Sanct. Vatab.] the generality of Expositors understand it. Others believe that it was a pillar erected in the middle of a very smooth pavement, upon which the hours were engraved. The lines marked on this pavement, are, according to those Authors, what the Scripture has expressed by the word Degrees. Grotius described it thus, after Rabbi Elias Chomer. It was a concave Hemisphere, in the midst whereof was a globe, the shadow of which fell upon several lines, engraved in the concavity of the Hemisphere: These lines, say they, were eight and twenty in number. Which description comes pretty near the Dial, by the Greeks called Scapha, a boat, or Hemispherion, the invention whereof Vitruvius [Vitruv. l. 9. c. 9.] attributes to a Chaldæan, whose name was Berosus.

This is what has been said concerning the form of Ahaz's Dial. As to the shadow of retrogradation on this Dial, and the manner of it, whether the Sun did really go backwards, or whether the reflexion of its rays occasioned by some cloud formed suddenly and supernaturally produced this effect, is what opinions are likewise very much divided about. The Reader may consult our Dissertation concerning the Sun's retrogradation on Ahaz's Dial, prefixed to our Comment upon the second book of Kings[3].

We have shewn in the article Hours, that they are distinctly taken notice of in Daniel, Tobit, and Judith; there must have been Dials therefore at that time of some kind or other, whether the hours were measured by feet upon the shadow of one's body, or by the shadow of a gnomon, pillar, stair-case, or any other manner; for all these ways were formerly in use. Sun-dials are still very common at this day; and the country people still judge pretty right what a clock it is by the shadow of their body, or their house.

[1 Kings xx. 11. and Isai. xxxviii. 8. מעלותMahaloth. LXX. ἀναβαθμός. Gradus, Vulg. Linea, & Gradus.] The Hebrew word Maaloth, which in the Vulgate is translated horologium, linea, and gradus, signifies literally a stair-case, stairs; and consequently nothing can be from thence concluded as to the form of Ahaz's Dial. Was it a stair-case made purposely to shew the hours, or did it serve for this use by chance only and occasionally? Was it a common stair-case or Sun-dial, with the name of degrees, by reason of the lines traced out and engrav'd upon it?

Another question as difficult to resolve as the first, is, to know whence the use of Clocks and Dials comes, in what manner soever they are understood; for it is easy to perfect an invention which is once found out. The use of them in Judæa, is, we see, particularly taken notice of in the reign of Ahaz, and in that of Manasseh, as we learn from the book of Judith. We observe the same use of it a good while after this in Chaldæa, beyond the Euphrates, as may be seen in the books of Tobit and Daniel: and we have no reason to believe, that the invention of it was new either in Judæa or Chaldæa, when these Authors spoke of it. The Egyptians glory in having begun the custom of dividing the day into twelve equal hours, and consequently in introducing the use of Dials; [Tull. apud Victorin. a Macrob. citat. l. c. 21.] since, as we have observed already, one can scarce go without the other. Some say, that Mercury Trismegistus, having made it his remark that the Cynocephalis urines twelve times a-day, and always at an equal distance, and howls regularly at particular times, divided the day into twelve equal parts, which we call Hours. Mercury Trismegistus is much more ancient than either Ahaz, Tobit, or Daniel, if it be true that he lived soon after Moses's time.

Others maintain, that the invention of Dials comes from beyond the Euphrates, as it above mentioned. See our Dissertation on the retrogradation of the Sun in Ahaz's Dial, prefixed to the second Book of Kings.

The Retrogradation of the Sun ten degrees in Ahaz's Dial further requires a serious [Pereira & Spinoza.] examination. Some Authors believe the retrogradation was not real, but apparent only, and in people's opinion; that the change which happened was only in the shadow, which fell on Ahaz's Dial, and not in the motion of the Sun: this Luminary was in motion as usual, but the rays of it being reflected in an extraordinary manner by the opposition of a cloud, or some other way, naturally produced all that change in Ahaz's dial, which was taken for a miracle. And supposing the thing had so happened, as they believe, can it at any time be thought otherwise than a miracle, to change the direction and determination of the Sun's rays to some fixed point, in order to make the shadow in Ahaz's Dial return back ten degrees?

They who hold the Sun to be in the center of the world which we inhabit, have no more trouble in disengaging themselves from any perplexities in this respect, than they who are of opinion that the Sun turns about the Earth. Without suspending at all the motion of the Sun or stopping it, it is easily conceivable, that its rays might be so reflected, as to make the shadow of the Sun appear ten degrees backwarder than it should be, according to the common course of it.

But whether these ten degrees denoted so many hours, is what we are no ways able to decide. There might be many degrees for one hour only, or one for every hour. The Scripture does not say, that this day was longer than any other. And in effect, if the miracle consisted only in changing the determination of the Sun's rays to a particular point, and for a short time, the day must not have been longer than ordinary; and supposing the Sun to have stopped in its course, as the Text seems to say, it would not follow that the day would have been ten hours longer than any others, because, as has been observed, it is not certain, that every degree denoted an hour.

Diana

DIANA, a celebrated Goddess of the Heathens, who was honoured principally at Ephesus. She was of the number of the twelve superior Gods; she was called likewise by the several names of Hebe, Trivia, Hecate. In the Heavens she was the Moon, upon Earth she was called Diana, and in Hell Hecate. In the time of women's lying in she was invoked under the name of Lucina. She was painted with a crescent upon her head, and a bow in her hand, in a hunting habit. She passed for a Virgin, for which reason Bees were consecrated to her. The Diana adored at Ephesus was represented after another manner. Her statue was covered with breasts, sometimes from head to foot, and sometimes her bosom only and her belly were covered with them, and all besides was a kind of pedestal adorned at particular distances with stags heads, with the heads of dogs and oxen, described with half their bodies. The breasts were an emblem of her fertility, and shewed that she was a nurse to men and beasts. The heads of Dogs and Stags denoted her to be the Goddess of hunting.

[Vide Hieronym. Prolog. in Epist. ad Ephes.] Diana was said to be the daughter of Jupiter and Latona, and born at the same birth with Apollo. She was worshipped in Palestine in the times of Isaiah and Jeremiah under the name of Meni, that is to say, the Goddess of months, or the Moon. Bread and liquors were offered to her upon altars, at the corners of the streets, in the beginning [Isai. lxviii.] of every month. She was acknowledged to be the Goddess of the streets, together with her brother Apollo, who was looked upon as the God of good fortune. She was adored [Aristophan. in Pluto, & in Thesmophorias.] likewise under the name of the Queen of Heaven, and cakes were offered to her upon plat-forms on the tops of houses, at the corners of the streets, or doors of houses. The children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough to make cakes to the Queen of Heaven, says Jeremiah.

We have seen above in the article Demetrius, what happened at Ephesus upon the occasion of St. Paul's preaching, who [Jerem. vii. 18. See likewise Jerem. xi. 13. xliv. 17, 18. Ezek. xvi. 25.] proved there the vanity of Idols, and was destroying the worship of Diana, and other false Gods. Demetrius who got his livelihood by making little silver chapels, or niches, or even medals, upon which Diana of Ephesus was represented with her famous Temple, raised a tumult there, which had almost produced a sedition in the city. See Acts xix. 24. and the following verses.

And St. Paul, Cor nostrum dilatatum est. Dilatare is used likewise for extending one's limits, and carrying one's conquests into a foreign country. Dilatet Dominus Japhet: May God give him a [Gen. ix. 27. [Ps. lxxx. 11.] And in another sense, Dilata os tuum & implebo illud. Dinah

DINAH, the daughter of Jacob and [Genes. xxx. 21.] Leah. Dinah was born after Zebulun, about the Year of the World 2250, before Jesus Christ 1750, before the Vulgar Æra 1754. When her father Jacob returned into the land of Canaan, Dinah, who was then about the age of fifteen or sixteen, had the curiosity to go to some festival of the Shechemites, and see the women of the [Genes. xxxiv. 1, 2.] country. But Schechem, the Son of Hamor the Hivite, who was Prince of the City, having seen her, conceived a great affection for her, carried her away by force and ravished her; and observing her to be melancholy, he endeavoured to ingage her by his caresses. Afterwards he went to his father Hamor, and desired him to procure this young woman for his wife. Hamor and his son therefore made a visit to Jacob, and discoursed with him about it. At the same time Dinah's brothers returned out of the fields, and having understood what had passed, they were strangely exasperated at it.

When Hamor therefore and Schechem spoke to Dinah's father and brothers, and demanded her in marriage; the Sons of Jacob answered them deceitfully, and said, we cannot give our daughter to one uncircumcised; nor can we give her to you upon any other condition, than that of receiving circumcision, as we have done. Hamor and Schechem agreed to this proposition, and persuaded the inhabitants of the city to be satisfied with it too. Whereupon all the men of Schechem were circumcised; and three days after, when the pain of their wounds was most violent, Simeon and Levi, the sons of Jacob, and Dinah's brothers, came into the City, and killed all the males in it. They dispatched Hamor and Schechem, and carried their sister Dinah with them to their father's house: they plundered the town, took away all the cattle, and made all the women and children their captives. Thus they revenged the affront offered to their sister, without the knowledge or consent of their father Jacob.

[Ezra iv. 9.] What became of Dinah after this affair, we cannot tell. The Hebrews assert, that she was married to the Holy man Job; whereof there is not the least proof. And certainly if Job and Jobab, the fourth son of Esau, Jacob's brother, be the same person, there is no probability that Dinah could live so long as to become the wife of this religious man.

Diodotus

DIODOTUS, otherwise called Tryphon, had been a Captain in the troops of Alexander Balas. He observing Nicanor King of Syria to be fallen into contempt, and to have incurred the hatred of the soldiers, undertook to place Antiochus upon the throne, who was son to his master Balas, and a child then living in the court of [1 Macc. xi. 39, 40. In the Year of the World 3860, before J.C. 140, before the Vulg. Æra 144.] Elmachuel King of the Arabians. He prevailed with the King of the Arabians to trust the young Prince to his care; and procured him to be acknowledged King of Syria by the troops, and people of the country. In the mean time, Diodotus governed absolutely in the young Prince's name: but he grew weary of having only the the authority of a King without the title. He pretended therefore that the young Prince was tormented with the stone, and corrupted some Physicians, who killed him, while they made a [1 Macc. xiii. 31, 32. Liv. l. 55. Strab. l. 16. Justin. l. 36.] shew of cutting him. Thus he took the diadem, and changed his name from Diodotus into that of Tryphon.

Being desirous to secure the protection of the Romans, he sent a golden Statue of Fortune to the Senate, which weighed ten thousand pieces of gold. But the Senate, without refusing the present, eluded the request which he made of being owned as King by them. They received the golden image of Fortune, and set forth in the Inscription, that it was given by young Antiochus, the same who had [Diodor. Sicul. Legat. 31.] been killed by Tryphon.

On the other side, Simon Maccabæus seeing that there was nothing but robberies every where committed by Tryphon, separated from [1 Macc. xiii. 34, 37. In the year of the World 3864, before J. Dionysius the Areopagite

DIONYSIUS the Areopagite. We read in the Acts of the Apostles, that St. Paul being obliged to depart from Berœa, a city in Macedonia, for fear of falling into the hands of the Jews, who were come from Thessalonica to stir up the people against him, went into Achaia, and from thence to Athens. While he was there waiting for Silas his companion, and Timothy his disciple, his spirit was moved, and as it were enraged within him, to see so celebrated a city so passionately addicted to idolatry. He had many conferences with several of the Philosophers upon matters of Religion, particularly with the Epicureans and Stoicks. The former ridiculed his discourses; the others said, it seemed to be his design to introduce a new Religion, and declare new Gods to them, because he preached Jesus Christ and the Resurrection. They took him therefore and led him to the Areopagus, saying, you tell us things so new and extraordinary, that we should be glad to know the meaning of them; for the Athenians were taken up intirely with hearing and repeating news.

Paul therefore being come to the Areopagus, told them, that as he passed through their city, and observed the Statues of their Gods, he took notice of an Altar with this Inscription, To the unknown God: I come therefore to publish that to you, which you do not know; the God who made the Universe, and every thing included in it, being Lord of Heaven and Earth. He dwelleth not in Temples built by men; he is not honoured by the works of human hands, as if he stood in need of his creatures, who gives life, and breath, and all things to all. He with one word only produced the whole race of Mankind; he gave them the whole extent of the earth for their abode, having determined the times and seasons, and set forth the limits of every people's habitation: to the end that they might seek him and come to the knowledge of him by those very things which fall under their senses, being otherwise not far from every one of us; for in him and by him we have life, motion and being; and as some of their own Poets have said, We are the offspring of God.

Since therefore we are his Children, and descended from him, we should not believe his Divinity to be like gold and silver, or precious stones, wherewith the art and industry of men have formed images of him. But God in his anger having permitted these times of ignorance to pass, has now caused it to be published to all men in all places, that they should repent, because he hath appointed a day wherein he will judge the World in righteousness by him whom he hath ordained Judge of it, whereof he hath given a certain proof to all men, by raising him from the dead.

[In the year of J. C. 53, of the Vulgar Æra 56.] When they heard the resurrection of the dead mentioned, some mocked, and others said they would hear him some other time upon this point; wherefore St. Paul departed out of their assembly. Nevertheless some adhered to him, and embraced the faith; among whom was Dionysius a Senator of the Areopagus, a woman whose name was Damaris, and with them several others. This is what St. Luke relates to us in the Acts, and is almost all we know of St. Dionysius the Areopagite. Some have been of opinion that Damaris was his wife, but of this we have no certain proof. St. Chrysostom declares Dionysius to have been a [Chryf. l. 4. de Sacerdotio, c. 7. Chryf. de Sacerdot. l. 4. c. 7. Cæsar. Dialog. qu. 112.] citizen of Athens, which is very credible, because the Judges of the Areopagus were not generally chosen out of any others. There are Authors who tell us that he was of Thrace, but of this one witness only is cited, and he not very capable of persuading us. The great reputation of the justice, integrity, and wisdom for which the Judges of the Areopagus are said to have been remarkable, is a strong prejudice in favour of the virtue and merit of Dionysius. After his conversion he was made the first Bishop of Athens, and having labour'd much in the defence and propagation of the Gospel, and suffered a great deal in the same cause, he crowned his life and confession with a glorious martyrdom. He is said to have been burnt at Athens in the year of Jesus Christ 95. The Greeks keep his festival on the third day of October. The Latins, since the time of Lewis the Debonnaire, are persuaded, that Dionysius the Areopagite, first Bishop of Athens, is the same with Dennis first Bishop of Paris. A great deal was written on this subject in the last Age; at present indeed those disputes seem to have ceased, and the distinction of the two Saints has been acknowledged. I say nothing here of the works whereof Dionysius the Areopagite is supposed to be the Author; they have no relation to my subject, and besides they are reputed among learned men at present to be intirely spurious.

Diorix

DIORIX, or Dioryx. We find this word in Ecclesiasticus xxiv. 41. Ego quasi [Raban. in Eccles. xxiv. 41. Complut. Sixt. V. Fluvius Dorix. cix. 29. מעיל Alii Fluvius vorax. Διπλοΐς.] fluvii Diorix. Some have taken it for the proper name of a river. But it is a Greek word which signifies a channel, a rivulet. In the same Chapter, v. 43. this term is translated trames. Factus est mihi trames abundans.

Diospolis

DIOSPOLIS. We do not meet with this name in the sacred Writings; but we have observed in our Comment upon Nahum, that in all probability the Prophet intended this City under the name of No- Ammon, which St. Jerom commonly [Nahum iii. 8.] translates Alexandria. Nahum describes No-Ammon to be a populous City, situated among rivers, with waters round about it, which were its walls and ramparts. Ethiopia and Egypt were her strength, and it was infinite. Put and Lubim were thy helpers: yet was she carried away captive into a strange land. It appears to us, that these Characters agreed so well with no other City as Diospolis, situated in the Delta, upon one of the arms of the Nile, between Busiris to the south, and Mendes to the north: it lies at the extremity of two arms of the Nile; each whereof discharges itself into the Mediterranean, which is at a small distance from Diospolis. There were [Strabo l. 17. Laert. l. 5. Suid. in Demetrio Phaler.] great Lakes about it, which the Scripture frequently calls Seas. The name of it, Diospolis, the City of Jupiter, comes from that of No-Ammon, the dwelling of Jupiter-Ammon. It was within reach to receive the assistance mentioned by Nahum; the waters were its strength and its ramparts, &c.

Notwithstanding, as there are very learned men of opinion, that No-Ammon was the City of Thebes, the capital of the Thebais, we shall under that title propose the reasons which may be brought in favour of it.

Diotrephes

DIOTREPHES. Who Diotrephes was, we cannot tell, nor of what Church he was Bishop, nor whether he were a Bishop or not. Grotius believes that Gaius, to whom St. John wrote his third Epistle, and who lived in the same place as Diotrephes, was of one of the seven Churches which are named in the Revelations. Lightfoot is of opinion, that he lived at Corinth. But let this be as it will, Diotrephes was one who did not receive those with hospitality whom St. John sent to him, and would suffer no one else to do so. Oecumenius, Bede, and some modern Commentators will have it, that Diotrephes was an Heretick. Others think he was a Judaizing Christian, who would not admit the Gentile Converts to his table. But others affirm the quite contrary, and that Diotrephes would not receive those who were converted to Judaism. See 3 John, v. 9.

Diplois

DIPLOIS. This is a Greek word, which signifies a garment or cloak lined. The Psalmist prays to God that he would confound those, who spoke evil of him, and cover them with shame, as with a cloak. Operiantur sicut diploïde confusione sua. But the Hebrew Mehil signifies properly a cloak or upper coat. As the Cynick Philosophers wore no tunicks, or under garments, they were generally contented with a Diploïs, or double cloak.

Contra quem duplici panno patientia velat.

[Horat. l. 1. Ep. 17. de Diogene Cynico. Luke xii. 6.] Baruch has also used the word Diploïs, chap. v. ver. 2. But as we have not this Book in Hebrew, we cannot tell what he meant by it.

Dipondius

DIPONDIUS. Saint Luke makes use of the word Dipondius to signify a sort of coin, which was of very little value. Nonne quinque passeres væneunt dipondio? In St. [Matt. x. 29.] Matthew, who relates the same thing, we read, Nonne duo passeres asse væneunt? Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? The Greek reads assarion instead of as. Now assarion, as some say, was worth half an as, that is to say, four deniers and ⅛, and according to others two deniers and 5/16. Dipondius seems rather to signify half an As[1].

Dipsas

[Heb. צמאון Tzimaon Greek Διψάς.] DIPSAS, a sort of Serpent, the biting whereof produces such a thirst as proves mortal; whence it is called Dipsas[1], which in Greek signifies thirsty. In Latin it is called situla, a pail. Moses speaks of it in Deut. viii. 15. Ductor tuus fuit in solitudine, ... in qua erat Scorpio ac Dipsas. The Hebrew word Tzimaon answers very well to the Greek, Dipsas, and expresses the thirst occasioned by the biting of this Serpent. Serpent. Some by the Hebrew Tzimaon understand a desart and dry place.

Discerning of Spirits

DISCERNING of Spirits. This is one of the gifts of God, mentioned by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xii. 10. It consists in discerning among those who say they are inspired by God, whether they are animated or inspired by a good or evil spirit; whether they are true or false Prophets. This gift was of very great importance both in the Old Testament, wherein we find that false Prophets often rose up, and seducers who deceived the people; and in the New, in the primitive ages of the Church, when supernatural gifts were common; when the Messenger of Satan was sometimes transformed into an Angel of light, and false Apostles under the outward appearance of sheep, concealed the sentiments of ravening wolves. Wherefore St. John cautioned Believers, saying, Believe [John iv. 1.] not every Spirit, but try the Spirits, whether they be of God. See in Deuteronomy xviii. 20, 21, 22. the marks which are given by God to distinguish true from false Prophets.

Disciple

DISCIPLE. Every one knows the proper signification of this word. The word Disciple absolutely taken, signifies, in the New Testament, a Believer, a Christian, a Scholar, a Follower of Jesus Christ or his [Acts vi. 1.] Apostles. For example, The number of the Disciples being multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, &c. And in another place, There was a certain [Acts ix. 10.] Disciple at Damascus named Ananias: and Paul breathing out slaughter against the Disciples of the Lord, that is to say, against the Christians.

The name of Disciple is often set down for that of Apostle; particularly in the [Matth. v. 1. viii. 23, 25, &c. Luke vi. 13. Matth. x. 2, &c.] Gospel; but in other places the Apostles are distinguished from Disciples. The Apostles were chosen particularly by Jesus Christ out of the number of his Disciples, to be the Stewards of his most secret Mysteries, and the principal Ministers of his Religion. They were twelve in number.

But the Disciples, who followed our Saviour from the beginning, and are called simply Disciples, were seventy-two in number. [Luke x. 1—17.] He appointed them by their names, and sent them two and two before his face into every city, and place, whither he himself would come, and said unto them, The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers into his harvest. Go your ways; behold I send you forth as lambs among wolves: carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes: and salute no man by the way; and into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house; and if the Son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon it: if not, it shall turn to you again. And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give; for the labourer is worthy of his hire. And into whatsoever city ye enter, heal the sick that are therein, and say unto them, the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you: and if they receive you not, wipe off the dust against them which cleaveth on you.... He that heareth you, heareth me; and he that despiseth you, despiseth me. I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy; and nothing shall by any means hurt you. Notwithstanding in this rejoice not, that the Spirits are subject unto you: but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven, &c. These are the Precepts and Admonitions which our Saviour gave his seventy Disciples, when he sent them to preach in the Cities of Judæa[1]. We find, particularly among the Greeks, lists of the seventy Disciples, but they are neither ancient nor certain. There was not as yet any Catalogue [Euseb. l. 1. c. 12. Hist. Eccl. Vide Euseb. l. 1. c. 12. Apud Euseb. l. 3. c. 39. Hist. Eccl. Vide Epiphan. de Christo, c. 4. Rom. xvi. 7. Acts xxi. 16.] of them in Eusebius's time, that is to say, in the fourth Age. The Latins keep the Festival of the seventy Disciples (for they are reckoneda seventy or seventy-two indifferently) on the 15th of July; and the Greeks on the 4th of January.

In the number of the seventy Disciples we may reckon St. Barnabas, Sosthenes, St. Matthias, Joseph Barsabas, Thaddæus the brother of St. Thomas, the seven Deacons, viz. Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Parmenas, Nicanor, Timon, Nicholas of Antioch, St. Mark, St. Luke, Andronicus and Junius, St. Paul's relations; Judas surnamed Barsabas, Silas, Simon the Black, Luke of Cyrene, Manahem, Mnason, who is called the old Disciple; Ananias, who baptized St. Paul; Aristion and John, whom Papias speaks of.

Diseases

DISEASES. There are many Diseases mentioned in Scripture. The Hebrews attributed the greatest part of their Diseases to the operation of the Devil. Concerning the Diseases of the Scripture, the Reader may consult Francis Vallesius, de Sacra Philosophia; Thomas Bartolinus, de Morbis Biblicis; William Adenus on the same subject; Christianus Warlizius, in his Treatise intitled, De morbis Biblicis, è prava diæta, animique affectibus resultantibus; lastly, our Dissertation on the Physick of the Hebrews, printed before our Comment upon the book of Ecclesiasticus. See hereafter the Article PHYSICIANS.

Diseases and Death are the consequences and effects of sin; this is the idea which we have of them from Scripture. The ancient ancient Hebrews, who were very little versed in the study of natural Philosophy, and not much accustomed to recur to physical Causes, and consult Physicians, when they were sick, imputed them generally to evil Spirits, the executioners of divine vengeance. If their Infirmities appeared to be beyond what was usual, and the cause of them were not known to them, they did not fail to say, that it was a blow from the avenging hand of God; to him the wisest and most religious had recourse for [2 Chron. xvi. 12.] cure; and King Asa is blamed for placing his confidence in Physicians, when he had a very painful fit of the gout in his feet, and not applying himself to the Lord: In his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians. Job's friends immediately ascribed all the distempers with which this holy man was afflicted, to God's justice. Leprosies, which were so common among the Jews, were treated as Diseases sent by God; the Priests were the persons who judged of the nature and qualities of this evil, shut up the diseased, and declared that they were healed, or had their leprosy upon them; and after their recovery, they offered sacrifices as it were to expiate for their faults. Miriam, Gehazi, and King Uzziah were smitten suddenly with a leprosy; the first as a punishment for her detracting discourses; the second for his avarice; and the third for his presumption. The whole people of Israel were afflicted with the plague, in order to punish David's vanity, and many examples of the like nature, fomented and increased the people's prepossession in this particular.

In the Gospel, the cause of the generality of Diseases is attributed to the Devil. It is said there, that the Devil had bound the woman, who had been bent down for eighteeen years: [Luke xiii. 16.] Ought not this woman, who is a daughter of Abraham, whom Satan hath bound, lo these eighteen years, to be loosed from this bond on the sabbath-day? The same person is mentioned as having a spirit of Infirmity. Mulier [Luke xiii. 11.] quæ habebat spiritum Infirmitatis. We are told there of a dumb Devil, and of another that could scarce speak; that is to say, which caused these Infirmities in those who were possessed by them: and whenever Jesus Christ or his Apostles had a mind to restore these indispos'd Persons to their health, they began with driving out the Devils, for the cure immediately followed.

In other cases our Saviour began with forgiving their sins, and then proceeded to cure them: Datur nobis intelligentia propter peccata plerasque evenire corporum debilitates; & idcirco forsan dimittuntur prius peccata, ut causis debilitatis ablatis, sanitas restituatur, [Hieron. in Matth. ix. 4.] says St. Jerom. St. Paul delivers up the incestuous Corinthian unto Satan for the destruction of his flesh, [1 Cor. v. 5. 1 Cor. xi. 30.] ad interitum carnis, that the evil Spirit might torment him, and afflict him with Diseases. The same Apostle attributes the Death and Diseases of many to their Communicating unworthily: For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep. The same Apostle ascribes the Infirmities wherewith he was afflicted to an evil Angel: Datus est mihi [2 Cor. xii. 7.] stimulus carnis meæ, Angelus Sathanæ qui me colaphizet. It was an Angel of Death that destroy'd the first-born of the Egyptians; it was the destroying Angel which made such havock of Sennacherib's army; it was the avenging Angel that drew his sword against the people, and smote them with the Pestilence, as a punishment for David's sin. Saul fell into a fit of deep melancholy, and it is said that the Devil laid hold of him. No sooner had Abimelech, King of Gerar, taken Sarah forcibly away, the wife of Abraham, but he was threatned with death, (Gen. xx. 3, 4.) Er and Onan, the sons of Judah, were carried off by unknown Diseases, for having committed actions of an infamous and detestable nature. The Philistins were smitten with an ignominious Disease, for not treating the Ark with all the respect which it deserved. We should never have done, if we would collect all the examples of Diseases sent by God in the way of punishment for sins that have been committed.

[Plin. l. 28. c. 1. Ægypti peculiare hoc malum Elephantiasis.] The DISEASES of Egypt, from which God promised to defend his People. And the Lord will take away from thee all sickness, and will put none of the evil Diseases of Egypt (which thou knowest) upon thee. These Diseases are either the Plagues with which God afflicted Egypt before the departure of the Israelites, or the Diseases which were most common in the Country, such as Blindness, Ulcers in the Legs, Consumptions, and the Leprosy, called Elephantiasis, which was peculiar to this Country. Travellers speak of these distempers. See the Sieur de Joinville, in his Life of St. Lewis. Thevenot, Voyage d'Orient. l. 2. c. 8. Juvenal. Satyr. 13. v. 92, &c.

Dispersion

[1 Pet. i. 1. and Jam. i. 1.] DISPERSION. St. Peter and St. James wrote to the Jews of the Dispersion, that is to say, who were dispersed in the different Countries of the East, such as Pontus, Galatia, Bithynia, Asia, and Cappadocia; and St. James in a manner still more uncertain, To the twelve Tribes which are scattered abroad. Not that all the Tribes were then dispersed into the different parts of the world: we know that Judæa was as yet filled with Jews; for these two Epistles were wrote before the war between the Jews and Romans: but after the several Captivities caused by the Kings of Assyria and Chaldea, there was always, particularly in the East, an infinite number of Jews of all the Tribes dispersed here and there. This was called The Dispersion. For example; Nehemiah prays to God to collect together the Dispersion of his people, Congrega Dispersionem nostram. And the Jews said of Jesus Christ, who threatned to leave them: Will he [John vii. 35.] go unto the dispersed among the Gentiles? See the Articles CAPTIVITY and TRANSPLANTING.

DISSOLUTION, to Dissolve, Dissolutio, Dissolvo. These Latin words are differently understood. St. Paul desires to be disengaged from the fetters of the body, Cupio [Philip. i. 23.] dissolvi & esse cum Christo. Paralyticks, and they who are seized with any great fright, have no strength, and can make no resistance; they cannot support themselves, [1 Macc. ix. 55. Ezek. vii. 17. and xxix. 7.] their Nerves are relaxed. Dissolutus est Paralysi. And Ezekiel, Omnes manus dissolventur. And again, Dissolvisti omnes renes eorum. And Ecclus. xxv. 32. Manus debiles & genua dissoluta; and Joshua, v. 1. Dissolutum est cor eorum: their heart failed them. [Isa. viii. 22.] Isaiah makes use of dissolutio as synonymous to angustia. And Nahum speaks of the Dissolution, [Nahum ii. 10. Prov. xviii. 9.] the weakness of his knees. In the Proverbs, mollis and dissolutus denote a man who is remiss and lazy at his work. And in another place, xix. 15. Anima dissoluta esuriet: The slothful, idle soul shall languish with hunger. And Dissolvere templum Dei, or Dissolvere opus, in the New Testament signifies to ruin, to destroy it.

To Divide

TO DIVIDE, is taken for to cut, to tear in pieces, to cut in two. The punishment of sawing and cutting the body asunder in the middle, was common enough among the ancients. We shall say something of it under the Article PUNISHMENTS. St. [Matth. xxiv. 51.] Matthew alludes to it in this passage; And shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites. Dividet eum partemque ejus ponet cum hypocritis. Divination

DIVINATION. The eastern people, and particularly the Israelites, were always very fond of Divinations, Magick, and the curious Arts of interpreting dreams, and enquiring by unlawful methods into the knowledge of what was to come: this was a consequence of their timorous and superstitious Genius. When Moses publish-ed the law of God, this evil was and had been for some time very common in Egypt, and the neighbouring Countries; and to cure the Israelites of their inclination to consult diviners, fortunetellers, augurs, and interpreters of dreams, &c. he promised them that the spirit of [3] Prophecy should not depart from among them, and forbad them under very severe penalties to consult diviners, astrologers, and other persons of this [Levit. xx. 27.] kind. He commanded them to be stoned who pretended to have a familiar Spirit, or the [Deut. xviii. 9, 10, 15.] Spirit of Divination. When thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God shall give thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations. There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer.... God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me, and to him ye shall hearken. The writings of the Prophets are full of Invectives against the Israelites, who consulted Diviners, and against the false Prophets, who set up to foretell things future, and by this means seduced the people.

There were several sorts of Divinations, by water, fire, earth, air, by the flight of birds, and their singing; by lots, dreams, and by the wand. We have said something of Divination by water in the Article of Joseph's Cup. The observations of Thunder, Lightning, and Meteors, may be referr'd to Divinations by Fire, or Pyromancy; as also the operations of the Magi about the Fire which they kept up in their Inclosures or Temples, called Pyratheia. Into these, says Strabo, l. 15. they enter every day, and there continue for an hour practising enchantments, having a bundle of small rods in their hands, and wearing bonnets or tiara's of hair, so large that they fall down to their very lips.

Divination by the Earth

DIVINATION by the Earth, or Geomancy, is common among the Persians. They impute the invention of it to Edris, who is the same with the Patriarch Enoch, or the Prophet Daniel. It consists in making several Points upon a Table prepared for this purpose, [Bibl. Orient. p. 709.] which they call Raml. These Points disposed in a certain number on many unequal lines, are likewise described with a pen on paper; he who takes upon him to divine by the help of this Art, is called Rummal. He derives his pretended knowledge of futurity from the combination of these Points and Lines. This alone shews sufficiently the vanity of this sort of Divination.

Divorce

[αμῆρχ νομηχÄברות דערות. Deut. xxiv. 1, 2, 3, &c.] DIVORCE, or Repudiation. Moses tolerated Divorces for very good reasons. Here are his words: " When a man hath " taken a wife and married her, and it " come to pass that she find no favour in " his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her; then let him write her " a bill of divorcement, and give it in her " hand, and send her out of his house. " And when she is departed out of his house, " she may go and be another man's wife. " And if the latter husband hate her, and " write her a bill of divorcement, and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth her out " of his house; or if the latter husband die, " which took her to be his wife, her former husband which sent her away, may " not take her again to be his wife, after " that she is defiled, for that is abomination before the Lord." The Commentators are very much divided concerning the sense of these words, because he hath found some uncleanness, or as the Hebrew has it, matter of nakedness in her.

The school of Shammah, who lived a little [Vide Selden. Uxor Hebraïca, l. 3. c. 18. & 20.] before our Saviour, taught that a man could not lawfully be divorced from his wife, unless he had found her guilty of some action which was really infamous, and contrary to the rules of virtue. But the school of Hillel, who was Shammah's disciple, taught on the contrary, that the least reasons were sufficient to authorize a man to put away his wife: for example, if she did not dress his meat well, or if he found any other woman whom he liked better. He translated Moses's text thus, If he hath found any thing in her, or an uncleanness. [* Steph. Δῖον πόλις κοιλῆς Συρίας, κτίσμα Ἀλεξάνδρου.] Akiba, another famous Rabbin, was still more indulgent than Hillel; for he affirmed, that it was sufficient cause for a man to put away his wife, if she were not agreeable to her husband. After this manner he explained the text of Moses; If she find no favour in his eyes; this was the first reason: the second was, If he find any uncleanness in [Joseph. Antiq. l. 4. c. 8. & lib. de vita sua ad finem. Philo de Special Legib. præcept. 6. & 7. Leo Mutin. cerem. Jud. parte 4. c. 6. Matth. v. 31, 32. Origen. Homil. 7. in Matth.] her. Josephus and Philo shew sufficiently, that in their time the Jews believed Divorce to be lawful upon very trivial causes. The Hebrews at this day hold the same principles. Although a woman, says Leo of Modena, were to give her husband no occasion of complaint, he may put her away, if he be ever so little displeased with her.

But our Lord Jesus Christ has limited the permission of divorce to the single case of Adultery. It hath been said by them of old time, says he, whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement. But I say unto you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery; and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced, committeth adultery. Words which have been interpreted many different ways. Some by the word Adultery or Fornication have understood all sorts of great crimes, such as Idolatry, Infidelity, &c. which are sometimes mentioned in Scripture under the name of Fornication. Others have determined the meaning of this word to the single crime of real Adultery and Infidelity.

Origen is of opinion, that the Son of God named Fornication, not as the only case wherein Divorce is lawful, but as an example of those other crimes and instances, wherein this power may be used. But almost all the other Fathers and Interpreters have taken our Saviour's words in their strict and rigorous meaning, and the practice of the Church, which is the truest Expositor of the Law, has always been agreeable to this last opinion. As to the crime of Infidelity, see St. Paul's explanation [1 Cor. vii. 12, 13, 15.] of it: As to what relates to those who are converted to Christianity, not the Lord, but I speak, If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put her away. And the woman which hath an husband, that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him. But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart; a brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases.

Another difficulty formed upon the subject of Divorce, consists in knowing whether persons separated by divorce, are at full liberty to marry again. The Law of Moses did not forbid the parties separated to marry again; and the Laws of the first Christian Emperors expressly did allow it.

Ter- [Tertull. l. 4. contra Marcion. & lib. de Monogamia, &c.] Tertullian believes the bond of marriage to be dissolved by Adultery, and that the woman, who is put away, may marry another man. Origen says, that in his time some Bishops [Origen. Homil. 7. in Matth.] gave such permission to those who were under their government. And several Councils, particularly of the Gallican Churches[1], are cited, which suppose or authorize the same Custom.

THE FORMALITIE OF THE JEWS IN GIVING BILLS OF DIVORCE.2d Gath. E

But though these things have sometimes been practised, they have been almost always [Concil. Eliber. c. 8, 9. Canon. Apost. 48.] condemned. The Council of Elvira owns this abuse, disapproves and censures it. The Canons ascribed to the Apostles expressly enjoin, that no man who has put away his wife, shall marry another in the former wife's life-time. The several Popes Siricius, Innocent I. Leo, Stephen, and Zachary, in their decretal Epistles do plainly proscribe these marriages, and treat them as adulteries. Lastly, the Latin Church hath always taught, that the bond of marriage still subsists, notwithstanding the most legal divorce; and the Council of [Concil. Trident. Sess. 24. can. 7.] Trent hath pronounced an Anathema against all those, who shall dare to say, that the Church errs, when it teaches, that the bond of marriage is not dissolved by the adultery of either party ; that the party which is innocent is obliged to live single, during the life of the other ; and that he or she who marries, after being divorced, committeth adultery. See our Dissertation on Divorces, prefixed to our Comment upon Deuteronomy.

There is all the probability imaginable, that Divorces were in use among the Hebrews before the Law, since the Son of God [Matth.xix. 8. Mark x. 5.] says, that Moses permitted them by reason only of the hardness of their hearts; that is to say, because they were accustomed to this abuse, and to hinder or prevent greater evils. In effect, we see that Abraham dismissed Hagar on the score of her insolence, and at the request of Sarah. Onkelos, and the Jerusalem Paraphrast, and several of the Rabbins, believe the cause of Aaron and [Numb. xii. 1.] Miriam's murmuring against Moses, to have been founded on Moses's divorcing Zipporah, as some say; or, as others, Tharbis, daughter to the King of Ethiopia. Others are of opinion, that their murmuring proceeded not from his having divorced her, but from his receiving her again after having been once divorced from her. But the truth is, that he only sent her back to Jethro, his father-in-law, for a time, and without any design of separating altogether from her. We find no example of a Divorce in all the Books of the Old Testament written since the time of Moses. The Jews them [Judges xv. 2. Judges xix. 2, 3. Matth. xiv. 3. Mark vi. 17. Joseph. Antiq. l. 15. c. 11. Joseph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 7. Joseph. lib. de vita sua.] selves tell us, that David was not permitted to divorce any of his wives, to marry Abishag; and that he was obliged to take her under the title of concubine, or wife of the second rank, because he had already eighteen wives, the number which by custom was allowed. The same Prince kept as long as he lived all those of his wives who had been publickly dishonoured by his son Absalom. He did not dismiss, but was content with shutting them up till their death. It is certain however, that they made too frequent use of that indulgence which the law allowed them, and that they separated from their wives upon too trifling occasions. Sampson's father-in-law understood his daughter to have been divorced by him, since he gave her to another. The Levite's young wife, who was dishonoured at Gibeah, had forsaken her husband, and never would have returned, if he had not gone in pursuit of her. Solomon speaks of a libertine woman, who had forsaken her husband the director of her youth, and forgotten the covenant of her God. The [Prov. ii. 16, 17. Mal. ii. 15. Micah ii. 9.] Prophet Malachi commends Abraham for not divorcing Sarah though she was barren; and inveighs against the Jews, who had abandoned and despised the wife of their youth; and Micah reproaches them with having cast out their wives from their pleasant houses, and taken away the glory of God from their children for ever. Ezra and Nehemiah obliged a great number of the Jews to dismiss the foreign women whom they had married, contrary to the disposition of the Law; and Solomon declares, That he who divorces [Ezra xi. Nehem. xiii. 23, 24—26, 30. Prov.xviii. 22.] an honest woman, deprives himself of an happiness; and that he who retains an adulteress, is a fool and a mad man[2]. All which proves that Divorces were not so uncommon at that time.

Josephus the Historian was of opinion, that the Laws of Moses did not permit women to divorce themselves from their husbands, and prohibited those who had so separated themselves from marrying others, without first receiving letters of divorce from their former husband. This Author believes Salome, sister to Herod the Great, to be the first who took the liberty to put away her husband. Herodias, who is mentioned in the Gospel, did likewise dismiss her husband, as is infer'd from the relation of Josephus. This Author tells us, that his own wife forsook him some little time after he had been made free by the Emperor Vespasian. The three sisters of young Agrippa, who was first King of Chalcis, and afterwards of the Trachonitis and Batanæa, used used the privilege of divorcing their husbands. Berenice the Eldest put away Polemo King of Pontus, some time after she had married him. Mariamne, her sister, quitted Archelaus her first husband, to marry Demetrius, Alabarch of the Jews in Alexandria. Lastly, Drusilla the Third forsook Aziz King of Emesa, to marry Felix [Joseph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 15.] Governour of Judæa.

It has been a question in the Christian Church, whether women have the same privilege as men in this point, and are permitted to put away their husbands in cases of adultery. St. Basil in his Canonical Letter [Basilii Ep. ad Amphiloc. c. 9.] to Amphilochus owns, that the Law which permits men to put away their wives for adultery, is observed religiously; but that custom required the women to continue with their husbands, tho' they were guilty of the same disorder. The Greeks, who have explained [In Canonem 8. Apostolorum.] the Apostolical Canons, pretend it is a custom which has always been observed amongst them, that the wife cannot leave her husband for adultery. We have before taken notice, that Josephus the Historian did not believe the women to have any liberty from the law of Moses to forsake their Husbands. In consequence of these principles, some of the primitive Christians[3] allowed a man, who had put away his wife, to marry another, but they did not grant the woman the same privilege.

But others[4] indulge the same liberty to both the man and woman of divorcing, and even of proceeding to a second marriage. St. Justin the Martyr speaks of a Christian woman who sent letters of divorce to her husband, who lived in a disorderly manner. St. Jerom mentions Fabiola a Roman Lady, who forsook her Husband on the score of his irregularities. The Greeks still at this day have a custom of divorcing in the particular case intimated in the Gospel, and even after [Matth. v. 32.] this to marry, as if the bond of marriage were dissolved by adultery; and the Fathers of the Trentin Council, upon the remonstrances [Concil. Trident. Can. 6. Vide Fra. Paolo Hist. Concil. Trident. l. 8.] of the Venetians, who had many Greeks in their dominions that observed this custom, condescended to prepare their Canon in such a manner, as, without approving marriages of this kind, salves the doctrine of the Latin Church, which follows a contrary usage. Anathema to all such as dare affirm, that the Church errs in teaching according to the doctrine of the Gospel, and the Apostles, that the band of marriage is not dissolved by the adultery of either of the parties; and that each of the parties, even the innocent one, is obliged to continue single during the life of the other, and that he or she who marries after a divorce, committeth adultery.

[Prov. xviii. 22. Concil. Neocæsar. c. 8.] The wise man seems to make a precept of Divorce in cases of adultery, saying, He who lives with an adulteress, that is to say, who does not procure to be divorced from her, is a fool and a mad man. The Council of Neocæsarea enjoins a Priest to put away his wife, if she is guilty of adultery after her husband's ordination. St. Austin seems to [Aug. l. 2. Retract. c. 19.] have understood the same passage in the Proverbs, as containing a precept. St. Jerom explains himself much in the same sense, in his Comment on St. Matthew. But St. Paul in advising the wife to be reconciled [2 Cor. vii. 10, 11.] to her husband, shews sufficiently what the intention of our Saviour was, and the generality of the Fathers have always dissuaded divorcing, and recommended reconciliation.

Among the Jews, Divorces have become much more uncommon, since their dispersion among nations, which do not permit the dissolution of marriages upon light occasions: [Leon. de Modene, partie 4. c. 4, & 6. See likewise Basnage Hist. des Juifs, l. 7. c. 22. art. 20.] nevertheless, there are still at this day some Divorces to be observed among the Jews and their wives. A jealous husband at first requires his wife to forbear seeing the man of whom he is suspicious; if after this there is a current report that she continues to converse with her gallant, and they are found together, particularly in the fact, then the Rabbins enjoin him to divorce her for ever, whether he is willing or not: notwithstanding, the woman is at liberty to marry again, as she shall think proper; provided it be not with the person who gave occasion for the Divorce.

A young girl under ten years of age, whether she has or has not a father, after she has married a husband, if this husband be not agreeable to her, may be unmarried, till she comes to the age of twelve years and a day, at which time she is reputed a woman. It is sufficient for her to declare, that she is not willing to have such an one for her husband, and takes two witnesses of this declaration, who set it down in writing; after which, she may marry whom she pleases.

To prevent the abuses which the Jewish men might make of this liberty of divorcing, the Rabbins have appointed many formalities to be observed, which waste much time, and give the married couple leisure to be reconciled, and live well together. Where there is no hope of accommodation, a woman, a deaf man, or a Notary draws the letter of divorce. He writes it in the presence of one or more Rabbins; it must be written on vellum ruled, containing only twelve lines in square letters, and abundance of little trifling particulars are to be observed, as well in the characters as in the manner of writing, and in the names and surnames of the husband and wife. Besides, he who pens it, the Rabbins and the witnesses ought not to be relations, either to the husband or wife, or to one another.

The substance of this Letter, which they call Gheth, is as follows: On such a day, month, year, and place, I N. divorce you voluntarily, put you away, restore you to your liberty, even you N. who were heretofore my wife, and I permit you to marry whom you please. The Letter being written, the Rabbi examines the husband closely, in order to learn whether he is voluntarily inclined to do what he has done. They endeavour to have at least ten persons present at the action, without reckoning the two witnesses who sign, and two other witnesses to the date. After which, the Rabbi commands the wife to open her hands, and bring them close to one another, in order to receive this deed, left it fall to the ground; and after having examined her over again, the husband gives her the parchment, and says to her, Here is thy divorce, I put thee away from me, and leave thee at liberty to marry whom thou pleasest. The wife takes it, and gives it to the Rabbi, who reads it once more, after which she is free. Many little circumstances are omitted, which were invented only to make this action more difficult. Afterwards the Rabbi cautions the Woman against marrying within three months, lest she should be with child. From this time the man and woman are not to continue alone in any place, and each of them may marry again.

DOEG, an Edomite[1], Saul's chief herdsman, being at Nob, at the time when David came thither, to desire a supply of provision from Abimelech, he gave notice of it to Saul, and was the cause of this Prince's sending for all the Priests, who were at Nob, and of the orders which he gave to have them all massacred in his presence, as accomplices with David in the pretended conspiracy, with [1 Sam. xxii. 16, 17, 18.] which Saul charged him. When the Priests, to the number of fourscore and five, were brought before the King, and he commanded his people to dispatch them, none of them were so hardy as to lay their hands upon persons so particularly dedicated to God's Service. But Doëg having received this order, executed it without scruple or reluctancy.

Dog

DOG, a domestick animal, with which we are very well acquainted. By the law it was declared unclean, and was very much despised among the Jews. The most offensive expression they could use, was to compare a man to a dead Dog. David, in order to make Saul sensible that the unjust persecution which he carried on against him, did [1 Sam. xxiv. 14.] himself no honour, said to him, After whom is the King of Israel come out? after whom dost thou pursue? after a dead Dog? And when David did Mephibosheth the honour [2 Sam. ix. 8.] to receive him at his Table, Mephibosheth making his acknowledgements, used this expression, What is thy servant, that thou [Job xxx. 1.] shouldst look upon such a dead Dog as I am. Job says, that in his misfortunes the young people had the impudence to insult him, whose fathers he would have disdained to have set with the Dogs that kept his flocks.

The name of Dog is sometimes put for one, who has lost all modesty[1], for one who prostitutes himself by committing any abominable action; for in this manner several understand the injunction delivered by Moses of not offering in the Tabernacle of the Lord the hire of a whore, or the price of a Dog; and what is said in Ecclesiasticus, What fellowship is there between a pure and sanctified person[2], and a dog? Jesus Christ in the Revelations, excludes dogs, sorcerers, whoremongers, murderers, and idolaters, &c. from his House. St. Paul calls the false Apostles Dogs, by reason of their impudence, and greedy love of sordid gain. Lastly, Solomon and St. Peter compare sinners, who continually relapse into their sins, to Dogs returning to their vomit. David compares his enemies to Dogs, that were continally barking at him with their slanders, and biting him with their persecutions and evil treatment.

I do not observe that the Hebrews made use of hounds. Any sort of game killed by Dogs, would have been unclean, and no one could have made any use of it. I do not find any mention of Dogs, when hunting is spoke of, nor of hunting when any thing is said of Dogs. In the East they rather make use of Lions, or some other such like animals, which a man on horse-back may carry either before or behind him, and as soon as he perceives the game, he takes away a sort of blind, which the creature has upon his eyes, and pointing out his prey to him, he springs upon it with very great agility. Notwithstanding, I would not absolutely deny, but that they might make use of Dogs, provided they prevented them from killing the creatures, which they were pursuing : for a Dog is not unclean as long as he is alive.

The Arabians as well as Jews hold [Darvieux Mœurs des Arabes, c. 8. p. 182.] Dogs to be unclean ; they speak kindly to them, and feed them well, but do not touch them : particularly if they should happen to be wet, they would not suffer them to come near them, lest a drop of water should fall upon their clothes, which would incapacitate them to say their prayers. But they who love sports, do notwithstanding keep Gray-hounds and setting Dogs : alledging, that these Dogs being always tied up, and eating nothing that is unclean, are exempted from the common rule. The same they plead for little Lap-Dogs ; no one among them does any harm to Dogs, and if any person were to kill one of them deliberately and with design, he would be punished in a judicial way.

Domitian

DOMITIAN. The Emperor Domitian, son of Vespasian, brother to Titus, and the last of the twelve Cæsars, succeeded his brother Titus in the Year of Jesus Christ 81, on the 13th of September, and was in great disesteem for his debaucheries and cruelty. He persecuted the Church, and, as is said, put to death Pope St. Cletus. The Apostle St. John, being at Rome, was put [Tertull. præscrip. c. 36. Hieronym. de Scriptorib.] into a Caldron of boiling oil near the Latin Gate, but suffered no harm by it. He was afterwards banished into the Isle of Patmos, which is one of the Sporades in the Archipelago. In the same persecution, Domitian knowing that there were some Christians of the race of David, and related to Jesus Christ, was apprehensive of their undertaking something against the state ; the persons whom he was thus afraid of, were grandsons to Judas, brother to our Lord after the flesh, and in all probability [Hegesip. apud Euseb. l. 3. c. 20. Hist. Eccles.] son to Joseph by a former wife. They were carried to Domitian by a Soldier ; the Emperor asked them if they were of David's family? they confessed they were. He farther enquired of them, how much land they were possessed of, and what money they had? they answered, that for themselves, who were two in number, they had to the value of nine thousand deniers, not in money, but in lands, containing only nine and thirty plethra, which make about seven acres, and four perches ; that for these they paid taxes, cultivated them themselves and subsisted on them ; at the same time they shewed their hands, which were all callous, and their bodies which were hardned with labour.

The Emperor asked them, what the Kingdom of Jesus Christ was, when, and in what place he was to reign ? They answered, that his kingdom was not earthly and of this world, but heavenly and angelical, that it would appear at the end of the world, when he would come with majesty to judge both the quick and dead. Domitian despising them as vile persons, sent them away without doing any harm to them. He moreover gave orders to put a stop to the persecution, at least in Judæa. These two Confessors governed afterwards the Churches, and lived to the time of Trajan. Domitian died in the year of Jesus Christ 96, on the 17th of September, in the fifteenth of his Reign.

Donec

[Matth. i. 25. 1 Tim. iv. 13. Ps. cx. 1.] DONEC, a Latin particle, which generally signifies until, as long as, and shews that such a thing ends within a certain time, and that it lasts but till such a time. But in Scripture Donec[1] is not always construed in this manner : it often signifies simply what is doing, or shall be doing till such a time, without our being able to conclude from thence, that it shall not be doing any longer. For example, St. Matthew says, that Joseph knew not the blessed Virgin till she had brought forth her first-born. Et non cognoscebat eam, donec peperit filium suum primo-genitum. We cannot from hence conclude, that he knew her after the birth of our Saviour. In like manner St. Paul says to Timothy, Till I come, give attendance to reading. Will any one understand by this that he was to employ himself no more this way after the arrival of St. Paul ? And the Psalmist speaking in the person of the Father, says to the Messiah, Set thou on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool. Is this saying, that then Jesus Christ shall cease to reign, and to sit at the right hand of his Father ? See Gen. xxviii. 15. and 1 Sam. xv. 35. Isai. xlvi.6. Matth. xii. 20. and Psalm cxxii. 13.

It is often placed in Phœnicia. Antiochus Sidetes besieged Tryphon in it, the Usurper of the [1 Macc. xv. 11.] kingdom of Syria.

Some

Some young people of Dor having of [Joseph. Antiq. l.xix. c. 5, 6.] their own motion, and without the consent of the Magistrates, placed a statue of the Emperor in the Synagogue belonging to the Jews in this Town; King Agrippa, upon intelligence of what was done, immediately went to Petronius, Governour of the Province, and complained of the attempt made by those of Dor, laid before him the Emperor's Ordinances, whereby the Jews were allowed not only the free exercise of their Religion and Laws throughout the whole extent of the Empire, but likewise had a grant of the privilege of freedom in Towns and Corporations; and withal desired him to put a stop to the insolence of those of Dor, and oblige them to remove the Emperor's statue from the place where they had set it up. Petronius hereupon wrote a Letter in very strong terms to the Magistrates of this City, commanding them to send to him the authors of this innovation, and to take care that nothing of the like nature should happen for the future: that they should not seek any occasion of quarrelling with the Jews, and should leave every one at liberty to worship God in his own way.

Dositheus (III)

III. DOSITHEUS. Dositheans. The Jews pretend, that Dosthai, or Dositheus the son of Janneus, lived in the reign of Sennacherib, and was one of the Priests sent by this Prince to instruct the colony of Cuthæans, planted by him [2 Kings xvii. 24, 25, 27, &c. Epiphan. de Hæres. l. 1. Photius Cod. 130.] in Samaria, and devoured by lions. St. Epiphanius will have it, that the Dositheans were a fourth branch of Hereticks at Samaria; but he does not say enough of them to inform us, who they were, and whence these Hereticks came. Photius relates, that after our Saviour's conversation with the Samaritan woman, near the well of Sichem, there arose two considerable parties in Samaria, one whereof maintained Jesus Christ to be the true Messiah foretold [Deut. xviii. 15, 18.] by Moses, in these words; God will raise you up a Prophet like unto me: the other maintained, that Dositheus, who was born at Samaria, and was contemporary with Simon the Magician, was the true Messiah.

[Hegesip. apud Eus. Hist. Eccl. l. 4. c.22. Clem. Constit. Apost. l. 6. c.8.] Hegesippus, who lived in the second Century, places Dositheus and his Followers at the beginning of Christianity, with those of Simon the Magician. There is a Treatise against Heresies ascribed to St. Hippolytus which began with the Dositheans. Origen sets Jesus Christ, whose Gospel was preached over the whole earth, in opposition to Simon and Dositheus, whose Sects were already quite destroy'd, tho' they had boasted of performing Miracles, and Dositheus would have passed for the Messiah, when our Saviour appeared. The Author of the Apostolical Constitutions asserts, that Cleobius and Simon the Magician were Disciples to Dositheus, but that they drove him away, and deprived him of the first Rank, which he attempted to assume among them.

This is all very remote from what the Jews tell us, who make Dositheus to live in Sennacherib's time; and from St. Jerom's opinion, who declares him to be the head of the Sadduces. It seems to be out of all question, that this man was living in the time of Simon the Magician, and that his Party was already formed in the Country of Samaria, when our Saviour appeared. We are assured, that he was by birth a Jew, and that being desirous to distinguish himself by some new explanations among the Doctors of his nation, who studied the mystical Interpretations of the Law, and the Traditions of their Elders, and affecting the first Rank among these Rabbins, he was rejected by them; and that out of pique he embraced the Party of the Samaritans, among whom he formed a Sect[1] which observed Circumcision like the Jews, and the Sabbath with so much rigour, that for the four and twenty hours of this festival's continuance, they remained without stirring in the least from the particular place where they were when the sabbath began; they likewise fasted very rigidly, and denied themselves every thing that had life in it.

Some among them kept their virginity, and others abstained from the use of marriage when their wives were with child; or, as others say, they condemned second marriages. They received only the five Books of Moses, and held Dositheus their Head, to be the Messiah[2]. He himself applied the prophecies in the Pentateuch which we explain of Jesus Christ, as belonging to himself. The Samaritans who were opposite to Dositheus, made an application of them to Joshua, Moses's successor. It is affirmed that Dositheus disappeared, and was found in a cave, gnawed with worms, and full of flies. Some have attributed his retreat to the foolish vanity of desiring to be thought immortal, as if he had been taken away from the conversation of men, and transported alive into heaven. But the discovery of his body manifested his imposture; nevertheless, without undeceiving his disciples, who gave out that he had retired in order to pursue the study of philosophy with more liberty and leisure. There were still some of his disciples remaining in the sixth Century in Egypt.

Dositheus (IV)

IV. DOSITHEUS, lived in the time of Jesus Christ, was a contemporary and associate [Hegesip. apud Euseb. l. 4. c. 12. Hist. Eccles.] with Simon the Magician. He had a mind to be the principal of the Jewish Doctors, but finding that he was not able to succeed in this design, he threw himself into the party of the Samaritans, and among them formed a sect which bore his [Epiphan. We do not enlarge upon this Dositheus or his sect, because there is no mention of it in the Bible.

Double

DOUBLE, Duplex. This word has many significations in the Scripture. Double [Gen. xliii. 12. Exod. xvi. 22, 29.] the money, Pecuniam duplicem. Double the food; Cibos duplices. Twice as much money and food.

A double Garment, vestis duplex, may mean a lined Habit, such as the High-Priest's Pectoral was. Quadrangulum & duplex: or a compleat Habit, or suit of [Judg. xvii. 10. 2 Kings v. 22.] clothes, a cloak, and tunick. Vestem duplicem, or vestes mutatorias duplices.

Double sometimes signifies multitude: succepit de manu Domini duplicia pro omnibus peccatis suis. He was doubly punished, Jerem. xvii. 18. Duplici contritione contere illos: Destroy them with a double destruction; punish them severely. Reddam duplices iniquitates & peccata eorum: I will doubly punish their iniquities, or I will inflict Penalties upon them proportioned to their Iniquities. Duplicia mala invenies: Thou shalt receive twice as much evil, chastisements double to thy sins.

Double heart, double tongue, double mind are opposite to a simple, honest, sincere heart; a true tongue, a just, faithful, sincere mind, &c.

Dove

DOVE, a tame bird, declared by the Law of Moses to be pure: that ordains, that [Levit. xii. 8. Numb. vi. 10.] when any woman went to the Temple after lying-in, she should offer to the Lord a Lamb, a Dove, or Turtle, or else a young Pigeon, or a young Turtle. The Lamb was offered as a burnt-offering, the Pigeon for a sin-offering. Or if the person could not afford a Lamb, then instead of it, she offered two Pigeons, or two Turtles. It was no matter of what sex, nor perhaps of what age they were; for pullus columbæ may signify either a Pigeon in general, or a young Pigeon. The blessed Virgin, to comply with this Law, though she were not rigorously obliged to it, offered two Pigeons, or two Turtles, because she was poor. And as it was difficult for all those who came from remote places, to bring Doves with them, to offer in the Temple, the Priests gave permission for the selling of these birds in the Courts of that holy Place, which Jesus Christ could not endure; and having one day entred the Temple, he made a scourge with cords, and drove out those who traded [Matth. xxi. 12.] there in Pigeons.

There were besides, other occasions, upon which birds might be made a burnt-offering to the Lord, or be offered for the expiation of some sin. They who were rich offered four-footed beasts, the poor only Pigeons. The Ceremonies performed on these sacrifices were as follow: The Priest took the Turtle-dove, and wrung its neck and head with violence. Some Expositors are of opinion, that he plucked the head off intirely; [Levit. v. 8. 2 Kings vi. 25.] intirely; others, that he only wrung the neck; which appears to be most certain. See Levit. v. 8. He made a hole in it with his nails for the blood to run out upon the side of the Altar. The feathers and the crop he threw beside the east part of the Altar, in the place where the ashes were put which were taken from the Altar. After this, he broke the bird's wings; and without dividing the burnt-offering, he put it on the fire of the Altar, where it was intirely consumed. If it were a sacrifice for sin, the same ceremonies were observed which I have been describing, excepting that the blood of the burnt-offering was poured out not on the sides only, but at the feet likewise of the Altar.

It is said in the second Book of Kings, chap. vi. 25. that during the siege of Samaria, in the reign of Ahab King of Israel, the famine was so great, that a quarter of a Cab of Dove's dung was sold for five shekels; now a Cab held two pints, and something over. But we believe with Bochart, that this Dove's dung was nothing else but a sort of chich-peas, which the Arabians called Usnen or Kali. Now the Hebrews call chich-peas parched upon a stove, Kali; of these, great quantities are used in the East, and there are many shops at Cairo and Damascus, where people do nothing else but fry chich-peas, for the provision of Travellers. See above CICER. Other passages of Scripture where there is mention of Doves, are not very difficult: for example, it is said [Cant. ii. 14.] in the Canticles, That the spouse is like a Dove in the clefts of the rock; because in the East there are many wild and even tame Pigeons, that settle in the hollow parts of the rocks.

[Jerem. xxv. 38.] Jeremiah, speaking of the ravages which would be committed in Judæa by Nebuchadnezzar, says, The land is desolate because of the fierceness of the Dove[1]. And [Jerem. xlvi. 16.] again, Let us go again to our own people to avoid the sword of the Dove[2]. And in another place, They shall flee every one for fear [Jerem. l. 16.] of the sword of the Dove. Some[3] by the word Dove understand in this place, the Lord, who of a Dove was become a roaring Lion, armed with the sword, and ready to lay waste the country. Others[4] suppose Nebuchadnezzar, King of the Chaldæans, to be meant here, who, as they say, bore a Dove in his Ensigns, in memory of Semiramis, who was said to have been metamorphosed into a Dove, or who was called Dove in the way of antiphrasis. But it is more natural and simple to translate the Hebrew Jona, an enemy, destroyer, ravager. This is an Epithet that suits admirably well with Nebuchadnezzar. The Land was made desolate by this ravager; fly from the sword of this Prince, who carries fire and terror into all places wheresoever he goes. We have no good proofs that the Chaldæans bore a Dove in their Standards.

[Matth. iii. 16. Matth. x. 16. Hosea vii. 11.] The Dove is the symbol of simplicity and innocency. The Holy Spirit appeared at the baptism of our Saviour in the form of a Dove. Jesus Christ recommends to his disciples the wisdom of the Serpent, and the harmlessness of the Dove. The prophet Hosea compares the Israelites to a silly Dove which hath no heart, or understanding. The Dove is a defenceless creature, without gall or cunning, exposed to the pursuit of men and beasts, which is able neither to protect itself nor its young, nor to take precaution against those who have designs upon its life and liberty. Thus the Israelites, notwithstanding the chastisements with which God afflicted them, and the captivities to which he had reduced them, still relapsed continually into their irregularities, and exposed themselves again to the same calamities.

[Isaiah xxxviii. 14. and lix. 11. Nahum ii. 7. Cant. i. 15. ii. 10, 14. &c. Gen. viii. 8, 10.] The Scripture in some places seems to attribute reflection and meditation to the Dove: Meditabor ut columba. And, Et quasi columbæ meditantes, &c. But this is generally understood of its cooing; Gementes ut columbæ. The Turtle and the Dove coo alike. The Spouse in the Canticles is compared often to a Dove by reason of her innocence, gentleness, candor, and fidelity. Noah sent the Dove out of the Ark, in order to get intelligence whether the waters of the Deluge were gone off. He chose the Dove, as a tame bird, an enemy to carrion and ordure; it immediately returned to him, upon its not finding where to set its foot, because the waters were not as yet retired. He sent it out a second time, and it returned with a young shoot of a green olive-tree in its beak, which had sprung out already since the Deluge. At last he sent it out a third time, and it returned no more, because the Deluge was intirely ceased.

In the East, particularly in Syria, Arabia, and Egypt, Pigeons are taught to carry letters under their wings, and bring back an answer to those who send them. The Mogul in several places appoints Pigeons to be kept for the carrying letters on particular occasions, which require very great dispatch, and they carry them from one end of his dominions to the other. The Consul of Alexandretta sends news every day to Aleppo in five hours time, tho' these places be at the distance of three days journey for[5] Tavernier. a horse from one another. In Holland this invention has sometimes been made use of upon the occasions of a siege. The Caravans which travel in Arabia, give notice of their march to the Arabian Princes, with whom they are in alliance, by Pigeons, under whose wings they put letters. These birds [Relation des Caravannes, p. 114, 115.] go with an extraordinary swiftness and rapidity, and return with still more haste, in order to be at the place where they were bred, and have their nests. Some of these Pigeons have been seen frequently lying upon the sand with their bellies in the air, and their beaks open, waiting for the dew to refresh them, and recover breath.

There are particular people in the cities of Egypt, who make a trade of teaching Pigeons this art; and others, whose principal business it is to steal Pigeons, and entice them from the Pigeon-houses of others to their own. The Hebrews exclude those from admission into their Sanhedrin, who employ themselves in matters of this kind.

DOVE's DUNG. It is said in the second book of Kings, chap. vi. 25. that during the siege of Samaria, the fourth part of a cab of Dove's dung sold for five pieces of silver, or shekels. The fourth part of a cab is half a pint and a little more. Five shekels make about twelve shillings sterling. It is very well known, that Dove's Dung is not a proper nourishment for man, even in the most extreme famine. Josephus and [Joseph. Antiq. l. 9. c. 2. & Theodoret. qu. 21. in Reg.] Theodoret were of opinion, that this Dove's Dung was bought instead of salt. The Rabbins affirm that it was not the Dung of Pigeons, but the corn in their crops, which they brought back well filled out of the fields, whither, during the siege, they went to feed. Junius and Fuller suppose the Dove's belly to be meant here. But Bochart is of opinion, that under the name of Dove's [Bochart. de Animal. Sacr. t. 2. l. 1. art. 7.] Dung in this place, we are to understand a sort of moss growing upon trees, or a kind of gravelly earth, which was of use to refresh people, and with which and honey mixed together, they made a sort of wine. The Arabians call it Chich-peas.

Dragon

DRAGON. This word is frequently to be met with in the Scripture, it answers generally to the Hebrew Thannim or [Thannin. LXX. Genes. i. 21. Job. xxx. 29. Isai. xxxiv. 13. xliii. 20. Jerem. xlix. 32.] Thannin, which signifies a large fish, a Seadragon. The Septuagint generally translate it Dracones, rarely great fishes; sometimes Sirens or Ostriches. St. Jerom most frequently renders it dracones, but sometimes he takes it for Sirenes or Lamiæ. The same varieties almost are observable in Aquila, [Gen. i. 21. Job vii. 12. Ps. lxxiii. 13. clxviii. 7. Isai. xxxviii. 1. Ezek. xxxii. 2. Ex. vii. 9, 10, 12. Deut. xxxii. 33. Ps. xc. 13. Isai. xxxv. 7. Jerem. xiv. 6. Ps. lxxiii. 13. Isai. li. 9. Ezek. xxix. 3. Dan. xiv. 22.] Symmachus and Theodotion. By the word Sirenes they mean very pobably Sea-monsters; for we are not able to explain the fabulous creatures of this name, mentioned by the poets. It is certain by comparing the different passages where the word tannin or tanninim is to be met with, that it signifies sometimes large river or sea-fishes, and at other times venomous and land serpents, and, as I conjecture, more particularly the crocodile, and whales.

As to the Dragons which are talked of, and are often mentioned in books, they are for the most part only old serpents grown with age to a prodigious size. Some are described with wings, feet, claws, crests and heads of different figures. There is no question but there are winged serpents, Moses speaks of them under the name of Zaraph, Numb. xxi. 6. The Babylonians adored a Dragon, which Daniel killed. Nothing was more common in the Heathen Religion, than the worship of Serpents and Dragons.

This word is sometimes taken in Scripture for the Devil: " St. John in the Revelations describes to us a great Dragon " with seven heads and ten horns, and " seven diadems upon his heads: his tail " drew the third part of the Stars of Heaven, and cast them to the earth. The " Dragon stood before the woman, who " was ready to be delivered, to devour " her child as soon as she had brought it " forth. She brought forth a child, which " should rule all nations with a rod of iron. " And there was a great battle in Heaven: " Michael and his Angels fought against " the Dragon and his Angels; the Dragon " was overcome, and afterwards they appeared no more in Heaven: and the great " Dragon, that old Serpent, called the Devil and Satan, who seduceth the world, was " cast out; he was cast into the earth, and " all his Angels with him." All this describes the conflict of the Devil with the Church of Christ, and his defeat by Michael, General of the Church militant.

[Esther xi. 6, 7.] There are several places in the Prophets wherein the name of Draco cannot be understood of an animal belonging to the water, because there is mention of their cries; for example: Behold two great Dragons came forth ready to fight one against the other. Their cry was great, whereby all the heathen were ready to fight against the righteous people. And Jeremiah xiv. 6. And the wild Asses did stand in the high places, and drew in their wind like Dragons, their eyes did fail because there was no grass. And Micah i. 18. I will make lamentation like the Dragons, and mourning as the ostriches.

In other passages where there is mention of the ruin of a city, the ravaging of a [See Isa. xiii. 21. xxxiv. 13. Jerem. ix. 11. x. 32. xiv. 6. xlix. 33. l. 39. li. 34, 37.] province, or of a land reduced to a wilderness, it is said to be a dwelling for Dragons. As in reality Serpents, Dragons, and venomous Beasts hide themselves in uninhabited places, in the ruins of cities, and in rubbish: for this reason the ancients supposed them to have the guard of treasures. But it must be confessed, that this word is sometimes taken for a great fish, an animal that lives in water. Serpents and Fishes were by the Hebrews ranked almost in the same Class: they were equally comprehended by them under the name of creeping things and serpents.

Among the Gentiles, the Dragon was the symbol of health. They never described Æsculapius, nor the goddess Hygieia, Health, without a serpent near them, either about their staff, or in their hand. Real [Solin. c. 30.] Dragons, by Solinus's account of them, have a small mouth, and cannot bite; or if they do, their biting is not venomous. The Egyptians call them good Genius's, and keep them tame in their houses. We are not to believe that these were the Dragons spoken of by the Prophets; these were dangerous creatures, mischievous, and deadly, wild, &c.

DRAGON. The Dragon mentioned in the book of Nehemiah, lay to the east of Jerusalem. Nehemiah going out by night by the gate of the valley, even before the Dragon's-well, and to the dung-port. Dream

DREAM. The Dreams which were of [Chalom. Somnium Græc. Ἐνύπνιον.] God's appointing, and were prophetical or significative, are generally called by this name. The eastern people, and in particular the Jews, had a very great regard to Dreams; they observed them, and applied to those, who pretended to explain them, for the interpretation of them[1]. We see the antiquity of this custom among the Egyptians in the history of Pharaoh's Butler and [Gen. xl. 5, 8. Gen. xli. 15,16, &c.] Baker, and in Pharaoh himself. Nebuchadnezzar is an instance of the same among the Chaldæans. God had very expressly forbidden his people to observe Dreams, and to consult those, who took [Levit. xix. 26. Deut. xviii. 10. Deut. xiii. 1,2,3, &c.] upon them to explain them. He condemned any one to death who pretended to have prophetick Dreams, and to foretel what was to come, tho' what he should so foretel were to come to pass, if after this he would ingage the people in Idolatry. But they were not forbid when they thought they had any significative Dream, to address themselves to the Prophets of the Lord, or to the High-Priest dressed in his Ephod, in order to have it explained.

Wherefore in that very place, wherein God forbids the Hebrews to consult Divines, Magicians, and Interpreters of Dreams, he tells them, The people whose land ye are going to possess, consult Soothsayers and Diviners: but ye have not been so taught. The Lord shall raise up from the midst of you, and among your brethren, a Prophet like unto me; him ye shall consult and hearken to. The Israelites therefore were to address themselves to God and his Prophets to learn the explanation of their Dreams, and the prediction of things to come. Saul, a little before the battle of Gilboa, consulted a woman with a familiar Spirit, because the Lord had departed from him, and would not answer him, and discover the success of this war to him, neither by Dreams, nor by Urim, nor by Prophets.

In condescension to the Prejudices and Ideas of this People, who believed that Dreams often were significative, and sent by God, the Lord did indeed sometimes discover his will in Dreams, and raised up Persons to explain them. He informed Abimelech in a Dream, that Sarah was the wife of Abraham. He shewed Jacob the mysterious Ladder in a Dream; in a Dream he revealed to him the way of multiplying his flocks. Joseph was favoured very early with prophetick Dreams, the signification whereof was easily discovered by Jacob his father. The Dreams of the Butler and the Baker belonging to the King of Egypt, were explained by Joseph, as well as those of Pharaoh. God said, that he spake to other Prophets in Dreams, but to Moses face to face. The Midianites also gave credit to Dreams, as appears from that which a Midianite related to his Companion, whence Gideon took a happy omen of his success in [Judg. vii. 13, 15.] the Undertaking he was upon.

Jeremiah exclaims against the false Prophets, who pretended to have Dreams, and abused the credulity of the People, who hearkened to them. I have heard what the Prophets said, that prophesy lyes in my name, saying, I have dreamed, I have dreamed. The Prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream, and he that hath my word, let him tell it faithfully; what is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord. Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord, and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in [Joel iii. 1.] pieces. Joel promises from God, that in the new Covenant, and in the reign of the Messiah, the effusion of the Holy Spirit shall be more copious than formerly; that the old men shall have prophetick Dreams, and the young men visions.

Dream

DREAM. By this word are to be understood likewise those vain Images, which are formed in the imagination while we are asleep, and have no relation to prophecy, or the supernatural gifts of the Holy Spirit. [Job xx. 8.] Job; He shall fly away as a Dream, and shall not be found; yea, he shall be chased away as a vision of the night. And Isaiah, The multitude of all the nations that fight against Ariel, against Jerusalem, shall be as a Dream of a night-vision. It shall be even as a hungry man dreameth, and behold he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and behold he drinketh, but he awaketh and behold he is faint, and his soul hath appetite: so shall the multitude of all the nations be, that fight against mount Zion. See also Psalm lxxii. 20. Eccl. v. 2, 6.

[Isa. lv. 1.] To DRINK. We have said something which has a relation to drinking in the Article Cup. Isaiah invites all those who thirst, to come and drink wine and milk without money and without price; he speaks of the Messiah's time, and of those fountains of our [Isa. xii. 3.] Saviour, which he mentions in another place; With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation. And Jesus Christ promises the woman of Samaria living water, [John iv. 11.] which should for ever satisfy the thirst of those, who should drink of it. Job says, [Job xv. 16. Job xxxiv. 7.] the wicked drinketh iniquity like water. Elihu reproaches Job with drinking up scorning like water; and Rhabshakeh says, that Hezekiah designed to persuade the Jews into a resolution of holding out the siege of Jerusalem, that he might reduce them to the necessity of drinking their own [2 Kings xviii. 27.] urine; that is to say, of exposing themselves to the utmost extremities of a siege.

[Prov. v. 15.] The Wise-man exhorts his disciple to drink water out of his own cistern; that is to say, to content himself with the lawful pleasures of marriage, without thinking on that which was prohibited by the Law. To eat and drink is used in Ecclesiastes to signify [Eccl. v. 18.] people's enjoying themselves: It is good and comely for one to eat and drink, and to enjoy the good of all his labour; and in the Gospel for living in a common and ordinary manner. [Matth. xi. 18.] John came eating and drinking, and ye say he hath a devil; the Son of Man cometh eating and drinking, and ye say he is a glutton and a winebibber. In Noah's time, when God sent the Deluge, and in Lot's, when he destroy'd [Luke xxvii. 16, 17, 18.] Sodom, men eat and drank after their usual manner, without distrusting any thing. The Apostles say, they eat and drank with Jesus Christ after his resurrection, that they conversed, that they lived with him. Acts x. 41.

[1 Kings xx. 12. Psal. lxix. 13.] To DRINK is likewise used for entertaining, and diverting one's self at table. Benhadad King of Syria drank in his tent with his allies. And the Psalmist, they who drank wine made songs upon me. To eat and drink before the Lord, signifies to make [Job i. 13, 18. Judith xii. 72.] religious feasts in the Temple. To drink wine, signifies to make a feast: for in common repasts, the company was not served [Cant. vi. Isai. xxii. 13. 2 Kings xix. 24. Compare Isa. xxxvii. 25.] with wine.

I have drunk strange waters, says Sennacherib, and with the the soal of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of besieged places. I have drunk up the water belonging to the people through whose country I have marched my armies; I have exhausted their wells and their cisterns. Jeremiah reproaches the Jews with having had recourse to Egypt for muddy water to drink, and with having addressed themselves to the Assyrians, that they might drink the water of their river; that is to say, with having fought for the water of Nile in Egypt, and the water of the [Ezek. xxxix. 18. Jer. Lament. v. 4. Ezek. iv. 11. 2 Sam. xxiii. 16, 17.] Euphrates in Assyria, thereby describing the assistance of these two people.

To DRINK Blood, signifies to be satiated with slaughter; Ye shall drink the blood of the Princes of the earth; ye shall put them to death. David refused to drink the water which three gallant men of his army went and procured for him at the hazard of their lives, saying, God forbid that I should drink the blood of these men. Jesus Christ commands us to drink his blood and to eat his flesh. We eat and drink both one and the other really; but nevertheless spiritually and mystically in the Eucharist. To drink water by measure, and buy water to drink, denote the utmost scarcity and an extreme desolation. Upon Fasts the Jews abstained from eating and drinking for the whole day, believing it to be equally of the essence of a Fast to suffer thirst as well as hunger.

Dromedary

DROMEDARY, a sort of Camel called Dromedary, Dromas, or Dromedarius, by reason of its running very swiftly, from a word derived from the Greek, dremo, I run. Dromedaries are smaller than common Camels, slenderer, and more nimble. Upon their backs they have a kind of natural saddle, which is composed of a great deal of hair, that stands up and forms as it were a large bunch. Persons of Quality in the East generally make use of Dromedaries when they would go with speed. We are assured that they can go an hundred miles a-day with them, which make something above three and thirty leagues, at [Vincent le Blanc, Voyag. partie 2. c. 22.] three miles a league. Vincent le Blanc tells us, that there are some which will travel fifty leagues in a day. Isaiah, chap. xlvi. ver. 20. calls this creature, as Bochart believes, Biccuroth. But the word Bichrim which we meet with in the same Prophet, and is translated by St. Jerom, Dromedaries, [Isa. lx. 6.] Dromedarii Madian & Epha, signifies, in the opinion of several Expositors, young Camels. Nevertheless, Bichra, the feminine of Bicher, is taken for a Dromedary in Jeremiah, and is so understood by [Jerem. ii. 23. קלה בקרה] Aquila, Symmachus and Theodotion. St. Jerom, Cursor levis, a Courser. The name of Bactrian, which the Dromedary goes by, [Aq. Sym. Theod. Δρομάς.] comes pretty near the Hebrew, Bikker, a Dromedary, and Bikkerah, or Bikkerath, a female Dromedary. There are two sorts of Dromedaries, one of a larger kind, with two bunches upon its back; the other lesser, with one only. Both are very common in the western parts of Asia, such as Syria and Arabia. That which has but one bunch upon its back, is more commonly called Camel, the other is named Dromedary. They are both capable of very great fatigues; their hair is soft, and short: but about the middle of their backs, Camels have a little eminence covered with hair a foot high upon their bunch, and Dromedaries have two bunches, and two eminencies of hair, which however are very small; and if we rightly consider it, Dromedaries and Camels are no more hunch-back'd than other Animals. They have no sangers and fore-teeth; they have no horn upon their feet, for they are only covered with a fleshy skin. It is said that when they drink, they disturb the water with their feet; for which, different causes are assigned by different persons: some believe they do this to make the water heavier, that it may continue longer in their stomachs. They are said to drink a great deal, and keep it a long time against their being thirsty afterwards; nay, some will have it that travellers upon pressing necessities open their stomachs, take out the water contained in them, and satisfy their thirst with it. The stomach of these creatures is composed of four ventricles, and in the second there are several mouths which open a passage into about twenty cavities made like sacks, that serve them for conservatories of water. The Dromedary is seven feet and a half high, from the ground to the top of its head.

Drunk

DRUNK, DRUNKENNESS. These words are not to be always understood in Scripture in the odious sense which is commonly given them. They often signify no more than to drink as much as we can, and ought to do, at an entertainment made by some friend, where there is no want of wine. [Gen. xliii. 34.] For instance, it is said that Joseph's brethren were drunk with him, the second time they came into Egypt, and knew not as yet that he was their brother; it is not credible that they should forget themselves so far upon this occasion, as to be wanting in that decency and respect which they owed to one so considerable as Joseph. The Spouse in [Cant. v. 1.] the Canticles says to her friends, Come, my friends, drink and be drunken: that is to say, drink, eat, and make good chear. And [Haggai i. 6.] Haggai; Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye drink, but are not filled with drink: that is to say, ye have not got such a quantity of wine, as to be plentifully stocked with it. And the wise man; Qui inebriat [Prov. xi. 25. John xii. 10.] ipse quoque inebriabitur. The liberal and beneficent man shall be liberally rewarded. And in the Gospel, Every man first bringeth forth good wine, & cum inebriati fuerint tunc id quod deterius est. Will any one believe, that Jesus Christ waited till the guests were drunk, in order to perform the miracle which he wrought at Cana in their favour? And St. Paul; Alius quidem esurit, alius [1 Cor. xi. 22.] autem ebrius est. One wants, and the other abounds.

Drunkenness is sometimes taken for oppression and affliction: Paupercula & ebria [Isa. li. 21.] non a vino, says Isaiah: Thou who hast been intoxicated with the Cup of God's wrath. See CUP. Absumet ebria sitientem, says Moses, in a sort of proverbial way: The drunken will devour the thirsty. The rich [Deut. xxix. 19. Deut. xxxii. 42.] will consume the poor: the strong will overwhelm the weak. The same: I will make mine arrows drunk with blood; and the Psalmist, Visitasti terram, & inebriasti eam. [Psalm liv. 10. Isai. xlix. 26.] And Isaiah: I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh, and they shall be drunken with their own blood. And Ezekiel, Thou shalt be filled with Drunkenness [Ezek. xxiii. 33.] and Sorrow. And again, xxxix. 19. Ye shall drink blood till ye be drunken. Ye shall be drunk with the blood of my sacrifice.

Before this Drusilla [Acts xxiv. 24, 25.] and her husband Felix, St. Paul appeared, and evidenced the truth of Christianity. DURA, a great Plain in the neighbourhood of Babylon, where Nebuchadnezzar appointed an Image of gold, of threescore cubits in height, and six in breadth, to be erected, and worshipped by all his subjects; which Shadrach, Meshech, and Abednego refusing to do, they were cast into a fiery furnace, out of which they came unhurt [Dan. iii. 1, & seq.] and safe.

The Hebrews believe, that the Resurrection mentioned in Ezekiel xxxvii. happened in this plain of Dura; but it is more probable, that the Resurrection here spoken of was only figurative, and seen no otherwise than in a vision. Dust DUST. The Hebrews when they mourn put Dust or ashes upon their heads. [Joshua vii. 6.] Miserunt pulverim super capita sua. In the Acts, some of the Jews in the height of [Acts xxii. 23.] their rage threw Dust into the air, as it were to shew that they would reduce to powder the Apostle St. Paul, whom they had taken in the Temple. In their afflictions they sat down in the Dust, and threw themselves with their faces upon the ground. He putteth his mouth in the Dust, if so be there [Lam. iii. 29.] might be hope. [Isai. xlvii. 1. Genes. iii. 19. Job vii. 21.] And elsewhere, Come down, and sit in the Dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon. The Dust denotes likewise the grave and death. Dust thou art, and to Dust thou shalt return; and Job, I will sleep in the Dust; and the Psalmist, Thou hast brought me [Psalm. xxii. 15. Gen. xiii. 16.] into the Dust of death.

The Dust signifies likewise multitude; I will make thy seed as the Dust of the earth. And Balaam, upon sight of the Israelitish camp, Who can count the Dust of Jacob? This infinite multitude of the Israelites, who are as numerous as the Dust? And the [Ps. lxxviii. 27.] Psalmist, He rained flesh also upon them as Dust: a great multitude of Quails, as if they were Dust.

[1 Sam. ii. 8.] God raiseth up the poor out of the Dust, to place him upon the throne; I exalted thee out of the Dust, and made thee Prince [1 Kings xvi. 2.] over my people Israel, says a Prophet to King Baasha. And in a contrary sense, he reduces those to Dust, who rise up against him; those who presume upon their own strength, those who abuse their power. He casts them like Dust before the wind; he reduces them like the Dust of the floor, upon which corn is threshed, &c.

Our Saviour commands his disciples to shake the Dust off their feet against those [Matth. x. 14. Mark vi. 11. Luke ix. 5.] who would not hearken to them, nor receive them, to shew hereby, that they desire to have no commerce with them; that they abhor every thing belonging to them; that they give them up to their misery and hardness.

The Letter E

Eagle

EAGLE, a bird whereof there is frequent mention in Scripture. The Eagle is declared in Leviticus to be unclean, as [Levit. xi. 13. Deut. xiv. 2. נשר Nescher. Aquila Ἀετός.] are all other birds of its species; that is to say, all sorts of Eagles, as the Sea-Eagle called in Latin Haliæetus, and the Eagle named Ossifraga, because it breaks the bones in order to extract the marrow. There is likewise a black Eagle called Valeria or Melanæetus. The Hawk and the Vultur may be reckoned as different species of Eagles. All these birds are prohibited by the Law of Moses.

It is said in Psalm ciii. 5. that the Lord maketh a good man young and lusty as an Eagle; renovabitur ut aquilæ juventus tua. The conjectures of interpreters have been very various concerning the Eagle's growing young again. Some have affirmed, that every [Rab. Saadias.] ten years the Eagle soars as high as the region of fire, and from thence plunges itself into the Sea, where it loses its old feathers, and gets new ones. St. Austin and Epiphanius [Aug. in Psalm. cii. 5. Epiphan. Physiolog.] tell us, that when this bird is old, its beak becomes so hooked, that it is no longer able to eat; but that by striking it against a rock, it breaks off this part, and so grows young again by taking fresh nourishment. Others suppose in like manner, that the Eagle's beak becoming too hooked, as it grows old, it is unable to feed, and is therefore nourished by drinking only; from whence this proverb has its rise, Aquilæ Senectus: but this opinion is contradicted by other Philosophers, who maintain, that the Eagle does not drink at all, no more than other birds with sharp claws. Lastly,[1] others believe that the Eagle grows young again no otherwise than all birds besides, which cast their feathers every year in the moulting season, and have others in their room[2]: and this is the best and most simple interpretation. In this sense likewise the Hebrew may be expounded; Thou shalt be renewed, and thy youth shall be like that of an Eagle. Thou shalt recover thy strength, and shall be like the Eagle in its youth.

Moses says, that God delivered his people out of Egypt, and bore them upon Eagles [Exod. xix. 4. Deut. xxxii. 11.] wings; and in another place, that the Lord took upon himself the care of his people, and bore them on his shoulders, as an Eagle beareth her young; that he led them out of Egypt, and let them at liberty, as an Eagle takes its young out of the nest, to teach them how to fly, by gently fluttering about them. Accordingly it is said, that when an Eagle sees its young ones so well grown as to venture upon flying, it hovers over their nest, flutters with its wings, and excites them to imitate it, and take their flight; and when it sees them weary or fearful, it takes them upon its back, and carries them so, that the fowlers cannot hurt the young without piercing through the body of the old one.

[Prov. xxx. 19. Prov. xxx. 17.] Solomon in his Proverbs says, that there were four things which were entirely unknown to him; the way of an Eagle in the air, the way of a Serpent upon a rock, the way of a Ship in the midst of the sea, and the way of a man with a maid. There is no difficulty in this passage as to the Eagle, the Serpent, and the Ship; it is very well known that they leave no traces behind them in the air, upon rocks, or upon the sea. And with respect to the way of a man with a maid, or in his youth, it is difficult in the Vulgate only: for the Hebrew signifies no more, than that the marks of virginity in a young woman are very ambiguous, and hard to be discerned.

Micah i. 16. seems to say that the Eagle divests itself of its feathers when it mourns, Enlarge thy baldness as the Eagle; but this signifies no more, than that they to whom the Prophet addresses himself, should cut off their hair in time of mourning, should be naked and stript like a moulting Eagle. It is said that the Eagle at that season casts almost all its feathers, and falls into a languishing condition, so as neither to be able to hunt after prey as usual, nor create terror in other [Theodoret. in Mic. i. 16. Matth. xxiv. 28. Luke xvii. 37. Job xxxix. 30. Job ix. 26.] birds.

Our Saviour in several places of the Gospel, repeats a sentence out of Job, Wheresoever the carcass is, there will the Eagles be gathered together. The common sort of Eagles eat no carrion, but there is a particular species which does; and not one of any kind but what eats raw flesh, tho' not indifferently of all sorts, nor that of any creature which dies of itself, but such only as is fresh and lately killed. Which is the literal meaning of Job, in what he says concerning the Eagle; but Jesus Christ makes an allegory of it, and says, that wherever there are Jews, who deal unfaithfully with God, there will be also Romans to execute God's vengeance on them. See our Comment on St. Matth. xxiv. 28.

I take no notice of other qualities which are are ascribed to the Eagle, because they are either false or too common, or have no relation to what is said in Scripture of this bird, and to the design of this Dictionary.

There are some likewise, who talk of the Eagle's Stone, which is found, as they say, at the entrance of the holes, wherein these birds make their nests. They affirm that the stones here spoken of, have a particular virtue in defending the Eagle's nest from the effects of thunder. The stones of this kind, which are most valued, are flat and blackish, with a grain like shagreen, and found if any one applies them to the ear and shakes them, because within the large stone, there is one lesser, which nature has formed in it. It is called Ætites in Latin and Pietra d'Aquila in Italian. But there are several fabulous things related of it, and the virtues which are attributed to it.

The Romans, we know, bore the Eagle in their standards, and paid divine honours to it, as they did likewise to their other Ensigns.[3] Religio Romanorum tota castrensis signa veneratur, signa jurat, signa omnibus Diis præponit, says Tertullian. Several Fathers and Interpreters are of opinion, that the abomination of desolation, mentioned in [Matth. xxiv. 15.] these words of the Gospel, When ye shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the Prophet, stand in the holy place, &c. was nothing else but the Roman Eagles, and other military Ensigns, which were lodged in the Holy Place, that is to say, in the Holy Land, about Jerusalem, when Titus incamped his army there[4]. But we rather think, that this abomination of desolation, taken notice of in Daniel, and the Gospel, denotes the profanations of the Temple, caused by the seditious Jews, who called themselves Zealots. Here these wretches committed all the abominations, sacrileges, and murders, which are described by Josephus in his History of the Jewish Wars.

Ears

EARS. I will uncover thine Ear; this is an Hebraism, whereby is meant, I will [1 Sam. xx. 13. 1 Sam. iii. 11.] reveal something to thee. The servant who renounced the privilege of being freed from servitude in the sabbatical year, had 2 Sam. vii. his Ear pierced with an awl: this was performed [27. Exod. xxi. 6. Deut. xv. 17.] in the presence of the Judges, and his Ear was bored at his master's door. This was an ignominious mark of his bondage. When any one would describe such a misfortune as would astonish all those who should be informed of it, he says, It will be such as will make the Ears of all who hear it tingle; the sound will stun them, and pierce their ears. The [2 Kings xxi. 12.] Psalmist speaking in the person of the Messiah, says to God, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but mine Ears hast thou [Ps. xl. 6. לי אזנים כרית] opened. The Hebrew reads, Thou hast dug my Ears; thou hast opened them, and made them attentive; or otherwise, thou hast pierced them, as those servants are used, who chuse to remain with their masters after the sabbatical year. St. Paul read, But a Body hast thou prepared me; and thus the Septuagint, [Hebr. x. 6. σῶμα δὲ κατηρτίσω μοι. Ita LXX. & P. P. Græci. Ps. xxxix. 13. Is. vi. 10.] and generality of the antient Fathers read this passage. All which may be easily explained of the Incarnation of Jesus Christ.

To hear with one's Ears, to incline one's Ear to hear, are expressions which we meet with very frequently in the Sacred Writers; they would be very irksome in our language. Hear my tears, or rather hear my cries, which are accompanied with tears. To have heavy Ears, is said of natural as well as voluntary deafness; the Lord says to Isaiah, Make the Ears of this people heavy; that is to say, tell them that I will suffer them to harden their hearts, and stop their Ears against my word. The Scripture sometimes says, that the Prophets do what they foretell only. In other places the same Prophet, speaking of himself, says, that the Lord had opened his Ears, Dominus aperuit mihi aurem, ego autem non contradico: He has given me his orders, and I obey without contradiction. And, speaking to the Jews, Non audisti ea, [Is. l. 5.] neque aperta est auris tua: Thou hast never heard any mention made of what I am going [Is. xlviii. 8. Jer. vi. 10.] to tell thee. Uncircumcised Ears in Jeremiah, are Ears deaf to the words of God. What ye hear with the Ear, that preach ye upon the house-tops. This is a proverb; Declare [Matth. x. 27. Matth. xiii. 43.] that every where, and publickly, which I have revealed to you in private. He that hath Ears to hear, let him hear; let every one that can hear, give their attention, and hearken carefully.

Earth

EARTH. This word is taken, 1. for that gross and terrestrial element, which sustains and nourishes us. The Earth yields fruit, is barren, watered, &c. God called the [Gen. i. 10.] dry land Earth.

The Earth is used to signify all that rude matter which was created in the beginning. Moses says, that God then created [Gen. i. 1.] the Heaven and the Earth; that is to say, the matter of all sensible beings.

[Ps. xxiv. 1. Ps. cxv. 16.] 3. By the Earth is meant the terraqueous globe, the Earth and all that it contains, men, animals, plants, metals, waters, fish, &c. The Earth is the Lord's, and all that therein is: all the whole Heavens are the Lord's: the Earth hath he given to the children of men; to them he said, Go forth [Gen. viii. 17.] and make your selves masters of the Earth.

The Earth is oftentimes taken for [Gen. xi. 1. Gen. vi. 13.] those who inhabit it, The whole Earth was of one language. The Earth is filled with with violence. Sing unto the Lord, all the [Psalm xcvi. 1.] whole Earth.

Sometimes the whole Earth, signifies no more than all Judæa, or the whole Empire of Chaldæa and Assyria. Thus Cyrus says, The Lord God of heaven hath given [Ezra i. 2.] me all the kingdoms of the Earth. The Psalmist invites all the Earth, that is to say, [Psalm xxxiii. 8.] all Israel, to praise and serve the Lord.

To demand Earth and Water, was a customary thing with the antient Persians, when they required any people to acknowledge their dominion; thus Nebuchodonosor, in [Judith ii. 7.] the Greek text of Judith, commands Holofernes to march against the people of the West, who refused to obey his orders, and declare to them, that they were to prepare earth and water, because he had resolved to go against them in his fury, &c. Darius in like [Herod. l. 4. c. 126.] manner gave orders to have Earth and Water demanded of the Scythians; and Megabysus sent to require the same of Amyntas King of [Idem. l. 5. c. 17.] Macedonia in the name of his master Darius. Polybius and Plutarch take notice of the same custom among the Persians. There are some who believe, that these symbolical demands denoted the Empire of the Earth and Sea; others, that they signify the two most necessary things to life, Bread and Water. By the Earth, they represented the several sorts of food which are received from it, such as Corn and Fruits; by Water, Drink, which is the second part of our nourishment.

Ecclesiasticus in much the same sense says, The Lord hath set fire and water before [Ecclus. xv. 16. Ecclus. xxxix. 31.] thee, stretch forth thy hand unto whither thou wilt; and in another place, Fire and Water are the most necessary things to life. Initium necessariæ rei hominum aqua, ignis, &c. Fire and Water were considered by the Ancients as the first principles of the generation, birth, and preservation of man. Proscribed Persons were debar'd the use of them; and wives in their nuptial ceremonies were obliged [Ovid. Fast. l. 4.] to touch them.

An quod in his vitæ causa est, hæc perdidit exul? His nova sit conjux, hæc duo magna putant.

[Ecclus. x. 9.] Man is but Earth and Ashes, or dust and ashes. The Serpent is condemned to eat Earth, or dust, all the days of his life. Noah [Gen. iii. 14.] is called vir terræ, or vir agricola, an Husbandman, Gen. ix. 20. Naaman having been cured of his Leprosy by Elisha, desired his permission to carry so much Earth with him out of the land of Israel as would load two mules, that upon this Earth he might pay his adorations to God; believing that he could not do this as he ought upon Earth which was impure, such as he thought that of Syria to be.

God threatens his People that he will make the Earth that they were to inhabit, iron, barren, dry, hard, and unmanageable. Deut. xxviii. 23.

Earthquake

EARTHQUAKE. The Scripture speaks of several natural Earthquakes. One of the most remarkable, is that which happened in the twenty-seventh year of Uzziah King of Judah, in the year of the World 3221, before Jesus Christ 779, before [Joseph. Antiq. l. 9. c. 11.] the Vulgar Æra 783. There is mention of this Earthquake in Amos iv. 1. and in Zechary xiv. 5. and in Josephus, who adds, that it was so violent, as to divide a mountain in halves, which lay to the west of Jerusalem, and moved one part of it from its place four furlongs, or five hundred paces; insomuch that it was stop'd only by the wall which it met with on the east side of the City, the earth having closed up the highway, and covered the King's gardens.

Another very memorable Earthquake, [Matth. xxvii. 51.] was that which happened at our Saviour's death. Many have been of opinion, that this motion was perceived by all the World. Others maintain, that it was sensible only in Judæa, or even in the Temple, the Gates whereof were shaken, and the Veil rent [Cyrill. Jerosol. Cathech. comac. 13.] asunder. St. Cyril of Jerusalem says, that the Rocks upon Mount Calvary were still shewn in his time, which had been split by the force of this Earthquake. It must have been attended with very terrible circumstances, since the Centurion and they who were with him, were so affected with it, and were induced by it to acknowledge the injustice of our Saviour's condemnation. [Luke xviii. 47.] Phlegon, Adrian's freed-man, related, that together with the Eclipse, which happened at noon-day in the fourth year of the two hundred and second Olympiad, which falls in with the thirty-third year of the Vulgar Æra; there was likewise a very great Earthquake, which was felt principally in Bithynia.

The Scripture under the word Earthquake very often expresses agitations of Mountains, shocks of the foundations of the Universe, the effects of God's Power, Wrath, and Vengeance. But these expressions are not always to be understood in a literal manner, as if the Earth had really trembled, or the Mountains had been shaken. These are exaggerations, which represent the greatness, strength, and sovereign Power of God. See Psalm civ. 32. The Earth shall tremble at the look of him. Psalm xviii. 7. The Earth trembled and quaked, the very foundations also of the hills shook. And Psalm xlvi. 2. Therefore will we not fear though the Earth be moved, and though the hills be carried into the midst of the sea .... though the mountains shake at the tempest of the same. And Psalm cxiv. 4. The mountains skipped like rams, &c. Tremble thou Earth at the presence of the Lord.

East

EAST. The Hebrews express the East, West, North, and South, by words which signify, before, behind, left, and right, according to the situation of a man with his face turned towards the East. By the East they describe frequently not only Arabia Deserta, and the lands of Moab and Ammon, which lay indeed to the East of Palestine; but Assyria likewise, Mesopotamia, Babylonia, and Chaldæa, which lie rather to the North than to the East of Judæa. See hereafter KEDEM; where we shall shew that by the word Kedem, or East, the Hebrews often understood the countries beyond the Euphrates, and those which, rigorously speaking, are rather to the North than East of Palestine.

Eating

EATING. The ancient Hebrews did not eat indifferently with all sorts of Persons; they should have polluted and dishonoured themselves in their own opinion, if they had eaten with people of another Religion, or of a Profession that was odious and in disrepute. In the Patriarch Joseph's time, [Gen. xiii. 31. John iv. 9.] they neither eat with the Egyptians, nor the Egyptians with them. In our Saviour's time they did not eat with the Samaritans: For the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans. And the Jews were very much scandalized to see that Jesus Christ made no scruple of eating with Publicans and Sinners: Why eateth your master with publicans and sinners? As there were several sorts of [Matth. ix. 11.] meats, the use whereof was not allowed them, they could not conveniently eat with those who partook of them, for fear of contracting some pollution by touching them, or lest by accident any part of them should fall upon them.

It is observed likewise, that the ancient Hebrews at their meals had each his separate table by himself. Joseph entertaining his brethren in Egypt, seated every one of them separately at his particular table, and he himself sat down separately from the Egyptians, who eat with him: and to each of his brethren he sent what was proper for them to be served with, out of the Provisions [Gen. xliii. 31, & seq. 1 Sam. i. 4, 5. Homer. Odyss. xiv.] which were spread before him. Elkanah, Samuel's father, who had two wives, in like manner distributed their portions to them separately. In Homer, every one of the persons invited had his little table apart; and the master of the feast made a distribution of meat to every one of them. We are assured that the same thing is still practised at this day in China; and there are many in the Indies who never eat out of the same dish, nor upon the same table, and they [Renaudot, Notes sur le Voyage des deux Arabes a la Chine, p. 123, 124.] believe they cannot do so without sin. And this custom they observe, not only in their own country, but likewise when they are travelling, and are in any foreign land.

The antique manners which we see in Homer, may be remarked likewise in the Scripture with regard to eating, drinking, and entertainments. We find there great plenty, but little delicacy; great respect for the guests, making the honours they pay them to consist in serving them with what they eat and drank after a more plentiful manner. In the repast which Abraham made for the three Angels, whom he received in his tent, he served them with a fatted calf intire, with milk, butter, and bread baked under the ashes, in making of which there were used three measures of fine meal, each whereof held more than eight and twenty pints. Joseph help'd his brother Benjamin to five times a larger portion of meat than the rest of his brethren. Samuel set a whole quarter of a calf before Saul. Regularly the women did not appear at table in entertainments with men. This would have been then among these people, as it is at this day in Italy, Spain, and throughout all the East, an indecency which no one would have approved.

Their seasonings were salt, honey, oil, and cream. The generality of the spices we make use of, were unknown to them. They were acquainted with anise, ginger, saffron, and some other herbs, which are named frequently in Scripture, and there is no doubt but they made use of them in sauces. Honey is still at this day used very commonly in the ragoûts made by the people of Palestine. At their solemn Entertainments there was always singing and musick. Amos reproaches [Amos vi. 5. John xii. Luke vii. 37. Gen. xliii. 25.] the Debauchées of Ephraim with diverting themselves at their meals with the sound of Instruments, as if they understood as well how to play on them as David. Perfumes and sweet odours were in use at all their feasts. The woman, who in the Gospel is said to have been a sinner, poured perfumed oil upon the feet of Jesus. Mary, the sister of Lazarus, did the same. The general hour for meals, was noon. At this time, Joseph provided dinner for his brethren. The Judges of Babylon, who attempted to seduce Susannah, retired to their houses about noon, to eat. The Jewish Doctors teach, that upon [Dan. xiii. 7, 8. Vide Hammond. ad Matth. xii. 8. Tract. de Sabbat. Buxtorf. Synag.] festival days it is not lawful to eat before noon, at which time the ceremonies were over. The Talmud assigns eleven a-clock in the morning, as the most proper time for taking nourishment, which if longer delay'd may, they think, occasion some inconveniencies; and they believe that if the body be then denied necessary food, it preys upon itself, and feeds upon its own substance, like Bears in winter.

The Hebrews of old sat at table as we do now; afterwards they imitated the Persians and Chaldæans, who lay down upon table-beds while they were Eating: some footsteps of these are nevertheless observed in the Proverbs of Solomon, in Amos, Ezekiel, and Tobit; but the [Amos vi. 4, 7. Ezek. xxiii. 47.] use of such beds was not general. We see some expressions in the sacred Authors of those very times, which prove, that they too sat at table. At Ahasuerus's banquet, the company lay on [Esth. i. 6.] beds, and at that which Esther gave the King and Haman; our Saviour in like manner lay at table when Magdalen anointed his feet with a [Matth. xxvi. 7.] precious perfume; and when St. John the Evangelist at the last Supper rested his head upon his bosom.

We shall take notice in another place, of the distinction of meats observed by the Hebrews at their meals. They are rigid observers of the Law, which forbids the use of blood and fat, and of the sinew of the animal's thigh. The old Hebrew Doctors prohibited the use of flesh and fish at the same meal; but at present they are above these regulations, and eat indifferently of them, provided the fish, and animals be such as Moses has permitted. This Legislator forbids the [Levit. xi. 9, 12.] seething a Kid or Lamb in the milk of its dam. This the Jews explain as a prohibition to eat [Exod. xxiii. 19. xxiv. 26.] milk, butter, or cheese with meat, and they very religiously observe it.

Before they sit down to table, they are very careful to wash their hands; they speak of this practice as a ceremony that is essential and strictly obliging. After meals they wash them again. As soon as they have washed their hands, they sit down to table, and the master of the house, or the person of best quality in the company, taking the bread, breaks it, but does not divide it; then putting his hand upon it, he recites [See Buxtorf's Synag. and Leo of Modena, part. 2. c. 10.] this blessing; Blessed be thou, O Lord our God, the King of the world, who producest the bread of the earth. To which they who are present answer, Amen. Then having distributed the bread among the guests, he takes the vessel which contains the wine, and lifting it up with his right hand, he says, Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the world, who hast produced the fruit of the vine. This done, they repeat the xxiiid Psalm, The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures, &c. Buxtorf and Leo of Modena, who have been very particular in their account of the Jewish Ceremonies, differ in some circumstances from one another; but the reason of this is, Buxtorf wrote principally the Ceremonies of the German Jews, and Leo of Modena, the practices of the Italian Jews.

They take care, that after meals there shall be a piece of bread remaining on the table; the master of the house orders a glass to be washed, fills it with wine, and elevating it, says, Gentlemen, let us bless him of whose benefits we have been partaking: to which the rest answer, Blessed be he, who has heaped his favours on us, and by his goodness has now fed us. Then the master recites a pretty long prayer, wherein he returns thanks to God for the many benefits which he has vouchsafed to Israel; beseeches him to have pity on Jerusalem and his Temple, to restore the throne of David, to send Elias and the Messiah, to deliver them out of their long captivity, that they may be no more under a necessity of begging alms, and borrowing of Christians, against whom they denounce maledictions under the name of carnal people, and cursed creatures. All who are present, answer, Amen. After which they recite these words of the xxxivth Psalm, ver. 9,10. Fear the Lord, O ye that are his saints, &c. Then giving the glass with the little wine in it to be drunk round, he takes off what is left, and so the table is intirely cleared.

Ebal

EBAL, a celebrated Mountain in the Tribe of Ephraim, near Schechem, over-against mount Gerizim. St. Jerom, Eusebius, and some others after them, have been of opinion, that Gerizim and Ebal were opposite to Jericho, and at a good distance from Schechem and the Tribe of Ephraim: but we shall demonstrate the contrary when we come to speak of Gerizim. These two Mountains are so near each other, that nothing but a valley of about two hundred paces wide separates them. In this valley is the town of Schechem. The two Mountains are much alike in length, height, and form. Their figure is a semicircle, and on the side of Schechem they are so steep, that there is not the least shelving in them. They are at most half a league in length. But if they are alike in the particulars afore-mentioned, in another they are very unlike; for Ebal is intirely barren, and Gerizim is a beautiful and fruitful Mountain. The Jews and Samaritans have great disputes about them. See GERIZIM.

Moses commanded the Israelites, as soon as they had passed the river Jordan, to go directly to Schechem, and divide the whole multitude into two bodies, each composed of six Tribes, some whereof should be placed on Ebal, the others on Gerizim. The six Tribes that were on Gerizim were to pronounce blessings on those, who should faithfully observe the Law of the Lord; and the six others on Mount Ebal, were to pronounce curses against those who should violate it. Joshua having entred the Land of Promise, executed punctually what Moses [Josh. viii. 30, 31.] had commanded, and led all the Tribes to Ebal and Gerizim, in the year of the World 2553, before Jesus Christ 1447, before the Vulgar Æra 1451. Moses had injoined them [Deut. xxvii. 4, 5.] in particular to erect an Altar of unhewn stones upon Mount Ebal, and plaister them over, that the words of God's Law might be written on them: but the Samaritans, instead of Ebal read Gerizim in their Pentateuch, because their Altar, and the place where they perform the publick Offices of their Religion, are still at this day on Mount Gerizim.

As to the Ceremony of consecrating the Commonwealth of the Hebrews, it is thought to have been performed in this manner. The Heads of the six first Tribes went up to the top of Mount Gerizim, and the Heads of the six other Tribes to the top of Mount Ebal. The Priests with the Ark, and Joshua at the head of the Elders of Israel, took their station in the middle of the valley, which lies between the two mountains. The Levites ranged themselves in a circle about the Ark, and the Elders with the people placed themselves at the foot of each mountain, six Tribes on a side. When they were thus disposed into order, the Priests turned towards Mount Girizim, on the top whereof were the six Heads, whose six Tribes were at the foot of the same mountain, and pronounced, for example, these words: Blessed be the man that maketh not any graven Images. The six Princes who were upon the mountain, and the six Tribes, who were below at the foot of it, answered, Amen. Afterwards, the Priests turning towards Mount Ebal, upon which were the Princes of the six other Tribes, cried with a loud and intelligible voice, Cursed be the man that maketh any graven Images. Whereupon the six Princes, who were upon the same mountain, and the six Tribes who were below, answered Amen.

The Scripture seems at first to intimate, that there were six intire Tribes upon one mountain, and six upon the other; but, besides that it is by no means probable, that the Tribes of the Israelites, who were almost innumerable, should be able to stand upon the tops of these two mountains, it was not possible for them to see the Ceremony, nor to hear the Blessings and Curses, in order to answer to them. Moreover, the Hebrew particle in the original, signifies near, over-against, as well as at the top. Joshua viii. 33. Accordingly we may say, that neither Joshua, nor the Priests, or Tribes went up to the top of the mountains, but the Heads only, who in their persons might represent all the Tribes.

As to the great stones which were set up and plaistered over, in order to write the words of the Law upon them, Expositors are not agreed whether these stones, or this monument, are the same with the Altar upon which the Peace-Offerings were sacrificed to make a feast for all the people. Notwithstanding, upon comparing the 2d and 3d Verses with the 5th of the xxviith Chapter of Deuteronomy, it will appear, that the Altar is too well distinguished from the Stones in question, to leave room for a mistake.

Ebed-Melech

[Jerem. xxxviii. 6, 7, 8, &c.] EBED-MELECH, the Eunuch or Servant of King Zedekiah. He being informed that Jeremiah was imprisoned in a place full of dirt and infection, informed the King of it by the particular order of the principal persons in Jerusalem; and withal told him, that this Prophet would be starved there, because there began to be great want of bread in the City. Zedekiah therefore commanded Ebed -melech to take thirty men with him, and deliver the Prophet out of the place of his confinement. Hereupon this Officer took some old rags, and let them down with cords to Jeremiah, who placed them under his arms, to prevent any hurt which he might otherwise receive from the ropes: in this manner Ebed-melech drew him up out of the dungeon. But the Prophet was not restored to perfect liberty; for he still remained shut up in the court of the prison. God did not suffer this act of charity to pass unrewarded: for while Jeremiah was still confined in the prison-court, he said one day [Jerem. xxxix. 15, 16.] to Ebed-melech; Thus saith the Lord, Behold I will bring my words upon this city for evil, and not for good; and they shall be accomplished in that day before thee. But I will deliver thee in that day, saith the Lord, and thou shalt not be given into the hand of the men, of whom thou art afraid; because thou hast put thy trust in me. Accordingly, after the taking of the City by Nabuzaradan, Ebed-melech was preserved. In the year of the World 3416, before Jesus Christ 584, before the Vulgar Æra 588.

Ecbatana

ECBATANA, a city of Media, built by [Herodot. l. 1. c. 98.] Dejoces King of the Medes, and encompassed with seven walls, of unequal heights, and different colours: the largest of these walls, according to Herodotus, was equal in extent with those of Athens, that is to say, an hundred and seventy eight furlongs, or [Thucyd. l. 1.] three and twenty thousand three hundred paces, which make near eight leagues. The battlements of these walls were of different colours. The first were white, the second black, the third red, the fourth blue, the fifth a deep red, the sixth done over with silver, the seventh gilded. Herodotus attributes this whole work to[1] Dejoces: but in the first book of Judith, Arphaxad, whom we take to be the same as Phraortes, the successor of Dejoces, is said to have built Ecbatana.

Ecbatana was situated in old Media, and is often made a part of Persia. The Kings of Persia were used to pass the summer there, because of the freshness of the air. It [Ezra vi. 2. באחמתא] is said in the book of Ezra, that at Ecbatana in Media there was found a copy of Cyrus's Edict, whereby the Jews were permitted to return into their own country. But several Interpreters translate Achmeta, which is the word in the original, a strong box, a press, a pitcher. This Edict was found in a press, which lay among the old records of Media. The book of Tobit places the city of Rages in the mountains of Ecbatana [Tob. v. 8. 2 Macc. ix. 3.] . Lastly, in the Maccabees it is said, that Antiochus Epiphanes being at Ecbatana, had intelligence there that his armies in Palestine were routed.

Ecclesiastes

ECCLESIASTES. The Hebrew title of the Sacred book of Ecclesiastes, is Coheleth, which is a feminine word, the literal signification whereof is, She who speaks in publick; or, She who convenes the assembly. But the Greeks and Latins, without having any regard to the gender, have called it Ecclesiastes, that is to say, an Orator, one who speaks in publick. Solomon, who is the author of this book, describes himself in the very first verse in these words, The words of [Eccl. i. 1. כהלתCoheleth. Eccl. ii. 4, 5, 6.] Coheleth the son of David, King of Jerusalem. He speaks of his works, his riches, and his buildings; and in particular of his Proverbs, [Eccl. xii. 9. Eccl. i. 16.] or Parables. He there declares, that he was the wisest and happiest of all his predecessors in Jerusalem; which is so plain a character of himself, that there is no room to doubt his being meant by it[1].

Notwithstanding these reasons, there are criticks who have disputed, whether this book was written by Solomon. Grotius is of opinion, that it was composed long after Solomon, and that Zerubabel procured it to be digested into order for his son Abihud, and with an intention of erecting an eternal monument in memory of Solomon's repentance. The Author of a book intitled, The Thoughts of some Divines in Holland, says, that Ecclesiastes is a Dialogue, wherein a man of piety disputes against a Libertine, who favoured the opinions of the Sadducees. He believes that there are some things to be observed in it, which are directly opposite to each other, and could not proceed from the same person. But there is no proof of Zerubabel's having this book digested into order; nor are there any footsteps appearing in it of a dialogue: and if there are opinions which seem to contradict each other, this proceeds from Solomon's method of disputing pro and con, and proposing the objections of the Sadducees, which he replies to.

The Hebrews, St. Jerom, and the generality of Commentators believe this book to be the product of Solomon's Repentance; that he composed it some time towards the latter end of his life, when he grew sensible of the vanity of worldly things, began to detest his follies, and return to God. Accordingly we find several marks of his repentance in this book. He tells us in it, that he had studied every thing, which might gratify his senses, had denied himself no pleasure of any kind, and in all these enjoyments had found nothing but vanity. But notwithstanding these reasons, some have made a question, whether Solomon be saved; and his repentance is still at this day a problem in the Church.

The Rabbins inform us, and St. Jerom confirms it after them, that they who collected the Sacred Writings after the captivity, and placed them in the Canon, at first made some difficulty of admitting the book of Ecclesiastes. They had it under consideration, whether or no they should suppress it, by reason of some dangerous opinions which were to be met with in it, and some particular expressions, which might infuse doubts concerning the immortality of the soul; but after deliberation on the matter, it was concluded to re ceive it, as inspired Scripture, in consideration of some expressions towards the close of it, relating to the fear of God, and the observation [Eccl. xii. 13.] of his laws; and ever since this book has always been esteemed Canonical both by Jews and Christians. It is true, [Vide Synod. V. Constant. act. 4.] Theodorus of Mopsuesta was of opinion, that Solomon composed it without any particular inspiration; and Philastrius observes, that some Hereticks rejected it, as favouring Epicurism. But these opinions were never followed or approved: and the Church has condemned them, as contrary to the Faith received, and the respect due to the Canonical Scriptures.

Solomon in this book proposes the sentiments of the Sadducees and Epicureans in their full force. He proves excellently well the vanity of all things in this world, the little benefit of men's restless and busy care, and the uncertainty of their knowledge. He proposes the strongest objections that can be formed against the immortality of the soul; but at last concludes in these terms: Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man. In this all his obligations terminate, this is the only means to happiness.

Ecclesiasticus

ECCLESIASTICUS. The book of Ecclesiasticus is so called in Latin, perhaps to distinguish it from that of Ecclesiastes, or to show that it contains, as well as the former, precepts and exhortations to wisdom and virtue. The Greeks call it the Wisdom of Jesus the son of Sirach, or the Panaretos of Jesus the son of Sirach. This word Panaretos signifies a book that treats of all sorts of virtues. The Author has herein made a very large collection of maxims and instructions, useful in all states and conditions of life.

Some of the Ancients[1] have ascribed this work to Solomon, but it is certain that the Author of it is much more modern than Solomon. He speaks in it of several persons, who lived after this Prince. He himself mentions his own name in Chap. l. verse 29.[2] I Jesus the son of Sirach have written in this book the instruction of understanding and knowledge. The list chapter is inscribed, A Prayer of Jesus the son of Sirach. The Interpreter who translated it out of Syriac or Hebrew into Greek, says at the beginning, that his grand-father Jesus composed it in Hebrew.

As to the Translator, Athanasius, Epiphanius, and Joan. Damascenus were of opinion, that Jesus the son of Sirach had a son of the same name, and a grandson too, who was called Jesus, and surnamed the son of Sirach, who translated this book out of Hebrew into Greek. This is certain, that we have no authentick monument, whereby we may know the name of the Translator; for the title of the preface, which calls him Jesus, is not read so with this name in the Greek of the Roman Edition.

Some Rabbins think Ben-sira, a Jewish writer, from whom we have two alphabets of Proverbs, is the same with our Jesus the son of Sirach: this opinion was adopted by several Christian Authors; and there is indeed a great conformity to be observed in the sentences of these two writers. They who have the curiosity, may see a parallel of them drawn up by Cornelius a Lapide, and prefixed to his Comment upon Ecclesiasticus. But if it be true, as the Jews will have it, that Ben-sira was Jeremiah's nephew, and the father of one Uziel, he cannot be said to be the same as Jesus the son of Sirach, who lived long after the Jews returned from their captivity, and since the Monarchy of the Ptolemies in Egypt.

We do not know exactly in what time the Author of this book lived. He makes an encomium on the High-priest Simon, and speaks of him as not then living. But as there were more High-priests than one of this name, the difficulty still continues in full force. Nevertheless it is very probable, that he means Simon II. after whose death all those calamities befel the Jews, which might induce the son of Sirach to say, what we read in the xxxvith and lth chapters. He who translated it into Greek, came into Egypt in the thirty eighth year of Ptolemy VII. who was surnamed Euergetes, the second of that name, as he himself tells us in his Preface. But as to the Author of the Latin translation made from the Greek, he is intirely unknown. St. Jerom did not touch this book, and we have it as it was when the Old Fathers were acquainted with it, and as they cited it, in very barbarous Latin.

As to the admittance of this Book into the Canon, whether it ever had a place there or not, has been much disputed. There are several old Catalogues of the Canonical Books, wherein we do not find this. St. Jerom[3] says, the Church receives it for the edification, which may be had from it, but not with a design to authorize by it any point of doctrine in Religion. Ad ædificationem plebis, non ad authoritatem Ecclesiasticorum dogmatum confirmandam. But at present it is a received opinion in the the Catholick Church, that this book was placed in the Canon of the Holy Scriptures ; and it may be demonstrated by the testimony of several Fathers in all ages, and by the tradition of all Christian Churches, that it has at all times been reverenced and quoted by a great number of Ecclesiastical Writers, as inspired by the Holy Ghost. And if some of the Ancients did not insert it in their Catalogue, it was because they had confined themselves to place such writings only in their lists, which were not contested, and were unanimously admitted by both Jews and Christians.

Eclipse

ECLIPSE. We do not meet with this word in Scripture. The Hebrews seem not to have philosophized much upon Eclipses. They considered them as miraculous effects, and sensible marks of God's anger. Job seems to say, that an Eclipse is caused by [Vide Joel ii. 10, 31. and iii. 15. Job xxxvi. 32. Job ix. 7.] the interposition of the hand of God between us, and the Star eclipsed. In manibus abscondit lucem, & præcipit ei ut rursus adveniat. In another place he says, That God commandeth the Sun, and it riseth not, and sealeth up the Stars. Ezekiel speaks in a more particular manner, saying, that God [Ezek. xxxii. 7.] covers the Sun with clouds, when he deprives us of the light of it by an Eclipse.

The Eclipse which happened at our Saviour's [Matth. xxvii. 45.] death, is a miracle not to be contested, since the Moon being then at the full, could not naturally cause an Eclipse. Besides, Eclipses generally last about an hour only, whereas this continued three; From the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour. Origen, with many others after him, believed this darkness to [Origen. in Matth. xxvii.] be particular to Judæa, which is very often described by the name of all the Earth. Others are of opinion, that our whole Hemisphere was then covered with darkness. Julius Africanus, Eusebius, and St. Jerom have cited Phlegon, the Emperor Adrian's freed-man, who said, that in the fourth year of the two hundred and second Olympiad, [Jul. African. apud Syncell. Euseb. & Hieron. in Chronic.] which is the year of Jesus Christ's death, there was the greatest Eclipse of the Sun that had been ever seen to that time, for at noon-day the Stars in the Heavens were plainly discernable. Tertullian refers the Heathens to [Tertul. Apolog. c. 21. Rufin. l. 9. c. 6. Hist. Eccl.] their publick records, to find there the time when it was night at noon-day.

Lucian a Priest of Antioch, who suffered martyrdom in 312, is introduced by Rufinus, speaking in this manner to the Heathens: Consult your annals, and you will find, that when Jesus Christ died, the Sun disappeared, and the day-light was interrupted by uncommon darkness. Thallus an ancient Author, is likewise named by Julius Africanus, as having taken notice of the extraordinary darkness attending the Passion of our Saviour. The spurious [Dionys. Areopag. Ep. 7. ad Polycarp.] Dionysius the Areopagite says, that when he was at Heliopolis in Egypt, he observed the Eclipse which happened upon this occasion; and as he knew that according to the rules of Astronomy it could not happen at that time, Allophanes, who was then his fellow-student in that city, cried out, These, dear Dionysius, are supernatural and divine changes; or, these are changes of things that are divine. Suidas makes Dionysius himself use this expression, Either the Divinity itself suffers, or compassionates some other, who is suffering.

Eden

EDEN, a Province in the East, where [Genes. ii.8. גן בעדן] Paradise was situated. The Lord planted East-ward a garden of Delights, or according to the Hebrew text, a Garden in Eden. We shall speak of Paradise in another place, here we shall content our selves with describing only the Province of Eden. There is mention of the country of Eden or Aden in several places of the Scripture. Isaiah speaks of the [xxxvii. 12.] Children of Eden, or the people of this country, who were at Telassar. The same is observable in the second book of Kings xix. 12,13. where the children of Eden are joined with Gozan, Haran and Rezeph. Ezekiel [Ezek. xxvii. 23.] likewise mentions the merchants of Eden with those of Haran, Cannah, Ashur, and Chilmad. Now Haran is the same as Charræ in Mesopotamia upon the river Chaboras; Canneh, or Calneh, perhaps Callinicum in Mesopotamia. We are of opinion, that the country of Eden extended itself into Armenia, and included the sources of the Euphrates, Tigris, Phasis and Araxes.

[יאר עדן Jor-aden.] Some believe the garden of Eden was situated about Jordan, and the very name of Jordan is derived from Jor, and Aden: Jor-Aden, the stream of Aden; that the lake Gennesareth, which is at some places below the source of this river, [גנהשרהGanhasareth.] comes from Gennat-Sara, the Prince's garden, or the principal garden. Lastly, the Scripture says, that the country about Jordan, in the neighbourhood of Sodom and [Gen. ii. 8.] Gomorrah, was like the Paradise of the Lord. By the word Gennat-Adu, the Garden [Bibl. Orient. p 36. Adu.] of Eden, the Mahometans understand the Paradise of the Blessed, whither they believe Adam to have been transported, and from whence afterwards he was driven. They say, that when God made the Garden of Eden, he created there what Eye had not seen, nor Ear heard, neither hath entred into the Heart of man to conceive; that to this God gave the use of Speech, to this Paradise, and caused it to utter these words, There is no other God besides God himself. They add, that there are eight gates belonging to Paradise, whereas Hell has but seven; from whence they conclude, that the mercy of God surpasses his justice, and that it is more easy to be saved than to be damned.

EDEN, a town upon Mount Libanus, situated in a very delicious place; the river Adonis is not far from it, and a little more to the South are the Cedars of Libanus. It is our opinion, that the Prophet Amos speaks of this town of Eden, or Aden, in these terms; I will destroy him who holds the Sceptre of the house of Eden, or, according to the Vulgate, of the house of pleasure.

EDESSA, a city of Mesopotamia, built about four hundred years before Jesus [Hieron. in Chronico.] Christ, by the great Seleucus King of Syria, in that part of Mesopotamia, called Osrhoëne, and remarkable in Church History for the Letter which Jesus Christ wrote to King Abgarus or Agabarus, or Abagarus, who reigned at Edessa. Count Darius in [Apud Aug. Ep. 230. Nov. Edit. Evagr. l. 4. c. 27. Hist. Eccles.] St. Austin says, our Saviour promised Abgarus, that the city of Edessa should be impregnable; and Evagrius remarks, that altho' this was not in our Lord's Letter, it was nevertheless the common belief of the Faithful; which was much confirmed, when Cosrhoes King of Persia, having sat down before it, was forced to raise the siege[1]. St. Thaddæus, one of the Seventy Disciples, and different from the Apostle of the same name, was sent by St. Thomas to instruct the people of Edessa; he converted them to Christianity, together with Abgarus their King, who upon the reputation only of Jesus Christ's doctrine and miracles, had begun already to believe in him.

EDOM, otherwise Esau, the Son of Isaac, and brother of Jacob. The name of Edom, which signifies red, was given him, either because he sold his birth-right to [Gen. xxv. 25, 30.] Jacob for a mess of red pottage, or by reason of the colour of his hair and complexion. Effeminati

EFFEMINATI. There is mention of them in several places of Scripture, and in a sense very different from that, wherein this term is understood in our language. Effeminate in the style of the Sacred Writings, signifies corrupt persons; consecrated to some profane God, and prostituting themselves in honour of him. The word Kadesh translated effeminatus, signifies properly one consecrated, but by a [קדשKadesch. Effeminatus.] mistaken use of it, it has been attributed to those of either sex, who publickly prostituted themselves, particularly in honour of Baal and Astarte. These ignominious victims of immodesty had cells in forests of tall trees, where they exercised their infamous imployment, Ædiculas effeminatorum. [Deut. xxiii. 18. 2 Kings xxiii. 7. Job xxxvi. 14. 1 Kings xiv. 24. xv. 12. xxii. 47. Hos. iv. 14. Isai. iii. 4. עלולים] Moses expressly forbad these irregularities among the Israelities, but the history of the Jews shews, that they were frequently practised by them.

We find likewise the word Effeminati in Isaiah iii. 4. but the Hebrew reads parvuli in this place, people without understanding and experience. We read also in the Proverbs xviii. 8. Pigrum dejicit timor, animæ autem effœminatorum esurient. But this verse is not in the Hebrew; and the Greek word Androgynos signifies a person, who partakes of both sexes, both of the man and woman.

His general residence was at Jericho, and the Lord raised up Ehud to deliver his people from the oppression of the Moabites. In the Article of EHUD, we shall relate the particular manner, wherein he put Eglon to death. Egypt

EGYPT, a Country in Africk, called in Hebrew, Mezor, or Mezraïm[1], or Mizraïm, and in Greek, Aiguptos, whence the Latin, Ægyptus, and the English, Egypt, and Copt are derived. Mizraïm was the son of Ham; and Ægyptus was, they say, an ancient King of this Country, the son of Belus, and brother of Armaïs. [Gen. x. 13.] The sons of Mizraïm were Ludim, Anamim, Sehabim, and Naphtuhim, Pathrusim, and Casluhim, who peopled several Cantons of Egypt, or the Countries adjacent. The old Geographers placed one part of Egypt in Asia, the other in Africk. The part in Asia lay eastward of the Nile, the other westward of the same river. The Ancients likewise described that part of lower Egypt, which lies eastward of the Nile, as belonging to Arabia; and the same is in the Scripture made part of the land of Cush, which is so frequently translated Ethiopia.

Egypt was divided into Nomæ, or Cantons, whereof there were reckoned to be two and forty, which were as it were so many little Provinces. Egypt was distinguished into the Upper and Lower. The Upper was likewise called Thebaïs, because of the city Thebes, which was the Capital of it. It extended itself a great way towards the south as far as the frontiers of Ethiopia. Lower Egypt contained principally the Delta, and the Country lying upon the Coasts of the Mediterranean. Every one knows, that Egypt has properly but one river, which is the Nile, by the inundations whereof all the fertility of the Country is produced[2].

The Arabians call that part of Egypt which extends from Cairo to the Mediterranean, Rib, or Rif. Upper Epypt is called [Rif.] Sais, or Thebaïs, and the part between both, Souf. The word Rib or Rif is mentioned in Scripture, Memor ero Rahab, & [Psalm lxxxvi. 4.] Babylonis scientium me; where Rahab and Rib are the same thing. We find it again in this sense, Psalm lxxxix. 11. and Isaiah xxx. 7. and li. 9. The word Souf is likewise to be met with in the sacred Books written in Hebrew, Moses calls what we term the Red Sea, the Sea of Souf. It is amazing that Sais, which is the name of Thebes, the famous Capital of Upper Egypt, should no where be found in Scripture. Some are of opinion, that Thebes is there called No-Ammon, or the dwelling of Jupiter. M. D'Herbelot says, that Said in Arabic signifies an high ground, and that they call the upper part of Egypt, which is Thebaïs, Saïd Mesr. Now the Thebaïs is again divided into Upper, Lower, and Middle. The Upper comprehends the Cities of Arment, Arsouan, (or Siena) Asna, probably Latopolis, and Soïouth: to these some join the towns of Kist, Coss, and Acsour.

Lower Thebaïs includes the Cities of Abousig, Aschmounim, Manraloux, and Fioum. The middle part of it contains the City of Akonin.

[Bibl. Orient. p. 579. Mesr.] The name of Mesr, Misor, or Misraim, son of Ham, is preserved in the City of the same name, which has been successively called Misor, Memphis, Moph, Babylon, and Cairo. It went by the name of Moph or Memphis, till the time of Alexander the Great; then it was called Babylon, by reason of its situation, and the relation it had to Babylon of Chaldæa. This City was conquer'd by the Arabians in the 18th or 19th year of the Hegira. Amrou-Ben-As, who took it, built another very near it, which was called Fusthath, by reason of this General's tent, which was set up for a long time in the same place. The Fatimite Caliphs having made themselves masters of Egypt, added besides another City, which they named Caberah, that is to say, the Victorious, which is known to us at this day by the name of Grand Cairo.

The

The Mameluc Sultans of the Dynasty of the Circassians, having afterwards built a Castle very high, and very well fortified on the eastern shore of the Nile, drew thither most of the inhabitants of Cairo, so that this City insensibly changed its situation, and the Cairo built by the Fatimites was no more known by any other name than that of Old Cairo. Cairo is built upon the eastern shore of the Nile, but the ancient Misor or Mesr, was built on the western shore of the same river.

As to the name of Egypt, it comes from Kibt, or Kibthi, which is the ancient city of Coptos in High Egypt, distant from the Nile [Bibl. Orient. p. 1003. Kibt.] about seven Parasangs, which make about fourteen Leagues. From this town of Coptos, the Cophti or present Egyptians derived their name, who are all Christians, and speak a language compounded of Greek and old Egyptian. The Turks call the old Egyptians, who are natives of the Country, and not Mussulmen, Kibs. Their Authors mention Egypt as one of the best and most beautiful Countries in the world: one of them says, the Soil of this Country is for three months in the year white and sparkling like a pearl, for three months black like musk, for three more green like emeralds, and for three months more as yellow as amber. He enumerates all the particular things which are to be found only in Egypt; the principal whereof are these, a mine of oriental Emeralds, red Barley, Opium, Balm of Matarœa, Joseph's Wheat, the art of hatching Chickens in ovens, Honey of the Bees of Baenza, the Egyptian Bean, fine Flax, Cassia, the Fish called Scinchur, several sorts of Woods and Marbles singular in their kind, the plant Papyrus, &c. It should not therefore appear so surprizing, to find the Israelites in the Wilderness regretting their departure out of so excellent and fine a Country.

[Odyss. xiv. v. 258. Στῆσα τ' ἐν 'Αιγύπτῳ ποταμῷ νέας ἀμφιελίσσας.] Homer calls the Nile, Ægyptus. Several of the Ancients have asserted in their writings, that Egypt was no more than a large tract of land produced by the Nile; and of this the Ethiopians were so persuaded, that they made use of this argument to prove, that they were more ancient than the Egyptians. Bochart has confuted this opinion in his Phaleg. l. 4. c. 24.

Egypt is divided into two parts by a great ridge of Mountains, which lies between the Nile and the Red Sea; and extends from North to South. The space between these Mountains and the Red Sea is in the possession of the Arabians, and almost intirely a desart; but so much as lies between the Nile and these Mountains, is the most fertile Country in the world. They are forced to throw sand upon their lands, to lessen the excessive fruitfulness of them, which proceeds from the inundations of the Nile, this river regularly overflowing the [Plin. l. 18. c. 18.] Country hereabouts in the beginning of the summer solstice, and so continuing there during the whole time of the sun's passage through the sign Leo: it decreases when the sun cometh to Virgo, and when it is at Libra, the Nile sinks intirely into its channel. The old Egyptians had two crops of corn every year from the same ground; at present they are content with one. After barley-harvest they sow in the same field rice, melons, and cucumbers. Egypt is said to have furnished Rome with corn to the quantity of twenty millions of bushels.

[Plin. ibid. Cassian. collat. 15. c. 4. Exod. ix. 31, 32. Joseph. Antiq. l. 3. c. 10.] Pliny says, they set about sowing in the beginning of November; that the first of their harvest is in April, and that in May they finish it. Moses observes, that in the middle of March, when the Israelites departed out of Egypt, the barley and flax, which were already far advanced, were spoiled by the hail; but that the wheat, which is backwarder, was preserved. The Egyptians sowed their barley and flax before winter, that is to say, in the beginning of November, after the waters of the Nile had retired. Winter in this Country is very moderate, and the inhabitants put their horses to grass in January and February. The wheat-harvest was compleatly ended by Pentecost in Palestine and Egypt: the whole harvest must certainly have been over when the Nile began to overflow.

The Egyptians boasted in being the most ancient people in the world: they have been thought to be the Inventors of Arts and Sciences: they communicated to the Greeks the names of the gods, and their false Theology: they carried Superstition and Idolatry farther than any other people, worshipping stars and men, animals, and even plants, if the Heathens themselves may be believed in this particular, who have ridiculed their excessive Superstition. In imitation of them, the Hebrews adored the golden Calf in the [Exod. xxxii. 6.] wilderness; and Jeroboam set up the like Figures, which he recommended to his subjects, as objects of their worship. Moses informs us, that the Hebrews sacrificed beasts, the death whereof was looked upon by the Egyptians as an abomination, and something [Exod. viii. 26. Gen. xlvi. 34. Maneth apud Joseph. l. 1. contra Apion. Euseb. præpar. l. x. c. 13.] detestable. He tells us likewise, that they would not eat with the Hebrews, because they had an abhorrence for all shepherds.

As to the motives of this aversion, opinions are much divided. Some believe it to be founded on the invasion of Egypt by the Kings surnamed Shepherds, who came from Arabia, made an irruption into this Country, and reigned there for a long time, according to Manetho's relation. Others think, that the Egyptians, from the time of their King Sesostris having been accustomed to a soft and idle life, detested shepherds, whose profession was more active and laborious. Lastly, others will have it, that the Egyptians were so averse to the Hebrew, and other shepherds, on the score of their killing and eating sheep, kids, and goats, which were the objects of their worship.

We have examined in the Article CEREMONIES, whether the Hebrews received those Laws and Ceremonies, which are common to both Nations, from the Egyptians, or whether the Egyptians received them from the Hebrews.

Nothing is more common in Scripture than the name of Egypt. This Country, properly speaking, was the cradle of the Hebrew nation. Joseph being carried thither and sold as a slave, was soon, by a very sensible effect of God's Wisdom and Providence, established Governour, and as it were Viceroy of all Egypt. Hither he invited his father and all his family to the number of about seventy persons, and after an abode there of two hundred and fifteen years, they departed thence [They came into Egypt in the year of the World 2298, and departed thence in 2513, before J. C. 1487, before the Vulgar Æra 1491.] in number six hundred and three thousand, five hundred and fifty men, capable of bearing arms, without reckoning women and children. The King of Egypt would not permit the Hebrews to leave his country till he was compell'd thereto by miracles and chastisements inflicted on his people. Moses afflicted Egypt with ten plagues, before this obstinate Prince could resolve with himself to let a numerous people go, whom he had enslaved, and from whom he received great services: and after he had dismissed them, and compelled them to go away, he repented, pursued them with his army, and having inconsiderately followed them into the channel of the Red Sea, he there perished with all his people.

The common name of the Egyptian Kings was Pharaoh, which among them signified sovereign power. But besides this, they had another name which was proper to them. History has preserved the names of several Kings of Egypt, and a succession of their Dynasties. But the inclination of these Historians to cry up the great antiquity of their nation, [Vide Manethon. apud Joseph. l. 1. contra Appion. Chronic. Ægypt. apud Syncel. Marsham Can. Chronolog. Ægypt.] has induced them to inlarge very much in their accounts of the duration of their Empire, whereby they have forfeited their credit with all people, who are lovers of truth. They assert, that Egypt was successively governed by Gods, Demigods, or Heroes, and at last by Men, or Kings. The reign of the Gods and Demigods lasted, as they pretend, four and thirty thousand two hundred and one years; that of their Kings from Menes to Nectanebus, two thousand three hundred and twenty four years. Nectanebus was deposed by Artaxerxes Ochus, King of Persia, fifteen years before the Monarchy of Alexander the Great. From Nectanebus to the birth of Jesus Christ, there are reckoned about three hundred and forty years. So that from the beginning of the Egyptian Monarchy to the birth of our Saviour, there must have been by this account thirty-six thousand eight hundred sixty-five years. A computation which is given up by all our Chronologers.

It is supposed that the way wherein the ancient Egyptians computed their years, must have contributed much to swell their Chronology so immoderately, and to the multiplying the great number of years which their first Kings are supposed to have reigned. Palæphatus says, that of old they [Palæphat. Fragm. ex Chron Alexand.] reckoned the duration of their Princes reigns by days, and not by years. And who will warrant us, that they who came after, did not set down years instead of days; and that when they read, for example, that Helios the son of Vulcan reigned four thousand four hundred and seventy seven days, that is to say, twelve years, three months and four days, they did not affirm that he reigned four thousand four hundred and seventy seven years?

Diodorus the Sicilian says, that the Egyptians tell us fabulous stories, when they affirm to us, that the most ancient of their Gods reigned each, at least twelve hundred years, and the least ancient of them not less than three hundred years. So that from the reign of Helios, or the Sun, to Alexander the Great's passage into Asia, they reckon two and twenty thousand years. But, he adds, as this number of years exceeds all belief, some have endeavoured to excuse them by observing, that at the beginning, their year consisted only of one month, according to the course of the moon; so that the twelve hundred years of every God's reign were reduced to twelve hundred months, or an hundred years. Afterwards, as he proceeds to say farther, the Egyptian year having been made up of four months, they asserted that their Kings reigned every one at least three hundred years, which make twelve hundred months, or an hundred years. By this means the excessive antiquity of the Egyptian Dynasties [Censorin. de die natali, c. 19.] was reduced to a reasonable duration. Censorinus assures us, that anciently the Egyptian year consisted only of two months, and that King Pison added two months more to the year, and at last fixed it at twelve months.

It is farther certain, that the Dynasties of Egypt, which are so much talked of, were not all successive, but were many of them collateral, and that the greatest part of those Kings, who are placed one after the other, were oftentimes contemporary; one reigning in one Canton of Egypt, another in another. These Lists also bear seven different names according to the seven Cantons, wherein the Dynasties subsisted: viz. at This, at Memphis, Diospolis, Thanis, Sethron, Elephantina, and at Sais. Now if these Dynasties are placed successively, we may easily imagine that the duration of 6 I them may be very much enlarged, and such an antiquity attributed to them as no way belongs to them. Wherefore to avoid the danger of publishing what is false for truth, we shall be excused if we do not here set down a list of the first Kings of Egypt.

From Mizraïm the Scripture perpetually calls the Kings of this Country by the name of Pharaoh, and has delivered down to us the proper names of four only of these [1 Kings xi. 40. 2 Kings xxiii. 29. Jerem. xlvi. 2. 2 Kings xvii. 4. Jerem. xlv. 30. Herodot. l.2.c.158, 159. Herodot. l.2.c.141. Herodot. l.2.c.161, &c.] Princes, Shishak, Necho, So, and Hophrah. Shishak is perhaps Sesonchis[3]; Necho is Nechos in Herodotus; So is the same as Sabacon or Sethon; and Hophrah is Apries. Shishak lived in the time of Rehoboam the son of Solomon; Necho, in the time of Josiah King of Judah; So, in the time of Hoshea King of Israel; and Hophrah in the time of Jeremiah and Zedekiah. Herodotus makes him to be the son of Psammis, and grandson of Necho. The history of him may be seen in this Author. After Apries we find Amasis, and Psammitichus, in whose reign Cambyses made a conquest of Egypt, in the year of the World 3479, before Jesus Christ 521, before the Vulgar Æra 525[4]. After this, we again find the following Kings in Egypt, Inarus, Ackoris, Tuchos, Nectanebus. This last was deprived of his Kingdom by Artaxerxes Ochus, in the year of the World 3654, before Jesus Christ 346, before the Vulgar Æra 350. About nineteen years after, Alexander the Great entred Egypt, and conquered it, in the year of the World 3673, before Jesus Christ 327, before the Vulgar Æra 331.

The Ptolemys succeeded Alexander, and we have a series of them in the order of their succession, which may be depended upon.

Ptolemy the son of Lagus, surnamed Soter, reigned nine and thirty years; from the death of Alexander, which happened in the year of the World 3681, to 3720.

Ptolemy Philadelphus reigned nine and thirty years; from 3720 to 3758.

Ptolemy Euergetes, reigned five and twenty years; from 3758 to 3783.

Ptolemy Philopater, seventeen years; from 3783 to 3800.

Ptolemy Epiphanes, four and twenty years; from 3800 to 3824.

Ptolemy Philometor, thirty seven years; from 3824 to 3861.

Ptolemy Euergetes, or Physcon, fifty three years, from 3861 to 3888.

Ptolemy Lathyrus, thirty six years, six months; from 3888 to 3923.

Cleopatra, the daughter of Lathyrus, and wife of Alexander I. reigned six months.

Constantine Manasseh, in his Chronicle, allows the Egyptian Monarchy to have continued no longer than 1663 years. Now if we go back as far as from the conquest of Egypt by Cambyses, this reaches no farther than to the year of the World 1816, about 160 years after the Deluge.

Egypt

EGYPT; the Brook, or River of Egypt. The Scripture frequently mentions the Brook or River of Egypt, as the southern limits of the Land of Promise, on the side of Egypt. For example; God says to Abraham, [Gen. xv. 18. 2 Chron. vii. 8.] Unto thy seed have I given this land from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates. And in another place, Solomon convened a general Assembly of all his people at the dedication of the Temple, from the entring in of Hamath, unto the river of Egypt. Lastly, Moses, describing the southern boundaries [Numb. xxxiv. 5.] of the promised Land, places them from Azmon unto the river of Egypt, and the goings of it, says he, shall be at the sea, the Mediterratean. See the same thing, Joshua xv. 4.

The subject of our present enquiry is to know what this river of Egypt is. Several [1 Sam. xxx. 10. Josh. xiii. 3. Amos vi. 14.] have taken it to be the brook Besor, otherwise the brook of the wilderness, situated between Gaza and Rhinocorura. But we do not in the least question but that it was the Nile[1], the only river that flows through Egypt. Joshua visibly describes it by the name of Sichor, which is the true name of the Nile; as if it were said, the muddy river, because the waters of this river are frequently thick and muddy. Amos takes notice of it by the name of the River of the wilderness; because the most eastern arm of the Nile, and the nearest to the Land of Canaan, was near Arabia, or the wilderness, called in Hebrew, Araba, and watered the canton, by the Egyptians called Arabian. The Hebrew word Nahal, translated brook, signifies likewise a river.

It fell by lot to the Tribe of Judah in the first division made by Joshua; Josh. xv. 45. but afterwards it was given up to the Tribe of Dan, Josh. xix. 43. It was situated very near the Mediterranean, between Ashdod and Jamnia. Ekron was a powerful City; and it does not appear by history, that the Jews were ever sole peaceable possessors of it: the Ekronites were the first, who said, that it was necessary to send back the Ark of the God of Israel, in order to be delivered from those calamities which the presence of it brought upon their country; 1 Sam. v. 10. The Idol Beelzebub was principally adored at Ekron, 2 Kings i. 2, &c. Some have attempted very preposterously to confound Ekron with Strato's Tower, where Herod the great afterwards built the City of Cæsarea in Palestine. Cæsarea was much more north than Ekron.

Elam (II)

II. ELAM, a City of Edom situated upon the Elanitick Gulph of the Red Sea. Eusebius places it at no more than ten miles distance eastward from Petra. David having subdued the Edomites, made himself master of Elam. The Edomites having recovered their liberty in the reign of Jehoram, the son of Jehoshaphat, they continued independent till the time of Uzziah or Azariah, who retook Elam from them, 2 Kings xiv. 22. But he did not long preserve this conquest. Rezin, King of Syria, took it once more from Uzziah, and drove the Jews out of it. Elam is to be met with in the Ancients under the name of Elana, Elath, Elas, Ælan, or Elon. Strabo places it at the distance of twelve hundred and sixty furlongs from Gaza, which make about an hundred and fiftyseven thousand paces. This difference is small for so great a distance. St. Jerom says, that the City of Elam lay at the extreme part of Palestine. Procopius also places it at the eastern extremity of Palestine. In the Councils we find some Bishops of Elam among those of the third Palestine.

Abulfeda gives us the following account of this City. He says, it was formerly a small town with some fruitful lands about it: at present it is no more than a Tower, which serves as an habitation for a Governour, who depends upon the Governour of Grand Cairo. There is no such thing there now as fields sown with corn. Formerly there was a fort built in the sea, but at present it is all in ruins. The commanding Officer lodges in the tower we mentioned, which is built upon the shore. Elam is situated over-against Colzum; Elam being to the east, and Colzum to the west. Mount Sina is between both. Abulfeda places Elam in the fifty-fifth degree of longitude, and in the twenty-ninth degree of latitude. He cites Almostarcus, who sets it down in the fiftysixth degree of longitude and forty minutes, and in the twenty-eighth degree of latitude and fifty minutes.

Eldad and Medad

[Numb. xi. 24, 25, &c.] ELDAD and MEDAD, were appointed by Moses to be of the number of the seventy Elders of Israel, who were to assist him in the government of the people; and though they were not present with their Collegues in the Assembly, they were notwithstanding filled with the Spirit of God, as the rest were, and began to prophesy in the Camp. Joshua having notice of it, and fearing lest this might be a prejudice to the honour of Moses, said to him, My Lord, forbid them. But Moses replied, Enviest thou for my sake? would to God that all the people prophesied, and that God would pour forth his Spirit upon them! There are some who believe, that Eldad and Medad were brothers to Moses; but these are traditions without any foundation.

Elders of Israel

ELDERS of Israel. By this name we understand the Heads of Tribes, or rather of the great Families in Israel, who in the beginbeginnings, [Exod. xii. 16. iv. 29. &c.] and before the settlement of the Hebrew Commonwealth, had a kind of government and authority over their families, and over the whole people. For example, when Moses was sent into Egypt to deliver Israel, he called together the Elders of Israel, and told them, that the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, had appeared to him in the wilderness, and commanded him to conduct them out of Egypt. Moses and Aaron treat upon all occasions with the Elders of Israel, as the representatives of the whole nation.

[Exod. xxiv. 1, 9, 10.] When God was pleased to manifest his glory to Israel, and give the law to Moses, he said to him, Take Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu his sons, and the seventy Elders of Israel, and worship ye afar off. They advanced as far as the foot of the mountain; they saw the God of Israel, and under his feet as it were a paved work of Saphire stone, and as it were the body of heaven in its brightness: but they did not go up, Moses alone with Joshua ascended the mountain, and at his departure from them, he said, Tarry ye here for us, until we come again unto you; and behold Aaron and Hur are with you, if any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them. Upon all occasions afterwards, we find this number of seventy Elders. But it is credible, that as there were twelve Tribes, there were likewise seventy two Elders, six of each, and that a round number seventy is set down, instead of seventy two; or rather that Moses and Aaron made the seventy first and second, and that there were but four Elders of the Tribe of Levi, supposing them not to be included.

[Grotius in Exod. iv. 29. Bertram. de Rep. Heb.] Some have been of opinion, that these seventy Elders of Israel formed a kind of Senate in Egypt, for the better governing, and doing justice to the people, while they were dependant on the King of Egypt; and that from hence the famous Sanhedrim is derived, whereof there is such frequent mention made in the writings of the Jews. But it is much more credible, that in the beginning these elders exercised each over their respective Tribe, and all together over the whole people, a jurisdiction only like that which the fathers of families exercise over their children; an authority in the way of friendship, advice, and persuasion, founded upon the respectful obedience, which is due to parents, rather than an authority shewn in the way of compulsion and constraint. The Commissioners appointed to inspect how the children of Israel performed their tasks in Egypt, or according [Exod. v. 14, 15. שטרים LXX. Γραμματεῖς. Scribæ.] to the Hebrew, the Soterim, were, as some will have it, the same with those whom we just now called Elders of Israel, who judged and commanded the people. The Septuagint translate the original Scribes, Commissioners who had a list of those that worked, who parcelled out to them their several tasks, and took care that they performed them.

After Jethro's arrival in the Camp of Israel, Moses made a considerable change in the government of the people. Till then he alone had judged them, and this fatiguing employment took him up so intirely, that he had scarce time to breathe. Upon the remonstrances of Jethro his father-in-law, he established over all Israel heads of [Exod. xviii. 24, 25, &c.] thousands, hundreds, fifties and tens, that justice might at all times be administred to the people, and that whatever difficult cases arose, should be referred to Moses: but this constitution did not continue long without change; for upon the murmuring of the people at the incampment called the [Numb. xi. 24, 25. In the Year 2516. Numb. xxxii. 37.] Graves of Lust, Moses appointed seventy Elders of Israel, to whom God communicated part of this Legislator's spirit; they began to prophesy, and ceased not afterwards to do so. This, according to the generality of Interpreters, was the beginning of the famous Sanhedrim; but to support this opinion, many things are necessarily to be supposed, whereby it may be made appear, that this Court of Justice was all along in being.

[Josh. ix. 15. Joshua xxiii. xxiv. 1. xxiv. 32.] We believe that the establishment of the seventy Elders by Moses continued, not only during the life of this Legislator, but under the government of Joshua likewise, and even after his death, under the Judges. The Elders of the people and Joshua swore to the treaty with the Gibeonites. The same Joshua, a little before his death, renewed the covenant with the Lord, together with the Elders, the Princes, the Heads, and Officers. After the death of Joshua and the Elders who survived him, the people were several times brought into bondage, from which God as often delivered them, by his instruments, the Judges. We do not see distinctly what authority the Elders had all this time, and still less under the Kings who succeeded them. See our Dissertation on the Polity and Justice of the Hebrews, and hereafter the article SANHEDRIM.

Eleasa

ELEASA, or Laisa, the name of a place near Berœa, or rather Berotho, a city in the Tribe of Benjamin, whereof we have no knowledge in the Scripture, but by the battle which was fought there between Judas Maccabœus on one side, and Bacchides and Alcimus, High Priest of the [1 Macc. ix. 1, &c.] Jews, on the other. Demetrius Soter having intelligence of Nicanor's death, and the defeat of his army, sent Bacchides again, and Alcimus into Judea, with the right wing of his army, that is to say, with the choice of his troops, to the number of two and twenty thousand foot and two thousand horse. They came at first to Jerusalem, thinking to meet Judas there, but upon intelligence that he was incamp'd at Eleasa with three thousand chosen men, they went thither and incamped at Berœa, a place not far from it. Judas's troops seeing so great a multitude of enemies, were terrified to such a degree, that the generality of them deserted, so that eight hundred soldiers only remained with him.

Judas finding himself to be thus abandoned at a time when there was a necessity for his engaging, was very much concerned, and so much the more, for that there was no opportunity to gather new forces; notwithstanding, he omitted nothing to encourage those who remained with him, and animate them to the combat. They represented to him that as their number was so inconsiderable, it was more expedient to wait for some reinforcement; to which he replied, God forbid that we should do so, and fly before our enemies: if our hour is come, let us die courageously for our brethren, and not sully our glory by so base an action. The enemy leaving their camp, marched to meet them, having disposed the horse in both the wings; the Slingers and the Archers marched before the army, and the first rank was composed of the most valiant soldiers, Bacchides taking his post on the right wing. The trumpets on both sides began to sound, the mountains round about echoed with the noise, and Judas having observed, that the right wing, where Bacchides commanded, was the strongest, he attacked it, broke, and pursued it to the mountain of Azotus; but the left wing having hemmed in Judas and his people in the rear, the combat was a long time obstinate, and Judas, at last overwhelmed with the multitude of his enemies, fell down dead upon the spot, and his people fled.

[Observations on the battle of Eleasa between Judas Maccabæus and Bacchides. 1 Macc. ix. 1, &c.] This action of Judas Maccabœus, who resolved with eight hundred men to attack an army of twenty thousand foot, and two thousand horse; this action, I say, surprizes those very much, who do not know that History is full of extraordinary exploits of this kind: but they recover from their surprize, when they consider, that an able and enterprizing General, who is acquainted with the valour and resolute boldness of his troops, never despairs at a time of necessity, when death and a retreat being inseparable, there is nothing left but either to conquer or perish.

Judas, after the desertion of the greatest part of his troops, was under this melancholy necessity; he made use of the powerful battery of Religion, to raise the courage of those, who continued faithful to him. This was the most effectual expedient that Generals could devise in great dangers. In the time of the Maccabees miracles were rare; they were to be seen only at great distances of time, notwithstanding there always was an appearance of some, and God had not intirely forsaken his people; he still had compassion of their calamities, tho' they had rendred themselves unworthy of his favours. The virtue, piety and admirable qualities of Judas Maccabœus, whom Dom. Calmet compares with Jesus Christ, [Commentaire sur le liv. 1. c. ix. vi. 18. des Maccabées.] long withheld the wrath of God from this ungrateful and perfidious people; but at last this great man perished in this action, and they who would not leave him, were rather overwhelmed, than conquered.

[1 Macc. ix. 5. Ib. verse 6.] Judas incamped at Eleasa with three thousand chosen men. I cannot tell for what reason the Sacred author adds the epithet chosen, which is generally interpreted brave, valiant, courageous; for tho' they were in a condition to make head against, and even to defeat this formidable army of Bacchides, the greatest part of them were pusillanimous creatures, since above two thirds of them had not the courage to make a stand, but unworthily deserted so brave a General, and who ought to have been so dear to them. His people, says the Sacred Author, seeing the multitude of the other army to be so great, were sore afraid; whereupon many conveyed themselves out of the host, insomuch that there abode of them no more than eight hundred men. If all the cowards, as well officers as soldiers, were expelled out of an army, at the instant of a decisive action, there would be few remaining; but these few delivered from such a vile crew, would do infinitely more, than if the cowards had continued intermixed with them.

Judas was extremely concerned, and his spirits almost sunk, to see the baseness of those who abandoned him; nevertheless this great Hero, re-assuming his courage, directed himself to those who would have diverted him from fighting, and said, What would you [Ib. verse 10.] fly before your enemies? If our time is come, let us die courageously for our brethren, rather than stain our honour by so ignominious an action. He found himself probably so far ingaged, and so near the enemy, that there was more danger in retreating than in fighting; because by fighting, his honour was at least secured; besides, he had often experienced, that victory was in the hands of God, who gave it to whom he pleased, without having a regard to number.

[Ib. verses 11, 12.] With that the host of Bacchides removed [6 K] out of their tents, and stood over against them ; the cavalry was divided into two bodies posted on the wings, the slingers and the archers marched before the army, and the first rank was formed out of the strongest and most valiant men. Bacchides was in the right wing, and the battalions on both sides marched, and sounded their trumpets. Dom. Calmet translates the following passage, proximavit legio ex duabus partibus, by these words, the battalions marched on both sides. This to me seems not to be exact, for the word legio in the singular number, should not be interpreted many battalions, since the method of putting themselves into order of battle among the Asiatick people, was different from that of the Romans, and they fought in phalanxes, and drawn up in one line only, not by battalions or cohorts. Wherefore in my opinion it should be translated, the Phalanx of both sides, or of both the wings, made its approach. We may easily comprehend, that the two wings of Bacchides advanced, in order to hem in Judas's troops; we cannot think otherwise For how could it be said that the battalions marched on both sides, since Judas had but an handful of men? and by translating it thus, one would believe that he was at the head of many battalions.

They also of Judas side sounded their trumpets, and the earth shook with the noise of the armies. If the author had only Judas's people in view, this hyperbole would be a little extravagant: and the battle continued from morning till night. I can scarce comprehend, that eight hundred men could so long resist an army so very much superior to them, and which incompassed them on every side. I can easily conceive that soldiers so resolute and brave, with such a General at their head as Judas Maccabæus, might break and put to flight the enemy's right wing ; but I cannot conceive that so great a Captain could pursue the run-aways as far as the mountain Azotus, while he left all the rest of Bacchides's army behind him, in a condition to repair this misfortune by following him, and falling on his rear, as indeed they did, which was the cause of his ill success: once more I say, I cannot attribute such an instance of imprudence, and so gross a fault to so great a soldier as Judas, for in the course of all his atchievements, we see that he is perhaps the only eminent Captain that has not laid himself open to exceptions in the execution of his designs. His people must have been transported with ardour upon their victory, and he, whether he would or no, must have been under the unhappy necessity of following them; for otherwise, if after the defeat of this wing he had turned upon the flanks of the enemy, while they were in consternation at the routing of their right wing, this would have been acting within rules, and victory had been certain.

[1 Macc. ix. 16.] But they who were on the left wing, says the Sacred Writer, seeing the right wing defeated, followed Judas and his people in their rear, who observing themselves to be followed by the main body of Bacchides's army, were obliged to let the run-aways escape, and face about to sustain another combat. It is something difficult to clear well certain circumstances related by the author; there are movements which extremely perplex us, nor is there any way of accounting for them but by conjectures. Wherefore I presume that the enemies put themselves at first in order of battle; but the right of their horse, which before the action was otherwise disposed, having been broken and put to flight, and unhappily for Judas pursued too far, the army of Bacchides turned to follow the conqueror, and stop him in his retreat: this conjecture to me seems very probable. The Sacred Author gives us the disposition and distribution of Bacchides's troops, and says nothing of the Jews as to this particular; but I suppose them ranged in two Bodies, of a great depth, according to their usual method of fighting.

The battle was a long time obstinately maintained, and many on both sides were killed and wounded, Judas himself was killed, and all the rest fled. The rest of Bacchides's army having followed Judas, who fought like a lion, and overthrew all that came in his way, attacked him behind, so that he was between two armies, in which situation he performed prodigies of valour; but at last being over-born by numbers, he was wounded and fell upon an heap of dead bodies, whereof he had made a circle about him: thus died this Great Hero. The reader may see the magnificent encomium which the learned Commentator has made of him, and the admirable resemblances discovered by him between Jesus Christ and Judas. See Dom. Calmet's Comment on this place.

Eleazar (V)

V. ELEAZAR, a venerable old man of Jerusalem, who suffered death under the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes. It is questioned whether he finished his martyrdom at Jerusalem or Antioch. It seems certain from the second book of Maccabees and Josephus, that he suffered in the presence of King Antiochus Epiphanes, as well as the seven brethren the Maccabees; but it is not [2 Macc. vi. ultimo. vii. 1, 2, &c.] so clear whether it were at Antioch or Jerusalem. The old Translator of Josephus's book entitled, Of the Empire of Reason, says it was at Antioch; but the Greek text of Josephus does not say so; it supposes on the contrary, that the seven brethren suffered at Jerusalem. The same author mentions the same thing in the 12th book of his Antiquities, c. 7. Others maintain, that the seven brethren were martyred at Antioch, where formerly their tombs were shown. St. Austin speaks of a Church in this city, dedicated by their name. The Martyrologies, Liranus, Serrarius, Tirinus, [Hieron. de locis Hebr. verbo Modin. Aug. Serm. 1. de Mac. 30. ult. Edit. 2 Macc. vi. 18, 19, 20, &c.] and Josephus Gorionides, fix their Martyrdom at Antioch. Now it seems certain, that Eleazar suffered at the same place as the seven brethren the Maccabees. All the authors that make any mention of him, join his martyrdom with that of these generous brethren.

The holy old man, of whom we are now speaking, was one of the principal Doctors of the Law. Gregory Nazianzen and St. Ambrose believe with Josephus, that he [Nazian. Orat. de Macc. Ambros. l. 2. de Jacob. & vita beata, c. 10.] was of the Sacerdotal Family. He was presented to Antiochus Epiphanes, and they would have compelled him to eat Swine's flesh, by forcing open his mouth to that purpose. But he preferring death to life, which he saw was to be preserved only by a criminal compliance, chose rather to go voluntarily and of himself to execution. They who were present, moved with an unjust compassion, by reason of the ancient friendship which they had for him, took him aside, and entreated him to consent, that they might bring him meat which he was allowed to eat, that so they might inform the King how punctually he had obeyed his orders, in eating the flesh of the sacrifice, and by this means might preserve him from death. But he considering his age, his gray hairs, and the innocent life which he had hitherto led, answered, that he had much rather go to his grave, than perform what they desired of him; for it does not become me, said he, in this advanced part of life, to use dissimulation, whereby many young people, imagining that Eleazar at ninety years of age, had deserted from the Jewish to the Pagan way of living, might be induced to imitate him; whereby I should draw an infamous blemish on my self, and the curses of men on my old age: for altho' I might by this means deliver my self from the penalties wherewith I am threatned, yet I could not avoid the hand of the Almighty, neither during my life, nor after my death.

At these words they who led him to execution, were immediately enraged against him, believing what he had said to proceed from pride: and as he was ready to expire under the blows with which they overwhelmed him, he uttered a great sigh, and said, Lord thou knowest that having it in my power to avoid death, I suffer in my body the most sensible pains, but my soul is overjoyed to die for thy religion. Having said these words, he expired. This is all we learn from the second book of Maccabees, which we Roman Catholicks maintain to be Canonical.

But Josephus in his book concerning the Empire of Reason, relates the matter more at large. He says, that Antiochus coming to Jerusalem, and observing how the people despised his Edicts, went up to the highest place in the city, with the principal men of his court, and his soldiers in arms, and having commanded the Jews should be constrained to eat Swine's flesh, and whatsoever had been sacrificed to Idols, otherwise to suffer a very cruel death ; Eleazar was the first pre sented to him ; whom Antiochus spoke to, and endeavoured to persuade him to obey his orders: but he answered in a manner which manifested his wisdom and resolution, and refused with great constancy to submit to the King's impious directions. Whereupon the guards immediately fell upon Eleazar, dragged him to the place of execution, stript him, tied his hands behind him, and severely scourged him, while a Herald cried out to him, Obey the King's orders: but he continued immoveable amidst all the blows they gave him, till being quite exhausted with loss of blood, and lashes wherewith his body was miserably mangled, he fell to the ground, without losing however any thing of the vigour of his soul. Hereupon a soldier leaped upon his belly with a design of forcing him to rise, but invincible patience was all the return he made for this cruel treatment. Some of his old friends would have persuaded him to make a shew at least of eating meats sacrificed to Idols, but he absolutely refused, and his refusal enraged them. They threw him into the fire, tormented him with instruments made of iron, and poured stinking liquors into his nostrils. In the midst of these tortures he died, begging of God to accept his life and blood as an expiatory sacrifice for his brethren. He suffered in the year of the World 3837, before J. C. 183. before the Vulgar Æra 167.

Electa

ELECTA, was, as is generally believed, a Lady of quality, to whom St. John the Evangelist addressed his second Epistle. She lived in the neighbourhood of Ephesus, and St. John wrote to her and her children, to precaution them against the Hereticks of that time, who denied the Divinity of Jesus Christ, and the Truth of his Incarnation. Some are of opinion that Electa, which signifies chosen, is not a proper name, but an honourable Epithet given this Lady, whose proper name is not expressed in St. John's Epistle. Others will have it, that her proper name was Kyria. Others, that the Epistle was not directed to any one person, but to a whole Church. St. Clement of Alexandria, in his Comment on the Canonical Epistles, says, that Electa, whom St. John wrote to, was a Lady of Babylon.

Electrum

ELECTRUM. There is a natural Electrum which is found in mines, and another that is artificial made with the addition of a certain quantity of silver. If this quantity exceeds a fifth part, the Electrum will not bear the anvil. Homer speaks of Electrum in his description of King Menelaus's palace. Helena consecrated a cup made of Electrum in the Temple of Minerva, in the Isle of Lindos. The true Electrum shines much stronger by the light than silver. Cups made of this metal are said to discover the poison which is put into them, by a sort of brightness like the rain-bow, and a noise as if there were fire.

Electrum

[Plin. 33. c. 4.] ELECTRUM is likewise sometimes used for Amber, or Succinum, which is a bituminous substance of a resinous taste, and something sharpish; if any pieces of it are rubbed one against another, it smells like oil of turpentine, and a little disagreeable when burnt: it is generally yellow and transparent, sometimes red, and other times again whitish, or rather pale; and when it is warmed with rubbing, it attracts straw. ——— Electrum, is gathered principally upon the coasts of the Baltick Sea, and particularly upon those of Prussia. Some of it is found even upon the land at some distance from the Sea. But it does not appear that the old Hebrews had any knowledge of this Electrum. That mentioned in [Ezek. i. 4—viii. 2.] Ezekiel, was, St. Jerom says, a more precious metal than either gold or silver. The Hebrew word Hachasmal, signifies rather, according to Bochart, Orichalcum.

Elephant

ELEPHANT, the largest of all four-footed beasts. They who have studied the nature of the Elephant with most accuracy, tell us many very extraordinary things of the sagacity, faithfulness, prudence, and even understanding of this creature[1]. It has been often observed to do such things, as are much above the capacity of other beasts. The Hebrews seem generally to have described it under the name of Behemoth, which signifies in general beasts of service. The Greeks and Latins often denote Elephants by the general name of beasts, which is much the same in signification with the Hebrew, Behemoth. The word Elephas may be derived from aleph, which signifies to instruct, by reason of the docility of this animal; or from Eleph, which signifies a head, or captain, because the Elephant is as it were the head of all other terrestrial animals.

You have here an account of the Elephant or Behemoth from God's discourse to Job: He eateth grass like an ox; which agrees admirably with what Historians relate of him. The Elephant does not feed upon carrion, and is not at all wild; hay, herbs, and legumes are his nourishment, as they are of our tame beasts.

His strength is in his loins, and his force is in the navel of his belly. The natural parts of an Elephant are under his belly, like those of an horse, but his testicles lie concealed in his loins. The virtue of begetting is often expressed in Scripture by terms very like these. See Gen. xlix. 3. Deut. xxi. 17. Psal. lxxxii. 51. civ. 36, &c.

His tail, as is continued in Job, ver. 12. is like a cedar; the nerves of that part of the Elephant which serves for generation are interwoven together. The female Elephant receives the male lying upon her back, contrary to the nature of other beasts, and he never covers the female as long as any one appears in fight. Ver. 13. His bones are as strong pieces of brass, and his small bones like bars of iron. These hyperbolical expressions shew the extraordinary strength of the Elephant; with one stroke of his trunk he kills a camel or an horse. An Elephant has been seen to draw two cast canons five hundred paces with his teeth; they were fastned together with cables, and weighed each three thousand pounds. We read in the [1 Macc. vi. 37.] Maccabees of an [Hieronym. in Ezek. i. חשמל] Elephant in Antiochus's army, which carried two and thirty armed men. They were all in a tower made of very solid wood, upon the Elephant's back, and the tower was bound with a very strong chain under the Elephant's belly.

He is the chief of the ways of God; he that made him, will make his sword approach unto him. This animal is, as it were, the master-piece of God among four-footed beasts. He exceeds all others in size, strength, docility, address, modesty, fidelity, pudicity, agility, and long life.

If we consider his industry, sagacity, and gratitude, no animal comes nearer man: he understands the language of his guide. Lastly, so many things are related of his docility, and aptness to learn, as would seem fabulous, were they not attested by many serious and grave Authors.

The Scripture adds, that God hath put his sword into his hands, hath trusted him with his arms; the Elephant is terrible when provoked: nothing can stand against him, he oversets trees, houses, and walls: he tramples under foot all that comes before him; he overthrows whole squadrons: his arms are his trunk, and his teeth, or horns, for so some of the Ancients call them. His trunk is a long hollow cartilage, like a large trumpet; it hangs between his teeth, and serves him for hands: by one blow with his trunk he will kill an horse; and will raise a prodigious weight with it. His teeth are the ivory, which is so well known to us, and is what people work upon in Europe: it is of the nature of horn, and may be softned. There have been Elephant's teeth seen as large as one's thigh, and a fathom in length. When they fight one against the other, they strike one another with their teeth, as bulls do with their horns.

Ver. 15. Surely the mountains bring him forth grass, where all the beasts of the field play. Elephants are the gentlest animals that we know; they never use their strength but when they are compelled to it. These are not of that sort of animals which create terror in others: if he is obliged to pass through a herd of other beasts, he puts them gently out of his way with his trunk to make room for him: he feeds in the fields and meadows, and the weakest and tamest animals play with impunity before him.

[Ælian. l. 4. c. 24. & l. 13. c. 8. l. 9. c. 56. & l. 17. c. 7, &c.] Ver. 16. He lieth under the trees in the covert of the reed and fens. This agrees all admirably well with the Elephant. Ælian says, that he may be called an animal of the marshes, because he lives along waters, and in moist places. He sometimes plunges himself into rivers in such a manner, that no more of him is to be seen than the end of his trunk: in the summer-time he covers himself with mud, to avoid the heat.

[Plin. l. 8. c. 12.] Ver. 18. He spoileth the river, and is frighted at nothing: he trusteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth. He drinks a great deal, and large draughts, as if he were to swallow up the river, and as if Jordan were scarce sufficient to satisfy his thirst. The literal construction of the Hebrew is, he will drink a river, and make no haste: he will drink leisurely, and take time to disturb the water which he drinketh; as if this were a way to make it more nourishing, or to add a certain taste to it, and take away the sweetness of it, which is not sufficiently pungent to his tongue. It is agreed that the Elephant drinks much, and [Aristot. l. 8. Hist. Animal. c. 9.] Aristotle assures us, that there have been some who have been seen to drink fourteen Amphora's of the Macedonian measure. The Amphora, according to Budæus, is about the eighth part of a Paris hogshead, or holds about three bushels. The Scripture adds, He trusteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth, or he fears nothing, though Jordan were to beat against his mouth. He boldly passes the greatest rivers, provided he may put the end of his trunk only out of the water.

[Judith x. 17.] Ver. 19. He is taken by the eyes, as a fish is taken with a hook. Serpents attack Elephants principally in the eyes. Oculos maximè petunt, says Pliny; inde fit ut plerumque cæci, & fame ac mœroris tabe confecti reperiantur (Elephantes.) It is said [Idem, ibid.] likewise, that there are Serpents in the Ganges sixty yards long, who take them by the trunk as they are drinking, drag them along, and drown them in the waters. But this passage may be understood more simply by keeping close to the Hebrew: he is taken by the eyes in snares, his nose is pierced. Wild Elephants are caught with the help of a female Elephant, which is ready for the male, and put into some narrow place between barricades, where the Elephant engages himself, and is taken. This is what is meant here by taking by the eyes, answerable to what is said of Holofernes, that he was taken by the eyes, while he beheld Judith's beauty.

They lay snares likewise for Elephants: they are taken in deep ditches dug particularly for this purpose, and covered with a little earth scattered over hurdles, which close the open part of them. I do not read it, that they pierced his nostrils, or trunk, as they do camels, buffalo's, and even horses in the east: but probably in Job's time they might have a different method from that used at present.

[1 Kings x. 22.] In the first book of Kings, there is mention of Ivory, or Elephants teeth. In the שנהבים*Hebrew* it is Schenhabbim; schen we know signifies a tooth, but we have some reason to question whether habbim signifies an Elephant. I should rather chuse to say, that schen signifies ivory, which is not to be disputed, and that habbim, or rather habenim, signifies ebony; and so separate these two words, which are improperly put together, and made one.

There is frequent mention of Elephants in the books of the Maccabees; because after Alexander's reign, these animals were very much used in the armies, which were set on foot by the Kings of Syria and Egypt; whereas before it does not appear that any such had been seen in Judæa or Syria.

[1 Macc. vi. 34.] We read in the Maccabees, that the Elephants of Antiochus Eupator's army had the blood of grapes and mulberries shewn them, that thereby they might be animated to the combat, to accustom them as it were to the sight of blood: for naturally this animal is not sanguinary, nor cruel. [3 Macc. v.] In another place we see it was usual to intoxicate them by giving them wine mixt with incense, or with parcels of incense, which parcels were dipt in the wine in order to make the fumes of it the stronger, and consequently more proper to intoxicate the Elephants, with a design to have them crush the Hebrews to death under their feet, who were in Egypt. This is a kind of punishment which the Ancients were unacquainted [Vide 1 Macc. xi. 7. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 8, 9.] with.

It was an episcopal city of Palestine, as appears from the old ecclesiastical Registers. It is something singular, that it should be so hard to fix so remarkable a City in the map, which was the settled point from whence Eusebius and St. Jerom determined the distances and position of other cities. We know from Josephus, that it was twenty miles from Jerusalem. Antoninus, in his Itinerary, informs us, that it was four and twenty miles from Askelon, and eighteen miles from Lydda. Eusebius places it at five miles distance from Gath, six from Lachish, five and twenty from Gerar, twenty from Jattir, [-] and eight from Keilah.

Eli

ELI, High-Priest, of the race of Ithamar, died in the year of the World 2888, before Jesus Christ 1112, before the Vulgar Æra 1116, after having been forty years Judge of [1 Sam. iv. 18.] Israel; from the year of the World 2848, to 2888. He succeeded Abdon, and was himself succeeded by Samuel, in the government of the people: but in the High-Priesthood he was succeeded by his third son Abitub. While Eli judged the people, and governed them in all Affairs civil and religious, Samson performed the office of a Deliverer and Defender of Israel against their enemies, particularly against the Philistins.

How Eli came to the High-Priesthood, and how this dignity was transfer'd from Eleazar's family to that of Ithamar, of which Eli was descended, is what we are not informed of. There are some who believe, that the High-Priesthood was conferred on Eli, by reason of the negligence, the minority, or want of proper qualifications in those of Eleazar's family. Others assert, that this dignity was bestowed on him in consideration of his Office as Judge of Israel. It is certain, that this was not done without an express declaration of God's will; as we may gather from the language of the man of God, who was sent to reproach him with the ill conduct of his sons: I chose the house of Aaron thy father to offer upon mine altar, and to exercise my Priesthood; wherefore therefore have ye trampled under foot my sacrifice, and honoured thy sons above me? Wherefore thus saith the Lord, I said indeed, that thy house, and the house of thy father should walk before me for ever: but now the Lord saith, Be it far from me; for them that honour me, I will honour; and they that despise me, shall be lightly esteemed. The prophet added, that the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, should die both in one day; that God would transfer the Priesthood to another family, and that Eli's family should fall into contempt and indigence.

These predictions were verified, when in the reign of Solomon, the exercise of the High -Priesthood was taken from Abiathar, of [1 Kings ii. 26. In the year of the World 2990, before J. C. 1010, before the Vulg. Æra 1014. 1 Sam. ii. 12, 13, 22, 23. 1 Sam. ii. 27, 28.] Eli's family, and reserved to Zadoc only, who was of the race of Eleazar. Eli's great fault was his negligence, and too great indulgence to his sons. He was not unacquainted with the disorders which they committed in the Tabernacle, and the scandal which they gave by their ill-conduct. But instead of punishing them, and removing them from the sacred ministry, he was satisfied with saying to them, Why do you all these things which I am informed of, and all the people talk of? Do so no more, my sons; it is very uneasy to me to hear that you induce the people of the Lord to violate his commands. If one man offends against another, God may be made propitious to him: but if a man sin against the Lord, who shall pray for him? But his sons did not hearken to the voice of their father; and when the prophet, above-mentioned, declared to him the calamities with which his family was threatned, we do not see that this kindled his zeal, or encreased his just severity to his sons.

[1 Sam. iii. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the World 2861. Samuel being born in 2849, was then twelve years of Age.] God once more admonished him by Samuel, who was then a child, and said to him, Behold, I will do a thing in Israel, at which both the ears of every one that heareth it, shall tingle. In that day I will perform against Eli all things which I have spoken concerning his house: when I begin, I will also make an end. I will judge his house for ever; and his iniquity shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering for ever. Eli having heard these things from the mouth of Samuel, made no other reply than this, It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good. God still defer'd the execution of his vengeance seven and twenty years, and it was the year 2888, before Jesus Christ 1112, before the Vulgar Æra 1116, when the sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were put to the sword by the Philistins, the Ark of the Lord was taken; and Eli himself, upon the receipt of this melancholy news, fell backward from [1 Sam. iv. 12, 18. Joseph. Antiq. l. vi. c. 7.] his chair, and broke his neck. According to Josephus, and the most common opinion in this particular, he was succeeded by Ahitub his third son, as others will have it, by Ahiah. It is certain that Ahiah was High-Priest in the beginning of Saul's reign. Several of [1 Sam. xiv. 18.] the Ancients have been inclined to rank Samuel among the Jewish High-Priests, but it is very clear, that he was not of the priestly race, but of the stock only of the Levites.

Eliezer (I)

[Gen. xxiv. 2, 3. D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 261. Dameschack. In the year of the World 2148, before J.C. 1852, before the Vulgar Æra 1856.] I. ELIEZER. The Mussulmen call him Dameschack, or Damascennis, and believe him to have been a black slave given to Abraham by Nimrod, at the time when he saw him, by virtue of the name of God, walking out of the midst of the flames, into which he had been cast by his orders. Abraham conceived such an affection for him, that he gave him the inspection of his whole family, and before the birth of Isaac designed him even for his heir. Abraham upon his arrival in Syria, built a city there, which he called by the name of his slave, Dameschack: this is the city of Damascus, so celebrated at this day. Others believe with more probability, that Eliezer was a native of Damascus, and that he had a son whom Abraham intended for his heir. See Gen. xv. 1, 2, 3. and the Commentators on this place.

When Abraham had resolved to send Eliezer into Mesopotamia, he said to him, Put thy hand under my thigh, and promise with an oath never to take any Canaanite for a wife to my son. But thou shalt go into the country, where my relations live, and there take a wife unto my son Isaac. If the woman will not come, thou shalt be no longer obliged by thy promise; only bring not my son thither again. Eliezer performed what his master required of him, and departing with many camels, and rich presents, he went to the city of Nahor in Mesopotamia.

When he arrived near a well without the city, he made his Camels kneel in order to repose themselves, and begged of God to discover to him by some sign the person whom he appointed to be Isaac's wife. Let it come to pass, said he, that the Damsel to whom I shall say, let down thy pitcher, I pray thee, that I may drink, and she shall say drink, and I will give thy Camels drink also; let the same be she whom thou hast appointed for thy servant Isaac. Scarce had he finished his prayer, when Rebekah the daughter of Bethuel, Isaac's cousin german, appeared, with a pitcher of water upon her shoulder. Eliezer desired some of her; immediately she let down her pitcher, and let him drink, and offered to give water to his camels also. Eliezer charmed with this happy adventure, made her a present of two pendants for her ears, and two gold bracelets, asked her who she was, and if he could lodge at her father's house. Rebekah told him that she was the daughter of Bethuel, and that there was every thing at her father's house, which was necessary either for himself or his retinue. Eliezer bowed his head very low, returned thanks to God, and declared that he belonged to Abraham.

Rebekah ran immediately with this news to her mother, and her brother Laban went to Eliezer, in order to conduct him to the house. When they were ready to sit down to table, Eliezer said, he would not eat, till he had made known the subject of his errand. He related to them therefore his journey, and what happened to him at the city-gate with Rebekah, and concluded with desiring her in matrimony for Isaac. Laban and Bethuel her brothers answered, The Lord hath sufficiently declared his will in this affair, and we cannot oppose it; take her, carry her with thee, and let her be wife to thy master's son. Eliezer hereupon bowed very low, made great presents to Rebekah, her mother, and her brothers; after which they sat down to table.

The next day Rebekah's mother and her brothers desired Eliezer, that the young woman might continue with them at least ten days: but Eliezer replied, that he could not defer his return: and they said, call the Damsel, and let us ask her opinion. When she came, they said unto her, Wilt thou go with this man? she answered, With all her heart. They therefore suffered her to go, and Eliezer set out that very day for Beersheba, where Abraham at that time dwelt.

II. ELIEZER, the son of Moses and Zipporah, was born at Midian while Moses [Exod. ii. 18, 22. 1 Chr. xxiii. 17.] his father abode in this country. He had a son whose name was Rehabiah. Some[1] have thought, that what is related Exod. iv. 24, 25. of an Angel's meeting Moses, when he was upon his return from Midian into Egypt is to be understood, as if this Angel intended to kill Eliezer, because he was not circumcised. The Scripture does not say very clearly, whom the Angel had a design upon, whether Moses or Eliezer; and there are different opinions concerning it.

Elijah

ELIJAH, or Elias, a famous Prophet, a native of the town of Tishbe, situated beyond Jordan, in the land of Gilead. Some[1] make him a Priest descended from Aaron, and say, one Sabaca was his father. But these particularities which are taken notice of neither in the Scripture nor in any of the Ancients, are of no great authority. Several of the fathers[2] were of opinion, that he lived in a single state, and with unspotted purity. This Prophet was raised up by God, to be set like a wall of brass, in opposition to Idolatry, and particularly to declare against the worship of Baal, which Jezebel and Ahab had introduced in Israel. The first time the Scrip ture speaks of Elijah, it represents him to [1 Kings xvii. 1, 2. In the Year of the World 3092, before J.C. 908, before the Vulg. Æra 912.] us, saying unto Ahab, As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word.

At the same time the Lord commanded him to retire and conceal himself beyond Jordan, near the brook Cherith. He obeyed, and God sent Ravens to him every morning and evening, who brought him flesh and bread; and he drank water from the brook[3]. But the brook being dried up by reason of the heat, God bid Elijah go to Zarephath, a city of the Sidonians, where he should find a widow, who would supply him with food. He went thither, and when he was at the city-gate, he perceived a widow woman gathering sticks, from whom he desired a little water to drink; and as she was going to fetch it, he called to her and said, Bring me, I pray thee, also a morsel of bread: she answered, As the Lord liveth I have no bread, but only an handful of meal, and a little oil in a cruse, and I am now gathering some sticks, that I may go in and dress it for me and my son, that we may eat it, and die. Elijah said to her, Make me first a little cake, and bring it me, and after make for thee and thy son: for thus saith the Lord, the barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the Lord sendeth rain upon the earth. It fell out as he foretold, and he dwelt at this [In the Year of the World 3093, before J.C. 907, before the Vulg. Æra 911. 1 Kings xvii. 17.] widow's house.

Some time after, this woman's son fell sick and died. The mother overwhelmed with grief, came to Elijah, and said, What have I to do with thee, O thou man of God? Art thou come here to renew the memory of my sins, and to kill my son? Elijah said to her, Give me thy son: and taking him in his arms, he laid him upon his bed, and cried unto the Lord, begging the restitution of the child's life. After this he laid himself three times upon the child, stretching himself upon his little body; and the Lord heard the Prophet's voice, and restored [In the Year of the World 3096, before J.C. 904, before the Vulg. Æra 908. 1 Kings xviii. 1, 2, &c.] the child to life.

Three years after, the Lord commanded Elijah to go to Ahab King of Israel. In the mean time the famine being very extreme at Samaria, Ahab sent some of his people throughout all the country to enquire after some place, where they might find forrage for the subsistence of their cattle. Obadiah, one of the officers of the King's houshold being employed in this search, Elijah presented himself before him, and directed him to go tell Ahab, Behold Elijah is here! Obadiah excused himself, saying, As soon as I am gone from thee, the Spirit of the Lord shall carry thee whither I know not, and when Ahab cannot find thee, he will slay me. Elijah said, As the Lord liveth, before whom I stand, I will surely shew my self unto him this day. Obadiah therefore went immediately, and informed Ahab, who came without delay to meet Elijah, and as he drew near to him, accosted him in this manner: Art not thou he that troubled all Israel? Elijah answered, I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and thou hast followed Baalim. Now therefore assemble all Israel upon Mount Carmel, and bring thither the four hundred and fifty Prophets of Baal, with the four hundred Prophets of Astarte, who are supported at Jezebel's table, and we will see whether your Religion or mine be the true one.

Ahab therefore convened the people of Israel, and the false prophets of Baal and Astarte on Mount Carmel; and Elijah said to them, How long will ye halt between two opinions? if the Lord be God, follow him; if Baal, then follow him. And the people answered not a word. Elijah then added, I only remain a Prophet of the Lord, but Baal's Prophets are four hundred and fifty men; let them give us two bullocks, they shall sacrifice one, and I another. The bullock upon which fire shall descend from Heaven, shall discover him to be the true God, to whom it is sacrificed. The proposition was accepted by the people; Baal's Prophets prepared their Altar, sacrificed their Bullock, and placed it on the Altar, and began to call upon their Gods. And as Baal continued deaf to their invocations, they leaped upon the Altar, and made incisions after their manner in their bodies, crying aloud with all their force. In the mean time Elijah insulted them, saying, Cry louder, for Baal is perhaps asleep, or upon a journey, and does not hear you.

But at last mid day being past, Elijah called the people, repaired the Altar of the Lord before them which had been broken down, took twelve stones in memory of the twelve Tribes of Israel, and with them built a new Altar. He made a trench, and as it were two ridges round about, prepared the wood, cut the bullock in pieces, laid it on the Altar, poured three several times abundance of water upon the wood, and the burnt sacrifice, so that the water ran about the Altar, and the trench was full of it. After this, he called upon the Lord, and besought him to declare in a miraculous manner that he was the only true God. At the same time, the fire of the Lord fell upon the Altar, and consumed the wood, the burnt-sacrifice, the stones, and the very dust of the place. Where upon all the people fell upon their faces to the ground, saying, The Lord is the true God. At the same time Elijah exhorted the people to take the false Prophets of Baal, and not suffer one of them to escape. They accordingly took them, carried them down from the mountain, and slew them all at the brook Kishon.

After this, Elijah said to Ahab, Go eat and drink, for I hear the noise of abundance of rain; whereof, notwithstanding at that time there was no appearance: but the Prophet knew that a very great quantity of it would fall that very day. Elijah went up to the top of Carmel, and throwing himself down upon the earth, he put his face between his knees, and said to his servant, Go up, look toward the Sea, and observe, if you can discern any thing. He went six times without seeing any thing: but the seventh time Gehazi came and told him, that he saw a cloud rising out of the Sea, as large as a man's hand. Elijah therefore said to his servant, Go, and say unto Ahab, prepare thy chariot, and get thee down, that the rain stop thee not. The King got into his chariot, and went to Jezreel. Elijah, for his part, girded up his loins, and ran before Ahab's chariot; and the rain fell in great abundance.

Jezebel, the wife of Ahab, being informed that Elijah had put to death all the Prophets of her Gods, sent notice to him, [1 Kings xix.] that the next day she would take away his life. The Prophet hereupon fled as far as Beer-sheba, in the most Southern part of the Tribe of Judah. As soon as he arrived there, he dismissed his servant, and pursuing his journey farther into Arabia Petræa, he walked all day, and in the evening being extremely fatigued, he laid himself down under a Juniper-tree, and prayed to God to take him out of the world. At the same time an Angel touched him, and said, Arise and eat. He arose, and looking near the place where his head lay, he saw a cake baked on the coals, and a cruse of water; he therefore eat and drank, and laid down again and slept. The next day the Angel again awakened him, and said, Rise and eat, because the journey is too great for thee. He rose, eat and drank, and went in the strength of that meat forty days and forty nights, unto Horeb the mount of God.

When he was come thither, he lodged in a cave, and the Lord said unto him, what doest thou here, Elijah? And he said, I am very jealous for the Lord of Hosts; for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine Altars, and slain thy Prophets with the sword, and I, even I only am left, and they seek my life to take it away. The Lord said, Go forth, and stand at the entrance of thy cave upon the mountain. When he was there, the Lord made him hear a strong wind passing by, but the Lord was not in this impetuous wind; after this, the Earth trembled, but the Lord was not in the Earthquake; after the Earthquake there was a Fire, but the Lord was not in the Fire; after the Fire there was heard the breathing of a gentle Wind, which was the sign of God's presence. At this instant, Elijah threw himself prostrate on the Earth, and covered his face in his mantle. The Lord asked him as before, What dost thou here, Elijah? he answered, I have been very jealous for the Lord, because the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine Altars, and slain thy Prophets with the sword, and I only am left, and they seek my life to take it away.

The Lord said to him, Go, return on thy way to the wilderness of Damascus, and when thou comest, anoint Hazael to be King over Syria, and Jehu the son of Nimshi shalt thou anoint to be King over Israel; and Elisha the son of Shaphat shalt thou anoint to be Prophet in thy room. Whosoever escapeth the sword of Hazael, shall Jehu slay; and him that escapeth from the sword of Jehu, shall Elisha slay. Nor do thou think, that thou only hast continued faithful to my covenant, for I have reserved seven thousand men in Israel, who have not bowed their knees to Baal, who have not adored him, by lifting up their hands to their mouths and kissing them.

Elijah therefore departing from Mount Horeb, went into the Tribe of Ephraim, near Abel-meholah, where he found Elisha plowing with twelve yoke of Oxen, upon whose shoulders he threw his mantle, and declared the will of God to him, who called him to the prophetick ministry. Elisha immediately left his oxen, ran after Elijah, and said, Permit me, I pray thee, to go and embrace my father and mother, and after this duty is paid, I will follow thee. To which Elijah replied, Go, and return; for, as for my part, what I had to do, I have performed.

Some years after, Ahab having taken [In the Year of the World 3105, before J. C. 895, before the Vulg. Æra 899. 1 Kings xxi. 1, 2, 3, &c. 1 Kings xxi. 17, 18.] Naboth's vineyard, and Jezebel condemned this honest Israelite unjustly, as will be observed in the Article Naboth; the Lord commanded Elijah to go to Ahab, and reproach him with the crime which he had committed. Elijah therefore met this Prince, who was going to Naboth's vineyard, in order to take possession of it, and said to him, Thus saith the Lord: Hast thou killed, and also taken possession? In the very place where the dogs lick the blood of Naboth, shall they lick thy blood also. And Ahab said to Elijah, Hast thou found me, O my Enemy? And he answered, I have found thee, because thou hast sold thy self to work evil in the sight of the Lord. Behold, I will bring evil upon thee, and will take away thy posterity from off the Earth; I will make thy house like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and like the house of Baasha the son of Ahijah, because thou hast made Israel to sin. And farther, the sentence which the Lord hath pronounced against Jezebel, is this, The dogs shall eat Jezebel by the wall of Jezreel. If Ahab die in the city, the dogs shall eat him; if in the fields, the fowls of the air shall prey upon him. Ahab hearing these words, rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his flesh, fasted, lay in sackcloth, and walked with his head hanging down. Whereupon the Lord said to Elijah, Seest thou how Ahab humbleth himself before me? because he humbleth himself before me, I will not bring the evil in his days, but in his son's days will I bring the evil upon his house.

Abaziah King of Israel, being dangerously wounded by a fall from the platform [2 Kings i. 3.] of his house, sent some of his people to consult Baal-zebub, the God of Ekron, and know whether he should recover of his illness. [In the Year 3108, before J. C 892. before the Vulg. Æra 896.] But the Angel of the Lord directed Elijah to go and meet the King of Samaria's messengers, and say to them, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that ye go to enquire of Baal-zebub the God of Ekron? Now therefore, saith the Lord, thou shalt not rise up any more from the bed on which thou liest, but shalt die most certainly. And when he had said thus, he departed. They, who had been sent by Ahaziah being returned, related to him, what had happened to them, and that a stranger had told them, that he should most surely die. The King asked them, what sort of a man he was, who spoke to them? they answered, that he was an[4] hairy man, girt about with a leathern girdle on his loins. By these marks Ahaziah knew it was Elijah.

He immediately sent a Captain to him, who commanded fifty men with his company; the officer coming up to Elijah, who was sitting on the top of an hill, said, Thou man of God, the King commands thee to come down. Elijah answered, If I am a man of God, let fire come down from Heaven and consume thee and thy fifty men. The Prophet's words were immediately followed with effects; the Captain was destroyed by fire from Heaven, with all his company. The King having again sent another, he likewise was consumed. At last a third going to Elijah, threw himself at his feet, and conjured him to save his and his people's lives. Then the Angel of the Lord ordered Elijah to go down with him; he therefore descended [In the Year of the World 3108, before J. C. 892, before the Vulgar Æra 896. 2 Kings ii. 1, 2, 3.] from the hill, and followed him; and when he appeared before the King, he repeated to him what he had already told his messengers, that he should not recover of this disease: and accordingly he died in a short time after.

Elijah having understood by revelation, that God intended very soon to transport him out of this world; he was desirous to conceal the miracle of his remove from Elisha his inseparable companion. But God discovered it not only to Elisha, but to other Prophets of Bethel and Jericho. Elijah therefore said to Elisha, Tarry thou here, because the Lord hath sent me to Bethel; to which Elisha answered, As the Lord liveth, I will not leave thee. When they were at Bethel, Tarry thou here, said Elijah, for the Lord hath sent me to Jericho. But Elisha again replied, that he would not forsake him. When they were at Jericho, he desired Elisha to stay there; for, said he, the Lord hath sent me to Jordan. But Elisha swore, as he had done before, that he would not be separated from him. They went therefore together towards Jordan, and fifty of the sons of the Prophets at a distance followed them. When therefore they were come to the banks of Jordan, Elijah took his mantle and folding it together, he struck the waters with it, which instantly divided into two parts, and they passed over on dry ground.

[Isa. xl. 2.] When they were got over, Elijah said to Elisha, Ask what I shall do for thee before I be taken away from thee. I pray thee, said Elisha, let a double portion of thy Spirit be upon me: that is to say, obtain the gift of prophecy from God for me, in the same measure, that thou possessest it. Double may signify, like; or, give me a double share in thine inheritance, and double portion of thy Spirit, the gift of prophecy, and that of miracles in a degree double to that wherein thou doest possess it. Or, lastly, double may signify abundance, as in these passages; She hath received of the Lord's hand double, &c. and, [Jerem. xvii. 18.] destroy them with double destruction.

Elijah answered him, Thou hast asked me a very hard thing; nevertheless, if thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee; but if not, it shall not be so. As they continued their journey, a fiery chariot with horses of fire, on a sudden separated them from one another, and Elijah was carried in a whirlwind up to heaven. Elisha, at the same time, cried out, My father, my father, thou who art the chariot of Israel, and the conductor of it. After this, he saw him no more; and gathering up the mantle, which Elijah had let fall as he was ascending up to heaven, he returned to the banks of the river Jordan, took Elijah's mantle, smote the waters with it, which at his first striking them did not divide, but upon repeating this ceremony, they parted asunder, and he passed through them.

Hereby the Prophets of Jericho and the places adjacent were convinced, that the spirit of Elijah had rested upon Elisha; and when they met him, they desired him to give them leave to send fifty strong men in search after Elijah, believing that the Spirit of God might perhaps have transported him into some desart and remote place. Elisha told them, that this was to no purpose. Notwithstanding they went, but after they had spent three days in their pursuit, and sought in vain for him, they returned. This happened in the year of the World 3108, before the birth of Jesus Christ 892, before the Vulgar Æra 896.

Eight years after the miraculous ascension [In the year of the World 3116, before J. C. 884, before the Vulgar Æra 888. 2 Chron. xxi. 12.] of Elijah, letters were brought to Jehoram King of Judah from the prophet Elijah, the substance whereof was this: Thus saith the Lord God of David thy father, because thou hast not walked in the ways of Jehoshaphat thy father, nor in the ways of Asa King of Judah, but hast walked in the way of the Kings of Israel, and hast made Judah and Jerusalem to go a whoring, like to the whoredom of the house of Ahab, and also hast slain thy brethren of thy father's house, which were better than thy self; behold, with a great plague will the Lord smite thy people, and thy children, and thy wives, and all thy goods. Thou shalt have great sickness by disease of thy bowels, until thy bowels fall out, by reason of the sickness day by day.

There are some who believe, that this [Ita Hebræi. Tirin. Mariana. Menoch. Jun. Piscat. Kimchi. Grotius in 2 Chr. xxi. 12.] letter was written from the place where the prophet Elijah is at present; others are of opinion, that it was sent before the prophet's transportation; others again, that Jehoram dreamt all this. There was a book extant formerly[5] with this title, The Prophecy, or Revelation, or Ascension of Elijah, from whence St. Paul is thought to have borrow'd these words, cited by him 1 Cor. ii. 9. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entred into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. The Rabbins in their Seder olam, or the Succession of Ages, say, that Elijah is at present employ'd in writing the Acts and Events of all the several Ages of the World.

Elijah and Enoch are believed to be still at this day living, and by some it is imagined, that they are to come at the end of the world, in order to encounter Antichrist. Both Jews[6] and Christians[7] have embraced this opinion; and the following words in the Revelations are generally explained as relating [Rev. xi. 3.] to this their coming; I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth.

[Gemar. Sanhedr. c. xi. §.29. Gemar. Aboda Sarae. c. 1. &c. e If. Voff. de Sybillin. orac. c.8.] Lastly, the Jews make one Elias or Elijah, whome some have taken for the Prophet we have been speaking of, to be the author of a prophecy, declaring it to be a tradition from the house of Elijah, that the world will last six thousand years, viz. two thousand years without the Law, two thousand under it, and two thousand more under the Messiah. But so many years of the Messiah's period as are expired without his appearing, have so passed away by reason of our sins. There is a great deal of probability, that this tradition proceeds from an Elijah more modern than the Tishbite; as well as the three books which we are told of[8], intitled, 1. The grand Order of Elijah; 2. The petty Order of Elijah; and, 3. The Cave of Elijah.

[Ecclus. xlviii. 1, & seq.] The Author of Ecclesiasticus has dedicated an encomium to the memory of Elijah, wherein he has given an epitome of his life, and his true character. Then stood up Elias the prophet as fire, and his word burnt like a lamp. He brought a sore famine upon them, and by his zeal he diminished their number. By the word of the Lord he shut up the heaven, and also three times brought down fire. O Elias, how wast thou honoured in thy wondrous deeds! and who may glory like unto thee! who didst raise up a dead man from death, and his soul from the place of the dead by the word of the most High. (He speaks here of the widow's son of Sarepta.) Who broughtest Kings to destruction, and honourable men from their bed. (He means Ahab, Ahaziah, and Jezebel, to whom he foretold the great misfortunes which would befall them.) Who heardest the rebuke of the Lord in Sinai, and in Horeb, the judgement of vengeance. Who anointedst Kings to take revenge, (Jehu and Hazael) and Prophets to succeed after him. (Elisha was Elijah's successor.) Who wast taken up in a whirlwind of fire, and in a chariot of fiery horses. Who wast ordained for reproofs in their times, to pacify the wrath of the Lord's judgement before it brake forth into fury, and to turn the heart of the father to the son, and to restore the tribes of Jacob.

The

The Author of the book of Ecclesiasticus [Mal. iv. 6.] alludes here to this passage in Malachi, Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse. This is what must be executed at the consummation of ages, before the last Judgement. But our Saviour informs us in the Gospel, [Matth. xi. 14. xvii. 10, 11, 12.] that the prophet Elijah is already come in the spirit, in the person of John the Baptist; and the Evangelists tell us, that in the transfiguration of our Saviour, Elijah and [Matth. xvii. 3, 4. Mark ix. 3. Luke ix. 30.] Moses both appeared and conversed with him concerning his future passion.

Many of the Jews were persuaded that Elijah was the same as Phinehas the son of Eleazar, and grandson to Aaron, by reason of the great zeal which both expressed for God's glory; an opinion founded on the doctrine of the transmigration, which is common among the Mahometans, among many of the Jews, and among some eastern Christians; for we know that Phinehas lived many ages before Elijah.

Lastly, many of the Jews in our Lord's [Matth. xvi. 14. Mark vi. 15. Luke ix. 8.] time believed Elijah to be risen from the dead in his person, or that the soul of Elijah had passed into the body of Jesus Christ.

The Mussulmen relate, that one Kheder [D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 491. Ilia. & 992. Kheder.] or Khizin, General of Alexander's troops, not Alexander the Great, but one more ancient of the same name, had the good fortune to find the fountain of life, which Alexander had for a long time sought in vain. Kheder drank large draughts of it, and so became immortal. He is called Kheder, which signifies verdant, because from that time he enjoyed a flourishing and immortal life. Kheder is, according to them, Elijah, who lives in a place of retirement, in a delicious garden, where the fountain of life runs, and the tree of life is to be found, by the help whereof his immortality is preserved: there it is that he expects the second coming of Jesus Christ, at which Elijah is to appear once more in the world.

The Magi of Persia pretend, that their master Zoroastres was one of the prophet Elijah's disciples; at least that their ancestors were instructed by the disciples of the two prophets Elijah and Elisha. This fiction is founded on Elijah's procuring fire [1 Kings xviii. 24.] to fall from heaven, and his being carried [2 Kings i. 10, 12.] away in a fiery chariot; the disciples of Zoroastres esteeming this element as the [2 Kings ii. 11. Ecclus. xlviii. 9.] principal object of their worship.

Elimelech

ELIMELECH, of the City of Bethlehem, and husband to Naomi, of whom he had two sons Mahlon and Chelion. There being a great famine in the land, Elimelech was obliged to retire with his wife and children to the land of Moab, where he died at ten years end, as did also Mahlon and Chelion, whom he had married to two Moabitish women, named Orpah and Ruth, of whom we shall speak under their proper [Author. Tradit. Hebr. in Paralip. Lyran. Tost. Hebr. 1 Chron. iv. 22.] Articles.

The Hebrews explain what is said in the Chronicles as relating to Elimelech; And Jokim, and the men of Choreba, and Joash, who married in Moab, and dwelt at Lehem[1]. Which St. Jerom has expressed after this manner in the Vulgate, Qui stare fecit solem, virique mendacii, & securus & incendens, qui principes fuerunt in Moab, & qui reversi sunt in Lehem. Jokim is Elimelech. His name signifies, He hath put a stop to. And the Hebrews relate, that Jokim observing his country-men, the inhabitants of Beth-lehem, to be plunged in great disorders, endeavoured to reform them by his remonstrances and miracles. He stop'd the course of the sun, as Joshua had done before him; but this prodigy producing no good effect upon the Bethlemites, he foretold that a remarkable famine would happen; which did so accordingly, and obliged him to retire into the land of Moab, with his two sons, called, as they say, in the Chronicles, The men of lyes, because they had no children. There they married and dwelt at Bethlehem; not they themselves in person, for they died among the Moabites, but in the persons of Naomi their mother, and Ruth her daughter-in-law, who there married Booz, by whom she had Obed, David's grandfather. But these are particulars, which we set down as so many Rabbinical Fables.

Elisabeth

[Luke i. 5.] ELISABETH, the wife of Zechary, and mother of John-Baptist. St. Luke says, that she was of the daughters of Aaron, that is to say, of the race of the Priests. But all that is said of her father and mother is by no means certain. So much we know, that the Angel having declared to Zechary the future birth of John the Baptist, and Zechary returning to his own house, Elisabeth conceived. The Greek Church makes a festival of St. John's conception in the womb of his mother, and observes it on the 23d of September, and it is set down on the 24th of the same month in the most ancient Latin Kalendars. Elisabeth for five months concealed the favour which [Luke i. 24, 25. Luke i. 36, 37.] God had done her; but the angel Gabriel discovered it to the Virgin Mary, and revealed this miraculous conception to her, as an earnest and assurance of the birth of the Messiah, whose mother she was to be, without having conversation with any man.

Immediately Mary with great diligence prepared to go to Hebron, there to visit her cousin Elisabeth. As soon as she came into Zechary's house, and had saluted her, the child, which Elisabeth was big with, leaped in her womb; and Elisabeth full of the Holy Ghost, said, Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb. Whence does this happiness proceed, that the mother of my Lord should come to me? for as soon as the voice of thy salutation sounded in my ears, the babe leaped in my womb for joy. Blessed is she that believed, for there shall be a performance of those things, which were told her from the Lord. Mary continued three months with Elisabeth, and was in all probability a witness to those wonders, which happened at the birth of this holy forerunner of our Saviour. For when the child was to be circumcised upon the eighth day, as some gave him the name of Zechary, his mother answered, that his name was John. A sign was made to Zechary, who ever since the Angel's appearance to him, had been dumb; and he calling for a table-book, wrote, His name is John: and immediately the string of his tongue was loosed, and he began to praise God.

The eastern people[1] believe, that Herod having resolved upon the death of Zechary's son and the infants of Bethlehem, his mother Elisabeth carried him to the mountains, in order to conceal him there; but finding herself not able to climb up, she addressed herself to the mountain, and said, Thou mountain of God receive me and my child; whereupon it immediately opened, received them both, and hid them. The Angel of the Lord was present as a guard to them, and they were surrounded with light. In the mean time Herod sent to Zechary, and enquired of him, where his son was: Zechary refusing to declare this secret to him, this Prince commanded him to be killed, in the Temple, between the Altar of Burnt-sacrifices, and the Porch of the Temple. This is what we read more at length in St. James's Proto-evangelium, or preparatory Gospel, and in other ancient monuments, which the Church has not received as authentick

As to the relation between the Virgin and Elisabeth, there can be no difficulty concerning it; for although Elisabeth was of the Tribe of Aaron, and Mary of that of Judah, they might notwithstanding be very near akin, whether any relation of Mary, of the Tribe of Judah, had married, for example, Elisabeth, or Elisabeth's father had married any woman of the Tribe of Judah related to Mary. No Law obliged the Jewish Priests to marry women only of their own Tribes, nor forbad women of the sacerdotal families to marry men of any other Tribe than that of Levi. There was only one case, wherein women were compel'd to marry in their own Tribes, and that was, when for want of [Numb. xxvii. 1, 2, & seq. & xxxvi. 1, 2, 3, -6. Epiphan. de vita & morte Proph. Eufeb. & Hieronym. in Abelmeüla.] brothers they were heiresses in their respective families.

Elisha

ELISHA, the son of Shaphat, Elijah's disciple and successor in the prophetick Ministry, was of the City of Abel-meholah, which some place beyond Jordan, in the Tribe of Reuben; but it was much more probably on this side of the river we have named, in the Tribe of Manasseh, ten miles from Scythopolis, towards the south, in the great plain which lies along the river Jordan. Elijah having received God's command to anoint [1 Kings iv. 12. & xix. 16, 17, &c. Judg. vii. 22, 23.] Elisha, the son of Shaphat, and constitute him a Prophet, came to Abel-meholah; and having found Elisha plowing with twelve pair of oxen, he came near to him, and threw his mantle over his shoulders. Elisha immediately left his oxen, and ran after Elijah, and said, Give me leave, I intreat you, to go and embrace my father and mother, and when this is done, I will follow you. Go, says Elijah, and return; for I, for my part, have done all I had to do. After this, Elisha killed a yoke of oxen, dressed the flesh of them with the wood belonging to the plow, and gave unto the people, and they did eat: then he arose and followed Elijah.

[In the year of the World 3108, before J. C. 892, before the Vulgar Æra 896.] We have observed already in the Article of ELIJAH, how Elisha was following his master, when the Lord took him up in a whirlwind, and removed him from the sight of mankind; and how he inherited Elijah's cloak, together with a double portion of his Spirit[1]. As soon as he came to the banks of Jordan with Elijah's mantle, he smote the waters with it, which at first did not divide: whereupon Elisha said, Where is now the God of Elijah? and striking the waters a second time, they separated on both sides, and he passed over. Upon the sight of this miracle, the sons of the Prophets discerned, that the Spirit of Elijah had rested upon Elisha, prostrated themselves before him, and acknowledged him to be his successor.

[In the year of the World 3109, before J. C. 891, before the Vulgar Æra 895.] When he came to Jericho, the inhabitants told him, that the situation of their city was very commodious, but their water was bitter, and the land barren. Elisha hereupon called for a new cruse, and ordered salt to be put into it. When this was done, he went to the fountain of Jericho, threw the salt into the water, and made it healthy and drinkable, as it is at this day. As he was going afterwards to Bethel, the children of the place ridiculed him, saying, Go up thou bald pate, go up thou bald pate. Elisha cursed them in the name of the Lord; and at the same time two bears came out of a neighbouring forest, and devoured two and forty of them.

The Kings of Israel, Judah, and Edom having taken the field against the King of Moab, who had revolted from the King of [2 Kings iii. 1, 2, &c.] Israel, marched into desart places, where they were distressed for want of water, and their army was in danger of perishing. The three Kings therefore went to Elisha, who was at that time luckily in the camp. Elisha seeing Jehoram the King of Israel, What have I to do with thee, said he? get thee to the Prophets of thy father, and to the Prophets of thy mother: and added farther, As the Lord liveth, were it not out of respect to Jehoshaphat the King of Judah, who is here present, I would not so much as look on thee. But now send for one who plays upon the harp; and while this man played, the Spirit of God fell upon Elisha, and he said, Thus saith the Lord, make several ditches all along this valley, for ye shall see neither wind nor rain, yet this valley shall be filled with water, and you and your cattle shall drink of it. As he had foretold, so it happened the next night.

About the same time, the widow of one of the Prophets, came and told Elisha, that her husband's creditor was determined to take her two sons and sell them, or make them slaves. Elisha multiplied the oil which was in this widow's house, so that she had enough of it to discharge the debt.

Elisha went very frequently to Shunem, a city in the Tribe of Manasseh, on this side Jordan, and a certain matron was used to receive him, and give him entertainment at her house. As she had no children, Elisha promised her from God, that she should be delivered of a sonb. His prediction was soon followed with the effect. But some years after the child diedc. Elisha was then at mount Carmel; the mother of the child run thither, and was determined not to leave the Prophet, till he came to her house: thither therefore he went, and restored the child to life, by praying over him, and stretching himself upon him, in order to recover warmth in him.

Elisha being at *Gilgal*d during a great faminee, one of the sons of the Prophets had an inclination to prepare something for his brethren to eat; and going into the field, he gathered his lap-full of wild gourds, and having put them in the pot, they were served up to Elisha and the other Prophets; but as soon as they had tasted of them, they cried out, that what was put before them was mortal poison. Elisha therefore ordered meal to be brought to him, threw some into the pot, and they perceived no more bitterness in that which they had complain'd of.

About the same time he multiplied twenty loaves of barley, and satisfied above an hundred persons with them.

Naaman, General of the King of Syria's troops, having a leprosy, was advised to go to Elisha, in order to be cured of it. Elisha, without going out of his house, appointed him to go and wash himself seven times in the river Jordan, and he should be cleansed. Naaman, out of humour with this proposal, resolved upon returning: but his people represented to him, that what the Prophet required of him being so easy, he should at least try whether the waters of Jordan would cure him. He went therefore and bathed himself seven times, and was perfectly healed. After this he returned to Elisha, and offered him great presents; but the man of God resolutely refused them. Naaman desired therefore permission to load two mules with the earth belonging to the land of Israel, protesting that for the future he would have no other God but the Lord. He added, I entreat you to ask God's pardon for me, if when my master goes into the house of Rimmon, there to pay his adorations, leaning, as is his custom, on my hand, I too go in, and there worship with him. The Prophet replied, Go in peace. And Naaman departed.

Some Interpreters[2] translate Naaman's request as relating to what was past. I entreat you to pray to God for me: if, when the King my master has gone into the house of Rimmon there to worship, leaning at the same time on my hand, I too at the same place have worshipped with him; if I have done this, the Lord pardon thy servant in this thing. So that, in this sense, Naaman would have asked pardon for some fault before committed, and not permission for any future action; which indeed seems to us much the most probable.

[2 Kings vi. 1, 2, 3.] Gehazi, Elisha's servant, did not imitate the disinterestedness of his master. He ran after Naaman, and in Elisha's name begged a talent and two changes of garments. [2 Kings v. 20, 21, & seq.] Naaman gave him two talents, and two suits of clothes, and ordered his own people to carry them as far as the city. Then Gehazi received them, and concealed them in his house. But Elisha, to whom God had discovered Gehazi's action, reproached him with it, and told him, that Naaman's leprosy should always cleave to him and his family. Accordingly at that very instant, Gehazi was struck with a leprosy, and departed from Elisha.

The sons of the Prophets going one day to cut wood upon the banks of Jordan, one of them let the head of his ax fall into the water. But Elisha cutting off a piece of wood, and putting it in the water, immediately the iron of the ax swimming upon the surface of it, came and fastened itself upon the wood.

[In the Year of the World 3115, before J. C. 885, before the Vulgar Æra 889.] The King of Syria was at war with the King of Israel, and never could imagine how all his designs came to be discovered and prevented by the enemy. He was told that the prophet Elisha revealed every thing to the King of Israel. Benhadad sent troops therefore to seize the Prophet while he was at Dothan: but Elisha struck them with a kind of blindness, so that he led them, without their discovering it, into the very city of Samaria. When they were there, he prayed to God to open their eyes, made them eat and drink, and sent them back to their master.

[before the Vulgar Æra 885. 2 Kings vi. 24, 25. In the year of the World 3119, before J. C. 881,] Some time after, Benhadad King of Syria, having besieged Samaria, the famine [2 Kings vii. 1, &c. b 2 Kings viii. 7, 8. c In the year of the World 3007. See 1 Kings xix. 15.] was so great there, that the head of an ass was sold for fourscore pieces of silver, and the fourth part of a very small measure of a sort of parched peas, called Dove's-dung, for five shekels; and a certain mother eat her own child. Jehoram, King of Israel, believing that Elisha could put a stop to this famine if he pleased, and imputing to him the calamities which it produced in the city, sent people to cut off his head. The Prophet had a revelation of his design, and ordered the door to be shut. The King's messenger was scarce arrived before Elisha's house, when the King himself appeared there, and made great complaints to him of the condition which the town was in. To this Elisha answered; Hear the word of the Lord, to-morrow at this same hour shall a measure of fine flour be sold for a shekel at the gate of Samaria, and two measures of barley at the same price. One of the King's officers hereupon replied, Were the Lord to open the cataracts of heaven, and rain down provisions, is it possible that what you say could prove true? Elisha answered, You shall see it with your own eyes; but shall not partake of this plenty. Accordingly the next night, the Syrians raised the siege, and it fell out according to Elisha's prediction.

At the end of the seven years famine, which this Prophet had foretold, he went to Damascus b to execute the command which God had given to Elijah many years before c, of declaring Hazael King of Syria. At that time Benhadad King of Syria was indisposed; and his people having told him, that Elisha was in the country, he sent Hazael to him, one of his principal officers, to consult him, and enquire of him, whether it were possible for him to recover. Elisha answered Hazael, Go, tell Benhadad, that he shall be cured of his disease; but the Lord hath discovered to me, that he shall surely die: and continuing for some time without saying a word, he shed tears, and his countenance seemed to be changed. Hazael asked him, Why does my Lord weep? Elisha replied, because I know how many calamities you will bring upon Israel. You will burn their fortified towns, put their young men to the sword, dash to pieces their little infants against the ground, and rip up the women with child. Hazael did but too clearly verify these predictions. At his return, he stifled Benhadad, and having procured himself to be declared [In the year of the World 3120, before J. C. 880, before the Vulgar Æra 884.] King, he did an infinite deal of mischief to the Israelites.

About the same time Elisha sent one of the sons of the Prophets to anoint Jehu, the son of Jehoshaphat, and grandson of Nimshi, to to be King, in pursuance of an order which the Lord had given to Elijah some years [2 Kings xix. 15.] before. Jehu having received the royal unction, executed every thing that had [In the year of the World 3097.] been foretold by Elijah against Ahab's family, and against Jezebel. See JEHU, AHAB, JEZEBEL.

Elisha falling sick of the indispösition [2 Kings xiii. 14, 15. In the year of the World 3165, before J. C. 835, before the Vulgar Æra 839.] which he died of, Joash King of Israel came to see him; and he wept, saying, O my father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. Elisha desired him to bring him a bow and arrows, and the King having brought them, he requested him to put his hands upon the bow, and at the same time the Prophet put his own upon the King's, and said, open the window, which looks towards the east, and let fly an arrow; which he having done, Elisha said, this is the arrow of the Lord's deliverance, and the arrow of deliverance from Syria: thou shalt be succesful against Syria at Aphek. Elisha desired him again to shoot against the ground, which he did three times, and then stop'd. Whereupon the man of God with some passion said, If thou hadst smitten five or six times, then thou hadst smitten Syria, till thou hadst consumed it; whereas now thou shalt smite Syria but thrice.

Elisha died, and that very year a band of Moabites invaded the land. Now it happened that as some of the Israelites were going to bury a man in the field, they saw these robbers, and threw the body which they bare, into Elisha's grave. The body having touched Elisha's bones, received new life, and the man stood upon his feet. This particular has been taken notice of by the Author of the book of Ecclesiasticus, in his encomium on Elisha, in these terms: [Ecclus. xlviii. 13, 14.] After his death his body prophesied: he did wonders in his life, and at his death were his works marvellous.

We read in some Authors, of very little authority indeed[3], that upon the birth-day of Elisha, one of the golden calves of Gilgal lowed so loud, that its voice was heard as far as Jerusalem; and said, This is he who shall destroy their graven images, and break down their cast statues.

This is the Fountain, the waters whereof were sweetned by Elisha, as we have seen above.

Translators' note. This is the Mountain unto which, they say, the Devil took our Blessed Saviour, when he tempted him with the visionary scene of all the Kingdoms and Glories of the World. It is, as St. Matthew stiles it, an exceeding high Mountain, and in its ascent not only difficult but dangerous. It has at present a small Chappel at the top, and another about half way up, founded upon a prominent part of the rock. Near this latter are several caves and holes in the side of the Mountain, made use of anciently by Hermits, and by some at this day for places to keep their Lent in; in imitation of that of our Blessed Saviour. Maundrell's Journey to Jerusalem.

Elisian Fields

ELISIAN FIELDS. This is the name given to certain plains in Hell, abounding with woods, meadows and agreeable fountains, whither, according to the Heathen Theology, Heroes and good Men went after death, while the wicked were tormented with different sorts of punishments in black Tartarus. The name Elisian [Eleg. 3.] Fields is supposed to be derived from the Hebrw, Halaz, which significes to rejoice, because the souls which are in the Elisian Fields, continue there in rest and joy.

Says Says Virgil[1]. Others derive it from Eliza the [Bernold. and Hornius Hist. Philos.] son of Jaran, who peopled part of Peloponnesus.

The Elisian Fields are thought by some to have been the invention of the Greeks; but I do not at all question that they came rather from the Egyptians and Hebrews. We find some descriptions in the Prophets, of the state wherein the souls of Heroes were believed to be after their death, and these relate very much to what prophane Authors tells us of the Elisian Fields; for example: Upon the day of Ashur's descent into Hell, I [Ezek. xxxi. 15, &c.] ordained a general mourning, saith the Lord, I covered the deep for him, and I did restrain the floods thereof, and the great waters were stayed, (here we have Acheron, and the other rivers of Hell) I caused Lebanon to mourn for him, and all the trees of the field fainted. I made the nations to shake at the sound of his fall, when I cast him down to Hell with them that descend into the pit, and all the excellent trees of Eden, or all the trees of the delicious garden, which are in the nether parts of the earth, even the best of Lebanon, and all that are nourished with waters shall be comforted. They also went down to Hell with him unto them that be slain with the sword and his arm, and they that dwell under his shadow in the midst of the Heathen. To whom art thou thus like in glory and in greatness among the trees of Eden? Yet thou shalt be cast down with the trees of Eden unto the nether parts of the earth: thou shalt sleep in the midst of the uncircumcised, with them that be slain with the sword: this is Pharaoh and all his multitude.

We see throughout this description, that the King of Assyria is compared to a Cedar in Lebanus, which shakes all the trees of this mountain with its fall: that the Kings and Princes who were tributaries to the King of Assyria are compared to trees in the land of Eden. All these trees descended into Hell, in order to form a forest there, or delicious garden. Isaiah represents to us the Kings of the nations, seated upon thrones in Hell, and coming to meet the King of Babylon. Hell was disturbed at thy arrival, says he to the [Isai. xiv. 9, &c.] King of Babylon, the giants rose to meet thee: the Princes of the earth, and Kings of the nations descended from their thrones (to do thee honour) and addressed themselves to thee, saying, Thou therefore hast been pierced with wounds as well as we, thou art become like one of us; thy pride hath plunged thee into Hell, (or the grave) thy bed shall be putrifaction, and worms shall be thy covering.

In like manner as the Elisian Fields, according to the Pagan notion of them, were separated from Tartarus, and the dwellings of the wicked, by such walls as were not to be got over, and by a river of fire, which prevented all passage from one to the other; so in the Scripture-account, there is a great gulf which separates the blessed, who are in Abraham's bosom, from the wicked who are in Hell. Between you and us there is a great gulf set, so that they who would go from hence to you, cannot, neither can they come from thence to us. This however did not obstruct the wicked from beholding the happiness of good men, and even this made one part of their punishment. Thus we see the rich man speaking to Abraham, and desiring him to admonish his brethren, that they might take care how they fell into this place of torments. Thus in the Book of Wisdom, the wicked are witnesses to the glory of good [Wisd. v. 1, 2, 3.] men: When they see him, they shall be vexed with humble fear, and shall be amazed for his wonderful deliverance, and shall say within themselves, This is he, whom we some time had in derision, and in a parable of reproach. Thus in Virgil, the cries and the groans of the damned are heard, the lashes [Virg. Æn. VI. vf. 557.] which are given them, and the rattling of the chains wherewith they are loaded.

Hinc exaudiri gemitus & sæva sonare Verbera:

tum stridor ferri, tractæque catenæ. As the Jews believe the souls of those who are not buried, wander about the earth, and can have no rest till their bodies are interred; [Virg. Æn. VI. vf. 324.] so among the Heathens, they who were not buried, could not be received into Charon's boat, nor pass to the place appointed for them.

Hæc omnis quam cernis inops inhumataque turba est, Nec ripas datur horrendas, nec rauca fluenta Transportare prius quàm sedibus ossa quierunt.

Lastly, as the Rabbins believe the Souls of the departed may, and in reality do come back again, particularly for the first twelve months after their decease, and then return to Hell, or the place where the souls expect a general resurrection; so the Heathens believed that apparitions, particu larly of persons, who had been dead but a short time, were frequent, that the souls of men very often went out of Hell, and returned thither again[2], excepting however those of very great villains, who were not allowed this liberty. For this reason Ezekiel says, that God shut the door of the Abyss upon the King of Ashur, when he [Ezek. xxxi. 15.] descended into Hell; and in the book of Enoch, God commands St. Michael to load the rebellious Angels with chains, and cast them down into the nether parts of the Earth; and in the Revelations, the Angel [Rev. xx. 1.] descends from Heaven with the key of the great deep in his hands, seizes the Devil, chains him, and throws him into the bottomless pit, shuts the door upon him, and seals it, that he might be never able to get out. The rich men in St. Luke could find no way out of the place of torment. Luke xvi. 23, 24, &c.

ELYMAIS, the capital city of the land of Elam, or of the ancient country of the Persians. The Scripture informs us, that Antiochus Epiphanes, having understood that there were very great treasures lodged in a Temple at Elymaïs, determined to go and plunder it; but the citizens of Elymaïs having intelligence of his resolution, made an insurrection, forced him out of the city, and obliged him to fly. The Author of the second book of Maccabees [2 Macc. ix. 2.] calls this city Persepolis, probably because formerly it was the capital of Persia; for we know from other accounts, that Persepolis and Elymaïs were two very different cities; the latter situated upon the Euleus, the former upon the Araxes. The Temple which Antiochus designed to pillage, was that of the Goddess Nannæa, according to the Author of the second book of Maccabees; or as Appian says, Venus; or as Polybius, Diodorus, Josephus, and St. Jerom say, Diana.

To EMBALM. The ancient Egyptians[1], and the Hebrews in imitation of them, embalmed the bodies of the dead. Joseph gave orders for Embalming the body of his father Jacob, and his physicians, who were employed in this work, were forty days about it: for it is the custom to spend so much time in embalming a dead body; and all Egypt lamented Jacob seventy days. The invention of the art of Physick was by the Egyptians ascribed to Isis, and in particular the remedy of immortality, which in my opinion [Manetho apud Euseb. præpar. l. 2.] was no other than that of embalming bodies, and by this means making them incorruptible. Some affirm, that Embalming became necessary in Egypt from the inundations of the Nile, the waters whereof drowning all the flat country for near two months, there was no burying the dead, and people were obliged all this while to keep them in their houses, unless they would remove them to rocks and eminences, which were often very distant from the dead person's dwelling. To which we may add, that altho' bodies were buried before the inundation, yet when that came, it would throw them up again; a sandy moist soil not being strong enough to retain 'em against the action of the water, which would raise them up, and force them out of the ground, as being [See Cassian Collat. 15. c. 3. & Cicer. Tuscul. quæst. l. 1. Herodot. l. 2. c. 86. Diodor. l. 2. c. 5.] lighter than the sand.

The way of Embalming dead bodies among the Egyptians was as follows. When a man died, his body was carried to the artificers, whose trade it was to make coffins; they took the measure of the body, and made a coffin for it proportioned to the stature of it, the dead person's quality, and the price that people were willing to give for it: for there was a great diversity in the prices, by reason of the great difference in the make of it; the upper part of the coffin represented the person who was to be shut up in it, whether man or woman. If it was a man of condition, this was distinguished by the figure which was represented on the cover of the coffin; there were generally added paintings and embellishments suitable to the quality of the person.

When the body was brought home again, they agreed with the Embalmers at what rate particularly they would have it embalmed: for the prices were different; the highest was a talent, twenty minæ was a moderate one, and the lowest price was a very small matter. The Egyptian talent is supposed to be worth about three hundred pounds sterling. They immediately sent for a designer, who marked the body as it lay extended, at the place where it should be opened, on the left side, and the length of the incision. A Dissector with a very sharp Ethiopian stone, made the incision, and hurried away as fast as he could, because the relations of the person deceased who were present, took up stones, and pursued him as a wicked wretch, with an inclination to stone him.

This operation being finished, the Embalmers, who were looked upon as sacred persons, entered to perform their office. They drew all the brains of the dead person through his nostrils, with a hooked piece of iron, provided particularly for this purpose, and filled the skull with astringent drugs; they likewise drew all the bowels, except the heart and kidneys, through the hole which they had opened in the side; the intestines were washed in wine from the palm -tree, and in other strong and binding drugs. The whole body was anointed with oil of cedar, with myrrh, cinnamon, and other drugs, for about thirty days, so that it was preserved intire without putrefaction, without losing its hair; and was not only free from putrefaction, but had a good scent with it.

After this the body was put into[2] salt for about forty days: wherefore when Moses says, that forty days were employed in embalming Jacob, we are to understand him as meaning the forty days of his continuing in the salt of niter, without including the thirty days past in performing the other ceremonies above mentioned; so that in the whole, they mourned seventy days in Egypt, as Moses likewise observes.

Afterwards the body was taken out of the salt, washed, wrapt up with linnen swaddling-bands dipt in myrrh, and rubbed with a certain gum, which the Egyptians used instead of glew. Then the body was restored to the relations, who put it in a coffin, and kept it in their houses, or in tombs made particularly for this purpose. There are some found at this day in Egypt in chambers, or subterraneous vaults, which fully justify the truth of what I have said.

They who had not wherewithal to answer the expence which we have mentioned, contented themselves with infusing, by way of syringe, through the fundament, a certain liquor extracted from the cedar, and leaving it there, wrapt up the body in salt of niter. This oil preyed upon the intestines, so that when they took it out, the intestines came along with it dried, and not inthe least putrefied. The body being enclosed in niter, grew dry, and nothing remained besides the skin glew'd upon the bones. They who were too poor to be at any considerable expence, did no more than cleanse the inside, by syringing a liquor into it, which wash'd it; this done, they put the body, without further ceremony, into niter for seventy days, in order to dry it.

The Scripture mentions likewise the Embalming Joseph, King Asa, and Jesus Christ. Joseph, doubtless, was embalmed [Matth. xxvii. 59.] after the manner of the Egyptians, since he died in this country. Asa was embalmed, or rather burnt, in a particular manner. The text imports, that they laid him in a bed which they had filled with sweet odours, [John xix. 40.] and divers kinds of spices, all which they burnt for him with much pomp and preparation. The Hebrew literally runs thus: They laid him in the bed which they had filled with sweet odours, and divers kinds of spices; and they burnt odours for him with an exceeding great fire: as if these spices had been burnt near his body; but the generality of Interpreters believe, that he was burnt with these spices, in a bed of state, in a manner almost like that wherewith the Roman Emperors were burnt.

It seems certain that dead bodies, those of Kings particularly, were sometimes burnt; and I know not whether the custom were not derived from Asa, of whom we have been speaking. The Scripture takes notice, that Jehoram had not the honour of being burnt, which his predecessors had received from their people. His people made no burning for him, like the burning of his fathers. Jeremiah promises King Zedekiah, that this last duty should be paid him, as it had been before paid to the Kings his predecessors. According to the burning of thy fathers, the former Kings which were before thee, so shall they burn odours for thee. The body of King Saul was burnt after it was taken down from the walls of Bethsan, where it had been hung by the Philistins.

As to the Embalming Jesus Christ, the Evangelists inform us, that Joseph of Arimathea having begged his body, bought a white sheet to wrap it up in, and that Nicodemus purchased an hundred pound of myrrh and aloes, with which they embalmed him, and put him into Joseph of Arimathea's sepulchre, that was dug in a rock. They could not then use more ceremony, because the night came on, and they were just upon beginning that rest which was observed upon the Sabbath. Nevertheless the women who had followed him from Galilee, designed to embalm him in a more perfect manner, as soon as they had opportunity and leisure: for this reason they remarked well the place where the Sepulchre was, and bought spices for this purpose. They rested during all the Sabbath-day, and upon Sunday early in the morning they took their spices, with an intent of going to the Sepulchre, and Embalming him; but they could not execute their design, for Jesus about midnight had risen from the dead. He had been only rubbed with myrrh and aloes, wrapped up with swaddling-bands, and buried in a great sheet, with his face covered with a napkin. This is what we observe, upon comparing the several passages of St. John, where his burial is mentioned. We see [See John xix. 40. xx. 5.] the same in the story of Lazarus's resurrection, with this difference, that there is no mention made of spices.

Emerald

EMERALD, a precious stone of a green colour, called in Latin, Smaragdus. This, in our opinion, is the Sohem mentioned by Moses, Gen. ii. 12. and in the Vulgate translated lapis Onychinus. The Emerald is again spoken of Exod. xxviii. 17. among the other stones, which were fixed upon the High Priest's pectoral. But the Hebrew [ברקת Baraketh.] word is Baraketh, which signifies a flash of lightning, the glittering of a Star ; whereby we may conjecture that the stone meant here, is that called Ceraunia, Astroïtes, or Iris, whereof Pliny relates several species. The reader may remember what has been already said, that we have nothing certain concerning the signification of the generality of those Hebrew names, which denote precious stones. In the histories of the East we find several Kings, whose names were Soëm or Sohem, which, as we believe, signifies an Emerald.

Emmanuel

EMMANUEL. This Hebrew word signifies God with us. Isaiah in the celebrated Prophecy, wherein he declares to Ahaz the birth of the Messiah, who was to be born of a Virgin, says, this child shall be called and really be Emmanuel, that is to say, God with us. He repeats the same thing while he is speaking of the enemy's army, which like a torrent was to overflow Judæa ; The stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land, O Emmanuel. St. Matthew informs us, that this Prophecy was accomplished in the birth of Jesus Christ, born of the Virgin Mary, in whom the two natures, divine and human, were united ; and so in this sense he was really Emmanuel, or, God with us.

Emmaus (I)

I. EMMAUS, a village, sixty furlongs, [Luk. xxiv. 13.] or two leagues and a half from Jerusalem, on the north side of it ; celebrated for what happened to two Disciples, who were going thither upon the day of our Saviour's Resurrection. As they were in the way, Jesus Christ joined them in the form of a traveller, demonstrated to them from the Scriptures, that Jesus Christ was to suffer death, and rise again ; and when they were come to Emmaus, he making a shew as if he intended to go farther, they obliged him to abide with them ; and while they were at supper, they discovered him as he was breaking bread. One of these Disciples was called Cleopas, and the other Emmaus, according to[1] St. Ambrose, and a very ancient Manuscript of Corbie, the various readings whereof we have set down at the end of our Comment on the New Testament. There were hot waters at Emmaus, which were very beneficial to the health of such as used them. There was a Church built there in the very place where Cleopas's house stood, which Jesus Christ had honoured with his presence. Josephus says[2], that Vespasian left eight hundred of his Soldiers in Judæa, to whom he gave the village of Emmaus for their habitation. He adds, that this village was sixty furlongs from Jerusalem ; wherein he agrees with St. Luke.

II. EMMAUS, a city of Judæa, situated at two and twenty miles distance from Lydda, as the old Itinerary of Palestine witnesses. This city was afterwards called Nicopolis, and is a different place from the village of Emmaus, spoken of by St. Luke, and Josephus, which was not above ten miles from Jerusalem. Mr. Reland[1] proves very well the difference of these two places from Josephus, St. Jerom, the Maccabees, and Talmudists. Nevertheless, it is true that St. Jerom in Paula's Epitaph has confounded Emmaus, which was sixty furlongs from Jerusalem, with the other, surnamed Nicopolis. But in other passages he speaks of this last Emmaus in such a manner, as can by no means agree with that mentioned by St. Luke. In the city of Emmaus, or Nicopolis, there were baths of hot water[2], wherein, as is traditionally handed down among the inhabitants, our Lord washed his feet, and communicated a healing virtue to them. Julian the Apostate , out of hatred to Jesus Christ, gave orders to stop up this fountain. Some have been of opinion that this was the place where Zechary and Elizabeth his wife dwelt. These two Emmaus's are almost perpetually confounded by Authors.

Enoch (II)

[Gen. v. 18, 19.] II. ENOCH, the son of Jared, was born in the year of the World 622, before Jesus Christ 3378, before the Vulgar Æra 3382. He begat Methuselah at the age of sixty five. He lived three hundred years after, and had several sons and daughters. He walked with God ; and after that he had lived in all three hundred and sixty five years, he was not, and God took him. Some[1] construe these last words, as if they intimated, that Enoch died a natural, but untimely death ; because in reality he lived not near so long as the other Patriarchs of those times ; as if God to secure him from corruption, had been pleased to take him early out of this world. But the generality of the Fathers and Commentators assert, that he is not dead, and that God transported him out of the sight of men, in like manner as he long after took up Elijah in a fiery chariot. St. Paul in his Epistle to the Hebrews shews very clearly, that Enoch is not dead. By faith, says he, Enoch [Heb. xi. 5.] was translated that he should not see death, and was not found, because God had translated him. And Jesus the son of Sirach, according to the Vulgate, says, that he was [Ecclus. xliv. 16.] translated to Paradise ; which we are to understand of the terrestrial Paradise[2]. The word Paradise is not in the Greek. St. Jerom [Hieron. in Amos viii.] understands Heaven by it. Enoch & Elias rapti sunt cum corporibus in Cœlum.

The Apostle St. Jude cites a passage from the book of Enoch[3], which has very much exercised Interpreters. The question is, whether the Apostle took this passage out of any particular book written by Enoch, which might be extant in the first ages of the Church ; whether he received it by tradition ; or, lastly, by some particular revelation. It is most probable that he read it in the book we have been speaking of, which though apocryphal, might contain several truths, which St. Jude, who was favoured with a supernatural degree of understanding, might make use of to the edification of the faithful. The passage cited by St. Jude is as follows. Enoch the seventh from Adam prophesied of these hereticks and wicked persons, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his Saints, to execute judgment upon all that are ungodly among them ; of all their ungodly deeds, which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against God.

The most ancient Fathers, such as Justin, Athenagoras, Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, Lactantius, and other Fathers of the primitive ages, borrowed an opinion out of this book of Enoch, which is to be met with in their works, viz. That the Angels had a correspondence with the daughters of men, of whom they begat children. Tertullian speaks of this work in several places, and always with esteem. He would persuade us to believe, that during the Deluge, it was preserved by Noah in the ark, or that Enoch himself wrote a new copy of it after the Deluge, and sent it to Noah. He says, that we ought not to conclude any thing to the disadvantage of it, because the Jews did not receive it; the reason whereof might be probably, because it speaks in favour of Jesus Christ. But notwithstanding all this, the Church has inserted this writing among the apocryphal books; and several of the most intelligent fathers, such as Origen, Jerom, and Austin, mention it as a book which of itself is of no authority, though the prophecy cited by St. Jude be of divine authority, because of this Apostle's being inspired. The author of the Testament of the twelve Patriarchs cites many things out of the book of Enoch, which are not now to be seen in it.

The desire of getting the book of Enoch into his possession, engaged the famous M. Peiresch M. Peiresch in much search after it, and in considerable [Ludolf. Comment. in Hist. Æthiop. l. 3. not. xxxiv. p. 347.] expences. He was told it was in Æthiopia, and procured it to be brought from thence to him. But that which was given him instead of the book of Enoch, was the work of one Bahaïla Michaïl. M. Ludolf having retrieved it, discovered it to be the composition of an impostor. It begins in this manner; In the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. This is the book of the mysteries of heaven and earth; it contains the subject of the first and second tabernacle, and that of all the creatures. It is what Abba Bahaïla Michaïl had learned and received from Tamhana Samaï. The Angel which was sent unto him, said, Hearken ... The Father is not before the Son, nor the Son before the Father, nor the Holy Ghost before the Father and the Son, &c. Which is very different from the book of Enoch, that the Ancients were acquainted with and cited, the fragments whereof, which had escaped the length of so many ages, are given us by M. Fabricius.

The Eastern People have preserved several traditions of very little certainty relating to Enoch, whom they call Edris. For example, they believe that in the continual wars which were carried on between the sons of Seth and Cain, that is, the race descended from the sons of God, and those of men, Enoch was the first who began them, and introduced the custom of making [D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 304. Doudasch.] those of the Cainites slaves, who were taken in battle. Seth was the universal Monarch of the world in these early times, and Mahaleel, called Doudasch by the Mahometans, was one of his Generals, and fought naked from his head to his navel, depending solely upon the strength of his arms.

[Idem, p. 310. Edris.] They believe farther, that Enoch received from God the gift of wisdom and knowledge in an eminent degree, and that God sent him thirty volumes from heaven filled with all the secrets of the most mysterious sciences; for which reason the books of Enoch are still at this day so celebrated, and so respected in the East, though they are not in the possession of the people there, and are known only by their reputation. Besides these books which he received from heaven, he composed moreover a good number, which are as little known to them as the former.

God sent him to the descendants of Cain, in order to bring them back into the good way; but upon their refusing to hear him, he declared war against them, and reduced their wives and children to slavery. They attribute to him the invention of the pen and needle, or of sewing, and writing, of astronomy, and arithmetick, and more particularly still of geomancy. We know what Josephus has said of two pillars, one of [Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 3.] stone that it might resist water, the other of brick to resist fire, upon which the sons of Seth before the Deluge, wrote their astronomical discoveries.

[Gen. iv. 26.] Moreover it is said, that Edris, or Enoch, was the innocent cause or occasion of Idolatry; one of his friends afflicted at his remove, having at the instigation of the Devil formed a statue which represented him so naturally, that he conversed whole days with it, and paid particular honours to it, which gradually degenerated into superstition. Others fix the Epoch of Idolatry under Enos, and explain these words of Scripture, He began to call upon the name of the Lord, as if it were, then the name of the Lord was profaned. For the Hebrew is capable likewise of this sense. Lastly, the Eastern Christians maintain, that Enoch is Mercury Trismegistus, or the thrice very great Mercury of the Egyptians, more known by the name of Hermes. Some say, Enoch had a son whose name was Sabi, whom the Sabians of the East would have to be the author of their Sect.

The Heathens seem to have had some knowledge of Enoch, and his prediction of the Deluge. Stephens the Geographer calls him Anacus, and says, that he lived in the city of Iconium in Phrygia. It had been foretold by some oracle, that all the world should perish after the death of Anac. He died at above three hundred years of age, and the Phrygians at his death shewed such sensible marks of sorrow, that they became a proverb, and to lament Anac, is an expression, which signifies a more than common mourning. Deucalion's Deluge followed very soon the death of Anac. This is what Stephens says. Eusebius from Eupolemus tells us, that the Babylonians acknowledged Enoch to be [Eufeb. Præp. l. 9.] the first inventor of Astrology; that he is the same as the Atlas of the Greeks; that Methuselah was his son, and that he received all the uncommon knowledge which he had of things by the ministry of an Angel.

The Rabbins maintain, that when Enoch was translated to heaven, he was admitted into the number of Angels, and that he is the person known generally by the name of Metatron or Michael, one of the chief Princes of heaven, who keeps a register of the sins and merits of the Israelites. They add, that God and Adam were his masters, that they taught him the way of serving the Deity rightly, and of offering sacrifices. The invention of some letters, and some books in astrology, is ascribed to Enoch. The Jews make him to be the author of the form used by them in their greater Excommunication. See M. Fabricius de Apocryphis V. T. and the Authors cited by him.

ENOS, the son of Seth, and father of Cainan. He was born in the year of the world 235, before Jesus Christ 3765, before the Vulgar Æra 3769. He died at the age of nine hundred and five years, in the year of the world 1140, before Jesus Christ 2860, before the Vulgar Æra 2864. Moses tells us, That Enos began to call upon the name of the Lord; that is to say, he was the inventor of religious Rites and Ceremonies in the external worship which was paid to God. Others translate the Hebrew thus, [Gen. iv. ultimo. אז הוחל לקרא בשם יהוה] Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord. Enos formed the publick and external manner of honouring God. This worship was kept up and preserved in the family of Enos, while Cain's family was plunged into all sorts of irregularities and impieties.

[Ita Chald. uterque, alii. Vide Cartwright. ad Genes. iv. &c.] Several Jews are of opinion, that Idolatry was first introduced into the world in the time of Enos. They translate the Hebrew thus, Then began men to profane the name of the Lord, to give it to the creature and to idols. This passage may likewise be [Vide Aquil.] translated thus, Then began men to call themselves by the name of the Lord. Good men to distinguish themselves from the wicked, began to take upon them the quality of sons or servants of God; for which reason Moses, Gen. vi. 1, 2. says, that the sons of God, that is to say, the descendants of Enos, who had hitherto preserved the true Religion, seeing the daughters of men, that they were fair, took them wives of all which they chose.

[Genebr. Chronol. l. 2. p. 10.] Genebrard makes Seth to be the author of some writings; he says, he wrote upon Religion, upon the manner of praying unto God, and upon ceremonies. But none of these supposed works have ever come to our knowledge, and he quotes no old author who has made any mention of them.

[D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 117. Anosch.] The Eastern people make the following additions to his history; namely, that Seth his father declared him sovereign Prince and High-Priest of Mankind next after himself; that Enos was the first who ordained publick alms for the poor, established publick tribunals for the administration of justice, and planted or rather cultivated the palm-tree. He died at the age of nine hundred and sixty five years, and left his eldest son Cainan his successor in the Dignity of sovereign Prince and High-Priest.

The Arabians b give this name to the ancient metropolis of Egypt, which the Hebrews called [D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 274. Coss. b D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 79. Ain-alSchamasch. c Isa. xix. 18. LXX. Edit. Rom.] On, and the Greeks Heliopolis. Isaiah b foretold, that there would be one day five cities in Egypt which should speak the Phœnician or Hebrew language, and swear by the name of the Lord; and that one of these cities should be called the city of the Sun, Hir-Hacheris. Some believe this to be Heliopolis, a celebrated city in Egypt upon the Nile, at the distance of half a day's journey from Babylon in Egypt. I am of opinion, that this is the city which the Arabians would describe [Ain-] under the name of the fountain of the Sun, al-Schamasch. But M. D'Herbelot says, it is the city of Coss, situated in upper Egypt, and the most considerable in all Egypt next to Grand Cairo. He affirms Coss to be the ancient and famous city of Thebes, situated upon the Nile. See hereafter HELIOPOLIS.

Enthusiasm

ENTHUSIASM. This is the name whereby that poetical fury is distinguished, which transports the mind, inflames the imagination, and causes it to utter things furfurprizing and sublime. Virgil describes very finely the Enthusiasm of Apollo's Priestess, whom Æneas consulted before he made his journey to hell.

[Virgil. Æneid. vi.] At Phœbi nondum patiens immanis in antro Bacchatur vates, magnum si pectore possit Excussisse Deum ; tanto magis ille fatigat Os rabidum, &c.

Sometimes also the Inspiration of Prophets is termed Enthusiasm, because the moment they prophesied, they seemed to be quite transported, and besides themselves, and spoke a very extraordinary language. Thus Saul meeting a company of Prophets, who were prophesying with musical instruments playing before them, he too fell a [1 Sam. x. 5—10.] prophesying among them: The Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he prophesied among them. The same Prince going with a design to seize David, who was at that time among the Prophets, the Spirit of God on a sudden took possession of him: he thereupon undressed himself, and continued naked among them all day and all night. The Enthusiasm of Prophets is commonly expressed by the Hebrews under the terms, the hand of the Lord, which was sensibly perceived within them, or by the Spirit of God falling on them, or taking possession of them. [2 Kings iii. 15, 16.] The prophet Elisha being in the army belonging to the Kings of Judah and Israel, and having been consulted by King Jehoshaphat, desired some musicians might be brought to him, in order to calm the motion of his mind; for he had just before been speaking to Jehoram King of Israel with some warmth; Bring me a minstrel; and it came to pass when the minstrel plaid, that the hand of the Lord came upon him. The Pythagoreans are said to have made use of singing and instrumental musick to procure a composure of their passions, and a serenity of [Cicero Tuscul. quæst. l. 4.] mind. Pythagorœi mentes suas a cogitationum intentione, cantu fidibusque ad tranquillitatem traducebant.

The false Prophets and heathen Soothsayers were in a manner mad while their Enthusiasm was upon them; but the Prophets of the Lord were impelled by a gentle impression, which, without disturbing their mind or imagination, communicated to them all the strength, majesty, and authority which were necessary for their speaking and acting like the ambassadors of God; whereas the false Prophets and Diviners, being animated only by some evil Genius, or even counterfeiting an inspiration, which in reality they had not, put themselves into agitations, and unnatural motions, used violent contorsions, and endeavoured so to get rid of the demon which disturbed them.

It is true, God sometimes acted upon the minds of the Prophets with so much force, as in some sort to offer violence to them. Jeremiah complains, that God had in some degree deceived him, by engaging him in the employment of prophecy. O Lord, thou hast deceived me, and I am deceived: thou art stronger than I, and hast prevailed; I am in derision daily, every one mocketh me. I said, I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name: but his word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary of forbearing, and I could not stay. Elihu, in Job, said almost the same; [Job xxxii. 18, 19.] I am full of matter, the Spirit within me constraineth me, my belly is as wine which hath no vent, it is ready to burst like new bottles. Such was the enthusiasm of true Prophets; it animated, warmed, and transported them; it gently constrained them, and inflamed their zeal, so that they could not forbear inveighing against irregularities, and reproving wicked men. But notwithstanding these impressions were so lively, strong, and efficacious, the Spirits of the Prophets were subject to the Prophets, as St. Paul says, and they preserved their knowledge of things with a suitable presence of mind and tranquillity: nay, we see certain Prophets, who excused themselves from prophesying, such as Jonah, who fled to Tarsus, that he might avoid preaching at Nineveh; and the Prophets whom God complains of, who were unwilling to declare all that he inspired them with to the people. Behold, I am against the Prophets, saith the Lord, that steal my words every one from his neighbour. In a word, the true Prophets were not like those Diviners, who in their fury spoke whether they would or no, and without knowing what they said, who used a thousand vain endeavours to shake off the yoke of that Demon who agitated them;

[Lucan. Pharsal. l. 5.] —Bacchatur demens aliena per antrum, Colla ferens, vittasque Dei, Phœbeaque serta Erectas discussa comas per inania Templi Ancipiti cervice rotas — magnoque exæstuat igne, Iratum te Phœbe ferens, &c. The Church and Fathers[1] condemned the Montanists, who taught, that the true Prophets were transported, and besides themselves, when they prophesied, like the Priests and Priestesses of Apollo in their enthusiastick fits.

Epaphras

EPAPHRAS, was, as is believed, the first Bishop of Colosse. He was converted by St. Paul, and contributed much to the conversion of his fellow-citizens, the inhabitants of Colosse. He came to Rome while St. Paul was there in bonds, and was himself imprisoned with St. Paul for the cause of Christianity. Having understood, that the false Apostles, taking the advanadvantage [Col. i. 7.] of his absence, had sown tares among the wheat in his Church. He engaged St. Paul, whose name and authority were reverenced throughout all Phrygia, to send a letter to the Colossians, in order to set them right in matters wherein they were mistaken, and to give them a true knowledge of their false Teachers. St. Paul, with an intention of supporting the authority of Epaphras, and recommending his merit to the Colossians, says, That he is his dear fellow-servant, and a faithful minister of Christ. The Festival of Epaphras is set down in the Kalendars upon the 19th of July, and in them it is said, that he suffered martyrdom at Colosse.

Epaphroditus

[Theodoret. in Philipp. p. 323, 333. Philipp. ii. 25. iv. 18. In the year of J. C. 61.] EPAPHRODITUS, Bishop, or, as St. Paul calls him, Apostle of Philippi; or, if we understand the word Apostolus in its literal signification, the Messenger of the Philippians, because he was sent by the faithful of this Church, to carry money to the Apostle, who was then in bonds, and in their name to be serviceable to him with his person. This commission he executed with abundance of zeal, and exposed himself to great dangers, whereby he brought upon himself an indispostion, which reduced him to extremity, and obliged him to remain a long time at Rome. The year following, which was the 62d of Jesus Christ, he returned with all the haste he could to Philippi, because he had intelligence, that the Philippians, upon receiving information of his sickness, had been very much afflicted at it. St. Paul sent a letter by him to the Philippians, which acquaints us with all these particulars.

The Greeks observe the Festival of Epaphroditus on the 8th or 9th of December, as well as on the 29th and 30th of March, and style him Apostle, one of the seventy Disciples, and Bishop of Adriasa or Andraca. A Discourse, whereof Metaphrastes is said to be the author, informs us, that St. Peter ordained one of this name Bishop of Terracina, but does not tell us, whether this be the same Epaphroditus, of whom St. Paul makes mention. The Roman Kalendar settles the Festival of Epaphroditus, Bishop of Terracina, upon the 22d of March.

The city of Ephah and the small extent of land round about it, made part of the country of Midian, situated on the Eastern shore of the dead sea, very different from another country of the same name lying upon the red sea. Ptolemy speaks of a town called Ippos on the Eastern coast of the dead sea, a little below Modian or Midian. The countries of Midian and Ephah abounded with Dromedaries and Camels, as may be seen by the book of Judges, and Isaiah; Dromedarii Midian & Epha.

[2 Macc. iv. 9, 12. 2 Macc. iv. 12.] EPHEBIA, Ephebium. The Greeks had several sorts of exercises, which were in great request among them; and one part of their glory consisted in succeeding at them: when Jason and the other Jews, who were not very fond of the Law, were willing to conform themselves to the manners of the Greeks, they began with erecting Gymnasia for the grown men, and Ephebea or Ephebia for the young lads above fourteen. Vitruvius distinguishes all this with great [Vitruv. l. 5. c. 11.] accuracy. As in the places of exercise, the performers were quite naked; the Author of the second book of Maccabees, speaks of such places, as if they were infamous, and like those set apart for prostitution. Optimos quosque Epheborum in lupanaribus ponere.

Ephesus

EPHESUS, a very celebrated city of Ionia in Asia minor. It was principally esteemed by the Heathens for the famous Temple of Diana, which drew an infinite resort of strangers thither. It was one of the seven wonders of the world; the length of it was four hundred and twenty five feet, and the breadth of it two hundred and twenty. There were an hundred and twenty seven pillars in it, made by so many Kings. All the Provinces of Asia contributed to the building, and two hundred years were employed in raising it.

The first time of St. Paul's coming to Ephesus, was in the year of Jesus Christ [Acts xviii. 19, 22.] 54; but he abode there but few days, and went to Jerusalem. He promised the Jews of Ephesus, who invited him to stay some time there, that one day or other he would return thither: and accordingly he did so some months after, and continued there three years, till the year 57, when he was obliged to leave the city upon a sedition, which was raised there by Demetrius the [Acts xix. 24.] Silver-smith, whose trade consisted chiefly in making little silver Temples, or representations of Diana of Ephesus. From thence St. Paul wrote his first Epistle to the Corinthians.

[Acts xix. 14, & seq.] The Ephesians were very much addicted to curious arts, to magick, sorcery, and judicial astrology. The Ephesian letters, or characters, Ephesia grammata, grew to be a proverbial expression for magick characters. Certain Jews, who took upon them to exorcise persons possessed with the Devil, for which they were to have money, having one day performed this office upon a man in this condition, in the name of Jesus Christ, whom St. Paul preached; the possessed person threw himself upon them, used them ill, drove them away, and left them stark naked, saying to them, Jesus I know, and Paul I know, but who are you? This accident frightened all the inhabitants of Ephesus, both Jews and Gentiles: And several persons, who were addicted to curious arts, burnt publickly their books relating to such subjects, the value whereof amounted to a very considerable sum.

The Apostle in the last journey which [Ephes. vi. 20, 21, 22. iii. iv. 1.] he made to Rome, took Ephesus again in his way, in the year of Jesus Christ 65. While he was a prisoner at Rome, he wrote a very moving and pathetick letter to them, which at the same time was likewise very elevated and sublime. He died the next year, of Jesus Christ 66.

Aquila and Priscilla, with whom St. [Acts xviii. 2, 3, 18.] Paul had lodged at Corinth, came from thence with him to Ephesus, and made some stay there. Apollos likewise, a Jew of Alexandria, came thither and preached [Ib. 24, 25.] there. We know that the Apostle St. John passed a great part of his life there, and at last died there. The Blessed Virgin died also and was buried there, according to the Fathers of the Council of Ephesus, who take notice, that her tomb was to be seen [Concil. l. 3. pag. 574. & p. 1525. Photius. Cod. 275. p. 561.] there, and that the Cathedral of the same city was dedicated by her name. Lastly, we are assured, that Mary Magdalene coming to this city, died there in peace.

Timothy, St. Paul's Disciple, was made first Bishop of Ephesus by the Apostle, who laid his hands upon him[1]; which however did not hinder St. John the Evangelist from residing in the same city, performing the functions of an Apostle there, and having the inspection of the whole Province. If it is true that Timothy did not die till the year 97, in the Reign of Nerva, and Proconsulship of Peregrinus, St. John being still in the Isle of Pathmos; it can scarce be denied, but that the Angel of Ephesus, [Rev. ii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.] whom St. John wrote to, was Timothy. He commends him highly, but reproaches him with one thing particularly, viz. that he had left his first love. He adds, remember therefore the state from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works, or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent. See hereafter the article TIMOTHY. This Saint suffered martyrdom at Ephesus, and was buried upon a mountain near the city. He was succeeded by Onesimus.

EPHEZ-DAMMIM, Dammim, or Phez-Dammim, a place in the Tribe of Judah between Shocho and Azekah, where the Philistins encamped, when Goliath insulted [1 Sam. xvii. 1, 2.] the battalions of the Israelites. Here again the Philistins met another time, after that David was acknowledged King. Upon this occasion it was that Eleazar and Shammah, two Heroes in this Prince's army, alone put a stop to the enemies army, having posted themselves in the midst of a field sowed with barley, 1 Chr. xi. 13, 14. There are some who think the true name of this place to be Dommim, or Dammim, which signifies Blood. The text of the Vulgate instead of Ephes-Dammim, reads in finibus Dommim. 1 Sam. xvii. 1. 1 Chr. xi. 18.

Ephod

EPHOD, a sort of ornament worn by the the Hebrew Priests. Ephod comes from the [Ephod. Aphad.] verb Aphad, which signifies to tye, to fasten, to gird; and the use of this dress was very suitable to this signification; for the Ephod was a kind of girdle, which brought from behind the neck and over the two shoulders, and so hanging down before, was put cross upon the stomach, so carried round the waist, and made use of as a girdle to the tunick. It was something like the Stole of our Priests, with this difference, that we suffer the two ends of the Stole to hang down, after they have crossed the stomach, whereas the Ephod went twice round the body, girt about the tunick, and after this the extremities of it fell before, and hung as low as the ground.

[Ex. xxviii. 6.] There were two sorts of Ephods, one of plain linnen for the Priests, and another embroidered for the High Priest. As there was nothing singular in that used by common Priests, Moses does not insist upon a description of it; but of that belonging to the High Priest, he gives us a large and particular account. It was distinguished thus; it was composed of gold, blue, purple, crimson, and twisted cotton; that is to say, it was a very rich composition of different colours. Upon that part of the Ephod, which came upon the two shoulders of the High Priest, were two large precious stones, upon which were engraven the names of the twelve Tribes of Israel, upon each stone six names.

There, where the Ephod crossed upon the High Priest's breast, was a square ornament, called the Rational, in Hebrew Chos-chen, [Choschen. Græc. Λογεῖον. Rationale.] wherein twelve precious stones were set, with the names of the twelve Tribes of Israel engraved on them, one on each stone. Lastly, the Ephod was carried behind, girt the tunick, and was fastened in a knot before, after the manner of those great girdles worn by the Eastern people, the ends whereof touch the ground.

The Ephod worn by common Priests, which was of linnen only, was of the same extent and use, but neither so rich, nor so much adorned. This ornament was peculiar [Hieron. ad Marcellan.] to Priests, and St. Jerom observes, that we find no mention of it in the Scripture, but when the Priests are spoken of. Illud breviter attende, quod nunquam nisi in Sacerdotio nominetur Ephod. It was an opinion among the Jews, that no sort of worship, either true or false, could subsist without the Priesthood, or the Ephod. [Judg. viii. 27. Ib. xvii. 5. Hosea iii. 5. xxx. 22.] Gideon made an Ephod out of the spoils of the Midianites, and this ornament became the occasion of Israel's offending God. Micah having made an Idol, and placed it in his house, did not fail to make an Ephod for it. God foretold in Hosea, that the Israelites should be for a long time without Kings, Princes, Sacrifices, Altar, Ephod, and Teraphim. Lastly, Isaiah speaking of the false Gods, who were worshipped by the Israelites, ascribes Ephods to them: Ye shall defile also the covering of thy graven images of silver, and the Ephod of thy Gods of gold[1].

The Ephod is often taken for the Pectoral, and for the Urim and Thummim, which were fastned to it, because all this belonged to the Ephod, and made but one piece with it.

Altho' the Ephod was an ornament peculiar to the Priests, it was nevertheless sometimes given to Laymen. David wore it in the ceremony of removing the Ark from the house of Obed-edom to Jerusalem. Samuel, tho' he was a Levite only, and a [1 Sam. xii. 18.] child, yet wore the Ephod in the Tabernacle.

The Levites regularly were not to wear the Ephod: their habit did not differ from that of Laymen; at least Moses appointed nothing particular with relation to their dress. Nevertheless at the ceremony of the dedication of Solomon's Temple, the Levites and singing men, who were not of the Priests order, were cloathed in habits of fine linnen: [2 Chr. v. 12. 1 Chr. xv. 27. Joseph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 8.] Vestiti byssinis, as David was at the ceremony of removing the Ark from the house of Obededom to the King's palace. Josephus remarks, that in the time of King Agrippa, and a little before the taking of Jerusalem by the Romans, the Levites desired this Prince to convene the Sanhedrim, in order to establish a regulation, allowing them to wear the linnen Stole as well as the Priests. They flattered Agrippa with assurances, that this would contribute to the glory of his reign. Agrippa granted their request; but the Historian observes, that this was an innovation, contrary to the Laws of their country, which were never struck at with impunity.

Spencer[2], and Cunæus[3], both affirm, that the Jewish Kings had a right to wear the Ephod, and consult the Lord by Urim and Thummim. Their opinion they grounded principally upon what is said in the first [1 Sam. xxx. 7.] book of Samuel, that David coming to Ziklag, and finding that the Amalekites had pillaged the city, and carried away his and his people's wives, said hereupon to Abiathar the High Priest, Bring me hither the Ephod, and Abiathar brought thither the Ephod. Applica ad me Ephod, & applicavit Abiathar Ephod ad David. The sequel favours this opinion, verse 8. And David enquired at the Lord, saying, Shall I pursue after this troop? shall I overtake them? And he answered him, pursue; for thou shalt surely overtake them, and without fail recover all. [1 Sam. xxviii. 6.] We read likewise, that Saul consulted the Lord, and that the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams nor prophets. He consulted God therefore by the Urim, consequently he put on the Ephod.

But the generality of Commentators, and the most learned of them, are of opinion, that neither David, Saul, nor Joshua, nor any other Prince of Israel, dressed themselves in the High Priest's Ephod, in order to consult God of themselves, and that the passages we have related signify no more than, Put on the Ephod, and consult the Lord for me; literally, Bring the Ephod to me, and Abiathar caused the Ephod to be brought to David. Grotius believes, the High Priest turned the Ephod, or Pectoral, towards David, that this Prince might see with his own eyes, what God should answer to him by the stones upon the breastplate. See URIM and THUMMIM, where the manner of consulting the Lord is described.

I. EPHRAIM, the Patriarch Joseph's second son, by Aseneth, Potiphar's daughter. He was born in Egypt, about the year of the world 2293, or 2294. Ephraim was carried by his father Joseph, together with his brother Manasseh, and presented to Jacob on his death-bed. Jacob making the two brothers to come near him, laid his right hand on Ephraim the youngest, and his left on Manasseh the eldest. Joseph desirous to change his hands, and put Jacob's right hand on Manasseh, said, Not so, my father, for this is the eldest. Jacob answered him, I knew it, my son; Manasseh shall be multiplied, [1 Chr. vii. 20, 21.] and become the father of many people: but Ephraim shall be greater, and his posterity more numerous; and the time shall come, when Ephraim and Manasseh shall be a sort of form of blessing, and it shall be said, May God heap his favours on you, as he did on Ephraim and Manasseh.

[Numb. ii. 18, 19.] While the Israelites abode in Egypt, the sons of Ephraim having made an inroad upon Palestine, the inhabitants of Gath killed them, and Ephraim their father mourned many days for them, and his brethren came to comfort him. Afterwards he had a son whose name was Beriah, and a daughter, called Sherah, who built upper and lower Bethoron, and Uzzen-Sherah. He had other sons also, Rephah, Resheph, and Tela. The posterity of Ephraim multiplied to that degree in Egypt, that when they left that country, they amounted to the number of forty thousand and five hundred men above twenty years of age, and capable of bearing arms. Elishama, the son [הפתח Ps. lxxviii. 9.] of Ammihud, was their Captain.

After they were entred into the land of promise, Joshua, who was of this Tribe, gave them their portion between the Mediterranean Westward, and the river Jordan Eastward. The Half-tribe of Manasseh was placed to the North, and those of Dan and Benjamin to the South. The Ark of the Covenant, and the Tabernacle remained a long time in this Tribe at Shiloh; and after the separation of the ten Tribes, the seat of the kingdom of Israel was always in the Tribe of Ephraim. Ephraim is frequently set down to signify the whole Kingdom of the ten Tribes. Instead of Ephraim, the word Ephræm is sometimes used; Filii Ephræm intendentes & mittentes arcum. And the Canton belonging to this Tribe is called Ephratah, in Psalm cxxxii. 6. Lo, we heard of it at Ephratah. We have observed, that the Ark was at Shiloh in the division of Ephraim. Lastly, Ephratæus sometimes signifies a man of [Jud. xii. 5.] Ephraim; Numquid Ephratæus es? — Dic ergo Schibboleth. Elkanah, Samuel's father, is surnamed Ephratæus, 1 Sam. i. 2.

But the word Ephrata is used also for Bethlehem, and Ephratæus for a man of Bethlehem, as will be taken notice of hereafter. The Tribe of Ephraim was led into captivity beyond the Euphrates, together with the other Tribes of Israel, by Salmaneser King of Assyria, in the year of the world 3283, before Jesus Christ 717, before the Vulgar Æra 721. Some affirm, that they still subsist, and are very numerous in [The Author's Dissertat. prefixed to the books of Chron, pag. xx, xxi, &c.] Tartary, China, or the Indies; but in a Dissertation written particularly on this question, we have enquired into this matter, and endeavoured to demonstrate, that the ten Tribes returned to Palestine, some time about the reign of Alexander the Great. As to the Cuthæans or Samaritans, who were sent into Samaria after the transplanting of the ten Tribes, our opinion of them may be seen in the Articles CUTHITES or CUTHÆANS, or SAMARITANS.

Epiphanes

EPIPHANES. This Greek word signifies properly something that appears with lustre, and is an epithet given to the Gods, when they shew themselves to men. Antiochus the brother of Seleucus, coming fortunately into Syria a little after the death of his brother, was looked upon as some propitious Deity, appearing in the country, and for this reason was called Epiphanes.

We call that festival Epiphany, upon which the Church celebrates the manifestation of Jesus Christ to mankind, and commemorates the adoration of the Magi or Wise-men, the baptism of our Saviour, and the first miracle which he wrought at the marriage in Cana.

Epoch

EPOCH, a term in Chronology signifying particular, fixed and certain points made use of in computing the years from one time to another. The Creation of the World is the first Epoch; this is fixed at the year 710 of the Julian Period, 4000 before Jesus Christ.

The second is that of the Deluge, in the year of the World 1656, and 2344 before Jesus Christ.

The third is that of the Tower of Babel, which is set down differently. We place it about the year of the World 1800, before Jesus Christ 2200.

The fourth is at the second calling of Abraham from the city of Haran, in the year of the World 2083, before Jesus Christ 1917.

The fifth, at the departure of the Israelites out of Egypt, in the year of the World World 2517, before Jesus Christ 1483.

The sixth, at the Dedication of the Temple in 3001, before Jesus Christ 999.

The seventh at the end of the Babylonish Captivity in 3468, before Jesus Christ 532.

The eighth, at the birth of Jesus Christ in the year of the World 4000, before the Vulgar Æra 4 years. And for profane History, we fix, 1. The foundation of the Assyrian Empire by Belus in 2737, before Jesus Christ 1263.

Equivocal

EQUIVOCAL. An Equivocal word is one which expresses two very different things; for example, in the Scripture the word Father, signifies in the natural acceptation of it, father, and grandfather, great-grandfather, the author of a race, a generation, a family: thus Adam is the Father of all mankind. By Father is likewise meant master, inventor: for example, Jubal is said, to be the father of all such as handle the harp [Gen. iv. 21.] and organ. The name of father may likewise denote one whom we respect; thus Hiram King of Tyre calls a certain ingenious artificer whom he sent to Solomon, Father, &c. [2 Chron. ii. 13.] The terms brothers and sisters are in like manner equivocally used in the Sacred language; and signify not only brother and sister in the common and natural acceptation, but also cousins of both sexes, near and remote relations, those of the same nation, friends of either sex, the wife and husband. See Cant. viii. 1, 8, 10, &c. Our Saviour sometimes used words of an Equivocal meaning, but without any design of deceiving; for example, when he says, Lazarus our friend [John xi. 11.] sleepeth, which his Disciples understood of common sleep, but by him was meant the sleep of death. And in another place, Destroy [John ii. 19.] this Temple, and in three days I will rebuild it; whereby he meant his body, which was to rise again in three days: whereas the Jews understood by it the Temple of the Lord, which they believed Jesus Christ by these words promised to rebuild in three days.

The Patriarchs sometimes used Equivocations, in cases wherein they seemed desirous to deceive; for example, when Abraham said that Sarah was his sister, and Isaac the same of Rebekah; they whom they spoke to understood them without doubt in the natural sense, and as if they meant, that Sarah was not Abraham's wife, nor Rebekah Isaac's; and although the Scripture relates these instances, it does not always propose to justify them. Religion condemns all falsehood, but it does not censure every Equivocation. There are some which deceive no one, and are mentioned without an intention to deceive; others there are, which are reckoned pleasantries, and jests, which morality does not exclude from conversation, as offending neither against truth, charity, sincerity, nor justice.

Er

ER, the Patriarch Judah's eldest son, who married Tamar. But as he was very wicked in the sight of God, the Lord [Genes. xxxviii. 7.] brought him to an untimely end. As Er had no children by his wife Tamar, Judah married her to Onan his second son, who was as wicked as his brother. The Hebrews believe, that Er married Tamar when he was but eight years old, and that he lived but one year with her. The Testament of the [Seder Olam, c. 2. Testamentum Judæ.] twelve Patriarchs says, that the Angel of the Lord slew him the third night after his marriage, as a punishment for refusing to treat Tamar as his wife, because she was not a Canaanite; for Er's mother being by descent a Canaanite, had, as it is said, conceived a great aversion to Tamar her daughter-in-law, who was of the race of Aram, or the Syrians. Wherefore she advised her son not to consummate his marriage with Tamar. But there is no certainty in these traditions, [Vide Auth. Oper. imperfecti in Matth. Homil. 1.] notwithstanding their antiquity.

Erastus

ERASTUS, a Corinthian, and Saint Paul's Disciple, is called by this Apostle [Rom. xvi. 23.] Chamberlain of the city, that is to say, of Corinth, where St. Paul was at that time, or of Jerusalem according to the modern [Menea 10. Novemb. Ughell. l. 6. p. 1130. Acts xix. 22.] Greeks. Erastus adhered to St. Paul, and resigned his employment of Chamberlain. He followed him to Ephesus, where he was in the year 56 of Jesus Christ, whence St. Paul sent him to Macedon with Timotheus, probably to prepare the alms expected from the faithful. They were both with him at Corinth in the year 58, when he wrote his Epistle to the Romans, whom he salutes in both their names; and it is probable that Erastus afterwards continually followed the Apostle till his last voyage to Corinth in the way to Rome, where he suffered martyrdom in 65, for then Erastus remained at Corinth, as St. Paul sent word to Timothy in a short [2 Tim. iv. 20.] time after.

Usuard, Ado, and the Roma Marty rology say, that St. Paul left Erastus in Macedonia, and made him Bishop of it; and that at last he suffered martyrdom at Philippi. The Greeks on the contrary in their Calendars make him Bishop of Paneas, near the sources of the river Jordan, give him the title of Apostle, place him in the number of the seventy Disciples, and say he died in peace after having gone over all the earth, preaching the faith of Jesus Christ. But not any of these produce one proof of what they say. The Latins honour him upon the 26th of July, the Greeks upon the 10th of November.

Esar-Haddon

ESAR-HADDON, the son of Sennacherib, and his successor in the kingdom of Assyria. He is called Sargon or Saragon in Isaiah. He reigned twenty-nine years, made war with the Philistins, and took Azoth from them by the conduct of Tartan the General of his army; for as to his part, he was not in this expedition. He likewise attacked Egypt, the land of Cush, and Edom, with a design in all probability to revenge the affront which Sennacherib his father had received from Tirhakah King of Cush, and the King of Egypt, who were Hezekiah's confederates. This is that Esar-haddon who sent Priests to the Cuthæans, whom Salmanesser King of Assyria had planted in the country of Samaria, in the room of those Israelites, whom he had transported into places beyond the river Euphrates. He made war with Manasseh King of Judah, took Jerusalem, and carried the King away to Babylon, whereof he had made himself master by force, and perhaps because there was no heir of the family of Belesis King of Babylon. He is said to have reigned nine and twenty or thirty years at Niniveh, from the year of the World 3294, which was that of Sennacherib's death, to the year 3323[1]. Besides which, he reigned thirteen years at Babylon, in all two and forty years. He died in the year of the World 3336, and was succeeded by Saosduchinus.

Esau

[2 Chr. xxxiii. 12. Isai. xiii. 13. Uffer. ad an. M. 3323. ex Canone Reg. Ptolemaico. Gen. xxvi. 24, 25, 26. Esau.] ESAU, the son of Isaac and Rebekah, was born in the year of the World 2168, before Jesus Christ 1832, before the Vulgar Æra 1836. When the time came of Rebekah's delivery, she was brought to bed with twins, and the first of them which came into the world, was as hairy as an hide; for which reason he was called Esau, that is to say, a man full grown, or a man of perfect age. Some derive the word Esau from the Arabick, Gescha or Gescheva, which signifies a hair-cloth. When Esau was grown up, he exercised himself in hunting and tilling the ground; and his father Isaac had a particular tenderness for him. Upon a certain day, when Jacob had prepared a mess of porridge, Esau returning very much fatigued out of the fields, desired him to give him some of his red pottage, for he was extremely tired: this Jacob promised he would do, provided he would sell him his birth-right. Esau therefore sold it, and engaged himself by oath to resign it to him. After which, he eat up his mess, and went away, very little concerned at what he had done.

[In the year of the World 2208, before J. C. 1792, before the Vulgar Æra 1796.] Esau at the age of forty years married two Canaanitish women; one, whose name was Judith, the daughter of Beeri the Hittite, and the other Bashemath, the daughter of Elon, of the same country. These marriages were very displeasing to Isaac and Rebekah. Now Isaac being old, and his sight extremely decay'd, he bid Esau go into the field and provide something for him to eat, and at his return he would give [Gen. xxvii. 1, 2, 3.] him his last blessing. Esau took his weapons and went an hunting. But in his absence, Jacob, assisted by his mother Rebekah, came to Isaac for his blessing, and being disguised, and pretending to be Esau, he obtained it. Isaac heaped many blessings on him, and declared him Lord of all his brethren. When Esau returned, and understood what had passed, he asked him, whether he had not reserved one blessing for him. Isaac moved by his tears, said, Behold thy dwelling shall be the fatness of the earth, and of the dew of heaven from above. By thy sword shalt thou live, and shalt serve thy brother; and it shall come to pass, when thou shalt have the dominion, that thou shalt break his yoke from off thy neck.

Esau was hereupon very much enraged against Jacob, and contracted a secret aversion to him. He considered with himself, that the days of mourning for his father were at hand, and then he determined to murder his brother Jacob. But his designs being revealed to Rebekah, she sent Jacob to his uncle Laban in Mesopotamia, there to stay till Esau's indignation was appeased. She prevailed with Isaac to be consenting, so Jacob departed without Esau's knowledge, and went to Haran. In the mean time Esau married several wives, as well Canaanites, as the daughter of Ishmael and Nebajoth[1], by whom he had several children. He settled in the mountains to the east of Jordan, and there became very powerful.

Jacob, at his return from Mesopotamia with his wives and children, fearing lest [In the year of the World 2265, before J. C. 1735, before the Vulgar Æra 1739. Gen. xxxii. xxxiii.] Esau might still have retained his resentments, sent messengers to him with presents, in order to procure his good graces, and disarm his passion. Esau received Jacob's messengers very well, and came himself with four hundred men to meet him. Jacob believed that he was coming to put all his company to the sword; he therefore addressed himself to God, and besought him to protect him from his brother. But Esau came with peaceable intentions, and the two brothers embraced one another very tenderly. Esau received the presents which Jacob made him, offered to accompany him with his people, and be a guard to him till he got beyond Jordan. But Jacob thanked him, and Esau returned the same day to Seir. The two brothers were both present when their father died; and as they were [In the year of the World 2288, before J. C. 1712, before the Vulgar Æra 1716. Gen. xxxvi. 2.] very rich in cattle, and the country did not afford pasture for such numbers, they separated. Esau retired to mount Seir, and the mountains of the Horites, where he had before dwelt.

Esau had three wives; the name of the first was Judith, or Aholibamah; the name of the second was Bashemath, or Adah; and the third was Mahelath, or Bashemath. Judith was the mother of Jeush, Jaalam, and Korah. Adah was the mother of Eliphaz; and Mahelath had Reuel. We know nothing certainly concerning the death of Esau. The Testament of the twelve Patriarchs, a work of some antiquity, but apocryphal, tells us, that Esau coming to attack his brother with his forces, was killed in the fortieth year of the Patriarch Judah's age, which might be the hundred and twenty-first of Esau, of the World 2289, before Jesus Christ 1711, before the Vulgar Æra 1715. King Erythros, from whom the Red Sea is said to have taken its name, and whose tomb is shewn in the isle of Tyrina or Ogyris, is believed to be the same as Edom. Erythros in Greek signifies red, and Edom the same in Hebrew. The Testament of the twelve Patriarchs, already mentioned, says, that he was buried in mount Seir; but this piece deserves no credit. When Judah was forty years of age, Jacob had been a long time in Egypt; he died the year before.

The Mahometans call him Ais, and add some particulars to his history: for example, that Jacob having by surprize obtained the blessing which Isaac designed for Esau, the latter desired his father to beg of God, that he would be pleased out of his family to produce Kings and Conquerors, since he had made it his petition for Jacob, that Saints and Prophets should issue out of his race; this Isaac would not refuse him. In pursuance of this promise, God gave Esau a son, whose name was Roum, from whom the Greek and Roman Emperors are descended.

It is a common tradition among all the eastern nations, which have any knowledge of the sacred Writings, that in the time of Abdon, Judge of the Hebrews, a colony of Edomites transplanted themselves into Italy, where they settled; that Latinus reigned among them, and Romulus the Founder of Rome derived his original from them. This is all a fable, maliciously invented by the Jews, in order to make room for the application of every thing said in Scripture against Edom and the Edomites, to Christians, and even the sacred Person of Jesus Christ.

The most famous Rabbins obstinately maintain this impertinent tradition. The Talmud calls Italy and Rome, The cruel empire of Edom. The Jews assert, that the Edomites having embraced Christianity under Constantine, got to Rome, and into the Roman Empire; others will have it, that an Idumæan Priest brought Christianity to Rome. Some of the Cabbalists have the impiety to say, that the soul of Esau passed by transmigration into the body of Jesus Christ; for a proof of which opinion they remark, that if we read the Hebrew letters backwards which compose the names of Jesus and Esau, we shall find they are the same: they are born under the same planet, Mars. Edom signifies red; the Roman Emperors were clothed in red; the Cardinals still wear the same colour. Fine reasons indeed!

Josephus

[Vid.Euseb. in Jezreel, & in Arbile. & Joseph. de Bello, l. 4. c. 2. Josippos l. 1. c. 2. p. 4.] Josephus the son of Gerion relates the matter otherwise. Tzepho, grandson to Esau, being detained prisoner in Egypt by Joseph, fled to Æneas King of Carthage, who made him General of his troops. Æneas went from Africk into Italy, beat Turnus the King of Beneventum twice, and forcibly carried away Junia [or Lavinia] whom he proposed to marry. Pablus, nephew to Æneas, was killed in the action, as well as Turnus, and two Towers or Mausolæums were erected for them, which he says were still to be seen between Rome and Alba, at the time when he was writing this account. The Africans, under the command of Tzepho, repassed often into Italy for the sake of plunder. In one of these expeditions having lost a young calf, he found it again in a cave, where one who was half a goat, and half a man, would have devoured it: but he killed this monster, and carried off his calf. [The Author seems to have had an eye to the fable of Cacus.] The inhabitants of this country being delivered from this monster who destroyed their flocks, honoured Tzepho as an Hero, and gave him the name of Janus. They called him likewise Saturn, from the name of the Star which was at that time adored by them. Thus you see here an Edomite King and God of Italy.

The sequel of Ben-Gorion's history is not at all less impertinent, than that part which we have just now produced from it. He relates, that Latinus the successor of Tzepho, declared war with Asdrubal King of Carthage, to revenge himself of Æneas, who had caused a bridge or aquæduct to be built, which convey'd the waters of Italy into Africk. Part of the bridge was broken down, Asdrubal defeated, and killed. Latinus pursued his conquests as far as Germany and Burgundy. What impertinences are these! Nevertheless, some Authors have adopted them, in part at least; for there is an inscription cited, which was found at Palermo in Sicily, wherein these words were to be read: There is no other God besides the one only [Fazellus de rebus Sicul. Decad. 1. l. 8. c. de Panormo.] God; there is no powerful Being but the same God. The God, whom we adore, is the only one who gives victory. The governour of this tower is Shaphat, the son of Eliphaz, the son of Esau, brother to Jacob, son of Isaac, who was the son of Abraham.

Abulfaragius says, that Esau made war with Jacob, and that Jacob killed him with an arrow; which has some resemblance with what we read in the Testament of the twelve Patriarchs. The Mahometans maintain, that Sennacherib was of Esau's race; they call likewise the Greeks and Latins, red Franks, or Edomites, as descendants, according to their assertion, from Roum the son of Esau.

Esdras

[Ezra i, ii, iii, iv, &c.] ESDRAS, or Ezra, was of the sacerdotal family. By some he is said to have been the son of Jeraiah the High-Priest, who was put to death at Riblatha by Nebuchadnezzar, after the taking of Jerusalem. But it is much more probable that he was his grandson only, or even his great-grandson. It is believed, that the first time of his returning from Babylon to Jerusalem was with Zerobabel, in the beginning of Cyrus's reign at Babylon, in the year of the World 3468, before Jesus Christ 532, before the Vulgar Æra 536. Esdras wrote the history of his return, and what followed upon it; and as he was very skilful in the law, and abounded with zeal for God's service, he had doubtless a great share in all that was transacted at that time.

[Ezra iv. 7; 17. In the year of the World 3484, before J. C. 516, before the Vulgar Æra 520. Ezra vii. 1—6, & seq.] The enemies of the Jews having found means to render them suspected at the court of Persia, an order came from thence, forbidding them to proceed farther in the building of the Temple, which work they had reassumed after the death of Cyrus and Cambyses. But this order having been revoked in the beginning of Darius's reign, who was the son of Hystaspes, in 3485, they began again to build, and dedicated the Temple in 3489, before Jesus Christ 511, before the Vulgar Æra 515.

Esdras notwithstanding returned to Babylon, upon some affairs probably relating to his nation; and in the seventh year of the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, of the World 3537, before Jesus Christ 463, before the Vulgar Æra 467, this Prince sent him back to Jerusalem, and granted all that he had requested of him. He gave him letters patents, whereby he permitted all the Israelites who were in his kingdom to return to Jerusalem, to carry thither all the gold and silver that they had, and all that the King and his Counsellors offered to the Temple of the Lord, and to employ it in buying victims to sacrifice in the House of God. The King likewise restored to them the rich vessels of the Temple, which had not been returned by Cyrus. Artaxerxes commanded his Treasurers in the Provinces beyond the Euphrates, to furnish Esdras with every thing necessary for the sacrifices, either in corn, wine, oil, salt, or money. He farther granted immunities to all the Priests and Ministers of the Temple. Lastly, he gave leave to Esdras to appoint Judges, and Magistrates to judge the people, and granted him him power to govern and instruct those who were returned to Jerusalem.

Esdras having received these powers and orders, assembled a great company of Israelites, [Ezra viii.] and set forward in his way to Jerusalem. When he came as far as the banks of the river Ahava, he sent to invite some Priests and Ministers of the Temple, who were at Casiphia, probably in the Caspian Mountains, to return with them to Palestine, and two hundred and fifty eight persons were brought to him. He published a feast in order to pray to God that they might have a happy journey. He remitted into the hands of the principal persons in his company, an account of the gold and silver vessels which the King had restored, and given to him. At last they proceeded on their journey, in number seventeen hundred and seventy-five men, and all arrived happily in Judæa, in the year of the World 3537, before Jesus Christ 463, before the Vulgar Æra 467.

Esdras being informed, that several of the Israelites, both Priests and Levites, Magistrates, and common people, had married [Ezra ix.] wives, who were strangers and idolaters, he rents his clothes, and tore the hair of his head and beard, and having taken his seat in the Temple, continued in great grief and silence till the evening sacrifice. Then he put up his prayers to God, and asked pardon for the sins of the people. A great multitude having flocked together about him, the principal of the people resolved to renew the covenant with the Lord, and to dismiss the strange wives, whom they had married, together with the children who had been born of them: and to this, all the people who were present, ingaged themselves by oath. But as there were many absent, Esdras directed an order to be published in Judah and Jerusalem, for all the people to meet [Ezra x. In the year of the World 3538, before J. C. 462, before the Vulgar Æra 466.] within three days at the Temple.

The people being all assembled on the day appointed, Esdras discovered to them the heinous nature of the sin, which they had committed, in marrying strange women; and declared to them the resolution which had been taken some days before, of separating from them, and dismissing their children with them. All the people answered, that they consented to this resolution. But as the season was very bad, and this was not the work of one day, it was determined that Commissioners should be named, who [In the year of the World 3550, before J. C. 450, before the Vulgar Æra 454. Ezra i. ii. &c. Nehem. viii. In the year of the World 3551, before J. C. 449, before the Vulgar Æra 459. Nehem. xxx.] should proceed to execute this resolution. This is what was performed in the year of the World 3538, before Jesus Christ 462, before the Vulgar Æra 466.

Esdras had the principal authority in Jerusalem, till the arrival of Nehemiah, who was sent into Judæa by Artaxerxes with the power and character of Governour. In the second year of Nehemiah's Government, and after the walls of Jerusalem were rebuilt, the people being assembled at the Temple, to celebrate the Feast of Tabernacles, Esdras was desired to read the Law. He therefore read it from morning to noon, accompanied with some Levites, who stood besides him, and kept the people silent. The next day they came to Esdras, desiring to know of him how they were to celebrate the Feast of Tabernacles. This he explained to them, and continued for eight days reading the Law to them in the Temple. All this was followed with a solemn renewal of the covenant with the Lord.

This is what we know with most certainty relating to the life of Esdras. Josephus says, that he was buried at Jerusalem: but the Jews believe that he died in Persia, in a second journey which he made to Artaxerxes. His tomb is shewn there in the city of Zamuza. He is said to have lived near a hundred and twenty years.

Some have asserted, that he was chiefly concerned in revising and compiling most of the books of Scripture[1]. He corrected them, made some little changes in them, digested them into order, and put them into the condition wherein we now have them. As he had a great deal of zeal and knowledge, and was very careful to collect all the old monuments of his nation ; and withal, was filled with the Spirit of Prophecy, it is very probable that he did indeed take abundance of pains in collecting the sacred writings, and composing the Canon, which fixes the books of the Old Testament to be two and twenty in number, as is at this day acknowledged by the Hebrews.

[Hieronym. Prolog. Galeato Talmudici in Sanhedrin.] Some have also assured us that he was the inventor of the Massora and the vowel points, and that he changed the old writing, or the old Hebrew characters, and substituted the Chaldee characters in their room, which the Jews at this day make use of. Some have believed, that he renewed, repaired, and comcomposed a-new the Holy Scriptures, which were intirely lost during the captivity of Babylon. Lastly, some have asserted, that he and the prophet Malachi were the same. Each of these Articles would require a large Dissertation, but as we cannot in a Dictionary dwell long on any particular subject, we shall declare our thoughts in few words on each of these difficulties.[2]

The Massora and vowel points are much later than the original of Christianity, and consequently than the time of Esdras, as we shall shew under the articles MASSORA, MASSORITS, VOWEL POINTS. With regard to the old Hebrew characters, which are the same as those of the ancient Phœnicians, and present Samaritans, we have shewn in a particular Dissertation, 1. That there is no inconveniency in allowing that Esdras changed the old Hebrew Scripture, in order to substitute the modern Hebrew Character, which is the same as the Chaldæan, in the room of it. 2. That this change at first was not universal, but performed in part only and insensibly; since a long time after Esdras, there were some footsteps of the Old Hebrew Character, still visible in the Jewish way of writing.

The authority of the fourth book, attributed [4 Esd. xiv. 19, 20, 21, &c.] to Esdras, has induced several of the Fathers to be of the opinion, that Esdras dictated over again all the Holy Scriptures, which this Book declares to have been lost during the captivity of Babylon. But this fourth book has been demonstrated to be an Apocryphal piece, and of no authority[3]; and that what is therein asserted concerning the renewing of the Scriptures, is contradicted by the Scriptures themselves. See our Dissertation on this matter prefixed to our Comment upon the first book of Esdras, or the book of Ezra.

Lastly, the opinion which declares Malachi and Esdras to be the same person, [Hieron. Præfat. ad Malac. & in Commentar. pluries.] is maintained not only by St. Jerom, and the Rabbins, but likewise by Abbot Rupert, and some others. In our Preface to this Prophet, we have brought some reasons to support this conjecture. It is certain that Malachy or Malachia is not so much a proper, as a common name, which signifies the Angel or Messenger of the Lord; and that in Esdras's time the Prophets were frequently called Malachias, or Angels of the Lord. See Haggai i. 13. Malach. iii. 1. The Fathers have often cited Malachi under the name of Angel, or one sent from God. See the Article relating to him.

[Nehem. xii. 22.] We have four Books under the name of Esdras: but the two first only are acknowledged in the Latin Church to be Canonical; the two others are Apocryphal. The first and second make but one in the Hebrew. The first of these books is certainly the work of Esdras; herein he relates those things whereof he was a witness, and speaks often in the first person. The second book, which goes under the name of Esdras, is commonly attributed to Nehemiah. It must however be confessed, that some small matters have been added to it, which cannot belong to Nehemiah. For example, there is mention made in it of the High-Priest Jaddua, and King Darius. This Jaddua is Jaddus, in whose time Alexander the Great came to Jerusalem; and Darius is Darius Codomannus, who was overcome by Alexander the Great, above an hundred and twenty years after the arrival of Nehemiah at Jerusalem.

The third book[4], which goes under the name of Esdras, is thought by the Greeks to be Canonical. It is the same in substance as the first of Esdras, but interpolated, and with the addition of several circumstances, the principal whereof is the history of three of Darius's Guards, of which number Zerubbabel was one. The Author relates, that these three Guards offered to maintain each his particular proposition; the first, that the strongest thing in the world was wine. The second, that the King was so. Zerubbabel, who was the third, asserted that women were so, but that truth was still stronger than every thing besides. As soon as Darius was awake, the three Guards proposed their problems to him. The King convened his officers, and the governours of the several Provinces; the propositions of the three Guards were read to them, and each of them spoke what was proper to support his opinion. Zerubbabel carried the prize, by the confession of the whole assembly, and for a reward, Darius gave him leave to return to Jerusalem, to rebuild the Temple, and to carry back thither the Sacred vessels, which Nebuchadnezzar had taken away several years before. But, as I have already said, the Latin Church esteems this Book to be Apocryphal.

The fourth book of Esdras is written with art art enough, as if Esdras himself had composed it; but there are several marks of falshood discernable in it. The Author believed that the day of Judgement was near, and that all the Souls both of good and bad men, would be delivered out of Hell after the day of Judgement. He speaks of two monstrous animals, created by God at the beginning of the world, in order to make a great Feast with them, for all the Elect after the Resurrection. He says, that the ten Tribes of Israel are gone into a certain country, which he calls Arseret, that Esdras repaired the whole body of the Holy Scriptures, which were intirely lost. He speaks of Jesus Christ and his Apostles in so clear a manner, that the Gospel itself is not more express. See our Dissertation on this Book, prefixed to the Books of Esdras. Neither the Synagogue, nor the Greek or Latin Church ever unanimously received it as Canonical, tho' some of the Fathers have sometimes cited it, and the Latin Church in its Office has borrowed some words out of this Book. It is not now any where in Greek; it never was in Hebrew; it is printed in Latin at the end of the generality of our Bibles.

The two Books of Kings, and the Chronicles, and several other Books of the Bible have been attributed to Esdras; and it is very probable, that he did at least review and compile them. The Jews likewise ascribe to him certain regulations, some particular blessings, and prayers. Lastly, some speak of a Revelation, a vision, and a dream of Esdras. But nothing [Vide Jo. Albert. Fabrit. Cod. pseudepigraph. V. T. art.229. p. 1145. & seq.] of all this is authentick. The Jews have an extraordinary esteem for Esdras; they say, that if the Law had not been given by Moses, Esdras would have deserved to have been the Legislator of the Hebrews. The Mahometans call him Ozair the son of Seraiah. They relate of him, that being on the road in his return from Babylonia [Alcoran 1. Bacra d'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 697. Ozair.] to Judæa, he stopped at a village very near the town, which went by the name of Sair-Abad, or the house of walking, or Diar-Anab, the place of vine-yards, that there he build a cottage along an old front of the wall, living upon fruits which he gathered in the neighbouring fields. As he was beholding Jerusalem from thence, which at that time was nothing but a heap of ruins, it came into his mind to say, How will God be able to restore these ruins, and revive the inhabitants of this place? Scarce had he conceived this thought, but God smote him with Death, and he remained an hundred years upon the same spot, without burial.

Now it so fell out, that the King of Persia some time after sent Jews to Jerusalem, with power to rebuild it; Esdras after having been an hundred years dead, rose again like one awakened out of a dream, and believing that he had not slept above a day, he cast his eyes upon Jerusalem, which he beheld to be rebuilt and well peopled; whereupon he cried, Certainly God is omnipotent, since he is able to do whatsoever he pleaseth.

[See our Dissert. on this Subject.] It is an ancient Tradition, which we meet with in the book which goes under the name of the fourth book of Esdras, and in several of the Fathers, such as Irenæus, Tertullian, Clemens Alexandrinus, Basil, Jerom, St. Austin, and some others, that Esdras was the restorer of the Sacred Writings, and that all the copies of them being burnt, lost or dispersed, under the last Kings of Judah, and during the captivity, Esdras wrote them a-new. The Mahometans have embellished this tradition with some additional circumstances. They say that Esdras, upon the return from the captivity, instructed the people without ceasing, and discoursed to them continually about the Law of God; but as the Sacred Texts were lost, they made no great account of his instructions.

The Jews, as a trial whither he had preserved the remembrance of the Holy Scriptures, as he boasted, put five pens in his hand, with which he began to write with as much ease and rapidity, as if he had but one only; and thus he transcribed all the Sacred Books from his memory, without using any Copy.

This wonder notwithstanding did not convert the Jews. They said among themselves, How can we know whether this which Esdras has written, be the true text of Scripture, since there is not one among us who ever read it, or can give any testimony of it. Hereupon one of them rose up, and said, I remember to have heard my father say, that formerly my grand-father had concealed a copy of the Law with in the hole of a rock in such a place. Thither they went therefore, searched and found the copy which had been so long hidden; this they compared with what Esdras had written, and it was found to be so very like it, that there was no variation even in a single letter. The people hereupon astonished at this prodigy cried out, Ozair is the Son of God, since he was able to perform a thing so extraordinary, and so much above the capacity of any human strength. From hence Mahomet took occasion to blaspheme Jesus Christ, by affirming, that God had no son, because he does not ingender.

The fourth book which goes under the name of Esdras, relates the matter differently. Esdras having desired of God, that he would please to communicate his Spirit [4 Esdr. xiv. 23, 24, &c.] to him, that he might write down what the Sacred Books contained, which were then lost. God said to him, Go, find the people, and tell them that they must not seek for you these forty days; prepare several box-tables, and take with thee Sarea, Debrias, Selemia, Ecanus, and Asiel, five persons who write very nimbly, then return hither, and I will kindle in thine heart a light, which will not be extinguished, till what I have said is put in execution. Esdras did as God commanded him. He came to the appointed place, and God presented him with a cup full of liquor, in colour like fire. He drank of it, and perceived his heart to be inflamed with an extreme ardour. Then he began to dictate to the five men abovementioned. He spoke for forty days intire, and in this time two hundred and four books were written by them. He took no nourishment but in the night. God commanded him to reserve seventy of these books, and give them to the wisest of the people; and for the rest, he enjoined him to publish them openly, that they might be read by the worthy and unworthy.

[D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 698. col. 2.] The Christians of the East say, that Esdras swallowed the dust of the ditch, wherein the sacred fire had been concealed, and so received the gift of the Holy Ghost, which enabled him to restore the Sacred Writings. All which proves the great progress which this opinion has made, both in the Church and out of it, which we have confuted at length in a Dissertation written particularly upon this subject.

Translators' note. Some of the ancient Fathers, says Dr. Prideaux in his Connect. &c. hold, that all the Scriptures were lost and de- stroy'd in the Babylonish Captivity, and that Ezra restored them all again by divine revelation. Thus saith Irenæus, and Tertullian, Clemens Alexandrinus, Basil, and others say the same. But they had no other foundation for it, than that fabulous relation, which we have of it in the 14th Chapter of the second apochryphal book of Esdras, a book too ab- surd for the Romanists themselves to receive into their Canon. All that Esdras did in this matter, was, 1. He corrected all the errors that had crept into the copies of the sacred Writings through negligence, or mistake of the transcribers. 2. He collected all the books of which the holy Scriptures then consisted; disposed them in their proper order, and settled the Canon of Scripture for his time. 3. He added throughout the books of this edition, what appeared necessary for the il- lustrating, connecting, or compleating of them, wherein he was assisted by the same Spirit, by which they were at first wrote. 4. He changed the old names of several place grown obsolete. 5. He wrote out the whole in the Chaldee character. 6. Whether he added the vowel Points, is an harder question.

Essenes

[Plin. l. 5. c. 17.] ESSENES, or Essenians. We are not acquainted with the original of the Essenes, or the Etymology of their name. Pliny says, they had been many thousand years in being, living without marriage, and without any conversation with persons of the other Sex. Ita per sæculorum millia, incredibile dictu, gens æterna est, in qua nemo nascitur. The fourth book of Maccabees[1] calls them Hasdanim, and says, that they had been for some time established into a Society before Hircanus was High Priest of the Jews, about the year of the world 3894, before Jesus Christ 106, before the Vulgar Æra 110. The first of the Essenes mentioned by Josephus, was one Judas, who lived in the [Antiq. l. 13. c. 19. Suidas in Πεδρονοι, &c.] time of Aristobulus, and Antigonus, the son of Hircanus. Suidas, and some others after him, were of opinion, that the Essenes were a branch of the Rechabites, who, we very well know, subsisted before the Babylonish captivity.

Epiphanius[2] derives their name from Jesse, the father of David, or from our Lord Jesus Christ, whose name, according to his interpretation of it, signifies Physician, or Saviour. He says it was a Sect of the Samaritans, into whom Elxai had infused several errors. Drusius believes the Essenes to be a branch of the Pharisees. Salmasius will have it, that they derived their name from the town of Essa [Serrar. in hæref. l. 3. c. 1.] abovementioned. Lastly, Serrarius reports twelve opinions concerning the name only of the Essenes. We take the Chasidim spoken [Pf. lxxviii. 2. lxxxiv. 9. Vulg.] of in some of the Psalms, and the Assidians in the Maccabees[3], to be the true source of the Essenes.

The description which Josephus gives us[4] of the Essenes, is as follows. They live in perfect union among themselves, and abhor voluptuousness, as poison of the most dangerous consequence. They do not marry, but they bring up other men's children with as much care, as if they were their own, and infuse into them very early their own spirit and maxims. They despise riches, and possess nothing but in common. Oyl and perfumes[5] are not permitted to be in their habitations. They have an austere and mortified air, but without affectation; go always dressed in white. They have a steward, who has the care of distributing to every one what they want. They are hospitable to those of their own sect; so that when any of them go a journey, they are never obliged to take any provisions with them.

The Children which they educate, are all treated and cloathed in the same manner, and do not change their dress till the cloaths they have are intirely wore out. All the trade they have, is carried on among them by exchange, every one gives what is superfluous to receive that which he stands in need of. They do not speak before the sun rises, excepting that they pronounce some prayers taught them by their Fathers, which they address to this Luminary[6], as it were to incite it to appear. After this, they go to work, and continue at it till the fifth hour, which answers pretty near to our eleven a-clock in the morning.

After this exercise, they all meet together, and putting on pieces of white linnen, they all bath in fresh water, then retire to their cells, where no strangers are permitted to enter. From thence they go into their common refectory, which is as it were a Sacred Temple, where they continue in profound silence. They are served with bread, and every one has his particular mess. The Priest says grace, after which they may eat; they finish their meal also with a prayer. Then they pull off their white cloaths which they wore, while they were at table, and return to their work until the evening. Then they come again to the refectory, and bring their guests with them, if they have any.

They are very religious observers of their words, and their bare promise is as binding to them as the most sacred Oaths. They avoid swearing, as they would perjury it self. The care which they take of their sick is very particular, and they never suffer them to want the least thing. They read carefully the writings of the Ancients, and by this study they acquire a very good knowledge of plants, stones, roots, and remedies. Before they admit any, who desire it, to be of their sect, they put them to a year's probation, and during this time inure them to the practice of their most uneasy exercises. After this term, they permit them to come into the common refectory, and the place where they bath; but they do not admit them into the inner part of the house, till they have gone through another trial of two years. When these two years are expired, they are allowed to make a kind of Profession, whereby they engage themselves by the most horrible oaths to observe the laws of piety, justice, and modesty; fidelity to God and their Prince, never to discover the secrets of the Sect to strangers, and to preserve the books of their masters, and the names of Angels with great care. If any one violates these promises, and incurs the guilt of any notable fault, he is expelled the Society, and generally dies of want, because he can receive no food from any stranger, being tied to the contrary by those oaths we have been speaking of. Sometimes the Essenes, moved with compassion receive them, when they have given long and solid proofs of their conversion.

Next to God, they have the greatest respect for Moses, and old men. The Sabbath is very regularly observed among them; they not only forbear to kindle any fire, or prepare any thing upon this day, but they do not so much as stir any moveable thing belonging to them, nor even ease themselves of the superfluities of nature. Upon other days, when they are obliged to do this office, they retire to some place at a distance, and after they have dug an hole of about a foot deep, with a spade, which they always carry along with them fastened to their girdle, they do what is necessary, stooping, and covering themselves all round with their cloaths, lest they should pollute the rays of God; says Josephus. After this, they fill the hole which they had made with earth, and purity themselves after this action, as if they had contracted some pollution.

The Essenes generally live long, and many reach the age of an hundred years; which is said to be owing to the simplicity of their diet, and the great regularity of their lives. They shew an incredible firmness under torments, whereof there were some eminent examples during the war between the Romans and the Jews. They hold the souls of men to be immortal, and believe that they descend from the most elevated part of the air into the bodies, which are animated by them, whither they are drawn by some natural attraction, which they are not able to resist. After death, they return with rapidity to the place from whence they came, being as it were freed from a long and melancholly captivity. Concerning the state of men's souls after death, they have the same sentiments almost as the Heathens, who place the souls of good men in the Elysian fields, and those of the wicked in Tartarus, and the kingdom of Pluto, where they are tormented according to the quality of their faults.

There are some among them, who are married; in every other respect they agree with the other Essenes. They take no wives till after they have been well assured for three years together that they have enjoyed a good state of health, and are likely to produce sound Children. As soon as their wives are breeding, they come no more near them; slavery is esteemed by them as an injury done to human nature, wherefore they have no slaves among them. Many of them have the gift of prophecy, which is ascribed to their continual reading of the Sacred Writers, and their simple and frugal way of living. They believe that nothing happens in the world but by the Decrees of God; and their sect is very nearly related to that of the Pythagoreans among the Greeks. Besides the men, who professed to live in the manner we have described, there were women too who observed the same institution, and the same practices.

[Philo lib. quod omnis probus liber. Plin. l. 5. c. 17.] Altho' the Essenes were the most religious of their nation, they nevertheless did not go to the Temple of Jerusalem, nor offered any bloody sacrifices. They were afraid of being polluted by the conversation of other men, whose lives were not so pure as theirs. They sent their offerings thither, and themselves offered up to God the sacrifice of a clean heart, free from the guilt of any great offences. Philo says, the Essenes were in number about four thousand in Judæa; and Pliny seems to fix their principal abode above Engedi, where they fed upon the fruit of Palm trees, which were common in those parts. He adds, that they lived at a distance from the Sea-shore, for fear of being corrupted by the conversation of strangers.

Philo assures us, that in several cities there were some of them, but they chose rather to dwell in the fields; applied themselves to agriculture, and other laborious exercises, which did not take them out of that solitude whereof they made profession.

Their studies were neither Logick, nor natural Philosophy, but Morality, and the Laws of Moses. To these they applied themselves principally upon Sabbath-days, upon which they assembled in their Synagogues, where every one was seated according to his rank; the elder above, the younger part of them below. One of the company read, and another of the most learned of them expounded. They made use of symbols very much, of allegories and parables, after the manner of the Ancients. This is the Idea which Josephus and Philo give us of the Essenes. We do not see any where in the Gospel, that Jesus Christ hath spoken of them, or that he preached among them. It is not improbable that St. John Baptist lived among them, till the time [Vide Epiphan. hæref. 29. de Nazaræis.] when he began to baptize and preach repentance. The wilderness where Pliny places the Essenes, was not very far from Hebron, which is thought by some to be the place of St. John's birth. See above [Philo l. quod omnis probus liber.] ASSIDEANS.

You have here the description which Philo gives of the Essenes, who may be called Practical, to distinguish them from the Therapeutæ, whom we may term Contemplative Essenians. The number of the first is about four thousand, they live in Palestine, remote from the conversation of other men. “Their name is borrowed from “ the Greek word Hosios, which signifies “ Holy, and denotes their great piety; but “ this etymology is not altogether exact. “ Tho' they are very religious, and very “ much devoted to the worship of God, “ they sacrifice nothing that hath life to “ him. They content themselves with ofsering the sacrifice of a pure and holy “ Soul, which to this end they endeavour “ by all means to purify. Their abode is “ in the country, they avoid great cities, “ because of the corruption which generally reigns there, being persuaded, that “ as people contract diseases by breathing “ an infected air, so the bad examples of the “ inhabitants in the places where we live, “ make often such impressions upon the “ mind as are not to be effaced.

“ Some employ themselves in husbandry, others in trades, and manufactures “ of such things only as are of use in time of “ peace their designs being to do good only, “ to themselves and other men. They heap “ up neither gold nor silver, nor make any “ large acquisitions of land to increase their revenues, “ revenues, they are satisfied with possessing what is requisite to relieve the necessities of life. They are perhaps the only men who without land or money, by choice rather than necessity, find themselves to be rich enough, because their wants are but few, and as they understand how to be content with nothing, as we may say, they always enjoy plenty. You do not find an artificer among them who would make an arrow, a dart, or sword, or helmet; a cuirass, or shield, or any sort of arms, machines, or warlike instruments. They make none of those things even in time of peace which men apply to bad uses. They concern themselves neither with trade nor navigation, lest this should engage them to be avaritious. They have no slaves, but serve one another; they condemn the dominion which masters exercise over their slaves, not only as something unjust, and repugnant to society, but likewise as impious, and contrary to the law of nature, which like a common mother has produced all men at their birth brothers and equals; but covetousness, which has got the superiority, destroys this relation, and sows hatred and indifference between them, instead of that friendship and familiarity which should prevail among them.

“ As to philosophy, they leave logick to those who are pleased with disputes about words, and look upon it themselves as absolutely useless towards the acquiring virtue. They give up likewise physicks, and metaphysicks, except so much as relates to the existence of God, or the original production of all things, to those who have leisure to apply themselves thereto, or are fond of nice and fine -spun speculation. But they study morality with great diligence, the rules and foundations whereof they discover in the laws of their country, which are such as could not proceed from the mind of man without a particular inspiration from God. In this they are instructed every day, but principally on the seventh, which is holy among them; upon this day they abstain from all kind of labour, and repair to their Synagogues, or places of Assembling, where every one seats himself according to his rank from the time of his admission into the Body; the latest always take the lowest places, and there compose themselves with a becoming decency to hear the word of God. This being done, one of them takes up the book and reads; another, who is generally one of the most learned of them, explains what has been read. The method which they follow in their explanation, is to unfold the allegorical meanings of the Scriptures.

“ Their instructions run principally upon holiness, equity, justice, œconomy, policy, the distinction of real good and evil; of what is indifferent, what we ought to pursue or avoid. The three fundamental maxims of their morality, are the love of God, of virtue, and our neighbour. They demonstrate their love of God in a constant chastity throughout the whole course of their lives, in a great aversion to swearing, and lying, and in attributing every thing that is good to God, without ever making him the author of evil. They show their love to virtue in their disinterestedness, in their dislike to glory and ambition; in their renouncing pleasure; in their continency, patience, and simplicity; in being easily contented; in their mortification, modesty, respect for the laws, their constancy, and other virtues. Lastly, their love to their neighbour appears in their liberality, in the equality of their conduct towards all, and in their community of fortunes, upon which it may be proper to enlarge a little in this place.

" First, no one among them in particular is master of the house where he dwells; any other of the same sect, who comes thither, may be as much master as he. As they live in society, and eat and drink in common, they make provision for the whole community, as well for those who are present, as for those who come not looked for. There is a common chest in every particular society, where every thing is reserved which is necessary for the support and cloathing of each member. Whatever every one gets is brought into the common stock; and if any one falls sick, so as to be disabled from working, he is supplied with every thing necessary for the recovery of his health out of the common bank. The younger pay great respect to the elder, and treat them almost in the same manner, as children treat their parents in their old age.

[Joseph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 2.] " Josephus informs us, that the Essenians attribute every thing to God. They hold the souls of men to be immortal, and believe justice to be of all things the most deserving of our pursuit and concern. They send their offerings to the Temple, but offer no bloody sacrifices there. They are refused admission there by reason of the purifications in use among the Jews, (to which probably they will not submit, because they believe themselves to be so much purer than others,) and are obliged to offer their sacrifices in their own particular society. They are for the rest very honest people, whose principal employment is husbandry. Their justice is admirable, and exceeds all that we know " of it among the Greeks and Barbarians; they exercising themselves in it continually, and never interrupting the course of it. Their fortunes are common, and he who enters rich into their society, possesses no more than the poorest of them all. Their number is above four thousand: they allow of neither women nor slaves to be among them, looking upon the latter as a perpetual source of injustice, and women as the cause of much perplexity and division; thus living separately from other men, they serve one another as they have mutually occasion.

" They chuse Priests of the most distinguish'd merit to be receivers of the estates and common revenues of their society, who likewise have the charge of issuing out what is necessary for the table of the house. There is nothing singular or affected in their way of living; it is simple, and the same almost as that of the Pleists among the Dacians. In another place Josephus says, that the Essenians maintain all things to be governed by fate, and that nothing happens to mankind but what is regulated by it." Concerning the Essenians, the Reader may consult those Authors who have treated of the Jewish Sects. See our Bibliotheca Sacra, under the title, Sects of the Jews.

Translators' note. From this passage of Josephus it has been imagined by some, that the Essenians worshipped the Sun; if so, Philo and Josephus could never have said so many things in commendation of them. Their custom was when they said some particular prayers, to turn themselves towards the Sun; and this is the meaning of Josephus. The Religion of these people consisted chiefly in the worship of God, and a respect for the supreme Being, with which the substitution of any sensible Deity, and the adoration of the Creature, is no way reconcilable. The King therefore came, and Haman with ESTHER, otherwise Hadassah[1], of the tribe of Benjamin, the daughter of Abihail. Her parents being dead, Mordecai her uncle by the father's side, took care of her education. [In the year of the World 3486, before J. C. 514, before the Vulgar Æra 518. Esth. ii.] After that Ahasuerus, otherwise Darius the son of Hystaspes, had divorced Vashti, there was search made throughout all the provinces of the Persian empire for the most beautiful women that were to be found. Esther was one of those who were chosen: she was carried to court, and committed to the care of an eunuch, who was to provide for her table, and furnish her with every thing besides that was necessary. Seven young women were appointed to wait on her, and she continued thus a whole year preparing herself by the use of sweet oil and perfumes to be produced before the King.

[In the Year of the World 3490, before J. C. 510, before the Vulgar Æra 514.] The time being come when she was to be conducted to the King's apartment, all the ornaments were given her that she desired, and she found favour in the eyes of King Ahasuerus. He put a royal diadem upon her head, and declared her Queen in the room of Vashti. The King was married to her with royal magnificence, and upon this joyful occasion bestowed largesses and pardons on his people. Now Esther declared to no one who she was, nor took notice that Mordecai was her uncle, because he had cautioned her against it.

King Ahasuerus having advanced one of his officers, whose name was Haman, to great honours, and he requiring such respects as were due to God only, Mordecai resolutely refused to pay them, and so drew upon himself the indignation of Haman; who, to revenge himself of the pretended contempt which Mordecai had offered to his person, obtained an order from the King to put all the Jews to death, who were in his dominions. Mordecai gave notice of this to Esther, and advertised her of the necessity there was, that she should wait on the King, and desire the revocation of this edict, which Haman had procured from the King by surprize. Esther excused herself, and alledged, that the King had not sent for her in thirty days, and that she dared not go to him without being called, because of that charge which the King had published, whereby he forbad any person whatsoever upon pain of death to come into his inner room, without being first sent for by his command; unless upon the appearance of any such person before him, he extended his golden sceptor towards him, and by this mark of clemency secured him from the penalty in this case appointed.

Mordecai was not satisfied with this reason, but sent word to Esther, that no danger should deter her from assisting the people of her own nation in such an extremity; and that God for this purpose had in all probability raised her to the royal dignity, that she might be able to act upon such an occasion as this was. Esther therefore disposed herself by prayer, by fasting and humiliation to appear before the King, and likewise desired Mordecai to pass three days and three nights in fasting and prayer, in order to draw down the blessing of God upon her undertaking.

After three days, Esther dressed herself in her royal robes, and going to the King's apartment, she placed herself over against the door of the inward chamber, where the King's throne was. Ahasuerus seeing her, stretched out his golden sceptor towards her, and said, Esther, what is thy petition? for shouldst thou ask half of my kingdom, I would give it thee. Esther answered, I humbly intreat the King to come this day to a banquet, which I have prepared for him, and, if he pleases, to bring Haman with him. The King and Haman both went to the Queen's entertainment, and the King again told her, that she was at liberty to ask whatsoever she desired. But all that she then requested was, that he would dine with her again the next day, and that Haman might be of the company. [Esth. vii.] with him; and Ahasuerus, in the heat of wine, having once more repeated the promises which he had before made her, Esther replied, if I have found favour in thy sight, O King, give me my own life, and the lives of all my people, for whom I implore thy clemency. Whereupon the King demanded, who had conspired against her's and her people's lives? she said, Haman who is here before thee, and is our most cruel adversary. The King at the same time rose in great passion, and went out into the garden belonging to the palace, near the room of entertainment. Haman likewise rose from table, and threw himself at the Queen's feet, beseeching her to preserve his life. At the same time the King returned, and seeing Haman upon the bed belonging to the table at which Esther eat, he cried out, How! will he offer violence to the Queen in my presence, and in mine own house? these words were scarce spoken by the King, when Haman was seized on, his face covered, and he led to the place of execution. See HAMAN.

[Esth. viii.] The same day the King revoked the orders he had given to destroy all the Jews in his dominions, and permitted them to revenge themselves upon their enemies, to kill men, women, and children, and to pillage their houses. The day for executing this piece of revenge was appointed to be upon the thirteenth day of the month Adar, which was the very day on which Haman had resolved to extirpate them. In pursuance of this permission, the Jews made a great [Esth. ix.] slaughter of their enemies over all Ahasuerus's kingdom; so that in the city of Shushan only they killed five hundred, without reckoning the ten sons of Haman. They continued still the next day to destroy their enemies with the King's permission; but in Shushan only, and some other cities, there were reckoned to be seventy-five thousand massacred by the Jews upon the thirteenth day of Adar. They chose the fourteenth day of the same month to appoint a solemn festival in memory of this event; which festival is called Purim, that is to say, the Lots, because upon this day they were to have been executed according to the lot which Haman had drawn with this purpose.

The book of Esther[2], which contains the history here related, has always been esteemed to be canonical both among the Jews and in the Christian Church: but the canonical authority of those additions which are to be met with at the end of this book in the Latin editions, and are not in the Hebrew copies, has been much disputed. Those copies of the Greek version which are in our hands, are not uniform, and differ very much from the Hebrew; and the old Latin translations of this work, which were extant before that of St. Jerom, differ both from the Hebrew text, and from the Greek versions. In the beginning of this book in Greek[3], we read, that in the fourth year of Ptolemy and Cleopatra, Dositheus accompanied by his son Ptolemy, carried the letter of Purim into Egypt, which was said to have been translated into Greek by Lysimachus the son of Ptolemy. The King Ptolemy, in whose reign this translation was brought into Egypt, is believed to be Ptolemy Philometor, who died in 3861, long after Ptolemy Philadelphus, in whose reign the version of the Septuagint is commonly supposed to have been made. This Lysimachus was probably the author of those additions, which are to be observed in the Greek text of Esther.

As to the original author of this book, people are pretty much divided. Clemens of Alexandria, and after him, some Rabbins, and many of our Commentators, attribute it to Mordecai; and the book itself favours this opinion, wherein it is said, that Mordecai himself wrote this event. Others[4] make Esdras to be the author of it. Others[5] again are of opinion, that the great Synagogue composed it, and placed it in the Canon of the Scriptures. The time wherein this history was transacted we fix in the reign of Darius the son of Hystaspes, whom we believe to be the same as Ahasuerus. See AHASUERUS, HAMAN, MORDECAI, in which articles we relate several circumstances belonging to the history of ESTHER. See likewise our Preface to the book of ESTHER.

ETAN, Aitham, or Ethan, in the tribe of Judah[1]. It appears by the second book of Chronicles xi. 6. that Etan lay between Bethlehem and Tekoah. Josephus[2] speaks of a place of pleasure called Hethan, at the distance of two Schœnos's from Jerusalem, that is to say, five leagues from that city[3], whither Solomon went frequently, because this place was very agreeable for its fine gardens and waters. It was from thence probably, that Pilate some few years before the destruction of Jerusalem, brought water through aqueducts into the city, at great expence; in accomplishing which work, he was forced to take a large compass by reason of the mountains lying in the way[4]. Travellers speak of the fine water, and vast basons, that are still at this day to be seen in the neighbourhood of Bethlehem, which the people by tradition believe, and with a great deal of reason, to have been made by Solomon. These basons are a very magnificent work, and the water in them very fine, and in great plenty. There are three basons, the first is two hundred paces long, and an hundred wide; the second is an hundred and ninety paces long, an hundred and fifteen wide, and sixty in depth; the third is two hundred fourscore and nine paces long, an hundred ninetyseven wide, and an hundred and four in depth. The remains likewise of the aqueduct are to be seen, through which this water was convey'd to Jerusalem.

Eternal

ETERNAL, ETERNITY. These words are often taken for a long time, and are not always to be understood rigorously; [Gen. xlix. 26. & Deut. xxxiii. 15.] for example, we find eternal mountains, so called to denote their antiquity. God promises a throne to David, an eternal Kingdom, a posterity which will never be extinguished; that is to say, that his and his sons empire will be of a very long duration; that it will be even eternal, if hereby we understand the kingdom of the Messiah. Thus the righteous shall never be moved. Thou shalt be our guide from this time forth and for ever, &c. that is to say, during our whole life.

But Eternity when God is the subject in question, always denotes a real Eternity. [Exod. xv. 18. Deut. xxxii. 40.] Dominus regnabit in æternum & ultra. And elsewhere, I will lift up my hand to heaven, and swear, saying, I live for ever, eternally. The blessed will enjoy eternal life and happiness, and reprobates be cast into [Matth. xxv. 46.] eternal fire. The Son of God is called Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedech. His Gospel, the Eternal Gospel. The Redemption [Psal. cx. 4 Rev. xiv. 6. Hebr. ix. 12. Hebr. xiii. 20. 2 Cor. iv. 17.] which he has procured for us, Eternal Redemption: his blood which he shed for us, the blood of the eternal covenant: the glory and reward which he hath merited for us, an Eternal weight of glory; Æternum gloriæ pondus. The mystery of his incarnation and our salvation, Mysterium temporibus eternis tacitum; the mystery which was kept secret since the world began: it was revealed indeed to the Patriarchs and Prophets, but in an obscure and hidden manner. Eternal tabernacles, or [Luke xvi. 9.] tents, are the habitations appointed by God in heaven for the predestinate. Wisdom is Eternal, ab æterno ordinata sum: it is [Prov. viii. 23. Wisd. vii. 26.] brightness reflected from eternal light, &c. Candor lucis æternæ.

ETHECA. We meet with this word in Ezekiel xli. 15, 16. Ethecas ex utraque parte centum cubitorum. This word is formed from the Hebrew, Athikim, or Ethikim, which may signify a gallery, portico, or place apart. St. Jerom, who has used this term Etheca in the xlist chapter of Ezekiel, in the xliid chapter, 3, 5. renders it porch; and this is its true signification. Notwithstanding in his Comment he reads Eccheta, and says that this word signifies a balcony. [Vide nov. Edit. Hieronym. p. 714.] Ecthetas Romæ appellant solaria de cœnaculorum parietibus eminentiâ, sive Mæniana, ab eo qui primus invenit.

Ethiopia

ETHIOPIA, otherwise Abyssinia, one of the greatest kingdoms in Africk. There is frequent mention in the Scripture of Ethiopia: but by this name we are not always to understand Ethiopia properly so called. By Cush, which is translated Ethiopia, we are generally to suppose that country country to be meant, which lies upon the eastern coasts of the Red Sea, and at the point of this sea joining to Egypt. Zipporah the wife of Moses, who was of Midian upon the red Sea, is called a Cushite or Ethiopian. See what we have said concerning the word CUSH, and upon CANDACE, Queen of Ethiopia.

There are three countries different from one another, all called by the name of Cush, which word is generally translated Ethiopia. 1. The land of Cush upon the river Gihon. 2. Cush upon the eastern shore of the Red Sea. 3. The land of Cush situated above Thebais and the upper Egypt; and for want of this distinction, people have fallen into very considerable errors.

[Hom. Odyss. l. 2. v. 22.] The old profane Authors are no clearer in their acceptation of the word Ethiopia. For, first, they give this name to Ethiopia properly so called. Secondly, to certain people of Arabia, situated upon the Red Sea; whence it is that Homer distinguishes the Ethiopians into eastern and western, some on one side the Nile and of the Red Sea, the others on the other side of the same sea and river. Dionysius the Geographer [Dionys. v. 177.] and Eustathius speak likewise of the eastern Ethiopians situated towards Arabia. Lastly, they place other Ethiopians in Chaldæa and the Susiana; for Memnon the son of Aurora, who came from Susa to the Trojan [Hesiod. Theog. v. 984. Pindar. Olymp. 2. Herodot. l. 7.] war, is called in Hesiod King of Ethiopia, and in Pindar, the Ethiopian son of Aurora.

Herodotus mentions two sorts of Ethiopians in Xerxes's army; the Eastern, who had their abode in Asia, and were reckoned with the Indians, from whom they differed only in their hair and language; they carried the same arms, and wore the skins of horse's heads in the way of helmets, the ears and manes whereof served them for tufts and plumes of feathers; and instead of bucklers they had the skins of cranes. The Ethiopians [Idem. l. 3.] of Africk have very frizzled black hair, and those of Asia very long. He says elsewhere, that they make use of bows of great strength and length; that brass is reputed among them the most precious of all metals; that they live very frugally, and reach to a great age. That which more immediately concerns us here, is, that this author takes notice of Ethiopians in Asia, and Ethiopians in Africk.

[Idem. l. 2.] Herodotus adds, that they of Africk are likewise circumcised as well as the Egyptians; but he does not venture to assure us which of these two people were the first who introduced this practice, because it is very ancient among both. We shall see hereafter, that the Ethiopians acknowledge they received it from the Jews.

When therefore in the sacred text Ethiopia is spoken of, we are to distinguish carefully these several countries and nations, to prevent the being led into a mistake by [Numb. xii. 1. Gen. x. 6.] the different meanings of the same word. The Scripture mentions but one man by the name of Cush, who was the son of Ham, and brother of Canaan. Whether the several countries known in the Hebrew text by the name of Cush, and in the Interpreters by that of Ethiopia, were so called from him, we are not able to say. Many are of opinion, that his first and real abode was in Arabia the happy, upon the eastern coasts of the Red Sea; that from thence his descendants passed into Africk, and peopled Ethiopia. Others on the contrary assert, that Arabia went by the name of Ethiopia for no other reason, but because the Ethiopians [Bibl. Orient. p. 409. Habasch.] subdued it, and continued for a long time in possession of it. But even in the time of Moses, the land which borders on the east side of the Red Sea was then called Cush; and if so, I cannot tell whether any one can prove, that the Ethiopians before this time had conquered this part of Arabia.

[Abyssinus. Abyssina regio.] Ethiopia properly so called, goes more generally by the name of Abyssinia, which the Arabians derive from Habasch the son of Cush. We have no mention of this Habasch in the bible, nor of Cush, from whom the Mahometans suppose him to be descended; for the Scripture takes notice of but one man by the name of Cush, who was brother to Canaan, and father to Nimrod, Seba, Sabtah, Havilah, Raamah, and Sabtecha; whereas the Arabians make Cush the father of Habasch, son and not brother to Canaan; and certainly it is very probable, that Cush the father of Nimrod and the others just now named by us, who dwelt in Asia, and whose habitation was upon the river Gihon, is very different from Cush the son of Canaan, who peopled part of Arabia Felix, which is Ethiopia properly so called, otherwise named Abyssinia from his son Habasch.

Frumentius, the same who was sent by St. Athanasius to preach the Gospel to them. Till the time of Salama they had circumcision only, which had been taught them by Zadok, High-Priest of the Jews, who was sent to them, as they say, in Solomon's time, to instruct them in Judaism. This is the account we have from the Ethiopians.

Others

Others believe, that these people received the faith from St. Matthew, or St. Bartholomew, or St. Philip, or Queen Candace's Eunuch, who was baptized by St. [Acts viii. 27.] Philip, one of the seven Deacons, not the same with the Apostle of that name; but all these different opinions are founded only on the several meanings of the word Ethiopia. St. Matthew, we are told, preached the Gospel to the Ethiopians above the Araxes, or in the neighbourhood of the Persians. St. Bartholomew preached to the Indians, known by the ancients under the name of Ethiopians; or in Arabia the happy, where, as we have seen, there was a canton called Cush or Ethiopia. Lastly, St. Philip the Deacon, or the Eunuch, might preach the Gospel to Queen Candace's subjects, who reigned in Arabia, or in the peninsula of Meroë, which is sometimes comprized under the name of Ethiopia.

Habasch or Abyssinian, the name whereby the Ethiopians are called, signifies properly a mixture of divers nations collected and united together. It comprehends the Abyssinians, Nubians, and Pongians. The Arabians gave them this name, which the Ethiopians for a long time rejected, and do not yet assume in their books. They call themselves Ethiopians, and their country, the Kingdom of Ethiopia, or Becra Agazi, the land of liberty, or otherwise, people who have decamp'd, to shew that they came out of Arabia the happy, which is ancient Ethiopia, or the old land of Cush, to transplant themselves into the country which they are at this day possess'd of. Their remove to this new habitation fell out, according to Eusebius, during the servitude of the Israelites in Egypt, or about the time of Joshua and the Judges, according to Syncellus. But if this be so, it must be owned, that there still remained a great number of them in Arabia, for some of them we see were there long afterwards.

[Gen. ii. 13.] The Abyssinians are Moors, black or of an olive colour, according to the different provinces which they inhabit; it is said they are born white, with a little black spot upon their navel, which in a short time after their birth, spreads over their whole body: when they are transported into Europe, they become white at the second or third generation.

There is frequent mention in the Scripture of Ethiopia and Ethiopians. Moses says, that Gihon, one of the four rivers in Eden, compasseth the land of Ethiopia; that is to say, the country which is watered by the Araxes, the ancient dwelling of the Scythians, or Chutes, or Chutæans. We read in Numbers, that Moses [Numb. xii. 1.] married an Ethiopian, that is to say, Zipporah the daughter of Jethro Priest of Midian, in the land of Cush, upon the eastern shore of the Red Sea. In the second book of Kings, we see [2 Kings xix. 9.] Tirhakah King of Ethiopia came against Sennacherib's [Job xxviii. 19.] army. This Tirhakah was [Esth. i. 1. viii. 9. xi. 1.] a King of Ethiopia or Arabia, in the sense wherein we have been explaining it. The topaz of Ethiopia, spoken of by Job, came from the red sea and the land of Cush, which is in Arabia the happy. Zerah King of Ethiopia, [2 Chron. xiv. 9.] who marched against Asa King of Judah, with two hundred thousand men and three hundred chariots, reigned in the same country. [Hab. iii. 7.] Habakkuk speaks of the tents of the Ethiopians and Midianites, which were under affliction when the Lord appeared at Sinai. We have already observed, that Zipporah, who was a Midianite, is called an Ethiopian. Midian was therefore in the land of Cush, which we are speaking of, in Arabia the happy, upon the coast of the red sea.

King Ahasuerus in Esther reigned from the Indies to Ethiopia, that is to say, as far as the present Abyssinia: for Herodotus says this country paid tribute to Darius the son of Hystaspes. Nebuchadnezzar, of whom there is [Judith i. 9.] mention made in Judith, sent Ambassadors into Palestine, to the land of Gesem, and as far as the frontiers of Ethiopia: probably Ethiopia properly so called, to the south of [Zeph. iii. 10. Isa. xviii. 1.] Egypt. Zephaniah says, the Lord will be worshipped in places beyond the rivers of Ethiopia; ultra flumina Æthiopiæ inde supplices mei. And Isaiah says, Wo to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the river of Ethiopia. Væ terræ cymbalo alarum, quæ est trans flumina Æthiopiæ. Expositors are divided in their opinions concerning these rivers of Ethiopia, or Cush. They cannot be the rivers of Arabia, for there are no considerable ones in this country. It seems out of all question, that the prophet Isaiah by the land which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, intended to describe Egypt. These rivers therefore are the Nile, and the several parts of it, which run through lower Egypt. This country with regard to Judea was beyond the Nile, for there was no going into any place of the Delta, without crossing some arm of the river, and there were canals cut through all lower Egypt. These rivers came from Ethiopia; we know the source of the Nile is in this country.

[Psal. lxviii. 32. Isa. xx. 3.] Hezekiah sent Ambassadors to the King of Egypt, desiring his assistance, according to Isaiah, against Sennacherib; and the prophet Zephaniah foretold, that the Egyptians would one day come and perform their adorations to the Lord. Both these prophets describe Egypt only by the country which lies beyond the rivers of Ethiopia. The Psalmist in like manner prophesied, that Egypt and Ethiopia should come and pay their homage to the Lord. Princes shall come out of Egypt, Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God. Isaiah foretold the captivity of Egypt and of the land of Cush, or Ethiopia; which we may explain either of the eastern Ethiopia, situated situated in Arabia; or the western, lying to the west of the Red Sea, and south of Egypt. The same prophet says, that God will recall his people who are dispersed in Assyria, Egypt, Ethiopia, and in the canton of Pathros. In this place we may suppose, either Ethiopia properly so called, to be meant, or the land of Cush upon the Araxes. He says elsewhere, that the Lord hath delivered Egypt, Ethiopia, and Seba, in order to redeem the Israelites; which may be explained of the Ethiopians in Arabia, because they are join'd with Seba, another people in Arabia the happy. The same thing must be said of this other passage in Isaiah, The labour of Egypt, and merchandize of Ethiopia, and of the Sabeans, men of stature shall come over unto thee, they shall surrender themselves to thee.

Ethiopia properly so called is described [Ezek. xxix. 10. See the Hebrew.] to us in the following passages; I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste and desolate, from Migdol as far as Syene, in the confines [Jerem. xiii. 23. Psal. lxxiv. 14.] of Ethiopia. And Jeremiah, Can the Ethiopian change his skin? And the Psalmist, Thou breakest the head of the dragon, of the leviathan, the crocodile, in pieces, and gavest him to be meat to the people of Ethiopia. This is interpreted as relating to the people of Tentyra in upper Egypt, who were declared enemies to the crocodile, and eat it; whereas the Egyptians paid divine honours to it. Jeremiah joins the Cushim with the Libyans. Procedant fortes Æthiopia, & Lybies tenentes arcum. [Dan. xi. 43.] Daniel in like manner mentions them together; Per Libyam & Æthiopiam transibit: which can be naturally explained only of the Ethiopians or Abyssinians. See also Ezekiel xxx. 4, 5. where these people are put together as neighbours. Queen Candace's Eunuch was of the same country. But by all these passages it appears, that under the name Cush, not only Ethiopia was comprehended, which is higher than Syene and the Cataracts, but likewise a part of Thebaïs.

Evangelist

EVANGELIST. This word signifies one, who publishes good news. They therefore who write, as well as they who preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ, are called Evangelists, and in general all they who declare any happy tidings. In Isaiah the Lord says, that he will give to Jerusalem one that bringeth good tidings, or an Evangelist, an Ambassador, a Prophet, an Envoy, one who shall declare what God shall please to reveal to him. In the Acts, Philip, one of the seven Deacons, is called an Evangelist. St. Paul speaks of the Evangelists, and ranks them below the Apostles and Prophets. He speaks to Timothy, exhorting to perform the duty of an Evangelist. In the beginning of Christianity, there were Evangelists and Preachers, who without being fixed to any Church, went and preached wherever they were led by the Holy Spirit. Lastly, we most commonly call Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, Evangelists, who are the authors of the four Gospels, which only are acknowledged by the Church to be Canonical.

Eucharist

EUCHARIST, a word particularly set apart in the Catholick Church to signify the Sacrament, which really and in truth contains the body and blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ, under the appearances of bread and wine consecrated at the sacrifice of the mass . It is called Eucharist, because Jesus Christ in the institution of this divine sacrament, gave thanks to God, broke the [Matth. xxvi. 27.] bread, and blessed the cup. Now Eucharistia in Greek, signifies thanksgiving, and answers to the Hebrew, Barach to bless, [Benedi-] or Hodah to praise.

Eve

EVE, the name of the first woman. Chavva in Hebrew is derived from the same root as Chajim[1], Life; because she was to be the mother of all living. God having created man, said, It is not good for man to be alone; let us make him an help-meet for him. He cast him therefore into a sound sleep, and while he was in this condition, God took out one of his ribs, made a woman of it, and brought her to Adam. Then Adam Adam said, Behold now the bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh, therefore shall she be called Ischa, that is to say, human, because she was taken out of man. For this reason shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh. She is believed to have been created upon the same day as Adam, that is to say, the sixth of the creation, and after Adam had made a review of the Animals, which God had created, and over which the Lord had given him the inspection and dominion.

Adam and Eve were placed in Paradise immediately after their Creation, and God forbad them to touch one particular fruit, threatning them with death if they disobeyed. They continued there some days in innocence and simplicity; were naked, without blushing at their nakedness. But the Devil, who envied their happiness, assumed the form of a Serpent, or rather, concealed himself in a real Serpent, and appearing before Eve, said to her, Why does [Genes. iii. 1, 2, &c.] not God permit you to eat indifferently of all the fruits of this garden? Eve replied, that God had forbidden her to touch one certain tree, lest they should die, and of all the rest they were allowed to eat freely. But the Serpent answered, Ye shall not surely die: for God doth know, that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened; and ye shall be as Gods, knowing good and evil. Thus he would have had God thought to be a lyar: one that envied his creatures perfection and happiness; and threatned them with a misfortune, which they had no reason to apprehend.

The woman therefore seeing this fruit was good to eat, and fair to the eye, took thereof, and did eat of it, and gave also to her husband, and he did eat. Hereupon their Eyes were opened, and they discerned their nakedness, which they cover'd with fig-leaves, and hid themselves among the trees of the garden. There God found them, reproached them with their disobedience, and said to Eve, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow, and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children, and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee. After this God cloathed Adam and Eve with skins, and drove them out of Paradise. Now Adam knew his wife Eve, and she conceived and brought forth Cain, saying, By God's assistance [iv. 1, 2, 3, &c.] I have gotten a man. She afterwards had Abel and some daughters, and last of all Seth. The Scripture names only these three sons of Adam and Eve; but sufficiently evidences that they had many more, in that passage where it says, that they had [Gen. v. 4.] sons and daughters. The particular year of Eve's death is not known. It is presumed that she died about the same time as Adam, towards the nine hundred and thirtieth year of the world.

The Eastern people have paid some honours to Adam and Eve, as to Saints. The Greeks observe their Festival, or the Commemoration of them, upon the 19th of November. The Maronites likewise commemorate [Vide Bona de Rebus Liturg. l. 2. c. 12.] them in their Liturgy. Peter Natalis has put Adam and Eve in the front of the Saints, who lived in the first age of the world, in the week which we call Septuagesima, after the 22d of January. See the [Epiphan. hæres. 26. n. 2, 3.] Article of ADAM. Epiphanius says, that the Gnosticks composed a writing under the name of the Gospel of Eve, wherein were contained a thousand ridiculous and immodest things. There were other Hereticks [Epiphan. hæres. 40. c. 5.] who said, that Eve had Cain and Abel, not by her husband, but my a monstrous conversation with the Devil. The Manichees[2] maintained, that Adam and Eve were not created by God, but owed their original to Sada and Nebroda, Princes of impurity. The Indian Brachmans believe, that the sin of the first man consists in the carnal knowledge which he had of Eve, whom the Devil presented to him. See Fabricius, Apocryph. V. Test. p. 101, 102. Some have mentioned a book intitled, The Prophecies of Eve, which is said to have been composed by the Angel Raziel, Adam's Preceptor.

The Mahometans pretend that Eve called her eldest son Abd-al-hareth, that is to say, a Gardener's or Husband-man's son, or servant, because Adam was the first who cultivated the earth, according to what is [Gen. ii. 15.] said in Genesis, that he was put into the garden to dress it and keep it. They still at this day reverence Eve's grotto, in mount Gerahem, three miles from Mecca. Mount Arafat, at ten miles distance from Mecca, borrowed its name from the adventure of Adam and Eve's meeting, and discovering themselves to one another in this place, after a long absence. They believe that the tomb of this first of womankind is at Gidda, upon the Red Sea, two days journey from Mecca, whereof it is, as we may say, the harbour. They maintain farther, that the waters of the Deluge began to spring, or issue out of Eve's oven, which had been preserved to that time, and had passed from hand to hand down to Noah.

Evilmerodach

EVILMERODACH, the son and successor of Nebuchadnezzar the Great, King of Babylon[1]. He first of all governed the Kingdom during the indispostion of his father, who was possessed with a strange fancy of his being metamorphosed into an Ox. But after seven years, the King having recovered his understanding, and his imagination being cured, he once more ascended the throne, and Evilmerodach, as some believe, was imprison'd by his [In the Year of the World 3435, before J. In this confinement Evilmerodach made an acquaintance and friendship with Jehoiakim King of Judah, who had been carried to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar; so that immediately after the King's death, Evilmerodach being on the throne, he delivered Jehoiakim out of prison, heaped many favours on him, and placed him above all the other Kings, who were at the court of Babylon.

The Hebrews, and after them St. Jerom, and several other interpreters tell us[2], that Evilmerodach, after the death of his father, observing that the first men in the Kingdom made a scruple of acknowledging him, fearing lest Nebuchadnezzar should be still living; he, to convince them that the King was certainly dead, ordered him to be taken out of his grave, and dragged through the streets in the view of all the world. Others add, that Jehoiakim persuaded him to take his father out of the ground, to cut his body in pieces, and give them to three hundred ravens, lest he should return from his grave, as he had before recovered after his metamorphosis into an Ox.

Evilmerodach reigned but one year, according to our Chronology[3], and was immediately succeeded by his son Belshazzar. Josephus says, he was succeeded by Neriglissar, then by Laborosoarchod, and lastly by Belshazzar, whom we are here speaking of. And the succession of these Princes is related in the same order by St. Jerom, and some others. This is not a proper place to examine this difficulty with accuracy. See our Discourse upon the Great Monarchies of the East, prefixed to Isaiah, and our Comment upon Daniel v. 1. pag. 627, 628, 629. and our History of the Old Testament.

Eunuch

EUNUCH, comes from the Greek, Eunouchos, which signifies one who guards the bed; because generally in the courts of the Eastern Kings, the care of the beds and apartments belonging to Princes and Princesses, was committed to them; but chiefly of the Princesses, who live, as is well known, in great confinement, remote from the sight and company of men. The Hebrew word Saris signifies a real Eunuch, whether he be naturally born such, or made an Eunuch by manual operation. But this word very often, as well as the Greek Eunouchos, and the Latin Eunuchus, is in Scripture taken for an Officer belonging to some Prince, attending at his court, and imployed in the inner part of the Palace, whether he be really an Eunuch or not. It was a name that denoted some office and dignity, and in the Persian and Turkish Courts, the principal imployments there are still at this day possessed by real Eunuchs[1]. Potiphar, Pharaoh's Eunuch, and Joseph's master, had a wife and children.

God forbad his people to make Eunuchs, and to cut even beasts; in Deuteronomy it is said, He who has that part wounded or cut off which is intended for the preservation of the species, shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord. Which words are differently explained. Some[2] think that God hereby forbids Eunuchs to marry with Israelites[3]; others, that God forbids them to enter into his Temple; others again[4], that he excludes them from all offices in the magistracy. But it is more credible, that God debars them simply the possession of some outward privileges belonging to the Israelites and people of the Lord. They were looked upon in the Common-wealth as dry and useless wood: Behold [Isai. lvi. 4. 1 Sam. viii. 15.] I am a dry tree. But notwithstanding this, they who were faithful observers of God's Law, had their portion in the rewards and happiness of the righteous. Thus saith the Lord unto the Eunuchs that keep my Sabbaths, — and take hold of my covenant, Even unto them will I give in mine house, and within my walls, a place and a name better than of sons and daughters.

There were Eunuchs in the Courts of the Kings of Judah and Israel, officers called Sarisim, Eunuchs. But they were in all probability slaves taken from some foreign [1 Kings xxii. 9. 2 Kings ix. 32. and xxiv. 12, 15. and 1 Chr. xxviii. 1. Matth. xix. 12.] people; or if they were Hebrews, the name of Eunuchs, which is given them, shews no more than their office and dignity. Our Saviour in the Gospel speaks of a sort of Eunuchs, different from that which we have mentioned, persons who have made themselves Eunuchs for the Kingdom of Heaven; that is to say, who upon some religious motive have renounced marriage, and the use of all carnal pleasures. Origen[5], and some ancient hereticks, construed our Saviour's words literally, and pretended, that he advised men to make themselves Eunuchs, in order to obtain the Kingdom of Heaven[6].

Euodias

EUODIAS, spoken of by St. Paul in [Philipp. iv. 2.] his epistle to the Philippians. Some Greek manuscripts read Euodum or Euodium, as if the Apostle were speaking of a man: but the printed copies, and the generality of manuscripts read it in the fœminine, Euodiam. And there is a good deal of probability, that Euodias and Syntyche were two women of great virtue, who had assisted St. Paul in the propagation of the Gospel. These two persons were at variance upon some occasion which is not known to us: St. Paul conjures them to be of the same mind. Others are of opinion[1], that Euodias was a woman, the other Syntichus, a man; and that St. Paul intreats them to be reconciled. But Syntiche being placed in the Calendar upon the 22 of July, among the female Saints, we must believe it to have been the most common opinion, that Euodias and Syntiche were both women.

Euphrates

EUPHRATES. A famous river, the source whereof is in the mountains of Armenia; it runs through the frontiers of Cappadocia, Syria, Arabia Deserta, Chaldæa and Mesopotamia, and thence falls into the Persian Gulf. At present it discharges itself into the Sea through a channel, which is common to this river and the Tigris; but formerly it had a particular channel of its [Plin. l. 6. c. 27, & 28. Gen. ii. 14. Plin. l. 5. c. 24. D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 353. Josh. i. 4. Deut. i. 7. Strabo l. xi.] own: and in Pliny's time, there were footsteps of this old channel to be seen. Moses says, the Euphrates is the fourth of those rivers, the source whereof was in Paradise. The Scripture often calls it the great River, and assigns it for the Eastern boundary of that Land, which God promised to the Hebrews. Profane[1] Authors inform us, that the Euphrates overflows its banks in the Summer, like the Nile, when the snow upon the mountains of Armenia begins to melt. The Author of the book of Ecclesiasticus seems to say the same thing, Ecclus. xxiv. 36.

The source of the Euphrates, as I have observed, as well as of the Tigris, is in the mountains of Armenia. Some of the Ancients [Lucan. Pharsal. l. 3.] were of opinion, that these two rivers rose from one common spring.

Quaque caput rapido tollit cum Tigride magnus Euphrates, quos non diversis fontibus edit Persis —— And Boëthius in his consolation of Philosophy[2], Tigris & Euphrates uno se fonte resolvant, Et mox abjunctis dissociantur aquis.

But at present we know the contrary, and that these two famous rivers have their source at a great distance from one another. Pliny and Strabo place the head of it in mount Abo, or Aba, in Armenia; but in almost every thing besides, these two Authors are opposite to each other. Strabo says, this river springs out of the North side of mount Taurus, and that it runs at first Westward, and afterwards towards the South. Pliny, on the contrary, tells us, from witnesses who had been upon the spot, that the Euphrates flows from North to South, and then returns to the West.

The Arabians divide the Euphrates into the larger and the lesser; the larger is that which rising in the Gordian mountains, discharges itself into the Tigris near Anbar and Pelongiah. The smaller, the channel whereof is often wider than that of the larger, takes its course towards Chaldæa, passes through Corofah, and empties itself into the Tigris, between Vassith and Naharvan, in a place called at present Carna, that is to say, Horn, because in reality it is the horn, or confluence[3] fluence of the great and little Euphrates.

From the lesser, one passes into the larger Euphrates, through a canal dug by Trajan's order. This is the Fossa Regia, or the Basilius fluvius of the Greeks and Romans, by the Syrians called Nahermalca, through which the Emperor Severus passed in his way to Ctesiphon on the Tigris, when he besieged this city. The violence of the Persian Gulph causes a reflux higher than thirty leagues above the mouth of the Euphrates. The Arabians are persuaded, that the waters of this river are very healthy, and have the vertue of curing all sorts of diseases.

Example

EXAMPLE, is taken in good and bad part; God will make thee an Example among all the nations. Thou shalt be an Example of his severity and rigour. Job says, that he is the example, the by-word of the publick; that he is produced as an example of misery and misfortune. Joseph was unwilling to accuse the Blessed Virgin, and make her an Example of publick vengeance. Cum nollet eam traducere: he was unwilling to bring her honour in question. The Greek implies, he was not inclined to make an Example of her, by any publick and exemplary punishment.

Example is likewise used for a pattern of virtue: May Ruth be an Example of virtue [Ruth iv. 11.] in thine house. Excommunication

EXCOMMUNICATION, an Ecclesiastical penalty, whereby they who incur the guilt of any mortal and heinous sin, are separated from the Communion of the Church, and deprived of all spiritual advantages. There are two or three sorts of Excommunication: the greater, whereby the person offending, is separated from the body of the Faithful: thus St. Paul excommunicated [1 Cor. v. 1—5. 2 Thess. iii. 6.] the incestuous Corinthian. The lesser, whereby the sinner is forbidden to administer or receive the Sacraments: And lastly, that which deprives him only of the company of the faithful; whereof there is some mention made in the second Epistle to the Thessalonians. Now we command you, Brethren, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us. See likewise vf. 14. And if any man obey not our word by this Epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed. St. Austin[1] speaks in several places of this last sort of Excommunication. We see the practice of it in the rule of St. Benedict[2]. Theophylact[3] says, that this separation from the company of the faithful was formerly esteemed a great punishment.

The primitive Church was very reserved in separating the faithful from its bosom by Excommunication. It rarely did so, and then for very serious and very important reasons, and always with great concern. There is a distinction made between that Excommunication which is medicinal, and that which is mortal. The first was made use of against such penitents as were separated from the Communion of the Church, till they had gone through that penance which it enjoined them. The second was employed against Hereticks and impenitent sinners, and such as were disobedient to the Church. The power of Excommunicating was given to the Church in the persons of the first Pastors of it. It is part of the power of the keys, which Jesus Christ himself conferred immediately upon the Apostles, and in them upon the Bishops their Successors.

The causes of Excommunication may be reduced to three heads, Error, Sin, and Disobedience. In the beginning, the Spiritual sword was never used but in Spiritual causes; but afterwards there was a necessity of restraining the attempts of wicked men against the persons and estates of Ecclesiasticks, by censures and excommunication. The customary manner of Excommunicating in the Primitive Church was this: the faithful separated themselves from those, whose company the Apostles and Bishops had forbidden them, without obliging their superiors to proceed any farther. Afterwards the bishops made use of threatnings, anathemas, and sentences of Excommunication; lastly, to make these ceremonies more frightful, they were attended with actions capable of infusing terror, such as lighting of wax-candles, extinguishing them, throwing them on the ground, and trampling them under foot while they pronounced Excommunication, pronouncing curses against the person Excommunicated, &c.

The principal effect of Excommunication, is to separate the Excommunicated person from the society of the faithful, to take from him the privilege of being present in religious assemblies, to deprive him of the Eucharist, of attendance at the common Prayers, of the Sacraments, and of all those other duties, whereby Christians are linked in one and the same society and communion. An Excommunicated person is with regard to the rest of the faithful as an Heathen and a Publican, according to the terms of the Gospel. But it does not deprive him of any of [Matth. xviii. 17.] those duties which he has a right to claim, as a man, a citizen, a father, an husband, or a king, either by the law of nature and nations, or by the civil law. And when the Apostles enjoin men to have no conversation with the Excommunicated, not to eat with them, or even salute them, this is to be understood of [1 Cor. v. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. & 2 Thess. iii. 6, 14. 2 John ver. 10, 11.] offices of mere civility, which a man is at liberty to pay or not to pay, and not of any natural obligations, and such as are founded upon nature and the law of nations.

As to the Excommunication of the Jews, we see the practice of it in the time of Deborah and Barak, if the Rabbins in this particular are to be credited[4]. It is said in Deborah's song, Curse ye Meroz, (said the Angel of the Lord) curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof: because they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Meroz therefore was Excommunicated, say the Jews, by the sound of four hundred trumpets; Barak, who is called the Angel of the Lord, cursed him, and with him those that sat near him. But this example does not appear very proper to shew the antiquity of Excommunication. We see it in a more express manner in the time of Esdras and Nehemiah, when they Excommunicated those who would not dismiss [Joseph. Antiq. l. xi. c. 5.] the strange women whom they had married contrary to the law, and ingaged themselves upon pain of Excommunication, to observe the laws of the Lord.

[Joseph. de Bello, l. 2. c. 12.] The Essenes, at the time when they professed, engaged themselves by the most terrible oaths to observe the laws of their Sect, and when any one among them fell into any considerable fault, he was driven from their society; and he who was so expelled, died very often in some unhappy way: for by virtue of his oaths and vows, he could receive no food from the hands of strangers, and being debarred all commerce with those from whom he was separated, he was forced to live upon wild herbs like a beast, till his members corrupted, and by degrees fell asunder. It sometimes happened that the Essenes would be touched with compassion, would deliver persons out of this sad state, and receive them again into their body, when they thought that the offenders had sufficiently expiated the fault which they had committed. So much for Excommunication, its causes, effects, and absolution.

Our Saviour in the Gospel speaking to his Apostles, foretold, that the Jews out of hatred to him, would treat them ill, and excommunicate them[5]. They shall drive you out of their synagogues, says he to them; they shall bring you before their tribunals, and condemn you to be scourged. It is said, that among the Jews, they generally whipt the excommunicated persons, before they expelled them out of their synagogues. Excommunication was preceded by censure and admonition, which were used at first privately; but if the guilty person did not amend, the house of Judgment, the assembly of Judges, declared to him with menaces, that it was necessary he should reform. If he persisted in his obstinacy, his censure was made publick upon four sabbath-days successively, at which times the name of the offender and the nature of his fault were proclaimed in order to bring him to shame. Lastly, if he continued incorrigible, he was excommunicated. Our Saviour seems to allude to this practice, where he commands us to tell our brother his fault between him and us alone; then that we should take some witnesses with us in order to admonish him; and lastly, that we should inform the Church against him. And if after this he does not return to his duty, that then we should look upon him as an heathen and a publican.

The sentence of Excommunication among the Jews was conceived in these terms, Let such an one be in Excommunication or Separation; or, let such an one be Excommunicated or separated. The Judges, or the Synagogue, or even private persons had a right to Excommunicate; but regularly the House of Judgment, or the Court of Justice, solemnly pronounced the sentence of Excommunication. One particular person might Excommunicate another, and he might likewise excommunicate himself; as they who bound themselves under a curse, and engaged themselves neither to eat nor drink, till they had taken St. Paul either [Acts xxiii. 12.] dead or alive. Lastly, beasts were sometimes Excommunicated ; and the Rabbins teach us, that Excommunication has its effect even upon dogs. They believe that a man may be Excommunicated in a dream, when, while he is asleep, he thinks he sees the Judges, who in a judicial manner pronounce him so, or even some private person who declares him Excommunicated. In this case, they look upon themselves to be under the sentence of Excommunication; because, say they, it is possible that God may have Excommunicated them while they were asleep, or his ministers by his order may have done so.

They who pronounced the sentence of Excommunication, may take it off, and declare him, who had incurred it, to be absolved; provided he gives any marks of his repentance. He who had been Excommunicated, while he was present, must be present too when he is absolved. Any one who had been Excommunicated by a private person, might be absolved by a publick Judge, or by three men chosen for this purpose. He who had Excommunicated himself, could not regularly absolve himself: ten persons chosen from among the people were necessary upon this occasion. Lastly, he who had been Excommunicated in a dream, was to seek for ten men learned in the law, and versed in the knowledge of the Talmud, in order to give him absolution[6].

There are generally three sorts of Excommunication distinguished among the [Niddui, Separatio.] Jews. The first is called Niddui, that is to say, Separation. This is the lesser Excommunication. It lasted thirty days, and separated the Excommunicated persons from the use of things holy. The second was called Cherem, that is to say, Anathema; this was [Cherem, Anathema.] an aggravation of the first, and answers almost to our greater Excommunication. It excludes a man from the synagogue, and deprives him of all civil commerce[7]. Lastly, the third sort of Excommunication is called Scammatha, and was of a higher nature than [Scammatha, Excisio.] the greater Excommunication. It was published, as they say, by sound of four hundred Trumpets, and removed all hope of returning to the synagogue. Some affirm, that the penalty of death was annexed to it. But Selden maintains, that these three terms, Niddui, Cherem, and Schammatha, are often times synonymous, and that the Jews never had, properly speaking, more than two sorts of Excommunication; one greater, the other less. The Reader may consult this author in his first book de Synedriis veterum Hebræorum, chap. 7, & 8.

[Leo Mod. P. 2. c. 3.] Leo of Modena says, that when the Rabbin Excommunicates any one, he curses him publickly; after which, not any one Jew can speak to the Excommunicated person, nor come near him within the distance of a fathom. He is not suffered to come into the synagogue, and he is obliged to sit down upon the ground barefooted, as if some near relation of his were dead; till he is absolved by one or more Rabbins, and blessed again. If the fault deserves a more solemn Excommunication, there is a meeting in the synagogue, and every one lights black torches; then when the horn sounds, a curse is pronounced against him, who has done, or shall do such a thing. To which the whole assembly answers, Amen.

[2 Kings xxiiii. 11. 1 Chr. ix. 26—33. xxiii. 28. Jerem. xxv. 2.] The heathens had likewise their Excommunication for great crimes, as we see among the Greeks, Latins, and Gauls: but this does not relate to our subject. We confine ourselves to the books of the Old and New Testament.

It has been matter of surprize to some, that Jesus Christ, whose design it was to build the Church upon the ruins of the Synagogue, and who evidently attacked the very foundations of the Jewish religion, was notwithstanding never excommunicated. EXEDRA. We often meet with this Latin word in the books of Kings and Chronicles. It signifies properly such seats as were under porches, where it is usual for people to get together, or the chambers joining to these porches, where there were several seats for the use of those, who retired thither. In Scripture, it is taken for those apartments which reached all along the courts of the Temple, whither the Priests and Levites, who were upon duty, withdrew to eat, drink, and sleep, and where the provisions of the Temple were locked up, and the riches which were there offered.

Exodus

EXODUS. This word comes from the Greek, Exodos, which signifies going out. The second of those sacred books, which are contained in the Old Testament is so called, because it comprehends the history of the departure of the Israelites out of Egypt under the conduct of Moses. Herein we have the birth of Moses, his education, and flight; the persecutions which the Hebrews suffered from the Kings of Egypt; the return of Moses from the land of Midian; the plagues which he brought upon Egypt; the departure of the Hebrews; the passage of the Red Sea; the manner wherewith the Law was given; the erection of the Tabernacle, and the celebration of the second Passover. It contains the history of an hundred and forty five years, beginning from the death of Joseph, which happened in the year of the World 2369, before Jesus Christ 1631, before the Vulgar Æra 1635, to the year of the World 2514, which is the end of the first year after the going out of Egypt. The Hebrews call this book Veelle Schemoth, because it begins with these words, Now [Schemoth, Græc. Exitus.] these are the names, &c.

The Hebrews, according to the chronology followed by us, dwelt in Egypt no longer than two hundred and fifteen years, from Jacob's entrance into this country in the year 2298, to the departure of the Israelites out of it under Moses, in the year of the World 2513. Notwithstanding we read expressly in Exodus, ch. xii. ver. 40. that they abode there four hundred and thirty years. Now the sojourning of the children of Israel who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. M. Boivin the elder, who has been employ'd a very long time in examining the chronology of Josephus and the Septuagint, pretends by the help of a passage from Manetho, to have settled the number of four hundred and thirty years mentioned by Moses. The [Manethon apud Joseph. l. 1. contra Appion.] passage from Manetho is this: "We had a King named Timaus, under whom, for what reason I cannot tell, God declared himself very much against us. On a sudden, when it was least expected, certain men of an obscure original came from the East, and invaded our country: they easily made themselves masters of it, even without the hazard of a battle. Having seized the Princes who governed Egypt, they burnt the cities, destroy'd the temples of the Gods, and treated those who fell into their hands, with the utmost rigour of war. At length they chose one among them for their King, whose name was Salatis.

"This Prince established the seat of his Empire in Memphis, and all upper and lower Egypt became subject to him. He settled numerous garrisons in the strongest places of the country, and fortified principally the eastern frontier; well foreseeing that the Assyrians, when once they grew more powerful, would not fail to attempt the conquest of Egypt. Having observed a city called Abaris in the Nome of Sais, of a very advantageous situation, he fortified it, and enclosing it with walls of a vast circumference, he placed a garrison in it consisting of two hundred and forty thousand men....

"Salatis died after a reign of nineteen years; and was succeeded by Bæon, who reigned forty four. Apachnas succeeded Bæon, and reigned six and thirty years; Apophis sixty one; Janias fifty years and one month; Assis, the last of all, reigned nine and forty years and two months. These six Princes reigned successively in Egypt, and treated the country like enemies, endeavouring, as we may say, to tear up the very roots of it.

"The race of these Princes was called Hic-sos, that is to say, Shepherd-Kings .... Some affirm they were Arabians: in other books we read, that they were not Kings, but Captives; for Hic in Egyptian, when it is pronounced like Hac, signifies Captives; and this appears to me most probable, and most conformable to ancient history."

Manetho adds, that these Shepherd-Kings and their descendants were possessed of Egypt five hundred and eleven years; after which, the Kings of Thebaïs and the rest of Egypt made a long and bloody war with them.

Under King Alis-Phragmuthosis, the Shepherds were overcome, and driven out of Egypt, and reduced to the town of Avaris or Abaris, which they had inclosed with walls, to the extent of ten thousand acres of land. Here Themosis, the son of Alis-Phragmuthosis, besieged them with an army of four hundred and fourscore thousand men; and seeing that he was not able to reduce them by force, he permitted them to retire to what place they pleased. They departed therefore out of Egypt, and went into Judæa, where they built Jerusalem, and made it so large as to be capable of containing their whole multitude. They passed through the desarts of Syria, fearing the power of the Assyrians, who were at that time masters of Asia.

Upon this is founded the restitution in Chronology, relating, as we have said, to the children of Israel's abode in Egypt. M. Boivin disposes his System in the following order: The Hebrews passed seventy one years in Egypt very peaceably under Jacob and Joseph, in the time of those Pharaohs who were protectors of the Israelites. After this, they reigned there two hundred fifty nine years and ten months under Ephraim the son and successor of Joseph, and under Beriah, Rephah, Resheph, Tela, and Tahan his sons, whose names are mentioned in the Chronicles. The same Ephraim and his sons, in the sacred history of the Egyptians cited by Manetho, are called Salathis, Bæon, Aphachnas, Apophis, Janias, Assis.

Lastly, they spent ninety-nine years and two months there in bondage, under the Pharaohs their enemies; under the Ephraïmites, Laadan, Ammihud, and Elishama, whose names likewise are mentioned in the Chronicles. The Israelites therefore changed their condition three times in Egypt, where they were successively Shepherds, Kings, and Captives. Their pastoral life and bondage are particulars not contested; it only remains to shew, that they ever reigned there. The Scripture says nothing of it; but it relates actions there perform'd by them, which, in M. Boivin's judgment, are arguments of their regal power and absolute authority.

He supposes, that at the death of Joseph, or Pharaoh his protector, there was a change of Dynasty in Egypt, and that the heirs of Pharaoh, who had raised Joseph, were supplanted by Vaheb, whose name we meet with in the book of the wars of the [Numb. xxi. 14.] Lord, cited in Numbers, and who in Manetho is called Timaüs. This new Pharaoh, who knew not Joseph, nor the services which he had done the Egyptians; Vaheb, I say, jealous of the power of the Israelites, undertook to restore idolatry in the land of Goshen, which was in the possession of the Hebrews. Ephraim, the son and successor of Joseph, opposed this, and determined to revenge the death of the old Pharaohs, the protectors of his family; but he was not successful in this war: in his first expedition, which was against the town of Gath, he lost nine of his sons, whose names were, Shathelah I. Bered, Tahath I. Eladah, Tahath II. Zabad, Shathelah II. Ezer, and Elead.

[1 Chr. vii. 22. 1 Chr. vii. 20, 21.] The Scripture speaks of this expedition, but it says no more, than that they were killed by the men of Gath, because they came down to take away their cattle; and besides, Gath was not in Egypt.

The other sons[1] of Ephraim came to comfort their father, and resolved to revenge the death of their brethren. Ephraim therefore at the head of the shepherds, that is to say, of all those who worshipped the true God, attacked the Egyptians. In this war, says our Author, were performed the miracles in the field of[2] Tanis, whereof there is mention in the Psalms. Vaheb was consumed by a whirlwind of fire, as the book of [Pf. lxxviii. 12, 43.] the wars of the Lord says; And the sun stood still, and the moon was stayed, until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies; as the book of Jasher mentions, which is cited in Joshua. Then Ephraim, otherwise called Salathis, assumed the title of [Chr. vii. 26.] King of Egypt, and was succeeded by his sons above-mentioned.

[Josh. xxiv. 14.] After the Ephrámites had enjoyed the kingdom two hundred fifty nine years and ten months, they degenerated, forgot the Lord, and fell into idolatry, as we see in Joshua. God delivered them up to their enemies, who defeated them in a great battle described in Psalm lxxviii. 9, 10, 11, 12, 42, 43. They continued subject to the Egyptians ninety nine years and two months, till their departure out of Egypt under the conduct of Moses.

M. Boivin believes, there is an interruption of history in the Scripture from the death of Joseph, with which Genesis concludes, to the birth of Moses, wherewith Exodus begins. He pretends, that the history of this time was contained in old books which are lost, and whereof there now remain only the titles, and some fragments in the sacred writers; such as the book of the wars of the Lord; the book of Jasher; [Josh. x. 13. & 1 Sam. i. 18. Numb. xxi. 27.] and that of Proverbial Songs.

This system would be much more plausible, if the number of years observed in Manetho agreed exactly with that of Moses: but whereas Moses takes notice but of 430 years from the entrance of the Hebrews in Egypt, to their departure thence under Moses; Manetho says, that the Shepherd-kings and their descendants reigned five hundred and eleven years in Egypt, after which the Kings of Thebaïs made war for a long time against them, and at last obliged them to retire into Judæa. The difference of years is great, and I can scarce see any means of reconciling it; besides, the reign of Ephraim and his five sons successively without interruption, and without any one of these leaving the Kingdom to his son, seems incredible. It is very hard to prove, that the last of these five sons lived 250 years, as he must be supposed to do in M. Boivin's System: however, the manner of his disposing this succession of the Shepherd-kings is as follows.

Kings of Goshen.

Jacob, 17 years. Joseph, 54 years.

Hicsos, or Shepherd-kings, according to Manetho.

Ephraim, under the name of Salathis, 19 years.

Beriah, otherwise Bæon, 44 years. Rephah, otherwise Aphachnas, 36 years. Resheph, otherwise Apophis, 61 years. Telah, or Janias, 50 years, 1 month. Tahan, or Assis, 49 years, 2 months.

Hacsos, Hacsos, or captive Shepherds. Bondage in Egypt. Laadan, 40 years. Ammihud, 40 years. Elishama, 19 years, 2 months. From Jacob's entrance into Egypt to [Exod. xii. 40.] Moses's departure out of it, are 430 years. Nun, the Son of Elishama, contemporary with Moses, who reign'd 40 years. Joshua, the son of Nun, judged 27 years.

All these were descended from Joseph by Ephraim.

Exorcists

EXORCISTS. This word comes from the Greek, Exorcisein, which signifies to conjure, to use the name of God with a design [Ἐξορκίζειν. Adjurare.] to drive Devils out of the places or bodies, which they possess. We call one of the four minor Orders in the Christian Church Exorcists, whose office it was to conjure those, who were possessed with Devils. We see from the first Apologists of our Religion[1], that the Devils dreaded the Exorcisms of Christians, and that common Believers exercised a very great power over these wicked spirits. It is credible, that when the gift of miracles ceased to be so common, there were Exorcists appointed pretty early in the Church, who were particularly set apart for the exercise of this office, which before the generality of the Faithful performed of themselves, either upon the merit of their faith, or by virtue of some particular gift, which they had received at Baptism.

The Jews had likewise their Exorcists, as Jesus Christ intimates in the Gospel: for the Pharisees having given out, that he cast out Devils only in the name of Beelzebub [Matth. xii. 27.] , his answer was, If I by Beelzebub cast out Devils, by whom do your children cast them out? therefore they shall be your [Joseph.] Judges. Josephus relates, that a certain Antiq. l. Jew, whose name was Eleazar, cured the [8. c. 2.] possessed with the help of a ring, in which a root was set, said by some to have been discovered by Solomon. The smell of this root put under the nose of the possessed person, made him fall on the ground; and the Exorcist conjured the Devil, forbidding him to return into that body. He says in another place, that a particular root, called Barad, which grows in Judæa, had the virtue of casting out Devils, when application of it was made upon the body of the Person possessed.

[Mark ix. 28. Luke ix. 49.] The Apostles inform us, that there were Jewish Exorcists, who took upon them to cast out Devils in the name of Jesus Christ Master, we saw one casting out Devils in thy name, and we forbad him, because he followeth not us; which practice these Exorcists continued after our Saviour's death. Then certain of the vagabond Jews Exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil Spirits, the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, We adjure you by Jesus, whom Paul preacheth. And the evil Spirit answered and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know, but who are ye? Lastly, Justin, Irenæus, Origen, and Tertullian speak of Jews, who boasted of a power to cast out Devils[2], and sometimes in reality did so, by calling upon the God of Abraham.

Expiation

EXPIATION. The Hebrews had several sorts of expiatory sacrifices, for sins of ignorance committed contrary to the Law, [See Levit. iv.] and for purifying themselves from certain legal pollutions, which were looked upon as indecencies, or even as faults, which required to be Expiated by certain victims. For example, a woman after lying in, and [Levit. xii. 6, 7. Ib.xiv.4,5, & seq.] a leper when he was cleansed of his leprosy, were to offer sacrifices, in order to be purified; in like manner as they, who, having touched something impure, had forgotten or neglected to purify themselves at the time and in the manner which the [Ib. v. 1, 2, 3.] Law prescribes. These Expiatory Sacrifices of themselves did not remit real faults committed against God, they did not take away the deformity of Sin, which is displeasing unto God; but did no more than repair the legal and external fault, and secure the transgressor from the temporal penalty, wherewith God, or the Judges punished those faults, when any one neglected to atone for them in the ways appointed by the Law.

The ceremonies observed when any Israelite [Ib. iv. 27, 28, &c. Ib. iv. 28.] offered a sacrifice for sin, were these: He brought his victim to the Tabernacle, put his hand upon the beast's head, confessed his fault, and slew his victim in the court, at the place where the burnt-offerings were offered, to the North of the Altar. The Priest took the blood of the beast, with some of it upon his fingers he touched the horns of the Altar of burnt-offerings, poured out the remainder of the blood at the foot of the Altar, took away all the fat which covered the intestines and kidneys of the victim, and burnt it upon the Altar. Lastly, the Priest prayed for him, who offered the sacrifice, and his fault was pardoned.

For a sin-offering they might offer a goat, or a ram, a lamb or a kid, or two pigeons; [Ib. iv. 32. Ib. v. 15. Ib. vers. 11.] or lastly, the poorer part of them an offering of some meal. There were particular ceremonies, when the High Priest, or any Prince of the people, or all the people were fallen into any trespasses. But in the main they were almost always the same. The flesh of such beasts as [Ib. vii. 5, 6, 7.] were offered for the Expiation of sin, belonged to the Priests. No stranger had a right to taste of it.

Expiation. The great Day of Expiation. This was kept upon the tenth day of the month Tizri, which answers to our September. The Hebrews call it Kippur or Chippur, that is to say, Pardon or Expiation, because the faults of the whole year were then Expiated. The principal ceremonies at that time observed, were such as follow. The High Priest after he had washed not only his hands and feet, as usual in common sacrifices, but his whole body, dressed himself [Ib. xxi. 4.] in plain linen like the rest of the Priests. He then neither wore his purple robe, nor the Ephod, nor the Pectoral, because he was going to Expiate his own and the people's sins. He first of all offered a bullock and a ram for his own sins, and those of all the other Priests. He put his hands upon the heads of these victims, and confessed his own sins, and the sins of his house; then he received from the Princes of the people two goats for a sin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering to be offered in the name of all the multitude.

It was determined by lot which of the two goats should be sacrificed, and which set at liberty. After this, he put some of the sacred fire of the Altar of burnt-offerings into a Censer, threw incense upon it, and entred thus into the Sanctuary. After he had perfumed it, he went out, took some of the blood belonging to the young bullock which he had sacrificed, carried it into the Sanctuary, and dipping his finger in it, he sprinkled it seven times between the Ark and the Vail, which separated the Holy of the Sanctuary. Then he came out a second time, and beside the Altar of burnt-offerings killed the goat, upon which the lot was fallen to be sacrificed. The blood of it he carried into the Sanctuary, and sprinkled it seven times between the Ark and the Vail, which separated the Holy of the Sanctuary. From thence he returned into the Court of the Tabernacle, and sprinkled both sides of it with the blood of the goat; while all this was doing, none of the Priests or people were permitted to be in the Tabernacle, or in the Court. After this he came to the Altar of burnt-offerings, moistened the four horns of it with the blood of the goat, and young bullock, and sprinkled it seven times with the same blood.

The Sanctuary, the Court, and the Altar being thus purified, the High Priest directed the goat which was intended to be set at liberty, to be brought to him.

iv. 1, 2, 3. & c. He put his hand upon the goat's head, confessed his sins, and the sins of the people, and then gave the goat to one prepared for this purpose, who was to carry it into some desart place, and let it loose, or, as others say, throw it down some precipice. See what has been said upon Azazel. This ceremony being over, the High Priest washed himself all over in the Tabernacle, and putting on other clothes, some say his Pontifical dress, that is to say, his Robe of purple, the Ephod, and the Pectoral, he sacrificed two rams for a burnt-offering, one for himself, the other for the people.

The great Day of Expiation was one of the principal solemnities of the Hebrews. It was a day of rest, and strict fasting; they confessed themselves ten times on this day, reckoning from the Eve before supper, in memory of the High Priest's pronouncing the name of God ten times in this solemnity. The manner wherein this confession is [Buxtorf. Synag. Jud. c. 20.] performed, is as follows. Two Jews retire to a corner of the Synagogue, he who confesses himself, turns his face to the North, and his back to the South, bends his body very low, lays his back bare, confesses his sins, and strikes his breast, as often as he who receives his confession whips him with a leather strap, wherewith he gives him nine and thirty lashes, and at the same time repeats these words, Psalm lxxviii. 38. But the Lord was merciful, he forgave their misdeeds, and destroyed them not; yea, many a time turned he his wrath away, and would not suffer his whole displeasure to arise.

Upon this day they are reconciled with each other; he who has offended his neighbour goes to him the night before, and asks his pardon; if he, who has been offended, will not forgive him, the former takes three persons with him, comes to him, and again asks forgiveness two or three times: if the other persists obstinately in refusing it, he goes and takes ten men[1], with whom he comes once more to him, and in their presence desires him to forgive; and if still refused, he who has taken all these steps, is judged to be absolved, and firmly believes, that he has done enough to merit forgiveness [Ibid.] in the sight of God. If the person offended is dead, he who desires to make him satisfaction, goes to the place where he is buried, with ten persons in his company, and says before them all, I have sinned against the God of Israel, and against such an one, who is here interred.

Buxtorf says, that they prepare themselves for this solemn day, as soon as the month Tizri begins, which is the first of the civil year ; and that during all the ten days which precede it, they fast, and imploy themselves in acts of penance, and pray to God to divert the evil, which they have deserved. They rise early in the morning, confess themselves three times a day, prosecute no causes, and excommunicate no one. Upon the ninth day of the month, which is that before the day of Expiation, every one takes a white cock, if any of this colour may be found ; if not, then of some other kind of feather, provided it be not red ; repeats some prayers, and striking his head three times with the cock's head, he says at every blow, This cock shall be for my redemption, shall suffer the death which I have merited, shall be my reconciliation, shall die for me, and I shall go into a life of bliss and immortality with all Israel. After this, he cuts its throat, [Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 20. Ceremonies of the the Jews, part. 3. c. 6.] takes out its bowels, picks off the feathers, dresses, and eats it. Leo of Modena says, that this was practised formerly in Italy and in the Levant, but that this custom was suppressed there, because it was acknowledged to be a piece of superstition without any foundation.

THE HIGH PRIEST's WHITE ROBE WORN ON THE GREAT DAY OF EXPIATION.2.d Gath. L.

THE CEREMONIES OF THE SOLEMN EXPIATION.Lev. XVI. a The High Priest draws lots for the two Goats.

Many Jews spend the night which precedes the great day of Expiation, in the Synagogue, and imploy themselves in prayer and penitential exercises. They put on mourning, dress themselves in white or black, and some clothe themselves in that habit, with which they desire to be buried. They go without shoes and stockings, and are at the Synagogue very early. There they go to prayers four times in a solemn manner, in the morning, at noon, in the afternoon, and evening.

You have here some particular ceremonies, and Rabbinical explanations, of what is at this day practised among the Jews[2]. It was the custom formerly for the High Priest to separate from his wife seven days before this Festival, lest he should contract some pollution with her ; as if it happened that she had the infirmity upon her, which with women is generally periodical. Rabbi Judah maintained, that if the High Priest's wife died in the interval of these seven days, he immediately married again, that so the Law might be complied with, which appointed him to make [Levit. xvi. 17.] atonement for himself and for his wife ; or, according to the text, for himself and his house : but this determination was not approved by the Sages.

Upon the vigil of the day of Expiation, some of the Elders were presented to the High Priest, who read before him, and exhorted him to read, in order to discover whether he had learned to read, or whether he had not forgotten it. But this precaution was necessary only under the second Temple, when the High Priesthood was sold. These Elders likewise prevented him from eating too much on the night before the festival, lest he should fall asleep. He was after this conducted into the chamber of one Abtinez[3], where he was obliged to swear, that he would not change the ancient rites in any particular. It is believed, that this precaution proceeded from the inclination only of the Sadducees, that the High Priest should scatter the perfume before his entrance into the Holy, which was contrary to tradition. We know that Hircanus and Ananus, both High Priests, were Sadducees, and this oath was necessary for people of their stamp. As it seemed injurious to the High Priest, he wept when he took it, the Priests too wept at the consideration of their being obliged to administer it to him.

The night was spent in explaining the Law, or in reading some passages of Job, Esdras, or Daniel. If the Priest was not learned enough to be always discoursing, he had young people on each side of him who played upon the flute, or pushed him in order to awaken him, when he fell asleep, and who continued this exercise till the hour of sacrifice. In the morning they prided themselves in cleaning the Altar, and carrying away the ashes: the very great haste which the Priest made thither, oftentimes occasioned bad accidents ; for while they were pushing one another upon the steps, it sometimes so fell out, that one or other fell down and hurt themselves, which made it necessary to divide the offices. There were generally nine Priests appointed for the morning sacrifice, and eleven for the evening ; but in great solemnities, such as that of the Expiation, ten were ordered for the morning, and twelve for the evening. The Levites were likewise chosen to dress and make ready the victims, four and twenty for a calf, and to each was assigned a part of the beast, which he was to skin or prepare.

Every Priest, before he began his several offices, was to wash himself. The Rabbins say, the High Priest washed himself five times, because he was obliged to change his habit five times ; and as often as he so changed, it was necessary for him to wash himself. These habits were of linnen ; those used in the morning were of linnen of Pelusium, and those wore in the evening of Indian linnen, and cost eight drachms.

Anciently the lots which were drawn for the scape-goat were of wood, but the son of Gamaa made them of Gold. King

Mono- Monobasus appointed all the handles of the vessels, which were made use of in the Temple upon the day of expiation, to be made of the same metal.

The High Priest carried into the Sanctuary a Censer of the finest gold, fill'd with perfumes, and begged of God, that the air might be of a good temperature, that the scepter might not be taken out of the hands of Judah that year, that there might be no famine in Israel, and that the prayers of travellers or strangers might not be heard; his prayer was short, lest the people should be frighted if he continued too long in the Sanctuary; for they were persuaded that there was danger continually in going into that place, which God filled with his presence. The High Priest went out of it walking backward, with his eyes directed always towards the ark, or towards the foundation stone, which the Rabbins suppose to have been placed in the middle of the Sanctuary, ever since the Ark was lost under the second Temple. After this he sacrificed a goat, the throat whereof was to be cut in the manner which has been already related.

The Azazel, or scape-goat, was conducted to the precipice by Laymen as well as by the Priests. There was a way or causey prepared purposely on this occasion, and there were tents or ten relays from Jerusalem to the place where he was to be thrown down. This was a dreadful precipice, and so abounding with rocks, that before the goat was faln half way, his limbs were all beat to pieces; and in order to give notice of the execution to the people, who waited for the news of it within the Temple with uneasiness, there were signals raised at proper distances, for the more speedy communication of it. It is affirmed likewise, that at the same time the scarlet ribbon, which was fastned to the Temple-gate, immediately changed colour, and turned white, as a mark that God had accepted the Sacrifice, and that the sins of the people were forgiven. They add, that this miracle ceased forty years before the destruction of the second Temple.

When the ceremony was over, the High Priest read the Law, gave the blessing to the people, changed his dress, and made a great entertainment for joy of his coming unhurt out of the Sanctuary. The people fasted very punctually during all this Holy Day, to which they attributed great effects: for, according to the Jews, repentance, tho' accompanied with a resolution of living well, does but suspend sins, whereas the feast of Expiation abolishes them entirely, and they who die before this day, expiate them by their death. This is what we learn from the Rabbins, concerning the manner wherein the feast of the Expiation was celebrated of old.

As to the modern Jews, their way of solemnizing it is as follows. They prepare themselves for this great festival the day before by prayer, and by the Sacrifice of a Cock, as has been already observed. After this, they go to the place where they bury the dead, and beg of God to forgive sinners in regard to the memory of the Saints, who are there interred: they plunge into the water, that so the ablution of their sins, thus made, may be entire. They prepare wax candles against the next day; every one carries his own to the Synagogue; the most devout have two, one for the Body, the other for the Soul, by the names whereof they call them.

In the evening when the feast begins, they go to the Synagogue; there every one lights his taper, and all sing with very loud voices. The women at the same time light up candles in their houses, from the brightness whereof, and the consistency of the tallow or wax, they form presages. If the light is clear and bright, they conclude from thence, that their sins are certainly remitted; if it is pale, they are very much disturbed at it; and so likewise if the wax or tallow run, they dread the effects of God's anger.

The next day, early in the morning, they go to the Synagogue: the whole day is spent in strict fasting, without exception of age or sex; they suffer no one to eat, unless children under twelve years of age. They read a long prayer, wherein they declare, that all the oaths and promises which have been unperformed throughout the course of the whole year, are made void, because the atonement is made for sin. We read in Leviticus what relates to this feast, and the goat Azazel. They continue their prayers all day, and sometimes all the following night. At the conclusion of the festival, the Rabbi gives the blessing to the people with his hands lifted up; and the people out of respect to the Priest's hand, or rather to the majesty of God whom he represents, put their hands before their eyes, and cover their faces. They found the horn in memory of the Jubilee, and believe that God causes his voice to be heard, declaring his forgiveness of Sins, and that every one may return home with this confidence, that his iniquities are pardoned. Whereupon they go to their respective homes, put on clean, white clothes, sit down to table, and break their fast; for before they had neither eat nor drank all day. After this manner the Jews at present celebrate this Holy Day.

They

[Maimon. de Pœnitent. c. 10. p. 99.] They believe, that Adam repented and began his penance on the day of solemn Expiation; that on the same day Abraham was circumcised, and Isaac bound in order to be sacrificed; for which reason they pray to God to forgive them, because of Isaac's binding. Moreover, they teach, that upon this day Moses descended from mount Sinai with the new tables of the Law. Some change their name, as an indication of their inward change, and that they may address themselves to God, saying, I am another person, it is not I who have committed this sin.

Extreme

EXTREME, Extremity, last. Extremi populi, the lowest of the people. Jeroboam appointed Priests of the High-places out of the lowest of the people: the Hebrew literally, [1 Kings xii. 31. Gen. xlvii. 2. Judg. xviii. 2.] of the Extremities of the people. Joseph, in the book of Genesis, presents five of his youngest brethren to Pharaoh; Extremos fratrum suorum quinque viros. They of Dan sent five men of their Extremities; or five men out of the lowest among them, to go and seek a more commodious habitation for their tribes. Isaiah says, that God hath removed all the Extremities [Isai. xxvi. 15.] of the country, the last and lowest of the land.

But some interpreters maintain, that the Extremities in these passages do not signify the last and meanest, but on the contrary the first and most distinguished; as if one should say, they who are at the head, at the top, at the honourable Extremity. Others assert, that these expressions denote [Grot. Vatab. Jun. Fag. &c.] no choice or distinction of honour; that the five brethren here presented by Joseph to King Pharaoh, were the first that came to his hand.

The Extremity of the Earth. The praise of the Lord will be heard from the Extremity [Isai. xlii. 10. Isai. xliii. 6. Ps. cxxxv. 7. Jerem. x. 13. Isai. xli. 9.] of the world, from all places in the world. The Lord will bring back his people from the Extremity of the earth. He causeth the vapours to ascend from the Extremity of the World. He calls Abraham from the Extremity, the ends of the earth. All these expressions are marks of a remote country; as we say, that people come from the end of the world, when they come from a great distance.

[Numb. xxiv. 14, 24. Deut. xxxi. 19. Isai. lxii. 11. עיןOculus, Fons, Color. Numb. xi. 7.] The last times, Extremo tempore, or ad extremum, denote either some very remote time; or the time of the Messiah, or sometimes the end of the world.

Eye

EYE. Every one knows what the Eye is. The Hebrews call fountains, Eyes; and give the same name to colours. And the Eye, or colour of the manna was as the Eye, or colour of bdellium. By an evil Eye in Hebrew is meant, envy, jealousy, stinginess, mistaken parsimony. To lay their Eyes on any one, signifies, to look favourably upon him, to have a regard for him and his interests. The Eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, Psal. xxxiv. 15. He favours them, and heaps blessings on them. To find grace in any one's Eyes, Ruth ii. 10, &c. to win his friendship and good graces. The Eyes of servants look unto the hands of their masters, Ps. cxxiii. 2. Servants have always their Eyes fixed upon the hands of their masters, to observe their least motions, and obey the least signal. Their Eyes were opened, Gen. iii. 7. They began to comprehend what before they did not comprehend. The wise man's Eyes are in his head, Eccles. ii. 14. He knows where he goes, and what he has to do: he does not act by chance. The Eye is not satisfied with riches, Eccles. iv. 8. Covetousness is insatiable, &c. The Eye of the soul in a moral sense signifies the intention, the desire. To find favour in any one's Eyes, to be good or pleasing in another's Eyes, are expressions very common among the Hebrews, and are clearer than any explanation we can give of them.

[Gen. xliv. 21.] To set one's Eyes upon any one, to do him service, to favour him extremely, or barely to see him with friendship. Joseph ordered his brethren to bring his younger brother Benjamin to him, that he might set his Eyes upon him. God threatens to set his Eyes upon the Israelites for evil, and not [Amos ix. 4. Ps. xxxiv. 16. Amos ix. 8. Ps. xxxii. 8.] for good. Ponam oculos meos super eos in malum, & non in bonum. The Psalmist says, that the Eyes of the Lord are over the righteous. He promises to fasten his Eyes upon his friends; firmabo super te oculos meos. Nebuchadnezzar recommends it to Nebuzaradan that he would set his Eyes upon Jeremiah, and permit him to go where he pleased. But sometimes expressions [Jerem. xxxix. 12. xl. 4.] of this kind are taken in a quite opposite sense, for the severity of revenge: for example; Behold the Eyes of the Lord are upon the sinful kingdom, and I will destroy it from off the face of the earth.

[Ezek. v. 11. viii. 18. & passim.] This likewise is a very common expression, Mine Eye will not spare, neither will I have pity. Probably, because the Eye upon these occasions is the organ which shews compassion or fury, vengeance or pardon; gentleness or severity: thine Eyes look gently, or angrily upon me.

To be Eyes to the blind, or to serve [Job xxix. 15.] them instead of Eyes, is sufficiently intelligible. The Persians called those officers of the crown, who had the care of the King's interests, and the management of his finances, the King's Eyes.

[Job xxxi. 1.] I have made a covenant with my Eyes, not even to look upon a maid: a very expressive [Eph. vi. 6.] pressive way of speaking, the force whereof would be impaired by any explanation.

Eye-service is peculiar to slaves, who are [Coloss. iii. 22.] governed by fear only. Servi ad oculum.

Ezekiel

EZEKIEL, the son of Buzi, a prophet [Ezek. i. 3.] of the sacerdotal race; was carried captive to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar, with Jehoiachin King of Judah, in the year of the World 3405, before Jesus Christ 595, before the Vulgar Æra 599. God communicated the Spirit of Prophecy to him, only during the captivity; for it does not appear that he had prophesied before his coming into Mesopotamia.

He began his ministry in the thirtieth [Ezek. i. 1. Ezek. i. Ezek. iii. Ezek. iv.] year of his age, according to the general account, or rather in the thirtieth year after the covenant was renewed with God in the reign of Josiah; which answers to the fifth year of Ezekiel's captivity, in the year of the World 3409, and he prophesied twenty years to 3430, which was the fourteenth year after the taking of Jerusalem, before Jesus Christ 570, before the Vulgar Æra 574.

One day therefore, when Ezekiel was among the captives upon the river Chebar, he had a vision, wherein the Lord appeared to him upon a throne, or kind of chariot borne by four Cherubims, supported upon four sorts of wheels. He heard the voice of the Lord, who sent him to declare what [Ezek. ii.] would happen to his people. There seemed to be presented to him a book rolled up, and he thought that he did eat it. After which, he went among the captives, and continued there for seven days sitting by the river Chebar, and weeping without ceasing. At that time the Lord directed his word to him, and made him the watchman of his people; and again appeared to him in his glory, commanded him to shut himself up in his house, and foretold to him, that he should be seized on, and bound with chains as a mad man, which happened accordingly.

While he was thus confined in his apartment, God commanded him to delineate upon a brick, or piece of soft earth, the city of Jerusalem besieged, and surrounded with ramparts, after the old way of besieging cities; to put a wall of iron between him and the city; to fix his eyes upon it, and to continue three hundred and ninety days lying upon his left side, to signify the iniquity of the children of Israel; and after this to turn again, and lie forty days upon his right side, to signify the iniquities of Judah. By these four hundred and thirty days was denoted the siege of Jerusalem by[1] Nebuchadnezzar, its duration, and that of the captivity of the ten tribes, which was to last three hundred and ninety years; and the captivity of Judah, which was to continue forty years, beginning at the last time of Jerusalem's being taken in the reign of Zedekiah, or rather in the fourth year after this siege, when Nabuzaradan carried away what remains there were of the Jews in the country, and transported them to Babylon, in the year of the World 3420, and ending at the death of Belshazzar, about the year 3466, according to Usher; or reckoning from the taking of Jerusalem, in 3416 to 3457, which according to our computation is the first year of Cyrus's reign at Babylon.

God afterwards commanded him to take [Jerem. lii. 30. Ezek. iv. 9, 10.] wheat, barley, beans, lentiles, millet, and fitches, and with these to make as many loaves as he was to continue days lying upon his side, and to rub them over with excrements issuing from an human body. Ezekiel expressing some reluctancy as to this last article, God permitted him to use cow-dung instead of it. All which was a figure of what was to happen in Jerusalem, where the Israelites were reduced, during the siege, to the necessity of eating unclean bread, and that too in small quantity, and in continual apprehensions and uneasiness. After this he was directed by God to cut off his hair, to [Ezek. v.] divide it into three parts; to burn one, to cut another to pieces with a sword, and scatter the rest in the wind; to shew that the inhabitants of Jerusalem should partly be consumed by famine and pestilence; that another part of them should be put to the sword, and a third dispersed into different places in the World.

[In the year of the World 3410, before J. C. 590, before the Vulgar Æra 594. Ezek. viii.] The year following Ezekiel was transported in spirit to Jerusalem; and God shewed him the abominations and idolatries committed by the Jews there, which were to draw down upon them the most terrible effects of divine vengeance. While he was yet in the Temple, God commanded five Angels, who carried each an instrument of death, to kill all those in Jerusalem, who were not distinguished by the sign of life; and at the same time enjoined an Angel, who was with the other five, to go into the midst of the city, and mark all those with the letter T, who sighed, and were afflicted at the disorders of Jerusalem. All this was executed, and vengeance began at the Temple of the Lord, which was soon filled with blood and slaughter. The Lord having [Ezek. x.] again appeared in his glory, commanded the same Angel, who had impressed the character of life on those, who were to be saved, to take coals of fire from between the Cherubims, which bore the throne of the Lord, and scatter them over the city: this was an indication of the fire of war, and of divine vengeance, which was to fall very soon upon it.

Five years before the last siege of Jerusalem, the Lord said to a Ezekiel, Prepare thy self like one who quits his country to go to some other place; thou shalt remove thy goods before thy people in full day, and [In the year of the World 3411, before J. C. 589, before the Vulgar Æra 593. a Ezek. xii.] shalt pass from one place to another in their sight, to see if they will consider it. Dig through the wall of thine house, and go out through the breach which thou shalt have made. Thou shalt have men, who shall bear thee upon their shoulders in the dark, and thou shalt cover thy face with a veil, that so this spectacle may ingage their attention. Thou shalt tell them, that what thou dost shall be executed, when the enemy shall take Jerusalem, and that King Zedekiah shall be treated after this manner, and carried away from his palace. He added, that these things were not very remote, and that the accomplishment of them should be soon seen. Lastly, he makes a strong invective against false prophets and false propheteses, and against those, who suffer themselves to be seduced by their [Ezek. xiii. xiv.] vain preaching.

While these things passed in Mesopotamia, Zedekiah King of Judah entred into secret measures with the Kings of Egypt, Edom, and some other neighbour Princes, in order to rebel against Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon. This Prince marched against Jerusalem, and besieged it in the year of the World 3414, before Jesus Christ 586, before the Vulgar Æra 590, upon the tenth day of the tenth month in the ninth year of Zedekiah. On the same day of the same year, Ezekiel, who was in Mesopotamia, at above two hundred leagues distance from Jerusalem, declared this event to the Jews, who were with him in captivity; he represented the future ruin of Jerusalem and its inhabitants under the figure of a caldron full of flesh and bones set upon the fire, till the flesh and bones were consumed, and the very copper of the caldron melted and burnt. At the same time the prophet's wife dying, God forbad him to weep and mourn for her. The people asking the prophet what was meant by all those figurative actions; he answered them, that God was going to deprive them of all that was most dear to them; of their Temple, City, Country, Relations, and Friends, and that they should not have even the sad consolation of mourning for them.

During the siege of Jerusalem, Ezekiel, prophesied against Egypt, and Tyre. He was informed, that Jerusalem was taken but not till the fifth day of the tenth month in the year of the World 3417, about six months after the city was surrenderedb; from whence we may judge, that the prophet dwelt in some very retired corner of the province, and very remote from Babylon, where this news without doubt was brought very soon. In the evening of that day when the messenger arrived, the Lord opened the Prophet's mouth, and inspired him to foretel, that the remains of the people, which were still left in Judæa, and flattered themselves with the hopes of a speedy restoration, would likewise be dispersed, as it accordingly happened four years after. It was at the same time probably, that he foretold the calamities of the Zidonians, Tyrians, Edomites, and Ammonites, which happened five years after the destruction of Jerusalem c.

7 C

[Ezek. xxvi. xxvii. Ezek. xxix. xxx. xxxi.] The siege of Tyre and Nebuchadnezzar's war against Egypt, are, next to the affairs of the Jews, what is most remarkable in Ezekiel. After these melancholy visions, God shewed him more comfortable objects, such as the return from the captivity, the rebuilding both of the Temple and City, the restitution of the Kingdom and Cities of Judah and Israel; their victories over their enemies, and the re-establishment of their state in a more flourishing condition, than it had been in before. All which is comprized in the xxxvi. xxxvii. xxxviii. and following chapters to the end of the book.

[Hieron. in Ezek xii. p. 766. nov. Edit.] St. Jerom is of opinion, that as Jeremiah prophesied at Jerusalem at the same time as Ezekiel did beyond the Euphrates, the prophecies of this last were sent to Jerusalem, and reciprocally those of Jeremiah into Mesopotamia, in order to comfort and encourage the captive Jews in their exile.

It is said, that Ezekiel was put to death by [Vide Epiphan. de Vita & Morte Prophet.] the Prince of his people, because he exhorted him to leave idolatry. We cannot well tell who this Prince could be of the Jewish people upon the river Chebar, where Ezekiel dwelt. It is affirmed for certain likewise, that his body was laid in the same cave, wherein Shem and Arphaxad were deposited, upon the banks of the Euphrates. Benjamin of Tudela says, that this tomb is behind the synagogue, between the Euphrates and the Chebar; that it is placed in a very fine vault built by King Jehoiachin; that the Jews keep a lamp always burning there, and boast, that they have there the Prophet's book written with his own hand, which they read every year upon the great Day of [Antiq. l. x. c. 6.] Expiation.

Josephus says, that Ezekiel left two [Antiq. l. x. c. 10.] books concerning the captivity of Babylon. He says in another place, that this Prophet having foretold the ruin of the Temple, and that Zedekiah should not see Babylon, this writing was sent to Jerusalem; circumstances, [Athanas. in Synopsi.] which we do not read in the works of Ezekiel now remaining. Athanasius believed, that one of the two volumes written by Ezekiel was no longer in being. Spinoza thinks, that what we have of this Prophet is a fragment only of some larger writing. But we see no good proof of all this, nor do we know from whence Josephus got what he tells us of these two supposed works of Ezekiel.

The writings of this Prophet have been at all times acknowledged to be canonical; nor was it ever disputed that he was the author of them. Nevertheless the Jews say, that the Sanhedrim deliberated a long time whether his book should be put into the canon. The great obscurity of his prophecy both in the beginning and end of it, was objected; as also what he says, chap. [Hieron. Præfat. in Ezekiel. & Comment. in cap. i. Prophet. b Exod. xxxiv. 7. & xx. 5. Clem. Alexand. l. 1. Stromat.] xviii. 2, 20. that the son should not bear the iniquity of his father[2]; which is contrary to Moses b, who says, that the Lord visiteth the sins of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation.

Clemens of Alexandria says, that some believed Nazaratus the Assyrian, Pythagoras's preceptor, to be the same as Ezekiel. But for his part, he is not of this opinion: he does not believe that Pythagoras ever saw Ezekiel. This Philosopher lived long after our Prophet. Epiphanius and Dorotheus relate several things in the Life of Ezekiel, which are thought fabulous by the most learned criticks. They say, for example, that this Prophet wrought many miracles in Chaldæa; that he distributed the tribes of Gad and Dan in Babylon; that he sent serpents against them, which devoured their children and their cattle, as a punishment of their idolatry; that he brought the people back to Jerusalem, in order to confound the incredulous; lastly, that he was buried in the land inhabited by the Spiræ or Sapiræ. The time and manner of his death are very uncertain, whatever particular authors may say of them. The Jews did not permit any to read this Prophet, at least the beginning of his book, till they were thirty years of age.

They speak of this Prophet in a very contemptible manner[3]. They say he was Jeremiah's boy, puer, servant; that he was the object of raillery and ridicule to his people; for which reason he was called the son of Buzi, that is to say, the son of contempt, or of the despised. They accuse him with teaching several things contrary to Moses; for example, relating to the matter of sacrifices, and with saying, that God would not transmit the punishment of the father's sin upon the children; whereas Moses declares, that it descends to the third and fourth generation. Upon this pretence, the Sanhedrim [Compare Exod. xx. 5. & Ezek. xviii. 2, 3, 4, &c.] took it once under consideration, whether they should raze him out of the number of sacred Writers, and expunge his works out of the canon of Scripture.

Another reason for their thus deliberating about the suppression of his works, was, their obscurity, and principally the vision of the mysterious chariot in the first chapter; the votes of almost all had been given for condemning him, if Rabbi Chananias, [Ezek. xxxvii. 1.] who was living at that time, had not offered to remove all these difficulties. His proposal was approved, and a present was made him of three hundred tun of oil for the use of his lamps, and to give him light while he was employ'd in this undertaking. We may easily comprehend, that this is all an hyperbole of the Talmudists, to exagerate the difficulty of explaining the prophecy of Ezekiel; and it is credible, that all which they relate concerning the deliberation of the Sanhedrim on this occasion is mere fable.

Benjamin of Tudela tells us in his travels, that he saw a magnificent Mausolæum at some leagues from Bagdat, upon the top whereof was a famous library. The Mausolæum was the prophet Ezekiel's tomb, which was frequented every year by the Heads of the Captivity, who resorted thither with a numerous retinue. It is a place of devotion not only for the Jews, but likewise for the Persians, Medes, and for abundance of Mussulmen, who go thither to make their presents, and perform their vows. This place, among the people I have mentioned, is in singular veneration, their very armies never touch it. There is a lamp continually burning upon the prophet's tomb, and the Head of the Captivity of Bagdat is at the expence of keeping it up. This pilgrimage continues still at this day with much devotion.

The tomb is upon the banks of the Chaboras. There are sixty towers belonging to it, and a synagogue in each. Near it is another edifice built by Jechoniah, when Evilmerodach restored him to his liberty. This palace has a view of the Euphrates on one side, and on the other of the Chaboras. The portrait of Jechoniah was still to be seen in the time of Benjamin of Tudela, in one of the vaults of this edifice; and the pictures of all the officers who accompanied him: in the rear of whom was the prophet Ezekiel.

As to the library which this traveller saw in the same place, he says it was very numerous, and that all who died without children augmented it, by sending their books thither. There too was shewn, as they say, the original of this prophet's predictions, written with his own hand. This account is very circumstantial, and has pretty much the air of truth.

Notwithstanding, an author of good antiquity says, that he was killed by the General of his own nation, who was enraged at the Prophet's censuring his conduct, and that he was buried in a cave, where Shem and Arphaxad, the ancestors of Abraham, were deposited. An author who lived in Constantine's time, says, that Ezekiel lies buried at Bethlehem, in the same place as Jesse, David, and Solomon.

Ezekiel, we know, speaks of a famous resurrection, and that being conducted one day into a field full of bones, the Spirit of God induced him to walk round the field, and said to him, Do you believe that these bones shall be raised up? And at the same time he said, Prophesy upon these bones, and say to them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord, behold I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live. Accordingly as the Prophet was speaking, all these bones began to stir, and come together, and at last were restored to life. There has been much disputing concerning this event, whether it were real, or figurative only, and happened mentally, in spirit, to describe, in a more express and lively manner, the return of the Jews from their captivity. Many of the Rabbins have been of opinion, that the thing strictly did so happen, as the Prophet relates it; but the generality of Commentators believe, that it all passed in idea and vision only.

The Mahometans report it in the following manner. The little town of Davardan, [D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 942. Khazkhil.] which is a dependant on the city of Vassith, having been attacked with the plague, many of the inhabitants forsook their habitations, and preserved their lives: Another year the plague broke out afresh, and all the inhabitants left it with their flocks. As they were got into a large valley, two Angels appeared at the two extremities of it, and declared to them from God, that they would die very suddenly; accordingly they all did so, together with their cattle. The inhabitants of the neighbourhood having been informed of it, came thither in order to bury them; but the number of the dead was so great, that they could not accomplish their design. They shut up the valley therefore with two walls at the two ends, and left a great part of the carcasses upon the ground, where they were very soon consumed, and nothing but the bones remained of them. The prophet Ezekiel going by this way some years after, put up this prayer to God: O Lord, as thou hast been pleased to manifest thy power upon these persons with great terror, look now upon them with an eye of clemency and mercy. God heard his prayer, and restored them to life. Such is the character of these eastern people, there is scarce any history which they do not disguise, and embellish after their own manner. The Mussulmen make Ezekiel the successor of Caleb, the son of Jephunneh, who judged Israel after the death of Joshua. Which is one of the most absurd anachronisms.

The siege of Jerusalem began upon the tenth day of the tenth month in the ninth year of Zedekiah. The City was taken upon the ninth day of the fourth month in the eleventh year of the same Prince's reign; in all 19 months, or 570 days. But as Neb- uchadnezzar interrupted the siege to march against the King of Egypt, we may take four months and an half out of this number, and there will remain four hundred and thirty days.

Translators' note. Face

FACE. The Lord promises Moses, that his Face shall go before the Israelites[1]: [In the Year of the World 3941, before J.C. 59, before the Vulg. Æra 63.] Facies mea præcedet te, & requiem dabo tibi. By these words some understand God himself, my Face, I my self, say the Septuagint, or rather my Angel, the Angel of my Face, the Angel Michael whom I have appointed [|| Antiq. l. 14. c. 21. † Exod. xxxiii. 13, 14.] to be the conductor of my people. By the Angel of his presence in Isaiah is meant likewise the Messiah, Isai. lxiii. 9. Angelus faciei ejus salvavit vos. The principal Angels are called Angels of his presence, the Archangels who appear in the presence of God, who see his Face, and are the nearest to his person. The Scripture speaking in a popular manner, represents God frequently in Heaven like the Assyrian or Persian Monarch in his palace, admitting a certain number only of his principal officers to his presence, who have the honour to see and serve him. See Tobit xii. 15. Rev. i. 4.

Moses in the place abomentioned begs of God to show him his Face, si inveni gratiam in conspectu tuo, ostende mihi faciem tuam. And afterwards, to manifest his glory to him, ostende mihi gloriam tuam, which is the same as faciem tuam. God replies to him, I will make all my goodness pass before thee, or all my glory; and I will proclaim my name, which I will give thee as a signal of my presence: but for my Face, thou canst not see it; for there shall no man see it and live. It was a certain persuasion, and very prevalent in the world, that no man could support the sight of God without expiring. See Gen. xvi. 13. xxxii. 30. Exod. xx. 19. xxiv. 11. Judg. vi. 22, 23.

The Lord executed his promise, he passed before the cave where Moses was placed. Moses saw his glory as it passed before the mouth of the cave, but beheld not the Face of God, ch. xxxiv. 6, 7. whose back parts only were visible to him. Nevertheless it is said in the book of Numbers, ch. xii. 4. that God spoke mouth to mouth to him, even apparently, and not in dark speeches. And in another place, Numb. xiv. The Canaanites have heard that thou art among thy people, and that thou art seen Face to Face. And in Deuter. v. 4. it is said, that God talked with the Hebrews Face to Face out of the midst of the fire. But in all these places Face to Face is to be understood simply, as if he had said, that God manifested himself to the Israelites, that he made them hear his voice in a manner as distinct, as if he had appeared to them Face to Face.

The bread of Faces, the Shew-bread which was always in the presence of God. See SHEW-BREAD.

The Face of God denotes sometimes his [Ps. xxxiv. 17. Ib. liv. 22. Ib. lxviii. 2.] anger. The Face of the Lord is upon those who do evil. And they were dispersed by the Anger of his Face . And again, As wax melteth before the fire, so let the wicked perish before the Face of God. We find likewise the word Face used in a contrary sense: [Ps. xxxi. 16. Ps. lxxx. 7.] Make thy face to shine upon thy servant. And in another passage, Cause thy Face to shine, and we shall be saved. And I shall be [Ib. xvii. 15.] satisfied when I behold thy glory, thy Face in righteousness. Thou shalt hide them in [Ib. xxxi. 20.] the secret of thy face; thou shalt protect them, thou shalt heap thy favours on them.

[Ib. lxxxi. 2.] To consider the face of any one, to have respect to persons. Usque quo facies peccatorum sumitis? And Solomon, Qui [Prov. xxviii. 21.] cognoscit faciem in judicio, non bene facit. The Judge ought to shut his eyes against the persons whose cause comes before him, and open them only to justice. Sometimes to know the Face, signifies to do a favour, as in Malachi i. 8, 9. Si quomodo suscipiat facies vestras Dominus. I have accepted [Gen. xix. 21.] thee concerning this thing also, &c. literally in the Hebrew, I have accepted thy Face.

To spit in one's Face, is a sign of the utmost contempt. The woman, whose husband died without children, if her husband's brother refused to marry her, spit in his Face. Deut. xxv. 9.

[Ib. xlii. 5.] The salvation of the Lord's Face, signifies the Salvation which he by his favour promises.

Faith

FAITH, Fides, is a theological virtue, whereby we hold for certain that there is a God, and are persuaded to submit to all those truths which he hath revealed to us by Scripture or Tradition, and proposes to us by his Church. This Faith, accompanied with the practice of good works, gives life to a righteous man, The Just shall live by Faith. It may be considered either as proceeding [Hab. ii. 4.] from God, who reveals his truths, or man, who yields his assent to them: and in both these senses it is called Fides. Shall the unbelief of the Jews make the Faith of God of none effect? says St. Paul; that is to [Rom. iii. 3.] say, his sovereign and infallible truth, which discovers his mysteries to us.

The Jews have thirteen Articles of Faith, which are received among them, without any contradiction[1].

I. That there is one God the Creator of all things, the first principle of all Beings, who subsists independently of any part of the Universe, and without whom nothing can subsist.

II. That God is one, and indivisible; but his Unity is different from all other Unities.

III. That God has not a body, and that he is incorporeal in such a manner, as to have no corporeal quality.

IV. That he is eternal, and that all other Beings, besides him, have had a beginning with Time.

V. That God only is to be adored and served, and that no other is to be served or worshipped, either as mediator or intercessor.

VI. That there have been, and still may be Prophets, disposed to receive the inspirations of God.

VII. That there never was a greater Prophet than Moses, and that the degree of Prophecy, wherewith he was honoured, was singular, and very superior to that of all other Prophets.

VIII. That the Law given by Moses to the Jews, was dictated intirely by the Holy Spirit, yet it includes not so much as one syllable, that is purely Moses's; and that the explanation of these precepts, which they have received by tradition, came intirely from the mouth of God, who gave it to Moses.

IX. That this Law is immutable, and that no one can either add to it, or take from it.

X. That God knows and disposes of all human actions.

XI. That God rewards those, who observe his Law, and punishes those who violate it; that the best reward is that of another life, and the greatest punishment is the damnation of the soul.

XII. That a Messiah will come, whose merit will be infinitely superior to that of all other Monarchs who were before him; that altho' his coming be late, it is not however to be doubted, nor is any time to be prescribed when it shall happen, much less is it to be fixed from Scripture, since there never is to be a King of Israel, who is not of the race of David or Solomon.

XIII. That God at the consummation of time will restore all the dead to life, and will afterwards proceed to judge all mankind universally both in Soul and Body.

As to the Articles of Faith acknowledged by Christians, they are comprehended in the Creeds, and in the Decisions of Councils.

Faith is taken likewise for a firm confidence in God, whereby we are induced to address ourselves without hesitation to him, whether we petition him for favours in our prayers, or miracles for his own glory. If you have Faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it shall remove, and nothing shall be impossible [Matth. xvii. 20.] unto you, says our Saviour. If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally; but let him ask in Faith, nothing wavering, &c. says St. [Jam. i. 5, 6.] James.

Lastly, Faith is taken for honesty, fidelity in performing promises, truth; and in this sense it is applied both to God and man. Isaiah describing the Messiah, says Righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins; that is to say, he will be just and faithful.

Famine

[Joel i. 2, 3, 4, &c.] FAMINE. The Scripture speaks of several Famines which happened in Palestine, and in the neighbouring countries; [Gen. xii. 10.] for example, in the time of Abraham, and again in the time of Isaac. But Ib. xxvi. [1.] the most remarkable, whereof we have any knowledge, is that of seven years, [Ib. xli. 27.] which fell out in Egypt, while Joseph abode there. It is considerable for the continuance, extent, and greatness of it; and in this particular the more so, that Egypt is one of the countries in the world least subject to these calamities, by reason of its extreme fruitfulness.

Famine is sometimes a natural effect, as when the Nile does not overflow in Egypt, or the rains do not fall in Judea, at the customary times, that is to say, in spring and autumn; or when the caterpillars, the May-bugs, and locusts swarm in the country, and destroy the fruits of it. The Prophets in several places take notice of these last causes of famine. See, for example, the magnificent description which Joel, makes of the coming of the locusts; he compares them to a numerous and terrible army, and describes the ravages committed by them in the land.

Famine was also the effect often of God's [2 Sam. xxiv. 12, 13.] anger against his people; for example, the Lord sent the Prophet Gad to David, to tell him, that as a punishment of his vanity, whereby he had been induced to number his people, God gave him the option of seven years famine, or of being for three months pursued by his enemies, or of seeing the plague raging for three days in his [2 Kings viii. 1, 2.] country. And in the reign of Ahab, The Lord called for a Famine, and it came upon the land seven years. The Prophets frequently threaten the Israelites, with the sword of Famine, or with War and Famine, two evils that go generally together.

Amos threatens the people of God with another sort of Famine, which was that of hearing the word of God. Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will send a Famine in the land, not a Famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord.

Fascination

FASCINATION, a charm which hinders one from seeing things, as they are in reality. We read in a spurious book, called, The Gospel of Christ's infancy[1], that a young man having been changed into a [Isai. xi. 5. Gal. iii. 1. Wisd. iv. 12.] mule, was cured and restored to his first condition by the Blessed Virgin, who put the infant Jesus on him. Homer speaks of Ulysses's companions, who were changed into swine by Circe's charms. We read of the like Fascinations in the Life of St. Hilario, written by St. Jerom, and in many other Lives of the Saints. The metamorphosis of Apuleius is a matter very well known. St. Austin[2] mentions some persons who changed those into beasts of burden, that were persuaded by them to eat certain drugs. All these changes consisted only in the imagination of the spectators, and in the Fascination of their senses, and of theirs to whom these accidents happened.

St. Paul makes use of the word Fascination in a figurative sense, when speaking to the Galatians, he says, Quis vos fascinavit non obedire veritati? Who hath so far bewitched your heart and mind, as to induce you to embrace vain novelties, and abandon the truths which I have preached to you. And the wise man, Fascinatio nugacitatis obscurat bona: the Fascination, inchantment, the charms of wordly things, of pleasures, &c. casts a blemish upon good things. See what St. Austin says, relating to the supposed metamorphoses caused by Sorcerers, in the XVIIIth book of his de Civit. Dei, c. 16, 17, 18, &c. and what has been said of Nebuchadnezzar's metamorphosis into an Ox.

Fasting

FASTING. Fasting has in all Ages and among all Nations been an exercise much in use in times of mourning, sorrow and affliction. The sense of it is in some sort inspired by nature, which in these circumstances denies itself nourishment, and takes off the edge of hunger. We see no example of Fasting, properly so called, before Moses; whether this Legislator had observed nothing of it in the old Patriarchs, which yet is hard to believe, since we see that there were very great mournings among them, and those too very particularly described, such as that of Abraham for Sarah, and that of Jacob for his son Joseph; or whether he did not think it necessary to speak of it in any express manner. But it appears by the Law, that even devotional Fasts for the expiation of their sins, were common among the Israelites. Moses ordains, that if a married woman ingages herself by vow to keep any Fast in the way of supererogation, unless her husband contradicts it, she shall be [Numb. xxx. 14.] obliged to perform her vow. I say nothing of the forty days which Moses passed without eating any thing on Mount Horeb, because this Fast is out of the common rules of Nature.

Since

Since the time of Moses, examples of Fasting have been very common among the Jews. But as to the Fasts which we read of in their Calendar, they are later than the Law. Moses injoins no particular Fast in his books, excepting that upon the so-lemn day of Expiation, which was gene-rally and strictly observed[1]. Joshua and the Elders of Israel remained prostrate be-fore the Ark from morning until evening, without eating, after the Israelites were defeated by [Josh. vii. 6.] the men of Ai. The eleven Tribes which had taken arms against that of Benjamin, [Judg. xx. 26.] seeing they could not hold out against the inhabitants of Gibeah, fell down before the Ark upon their faces, and so continued till the evening without eat-ing. The Jews [1 Kings vii. 6.] perceiving themselves to be pressed by the Philistines, assembled before the Lord at Mizpah, and fasted in his presence till the evening. David fasted while the first child he had by Bath-sheba, the wife of Uriah, [2 Sam. xii. 16.] was sick. The Prophets, Jesus Christ, St. John Baptist, and the Apostles, upon many occasions fasted.

The very Heathens themselves sometimes fasted; and the King of Niniveh, terrified by Jonah's preaching, made an order, [Jonah iii. 5, 6.] that not only men, but beasts also, should continue without eating or drinking; that both men and beasts should be covered with sack-cloth, and each after their man-ner should cry unto the Lord. The Jews, in times of publick calamity, appointed extraordinary Fasts, and made even the children at the breast fast, as we see in Joel. Some of [Joel ii. 16.] the Fathers[2] have affirmed, that in the fast observed by the Nini-vites, the children at the breast were made to fast. Virgil introduces a shepherd say-ing, that his very cattle [Virg. Eclog. 5.] fasted at the death of Cæsar. It is said that in the Canaries and Peru, when there is too great a drought, the inhabitants shut up their goats, and make them fast till they cry with hun-ger. This is what instinct has inspired Pagan nations with.

The Jews in their common Fasts, begin the observance of them in the evening after Sun-set, and remain without eating till the same hour the next day, that is to say, till the rising of the Stars: in all this time they [Vide Hieron. l. 2. adversus Jovinian.] neither eat nor drink. Upon the great day of Expiation, when they are more strictly obliged to fast, they continue doing so for eight and twenty hours. Men are obliged to fast from the age of full thirteen, and women from the age of full eleven years. Children from the age of seven years, are compelled, in proportion to their strength, to exercise themselves in Fasting. Du-ring this Fast, they not only abstain from all sorts of food, but from bathing likewise, from perfumes, odours, and anointing. They go barefoot, are continent, and make no use of marriage. And this is the Idea which the Eastern people have generally of Fasting: It is an abstinence from every sensual way of touching, and every kind of eating and drinking. Upon the great day of Expiation it is the custom among the Samaritans, to make infants fast as soon as they are weaned, or, as some say, while they are even at the breast; and this during the twenty-four hours Fast which is observed upon this day; whereas the Jews do not require children to fast till they are seven years old.

The principal days on which the Jews are obliged to fast are these. In the month Tizri, which is the first of the civil, and the seventh of the ecclesiastical year, they fast upon the third day in memory of the murder committed upon the person of Ge-daliah. See 2 Kings xxv. 25. Jerem. xli. 2. Zechary speaks of this Fast, calling it the Fast of the seventh month. Zech. vii. 5.

Upon the seventh day of the same month, they celebrate a Fast upon the score of the golden Calf.

The tenth is the solemn Fast of Expiation. Lev. xxiii. 19.

The sixth day of the second month called Marchesvan, they fast upon the oc-casion of Zedekiah, King of Judah's ha-ving his eyes put out by Nebuchadnez-zar's order.

The seventh day of the third month is a Fast in memory of Jehoiakim King of Judah, and his piercing the prophecies of Jeremiah with a pen-knife, and burning them.

On the eighth day of the fourth month the Jews fast out of hatred to the translation of the Bible from the Hebrew into Greek, performed by the order of Ptole-my Philadelphus.

On the ninth day of the same month they observe a Fast, for which the Rabbins assign no reason.

On the tenth day of the same month, they fast in memory of the siege of Jerusalem, undertaken by Nebuchadnezzar.

On the eighth day of the fifth month, they fast in memory of the righteous, who lived under Joshua.

On the twenty-third day of the same month, they celebrate a Fast upon the occasion of the war, made by the eleven Tribes against that of Benjamin, in order to punish the injury offered to the Levite's wife.

The seventh day of the sixth month, is a Fast because of Moses's death.

The ninth is a Fast, by reason of the division between the schools of Shammai and Hillel.

Upon the first day of the seventh month of the civil year, which is the first month of the ecclesiastical year, they fast because of the death of Aaron's children consumed by the sacred fire.

On the tenth day of the same month they fast, by reason of the death of Miriam, Moses's sister.

On the twenty-sixth, for the death of Joshua.

On the tenth of the eighth month, they fast for the death of the High Priest Eli, and the taking of the Ark.

On the twenty-eighth, for the death of Samuel.

On the twenty-third of the ninth month they fast, because Jeroboam King of the ten Tribes, forbad his subjects to carry the first fruits to Jerusalem. 1 Kings xii. 27.

On the twenty-fifth of the same month they fast for the death of the several Rabbins, Simeon the son of Gamaliel, Ishmael the son of Elisha, and Ananias the High Priest's Vicar.

The twenty-seventh of the same month was a Fast, in memory of Rabbi Hanina's being burnt with the book of the Law.

The seventeenth of the tenth month was a Fast, because Moses broke the Tables of the Law. Exod. xxxii. 19. On the same day they remember the cessation of the Sacrifices, and the Idol placed by Antiochus Epiphanes in the Temple.

The ninth of the eleventh month is a Fast, because God told Moses, that none of the Israelites who were murmurers, should enter into the promised Land; and because upon that day the Temple of Jerusalem was burnt, first of all by the Chaldæans, and a long time after by the Romans. This is the Fast taken notice of in Zechary, as kept in the fifth month of the Sacred Year. Zech. vii. 5.

On the eighteenth day of the same month they fast, because in the time of Ahaz, the lamp which was kindled every evening in the Holy, was extinguished.

The seventeenth day of the twelfth month in the civil year is a Fast, in memory of their death, who being sent to view the promised Land, made a disadvantageous report of it to the people, and induced them to murmur. See Numb. xiv. 22, 23.

Besides these Fasts, which are common to all the Jews, tho' not with the same obligation, they have others, which are devotional, practised by the most zealous and pious part of them[3]: For example, the [Luk. xviii. 12. Matth. ix. 14.] Pharisee, mentioned in the Gospel, says, that he fasts twice a week, that is to say, every Monday and Thursday;[4] upon Thursday, in memory of Moses's going up Mount Sinai upon that day; and on Monday, in memory of his coming down from thence. The Pharisees and Disciples of St. John Baptist said to our Saviour, Why do we and the Pharisees fast oft, but thy disciples fast not. And Jesus Christ, speaking of St. John's Fasting, says in an aggravating [Ib. xi. 18. Justin. l. 36. histor.] manner, John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, he hath a Devil. What the manner was of St. John's living, is very well known. It is said, that there were Pharisees who fasted four days in the week. Some of the Antients were of opinion, that the Jews fasted every Sabbath-day. Justin says, that Moses and the Israelites, having been for seven days wandering in the desarts of Arabia, without finding any sustenance, they consecrated the Sabbath-day, which is the seventh day, and appointed it to be a [Sueton. in August. Juvenal. Satyr. 6.] perpetual Fast. Augustus in his letter to Tiberius tells him, that no Jew ever kept the Fast upon the Sabbath-day, as he did the day on which he wrote to him. Juvenal says, that the very Kings of the Jews fast upon the Sabbath-day, and go barefooted:

Exercent ubi Festa mero pede Sabbata

Reges. [Martial. l. 4. Epigr. 4.] And Martial attributes the stink peculiar to the Jews, to their Fasting on the Sabbath. But these Authors were not well informed. The Jews not only do not fast upon the Sabbath-day, but all Fasting upon this day is very expressly forbidden them by the rules of their Doctors.

[Tract. Taanith, n. 8. p. 368.] We read in the Mishna, the determination of the Sages, declaring, not only that it was not lawful to fast on days set apart for Festivals, and others on which it was not allowable to use this abstinence; but that the same was likewise prohibited the day before, and according to some Doctors, the day after too. Maimonides and Barthenora observe upon this text, that the old book which contained the Calendar of the Jewish Feasts, was lost in their time, and that they had no regard to the custom of not fasting the evening before, or the day after any festival, nor even upon the old Feast-days themselves, which were then no longer observed. In the Greek of Judith we read, that this pious woman fasted every day of her life, excepting the eves of the sabbaths, and the sabbaths; and the eves of the new-moons, and the new-moons; and the feasts and solemn days of the house of Israel. Here is an instance of the practice which we have been remarking in the Mishna. This custom was observed out of respect to the Festival, that the joy of it might not be interrupted by the preceding or subsequent Fast.

[Isa. lv. 6. Leon de Modene, ceremonies des Juifs, partie 3. c. 8.] On Fast-days in the morning there are confessions added to the prayers, and the recital of some melancholy accidents which happened on such a day, and gave occasion for the Fast then celebrated: the volume of the Law is opened, and the following words are read out of the 32d chapter of Exodus, ver. 11. And Moses besought the Lord his God, and said, Lord why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people, which thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt, &c. And in the afternoon, in the prayer of Mincha or the Offering, the same is read again with the addition of these words out of Isaiah, Seek the Lord while he may be found, call upon him while he is near, &c.

[Isa. xl. 1, 2, &c.] There are some Jews who abstain from eating meat and drinking wine from the 17th of Tammuz to the 9th of Ab, which makes three weeks. But this they do voluntarily, and because all these days have been unfortunate to Israel On the 9th of Ab, which answers to the moon of July and August, in memory of the Temple burnt by Nebuchadnezzar, and afterwards by Titus, the Jews continue Fasting without either eating or drinking, barefoot, and without shoes, and without the liberty of washing themselves, from about an hour before sun-set till the next day, when the stars begin to appear. In the evening of the vigil, after the common-prayer is ended in the synagogue, they sit upon the ground, and read the lamentations of Jeremiah. They repeat the same thing the next day, adding many other lamentations to them, continuing sorrowful all the day, without being permitted to study in the books of the Law, but only to read Job, Jeremiah, and other sad and melancholy subjects. The Sabbath which follows this Fast is called Nacama, that is to say, Consolation, because they then read these words of Isaiah; Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God, speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, &c. and comfort themselves with the hope of the re-establishment of Jerusalem and the Temple.

Besides the general Fasts enjoined the whole nation, there are others peculiar to every nation; for example, to the Germans, who after the Feasts of the Passover and Tabernacles, have a custom to fast three days: namely, on the two following Mondays and the Thursday between them. And this is founded on an apprehension, that as the preceding Feasts were of eight days continuance, they might have offended God during this time. For the same reason they [Buxtorf. Synag. Jud.] fast on the last day of the year, and some on the eve of the first day in every month. If in the way of penance, or out of any particular devotion, some chuse to fast beyond the time above mentioned, they are used to pronounce these words before sunset: I undertake to fast to-morrow. After which they remain without eating or drinking from that evening to the same hour the next day, and add a prayer, wherein they beg of God, that their Fast may supply for them the room of sacrifice. On this day they lie upon a harder bed than usual, lessen the number of their pillows, change their fine sheets, and take coarse ones.

[Idem. part. 1. c. 4.] If any one dreams of something bad, or unfortunate; for example, that he sees the book of the Law burning; that he sees the day of forgiveness at the hour of evening prayer; that he sees the beams of his house, or his teeth falling; and this dream gives him uneasiness, he fasts that day in the most rigid manner, without either eating or drinking from one evening to another. This kind of Fast seems to be of such consequence to them, that they may observe it even upon the sabbath-day, or any other festival; which is allowed upon no other occasion.

[Ecclef. ix. 7.] In the evening when this Fast concludes, he who dreamt, sends for three of his friends before he goes to rest, and says seven times to them, May my dream be happy! to which they answer every time, May it be happy, and may God make it so! Then they add some passages out of the Prophets, and that he may presage well of the forgiveness of his sins, they repeat these words to him out of Ecclesiastes, Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart, for God now accepteth thy works. After which, he who had fasted may eat.

[Basnage Hist. des Juifs, t. 5. l. 7. c. 18. art. 4.] They have a great deal of confidence, that Fasting will either procure a happy interpretation of their dream, or divert the ill effects of it; they hold, that Fasting is with respect to dreams, what fire is to the tow which it sets on fire and burns. If any one falls sick, sets out upon a dangerous journey, or is taken prisoner, they fast in order to obtain his health or deliverance. A child who has loved his father tenderly, fasts every year upon the day of his death. The very Magicians fast, in order to conjure up the souls of the dead, and the devils in hell: with much more reason then, say the Sages, should good men fast, that they may engage the Spirit of God to rest upon them.

The Rabbins maintain, that it is not allowable to fast in the month of March, because in this month the Israelites departed out of Egypt, and it should be intirely consecrated to joy and gratitude.

7 E Some however do fast upon the day of Miriam's death, Moses's sister, because at that time the people wanting water in their camp at Kadesh-barnea, murmured [Numb. xx. 1, 2, &c.] against God.

The common way of Fasting among the Jews is to take no food, nor any drink from the foregoing evening till after sun-set the day following. Nevertheless there are some Jews who believe, that it is lawful to eat till the morning of that day on which they are to fast; and that it is sufficient to continue the whole day from break of day till the rising of the stars, without taking any nourishment. Upon Fast-days meat being forbidden, they content themselves with some particular herbs, for all are not permitted; butter is prohibited, but not eggs. They celebrate no Weddings on Fast-days, and they are not allowed to be shaved or powdered, or to bathe themselves; they sometimes throw ashes upon their heads, and go bare-foot. But these last ceremonies are not indispensably obliging. They esteem Fasts and Abstinence as a supplement to the old Sacrifices, and place great merit in them.

The Mussulmen[5], in imitation of the Christians, fast during the whole month of Ramadan, which is the ninth of the Arabian year. This month is lunar, and perpetually changing place, shifting successively through all the seasons of the year, because these people receive no intercalation. This Fast is said to have been instituted in memory of the Alcoran, which Mahomet declares was sent to him in this month. Their Fast consists in neither eating nor drinking, nor smoking for the whole day, from morning to the rising of the stars. After which, they eat and drink as much as they please, all night; only wine is more strictly forbidden upon these occasions than at any other times: some have been obliged to swallow melted lead, for having violated this rule.

No one is excused fasting, neither women, soldiers, travellers, labourers, nor artificers, neither poor nor rich; the Sultan fasts as well as others. The sick, who are unable to keep the fast of Ramadan, are obliged to fast some other month after their recovery. Thirst is in particular very troublesome to travellers and labourers; but they must endure it: or if they break their fast, they must resolve to fast as many days some other time. The generality continue all day long in great inaction, avoiding more especially those exercises which might cause drought.

As to the Fasts observed by Christians, without taking notice of that of forty days, which our Saviour passed in the wilderness without eating, and is above the ordinary strength of man, it is not to be at all doubted, but that as he was very much addicted to the legal observances, he both kept himself, and required his Disciples to keep all the Fasts, which the Jews were under any obligation to observe. But it does not appear by his own practice, or any commands which he gave to his Disciples, that he instituted any particular Fasts, or injoined any to be kept out of pure devotion. The poor, laborious, and almost always wandering life which he led for the three last years of his continuance in the world, did not allow him to undertake such practices. But when the Pharisees in the way of reproach told him, that his Disciples did not fast so often as theirs, or John the Baptist's, he [Luke v. 34, 35.] replied, Can ye make the children of the bride-chamber fast, while the bride-groom is with them? but the days will come, when the bride-groom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those days. Accordingly the life of the Apostles and first Believers was a life of self-denial, of sufferings, austerities, and fasting: whereof we may judge by the life of St. Paul, with which we are better acquainted than with that of the other Apostles. He [2 Cor. vi. 5. & xi. 27.] says, that he had been, and still every day was exposed to a thousand wants and frequent fastings, In hunger and thirst, in fastings often. He exhorts the faithful to imitate him in his patience, in his afflictions, in his labours, in his watchings, in his fastings. In laboribus, in jejuniis, in vigiliis. Ordinations and acts of consequence in the Church were attended with fasting and prayers. The fasts of Wednesday [Acts xiii. 2, 3.] and Friday, called Stations,[6] and that of Lent, particularly of all the Holy Week, are thought to be of apostolical institution.

One cannot be sufficiently astonished at the extreme remissness which is become general among Christians in the point of Fasting, particularly in the Latin Church: and what surprizes more than all the rest, is, that some Casuists and Prelates, who ought to be better acquainted with the spirit of the Church, and more zealous in supporting the interests of Truth, and the rules of ancient Discipline, both write and teach, that the drinking even of wine, liquors, tea, coffee, and chocolate, breaks no one's fast, because say they, liquids only moisten, and do not nourish: as wine, for example, which is the extract of a very juicy fruit, some sorts whereof, Galen says, are as nourishing as hog's flesh, which, as any one can tell, is a kind of food the fullest of gravy that we know of; Chocolate, they say, tea, and coffee, which are comcompound liquors, and other liquors wherein there is a mixture of Aqua vitæ, do not nourish: yet even pure water nourishes, refreshes, and delights. It has been always the notion of all people, both Greeks and Barbarians, that in Fasting they were to mortify the senses, not only by hunger, but by thirst too: the Jews, Mussulmen, and primitive Christians, nay the very Pagans themselves, as may be seen by the example of the Ninivites, did not think otherwise.

It is a manifest mistake to say, that water and things liquid do not nourish; do they not turn to chyle in the Stomach? do they not enter into the heart and blood? And are not the most solid fruits reduced to liquid juices, that they may be able to nourish and support us? For in short, every thing we eat must be changed into chyle, lympha, and so into blood, in order to contribute to our sustenance. It is true, a man who was to drink nothing but water, without eating, could not live long; but they who drink water, wine, or any thing else, while they are Fasting, have eaten before, and will eat again after they have drunk, and perhaps plentifully; so that drinking is not only a new nourishment to them, but is farther a dissolver, and helps the digestion of what they have taken before. Lastly, though liquids were only to refresh and please, people should not allow themselves the use of them in times of Fasting, they being contrary to the spirit of this holy exercise, and condemned by the example of Jews, Mussulmen, and Pagans, and, what should be of much greater force with us, by that of the primitive Christians.

Translators' note. As there are some among the Jews who attribute great degrees of merit to Fasting, and look upon these Absti- nences as substituted in the room of the old Sacrifices; so there are some Doctors among them, who say, that Fast- ing is indifferent to God, and is either good or bad, as it fits the Body better for devotion, and that all depends upon the observance of the Law. They, who argue in this manner, have a right notion of mortifications.

Fat

[Levit. iii. 17.] FAT. God forbad the Hebrews to eat the Fat of Beasts. All the Fat is the Lord's. It shall be a perpetual statute for your generations throughout all your dwellings, that ye [Judæi recentes, Lyr. Villet. Vide Joseph. Antiq. l. 3. c. 10.] eat neither Fat nor Blood. Some interpreters take these words in all the rigour of the letter, and suppose the use of Fat as well as blood to be intirely forbidden the Jews. Josephus says, that Moses forbids only the Fat of oxen, goats, sheep, and of their species, which agrees with the Law in Leviticus, ch. vii. 23. Ye shall eat no manner of Fat, of ox, or of sheep, or of goat. The modern Jews observe this custom; and with respect to the Fat of every other sort of clean creature, they think it is allowed them, even that of beasts which have died of themselves: this is conformable to that other Law; And [Levit. vii. 24.] the Fat of the beast that dieth of itself, and the Fat of that which is torn with beasts, may be used in any other use.

[Cornel. Tirin. Menoch. Bonfrer.] But other interpreters maintain, that the Law which seems to forbid generally the use of Fat, is to be restrained to Fat separated from the flesh, such as that which covers the kidneys and intestines; and this only in the case of its being actually offered in sacrifice: which is confirmed by this passage of Leviticus, wherein God enjoins the Israelites not to eat the Fat of bullocks, goats, and sheep. Whosoever eateth of the Fat of the beast, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, even the soul, that eateth it, shall be cut off from his people.

The word Fat in the Hebrew Style signifies not only that of beasts, whereof we have been speaking, but every thing likewise which relates to it in other things; for [Psalm cxlvii. 14. Psalm lxxxi. 16. Psalm xvii. 10.] example, Adipe frumenti satiat te. And in another place, He should have fed them with the Fat of wheat: Cibavit eos ex adipe frumenti. Fat is also used sometimes for the source or cause of compassion or mercy. As the bowels are stirred at the recital of any misfortune, or at the view of some melancholy and afflicted object, it has been thought that sensibility resided principally in the bowels, which are commonly loaded with Fat. The Psalmist reproaches the wicked with having closed their Fat, with having shut up their bowels against him, with being in no sort affected with compassion at the sight of his extreme grief. Mine enemies compass me about, they are enclosed in their own Fat. In another passage he says, prodiit quasi ex adipe iniquitas eorum, they sin'd with affectation, almost like the person spoken of by Moses, Deut. xxxii. 15. Jesurun waxed fat, he kicked, and forgot God that formed him.

[Psal. cxlii. 7. Gen. xxvii. 28.] The Fat of the Earth, crassitudo terræ, signifies the dung or marl wherewith the earth is fatned. Our bones are scattered at the grave's mouth, as dung is spread upon the earth. The Fat of the Earth implies likewise the fruitfulness of it. Det tibi Deus de rore cœli, & de pinguedine terræ abundantiam frumenti & vini. God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatness of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine.

Fat denotes abundance of every thing [Jer. xxxi. 14. Job xxxvi. 16. Psal. lxiii. 5.] that is good; I will satiate the souls of the Priests with Fatness. Inebriabo animam sacerdotum pinguedine. And in Job, Thy table shall be full of Fatness: Requies mensæ tuæ erit plena pinguedine. And the Psalmist, My soul shall be satisfied as with Marrow and Fatness.

Father

FATHER. This word, besides the common acceptation of it for immediate Father, is likewise taken in the Scripture-style for Grand-father, Great Grand-father, or the very Author and first Father of a family, how remote soever he may be from those who speak. For example, the Jews in our Saviour's time, and their descendants of this present generation, and the posterity of them to the consummation of ages, will call themselves sons of Abraham, Isaac, and and Jacob. Nebuchadnezzar is termed Belshazzar's Father, though Belshazzar was his grandson. Jesus Christ is called the son of David, though David was so many generations distant from him.

By Father is likewise understood the Institutor, the Master of those who are of a [Gen. iv. 20,21,22.] certain profession. Jabal was the Father of such as dwell in tents, and such as have cattle. Tubal was the Father of all such as handle the harp and organ, or flute, &c. The famous founder of Tyre, Huram, is called the Father of the King of Tyre, and [2 Chr. ii. 13. & 2 Chr. iv. 16.] even of Solomon, because he was their principal workman, and the chief director of their undertakings. The principal, the eldest of the Prophets were considered as the Masters and Fathers of the rest, who were their Disciples; for this reason the young Prophets are called the Sons of the Prophets, and these style the eldest, Fathers. My Father, my Father, said Elisha to Elijah, the chariot of Israel, and the [2 Kings ii. 12.] horsemen thereof.

Father is a term of respect which inferiors often give to their superiors, and servants to their masters; My Father, said [2 Kings v. 13.] Naaman's servants to their master, if the Prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldst thou not have done it? &c. The King of Israel, in like manner, called the Prophet Elisha his Father: My Father, [2 Kings vi. 21.] shall I smite them? The Prophet being upon his death-bed, Joash came to see him, and said, O my Father, my Father, the [2 Kings xiii. 14.] chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. Rechab, the Institutor of the Rechabites, is called their Father; Jonadab the son of Rechab, our Father.

A man is said to be a Father to the poor and orphans, when he takes care of their necessities, is affected with their miseries, and provides for their wants. I was a Father [Job xxix. 16.] to the poor, says Job. God declares himself to be a Father of the fatherless, and [Ps. lxviii. 6.] a Judge of the widows. Patris orphanorum & Judicis viduarum.

God is frequently called heavenly Father, and simply Father. Indeed, he is truly and eminently the Father, Creator, Preserver, and Protector of all creatures, and principally of those who invoke him, who know and serve him. Is he not thy Father that bought thee? says Moses; hath he not [Deut. xxxii. 6.] made thee and established thee? Since the coming of Jesus Christ, we have acquir'd a new right to call him our Father, by reason of the adoption and filiation which our Saviour has merited for us, by clothing himself with our humanity, and purchasing us by his death; Ye have not received the Spirit of bondage unto fear, like the Jews, but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God.

Job intitles God the Father of rain; Quis est pluviæ pater? who produces it, who causes it to fall? In another place he says, I have said to corruption, thou art my Father. I acknowledge that I am sprung out of corruption, and shall return to the putrifaction of the grave; or otherwise, in the condition which I am reduced to, I look upon worms and putrifaction as my friends and relations

Joseph says, that God had made him a° Father to Pharaoh, that he had given him very great authority in this Prince's kingdom, and that Pharaoh looked upon him as his Father, and had so much confidence in him, and consideration for his person, that he gave him the government of his house, and of all his dominions.

The Devil is esteemed to be the Father of the wicked; Ye are of your Father the Devil. Ye would imitate the desires of your Father, says Jesus Christ to the Jews; he was a murderer from the beginning, he abode not in the truth. He is a lyar, and the Father of falsehood; he is a falsifier, a deceiver, a seducer. He deceived Eve and Adam; he introduced sin and falsehood into the world. He inspires his followers with his spirit and sentiments; he keeps the school of fraud and deceit; his only business is to tempt and ensnare us.

The Prophets reproach the wicked Jews with saying unto idols, You are my Father. In reality they said so, though not perhaps with their mouths, since they adored them as their Gods.

The Father of Sichem, the Father of Tekoah, the Father of Bethlehem, &c. the Father and Head of those who inhabit these Cities; he who built or rebuilt them. These expressions are very common in the first book of Chronicles, as well as Machir the Father of Gilead, the Father of Maresa, the Father of Kirjath-jarem, and the Father of the Valley of Artificers.

To be gathered unto their Fathers, to sleep with their Fathers, to go to their Fathers, are common expressions to signify death. In these passages, the Fathers signify those who lived before us, and whom we are going to meet again in another life.

Jesus Christ is called in Isaiah, the everlasting Father, because by him we are begotten in God for eternity; he procures life eternal to us, by adopting us to be the sons of God, and the communication of his merits, which are applied to us by our good works, and faith animated by love. St. Paul says, much in the same sense, that God is the Father of Spirits; our Fathers are the Fathers of our Bodies only, but God is the Father of our Spirits; he not only creates them, but he justifies them likewise, glorifies and makes them happy. Jesus [Matth. xxiii. 9.] Christ in the Gospel does not permit us to give any man the name of Father, because we have one only who is in Heaven. Not that it is meant here, that we should abandon or despise our earthly Fathers, God requires us to honour them, and give them all necessary assistance; but when the interests of God are at stake, his glory, or our own salvation, if our fathers and our mothers are an obstacle to them, we should say to them, We know you not; and to God, in the language of Isaiah, Doubtless thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not; thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer. Or [Ps. xxvii. 10.] with David, My Father and my Mother have forsaken me, but the Lord taketh me up. What our parents have done for us in comparison with what we owe to God is so inconsiderable, that we may say, our Fathers are nothing to us, and that God alone deserves the title of our Father.

Saint Luke, speaking of St. John Baptist, says, that he was sent to turn the hearts of the Fathers to the Children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just. He will re-unite the sentiments of the ancient and later Israelites; both will speak the same language, have the same thoughts. The Jews will be no longer seen to degenerate from the righteousness of their ancestors, nor to contradict the Holiness of their Religion by their ill Lives, nor persecute the Saints and Prophets, by their opposition to their maxims and instructions. The Fathers and Sons shall live hereafter in perfect good understanding.

The first Father, the Father of the living, is Adam; the Father of the faithful, is Abraham; the Father of the Circumcision, or the Jews, the same Abraham; the same Patriarch is called the Father of many Nations, because in reality several people [Gen. xvii. 4.] sprung from him, as the Jews, Ishmaelites, Edomites, and many others.

Fauni

FAUNI. These are wild beasts of the nature of apes, having four paws, but using commonly the hindermost only. Their faces are made almost like a man's, the forepart is without hair, the hinder part abounds with it. Some of them are found in the Indies, and in the province of Angola. One of them, it is said, was brought to Holland some years ago, where it lived some time. St. Jerom says, that in the Emperor Constantine's time, one of them was carried to Alexandria, where it pined and died very soon of melancholy. It was imbalmed and brought to the Emperor, who was then at Antioch. The same Saint says, that St. Antony met with one in his way, as he was going to search after St. Paul the Hermit. Plutarch relates, that after the defeat of Mithridates, one of them was carried to Sylla. There are other Fauns, which are the country Deities of the Heathens, described with horns upon their heads, and with the feet of goats.

The Fauns, or Deities of the woods and groves, were not known among the Greeks, but by the Latins only, who kept their festival upon the fifth of December, and sacrificed a Goat to them in the meadows with great rejoicings of all the villages about. Faunus among the Romans, was the same thing as Pan with the Greeks; at least the Fauns were companions to Pan. Notwithstanding they were honoured as Demi-Gods, it was nevertheless believed, that they died after a certain time. The Prophet Jeremiah, and some others, give them the Epithet of Ficarii, which some translate eaters of figs. Several copies read Sicariis, instead of Ficariis, and explain it of some cruel and murderous Fauns; but the reading Ficariis is most generally received. Others derive Ficarii, not from figs, ficus, ficus, but from the word ficus, fici, which signifies a spongy and fibrous excrescence of flesh, which appears in different parts of the body, and principally about the fundament and pudenda, to which the Fauns were believed to be very subject. They are represented exactly like Satyrs, sometimes in a human shape with the tail only of a horse or goat, and sometimes with the ears of a goat and horns. Lastly, they are almost always confounded with the Satyrs, for which reason when any speak of them, they say, Faunus an Satyrus? because they cannot tell whether it be one or the other, both being painted alike.

As to the existence of Fauns, St. Jerom, we know, has done all he can to prove it in his Life of St. Paul the Hermit, but he has not succeeded in persuading many to be of his opinion. There are still multitudes who are incredulous in this point, tho' the relations we have of Savages, and men born and living in the Sea, might make a thing of this nature less incredible. In some particular places there are Apes to be seen, which very much resemble Fauns and Satyrs; and are so ingenious and diverting, as to persuade one that they have understanding. It is very probable, that the ancients who honoured Fauns, Sylvani, Pans, and Satyrs, both spoke and thought of them as they did of Tritons, Nymphs, and Nereids: they imagined there were certain Genii, who reigned in the woods, fields, and desarts, in the sea, and waters; and superstition afterwards framed such bodies for them as it pleased, as our Painters give such as they think fit to Angels, and Demons, to Virtues, Vices, Towns, Provinces, to the Gods of Rivers, and Goddesses of Fountains, &c.

In the passage cited out of Jeremiah, the import of the Hebrew is this, a The Ziims dwelt there with the Ijims; and we find the same terms in Isaiah xxxiv. 14. where, according to the Vulgate, we read, Devils and onocentaurs shall meet there. In the Hebrew, b The Ziims shall meet with the Ijims. Upon comparing all the passages where we find these terms, it appears to us, that Ziim signifies fishermen, mariners, seafaring men; and Ijim Isles; and that this place in Jeremiah may be translated thus, The fishermen shall inhabit the Isles. And that in Isaiah thus, The fishermen, or they who shall sail into this country, will meet with Islands. That is to say, Babylon shall be destroyed in such a manner, that the waters shall cover its very ruins, and the fishermen and mariners, who shall pass by, shall see there nothing but some Islands, formed by the heaps of its ruins.

Fear

FEAR, is sometimes used for the Object of Fear. Thus it is said, the fear of Isaac, to describe the God whom Isaac feared. Except the God of my father, the God of Abraham, and the Fear of Isaac had been with me, surely thou hadst sent me away now empty. —— God says, that he will send his [Exod. xxiii. 27. Deut. ii. 25.] Fear before his people, in order to terrify and destroy the inhabitants of Canaan; that the terror of them shall put their enemies to flight. Job speaks of the terrors of God, [Job vi. 4. Psalm lxxxviii. 15.] that they set themselves in array against him; and the Psalmist, that he had suffered the terrors of the Lord with a troubled mind.

Feasts

FEASTS. God out of his great wisdom appointed several Festivals among the Jews for many reasons. 1. To perpetuate the memory of those great events and wonders which he had wrought in favour of his people; for example, the Sabbath brought to remembrance the creation of the world; the Passover, the departure out of Egypt; the Pentecost, the Law given at Sinai, &c. 2. To keep them firm to their Religion, with the view of ceremonies, and the majesty of Divine Service. 3. To procure them certain pleasures, and allowable times of rest: for their Festivals were accompanied with Rejoicings, with Feasts of charity, and with innocent Diversions. 4. To give them instruction; for in their Religious Assemblies the Law of God was read and explained. 5. To renew the acquaintance, correspondence, and friendship of their Tribes and Families with one another, by coming from the several towns in the counry, and meeting three times a year in the Holy City.

The Hebrews had a great number of Feasts. The first, and most ancient of all, was the Sabbath, or the seventh day of the week, instituted to preserve the memory of the World's Creation; The Lord blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it, says Moses, because that in it he had rested from all his work. Some of the ancient Fathers, and some Rabbins[1] were of opinion, that the Sabbath had been observed among the righteous, from the beginning of the World. But the most universal opinion is, that people did not begin to cease from work upon that day, till after the command which God gave the Israelites to that purpose, some time after their coming out of Egypt, when they were incamped at Marah.

The Sabbatical year which returned every seven years, and was intirely set apart for rest, and the Jubilee year, which was at the end of seven times seven years, or the forty ninth year; were sorts of Feasts too, and may be considered as consequences of the Sabbath.

The Passover was instituted in memory of the Israelites departure out of Egypt, and of the favour which God shewed his people in sparing their first-born, when he passed in Egypt, and killed all the first-born of the Egyptians. It was celebrated on the fourteenth, or rather fifteenth day of the first month in the Ecclesiastical year, which was the seventh of the civil year. The Feast began after-noon on the fourteenth, and was celebrated properly on the fifteenth of Nisan; it lasted seven days. But the first and last days only of the Octave were days of rest. See the Article PASSOVER.

The Feast of Pentecost was celebrated on the fiftieth day after the Passover, in memory of the Law's being given to Moses on Mount Sinai, fifty days after the departure out of Egypt. They reckoned seven weeks from the Passover to Pentecost, beginning at the day after the Passover. The Hebrews for this reason call it the Feast of Weeks, and the Christians Pentecost, which signifies the fiftieth day.

The Feast of Trumpets was celebrated at the beginning, or on the first day of the civil year, upon which a Trumpet was sounded, proclaiming the beginning of the year, which was in the month Tizri, answering to our September. It was rather a civil Feast than a sacred Solemnity. We know no religious cause of its establishment. Moses commands it to be observed as a day of rest, and that particular sacrifices [Levit. xxiii.] should be offered upon it.

The New Moons, or first days of every month, were in some sort a consequence of the Feast of Trumpets. The Law did not oblige people to rest upon this day, but ordained only some particular sacrifices [Numb. xxviii. 11. Numb.x. 10. 1 Sam. xx. 5, 18.] to be offered. It appears, that upon these days also, the Trumpet was sounded, and some sort of entertainments were made upon them. See CALENDS or NEW-MOONS.

Feast

FEAST of Expiation, or Chippur or Pardon, was celebrated on the tenth day of Tizri, which was the first day of the civil [Levit.xxii. 27, 28. Numb. xxix. 7.] year. It was instituted for the Expiation of all the sins, irreverences, and pollutions of all the Israelites, from the High-Priest to the lowest of the people, committed by them throughout the whole year. Upon this day they fasted strictly, and offered several Sacrifices. See above, EXPIATION.

The FEAST of Tents, or Tabernacles, upon which all the Israelites were obliged to be at the Temple, and to dwell for eight days under Tents made of leaves, in memory of their fathers dwelling forty years in Tents, as travellers, in the wilderness. It was kept on the fifteenth of the month Tizri, which was the first of the civil year. The first and seventh day of this Feast were very solemn. But during the other days of the Octave, [See Levit. xxiii. 34, 35, & Numb. xxix. 12, 13.] they might work. At the beginning of the Feast, two vessels of silver were carried in a ceremonious manner to the Temple, one full of water, the other of wine, which were poured out at the foot of the Altar of burnt-offering upon the seventh [Mischna, tit. Suca, & Bartenora in cap. 4. Mischnæ.] day always of this Festival.

The Octave of the three great Feasts of the year, which are the Passover, Pentecost, and the Tabernacles, that is to say, the seventh day after these Feasts, was a day of rest as much as the Festival itself; and all the Males were obliged to be at the Temple [Exod. xxiii. 14. Deut. xvi. 16. Deut. xvi. 7.] upon these three Feasts. But the Law did not require them to continue there during the whole Octave. They were at liberty to return the day after the solemnity, excepting in the Feast of Tabernacles, for then they seem obliged to be present at it for the whole seven days.

Besides these Feasts mentioned by Moses, we find the Feast of Lots, or Purim[1], instituted upon the occasion of the Jews deliverance, when Haman, in the reign of Ahasuerus [Esth. ix. 29, 30.] , had contrived their destruction. See ESTHER, MORDECAI, AHASUERUS.

The Death of Holofernes, taken notice of in Judith. See JUDITH.

The FEAST of the Dedication of the Temple, or rather of the Restoration of the Temple, which had been profaned by Antiochus [1 Macc. iv. 52,54, 55, &c. John x. 22. Joseph. Antiq. l. xii. c.11.] Epiphanes, was celebrated in the winter; and this is believed to be the Feast named Encœnia in the Gospel. See above,

DEDICATION. Josephus says, it was called the Feast of Lights. Our account of it in the book of Maccabees is as follows: Judas and his brethren having defeated the army of Gorgias, went directly to the Temple of Jerusalem, which they found forsaken and profaned, so that the Courts were full of thick bushes and brambles, the doors were burnt, the Altar profaned, and the buildings in ruins. After having shed abundance of tears on this occasion, they began to clean every thing, and employed the Priests in demolishing the Altar which had been polluted. The stones belonging to it they laid up in a proper place, waiting till a Prophet should come, who might inform them what to do with them. They erected another of rough Stone, refitted the Holy and the Sanctuary, and placed therein the Candlestick, the Table of Shew-bread, and the Altar of Perfumes. They kindled the Lamps, put the Loaves upon the sacred Table, set the Incense on fire, offered Sacrifices and Burnt-offerings, and performed the Dedication of the Temple in eight days time, with all the solemnity that circumstances would allow of. Josephus adds, that this Festival was called the Feast of Lights, probably because this happiness befell them when they least expected it, and they looked upon it as a new Light that had risen upon them.

Leo of Modena is more particular in relating the manner of celebrating this Feast. He says, the ancient Sages appointed the celebration of it in memory of the victory obtained by Judas Maccabæus over the Greeks. " The first day they light up one lamp, two upon the second, and so continuing to the last, till eight are lighted. " This is founded on the ensuing Story, " namely, while the enemies were masters " of the City and Temple, and were profaning the latter, Joshanan and his sons " drove them thence, and defeated them; " and, as at his return there was no pure " oil to be found, in order to light up the " lamps in the Candlestick with seven branches, they met with some in a little " carved vessel, enough to burn one night, " but miraculously this oil lasted eight " nights; which obliged them, in memory " of this event, to light as many lamps " as we have mentioned. " In this Festival is likewise celebrated " Judith's enterprize against Holofernes; " though, as some say, it was not executed " in the same season. " During these eight days, people may " work, and carry on their trades; for all " that is extraordinary consists in the order " of lighting these lamps, and in adding " to the usual prayers a thanksgiving for " this victory, and every morning the " cxiiith and following Psalms, together " with the xxxth. There was likewise some " small difference as to eating. This Feast " is called Hanucha, that is to say, Exercise, " or " or renewing, because they then began " to restore those exercises which at that " time were interrupted."

On the twenty-first of September, the Jews keep a Feast, as they call it, of Branches, in memory of the taking of Jericho.

In the same month they have the Feast of the Collections, because upon that day they make a collection for the expence of the Sacrifices.

They have likewise a Festival for the death of Nicanor. 1 Macc. vii. 48, 49. 2 Macc. xv. 37.

The Feast for the discovery of the sacred fire in the time of Nehemiah. 2 Macc. i. 18, & seq.

[Rev. i. 10.] The Feast called Xylophoria, upon which wood in great quantity was carried to the Temple. Joseph. de Bello, l. 2. c. 17.

In the Christian Church we have no Festival that appears clearly to have been instituted by Jesus Christ or his Apostles. Nevertheless our Saviour having commanded us to eat his body and drink his blood, and to commemorate his Passion as often as we celebrate his mysteries, has hereby seemed to institute a Feast, and a perpetual memory of his Passion. Christians have always celebrated the memory of his Resurrection, and keep this Feast not once only in the year, but on every Sunday; and we see in the Revelations, that then, so early, this day was called commonly the Lord's day. I was in spirit on the Lord's [Barnab. Epist. p. 56.] day. St. Barnabas says, We celebrate the eighth day with joy, because it is the day upon which Jesus Christ rose from the dead. We see the same thing in St. Ignatius the Martyr[2], in St. Justin[3], Irenæus[4], Tertullian[5], and Origen[6].

Translators' note. Festus

FESTUS. Portius Festus succeeded Felix in the government of Judæa, in the year [Vide Antiq. l. 20. c. 7.] of Jesus Christ 60. As Felix his predecessor was inclined to do an obliging thing to the Jews, when he resigned his government, he left St. Paul in bonds at Cæsarea in [Acts xxiv. 27.] Palestine. Festus, at his first coming to Jerusalem, was intreated by some of the principal Jews to condemn Paul, or at least to give orders for conveying him to [Acts xxv. 1, 2, 3, &c.] Jerusalem, they having conspired to assassinate him in the way. Festus rejected their petition, saying, it was not customary with the Romans to condemn any man without hearing him; but he told them they might come to Cæsarea, and he would hear their accusations against Paul. Accordingly, some days after they came thither, but Paul appealed to Cæsar, and so stop'd the prosecution of the Jews, and secured himself from the wicked intentions of Festus, whom they had corrupted with a sum of money.

[Joseph. de Bello, l. 2. c. 24. & Antiq. l. 20. c. 7.] Festus finding how much robbing there was every where in Judæa, was very diligent in pursuing the thieves who laid waste the whole Province. He likewise suppressed a magician, who drew the people after him into the desart; lastly, he died in Judæa about the beginning of the year of Jesus Christ 62, and Nero named Albinus [Antiq. l. 20. c. 8. Gen. iii. 7.] to succeed him.

Fig

FIG, Fig-tree. This tree and its fruit are very well known: they were very common in Palestine; and there is mention often made of them in Scripture. Our first parents covered their nakedness with Fig-leaves, gathered either from common Fig-trees, or from some of another kind, the leaves whereof were much larger.

[Amos vii. 14.] The prophet Amos being reproved by Amaziah the Priest of Bethel, for prophesying things to the disadvantage of the kingdom of Israel, made this reply to him, I am no prophet, neither a prophet's son: but I am an herd-man, and a gatherer of wild Figs, or sycamore fruit. Pliny, Theophrastus, and Dioscorides speak of these wild Figs, and the manner of pricking them. Scalpendo tantùm ferreis unguibus, [Plin. l. 15. c. 7.] aliter non maturescit, says Pliny, but it ripens four days after it is pricked: Sed cum factum est, quarto die demetitur.

You have here M. Tournefort's description of caprification, or the pricking of Figs, as it is practised in the Islands of Zia, Tina, Mycone, Scio, and generally in the other Islands of the Archipelago: " It is previously to be observed, that in most of " these Islands there are two sorts of Fig-trees cultivated; the first is called Ornos, derived from the Greek, Erinos, " wild Fig-tree, or the Caprisicus of the " Latins. The second species is the common Fig-tree that grows with us. The " wild bears three sorts of fruits, Fornites, " Cratitires, and Orni, absolutely necessary " to make the Figs of the other Fig-trees " ripen.

" Those which are called Fornites, appear in the month of August, and last " till November without dying. In these " there are little worms ingendred, from " which certain gnats proceed, that are observed to flutter only about these trees. " In October and November, these gnats " of themselves prick or sting the fruits of " the second growth of the same sets of the Fig-tree, which fruits, called Cratitires, do not shew themselves till the end of September; and the Fornites fall gradually after the gnats have issued from them. The Cratitires, on the contrary, remain upon the tree till May, and include eggs which the gnats of the Fornites laid in them as they pricked them.

"In the month of May, the third kind of fruit begins to come forward upon the same stock of the wild Fig-tree which produced the two others. This is much larger, and is called Orni; when it is come to a certain bigness, and the eye of it begins to open, it is pricked in this part by the gnats of the Cratitires, which are in a condition to pass from one fruit to the other, in order to lay their eggs there.

"It sometimes happens, that in particular situations, the gnats of the Cratitires are slower in coming out, while the Orni of the same places are disposed to receive them: and then they are forced to go look for the Cratitires in another quarter, and to fix them to the ends of the branches belonging to such Fig-trees, as have their Orni well prepared, that so the gnats may prick them; if this opportunity is slipt, the Orni fall, and the gnats of the Cratitires fly away.

"The peasants, whose business it is to cultivate Fig-trees, are the only persons, who know the moments, as we may say, wherein it is necessary to make this provision; and to this end they carefully observe the eye of the Fig: for this part not only directs them to the time when the prickers should come forth, but to that likewise wherein the Fig is to be pricked with any success. If the eye is too hard and too close, the gnat cannot lay its eggs in it; and if it be too open, the Fig falls.

“Neither of these three sorts of fruits are good to eat; they are designed only to ripen the fruit of the Fig-trees which are not wild. The use they put them to, is such as follows: In the months of June and July, the peasants take the Orni at a time when their gnats are ready to come out, and carry them as it were in a string to their Gardenfigs. If this favourable opportunity is lost, the Orni fall, and the fruit of the garden Fig-tree not ripening, in a little time falls likewise. The country-men know these precious moments so well, that every morning, when they are making their review, they carry only the Orni that are in good condition to the Fig-trees which are not wild, otherwise they would lose their harvest. They understand so perfectly how to manage the Orni, that the gnats which proceed out of them shall “ripen the fruit of the garden Fig-tree in forty days.

“I could not but admire the patience of the Greeks, who were employ'd for more than two months in carrying the gnats which are thus used for pricking, from one Fig-tree to another; the reason I learned very soon. One of their trees generally produces two hundred and fourscour poundweight of Figs; whereas ours do not yield above five and twenty pounds. The prickers contribute perhaps to the ripening of the fruit upon the common Fig-tree, by causing the nourishing juice to extravasate, the tubes whereof are torn while they are laying their eggs. It may be likewise, that besides their eggs, there may some liquor come from them, proper to raise a gentle fermentation in the milk of the “Fig, and to soften the flesh of it.”

I will not venture to affirm, that this way of pricking Figs, or ordering the pricking of them, was in use in Palestine, when the prophet Amos was living, nor that it was the business of his profession to take care of the flocks, and to ripen garden Figs with the help of wild Figs; but the Reader by this description of M. Tournefort's, will see a very extraordinary manner of hastening the maturity of these fruits, which certainly has a good deal of relation to what Amos did.

[Matth. xxi. 19.] It is said in the Gospel, that Jesus Christ coming from Bethany early in the morning, and finding himself to be very hungry, drew near to a Fig-tree with a design of gathering some Figs; and seeing nothing but leaves upon it, for this was not the season for Figs, he cursed it; and immediately it withered to the root. That which occasions some perplexity in this passage, is St. [Mark xi. 13. Mark xi. 13.] Mark's declaring expressly, that this was not a time for Figs. The earliest Figs are in the months of July and August, and the latest in September and October. Now that which is related in the Gospel happened four or five days before the Passover, and consequently before the fifteenth day from the moon in March. This season therefore was not a time to expect Figs for eating on a Fig-tree: and the very supposition of it carries a sort of incongruity with it. 1. To look for fruit upon a tree at a time when it was very well known that it could not bear any; and, 2. to curse this tree because there was no fruit on it, as if it was a fault in it. The Interpreters have racked their brains to salve these inconveniences, and avoid acknowledging, that our Saviour was capable of performing any action which carries with it some idea of indecency. Some have [Οὐ γὰρ ἦν καιρὸς συκῶν. Hammond. Le Clerc. Simon's Notes on the New T.stament.] translated it, For this was not a year for Figs, they had failed this year. But allowing the Greek text would admit of this sense, sense, which certainly it will not, even by their confession, who propose this translation, to what purpose would this reflexion be at such a season? Jesus Christ goes to look for Figs upon a tree in the midst of March, four months before the earliest Figs are ripe, and six after the latest; he finds none, and curses the Fig-tree; but why? because the Fig-trees had failed this year. Does this reflexion rectify the incongruity which appears in this action of our Saviour's?

[Heinsius. l. 2. c. 6. Exercit. Sacr.] Others, as Heinsius, Gataker, and the Gothick Version translate, For there where he was, it was the season for Figs. To support [Gataker in Marc. xi.] this Version, both the pointing and the common accents of the text must be changed, and the Evangelist made to speak in too concise a manner, too different from the general Style of St. Mark. Besides, it is not true that in Palestine the tenth or twelfth day of the moon in March was the season for Figs. It is certain, that they do not ripen so soon in this country.

The generality both of the ancient and modern Interpreters have looked upon this action of our Saviour's, as a figure of the reprobation of the Jews: the Fig-tree we are speaking of, had only leaves on it; herein it resembled the Jews, who had only the appearances of Piety and Religion. The Fig-tree was no way culpable for not bearing fruit at a time it naturally produced none; but the Jews were criminal for not bringing forth the fruits of Good-works when our Saviour appeared among them. He cursed the innocent Fig-tree, to shew the malediction which was ready to fall upon the incredulous and impenitent Jews. These reasons are plausible enough; but there is still an objection behind. For how will they prove that the Synagogue is reprobated with justice, if the Fig-tree is cursed unjustly?

We must therefore endeavour to find, if it be possible, some solution of these difficulties. We own that it was not then a season for Figs; the Text of St. Mark expressly says it, and the sequel of the Story sufficiently proves it, since this happened before the middle of March: but we are of opinion, that there might be some of the forward kind; and our Saviour might presume so, seeing the tree full of leaves. It is certain that there are forward Figs: [Isai. xxviii. 4.]

Isaiah compares the beauty of Samaria to those early Figs, which people gathered and eat as soon as they found them; As the hasty fruit before the summer, which when he that looketh upon it, seeth it, while it is yet in his hand, he eateth it up. And [Hosea ix. 10.] Hosea says, that the Lord found Israel in the wilderness as the first ripe in the Fig-tree [Jer. xxiv. 2.] at the first time. And Jeremiah describes them as excellent Figs, One basket had very good Figs, even like the Figs [Theophrast. Hist. Plant. l. 4. c. 2. Plin. l. 13. c. 8. & l. 15. c. 18.] that are first ripe. Theophrastus and Pliny acknowledge, that there is a sort of Fig-tree always green, and always with fruit upon it, some ripe or very far advanced, according to the season, the other in blossom or buds. In Palestine, where the winter is very mild, there might easily be forward Figs in March; wherefore our Saviour did nothing contrary to the rules of wisdom and decency, by going to look for Figs at this season upon a Fig-tree which had leaves on; and his cursing the barren Fig-tree upon this occasion, is an exact figure of the reprobation of the Jews.

To live in peace under our own Vines and our own Fig-trees, represents in the Scripture-style, a time of happiness and prosperity. [1 Kings iv. 25.] And Judah and Israel dwelt safely every man under his Vine and under his Fig -tree. See also Micah iv. 4. and Zech. iii. 10. and 1 Macc. xiv. 12. Isaiah applied a lump of dry Figs upon an [2 Kings xx. 7.] ulcer, or imposthume; or, lastly, on Hezekiah's throat; for it is not known what disease he had upon him: and immediately after he was cured. Physicians agree, that Figs are useful in all these sorts of ailments. They are employed with good success in bringing imposthumes to a ripeness, in healing ulcers, squincies, and sore throats. To FIND, to meet with, is used sometimes for to attack, to surprize one's enemies, to discover their ambushes, &c. and it is in this sense that some Criticks explain the following [Genes. xxxvi. 24. מצא את הימם] passage of Genesis, Iste est Ana qui invenit aquas calidas in solitudine. In the Hebrew, He found the Emims. These Emims are believed to be powerful people, Emim populus magnus & validus, & tam excelsus, ut de Enacim stirpe, quasi gigantes crederentur, [Deut. ii. 10, 11.] says Moses in Deuteronomy. Anah therefore found a troop of these people; he surprized, attacked, and defeated them. The verb to Find is understood in the same sense Judg. i. 5. They found Adonibezek in Bezek. They attacked him there. And 1 Sam. xxxi. 3. according to the Hebrew, the Archers belonging to the Philistins, found Saul, attacked him; and 1 Kings xiii. 24. A lion found him in the way, and slew him, attacked and killed him.

[Job vi. 30. Psal. x. 39.] To Find, to discover, to punish, as a Father who discovers the faults of his children, or a Judge who discovers the offences of a criminal. Ye shall find no iniquity in my tongue. And the Psalmist, Quæretur peccatum illius & non invenietur. The iniquity of the sinner shall be punished, and he himself shall not be found; he shall be extirpated, he shall perish: or else, if we read it with an interrogation, There shall be search made after his iniquities, and shall they not be found? as he flatters himself, saying, Dixit enim in [Psal. xxi. 8.] corde suo non requiret? And again, Thine hand shall [Psal. cxvi. 3.] find out all thine enemies, shall punish them. And the pains of Hell found me; the dread of Hell, or of the grave, I saw my self exposed to it. Evils have found us. This is a very significant way of speaking, to describe any sudden and unexpected calamity, Adjutor in tribulationibus quæ invenerunt [Psal. xlv. 1. Psal. xxxi. 29.] nos nimis. And Job, If I rejoiced at the destruction of him that hated me, or lift up my self when evil found him. It is said of a man smitten by God, that he is no more found; & non inventus est locus ejus, that he has [Psalm xxxvi. 36.] disappeared.

To find favour in the sight of any one, is another very expressive form of speech which is very common in the Scripture.

Finger

FINGER. The Finger of God signifies his power, his operation. Pharaoh's Magicians [Exod. viii. 19.] discovered the Finger of God in the miracles which Moses wrought. This Legislator gave the Law written with the Finger [Exod. xxxi. 18. Psal. viii. 4. Luke xi. 20.] of God, to the Hebrews. The Heavens were the work of God's Fingers. Jesus Christ says, he casts out Devils with the Finger of God; whereby he intimates that the Kingdom of Heaven is come.

To put forth one's FINGER, is a bantering gesture. Si abstuleris de medio tui catenam, & desieris extendere digitum. If thou take away from the midst of thee, the chain or yoke wherewith thou overwhelmest thy creditors, and forbear pointing at them, and using jeering and insulting gestures. Some take this for a menacing gesture, as Nicanor stretched out his hand against the Temple, threatning to burn it.

Fire

FIRE. God hath often appeared in Fire, and incompassed with Fire; as when he shewed himself in the burning bush, and descended on mount Sinai in the midst of flames, thunderings and lightning. Fire is a symbol of the Deity. The Lord thy God, [Deut. iv. 24.] says Moses, is a consuming Fire. He shewed himself to his Prophets Isaiah, Ezekiel, and St. John, in the midst of Fire. The Psalmist describes the chariot of God to us, all in a flame, xviii. 9, 10. God threatens us to appear in the midst of Fire at his second [Dan. vii. 10.] coming. Daniel says, that a fiery stream issued, and came forth from before him. The wrath of God is compared to Fire, and the effects of his wrath, which are war, famine, and other scourges, are described under the same Idea. Fire is often put for Thunder, Lightning, the Fire of Heaven.

The Angels themselves as the Ministers of God, are compared to a burning Fire. [Psal. civ. 4.] The Lord, or his Angel, representing his Majesty, led the Israelites in their journey through the wilderness, under the form [2 Macc. i. 19. and ii. 10. Exod. xii. 21. Gen. iv. 4. Gen. xv. 17.] of a pillar of Fire, which gave them light in the night-time. Fire from Heaven fell frequently on the victims sacrificed to the Lord, as a mark of his presence and approbation. It is thought, that God in this manner expressed his acceptance of Abel's sacrifices. When Abraham made a Covenant with the Lord, a Fire like that of a furnace passed through the divided pieces of the sacrifices, and consumed them. Fire fell upon the sacrifices, which Moses offered at [Levit. ix. 24. Judg. xiii. 19, 20. 2 Chr. vii. 1. 1 Kings xviii. 38. Levit. vi. 12. 2 Macc. i. 19, 20, and ii. 1, 2, 3.] the dedication of the Tabernacle, and on those of Manoah, Sampson's father; upon Solomon's, at the dedication of the Temple; on Elijah's, at mount Carmel; and lastly, on Nehemiah's, at the return from the captivity.

There was a perpetual Fire kept up in the Temple upon the Altar of burnt sacrifices, which the Priests had the care of preserving, by burning wood continually upon it[1]. When Nebuchadnezzar made himself master of Jerusalem, the prophet Jeremiah took this sacred and perpetual Fire, and being attended by some other Priests, concealed it in a cistern, wherein there was no water. When the Jews returned from the captivity, Nehemiah having sent the grand -sons of those Priests, who had hid this Fire, with orders to search for it; instead of the Fire they brought him muddy water, which he pouring on the Altar, immediately a very clear Fire arose, which consumed the sacrifices that were upon it.

Besides this Fire, which was always burning upon the great Altar of burnt-offerings, [Ezek. xlvi. 23, 24.] there were several kitchins in the Temple, wherein the provision appointed for the subsistance of the Priests, was dressed; and the peace-offerings, which were offered by the People, and eat by them in the Temple-court before the Lord.

[Joseph. de Bello, l. 2. c. 11. seu p. 811. seu 17. in Lat. Nehem. ix. 7. Dan. iii. 11, 12, 13 &c.] A great quantity of wood was brought into the Temple, to supply a sufficient stock of fewel for all these fires; and for this purpose was instituted a kind of Feast, called Xylophoria, in Josephus.

The ancient Chaldæans adored Fire, as well as the old Persians, and some other people of the East. Several have been of opinion, that Abraham was thrown into the Fire, because he refused to worship this element. This St. Jerom intimates, where he says, that God delivered this Patriarch out of the Fire of the Chaldæans, instead of saying, that he brought him out of the city of Hur in Chaldæa. Nebuchadnezzar commanded Daniel's three companions to be cast into the fiery furnace, because they refused to pay adoration to a statue, which he had erected: but God secured them from the effect of the Fire, and the flame did not hurt them.

Translators' note. This custom of preserving a perpetual Fire in the Temples of their Gods, was common among the ancient Heathen. We read of such a Fire kept up with superstitious care in the Temple of Jupiter Ammon, and in that of Hercules at Gadis, in Egypt, and in almost all the Eastern Countries. And Virgil tells us, that Jarbas the Getulian, Centum aras posuit, vig- ilemque sacraverat ignem, Excubias Divûm æternas. Virg. Æn. 4.

Hell-Fire

[Isai. xxxiii. 14.] HELL-FIRE is described after a sufficiently clear manner in the Old Testament. Moses inveighing against the Israelites, who rebelled against the Lord, says to them, A Fire is kindled in my anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains. Here Hell-fire and the place of torment for the wicked, is seated in the deepest part of the earth. Isaiah is still more express, Who among us shall dwell with the devouring Fire? Who amongst us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? And elsewhere, They shall go forth and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me, for their worm shall not die, neither shall their Fire be [Ecclus. vii. 17.] quenched. And Ecclesiasticus, The vengeance of the ungodly is Fire and Worms. See also Job xx. 26. A Fire not blown shall consume them. And xxiv. 19. Ad nimium calorem transeat ab aquis nivium.

[Matth. ix. 24.] Our Saviour in the Gospel makes use of the same similitude, to represent the punishment of the damned. He likewise speaks frequently of the eternal Fire prepared for the Devil, his Angels, and Reprobates. And [Jude ver. 7.] St. Jude says, Even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, in like manner giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal Fire. It is needless to produce a heap of other passages out of the New Testament, since every one agrees, that the Eternal Fire whereby the wicked are to be consumed, is there very clearly set forth. St. John in the Revelations, ch. xx. vs. 14, 15. saw a lake of Fire, into which the Beast and his false Prophet had been cast, and was the portion of infidels, murderers, and abominable persons. Lastly, Fire is the common symbol of God's Vengeance on the wicked.

But whether this is to be understood of an elementary and material, or a metaphorical fire, of a common living and sensible, or of an allegorical and figurative worm; in a word, whether the Fire of Hell consists only in a quick, and sharp anguish, and the worm in the remorse and despair of the damned, is what the Doctors and Fathers are divided about. Origen[1] has taught in several places, that the flames of hell, as well as the worm of the damned, were not real. We learn the same thing from St. Ambrose,[2] Nec corporalium aliquis stridor dentium, nec ignis aliquis perpetuus flammarum corporalium, neque vermis est corporalis. This Fire, adds he, is nothing else but sorrow for passed sins; the worm nothing but remorse of conscience. St. Jerom[3] acknowledges it to be the opinion of several, that the Fire wherewith the damned are burnt, is only the sting and troubles of their conscience. Ignis qui non extinguitur, a plerisque conscientiâ accipitur delictorum. St. Gregory of Nice is clearly of this opinion[4]; and St. John Damascenus[5] says expressly, that it is not a material Fire; that it is very different from our common Fire; and that men scarce know what it is. This sentiment is still at this day very common among the Greeks; and at the Council of Florence they maintained, that the Fire of Purgatory was not a true and real Fire.

But in the Latin Church, the most common opinion, and which has most followers, is, that the damned are tormented with a real fire, which does most truly burn them, and that they are gnawed by a material and sensible worm, which does not die. St. Austin[6] is not content barely with proposing his thoughts on this subject; he prevents the objection which naturally arises in the mind about it. For how can an elementary Fire, or a living and material worm operate upon the soul, which is a spiritual substance? To this St. Austin replies, Why should not this be credible of the soul, when separated from the body, since the mind of man, which certainly is not corporeal, does actually experience the pain of Fire? for after all, it is not the body which suffers heat, or cold, or pain; it is the soul, which is united with the body. And why should not Devils, and the souls of the damned, be inseparably linked to the Fire, which burns them, and the worm which gnaws them, as well as our soul to our body? with this difference however, that our soul gives life to our body, whereas the flames we are speaking of, cause only torment to Devils and the Damned. Adhærebunt ergo spiritus dæmonum, imo spiritus dæmonis, licet incorporei, corporeis ignibus cruciandi; non ut ignes isti quibus adhærebunt, eorum jacturâ inspirentur, & animalia fiant; sed, ut dixi, miris & ineffabilibus modis adhærendo, accipientes ex ignibus pœnam, non dantes ignibus vitam.

St. Cyprian[7] represents Hell to us as a smoaking gulph, including an active and devouring Fire. St. Chrysostom[8] describes to us rivers of flames, and waves of Fire which beset the Damned there without consuming them. St. Jerom[9] acknowledges, that there are two very real torments there, excessive Cold, and a burning Fire; and the Author printed under his name upon the book of Job[10], says, that Hell-fire is no common one, that requires fewel to keep it up, but is preserved, and continues of it self; Ignis gehennæ non materiis quibusdam & pabulis vivit ut ardeat, sed per seipsum. ut creatus est vigens, &c St. Gregory[11] the Great says the same thing in a very particular manner: Gehennæ ignis cum sit corporeus, & in se missos reprobos corporaliter exuret, nec studio humano succenditur, nec lignis nutritur, sed creatus semel durat inextinguibilis, &c. In his fourth book of[12] Dialogues he inculcates the same doctrine, and argues almost like St. Austin, concerning the manner wherein corporeal Fire acts upon the soul disingaged from matter. The schoolmen for the most part have adopted this last opinion, which is almost universal in the Latin Church.

The Son of God says, that he had brought down Fire upon earth, and desired [Luke xii. 49.] nothing more than to have it kindled. He came to baptize with the Holy Ghost and [Matth. iii. 2.] with Fire. To verify this prediction, he sent the Holy Ghost, which descended upon his Disciples in the form of tongues, or like sparks of Fire. Acts ii. 3.

Fire must one day consume the world, according [2 Pet. iii. 12. 2 Pet.iii.7.] to St. Peter: Cœli ardentes solventur, & elementa ignis ardore tabescent. And again, The Heavens and the Earth which are now, are reserved unto Fire against the day of judgment. And elsewhere: The day of [1 Cor. iii. 7.] the Lord shall declare every man's work, because it shall be revealed by Fire, and the Fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. The Psalmist describing the coming of the Lord to judgment, says, Fire goeth before [Ps.xcvii. 3,4,5.] him, and burneth up his enemies round about. His lightnings enlightned the world, the earth saw, and trembled; the hills melted like wax at the presence of the Lord, &c.

The Heathens had some knowledge of this truth, whether they learnt it by conversation with the Hebrews, or by reading the Sacred writings; whether this were one of the truths preserved among all nations by tradition; or whether lastly, reasoning, and the knowledge they had of the Elements and the state of the earth, enabled them to comprehend that the world would one day be consumed by Fire. Josephus remarks it [Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 3.] as an ancient tradition, that before the deluge the sons of Seth having learned from Adam, that the World would be destroyed first by water, and afterwards by Fire, resolved upon preserving to posterity the discoveries they had made in Astronomy; to this end they engraved them upon two pillars, one of Stone to resist the water, and the other of brick to resist Fire; that they placed these two columns in the Syriad[13], and that the pillar of stone was still to be seen in his time.

[Apud Simplic. Comment. in Ariftot. de lib. de Cœlo, l. 1. c. 9.] I do not here examine the truth of this tradition, but it is very certain, that long before Josephus, the Greek Philosophers believed the world would be destroyed by Fire. Heraclitus held this opinion, and said that after it had passed through the flames, it would receive a new birth amidst the [Tull. Cic. l. 2. de nat. Deorum.] Fire. The Stoicks afterwards maintained the same opinion; and Cicero has taken particular notice of it in his books concerning the nature of the Gods. Ex quo eventurum ut ad extremum omnis mundus ignesceret, cum humore consumpto neque terra ali posset, neque remearet aër — ita relinqui nihil præter ignem: a quo rursum, ac de eo, renovatio mundi fieret. That after this conflagration, the world, which they held to be a God, and a living Animal, would be enewed.

Ovid speaks likewise of this old tradition, which asserted, that the world would be one [Ovid. Metamorph. I.] day consumed in flames.

Esse quoque in fatis reminiscitur affore tempus, Quo mare, quo tellus, correptaque regia cœli Ardeat, & mundi moles operosa laboret.

Lucan expresses himself in the same [Lucan. Pharsal. l. 7.] manner. He tells Cæsar, that it is to no purpose to afflict himself for not having burned the bodies of the soldiers killed in the battle of Pharsalia, that the time would come when they should be consumed by Fire, together with the rest of the world.

Fire

FIRE, eternal, worshipped by the Persians. See hereafter ZOROASTRES and SABIAN. The Magians gave out, that this Fire was conveyed to them from heaven, and that it was for this reason they kept it in so religiously. The Kings of Persia never went abroad without having some portion of the Sacred Fire carried before them. It [Q. Curt.] may be seen in Quintus Curtius with what ceremonies this was performed. [Ammian. Marcell. l. 25.] Ignem cœlitus lapsum apud se sempiternis ferculis custodiri, says Ammianus Marcellinus; cujus portionem exiguam ut faustam, præisse quondam Asiaticis Regibus dicunt.

This seems all to be an invention borrowed from the Hebrews, who kept up a perpetual fire upon the Altar of burnt-offerings, offerings, which descended from Heaven upon the first victims that were sacrificed by Aaron and his son, upon the Altar of the [Levit. ix. 24.] Tabernacles. It is not certain that the Law enjoining a constant Fire to be preserved upon the Altar, was put in execution in the wilderness, where the people were obliged to incamp frequently, and to be marching a long time. Maimonides believes three fires were kept upon the Altar of burnt-offerings; one in which the burnt-offering was consumed every day, and the victims which were sacrificed; the second supplied coals for burning incense upon the golden Altar in the Holy. The third was always burning in compliance with the Law, which requires that there should be Fire constantly kindled upon the Altar of the Lord. Some of the Rabbins inform us, that there was no necessity for putting wood upon the Fire of the Altar, that if any were laid on, it was rather to conceal the miracle, than that there was any occasion for it.

Firmament

[Genel. i. 6.] FIRMAMENT. The Scripture says, that God made the Firmament in the midst [רקיעLXX. & alii Græci Στερέωμα. Firmamentum.] of the waters, in order to separate the inferior from the superior waters. It makes use of the word rakiah, which is translated expansum, something expanded, or firmamentum, something firm and solid. The verb rakah from [Exod. xxxix. 3. Numb. xvi. 38,39] whence rakiah is derived, signifies to spread metal with the hammer, to make flat, to crush to pieces, to beat. Moses uses this word to describe the gold which was beaten in order to cover the Ark and the Tables of the Holy with it; Ezekiel, and the Author of [Ezek. vi. 11. xxv. 6. 2 Sam. xxii. 43.] the second book of Samuel, to signify beat, overwhelm, and trample enemies under foot; Isaiah, to denote the plates of gold wherewith the Idols were covered; the same Isaiah [Isai. xl. 19.] and the Psalmist, to express the spreading forth of the earth, and its floating on the waters, for this was the conception which the [Isai. xlii. 5. and xliv. 24. Ps. cxxxvi. 6. Jerem. x. 9.] Hebrews had of it: Lastly, Jeremiah, to signify the plates of Gold, or the beaten Gold brought from Tarshish.

All this intimates, that by the word Firmament, rakiah, the Hebrews understood the Heavens, which, like a solid and immense [Genes. i. 17.] Arch, served as a bank and barrier between the upper and lower waters, and that the Stars are set in this Arch like so many precious stones in Gold or Silver. But we are not to infer from this Idea of the ancient Hebrews, that it really was so. In matters of this kind, the knowledge whereof is very indifferent, the Sacred Writers generally suit their expressions to the popular prejudices of mankind.

First

FIRST, Primus. This word does not always signify a priority of rank or order, but is used sometimes for Before that. For example, Hæc descriptio prima facta est a Præside Syriæ Cyrino. Literally, This was the first enrolment made by Cyrenius Governor of Syria. But as we know certainly that Cyrenius, Cyrinus or Quirinus, was not Governor of Syria in the reign of Herod, we are obliged to explain it thus, This enrolment was made before Cyrenius was Governor of Syria. In the same manner, Ante me factus est, quia prior me erat. In the Greek literally, He was first of me; He was before me. And [John i. 15, 30. Ib. xv. 18. Matth. vi. 33. 1 Tim. i. 15, 16.] again, Si mundus vos odit, scitote quia me priorem vobis odio habuit; If the world hateth you, ye know that it hated me before you, &c. Our Saviour required his Disciples to seek first the Kingdom of God, to seek it before all things; and St. Paul says, that God displayed his mercy towards him, who was the first of sinners, and that in him first he shewed forth all long-suffering, in him he manifested his extreme patience, before he shewed it forth in them to whom he preached the Gospel.

[Gen. xxx. 41. Ex. xxx. 23. Lament. iv. 2. Ezek. xxvii. 17. Id. vf. 22. Hag. ii. 4.] Primum tempus, the first season, the Spring. Prima myrrha, the most excellent myrrh. Primus inter servos Saul, the most in esteem of Saul's Servants. Amicti auro primo, the most precious Gold. Frumentum primum, & aromata prima, the best wheat, and the best spices. Quis ex vobis vidit domum istam in gloriâ suâ primâ? Who of you hath seen the Temple in its antient splendor?

First-Born

FIRST-BORN. This word is not always to be understood strictly according to the letter; it is sometimes taken for that which is first, most excellent, most distinguished in any thing. Thus it is said of Jesus Christ, that he is the First-born of every creature; and in another place, the First-begotten, or First-born of the dead; that is to say, begotten of the Father before any Creature was produced; and the first who rose from the dead by his own power. Wisdom in like manner says, that she came out of the mouth of the most high, before he had produced any creature. Primogenita ante omnem [Ecclus. xxiv. 3. Vulg. If. xiv. 30.] creaturam. Thus in Isaiah, The First-born of the poor, signifies the most miserable of all the poor; and in Job, The First-born of death, the most terrible of all deaths. And so in other instances.

[Job. xviii. 13. Ex. xii. 29. Ib. xiii. 2, 3, &c. 12, 13.] When God by the sword of the destroying Angel had killed all the First-born of the Egyptians, he ordained, that all the First-born both of men and tame beasts for service, should be consecrated to him. The male children only were subject to this law. If a woman's first child were a girl, the father was not obliged to offer any thing either for her, or for the children who came after her, tho' they were males. And if a man had many wives, he was obliged to offer the First-born of every one of them to the Lord. The children who were First-born, were offered at the Temple, and their Relations redeemed them for the sum of five shekels.

REDEMPTION OF THE FIRST BORN.

[Levit. xxvii. 6. Exod. xiii. 13. Numb. xviii. 16. Numb. xvii. 17, 18, 19.] If it were a clean beast, as a calf, a lamb, or a kid, it was to be offered at the Temple. It was not to be redeemed, but it was killed; the blood of it was sprinkled about the Altar, the fat was burnt in the fire upon the Altar, and the flesh was for the Priest. If it were an unclean beast, and such as they were not allowed to eat, such as an Horse, an Ass, or a Camel, it was either redeemed, or something else was given in exchange for it. The First-born of an Ass was redeemed by giving a Lamb, or five shekels. If it were not redeemed, it was to be killed. There are some Commentators[1] who hold, that the First-born of dogs were killed, because they were unclean; and that nothing was given [Ex. xiii. 13. and xxxiv. 20.] for them to the Priests, because there was no trade driven with them. See Deut. xxiii. 18. Thou shalt not bring the price of a dog into the house of the Lord.

As to the first-fruits of trees, see Levit. xix. 23. The fruit was reckoned unclean for the three first years. In the fourth year all the fruit was the Lord's. The proprietor had no right to gather any for his own use, till the fifth year.

It has been made a question, whether our Saviour, as the First-born of the blessed Virgin, was subject to this Law. Concerning this particular, there are three opinions. Some believe our Saviour was not subject to it, because his mother's womb was not opened, when he was born, and he came into the world without breaking the seal of her virginity[2]. Others[3] think, that by the terms of the law he was obliged to it; that plainly declaring without exception, that all the First-born of male children should be consecrated to the Lord, and that in the passage of Exodus here in question, Omne masculinum adaperiens vulvam, is equivalent to omne masculinum primogenitum. Now Jesus Christ was without doubt the First-born of Mary. Lastly, others[4] seem to believe, that Moses's words are prophetical, and, rigorously speaking, have a regard to Jesus Christ only, who by his birth opened the Blessed Virgin's womb; whereas at the birth of other men, their mother's womb is opened in the act of marriage, before it is so at their birth. Quia omnium mulierum, non partus infantis, sed viri coitus, vulvam reserat, says Origen. Ecquis proprie vulvam adaperuit, quàm qui clausam patefecit? says Tertullian.

The ceremonies which the Jews observe at present for the redemption of their First-born, are as follows. If it be a girl, [Leo of Modena's ceremonies of the Jews. Part 4. ch. 9.] there is no particular ceremony; but if it be a boy, when the child is full thirty days old, one of the descendants of Aaron is sent for, who is most agreeable to the father; and many persons being met together in the house, the father brings a good deal of gold and silver in a cup or bason. Then the child is put into the Priest's hands, who with an audible voice asks the mother, Whether this boy is her's? She answers, Yes. He adds, Have you never had any other child, male or female, no untimely birth, or miscarriage? She answers, No. If so, says the Priest, this child, as the First-born, belongs to me.

Then turning to the father, he says, If you desire to have him, you must redeem him. This gold and silver, the father replies, is offered to you for this purpose only. The Priest goes on, Are you then willing to redeem him? I am, says the father. Then the Priest turning to the assembly, says, This child, as the First -born is therefore mine, according to this Law, Those that are to be redeemed from a month old shalt thou redeem, according to thine estimation for the money of five shekels, &c. but I am content with this in exchange. At the conclusion of these words, he takes two gold crowns, or thereabouts, more or less, as he pleases; and after this restores the infant to the father and mother. This is a day of rejoicing in the family. If the father or mother are of the race of the Priests, or Levites, they do not redeem their son.

Besides the First-born of men and beasts which were offered to the Lord, or were redeemed by giving money to the Priests, there was another kind of First-born which were carried to the Temple, in order to make feasts of charity with them. It is of this last kind that mention is made in Deuteronomy xii. 17,18. Thou mayst not eat within thy gates the tythe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or the firstlings of thy herds, or of thy flock, nor any of the vows which thou vowest; .... but thou must eat these things before the Lord thy God in the place which he shall chuse, thou, and thy son and thy daughter, thy man-servant and thy maid-servant, and the Levite that is within thy gates: and thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God in all that thou puttest thine hands unto. And again Deuteronomy, ch. xv. ver. 19. All the firstling males that come of thy herd and of thy flock, thou shalt sanctify unto the Lord thy God; thou shalt do no work with the firstling of thy bullock, nor shear the firstling of thy sheep. Thou shalt eat it before the Lord thy God year by year, in the place which the Lord shall chuse.

It is certain that the First-born as well of men as of beasts belonged plainly to the Lord, and that private people were not allowed to eat, or to devote them, nor to employ them even in pious uses, or make religious feasts with them. They did in no way belong to them: but after they were redeemed, they might use them as their own property. Of these First-born therefore they probably made the entertainments we have been speaking of; or else under the name of First-born we are to understand the best and most excellent parts of such animals as were designed for the religious repasts which were to be made before the Lord, in like manner as by First-fruits are comprehended all the offerings of every thing which was best.

The First-born among the Hebrews, as well as among all other nations, enjoyed particular privileges: and as Polygamy was in use with them, it was highly necessary to fix these rites. Moses regulates this particular [Deut. xxi. 15, 16, 17.] in the following manner: If a man have two wives, one beloved, and another hated, and they have borne him children, both the beloved and the hated; and if the First-born son be hers that was hated: then it shall be when he maketh his sons to inherit that which he hath, that he may not make the son of the beloved, First-born, before the son of the hated, which is indeed the First-born: but he shall acknowledge the son of the hated for the First-born, by giving him a double portion of all that he hath. The privileges of the First-born consisted, first, in a right to the Priesthood, which, before the Law, was fixed to the eldest of the family. Secondly in his having a double portion among his brethren.

The right to the Priesthood continued in force only while brothers dwelt together in the same place and family: for as soon as they were separated, and made a family apart, every one became the Priest and Head of his own house.

As to the double portion, it is explained two ways. Some believe, that half of the whole inheritance was given to the elder brother, and that the other half was shared in equal parts among the rest. But the Rabbins [Selden. de Successsion. in bona. c. 5. 6. 8.] inform us on the contrary, that the First-born for his share took twice as much as any one of his brothers. If a father left six sons, they made a division into seven equal parts; whereof the eldest had two, and each of the others one. If the eldest was dead, and had left children, his right devolved upon his children, and his heirs. The daughters had none of these privileges, notwithstanding they were elder than either their brothers or their sisters.

The Patriarch Jacob transfer'd the right of the First-born from Reuben to Joseph; Isaac from Esau to Jacob; and David from Adonijah to Solomon: but all this was done by the particular order of Providence, and a revelation from God.

The First-born are called in Scripture the Principle, or the Beginning, or First-fruits of their father's strength, Gen. xlix. 3. Reuben primogenitus meus, tu fortitudo mea & principium doloris mei. The Hebrew, fortitudo mea & principium roboris mei. Compare Deut. xxi. 17. Psal. lxxvii. 51. The First-born are the first-fruits, the first efforts of the father's youthful vigour.

First-Fruits

[Cod. Menachoth. Vide Maimonid. in Temedim. & Mosaphim.] FIRST-FRUITS. The presents were so called which the Hebrews made to God, consisting of part of the fruits of their harvest, to express their submission and dependance, and to acknowledge the sovereign Dominion of God, the author of all happiness. These First-fruits were offered at the Temple first, before any part of the crop was touched; and afterwards, when the harvest was over, before any private persons began to use their corn; and for this reason they were called First-fruits. The first of these First-fruits, which were offered in the name of the whole Nation, was a sheaf of barley, which was gathered on the 15th of Nisan in the evening, and this was threshed in the Court of the Temple. After it was well cleaned and winnowed, about three pints of it were taken, roasted, and pounded in a mortar. Over this was thrown a log of oil, and an handful of incense was added to it; and the Priest taking this offering, waved it before the Lord towards the four parts of the world, threw an handful of it in the fire upon the Altar, and the rest was his own. After this, every one was at liberty to reap and get in his harvest. See hereafter the article SHEAF.

[Levit. xxiii. 17. Joseph. Antiq. l. 3. c. 10. p. 93.] When the wheat-harvest was over, that is to say, the day of Pentecost, they offered again First-fruits of another kind in the name of all the nation, which consisted in two loaves, of two assarons, that is to say, of about three pints of flour each. These loaves were made of leavened dough. Josephus mentions only one loaf, and says, that it was served up to the Priests that evening at supper, together with the other offerings, and that all were to be eaten that day, without leaving any thing for the next.

Besides these First-fruits, which were offered in the name of the whole nation, every private person was obliged to bring his First-fruits to the Temple. The Scripture prescribes neither the time nor the [Vide Misn. tract. Thrumoth. c. 4. n. 3.] quantity. The Rabbins say, that they were obliged to bring at least the sixtieth part of their fruits and harvest. The most liberal gave the fortieth, the least liberal the fiftieth, others the sixtieth. They met in companies of four and twenty persons to carry [Ibid. tract. Becharim. c. 3. n. 3, 4, 5, 8.] their First-fruits in a ceremonious manner. The company was preceded by an ox appointed appointed for the sacrifice, with a crown of olives on his head, and his horns gilded over. One who played upon the flute, walked before them as far as Jerusalem. The First-fruits were of wheat, barley, grapes, figs, apricocks, olives, and dates. Every one carried his basket. The richest of them had one of gold, others, one of silver, and the poorest a wicker-basket. They walked in pomp as far as the Temple, singing songs in their procession. When they came near Jerusalem, the citizens went out to meet them, and saluted them with great civility.

[Numb.xv. 19, 20.] When they were got as far as the mountain, on which the temple was situated, every one, even the King himself, if he were there, took his basket upon his shoulder, and carried it as far as the Court belonging to the Priests. Then the Levites sung these words; I will magnify thee, O Lord, for thou hast set me up, &c. Psal. xxx. And he who brought the First-fruits said, I profess [Deut. xxvi. 4, 5, &c.] this day unto the Lord thy God, that I am come unto the country, which the Lord sware unto our fathers for to give us. Then he put the basket upon his hand, the Priest supporting it at the bottom, and continued, A Syrian ready to perish was my father, and he went down into Egypt, and sojourned there with a few, and became there a nation great, mighty, and populous. And the Egyptians evil intreated us, and afflicted us, and laid upon us hard bondage. And when we cried unto the Lord God of our fathers, the Lord heard our voice, and looked on our affliction and our labour, and our oppression: and the Lord brought us forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand.....He hath brought us into this place, and hath given us this land, even a land that floweth with milk and honey. And now behold, I have brought the First-fruits of the land, which thou, O Lord, hast given me. Having said these words, he put his basket beside the Altar, prostrated himself, and went away. We may see what relates to the First-fruits treated very much at large in the Mishnah, in the treatises intitled Thrumoth, and Becorim, in the Commentators, who have written on the Mishnah, and on the xxii. 29. xxiii. 19. Chapters of Exodus.

There was besides, another sort of First-fruits which was paid to God. When the bread in every family was kneaded, a portion of it was set apart, and given to the Priest or Levite who dwelt in the place. If there were no Priest nor Levite there, it was cast into the oven, and there left to be consumed by the fire. The Law had not fixed the quantity of bread, which was to be offered every time: but St. Jerom says, that Hieronym. [in cap. xlv. Ezech.] custom and tradition had determined it to be between the fortieth and sixtieth part [de præmiis] Philo. l.

Sacerdot. [na, Parr. 2. c. 9. of the] Leo of Mode-ceremonies of [Deut. xi. 6, 7, 8.] of what was kneaded. Philo speaks of this custom as a thing in use among all the Jews. Leo of Modena declares, that the same was still observed in his time. This is one of the three precepts peculiar to the women; because they generally are the persons who make the bread. When they have made a piece of paste about as large as forty eggs, they take a small part of it, which they form in the manner of a cake, then throw it into the fire, with these words, Blessed be thou, O Lord God, King of heaven, who hast sanctified us by thy precepts, and commanded us to separate a cake of our dough. The Rabbins hold that no one is obliged to pay the First-fruits, excepting in the Land of Promise, that they are to give at least the twenty-fourth part of the lump which they have kneaded, and the bakers the forty-eighth part only.

[Exod. xiii. 1, 2, 3, &c. xxxiv. 20. Numb. xviii. 16. Levit. xxvii. 6.] Lastly, those offerings are often called First-fruits in Scripture which were brought by the Israelites out of devotion to the Temple, in order to make their feasts of thanksgiving, to which they invited their relations and friends, and the Levites who were in their cities. The First-fruits and Tenths were the most certain and substantial revenue belonging to the Priests and Levites. The First-fruits of all the produce of the country, and the First-born of all beasts were given to them. The very children who were First-born, were the Lord's; they were offered in his Temple, and redeemed with a certain sum of money, which was five shekels.

The Latin word Primitiæ is taken not only literally for the First-fruits of the earth, and Offerings which were made to God, but likewise for what is excellent in every thing. For example, St. Paul says, that Christians have the First-fruits of the Holy Spirit, Primitias Spiritus habentes; that is to say, a greater abundance of God's Spirit, and more perfect and more excellent gifts than the Jews had. In another place he says, that Jesus Christ is risen from the dead, and become the First-fruits of them that slept. Jesus Christ is, as is said elsewhere, the first-begotten of the dead, or the first-born of those who rose again: Primogenitus mortuorum. And the same St. Paul says, that the Thessalonians were as it were the First-fruits whom God had chosen to salvation. Elegit vos Deus primitias in salutem. He hath chosen them with a particular distinction, as the First-fruits are chosen from amidst the most exquisite of the several fruits, with a design of offering them to the Lord.

Fish

FISH, in Hebrew, Dag. The Hebrews place Fish among creeping things. We have very few Hebrew names for any particular [Levit. xi. 9, 10, 11, 12. Deut. xiv. 9, 10.] Fish, and I do not know that there are any in the sacred Text. Moses is content to say in general, that all sorts of river, lake, and sea-fish might be eaten, provided they had scales and fins; and that such as have not these, are unclean and forbidden. Notwithstanding St. Barnabas in his Epistle has a citation, as from Scripture, You shall not eat of the lamprey, the manyfeet, or the cuttle-fish. We have already spoken of the Crocodile, and shall speak of the Whale in its place.

Fish

FISH, the Fish which swallowed up Jonah. Interpreters generally believe it was a Whale; and when the Gospel speaks of it, it [Matth. xii. 40. Jonah ii. 1. דג גדול Aug. Ep. c. ii. edit. nov. qu. 6. n. 31. p. 284.] makes use of the word Cetus, which signifies a Whale. In the Hebrew of Jonah it is said to be only a great Fish. Now we know of no Fish in the sea larger than a Whale; its mouth is of a capacity sufficient to contain many men; and who questions but that the capacity of its throat and belly is answerable to so vast an opening? Quanto hiatu patebat os illud, quod velut janua speluncæ illius fuit? says St. Austin, speaking of a Whale, the bones whereof were seen at Carthage. John Cabri, of the Academy at Florence, mentions a Whale, which was cast ashore upon the coast of Tuscany, and had a mouth so large, that a man on horse-back might enter it with ease. Notwithstanding, this animal does not live upon flesh, but upon weeds, or the froth of the sea, or upon some small white fish, such as anchovies, or others; a circumstance which makes what is said of Jonah's being swallowed up by a Whale, and his continuing alive three days in the belly of it, to be more credible. A Whale is not armed with teeth and tushes, like the Fish that live on flesh. It might have swallowed up Jonah, without bruising him between its teeth; it might have kept him longer without killing him in its stomach, which is used to digest weeds only, and the lightest and most tender food.

Others[1] maintain, that it could not be a Whale, because its throat is too narrow to swallow a man whole. They assert, that its throat is not above a foot and an half wide; and[2] Bartolin assures us, that the largest, and those whose tongue alone may yield more than eighteen tuns of oil, have so narrow a throat, that a man can scarce thrust his arm into it. These Authors pretend, that the Fish, which received Jonah into its belly, was rather a Sea-dog, called Canis carcarias. This creature has four or five rows of teeth belonging to each jaw. Its gullet and stomach are so large, that sometimes men have been found in it, quite whole. This Fish is likewise called Lamia. Rondelet says, that some of them have been taken at Nice and Marseilles; and men entire, nay one man all in armour, were found in their stomachs. He says, that he has seen some, whose jaws and gullet were so vast, that if their mouths had been kept open with a gag, a dog might have gone down into their Stomachs, to eat what was in them. Hercules is said to have leaped into the belly of some such creature armed all over, from whence he found no way out, till he had torn its entrails in pieces, without suffering any inconveniency himself, besides losing his hair; which was occasioned by the heat of this animal's stomach. See Bochart, de Animal. Sacr. parte 2. l. 5. c. 12. and our Dissertation concerning the Fish which swallowed up Jonah, printed before our Comment upon the twelve small Prophets.

It is a question with some, how Fishes could present themselves to Adam in Paradise, in order to his giving them their names, and exercising his dominion over them, as well as over other Animals? St. Austin does not believe that they appeared with other Animals before Adam. He says, that the first man, or his descendants, might distinguish them by their names, as they came to his or their knowledge; and that this is sufficient to verify the recital made by Moses. It is impossible that those which live only in the sea, could come to him in the garden of Eden, and the rivers which watered it.

[Psal. cii. 26.] The Rabbins have asserted, that upon the fifth day of the world, God created two large Fishes, one whereof he will preserve alive to the last day, in order to sport with it, according to this expression in the Psalmist; Draco iste quem formasti ad illudendum ei: and that he killed the other, and keeps it in brine, in order at the end of the world to make an entertainment of it for the Elect. Strange Extravagancies!

Flesh

[Tit. i. 15.] FLESH, is understood different ways; for example, for the Flesh which is the matter of bodies, whether of Men or Animals. The Hebrews did not use the Flesh of particular animals, because they believed it to be unclean. St. Paul informs us, that many of the faithful made a scruple of eating the Flesh of animals consecrated to idols; but he informs us too, that to the clean all things are clean; and that the kingdom of God does not consist in [Rom. xiv. 17.] food, or in the choice of meats and drinks. 1 Cor. vii. 8.

Flesh is also made use of to signify living men, and even all animals in general. The [Gen. vi. 13.] end of all Flesh is come before me. I am resolved to destroy every thing that hath life. [Gen. vii. 15, 16. Gen. vi. 12.] And they went in two and two of all Flesh, animals of all species. And again, All Flesh hath corrupted his way upon the earth, &c. And, My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is Flesh.

[Ibid. 19, 20. Gal. v. 16, 17.] The Flesh is understood as opposite to the Spirit. The Flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the Flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other .... Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the Flesh. And elsewhere, The works of the Flesh are manifest, which are these, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations .... but the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, &c. To crucify the Flesh with its lusts; not to fulfil the desires of the Flesh. Jews in the Flesh, and Jews in the Spirit; the wisdom of the Flesh, the prudence of the Flesh, &c. are expressions very well known in Scripture, and require no particular explanations.

Oh that we had of his Flesh! This was the discourse of Job's enemies, or even of his domesticks, in his affliction. They would have eat him up alive, so much were they animated against him: thus they repaid with ingratitude the services he had performed [Ps. xxvii. 2.] for them. The Psalmist says almost the same. The wicked, even mine enemies, came upon me to eat up my Flesh. This expression intimates the utmost hatred, the most excessive cruelty. It is a tacit acknowledgment, that the custom of eating the Flesh of living men, at least of feeding upon human Flesh, was not unknown in these countries. The author of the book of Wisdom reproaches the Canaanites with devouring man's Flesh; Comestores viscerum hominum, Wisd. xii. 5. We have some examples of this barbarity in the sacred History, and in that of Josephus. Jeremiah threatens the inhabitants of [Jerem. xix. 9.] Jerusalem with reducing them to such an extremity, that they should be constrained to eat the Flesh of their friends and children. And in his Lamentations we are informed, [Lament. ii. 20. iv. 10.] that accordingly it so happened. The hands of the pitiful women have sodden their own children, they were their meat in the destruction of the daughter of my people. We see the same thing in Ezekiel v. 10. Josephus relates a famous example of the like inhumanity, exercised by a certain mother upon her own son, during the last siege of Jerusalem by the Romans. Joseph. de Bell. l. vi. c. 21.

[Gen. xxix. 14. xxxviii. 27. &] The custom of eating human Flesh is still common in many places. The Chinese eat all those who are killed[1], so as even to sell human Flesh in their markets. They eat their enemies who are slain in war, and criminals condemned to death. The same barbarity is to be observed in many islands of the eastern seas[2]: there are some who eat their very fathers when they are old; others spare none of the Europeans whom they can lay hold of: the Pegnans had the same custom, and sold human Flesh publickly. The Cafres, on the coast of Barbary, to the number of fourscore thousand, invaded the inmost parts of Africk, eating all whom they found, and made havock of the country in this manner for above three hundred leagues. The same thing is related of the people of Siam and the Celebes.

We are thy Flesh and thy Bone; familiar expressions in the Scripture to denote relation, and the ties of Flesh and Blood.

[2 Sam. v. 1. & 1 Chron. xi. 1. d Josh. xxiii. 14. Ezek. xvi. 26. xxiii. 20. Jude ver. 7. Prov. v. 11. Ecclus. xxv. 26.] The way of all Flesh d. I am going the way of all Flesh; I am upon the point of suffering the law of death, which all men are condemned to.

The Flesh of the lascivious is compared to that of horses and asses. The wise man says, that the Flesh of the intemperate is consumed by infamous diseases. The author of Ecclesiasticus requires a prudent man to separate his Flesh from a prostitute and libertine woman. These expressions shew, in a decent and covered manner, what modesty does not permit any one to name in man. St. Jude, speaking of the irregularities of Sodom and Gomorrah, or of those committed by the evil Angels, who, as the ancients imagined, had corrupted themselves with the daughters of men, says, that they followed strange Flesh, Abeuntes post carnem alteram, because they dishonoured nature by their abominable lasciviousness.

Flies

FLIES. Flying insects very well known every where, and in the Law of Moses declared [Levit. xi. 42.] to be unclean. Whatsoever goeth upon the belly, and whatsoever hath more feet among all creeping things, ye shall not make yourselves unclean with them. The Philistins adored the God of Flies under the name of Belzebub. The Egyptians likewise paid a superstitious worship to the beetle; and we see a Fly upon some Phœnician medals, as also upon the statue of the Goddess Diana of Ephesus[1]. The author of the book of Wisdom having said, that God sent Flies and [Wisd. xii. 8.] Wasps against the Amorites and

Ca- Canaanites to drive them by degrees out of their country, adds, that God made those very creatures the instruments of their punishment, to which they paid divine honours. They therefore adored the Fly as well as the Philistins. See above BEELZEBUB. The [Exod. xxiii. 28. Deut. vii. 20. Josh. xxiv. 12. Wisd. xii. 8.] Lord promised his people, that when they came into the land of Canaan, he would send an army of Flies and Wasps against the Canaanites, to force them out of their country. This he accordingly effected, as we see by Joshua and the book of Wisdom; and we cannot doubt but that many of the Canaanites did really abandon their country to secure themselves from these troublesome insects[2]. See the Article HONEY, wherein we shall speak of Bees.

Flight of Jesus Christ

FLIGHT of Jesus Christ into Egypt. After the Purification of Mary, and the Presentation of Jesus Christ at the Temple, the Angel of the Lord appeared in a Dream to [Matth. ii. 13.] Joseph, and said to him, Take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word: for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him. Joseph immediately obeyed, and fled into Egypt. Herod some days after put to death all the male children in Bethlehem and its liberties, which were under two years old; and himself died five or six months afterwards, about the feast of the Passover. Then the Angel warned Joseph to return into Judæa, and told him, that they who sought the Child's destruction were dead. Thus according to our Chronology, which fixes the Flight of Jesus Christ into Egypt to the third or fourth of February, and his return into Judæa about the second of April, his retreat was only for about two months.

The spurious Gospel concerning the Infancy of Jesus is filled with supposed miracles, and wonderful circumstances, which happened, as it is pretended, in his journey into Egypt; but we have no regard to these fictions, which are more proper to do harm than good. The Fathers[1] have told us, that at the arrival of Jesus Christ in Egypt, the Idols fell down; and that he went as far as Hermopolis in the Thebais. There is a fountain still at this day shewn within two miles of Cairo, which was produced, as some believe, by the infant Jesus, and that the Blessed Virgin washed his clouts in it. This is what we read likewise in the spurious Gospel of Christ's Infancy, and in some of the Ancients.

[D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient.] The Egytians, both Christians and Mahometans, have a tradition importing, that Jesus Christ built the city of Bahana in the lower Thebaïs near Fioum, as the Patriarch Joseph built this latter place; that it was at Bahana that our Saviour called his Apostles, who preached upon the river Nile; that he reigned there in person, and left his Apostles there to be his successors in this state. The Jews were a long time in possession of this town, as pretended successors to our Lord's Disciples. It is seated upon a lake formed by the discharge of water from the Nile; which lake by the people of the country is called Joseph's Sea. It is so covered with fruit-trees, that there is no perceiving it, till you come very near.

[Evang. infantiæ apud Fabric. t. 1. Apoc. N. T. p. 175, 176. Eufeb. demonstr. Evang. l. 6. c. 20. & l. 9. c. 2. Athanaf. de Incarnat. Verbi. t. 1.] Others are of opinion, that Jesus Christ retired during his Flight to Matharæa. See MATHARÆA. In the Gospel intitled, Of the Infancy of Jesus, it is said, that at our Saviour's arrival, the Idol of the city which he came to, fell of itself, and that the Devil published the news of his being there. Eusebius and St. Athanasius, and many of the Ancients after them, have affirmed, that all the Idols of Egypt were at that time overthrown. The following passage of Isaiah is applied to this Event: Isaiah xix. 1. Behold the Lord rideth upon a swift cloud, and shall come into Egypt, and the idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence. And Jeremiah xliii. 13. He shall break also the images of Bethshemesh that is in the land of Egypt, and the houses of the gods of the Egyptians shall be burn with fire.

Floor

FLOOR for threshing Corn, or Threshing -Floor. There is frequent mention of it in Scripture. These were places in the country open to the air, wherein the corn was threshed either by using sledges, or with flails, or with horses or bullocks feet, they being made to run round upon the sheaves, set near to one another with the ears uppermost. The old Authors who have written upon Agriculture, shew us exactly the manner wherein these Floors were made. The lees of oil were mixed with clay, and when the clay was well soaked, it was beaten, and made smooth. When it was dry, neither rats nor ants could penetrate it; no weed would grow upon it, nor any water enter it, and make it muddy. When the corn was threshed, and mingled with the straw broken in pieces and beat small, they waited for the rising of the wind in the evening, and then threw it all in the air with shovels: the corn fell down again, and the chaff was dispersed and carried away by the wind. It may be of some use to have an idea of these sorts of things, which are very different from what we see practised in our own countries, in order to understand the allusions which are frequently made to them in Scripture.

Florus

FLORUS. Gessius Florus succeeded Albinus [Joseph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 9. & de Bello, l. 2. c. 24.] in the government of Judæa, in the year of Jesus Christ 54. His ill conduct and excesses rekindled the fury of the Zealots, and exasperated the Jews beyond all patience. He forced them to rebel against the Romans in the year of Jesus Christ 66. Florus was a man in whom shame and humanity were quite extinguished. Wherever any thing was to be got, let the nature of the thing be what it would, it was very right in his judgment. The cruelty which he exercised against the Jews, was beyond all bounds. He had his wife with him, whose name was Cleopatra, and who was as wicked as himself. She had procured him this government by the assistance of Poppæa, the wife or concubine of Nero. The thieves who ravaged Judæa were sure of impunity, by communicating part of their booty to him. When the revolt of the Jews was declared, Florus, instead of thinking how he might find means to suppress it, took care only to foment it, having no hopes of escaping the punishment due to his crimes, but by the rebellion of the Jews. Cestius Gallus governour of Syria, coming to Jerusalem in the year of Jesus Christ 66, the Jews complained to him of their governour Florus. Gallus gave them hopes, that Florus should be obliged to change his conduct: but after his return into Syria, Florus renewed his violences and vexations. Cæsar a began the revolt; Jerusalem soon followed the example. Cestius being informed of it, came with great diligence into Judæa with an army: he entred Jerusalem, and besieged the Temple; and as he was upon the point of taking it, he retreated, and was defeated by the Jews. He wrote to Nero, and charged [Joseph. de Bello, l. 2. c. 40. p. 821.] Florus with the rebellion and all the consequences of it. Josephus does not tell us what became of Florus. He in all probability left Judæa, when Vespasian came thither, in the year of Jesus Christ 67.

Flour

FLOUR. The Law of Moses permitted the poorest Israelites, who had not wherewithal to offer large cattle, nor even birds or pigeons for burnt-sacrifices or offerings for sin, to offer at least fine Flour. If the [Levit. vii. 12, 13.] offering were for sin, the tenth part of an Ephi was given to the Priest, that is to say, about three pints of Flour, Paris measure. It was not sprinkled with oil, neither was any frankincense put upon it, because it was an offering for sin. The Priest took an handful of it, which he threw in the fire upon the Altar; and after having prayed for his expiation, who furnished the offering, the rest of the Flour belonged to him. This was, as it were, his fee and reward. If the offering were made purely out of devotion, there was oil mixed with it, and frankincense put upon it; the Priest threw an handful of it in the fire upon the Altar, and all the frankincense upon it, and all that remained was his, claimed by him as his due. But no one besides the Priests could eat of it, nor did they eat of it any where but in the Holy Place, that is to say, during the time of their service in the tabernacle. There were likewise several sorts of cakes, or loaves, offered in the tabernacle. See Leviticus, chap. v 4, 5, 6, 7, &c. concerning the Ceremonies which were observed there.

Flute

FLUTE, a musical instrument, whereof there is mention sometimes made in Scripture, [Chalil.] by the names Chalil, Machalath, Masrokoth, and Huggab. This last is generally translated Organum, an Organ: but in all probability it was nothing more than a Flute with many pipes of an unequal size, which had no holes, and were open only at the upper end. Their manner of playing on it was, by letting these pipes slide successively upon the nether lip, and so blowing into them. See ORGAN.

As to the other Flutes mentioned in Scripture, it is not easy to describe the form of them. It is said, that of old they who played upon the Flute, held two in their mouths, one on the right side, which had no hole, and another on the left, which had two. The sound of one was sharper, of the other duller. See our Dissertation on the musical instruments of the Hebrews, prefixed to the second Tome of our Comment on the Psalms, page lxxxvi, &c. There is some [Matth. ix. 23, 24.] notice taken in the Gospel of players on the Flute, who were got together to assist at the funeral of Jairus's daughter, and to attend her body to the grave with their instruments playing.

The Rabbins inform us, that it was not allowed to have less than two players on the Flute, at the funeral of persons of the meanest condition, besides a woman hired to cry with formality; and Josephus relates, that the false report of his death being spread at Jerusalem, several persons hired players on the Flute in the way of preparation for his funeral. But in the Old Testament we see nothing like it. The Jews very probably borrowed this custom from the Romans[1]. When an old woman died, they made use of Trumpets, and Flutes when it was a young woman that was to be [Stat. Thebaïd. l. 6. Ovid. Propert. Servius.] buried; as we see practised in the history which we have just now related from the Gospel.

Translators' note. But this custom among the Jews has often varied: for in a council held at Narbonne, in the year 589, it is remarked, that the Jews formerly carried their dead to the grave quietly, and without musical instruments; and the custom of singing was represented as a novelty introduced of late years: they therefore who from that time should practise it, were ordered to be fined. Basnage Hist. des Juifs, l. vi. c. xxvi.

Fool

FOOL, Folly, Imprudence. These words are to be understood in Scripture not only according to their natural and literal meaning, for one who has lost his senses, and for the discourses and notions of Fools and Madmen; but they are taken likewise for sin, for those sins more particularly which [Psalm xxxviii. 5.] are contrary to purity. My wounds stink and are corrupt through my foolishness, my sin. Lord, thou knowest my foolishness, and my sins are not hid from thee. He that is soon [Prov. xiv. 17. Prov. xxiv. 9. Jer. iv. 22.] angry, dealeth foolishly; and, the thought of foolishness, is sin. And Jeremiah, My people is foolish, they have not known me; they are sottish children, and they have not understanding: they are wise to do evil, but to do good, they have no knowledge. The Fool hath said in his heart, there is no God. Lord, says [Ps. xiv. 1.] David, I have sinned greatly, do away the iniquity of thy servant, for I have done very foolishly. And Tamar said to her brother [1 Chr. xxi. 8.] Amnon, who would have robbed her of her honour; Do not this folly; whither shall I cause my shame to go? and as for thee, thou shalt be as one of the Fools in Israel, &c.

The Wisdom of this world is Foolishness with God. St. Paul says, Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? For after that in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them [1 Cor. iii. 18, 19.] that believe. And again, If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise. For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God: for it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness. [2 Tim. ii. 23. Tit. iii. 9.] The same Apostle advises Timothy and Titus, to avoid foolish questions, which are of no use, and proper only to create disputes. [1 Cor. i. 18.] And elsewhere, The preaching of the cross is to them that perish, foolishness; but unto us, which are saved, it is the power of God, &c.

Foot

FOOT, a measure consisting of twelve inches. The Hebrews had not properly any such measure; for the Zereth, or half-cubit, contained but ten inches and 2/8 2/9.

In old times it was customary to wash the feet of strangers upon their coming off a [Genes. xviii. 4. xix. 2. xxiv. 32.] journey, because generally they were barefoot, and wore sandals only, which did not secure them from the dust or dirt. St. Paul [1 Tim. v. 10.] enjoins enquiry to be made whether the widows, who were taken into the service of the Church, washed the feet of the Saints, the Faithful. Jesus Christ, to give us an example of humility, washed the feet of his [John xiii. 5.] Apostles, and thereby taught them to perform all the most humble services for one another.

Feet, in the Style of the sacred Writers, often mean inclinations, affections, propensions, actions, motions. Guide my feet in thy paths; keep thy feet at a distance from evil; the feet of the debauched woman go down to death; let not the feet of pride come upon me; and in another place, I turned my [Psal. xxxvi. 11. Psal. cxix. 59. 1 Sam. xxv. 27.] feet unto thy testimonies.

To be at any one's feet, is used for obeying, being in his service, following him. Abigail tells David that the presents which she brought him, were for the young men that walked at his feet; for the soldiers who followed him. Moses says, that the Lord loved his people, and those that sat down at his feet; who heard him, who belonged to him, were instructed in his doctrine. St. Paul says, that he was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel; and many eat at our Saviour's feet, and heard his word.

In the Hebrew of Deuteronomy, ch. xi. ver. 10. it is said, that the land of Canaan is not like the land of Egypt, where thou sowedst thy seed, and wateredst it with thy foot; that is to say, that Palestine is a country where the rains are not extremely rare, where the dews are plentiful, where there are many springs, rivulets, and brooks, without reckoning the Jordan, which supply the earth with all the moisture that is necessary to its producing fruit; whereas Egypt is a country where there is no river but the Nile, where it never rains, and where the lands which are not within reach to be watered by the inundations of this river, continue parched and barren. To supply this want, ditches are dug, and water distributed throughout the several villages and cantons; there are great struggles who shall first get it, and in this dispute they often come to blows, and fight about it.

But notwithstanding these precautions, there are many places which have no water; and in the course of the year, the places which are nearest to the Nile, require to be watered again in an artificial manner. It is [Philo de confusion. linguar. p. 335.] done by the help of some machines, which Philo describes after the following manner: It is a wheel which a man turns with the motion of his feet, by ascending successively the several steps which are within it. But as while he is thus continually turning, he cannot keep himself up, he holds a stay in his hands which is not moveable, and this supports him; so that in this work the hands do the office of the feet, and the feet that of the hands; since the hands which should act, are at rest, and the feet which should be at rest, are in action, and give motion to the wheel. This is what Moses means in this place by saying, that in Egypt they water the earth with their feet.

Foot

FOOT. The Hebrews out of modesty express sometimes by this word, such parts as decency does not allow to [Isa. xxxvi. 12. Judg. iii. 24. 1 Sam. xxiv. 3. Jer. ii. 25. Isai. vii. 20. xlix. 33.] name; for example, the water of the feet, signifies urine. To cover one's feet, according to the Hebrew, is used for satisfying the necessities of nature. The hair of the feet. The Lord shall shave with a razor that is hired the head and the hair, and it shall also consume the beard. The hairs of the whole body. The following words of Jeremiah are explained in much the same sense. Withhold thy foot from being unshod, and thy throat from thirst. Do not continue to prostitute yourselves, as you have hitherto done, to strange people. He speaks to the infidel and idolatrous Jews. See likewise Ezekiel xvi. 25. Thou hast opened thy feet to every one that passed by. He gathered up his feet into the bed; this is said of an old man who died; the metaphor is borrowed from a man seized with cold, who crouds himself up in his bed. The Scripture says likewise to be gathered to his fathers, to his people, to the grave; to denote death, which reduces us all to the same condition, and the same necessity.

[Gen. xxx. 30. Psalm viii. 6. Psal. xviii. 38. Isaiah lx. 14.] Jacob said to Laban, the Lord hath blessed thee at my feet; that is to say, as St. Jerom has translated it, ad introitum meum, ever since I came to you, and undertook the conduct of your flocks.

To be under any one's feet, to be a footstool to him, is a figurative way of speaking to signify the subjection of a subject to his sovereign, of a servant to his master. Thou hast put all things under his feet. Mine enemies are fallen under my feet. Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thine enemies my footstool, &c. Psal. cx.

[Acts vii. 5. Deut. ii. 5.] To adore the place where the feet of any one rest; Adorabunt vestigia pedum tuorum qui detrahebant tibi; they who despised thee, will come and adore the place where thou walkest. And elsewhere, Fall down before [Psal. xcix. 5. Isa. xlix. 23.] his footstool. And Isaiah in still a much stronger manner, They shall lick the dust of thy feet.

Vestigium pedis; not so much as to set his foot on, signifies a very small quantity of land. The Patriarchs did not possess a foot of land in Palestine, they possessed nothing at all there. I will not give thee a foot of land of the country of Edom, nothing at all: I will not give you of their land, no not so much as a foot's breadth.

To set foot in a place, signifies to take possession of it, to make himself master of it. [Deut. xi. 24.] Every place whereon the soles of your feet shall tread, shall be yours. And, Over Edom will I cast out my shoe; I will make my self master of it. Psal. lx. 10. cviii. 10.

To bear one's shoes, or untie the latchets of one's shoes, is to perform the meanest services for him. See Matth. iii. 11. Mark i. 7. Luke ii. 16.

[Gal. ii. 14.] To walk uprightly in an affair, to behave with sincerity, without shifting, or disguise, is set in opposition to what the Scripture [1 Kings xviii. 21. Psal. xvii. 46.] calls halting on both sides. How long halt ye between two opinions? And in the Psalms, Filii alieni claudicaverunt a semitis suis.

[Deut. xxxiii. 24. Job xxix. 6. Exod. iii. 5.] Nakedness of feet, was a sign of mourning: Forbear to cry, says God to Ezekiel, make no mourning for the dead, and put on thy shoes upon thy feet, &c. It was likewise a mark of respect; Loose thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place where thou standest is holy ground. The Rabbins inform us, that the Jews and Priests were bare-foot in the Temple. See Joshua v. 16.

To wash one's feet with oil, or with butter, signifies plenty of all sorts of good things. To wash one's feet in the blood of sinners, to take remarkable vengeance on them, to shed rivers of their blood.

[Psal. xxv. 12. Psal. xxxi. 9. Prov. vi. 13. Psal. xl. 3. Ezek. xxv. 6.] A wicked man speaketh with his feet, says Solomon, Annuit oculis, terit pede; in the Hebrew, loquitur pede. He uses much gesture with his hands and feet while he is talking. The ancient Sages blamed those who used too much gesticulation, and spoke with all their members. Ezekiel reproaches the Ammonites with clapping their hands and stamping with their feet in token of joy, [Ezek. vi. 11.] upon seeing the desolation of Jerusalem and the Temple. In another place he describes the same motions as signs of grief, because of the ruin of his people.

[Isai. xxxii. 20.] My foot standeth right; I have pursued the paths of righteousness: or rather supposing a Levite to be speaking, my foot shall stand in the place appointed for the Levites, in the Temple of the Lord, in the Court of the Priests, where my place is allotted me: In directo, in plano. The Psalmist in another passage says, Thou hast set my feet in a large room. Thou hast set me at liberty; before I was like a man in fetters, or in a slippery place, not knowing where to fix my feet; but thou hast set my feet in a wide, spacious and firm place; and, as he says elsewhere, Thou hast set my feet upon a rock.

Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters, that send forth thither the feet of the ox and the ass, says Isaiah. Happy are the people who sow their corn upon a well-watered soil, who with their oxen and asses plow a fat and fruitful land; or, who feed there their oxen and their asses. Immittere pedem, that is to say, to send them there, to feed them, to plow there with them.

If thou turn away thy foot from my sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my [Isai. lviii. 13.] holy day, says the same Prophet: If thou forbear walking, and travelling upon the sabbath-day, and do not then act thine own will. Journeys, we know, were forbidden upon the sabbath-day. See Matth. xxiv.20. and Acts i. 12.

The Jewish women wore rings of great value upon their feet. See hereafter PERISCELIDES.

[Job xix. 15. Job xiii. 27. xxxiii. 11.] Job says, that he was feet to the lame, and eyes to the blind; that he led the one, and supported the other. He says in another place, that God had put his feet in the stocks, and looked narrowly to all his paths; like a bird or some other animal led along, with the foot fastned to a cord or packthread, and unable to go the least step, but as he who guides it, pleases.

The men were generally bare-foot in the house; the poor went thus almost always, even on their journeys: but others when they went into the country, commonly wore Shoes. See SHOES, Coverings for the legs and feet.

Foreskin

FORESKIN, or Præputium, the skin which covers the nut of a man's natural part, and is cut when a child is circumcised. We have spoken at large of this ceremony in the article of CIRCUMCISION. Several Churches glory in possessing our Saviour's Foreskin, which was cut off at his Circumcision. For example, the Cathedral-Church of Puy, in Velay; the Collegiate-Church of Antwerp, in the Low-Countries; that of our Lady de la Colombe, in the diocese of Chartres; the Abbey of St. Cornelius of Compiegne; the Church of St. John Lateran at Rome. It is very hard to reconcile all these different pretensions, since there can be but one Foreskin, and there is no certainty of its being preserved so long as our time.

Children are sometimes born without a Foreskin; which the Hebrews look upon as a particular favour of Providence. They maintain that Moses was born in this manner. Upon these occasions the child is not circumcised; the skin is only cut so as to draw some drops of blood.

As the Jews esteemed the Foreskin or Uncircumcision, as a very great impurity, and the greatest affront they could receive was to be called uncircumcised, they sometimes gave the Gentiles and strange people, in contempt, the name of Uncircumcised. And St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, frequently mentions the Gentiles by the word Præputium, in opposition to the Jews, whom he names Circumcisio. Si præputium justitias legis custodiat, nonne præputium [Rom. ii. 26. Gal. ii. 8.] ejus in circumcisionem reputabitur? And in the Epistle to the Galatians, Creditum est mihi Evangelium præputii, sicut & Petro circumcisionis.

[1 Macc. i. 16. 1 Cor. vii. 18. Bartolin. de Morbis Biblicis. Epiphan. de ponderib. & mensuris. Origen. Philocol. c. 1. Cornel. Celf. l. 7. c. 25.] There is mention in the Maccabees, and in St. Paul's first Epistle to the Corinthians, of a custom among certain wicked Jews, who being ashamed to appear circumcised, and wear this mark of their Religion, made use of the Surgeons art to conceal this pretended deformity, and make their Foreskin grow again. Origen acknowledges that some Jews put themselves into the Physicians hands for this purpose. And Epiphanius speaks of the instrument and means imployed to make the skin join which had been cut asunder. Cornelius Celsus, an eminent and ancient Physician, has written a chapter particularly concerning this operation. Galen mentions it in the same manner almost as Celsus; and Bartolin cites Æginetus and Fallopius, who have explained the manner how the marks of circumcision may be concealed. The same Bartolin cites a letter written by Buxtorf, the son, wherein he relates a great number of testimonies from Jewish Authors, who speak of this practice as usual among apostates from their Religion. The reader may consult our Comment upon 1 Macc. i. 16. where we have treated at large of this matter. See likewise St. Jerom, in Isai. c. LIII. and in Jovinian. l. 1. Liran. in 1 Macc. i. 16. Rupert. l. 9. De Victoria Verbi, c. 18. Haimo in 1 Cor. vii. 18. who maintain, that it is impossible to efface the mark of circumcision; to these you may add Origen, l. 4. de Principiis, c. 2. who seems to be of the same opinion.

As a consequence of this opinion, entertained by all true Jews, who looked upon uncircumcision, as a thing unclean, and dishonourable; circumcision on the contrary as a mark of honour and distinction; they use the Foreskin, or uncircumcised, in a figurative sense, to signify something impure, superfluous, dangerous and useless. For example, Moses says of himself, that [Exod. vi. 12, 30. ערל שפתים Jer. vi. 10. Idem iv. 4. & ix. 26. Levit. xxvi. 41.] he is of uncircumcised lips; that is to say, he had an impediment in his speech. Jeremiah says of the Jews, that they had uncircumcised ears, that is to say, they would not hear the instructions that were given them; he exhorts them to circumcise their hearts; literally, Take away the Foreskins of their hearts; be tractable and attentive. Moses inveighs against the uncircumcised hearts of the Jews, who would not obey the Lord. He says, that during the three first years after a tree is planted, all the fruit of it is unclean, and that no one should eat of it. Cum plantaveritis ligna pomifera, auferetis præputia eorum; poma quæ germinant, immunda erunt vobis. In the Hebrew, Fructus ejus erit vobis præputiàtus. We have the same expressions in the New Testament; St. Stephen reproaches the Jews, with the hardness of their heart, and their indocility, saying, Ye [Acts vii. 51.] uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost.

Forest of Libanus

FOREST of Libanus. Besides the true Forest of Libanus, where cedars and other trees grow still at this day, the Scripture [1 Kings vii. 2. x. 17.] calls a Palace by this name, which Solomon built at Jerusalem, contiguous to the Palace belonging to the King of Egypt's daughter. Solomon kept his usual residence in it, and all the vessels within it were of pure gold. It was called the house of the Forest of Libanus, either by reason of the great quantity of Cedars, which were made use of in it, or because of the multitude of pillars with which it was supported.

[Amos vii. 17.] Some place this house, or palace, in the mountains of Libanus; but there is much more probability, that it was in Jerusalem; and what evidently proves this, is, that the three hundred golden shields, which were carried before Solomon, when he went to the Temple, were certainly in a Hall belonging to this Palace.

Fornication

[Hebr. xiii. 4. 1 Cor. xvi. 15, 17.] FORNICATION. This word is used in Scripture, not only for the sin of impurity, but likewise for idolatry, and for infidelity to God of all kinds. Adultery and Fornication are frequently confounded. Uxor tua in civitate fornicabitur. Both the Old and [Lev. xxi. 7. Deut. xxii. 21. xxiii. 18. Prov. xxiii. 27. Tob. iv. 17. 1 Cor. vi. 9, 13, 15. Coloss. iii. 5.] New Testament condemn all sorts of Impurity and Fornication, either corporeal or spiritual; that is to say, not that only which is committed bodily in the flesh, but that likewise which men incur the guilt of by Idolatry, Apostacy, Heresy, and Infidelity towards God.

Fortune

FORTUNE. By the name of Fortune is understood a blind and unaccountable Deity, who, according to the Heathens, presided over all events, and distributed good and evil, as she was moved by her own humour and caprice. The ancient Greeks were unacquainted with this vain Divinity; we do not find her in their books. The good and evil which befell them, they attributed to the Gods. The Sacred Authors of the Old and New Testament never make use of the word Fortune, in the sense wherein we construe it. The reason of our inserting it in our Dictionary is, because Isaiah[1] reproaches the Hebrews with having erected Altars to Fortune, Qui ponitis Fortunæ mensam, & libatis super eam. It is certain, that in Isaiah's time, Fortune, either name or thing, was not known among the Hebrews; and the import of the original text is, That prepare a table for Gad, and furnish the drink-offering unto Meni. The question is, who these two Deities, Gad and Meni, were.

It is very probable that Gad signifies the Sun, and Meni the Moon; the Sun was the God of good Fortune as well as the Moon: these two great Luminaries were considered as happy Principles, and beneficent Deities, and they who were born under the aspect of either of them, were believed to enjoy constant prosperity. This was the doctrine of the Egyptians and Persians, and probably likewise of the Syrians; for Leah having obliged Jacob to marry Zilpah, and by her means having had a son of him; she said, Happily; or this is fortunate; (the Hebrew, in Gad) and she called her son's name Gad.[2]

[Vide Grot. in Gen. xxx. 11. D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 728. Ibid. p. 626.] Kimchi and Abrabanel say, that among the Arabians, the Star, or Planet Jupiter, goes by the name of Gad, and that the influences of it upon those who are born under that aspect are happy. M. d'Herbelot tells us; that Jupiter, the most lucky of all the Planets, by our Astronomers termed generally Fortuna major, is called by the Arabians, Sâd, or Saad, in like manner as the Planet Venus is named

Sâd-Saghir, Fortuna minor. The same planet Jupiter is called by them Moschteri, but their term for it in Horoscopes is Saad-Alsoud, Fortune of Fortunes.

The Genius which presides upon the first day of the solar year, is by the Persians [Id. p. 694.] called Ormozd; who is the same that the Greeks called Oromasdes. He was esteemed by the followers of Mahomet, not only as a good Genius; but as the prin cipal Genius of good Fortune; and Zoharah, which is the Planet Venus, as the Planet of lesser Fortune. In opposition to Ormozd, or Oromasdes, the God of good Fortune, they set up Ahermen, or Arimanios, the God of evil Destiny.

To return to Gad and Meni, mentioned by Isaiah, we are of opinion that the Gad of the Syrians was the same as the Sâd of the Arabians, and the Ormozd of the Persians; that he presided over good Fortune, that he signified the Sun, or Planet Jupiter, and that Meni signified the Moon, or Planet Venus, and answered to the Zoharah of the Persians, or Sâd-Saghir of the Arabians.

These Deities were reverenced in Palestine by preparing tables for Gad, and pouring out liquors in honour of Meni. [Demosth. contra Midiam, & adversus Macartetum. Strabo, l. 9. p. 352. & l. 12. p. 383.] Demosthenes informs us, that among the Greeks they sacrificed for good Fortune, or to obtain some happiness, to Apollo, who presides in the streets; to Latona and Diana. (Apollo, we know, was the Sun, and Diana the Moon.) They erected tables to them in the corners of streets, where there were cross-ways, and offered up cups full of wine to them; they burnt incense there, danced, and wore crowns in honour of them. Strabo speaks of several Temples dedicated to Men, or Menus, to Anaïs, or Diana, or the Moon, which were to be seen in Armenia, where the worship of this Goddess was very common.

[Hieron. in Isai. lxv. 11.] St. Jerom, writing upon the passage of Isaiah, which we are now examining, says, that it is an ancient custom derived from Paganism, and still subsisting in almost every city, particularly in Egypt and Alexandria, to place tables in the corners of the streets upon the last day of the year, covered with all sorts of good things, and cups full of wine mixed with honey, for a happy presage of the new year. Jeremiah reproaches the Jews with offering cakes and [Jerem. vii. 18. and xliv. 17, 18. Antiquité expliquée, t. 1. p. 310, 311.] liquors to the Queen of Heaven, that is to say, the Moon. See our Comment on Isaiah lxv. 11. In ancient monuments we often find Fortune represented with the marks of the Sun and Moon, with those of Isis, and accompanied with Hecate, and with two Stars, which may very well be those of Jupiter and Venus, both consecrated to good Fortune.

It is a common proverb in the Scripture; He that diggeth a pit, shall fall into it. He who lays snares for others, shall be caught in them himself. [Ps. vii. 15. Eccl. x. 8. FOUNTAIN. There are several celebrated Fountains in Judæa, most of them have been taken notice of by us, in our account of those places, to which they are adjacent. For example, speaking of Jezreel and *Emma*üs, it has been observed that there was a Fountain near these places. Thus by Enshemesh is meant, the Fountain of the Sun; Engeddi, the Kids Fountain; En-gannim, the Fountain of Gardens; and so on.

The Ethiopian's FOUNTAIN, is that, where the Ethiopian Queen Candace's Eunuch [Acts viii. 36.] was baptized by Philip the Deacon, as is said in the Acts. Now Bethsur was twenty miles from Jerusalem, and very near Eleutheropolis. In St. Jerom's time, the Eunuch's Fountain springing out of the earth, immediately almost found a passage into it again. At present, these waters are received into a Bason, from whence they issue into a conduit, which conveys them about twenty paces from thence into a reservoir, and from this reservoir they [Cant. iv. 15. See Doubdan, Breidenbach, Adrichom, &c.] spread into the valley.

Fountain of living Waters

FOUNTAIN of living Waters, which fall with impetuosity from Libanus, and are mentioned in Solomon's Song. This Fountain, according to modern Travellers, abounds with water, and is found at the distance of a league from Tyre, in the plain. It is built in the form of a square tower, raised fifteen cubits from the ground, and about fifteen foot wide, and in this the water is inclosed as in a well; from whence it passes through certain gates or openings, with so much violence, that in its passage it turns a mill with five mill-stones. Any one may go on horseback up a large staircase of stone, which is on the side that looks towards Tyre, to the top of this edifice. There are besides two other wells, to which any one may go from this first through a channel of about three foot wide. These waters in Solomon's time belonged without doubt to the Tyrians; and there is no proof that this Prince meant this spring in particular, in the passage cited from his Song.

Fountain sealed

[Cant. iv. 13.] FOUNTAIN sealed, Fons signatus, mentioned likewise in Solomon's Song, is probably bably an allegory, representing the chastity of the Holy Spouse. Travellers speak of a considerable Fountain to be seen at a league and an half's distance from Bethlehem, whereof we have already spoken under the word ETHAN. Here, as is supposed, was Solomon's sealed Fountain. But this is all very uncertain. As for the Fountain of Ethan, or the waters which are shewn near Bethlehem, any one may consult the travellers [Cotovic. Eugen. Roger, le Brun, P. 272.] who have taken notice of them, and described the reservoirs, where they are kept. From hence came the water, which Pilate conveyed to Jerusalem, some years before the war between the Romans and the Jews.

Some Rabbins describe it to be near the brook Kedron, and others near Tiberias. St. Jerom seems to put Morasthi between Succoth and Samson's Fountain, which agrees pretty well with those who place it near Eleutheropolis.

Fountain

FOUNTAIN, in a metaphorical sense, is used for generation, children. Let the Fountains [Prov. v. 16. Ps. lxviii. 27.] be dispersed abroad; may you have a numerous posterity. Ye that are of the Fountains of Israel: Benedicite Domino de fontibus Israel. Fox

FOX; in Latin, Vulpes; in Greek, [Vulpes.] Alopex; in Hebrew, Shual: a creature very well known to all, and very remarkable principally for its cunning. There is mention made of it in several places of the Scripture. It informs us, that Samson took three hundred Foxes, which he tied two and two together by the tail, and that having fastened a lighted whisp of straw in the middle of the cord which bound them so together, he let them loose among the crops of standing corn belonging to the Philistins, and they burnt them. From the Fields they went into the olive-yards, and burnt them likewise. Some with reason are amazed to think, how Samson could muster up so great a number of Foxes. But to this it is replied, that Foxes are very common in this country; which is easily proved by Scripture, and the testimony of travellers. Solomon in his song says, that the little Foxes spoiled his vines. Jeremiah says, that the Foxes walk upon the mountain of Zion, which is desolate. There are some cantons and cities in Palestine, which take their name from Foxes, without doubt by reason of the great number of these animals thereabouts: for example, the land of Shual, or the Fox, 1 Sam. xiii. 17. Hazar- Shual, the Fox's habitation, a city of Judah, or Simeon, Joshua xv. 28. and xix. 3. and the city of Shual-abbim, in the tribe of Dan, which Samson belonged to.

Belon assures us, that in Palestine, particularly about Cæsarea, there is a kind of creature between a Wolf and a Fox, which so abounds there, that sometimes troops of two or three hundred of them are to be seen. M. Morizon, who has travelled in this country, says, that Foxes swarm there, and that there are very great numbers of them in the hedges, and ruins of buildings. Besides, Samson might have employed abundance of people to catch this great number of Foxes, and they might have provided them some time before for his purpose. No animal was fitter for his design, especially when coupled together in this manner; for a Fox runs very swiftly, but uses a great many turnings and windings, not going strait on, but running sometimes on one side, sometimes on another; so that while one drag'd one way, and another another way, they spread the fire over all the fields of the Philistins, and could not easily get into the woods, or holes in the rocks, where their fire-brands had been extinguished, and Samson's stratagem rendred ineffectual. See the Commentators on the xvth Chapter of Judges.

[Vide Nicandr. in Alexipharmacis, v. 181. Theocrit. Idyll. 1. Varro de re rust. l. 1. c. 8. Galen. de aliment. facultatib. l. 3. c. 2.] Foxes generally do great mischief among vines, especially when they are loaded with fruit. We have seen above, that the Spouse in the Canticles desires the Foxes might be taken away, which spoiled his vines. Galen says, that they who love hunting, eat Foxes in the autumn, because then they are fatned with with grapes. The Fable of the Fox and the Grapes is very well known. Our Saviour in the Gospel, to give an idea of his extreme [Luke ix. 58.] poverty, says, The Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the son of man hath not where to lay his head. In effect, Foxes dig holes for themselves, but then they leave several outlets, that if the [Appian. Cyneger. Lactant. de ira Dei, c. 7.] huntsman lays his snares at one, they may escape at the other.

Ezekiel compares the false Prophets with Foxes; Thy Prophets are like the Foxes in the desarts: whether it was his design to heighten their cunning and hypocrisy in imitating the true Prophets, and so covering themselves with sheep's clothing, though they were ravening wolves; or whether he intended to shew, that these false Prophets, instead of supporting Jerusalem, endeavoured only to destroy it, by undermining, as we may say, its walls, and shaking its foundations. Jesus Christ calls Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee, Fox, without doubt signifying thereby his craft, and the refinements of his policy. Tobiah the Ammonite, rallying the Hebrews, who were at work in rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem, insulted them with [Nehem. iv. 3.] this expression, Even that which they build, if a Fox go up, he shall even break down their strong hold.

Friend

FRIEND. The name of Friend is taken in Scripture for our neighbour in general, he with whom we have no contest. Thou shalt love thy Friend, that is to say, thy neighbour, thy brother, as thyself. And in another place, Whoso killeth his neighbour ignorantly, whom he hated not in time past, but the iron of whose hatchet shall fly off and kill his Friend, &c. And again, When [Deut. xxiii. 24, 25.] thou comest into thy neighbour's vineyard, then thou mayst eat grapes thy fill: and when thou comest into the standing corn of thy Friend, then thou mayst pluck the ears with thine hand, &c. Where you see Friend and Neighbour are synonymous[1].

By the Friend is meant also the Favourite of a Prince. Hushai was the Friend, the Favourite of David. Zabud the son of Nathan was Solomon's Friend. [1 Kings iv. 5.] Ahuzzah was the particular Friend of Abimelech King of Gerar. The Saints are called the Friends of God; but this title was given principally to Abraham. The Mahometans generally call him by this name; and they term the city of Hebron, where they believe his tomb to be, the city of the Friend of God. The Friend of the [Wisd. vii. 27. James ii. 23.] bridegroom, is the bride-man; he who does the honours of the wedding, and leads his Friend's Spouse to the nuptial bed. St. [Judith viii. 22.] John Baptist, with respect to Jesus Christ and his Church, was the Friend of the Bridegroom. The word Friend, as it is applied to either man or woman, is taken likewise in a good and bad sense, to denote those persons whose affection to each other is allowable and lawful, and those sometimes who love and court one another in an unlawful and impure manner; mulier [Hos. iii. 1.] dilecta amico, a courtizan.

We may observe the qualities of a true Friend in Prov. xvii. 17. A Friend loveth at all times, and a Brother is born for adversity: and xviii. 24. There is a Friend that sticketh closer than a Brother. And in the book of Ecclesiasticus, Chuse your Friends discreetly; for there are some who are so in prosperity only; and others who are but companions at the table: but a faithful Friend is an inestimable treasure: gold and silver, and all that is most valuable, are nothing in comparison of him: he is a present from God to those who fear him. Ecclus. vi. 5, 6, 7, &c. And chap. ix. 10. Forsake not an old Friend; for the new is not comparable to him: a new Friend is like new wine; when it is old, thou shalt drink it with pleasure, &c.

Frogs

FROGS, a very common creature. When Moses brought upon Egypt the Plague of Frogs, there was so great a quantity of them, that they covered the whole land, entred the houses, got into the very ovens, and places where they laid up their provisions; and when they died, they were thrown together in great heaps, which corrupting, produced an insupportable infection in Egypt.

Frogs were reckoned unclean by the Hebrews. Moses does not name them among the animals whereof it was not lawful to eat, but he distinguishes them sufficiently by saying, ye shall not eat of any thing that moves in the sea, in rivers, or lakes, unless it has fins and scales. And St. John in the Revelations says, that he saw three unclean Spirits issuing out of the false Prophet's mouth in the shape of Frogs.

FRONT, or Forehead. The expressions, a brazen Front, the Front of a lewd woman, a hardned Front, are used for an impudent person, an insolent and obdurate sinner. Isaiah, Frons tua ærea. God tells this Prophet, that he will make his face stronger than that of the wicked Israelites, and his Forehead harder than that of those to whom he sent him.

It is believed, that God impressed some sign on Cain's Forehead, that he might be known more easily; much after the manner of his marking those Israelites on the Forehead with the letter Tau, who lamented, and had no share in the irregularities of their brethren; and as in the Revelations, God causes his Elect to be distinguished by a sign [Rev. vii. 3. ix. 4.] upon the Forehead, to prevent their being confounded with sinners.

Frontlets

[Leo of Modena's ceremonies of the Jews. Part I. c. xi. art. 4. Exod. xiii. 1, &c.] FRONTLETS. These were a square piece of hard calf's-skin, including four pieces of parchment, upon which the Jews wrote four passages of the Law, and put them on their foreheads. Leo of Modena describes them after the following manner. They take four pieces of parchment and write, with ink made particularly for this purpose, and in square letters, these four passages, one on each piece. 1. Sanctify unto me all the first-born, &c. from the beginning of the xiiith chapter of Exodus to the 10th verse. 2. From the 11th verse of the same chapter to the 16th verse; And when the Lord shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, and what follows. 3. From the 4th verse of the vith chapter of Deuteronomy; Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord, and what follows to the 9th verse of the same chapter. 4. From the 13th verse of the xith chapter of the same book; If you shall hearken diligently unto my commandments which I command you this day, &c. to the end of the 21st verse of the same chapter; and all this in obedience to these words of [Exod. xiii. 9.] Moses: These commandments shall be for a sign unto thee upon thine hand, and for a memorial between thine eyes.

These four little pieces of parchment are fastned together, and a square formed of them, upon which the letter Schin שis written; then a little square of hard calf's-skin is put a-top; out of which come two leathern strings an inch wide, and a cubit and an half, or thereabouts, in length. This square is put upon the middle of the forehead, and the strings being first girt about the head, make a knot in the form of the letter ;דthen are brought before, and fall upon the stomach. It is called Teffila-Schel-Rosch, or the Tephila of the head. The most devout put it on both at morning and noon-day prayer; but the generality of the Jews wear it only at morning prayer. No one but the Chanter of the synagogue is obliged to put it on at noon as well as in the morning. See the figure of them under the article TEPHILIM.

It is a question whether the use of Frontlets, and other Phylacteries, was ordained by Moses as an observance to which the Jews were obliged, and such as required a literal compliance, so that the Hebrews have at all times worn them; or have been obliged to wear them. Opinions are much divided upon this point. They who believe the use of them to be rigorously binding, ground their persuasion on the text of Moses, which speaks of it in a positive [Exod. xiii. 16.] manner, as of other precepts of the Law; he requires the Commandments of God to be written upon the doors of houses, as a sign upon their hands, and as an ornament on their foreheads. If there is any obligation to write these commandments upon their doors, as the text intimates, there is the same for writing them on their hands and foreheads. The use of them was very common in our Saviour's time, not only in Judæa, but likewise among the Indian Jews, the Persians, and Babylonians, according to St. Jerom. [Hieronym. in Matt.xxiii. Ita & Theophylact.] And long before, the Doctors, whom the High-Priest Eleazar sent to Ptolemy Philadelphus, King of Egypt, spoke of these Phylacteries as things at all times received among them, and refer'd the beginning of them to Moses.

They add, to confirm this opinion, that in the time of Moses, the Heathens carried abundance of charms and superstitious preservatives about them, and even some things which were filthy and immodest; that he, to cure his people of these bad customs, or prevent them, and secure them from them, enjoined them to wear upon their hands and foreheads Phylacteries, or Preservatives of another sort, that is to say, the sacred words of his ordinances.

Others on the contrary maintain that the precepts of Moses which mention these writings on the doors, the signs upon their hands, and Frontlets between their eyes, should be taken in a figurative and allegorical sense, as meaning that they should be very careful to preserve the remembrance of God's Law, and observe his Commands; that they should always have them before them, and never forget them. It is certain that before the Babylonish Captivity, not the least footsteps of them were to be seen in the history of the Jews. The Prophets never inveighed against the omission or neglect of this practice; nor was there ever any question concerning them in the reformation of manners at any time proposed among the old Hebrews. We know nothing of the time wherein the work was written, which contains the history of the supposed version of the Septuagint, and the sending seventy Doctors, by the High-Priest Eleazar: nay, the Learned are at present well agreed, that this whole history is a fiction, and scarce older than Josephus and Philo. The received and almost general custom over all the East, of wearing Phylacteries and Frontlets, determines nothing either for the antiquity or usefulness of this practice. Jesus Christ did not absolutely condemn it; in itself it is very indifferent; but he condemned the abuse of them, which consisted in the Pharisees wearing them with affectation, and of a larger size than the generality of the Jews. The Caraite Jews, who adhere only to the letter of the Law, 7 M and despise the vain traditions of the Pharisees, do still at this day call other Jews, bridled Asses, because they wear these Tephilims and Frontlets[1]. See hereafter PHYLACTERIES.

Fruit

FRUIT. By Fruit is sometimes meant [Ps. lvii. 12. Prov. i. 31. Ib. vii. 3. Ps. cxxxii. 12. Is. x. 12.] reward. Si utique est fructus justo. And Solomon, Comedent fructus viæ suæ: They shall receive the reward of their bad conduct. The Fruit of the body signifies children; Of the Fruit of thy body shall I set upon thy seat. De fructu ventris tui ponam super sedem tuam. The Fruit of the lips; the punishment or reward of his words, according as they are bad or good. I will punish the Fruit of the stout heart of the King of Assyria. Visitabo super fructum magnifici cordis Regis Assyriæ. I will punish him for his insolent discourses against me. Uncircumcised Fruit, or impure, whereof there is mention in Leviticus, is the Fruitb for the three first years of a tree newly planted; it was reputed unclean, and no one was permitted to eat of it in all this time. In the fourth year it was offered to the Lord; after which it was common, and generally eaten. The Fruits of the Spirit spoken of by St. [Gal. v. 22. Philip. i. 11. James iii. 18. Rom. vii. 5.] Paul, are love, joy, peace. The Fruits of righteousness, mentioned by the same Apostle, are sown in peace. Irregular passions and carnal dispositions produce the Fruits of death: Ut fructificarent morti; they are mortal to the soul.

Fulness

[Ps. l. 12. 1 Chr. xvi. 32. Deut. xxxiii. 16.] FULNESS. Plenitudo. The Scripture often makes use of this word, to signify things very different; Plenitudo pugilli, a handful, as much as the hand will hold. Plenitudo Gomer, a full Omer. Plenitudo agri, a full field. The world and the Fulness thereof; the world and all that it contains. Let the Sea roar, and the Fulness thereof; let it roar with the noise and agitation of its waves, and every thing included in it, let it pay its homage to the Lord. For the precious things of the earth, and the Fulness thereof. Let the blessings of God descend plentifully upon Joseph, let the earth and the fields thereof be filled with all manner of riches.

FURROWS. Sulci. The Sacred writers sometimes borrow similitudes from Furrows, which it is of importance to explain [Job xxxi. 38.] in this place. Job, If my land cry against me, or that the Furrows likewise thereof complain; if I have imployed poor plowmen to till my ground, without paying [Ps. lxv. 10.] them for their pains. The Psalmist, Thou watererest the ridges thereof abundantly, thou settlest the Furrows thereof, thou breakest the clods of it, according to the [Ecclus. xxxviii. 27.] Hebrew. The Author of Ecclesiasticus says, that all the plowmen's great care is to stir the earth, and form Furrows; Cor suum dabit ad versandos sulcos. So much for the literal sense of this word.

The same Author says in the figurative sense of it, Sow not upon the Furrows of unrighteousness, for if thou sowest iniquity, thou shalt reap all sorts of evils and mismisfortunes. See Galat. iv. 7. The Prophet Hosea; Judgment springeth up as hemlock in the Furrows of the field. Would to God this people were under my hand, then would I remove Abimelech. Zebul, Governor of the city for Abimelech, having heard these discourses, informed Abimelech of them, who thereupon came against him with an army. Gaal went out of the city, and at first stood near the gates, not being very sure, whether it were Abimelech's army or not, that appeared at a distance. But Abimelech coming nearer Gaal, advanced to engage him; but was defeated, and compelled to fly. He attempted to get into Schechem, but Zebul prevented him; and the Scripture does not tell us what afterwards became of him.

Gabael

GABAEL, or Gabelus, of the Tribe of Naphtali, having been carried into captivity [Tob. i. 16, 17.] beyond the Euphrates, with Tobit his relation, settled at Rages, a city of Media. He borrowed ten talents of Silver of his kinsman Tobit. These ten talents were [In the year of the World 3281, before J. C. 717, before the Vulgar Æra 721.] worth four thousand five hundred pounds, reckoning an Hebrew talent at fifty Mina's, or four hundred and fifty pounds.

Tobit believing himself to be near his end, sent his son Tobias to Rages, to desire the payment of this debt from his cousin Gabael. But Tobias having married at Ecbatane, by the advice of the Angel Raphaël, who under the name of Azarias, was his guide, and not being able to go himself to Rages, he intreated Azarias, his conductor, to go thither, and bring the sum back with him, which was due from Gabael. Azarias acquitted himself of this commission, brought the ten Talents, and Gabael, whom he had persuaded to come to Tobias's wedding at Ecbatane. The Hebrew and Greek Texts of Tobit imply, that the Talents which Tobias was to see repaid, were not lent, but left in trust with Gabael, and as such were received by him from Tobit.

Gabinius

GABINIUS. The Roman history mentions several persons of this name. He, of whom we now propose to speak, was called Aulus Gabinius. He had a considerable employment in Pompey's army, and was sent [In the Year of the World 3940, before J.C. 60, before the Vulg. Æra 64. Antiq. l. 14. c. 6, 7, & seq.] by this General to Jerusalem, in order to receive the money which Antigonus had promised Pompey. But Antigonus not keeping his word, Gabinius was obliged to return without doing any thing. Hereupon Pompey coming to besiege Jerusalem, took the City and Temple, and sent Antigonus prisoner to Rome with his children. Alexander, the son of Aristobulus, having made his escape, [De Bello, l. 1. c. 5. ad finem.] returned into Judæa, got some troops together, and began to disturb the Province. But Gabinius being made Consul, and coming into Syria in the room of Scaurus in the year of the World 3946, before Jesus Christ 54, before the Vulgar Æra 58, marched against him, beat him, and compelled him to shut himself up in the castle of Alexandrium. After this, Gabinius running over [Antiq. l. 14. c. 10. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 6.] Judæa, repaired several Cities which had been destroy'd during the preceding wars, such as Samaria, Azotus, Scythopolis, Anthedon, Apollonia, Jamnia, Raphia, Dora, Marissa, Gaza, and some others.

In the mean time, the Romans besieged Alexander in Alexandrium, and Gabinius having pacified the Province, and repaired the several Cities lately named, returned to the siege of Alexandrium. Alexander seeing himself pressed very close, desired peace, and obtained it, upon condition of surrendring the fortresses in his power; which Gabinius ordered all to be razed to the ground, by the advice of Alexander's mother, who was afraid lest these places might furnish her son with new occasions of [Petav. de doctr. temporum, l. 2. c. 26.] rebelling against the Romans.

Lastly, Gabinius restored Hircanus at Jerusalem, confirmed to him the dignity of the High-Priesthood, settled Governours and Judges in the Province, for the government of the people, so that Judæa from a Monarchy became an Aristocracy. There were Courts of Justice at Jerusalem, Gadara, (or at Dora) Amathus, Jericho, and Sephoris: that so the people finding Judges in all quarters of the country, who were to take cognizance of their differences, might not be obliged to go far from the place of their habitation. There are some learned men, who are of opinion, that the [Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 11. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 6.] establishment of the Sanhedrim owed its original to Gabinius.

Josephus affirms, that Gabinius sent Aristobulus and his sons, with a letter to the Senate, wherein he said, that he had promised the mother of the young princes, the sons of Aristobulus, that they should immediately be sent back again into Judæa, which was punctually executed; the Senate keeping Aristobulus still in bonds, but sending back his sons Alexander and Antigonus into Judæa. Some time after, Gabinius marched against the Parthians: but when he was come as far as their frontiers, and had already passed the Euphrates, he received money from Ptolemy Auletes, King of Egypt, and giving over his first design, carried his army into Egypt, to the assistance of this Prince, against whom [Vide Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 10. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 6.] the people of Alexandria had rebelled.

In the year of the World 3949, before Jesus Christ 51, before the Vulgar Æra 55, Crassus was sent into Syria in the room of Gabinius, who upon his return to Rome, was warmly prosecuted by the Syrians for oppressing them; and Cicero, who looked upon him as the principal author of his banishment, displayed all the vehemence of his rhetorick against him: so that it was thought a great piece of good fortune, that he got off with exile. He continued under this sentence till Julius Cæsar recalled him. He returned to Syria as Triumvir, about the year of the World 3963, and shewed great friendship there to Phasael and Herod, in consideration of the services which he had received from Antipater sixteen years before, when he made war in Judæa.

Gabriel

GABRIEL. One of the principal Angels [Dan. viii. 16. ix. 21. xi. 1, & seq.] in heaven. His name signifies the strength of God. He was sent to the prophet Daniel, in order to explain to him his visions of the ram and goat, and the mystery [Dan. x.13. & 21.] of the seventy Weeks, which had been revealed to him. Gabriel told Daniel, that he had had a conflict with the Prince of the Persians one and twenty days, and that no one came to his assistance but Michael the Prince of the Hebrew people. Who this Prince of Persia was, with whom Gabriel had disputed, no one knows. Some will have him to be the tutelary Angel of this people; others, the King of Persia. See the Commentators upon this particular.

The same Angel Gabriel was sent to [In the Year of the World 3999, fifteen or sixteen months before the birth of J.C.a Luke i. 11.& seq.] Zechary, to declare to him the future birth of John the Baptist a; and as Zechary could not believe, that he who was so old could have a son, his wife Elizabeth too not being in a condition to conceive; the Angel said to him, I am Gabriel, who stand in the presence of God, and am sent to speak unto thee, and to shew thee these glad tidings: but because thou believest not my words, thou shalt be dumb, and not able to speak, until the day that these things shall be performed.

[In the year of the World 4000, nine or ten months before the birth of J.C.b Luke i. 26, &c.] Six months after this event, the same Angel Gabriel was sent to Nazareth to a virgin, whose name was Mary b, espoused or only betrothed to Joseph, according to the opinion of several Interpreters. To her he said, Hail thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women. Mary was disturbed at this discourse; but the Angel said to her, Fear not, Mary, for thou hast found favour with God. And behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign eternally over the house of Jacob. Mary asked him, how all this should be executed; and the Angel answered, The Holy Ghost shall descend upon thee, and the power of the Most High shall overshadow thee: therefore also that Holy thing which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God. And lest this should seem incredible to thee, behold, thy cousin Elizabeth hath also conceived a son in her old age, and she is now in her sixth month; to shew thee, that nothing is impossible with God. And Mary said, Behold the handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word. At the same time the Angel went away, and disappeared.

It was probably the same angel Gabriel, who appeared to Joseph, when he was thinking to forsake the holy Virgin, and injoined him to retire to Egypt at the time when Herod was resolved to put all the infants in Bethlehem to death; and, lastly, who warned him to return into Judæa, after the decease of Herod. The Cabalists say, that Gabriel was the patriarch Joseph's master or preceptor.

[D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient.] The Eastern people add several things to what the Scripture informs us of, concerning the Angel Gabriel. The Mahometans call him the faithful Spirit; and the Persians, in the way of metaphor, the Peacock of Heaven, or Paradise. We read in the second chapter of the Alcoran, that whosoever is an enemy to Gabriel, shall be confounded. They believe, as well as we, that this Archangel declared to the blessed Virgin, that she should bring forth Jesus Christ. They say, Gabriel is guardian of the heavenly treasuries, that is to say, of revelations: That the Jews always complained of Gabriel, and employed the assistance of Michael against him; for Michael was always favourable to them: nay, they said, if Mahomet had made use of Michael, and not of Gabriel, we should all have followed him. It was Gabriel, as they believe, who brought those revelations to Mahomet their false Prophet, which he published: it was he who conducted him to heaven, mounted on the Alborak; (this is an animal of a middle size between an ass and a mule, upon which he rode, when he ascended up to heaven at Jerusalem.) Lastly, Gabriel is a friend to Mussulmen, because he served the Messiah, whom they reverence, and an enemy to the Jews, who rejected him.

To these extravagancies they add, that the Themudites, an ancient tribe of Arabians which is extinct, having refused to hearken to the instructions of the patriarch Salah, were threatned with speedy death, that is to say, in three days time. These three days they employed in digging pits, to secure themselves from the storm they apprehended. Upon the fourth day they took courage, believing the time of punishment to be passed, and went out of their houses. But the Archangel Gabriel appeared to them, having his feet resting on the earth, and his head exalted as high as heaven. His wings extended from East to West, and his hair, which was as red as coral, covered the whole horizon. The Themudites being frightned at this sight, threw themselves into their holes: but Gabriel raising his voice, cried out to them, Die, for ye are cursed of God, who has condemned you. At the same time the earth trembled, all the houses in the country were overthrown, and the Themudites buried under their ruins.

Gad had seven sons, Ziphion and Haggai, Shuni and Ezbon, Eri and Arodi, and [Gen. xlvi. 16. Gen. xlix. 19.] Areli. Jacob giving Gad his blessing, said, A troop shall overcome him, but he shall overcome at the last. Gad having received his allotment beyond Jordan, with the tribe of Reuben, and the half-tribe of Manasseh, marched in arms at the head of Israel, to assist in the conquest of the land of Canaan, on this side the river. Gad returned some time after, well armed and loaded with spoil.

Moses in his last song speaks likewise of Gad in these terms; Blessed is he that enlargeth Gad; he dwelleth as a lion, and teareth the arm with the crown of the head. And he provideth the first part for himself, because there, in a portion of the Lawgiver, was he seated; and he came with the heads of the people, he executed the justice of the Lord, and his judgements with Israel; by marching at the head of his people in the war against the Canaanites. Moses died on mount Nebo, and was buried in a [Deut. xxxiv. 1, & seq.] neighbouring valley, beyond Jordan; where Gad had received his inheritance. The Author of the Testament of the twelve Patriarchs, commends the Patriarch Gad for his great strength of body; but we do not care to make use of the authority of a writer so fabulous as this is.

The tribe of Gad came out of Egypt in number forty-five thousand six hundred [Numb. i. 20, 21.] and fifty men. After the defeat of the Kings Og and Sehon, Gad and Reuben desired Moses, that he would please to appoint them their division in the new conquered countries, alledging the great number [Numb. xxxii. 1, 3, &c.] of cattle belonging to them. Moses granted their request, upon condition, and with a charge, that they should accompany their brethren in the conquest of the land beyond Jordan, which the Lord had [Numb. xxii. 28.] promised them. Thus Gad had his inheritance between Reuben to the south, and Manasseh to the north, with the mountains of Gilead to the east, and Jordan to the west. See the Map.

Gad (II)

[2 Sam. xxiv. 11.] II. GAD, a Prophet, David's friend, who followed him during his misfortunes, while he was persecuted by Saul, and was at all times very much attached to him. The Scripture styles him a Prophet, and David's Seer; probably, because God had appointed him to assist this Prince, and foretell what should happen to him. The first time we find him with this Prince, is, when he fled into the land of Moab, there to secure his father [1 Sam. xxii. 5.] and mother, in the first [year of the World 2944, before J. C. 1056, before the Vulgar Æra 1060. a In the year of the World 2987, before J. C. 1013, before the Vulgar Æra 1017. b 2 Sam. xxiv. 12, 13. & 1 Chr. xxi. 11.] year of his flight, and Saul's persecution. As David therefore was in the land of Moab, the prophet Gad warned him to leave it, and return into the land of Judah.

After that David had taken a resolution to number his people a, the Lord sent the prophet Gad to him, who told him b, that God gave him the choice of three scourges, which he was preparing for him; either he might chuse seven years famine, or to fly three months before his enemies, or three days pestilence. David preferred the latter; and God, in consideration of his humiliation, was pleased to shorten the time which he had appointed for the plague to rage in; commanding the destroying Angel to sheath his sword, and to cease making any further slaughter. After which, Gad came to David, and advised him to erect an Altar to the Lord in the threshing-floor of Ornan, or Araunah, the Jebusite. Gad wrote a volume of David's life, which is cited in the first book of Chronicles xxix. 29. This is all that we know of this Prophet.

III. GAD, an heathen deity, mentioned in several passages of Scripture. For example, Isaiah lxv. 11. Ye are they that prepare a table for Gad, and that furnish the drink-offering unto Meni. There is a place in Palestine called Baal-Gad, or the God Gad[1]; and we are assured, that the Arabians call the planet Jupiter, and whatsoever is good and beneficent, Gad. We are of opinion, that in the passage cited from Isaiah, it signifies the Sun; and that St. Jerom, who translates it, Qui ponitis fortunæ mensam, by Gad understood good Fortune. Accordingly, they who of old used to cast nativities, believed the Sun to be a sign of good Genius, and the moon of [See our Comment upon Gen. xxx. 11. De Bello, l. 5. c. 3. Gadara GADARA, a celebrated City beyond Jordan. Josephus says, it was the capital of Peræa, situated eastward of the lake of Tiberias, sixty furlongs from the shore. Pliny affirms it to be situated upon the river Hieramace. It gave its name to a canton beyond Jordan. Pompey repaired Gadara in consideration of Demetrius his freed-man, who was a native of this city. Gabinius settled there one of the five Courts of Justice erected by him in Judæa. Polybius says, Antiochus the Great laid siege to Gadara, which was thought to be one of the strongest places in the country, and that it was surrendered to him upon composition. Epiphanius speaks of the hot baths of Gadara. We find many old medals of this city, and some of its ancient bishops in the subscriptions of Councils.

[Mark v. 1.] St. Mark says, that our Saviour having passed passed the sea of Tiberias, came into the canton of the Gadarenes, &c. St. Luke says the same, chap. viii. 26. in the Greek. St. Matthew, chap. viii. 28. calls it the country of the Gergasenes[1]: but some of the Greek copies read likewise Gaderenes. Origen [Origen. Comment. in Joan.] thinks, we should read Gergasenes. See M. Mill's various readings, and our Comment on St. Matthew, ch. viii. 28.

Gaius

[Acts xix. 29.] GAIUS, St. Paul's Disciple, spoken of in the Acts. Gaius was probably a Macedonian: but he was settled at Corinth, where [Rom. xv. 23. Gaius hospes meus.] he had the honour to lodge St. Paul during his abode there. When the Apostle went into Asia, Gaius and Aristarchus accompanied him as far as Ephesus, where they abode for some time with St. Paul; so that in the sedition raised in this City about Diana of Ephesus, the Ephesians ran in great numbers to the house of Gaius and Aristarchus, and dragg'd them to the Theater. St. Paul himself had a mind to go thither, but was prevented by his friends. However, no harm happened either to Gaius or Aristarchus, because the commotion was appeased by the prudence of the Town-Clerk. Origen speaks of one Gaius, St. Paul's Disciple, who was said to have [Origen. in Rom. xvi. p. 632. Constitut. l. 7. c. 46.] been made Bishop of Thessalonica.

II. GAIUS, to whom St. John wrote his third Epistle, was, in the opinion of several writers, the same as Gaius, St. Paul's Disciple, and his host at Corinth. Others think, that Gaius, to whom St. John addresses his third Epistle, was he who is mentioned in the Acts xx. 4. who was at Derbe in Lycaonia, and consequently is very different from Gaius the Macedonian. The Constitutions of the Apostles imply, that St. John established one Gaius in the bishoprick of Pergamus; and the author of [Athanas. Synop. p. 155.] the additions to St. Athanasius's Synopsis, seems to believe, that the Style of St. John's Gospel was Gaius's, who was St. Paul's host. It is much more probable, that this was Gaius of Derbe, whom we are speaking of in this article.

Galatia

GALATIA, a Province in Asia the less, having Cappadocia to the east, Bithynia to the west, Pamphylia to the south, and the Euxine-sea to the north. Some troops of the Gauls having invaded Asia minor, made a conquest of this country, settled in it, and called it Galatia, which in Greek signifies Gaul.

[He preached there first of all in the year of J.C. 51. Acts xvi. 6. and afterwards in the year 54. Acts xviii. 23. 1 Pet. i. 1.] The Galatians, to whom St. Paul wrote one of his Epistles, were descended from these ancient Gauls. St. Paul preached several times in their country, and formed a considerable Church there. It is credible that he was the first, who preached there to the Gentiles; but there is room to presume, that St. Peter had before preached there to the Jews, since his first Epistle is directed to the Jews scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, &c. And the Jews who had been converted by St. Peter, were they, in all probability, who occasioned those disturbances among the Gentile Converts of the same nation; which gave St. Paul an opportunity of writing his Epistle, wherein he takes pains principally to establish his character of an Apostle, which was by some disputed, with an intention to place him below St. Peter, who preached generally to the Jews only, and observed the ceremonies of the Law. He shews afterwards the unprofitableness of these ceremonies, and of circumcision: he stands up with great resolution against those false teachers, who endeavoured to disparage him, and to destroy his authority: lastly, he gives them some excellent precepts for the regulation of their manners, and the better maintaining the purity of Chri- Christianity. The subscriptions which we read in the Greek editions of this Epistle, shew that it was written from Rome. Theodoret thinks it was the first of those, [Theodoret. in Paul. Proleg. p. 5. Hieronym. in Galat. vi. 11.] which St. Paul wrote from this City; and St. Jerom will have it, that he penned it, while he was a prisoner. But we chuse rather to follow that opinion, which asserts it to have been written from Ephesus in the year of Jesus Christ 55.

[2 Macc. viii. 20.] In the books of the Maccabees, it is said, that Judas Maccabæus exhorting his people to fight valiantly against the Syrians, related to them several examples of God's protection of the Hebrews; and among others, that which they experienced in a battle fought in Babylonia, wherein six thousand Jews killed an hundred and twenty thousand Galatians. The Greek is more circumstantial; that tells us, that the Galatians coming to attack the army of the Jews in Babylonia, which consisted but of eight thousand men, assisted by four thousand Macedonians, and these last wanting resolution to engage the enemy, the Jews alone, tho' their numbers were so inconsiderable, defeated an hundred and twenty thousand Galatians. The Scripture giving us no particulars of the time or other circumstances of this defeat, we can say nothing certain of them. It is very probable, that in this place the Galatians were not meant, who were settled in Galatia, but the Gauls, who at that time over-run Asia. The Greek, Galatai, is taken equally for one and t'other.

Galilee

[Acts v. 37. Joseph. Antiq. l. xx. c. 3. Ib. l. 2. de Bello, c. 13. & Plin. l. 5. c. 15. Euseb. in Isai. ix.] GALILEE, a Province in Palestine. It extends itself principally into the northern part of Palestine, beyond the Plain of Jezreel, or the Great Plain. It is divided into upper and lower Galilee. Lower Galilee extends itself into the Tribes of Zebulun, Asher, and Naphtali, on this side Jordan, westward of the Sea of Tiberias. Upper Galilee extends itself principally beyond Jordan, inclining towards the Trachonitis, Libanus, and Batanæa. It was called Galilee of the Gentiles, because it was in the possession of the Gentiles, with Jews interspersed among them; or rather because it bordered upon Gentile nations, such as the Phœnicians, Syrians, and Arabians.

[Joseph. de Bello, l. 3. c. 2. p. 832.] As what we have said of Galilee's extending itself beyond Jordan, admits of some difficulty, it is necessary to support our assertion with some proofs. Judas Gaulanites is called the Galilæan in the Acts, and in Josephus. Now Gaulan was beyond Jordan; Galilee therefore extended itself into this country. Besides, Josephus places Bethsaida on the other side of Jordan; this city was certainly part of Galilee, and such of the Apostles as were of Bethsaida, are called Galilæans; Galilee therefore, part of it at least, reached beyond Jordan. Eusebius, in his Comment on Isaiah, says clearly that Galilee lay on the other side Jordan. The Septuagint in Isaiah xxxiii. 9. translate Basan, Galilee. Now no one questions but that Basan was beyond Jordan. St. Jerom in his Comment on this passage of Isaiah, remarks, that these Interpreters have put the name of a Province for a certain place in that Province. He believed therefore, that Basan was in Galilee. For this opinion see Lightfoot[1], and Cellarius[2]; and for the contrary opinion, Reland. Palæstin. t. 1. l. 1. c. 31. p. 181. See likewise our Dissertation on the Geography of Scripture prefixed to our Comment upon Joshua.

Josephus sets out the limits of Galilee in this manner. It is terminated westward, says he, by the City of Ptolemaïs, and Mount Carmel, (which do not belong to Galilee;) on the South side it is bounded by the country of Samaria and Scythopolis, which is situated upon the river Jordan. Its Eastern limits are the cantons of Hippos, Gadara and Gaulan. Lastly, on the North side, the confines of the Tyrians are its bounds.

Lower GALILEE reaches in length from Tiberias, as far as Chabulon, or Zabulon, the frontier of Ptolemaïs; and in width from Chaloth, situated in the Great Plain, as far as Bersabee: and the breadth of Upper Galilee begins at Bersabee, and extends as far as the town of Baca, which separates it from the Province of the Tyrians. Its length reaches from Tella, a village situated upon the river Jordan, to Meroth. But as the exact situation of these places Bersabee, Chaloth, Baca, Tella, and Meroth, is not known, we cannot accurately describe the extent of Upper Galilee.

Josephus says, that the Galilæans were naturally good soldiers, bold and intrepid, that they always bravely resisted the foreign nations that surrounded them; that this country was fruitful and well cultivated, and that the people were very laborious and industrious. That the number of towns and villages in it was very great, and that all these places were so well peopled, peopled, that the least towns did not contain less than fifteen thousand inhabitants.

Every one knows, that our Saviour was surnamed Galileean, because he was brought up at Nazareth, a city of Galilee. His Disciples, and Christians in general, were likewise called Galileeans[3], because [Matth. iv. 15. Isai. ix. 1, 2.] the Apostles were of Galilee. St. Matthew applies these words of Isaiah to the preaching of our Saviour; The land of Zebulon and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the sea beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles; the people which sat in darkness, saw great light. The Galileeans were not thought to be very knowing in matters of Religion, and the Jews did not believe that a Prophet would come out of Galilee. Their [John vii. 41, 52. Matth. xxvi. 73.] language and their accent were different from those of the other Jews of the Country. St. Peter was known to be a Galileean by his accent.

Galileeans (II)

II. GALILEEANS, a Sect of the Jews, which sprung up in Judæa, some years after the birth of our Saviour. One Judas, a native of Gaulan, in upper Galilee, was the author of it, about the year of the world 4010, upon the occasion of Augustus's appointing the people to be mustered; which order was executed by Quirinius, in the [See Luke ii. 1. Acts v. 37. and the Comment upon Acts v. 37.] tenth year of Jesus Christ, ten years after the death of Herod the Great, in the last year of Augustus, and after the banishment of Archelaüs. This numbering of the people was very different from that which was made at our Saviour's birth.

[Joseph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 2.] Judas the Gaulanite, or Galileean, pretended, that the tax established by the Romans, and regulated by Quirinius, was a manifest instance of servitude, which all true Israelites ought to oppose with all their power. These discourses made an impression upon the people's minds: many of them joined Judas, took arms, and began a kind of civil war, which, properly speaking, was not concluded till the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple. The Disciples of Judas were called Galileeans, because Judas himself was of Upper Galilee, and his followers, for the most part, were of the same Province. They were likewise called Herodians, because the kingdom of Herod the Tetrarch included Galilee beyond Jordan, and the neighbouring places about Gaulan, Judas's country. See our Dissertation concerning the Sects of the Jews, prefixed to St. Luke, and the article Herodians.

The Galileeans, according to Josephus, agreed in every thing with the Pharisees. The only thing which distinguished them, was, an excessive love of liberty; being strongly prejudiced with this principle, That God alone is the Head and Prince, whom we are to obey. In the Gospel we find them mentioned by the name of Herodians [Matth. xxi.16,17.] , who addressed themselves to our Lord, and asked him, if it were lawful or not to pay tribute to Cæsar. This was the great question, and principal object of their sect. When Jesus Christ appeared before [Luk. xxiii. 2.] Pilate, his accusers would have rendred him suspected of this heresy, saying, that they found him perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar.

Gall

GALL. We shall hereafter speak of the Wine mixt with Gall which was presented to our Saviour while he hung upon the cross, Matth. xxvii. 34. See the article WINE, wherein we endeavour to reconcile St. Matthew with St. Mark, the former of whom speaks of Wine mingled with Gall, the other of Wine mingled with Myrrh. The Prophet Habakkuk likewise mentions Gall mixt with Wine, as made use of to intoxicate. [Hab. ii. 13.] Væ qui potum dat amico suo mittens fel suum, & inebrians, ut aspiciat nuditatem ejus. We believe the Prophet's intention was, to hint at the conduct of Pharaoh Hophrah, King of Egypt, towards King Zedekiah: he promised Zedekiah his assistance, and engaged him to rebel against Nebuchadnezzar; but in his necessity he failed him. He gave him Gall to drink, and made him drunk, that he might have the pleasure of seeing his nakedness. The Rabbins relate, that it was Nebuchadnezzar, who one day at an entertainment with his friends, sent for Zedekiah, and gave him an intoxicating liquor to drink, purposely to expose him to ridicule.

But why is Gall mingled with it? Gall is a powerful Digestive; the Ethiopians use it instead of mustard. When Moses commands the Paschal Lamb to be eaten with bitterness, he may be very well understood to mean Gall. Gall mingled with Wine makes it pass the quicker, and consequently get [Deut. xxxii. 32, 33.] sooner into the head. Moses threatens the Israelites from God to make their grapes, Grapes of Gall; and their Wine the Poison of Dragons: that is to say, to change the sweetness of their grapes into bitterness, and their wine into poison; which, instead of nourishing, and making them chearful, would intoxicate and destroy them. We see by Tobit, that the Gall of a fish was of use in [Tob. vi. 5 xi. 8, 13. Plin. l. 28 c. 9.] curing his eyes. Pliny takes notice of the use which was made of Gall for fore eyes: Ad oculorum medicamenta uti [De Bello, l. 4. c. 1. Jer. viii. 14 ix. 15. Lam. v. 19. Psal. lxix. 21. Joseph. de Bello, l. 4. c. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. in Græco, seu c. 1, 2, 3. in Lat.] lius habetur. In Jeremiah, To give water of Gall to drink, denotes some very bitter affliction. And the Psalmist says, that his enemies, or rather the enemies of the Messiah, offered him Gall to eat, and Vinegar to drink. The Gall of bitterness, in the Acts viii. 23. signifies hatred, sharpness, malice, envy, &c.

Gallio

GALLIO, Seneca the Philosopher's brother, was before called Marcus Annæus Novatus; but having been adopted by Lucius Junius Gallio, he took the name of his adoptive father. The Emperor Claudius made him Proconsul of Achaia; and in the year of Jesus Christ 53, in the reign of Nero, he was again Proconsul of this Province. He was a man of a mild, agreeable temper. His brother Seneca dedicated his books of Anger to him. He had his share in the misfortunes of his brothers, when they were out of favour, as well as in their prosperity, when they were well at Court; and Nero at last put him to death, as well as them. The Jews being enraged at St. Paul, for converting many of the Gentiles, dragg'd him to Gallio's tribunal, who, as Proconsul, resided generally at Corinth. They accused him with teaching men to worship God contrary to the Law. And Paul being upon the point of speaking for himself, Gallio told the Jews, that if the matter in question were a breach of justice, or an action of a criminal nature, he should think himself obliged to hear them with patience; but as the dispute was only concerning their law, he left them to determine their differences as they pleased; for he would not be judge of them: and so ordered them to retire. Gamaliel (II)

II. GAMALIEL, Doctor of the Law, by sect a Pharisee, was St. Paul's master, as likewise St. Barnabas's and St. Stephen's, if some writers are to be believed. Shortly after the descent of the Holy Ghost, which happened on the day of Pentecost, the Jews desiring the death of St. Peter, whom they had brought before the assembly of their Priests, Gamaliel required that the Apostles should retire for some time: this being done, he spake to the Assembly in these terms: Take heed to yourselves what ye intend to do as touching these men. For before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody, to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themselves: who was slain, and all as many as obeyed him were scattered and brought to nought. After this man rose up Judas of Galilee, in the days of the taxing, (under Quirinius) and drew away much people after him: he also perished, and all, even as many as obeyed him, were dispersed. And now I say unto you, refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found [Vide Lucian. de Sancto Stephano, c. 5, ad finem t. x. Oper. S. Aug. nov. edit.] even to fight against God. Gamaliel's advice was followed, and the Apostles were set at liberty.

After the death of St. Stephen, Gamaliel encouraged the Christians to go by night and carry off his body, and lent them his chariot to go and bury it in the lands belonging to himself, at seven or eight leagues distance from Jerusalem, [In the year of J. C. 37, of the Vulgar Æra 34. Phot. Cod. 171. Lucian. de Sancto Stephano.] which from him were called Caphar Gamala, Gamala's or Gamaliel's field. It is said, that Nicodemus was Gamaliel's nephew or cousin; and that in consideration of the latter, the Jews, instead of putting Nicodemus to death, were content only with banishing him. It is not doubted, but that Gamaliel embraced the faith of Jesus Christ: but at what time he was converted, or by whom he was baptized, no one knows. He had two sons, one, whose name was Abibas, who was baptized with his father; the other called Sedemias, or Selemias, who refused to embrace Christianity . They did not long survive their baptism, and were buried in the same cave, dug within a rock, where Stephen's body had been laid, but in different coffins. The circumstances which we have here related of Gamaliel's life, are for the most part to be met with in the history written by Lucian, concerning the discovery of St. Stephen's body, and printed in St. Austin's works of the new edition, at the end of the tenth tome .

Some have believed Gamaliel, who is mentioned in the Acts, to be the same with Gamaliel of Japhneh or Dibanah, who, according to the Jewish Doctors, succeeded Jochanan in the dignity of Patriarch of the [See Basnage hist. des Juifs, t. 2. l. 4. c. 3. art. 11.] West. It had been concerted to kill Gamaliel, together with his father, after the taking of Jerusalem; but Titus, at the instance of Jochanan, gave him his life. He escaped a second time, when Turnus Rufus plowed up the very spot on which the Temple stood. His severity was so great, that they were obliged to set bounds to his authority: some maintain that he was even deposed from his office; but others affirm, his authority to have been so great, that not only the Jews over the whole universe, but even foreign Kings allowed the execution of it, without there being so much as one who opposed it.

Samuel the less was living at that time, and he it was who composed the prayer against hereticks, which has been ever since recited solemnly in the synagogues. They beg of God, that there may be no hope for apostates; that all hereticks may perish by a sudden death; that the reign of pride may be in our days interrupted and destroyed. Blessed be thou, O Lord God, who destroyest the wicked, and humblest the proud. Some have imagined this Samuel the less to be the same with St. Paul. They have made Saul of Samuel by taking away the Mem. The Greek, Gaulos, signifies small. Saul or Paul [Samuel.] was Contemporary with, and Disciple to Gamaliel.

The time wherein they lived is not absolutely inconsistent with what Saint Luke relates of Gamaliel. He gave his opinion in the assemby of the Priests in the 32d year of the Vulgar Æra. He was witness to the taking of Jerusalem in the 70th year of the Vulgar Æra. In some short time afterwards he might have succeeded Jochanan in the dignity of Patriarch of his Nation. There is more difficulty with relation to Samuel the less, whom they will have to be the same with St. Paul. The Jewish authors suppose that he died in the profession of Judaism; and we know that St. Paul became an early convert to Christianity. The prayer which is ascribed to Samuel the less, is almost all against the Christians, and it appears that he was in great authority, when he composed it; whereas St. Paul was very young when he embraced Christianity.

There is no express mention made of it in the Scripture, and the reason of our giving it a place here, is only because some pretend that this was the river Pison spoken of by Moses, which was one of the four, that flowed out of Eden. But it is too far from the Tigris and Euphrates, which were certainly two of the rivers of Paradise, for any one to believe, that Pison proceeded from the same spring. It is above twelve hundred leagues from the Euphrates.

Gaons

GAONS. A certain Order of Jewish Doctors is called by this name, who appeared in the East after the closing of the Talmud. The word Gaons signifies excellent, sublime, as in our Divinity-Schools we have irrefragable, sublime, resolute, angelick, and subtle Doctors. The Gaons succeeded the Seburæans, or Opiners, about [Basnage hist. des Juifs, t. 6. l. 9. c. 5. art. 3.] the beginning of the sixth Century. Chanan Meischtia was the head and first of Excellents; he restored the Academy of Pandbita, which had been shut up for the space of thirty years.

Among the Excellents is likewise reckoned one Judas the Blind, who taught about the year 763. To him we are obliged for certain lectures which are very much esteemed by his nation. The Jews, to avoid reproaching him with the defect of his eyes, surnamed him, abounding with Lights.

Scherira, one of the Gaons, appeared with much lustre at the close of the tenth century. He divested himself of his office in order to make a cession of it to his son Hai, who was the last of the Excellents. Hai lived in the beginning of the eleventh century, and was esteemed as the most Excellent of the Excellents. He taught till his death, which happened in 1037, and with him ended the Order of the Gaons, which had subsisted 280 or 350, or even 448 years: for as people are not agreed about the time when these Doctors began; so likewise is the continuance of their reign disputed.

Garden

GARDEN, in Latin, Hortus; in Greek, Kepos; Kepos; and in Hebrew, Gan; is generally supposed to mean a Kitchin-Garden. But it [גנGan. Κῆπος. Hortus.] is taken likewise for an Orchard; wherefore that wherein God placed our first Parents, is called the Garden of Eden, or the Garden of Delights. But the Hebrews, to signify an [Ezek. xxxv. 36. Joel ii. 3. פרדסParadise, whence Παράδεισος.] Orchard, more generally make use of the word Paradise, whence the Greek, Paradisos, is derived, which signifies a Garden planted with trees. There is mention sometimes made in Scripture of the King's Gardens, which were either in the City, or near [2 Kings xxi. 18, 26. Isai. i. 29. Isa. lxv. 3. Isai. lxvi. 17.] the walls of Jerusalem. Here was the Royal Burial-place. Isaiah reproaches the Jews with the abominations and acts of Idolatry which they committed in their Gardens; Ye shall be confounded for the Gardens which ye have chosen. These Gardens were consecrated to Venus and Adonis; there they sacrificed; that sacrificeth in Gardens; after which, they thought they were well purified, when they had washed themselves in the water.

Gate

[Deut. xvii. 5, 8. xxv. 6, 7. xxi. 19. xxii. 15. &c.] GATE. We have nothing to remark concerning the material Gates or Doors belonging to the Houses of the old Hebrews, except this, that generally the Posts were of wood: for example, the Gates of the City of Gaza, which Samson carried away upon his [Judg. xvi. 3.] shoulders; that is to say, the Gate, Bars, Posts, and Locks, if there were any, were all carried away together by him. At present, the Doors of Houses and Churches in Palestine are generally very low; to prevent, as is said, the Arabians, who always go on horse-back in that country, from getting in, and doing any thing insolent there. However, I do not observe any thing like it among the old Hebrews.

But the word Gate is often used in Scripture to denote the place of publick Assemblies, where Justice was administred. As the Jews were for the most part employed in labouring in the fields, it was wisely provided, that Assemblies should be held at the City-gates, and Justice administred there in a summary manner, that those laborious men, who were busy at their work, might lose no time, and that the country-people who had affairs upon their hands in the town, might not be obliged to enter, and spend time there. Ne cogerentur agricolæ intrare urbes, & aliquod subire dispendium, Judices in portis residebant, ut tàm urbanos, quàm rusticos, in exitu & introitu urbis audirent, & finito negotio, unusquisque confestim ad sedes proprias revertentur. One [Hieron. in Zech. viii.] particular form of these Judgments is to be seen in that, which was given at the Gate of Bethlehem, between Boaz, and another person, a relation of Naömi's, upon the subject of Ruth's marriage, who was a Moabite; [Ruth iv. 1. Gen. xxiii. 10, 18. Gen. xxii. 17.] and in Abraham's purchase of a field to bury Sarah. The field of Ephron was made sure unto Abraham for a possession in the presence of the children of Heth, before all that went in at the Gate of his city.

The word Gate, Porta, is likewise sometimes put to signify power, dominion; almost in the same manner as the Turkish Emperor's Palace is at this day called the Port. God promises Abraham, that the Posterity of this Patriarch shall possess the Gates of their enemies, their towns, their fortresses: Thy seed shall possess the Gate of his enemies. Jesus Christ says to St. Peter; [Matth. xvi. 18.] Thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my Church, and the Gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

[Bergeron. Voyage de Calpin, c. 10. D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 157. col. 1.] The Scripture remarks, that the idol Dagon, the God of the Philistins, having fallen in the presence of the Ark, and the two hands of this statue having been found upon the threshold of the Temple, the Priests afterwards forbore to tread on it. Therefore neither the Priests of Dagon, nor any that come into Dagon's house, tread on the threshold of Dagon in Ashdod, unto this day. The Prophet[1]

Zephaniah seems to allude to this practice of the Philistins, under the name of those who leap on the threshold. The Vulgate reads, Super omnem qui arroganter ingreditur super limen. But the Hebrew implies, as we have said, against those who leap over the threshold.

Among the Tartars they never walk upon the thresholds of Princes, out of respect to them. The Caliphs of Bagdat obliged all who entred their Palaces to prostrate themselves upon the Door-threshold, wherein they set a piece of the black stone of the Temple at Mecca, to make it more venerable. venerable to the people; who applied their foreheads to it. This threshold was pretty high, and it had been a sin for any one to rest his feet upon it.

The Gates of Hell. King Hezekiah representing [If. xxxviii. 10.] in his hymn the condition he was in when he was sick, explains himself thus; I said in the cutting off of my days, I shall go to the Gates of hell, or of the grave. Jesus [Matth. xvi. 18.] Christ in the Gospel says, that the Gates of Hell shall not prevail against his Church; which is the same thing probably that the [Psal. ix. 15.] Psalmist calls the Gates of death. Qui exaltat me de portis mortis. And in another place, They drew near us to the Gates of [Psal. cvii. 18. Wisd. xvi. 13.] death. And the author of Wisdom, Deducis ad portas mortis. The Hebrews looked upon death, the grave, hell, as a place, whither people came from all parts of the world, there to enter upon another life. We have seen elsewhere what idea they had of the abode of the old giants, who composed a sort of commonwealth under the earth. The Gentiles used expressions much of the same nature; founded, without doubt, upon the same opinions. Achilles, in Homer, says, He [Homer. Iliad.] hates the man who says one thing, and acts another, as he does the Gates of hell.

[Alcoran, chap. of the Stone.] The Mahometans allow seven Gates to hell, and to each assign its particular punishment; the first is that where Mussulmen, who incur the guilt of sin, will be tormented. The second is for Christians. The third for the Jews. The fourth for the Sabians. The fifth for the Magi or Guebres, worshippers of fire. The sixth for Pagans and Idolaters. The seventh and deepest part of the abyss, is for Hypocrites, who make an outward shew of Religion, and have none. Others by these seven Gates understand the seven capital sins. Others the seven principal Members of a man, which are the instruments of sin.

The everlasting Doors mentioned in Psalm xxiv. 7, 9. are the Gates of Heaven. Angels are invited to open them for the reception of our Lord at his return to Heaven. This agrees admirably with the ascension of Jesus Christ.

The Gates of Righteousness; Open to me [Ps. cxviii. 19.] the Gates of Righteousness; are those of the Temple, where the Righteous, the Saints, the Priests of the Lord, the true Israelites pay their vows and praises unto God; where none enter but purified Israelites, a nation of righteous men.

Gath

GATH, a celebrated City of the [1 Sam. vi. 17. 1 Sam. xvii. 4. 2 Sam. viii. 1.] Philistins, and one of their five Principalities. It is famous for having given birth to Goliath. David made a conquest of it in the beginning of his reign over all Israel; and this City continued subject to the Kings his successors till the declension and decay of the Kingdom of Judah. Rehoboam rebuilt or fortified it, 2 Chron. xi. 8. King Uzziah re-conquered it; and Hezekiah once more reduced it under his subjection. Josephus makes it to be a part of the Tribe of Dan: but Joshua takes no notice of it in his distribution of the several Cities among the Tribes of Israel. It is our opinion, that Mithcah, mentioned by Moses, is the same as Metheg in 2 Samuel viii. 1. and that we should translate it, David took Metheg and her mother, instead of, he took the bridle of Tribute, which in the Chronicles is explained by, He took Gath, and her daughters. Gath was the mother, and Metheg the daughter. According to this hypothesis, Gath of the Philistins, the birth-place of giants, must lie a great way in Arabia Petræa, towards Egypt; which is also confirmed by what is said in the Chronicles, that the sons of Ephraim being still in Egypt, attacked the City of Gath, and were there cut in pieces.

St. Jerom says, that there was a large Town called Gath, in the way from Eleutheropolis to Gaza; and Eusebius speaks of another place of the same name, five miles from Eleutheropolis, in the way to Lidda; and consequently different from that which St. Jerom speaks of. The same Eusebius mentions another place called Gath or Gattha, between Jamnia and Antipatris. St. Jerom likewise speaking of Gath-Opher, the place of the Prophet Jonah's birth, says it was called Gath-Opher, or Gath in the canton of Opher, to distinguish it from others of the same name, which were shewn in his time round about Eleutheropolis and Diospolis. Ad distinctionem aliorum Geth urbium, quæ juxta Eleutheropolim, sive Diospolim, hodie quoque monstrantur.

Gath was the most Southern of all the Cities of the Philistins, as Eckron was the most Northern; so that Eckron and Gath are placed as the two boundaries of the land of the Philistins. Gath lay near Mareshah. See 2 Chron. xi. 8. and Micah i. 14. in the Hebrew. Which agrees pretty well with St. Jerom, who places Gath on the road from Eleutheropolis to Gaza. Eleutheropolis is in the neighbourhood of Mareshah or Morashti; and before Eusebius and St. Jerom, we have scarce any knowledge in Geography, of Eleutheropolis. Gath was a place of strength and power in the time of the Prophets Amos and Micah, independant of the Kings of Judah. But, as we have already observed, it was taken by Uzziah King of Judah, while the Prophet Amos was living; and afterwards by Hezekiah, in the Prophet Micah's time. Gethaim, mentioned 2 Sam. iv. 3. and Neh. xi. 33. is without doubt the same as Gath. David had a Company of Gittite Guards, whereof Ethai was the Captain. Gath signifies a Press. Wherefore it is no won der that we find several places of this name in Palestine.

GAULAN, Gaulon, or Golan, a celebrated City beyond Jordan, from whence the small Province called Gaulanitis takes its name. It was given to the Half-tribe of [Deut. iv. 43.] Manasseh on the other side of Jordan. A cession of it was made to the Levites of Gershom's family for a place of abode to them, [Josh. xxi. 27.] and it became a City of refuge. Eusebius says, that in his time the City of Gaulon was still considerable in the Batanæa, or country of Basan: but he does not exactly describe its situation. It is strange, that we should be so little acquainted with the position of so celebrated a City. It was seated in Upper Galilee, beyond Jordan; and Judas of Gaulon, Head of the Galileeans or Herodians, was a native of it. Gaza

GAZA, a City of the Philistins, by [Jos. xv. 47. & 1 Sam. vi. 15.] Joshua made part of the Tribe of Judah. It was one of the five Principalities of the Philistins, situated towards the southern extremity of the promised Land. In the Hebrew text it is called Aza or Hasa with [עזהHazah or Gasa.] an Hain or Ain, which the Septuagint express sometimes by a G. Stephens the Geographer says, that in his time the Syrians still called it Aza. It was situated between Raphia and Askelon. The advantageous situation of Gaza was the cause of the many revolutions to which it has been subject. It first of all belonged to the Philistins, and then to the Hebrews. It recovered its liberty in the reigns of Jotham and Ahaz, and was reconquered by Hezekiah. It was [2 Kings xviii. 8.] subject to the Chaldæans, who conquered Syria and Phœnicia. Afterwards it fell into the hands of the Persians. They were masters of it, when Alexander besieged it, [Vide Plutarch. in Alexandro, & alios. In the year of the World 3672, be-] took and destroyed [fore J. C. 328, before the Vulgar Æra 332. 1 Macc. xi. 61. xiii. 43. Acts viii. 26.] it. That, or at least the little Town of Gaza situated on the sea, and otherwise called Majuma, was rebuilt.

It was afterwards possessed by the Kings of Egypt[1]. Antiochus the Great took and sacked it[2]. The Asmoneans or Maccabees took it several times from the Syrians. Alexander Jannæus, King of the Jews, took and destroyed it[3].

Gabinius repaired it[4]; and there are coins to be seen, which were stamped in this City. Augustus gave it to Herod the Great[5]; but it was not under the obedience of his son Archelaüs. St. Luke says, that Gaza in his time was a desart place; but he meant, in all probability, the great City of Gaza, situated upon a Mountain twenty miles from the sea; and [Arrian. l. 2. de Expedit. Alexandri.] not Majuma, or little Gaza, which was very populous. The Emperor Constantine gave Majuma the name of Constantia, in honour of his son, and granted it the honours and privileges of a City independant upon Gaza. Gedaliah GEDALIAH, the son of Abikam, was left by Nebuchadnezzar in Palestine after the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple b, that he might govern the remainder of [Jerem. xl. xli. 2 Kings xxv. 22. b In the year of the World 3416, before J. C. 584, before the Vulgar Æra 588.] the people, which continued there, and gather those again together, who had fled. Jeremiah retired to him at Mizpah, where he had settled his abode; and many of the Jews who had fled into the land of Moab and Ammon, came thither also. Gedaliah assured them of Nebuchadnezzar's protection, provided they lived peaceably. In the mean time Ishmael, the son of Nethaniah, of the royal family of Judah, came likewise to see Gedaliah, who had been informed that Ishmael was sent by Baalis King of Ammon, with an intention to kill him; but Gedaliah would believe nothing of it, and would not permit any one to prevent the ill design of Ishmael. He received him at his table, and entertained him; but when the banquet was over, Ishmael, and they who were with him, fell upon Gedaliah, and massacred him, and all those who were about him, as well Jews as Chaldæans. [Vide Jerem. xl. xli.] Hereupon the rest of the people fled into Egypt, and forcibly carried Jeremiah thither with them, whatever the Prophet could say to divert them from this resolution.

Gehazi

[2 Kings v. 20, & seq. About the year of the World 3114, before J. C. 886, before the Vulgar Æra 890.] GEHAZI, Elisha's servant, continually almost attended this Prophet, and was concerned in every thing that happened to him; till being at last overcome by avarice, he procured a sum of money to be given him by Naaman; to this end borrowing Elisha's name, as if the Prophet had sent him, to receive a talent of silver, and two changes of garments for two sons of the Prophets, who were come to ask something of him. Naaman gave him hereupon two talents of silver. But when Gehazi returned, Elisha demanded of him whence he came? Gehazi answered, he had been no where. And Elisha said to him, Went not my heart with thee, when thou wentest after Naaman, and didst receive the money and the garments? the Leprosy therefore of Naaman shall cleave unto thee, and unto thy seed for ever. And immediately Gehazi was seized with a Leprosy, left Elisha, and from that time, no more attended him. The King of Israel would sometimes make Gehazi relate the wonders which God wrought by Elisha c. They, who please, may consult the Article ELISHA.

Gehennom

GEHENNOM, or Valley of Hinnom, [c 2 Kings viii. 4, 5, 6.] or Gehenna, or Valley of the son of Hinnom[1]. This was a Valley adjacent to Jerusalem, through which the southern limits of the Tribe of Benjamin passed.

Euse- Eusebius says, it lay eastward of Jerusalem, at the foot of its walls. But it is certain, that it extended itself likewise towards the south, along the brook Kidron. It is thought, that in this Valley was the common-sewer belonging to Jerusalem, and that a fire was always kept there to burn the filth and carrion; for which reason Hell is called a*Gehenna*, by reason of the eternal [Vide Kimchi in Psal. xxvii. & Cosar. Serm. I. a Matth. v. 10. xviii. 23. Mark ix. 44. Luke xxii. 5. Vide Jerem. vii. 30, & seq. 2 Kings xxiii. 10.] fire, wherein the wicked will be there for ever burning. Others believe with more probability, that the word Gehenna, whereby Hell is called, is derived rather from the fire kept up in the Valley of Hinnom, in honour of Moloch, the false God, whom the Hebrews too often adored, and to whom they offered frequently human sacrifices, and even their own children. King Josiah, in order to pollute this place, and render it odious, and contemptible to the Jews, commanded all manner of ordure and dead men's bones to be thrown into it, that they might no more worship Moloch, and offer human sacrifices there. Ge-hennom in Hebrew signifies the Valley of Hinnom, or Hennom.

Gemara

[Chald. גמרה from גמרperficere, consummare.] GEMARA. The word Gemara signifies Complement, Perfection. The Rabbins call the Pentateuch, or five books of Moses, The Law, without any other addition. Next to this they have the Talmud, which is divided into two parts, whereof the first, which is only an application of the Law to particular cases, together with the decision of the old Rabbins thereupon, is called Mishna, or second Law, or Deuteroses: the other part, which is a more extensive application of the same Law, is a collection of determinations by such Rabbins, as are more modern than the Mishna. They term it Gemara, Perfection, Finishing, because they consider it as an explanation of the Law, to which there can be no farther additions made, and after which nothing more can be desired.

There are two Gemaras, or two Talmuds, that of Jerusalem, and that of Babylon. That of Jerusalem was compiled, according to the Jews, about the end of the second or third Century, by a celebrated Rabbin, whose name was Jochanan; but Father Morinus, a famous Critick, maintains, that the Jews make the Gemara to be of too great antiquity, and that it was not finished till about the seventh Century. The Jews have little value for this Jerusalem

Talmud, by reason of its obscurity. The Babylonish Gemara is, as the Rabbins say, more modern. It was begun by a Jewish Doctor, whose name was Ase, and continued by Marmar and Mar, his Disciples or Sons.

The Gemara, with respect to the Mishna, is what the Comments of our Divines are to us upon the Master of Sentences, or Saint Thomas's Sum; with this difference only, that the Jews allow their Doctors a much greater authority than we do ours. They believe, that the Gemara contains nothing but the Word of God, preserved in the tradition of the Elders, and transmitted without alteration from Moses, down to Rabbi Judah the Holy, Jochanan, Ase, and Jose, and the other compilers of the Talmud; who did not begin to reduce it into writing, till they were afraid it would be corrupted by the several transmigrations and persecutions to which their Nation was subject. See the Article TALMUD.

Genealogy

GENEALOGY, comes from the Greek word Genealogia, which signifies a List of our Ancestors. The common Hebrew expression for it is Sepher toledoth[1], [Ezra ii. 62.] Liber generationum. The Hebrews were very careful in preserving their Genealogies[2]; and perhaps there never was any nation more circumspect in this point, than that of the Jews. We still at this day find Genealogies in their Sacred Writings, carried on for above three thousand five hundred years; and in the Evangelists we have the Genealogy of Jesus Christ deduced for four thousand years, from Adam to Joseph or Mary, his Father and Mother. It is observed in Ezra, that such Priests, as were not able to produce an exact Genealogy of their Families, were not permitted to exercise their function; and Josephus says, that they had in his Nation an uninterrupted succession of Priests for two thousand years. He adds, that the Priests were particularly careful to preserve their Genealogies, and that not only in Judæa, but also in Babylonia, and Egypt; and wherever they were, they never married below themselves, and had exact Genealogical Tables prepared from those authentick Monuments, which were kept at Jerusalem, and to which they had recourse upon occasion: that in all their wars, persecutions, and publick calamities, they always were particularly diligent in securing these Monuments, and to renew them from time to time.

Notwithstanding it must be confessed, that since the war which the Romans carried on against the Jews, about thirty years after the death of our Saviour, and since their intire dispersion in the reign of Adrian, occasioned by the rebellion of Barchochebas, the Jews have lost their ancient Genealogies; and perhaps there is not one even of those who say they are of the Sacerdotal Race, that is able to produce any authentick proofs of his Genealogy. Saint Jerom says, that the Jews are [Hieron. ad Tit. iii. P. 208. vet. Edit.] so versed in the reading of their books, and know so perfectly the Genealogies, which are there set forth, that they can repeat all the names from Abraham to Zerubbabel, as easily as they can pronounce their own. Ita illi à prima ætate, vernacula sui sermonis vocabula penitissimis sensibus imbiberunt, & ab exordio Adam, usque ad extremam Zorobabel, omnium generationes ita memoriter, velociterque percurrunt, ut eos suum putes referre nomen. S. Paul[3] seems to condemn this affectation of knowing old Genealogies; he looks upon them to be vain, useless, and impertinent; as in reality they are, when they serve only for ostentation, and not for edification : But avoid foolish questions and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the Law; for they are unprofitable and vain.

ספר תולדות*Liber Genera- tionis*. Gr. Γενεαλογία.

Translators' note. The Genealogies set down by Ezra and Nehemiah, in some particulars vary. The reason whereof is assigned by Dr. Prideaux in these terms. For the true settling of these Genealogies, says he, search was made by Nehemiah for the old Registers, and having among them found a Register of the Genealogies of those, who came up at first from Babylon with Zerubbabel and Joshua; he settled this matter according to it, adding such as afterwards came up, and expunging others, whose families were extinguished: and this hath caused the difference that is between the accounts which we have of these Genealogies in Ezra and Nehemiah. For in the second chapter of Ezra, we have the old Register made by Zerubbabel; and in the seventh of Nehemiah, from the 6th verse to the end of the chapter, a copy of it, as settled by Nehemiah, with the alterations I have mentioned. Prid. Connect. &c. Part. I. Book VI.

M. Basnage believes, that the Genealogies condemned by St. Paul, were the Sephiroth, which the Rabbins speak of.

Generation

GENERATION. This word, besides the common acceptation of it, is used for the History and Genealogy of any man; for example, This is the book of the Generations of Adam. This is the history of Adam's creation, and that of his posterity. These are the [Gen. v. 1.] Generations of the heavens and of the earth. This is a recital of the creation of Heaven and Earth. And the book of the Generation [Matth. i. 1. Gen. ii. 4.] of Jesus Christ the Son of David. This is the Genealogy of Jesus Christ, and the history of his Life. The Ancients sometimes computed by Generations, and the Scripture follows frequently this method. In the fourth Generation [Gen. xv. 16.] thy descendants shall come hither again. Joseph saw Ephraim's Children of the third [Ib. l. 22.] Generation. A Bastard shall not be admitted into the Congregation till the tenth Generation, Deut. xxiii. 3. But among the Ancients, when the duration of Generations was not exactly described by the age of four men succeeding one another from father to son, it was fixed by some at an hundred years, by others at an hundred and ten, by others at thirty three, thirty, five and twenty, and even at twenty years. So that there was nothing uniform and settled in this matter. Only it is remarked, that the continuance of Generations is so much longer, as it comes nearer to the more ancient times. For example, Homer says, that Nestor lived three Generations, and that he was going on the fourth; that is to say, that he lived above three hundred years.

[Matth. xxiv. 34.] This Generation shall not pass away till all this is fulfilled. All who are at present living, [Luke xi. 31. Ib. ix. 41. Acts ii. 40. Ps. xxxiii. 11.] shall not be dead when this shall happen. There are some at this day living, who shall be witnesses of the Evils which are foretold by me. The men of this Generation, the men who are now alive. O faithless and perverse Generation! And, Save your selves from this untoward Generation, from these perverse men. To Generation and Generation, [Tit. iii. 9.] denotes future ages. Who shall declare his

Gentile

GENTILE. The Hebrews called the Gentiles by the general name of Goiim, [גויים Goiim. Ἔθνη.] which signifies the nations, that have not received the faith, or law of God. All who are not Jews, and circumcised, are comprized under the word Goiim. Before Jesus Christ, the door to life and justification was opened to the world by the belief only and profession of the Jewish Religion. Those who were converted, and embraced Judaism, they called Proselytes. Since the preaching of the Gospel, the true Religion is not confined to any one Nation only, and Country, as heretofore. God, who had promised by his Prophets to call the Gentiles to the Faith, with a super-abundance of grace, has executed this promise: so that the Christian Church is composed of scarce any other besides Gentile Converts; and the Jews, who were too proud of their particular privileges, for the most part have been abandoned to their reprobated Sense of things, and disowned Jesus Christ their Messiah and Redeemer, for whom, for so many ages they wished so impatiently. In [Rom. i. 14, 16, ii. 9, 10, iii. 9, x. 12. 1 Cor. i. 22, 24.] St. Paul, the Gentiles are generally comprehended under the name of Greeks. Judæus & Græcus signify Jew and Gentile. St. Luke in the Acts expresses himself [Gal. iii. 28. Acts vi. 1. xi. 20. xviii. 4, &c.] in the same manner.

St. Paul is commonly called the Apostle of the Gentiles[1], or the Greeks, because he was principally sent to idolatrous people, to preach Jesus Christ to them; whereas St. Peter and the other Apostles preached more generally to the Jews; for which reason they are called the Apostles of the [Gal. ii. 7.] Circumcision: The Gospel of the Uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the Gospel of the Circumcision was unto Peter.

[Ps. ii. 8. Ib. lxxxvii. 4. Ib. lxxii. 9, 10. If. ii. 2, 3, 4. Zech. viii. 23. If. xlix. 6.] The old Prophets declared in a very particular manner the calling of the Gentiles. Jacob foretold, that the Nations should hope for a Messiah, and that he who was to be sent, the Shiloh, should be the expectation of the Gentiles. Ipse erit expectatio Gentium. Solomon after the Dedication of the Temple which he had built, addresses this Prayer to God: Moreover, concerning the stranger which is not of thy people Israel, but is come from a far country for thy name's sake, and thy mighty hand and stretched out arm; if they come and pray in this house, then hear thou from the Heavens, even from thy dwelling-place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for, that all the people of the earth may know thy name, and fear thee, as doth thy people Israel, and may know that this house which I have built is called by thy name.

The Psalmist says, that the Lord shall give the Gentiles to the Messiah for an inheritance: Dabo tibi gentes hæreditatem tuam; that Egypt and Babylon shall know him; that Ethiopia shall make haste to bring him presents; that the Kings of Tarshish, and of the Isles, the Kings of Arabia and Sheba shall be tributary to him. Isaiah abounds with prophecies of the like nature, on which account he has justly been distinguished by the name of the Prophet of the Gentiles: It shall come to pass in the last day, says he, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. And in another passage, I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation, or that thou mayst declare it, and procure it for the strange nations, unto the end of the Earth. And Zechary; Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you to the Temple of the Lord at Jerusalem, for we have heard that God is with you. Ezekiel, in his description of the Temple, takes notice of a Court there for the Gentiles.

In the New Testament we see the Gentiles came sometimes to Jerusalem to worship God there. Some of these arriving there a little before the death of our Saviour, [John xii. 20, 21.] addressed themselves to St. Philip, desiring him to shew them Jesus Christ. Philip [Id. l. 1. c. 5. Id. l. 2. c. 17.] Philip told Andrew, and both of them informed Jesus; who answered them, the hour is come that the son of man should be glorified. Queen Candace's Eunuch, who [Acts viii. 27. Joseph. de Bello, c. 6. l. 6.] came to Jerusalem, was likewise a Gentile, as several of the Fathers affirm. Josephus the Historian says, that there was a wall or balustrade made in the court of the Temple breast-high, with pillars at particular distances, and inscriptions on them in Greek and Latin, importing, that strangers were forbid to enter further: there their offerings were received, and sacrifices were offered for them; but they were not allowed to present themselves at the Altar.

Pompey went even into the Sanctuary, but he committed no indecency there; and the next day he commanded the Temple to be purified, and the customary sacrifices to be offered. A little before the last rebellion of the Jews, some mutineers would have persuaded the Priests, to accept no victim which was not presented by the Jews, and obliged them to reject those which were offered at the Emperor's command for the Roman people. The wisest men of their nation in vain remonstrated to them, the danger whereunto they exposed their country[2], that their ancestors had never rejected the presents of the Gentiles, and the Temple was for the most part adorned with the offerings which these people had made there; they produced at the same time the most learned of their Priests, who had spent their whole lives in the study of the Law, these testified that their forefathers had always received the sacrifices of strangers.

Some of the ancient Fathers seem to have believed, that the Gentiles, who lived in a laudable and regular manner, and observed the law of nature, were saved. St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, has given ground for such an opinion. He says, [Rom. ii. 9, 10, 11, &c.] that glory, honour, and peace are the lot of every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile: for there is no respect of persons with God—— When therefore the Gentiles which have not the Law, do by nature the things contained in the Law, these having not the Law, are a Law unto themselves, which shew the work of the Law written in their hearts. If therefore the uncircumcision (the Gentiles) keep the righteousness of the Law, shall not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision? and shall not uncircumcision, which is by nature, if it fulfil the Law, judge thee, who by the letter and circumcision dost transgress the law?

[Justin Apolog. 2. p. 83.] St. Justin the Martyr maintains, that the old Philosophers who lived conformably to Reason, were already Christians, tho' they knew not Jesus Christ; as for example, among the Greeks, Socrates, Heraclitus, and some others; and among the Barbarians, Abraham, Ananias, Azarias, Misaël, Elias, and many others.

[Clem. Alex. l. 6. Stromat. & ibid. l. 1. 1 Pet. iii. 19. Aug. de Genes. ad lites, l. 12. c. 15. Origen contra Celsum, l. 2. p. 438.] Clemens Alexandrinus asserts, that they who lived before Jesus Christ, had two means for acquiring justification; namely, the Law and Philosophy. Philosophy might make them just, or at least dispose them to justice, it was a step towards it; it produced righteousness, but not perfect and intire. He says farther, that the Gentiles, who departed out of this world before the death of our Saviour, waited in Hell for the coming of Jesus Christ, or his Apostles, and that having heard their preaching, they believed and were saved. This last opinion he took from the following words of St. Peter: Jesus Christ being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit, went and preached unto the Spirits in prison, which sometime were disobedient. This passage of St. Peter has sufficiently exercised the Commentators. S. Austin says, that the soul of Jesus Christ descending into Hell, that is to say, the place where the souls of wicked men were tormented, delivered those from torture, which his justice, to men unsearchable, judged proper to be delivered from it. Origen thought still more favourably of the salvation of the Gentiles; he says, that the soul of Jesus Christ being separated from his body, conferred with the other souls, in order to convert those among the dead who were most teachable, or most fitting for certain reasons to receive his doctrine. Gregory Nazianzen speaking of Christ's descent [Greg. Nazianz. orat. 42.] into Hell, leaves it dubious whether he saved all those without exception whom he found there, or those only who believed: hereupon Nicetas, who wrote upon the text of this Father, makes the ensuing remark. We are told that a zealous Christian, inveighing one day against Plato, and treating him as an impious and wicked person, Plato the next night appeared to him, and reproached him with his manner of using him. I confess, says he to him, I am a great sinner; but when Jesus Christ came into Hell, I was the first who believed in him.

[Chrysost. homil. 37. in Matt. p. 431.] St. Chrysostom is of opinion, that they who died before Jesus Christ, and for this reason could not come to the knowledge of him, if they had forsaken idolatry, acknowledged only one God, and led a laudable and regular life, would have a share in the happiness of Heaven. We might add a great number of other passages and authorities, as well from the Fathers as from other Christian and Catho lick Doctors, who believed, that good men among the Gentiles, and they who lived morally well, and had renounced idolatry, inherited the Kingdom of Heaven. Those who might be cited by us, would not say more, nor have more authority in this matter, than they who have already been produced by us.

At present we are to examine, whether it was their opinion, that the Gentiles who followed the Law of Nature, had any part in the Kingdom of Heaven; and supposing they did believe so, whether their opinion is orthodox. It will be readily allowed, that some few of the Fathers did believe, that the Gentiles, who had a knowledge of God, and lived in a commendable manner, and morally well, do enjoy beatitude. But we must explain the ambiguity of these words, To know God, and to live morally well. If the former denote only a purely speculative and fruitless knowledge, such as that of Devils and wicked Men, and that of the Philosophers mentioned by St. Paul, who held the truth captive, and having known God, did not honour him; certainly such a knowledge can be no way serviceable to their salvation; it is proper only to encrease the condemnation of the Philosophers.

Wherefore the Fathers require, that besides this they should live commendably and morally well; that is to say, that they should know God, that they should love him, give him glory, hope in him, that they should follow the precepts of the Law of Nature, and observe them as they ought to do; that is to say, with a view to God, and by actions animated with grace and charity, without which it is impossible to attain to happiness. It is necessary that they should practise the first and greatest of all the commandments, which is to love God with all their hearts, and their neighbour as themselves. If any one can shew, that the Philosophers Seneca, Socrates, Heraclitus, and Plato knew God, loved and served him in this manner, I do not believe there is any Divine who will venture to close the entrance of Heaven against them; but if enquiry is made into their Lives, I very much question whether they will be found to be conformable to these rules. The Reader may see this question more fully treated in Pererius on the Epistle to the Romans, and in our Dissertation on the same Subject.

Gerar

GERAR, or Gerara, a City of the Philistins, southward of the territories of Judah. There were Kings of this City, whose names were Abimelech in the time of Abraham and Isaac; and these two Patriarchs being under a necessity to dwell for some time at Gerar, were obliged for the preservation of their Lives, to say, that their wives were only their sisters. See Gen. chap. xxi. and xxvi. and the Articles, ABIMELECH, ABRAHAM, and ISAAC.

Gerar extended itself far into Arabia Petræa, being five and twenty miles from [Euseb. in locis, Hieron. ibid. Gen. xx. 1.] Eleutheropolis beyond Daroma, that is to say, the southern part of the land of Judah. Moses says, it lay between Kadesh and Shur. St. Jerom, in his Hebrew Traditions upon Genesis, says, that from Gerar to Jerusalem was three days journey. There was a wood near Gerar, which is spoken of [Theodoret in 2. Gerasa

GERASA, or Gergesa, a City beyond, and to the East of the Dead Sea. By some it is made part of Cele-Syria, by others of Arabia; and is placed among the Cities of the Decapolis. St. Matthew says, that Jesus Christ being gone into the country of the Gergesenes, two men possessed with Devils, who dwelt among the tombs, met him, and said, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? Art thou come hither to torment us before the time? They added, if thou cast us out, suffer us to go into the herd of swine. Jesus answered them, Go. And when they were come out, they entred into the herd of swine, which ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and perished in the waters.

The Greek editions of St. Matthew, instead of Gerasenians, have Gergesenes; and some Greek copies read Gadarens. St. Luke and St. Mark have the same reading. [Origen. in Joan.] Origen thinks, that the true reading is neither Gerasa nor Gedara, since neither of these Cities is near the sea, nor have they any precipices about them, like those near the City, where Jesus cured the two possessed persons. He believes therefore, that the City of Gergesa is meant in this place, which lies upon the Lake of Tiberias, where in his time people shewed the rocks rocks and precipices, from whence the swine ran down into the lake.

Gergesenes

GERGESENES, or Girgashites, an ancient people of the land of Canaan. Their habitation was beyond the sea of Tiberias, where we find some footsteps of their name in the City of Gergesa upon the Lake of Tiberias. The Jewish Doctors inform us, that when Joshua first came into [Gemar. Ierosol. tit. Schebiit. c. 6. Maimon. Halac Mel. c. 6.] the Land of Canaan, the Gergesenes took a resolution rather to forsake their country, than to submit to the Hebrews. The Rabbins are of opinion, that Joshua proposed the following conditions to the Canaanites, flight, subjection, or war. The Gergesenes resolved to fly; and accordingly retired into Africk. The Gibeonites submitted to a state of servitude; and the other Canaanites made war.

They do not tell us in particular, what part of Africk the Gergesenes retired to; but there is a very old tradition, that many of the Canaanites removed thither, when Joshua entred into the Land of Promise. [Procop. de Bello Vandal. l. 2. c. 10.] Procopius says, that they withdrew at first into Egypt, and from thence dispersed into different places of Africk, where they possessed several Cities; and that still in his time, there were two large pillars of white stones to be seen in the City of Tingis, erected near the great fountain, with an inscription in Phœnician characters to this purpose: We are some of those people, who fled before that robber Joshua the son of Nun.

[Thalmudici, Perek Cheloth.] The Hebrew Doctors relate farther, that the Gergesenes came with their complaints to Alexander the Great, demanding of him the restitution of their country, which the Hebrews, as they asserted, had usurped from them. Alexander directed, that the Jews should be cited, in order to give their answer to this accusation. Accordingly they appeared, and in their defence maintained, that they not only were in no way indebted to the Gergesenes; but that, on the contrary, being slaves and fugitives, they ought to be restored to them, together with all the damages, which they had sustained by their flight for so many ages. They proved the first head; namely, that the Gergesenes, being descended from Canaan, were slaves according to the sentence [Genes. ix. 25.] pronounced by Noah, against Canaan. Cursed be Canaan, a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren. Their flight was not disputed; so that there was nothing more to do, but to give sentence in favour of the Hebrews. But the Gergesenes did not think it proper to stay and hear their own condemnation; so went away, and gave up their cause.

I do not set down this relation as unquestionable history. It is a Rabbinical story, which proves this, viz. that they believed the Gergesenes to have fled out of the land of Canaan, when Joshua entred it. Nevertheless it is certain, that a good number of them staid behind, since Joshua [Josh. xxiv. 11.] himself informs us, that he subdued the Gergesenes or Girgashites; and they, whom he overcame, were certainly on this side Jordan. It may be therefore, that they who fled into Africk, were the Gergesenes who dwelt beyond the sea of Tiberias, and that the others continued in the country. See our Dissertation concerning the Land into which the Canaanites fled, printed before the book of Joshua.

Gerizim

GERIZIM. Mount Gerizim, near Schechem, in the Tribe of Ephraim, a Province of Samaria. The City of Schechem lay at the foot of the two Mountains Ebal and Gerizim. Gerizim was very fruitful, and Ebal very barren. God had commanded, that the Hebrews, after the passage of the river Jordan, should go to the Mountains Ebal and Gerizim, and that [Deut. xi. 29. xxvii. 12.] the twelve Tribes should be divided in such a manner, that six might have their station on Mount Gerizim; and six upon Mount Ebal. The former were to pronounce Blessings upon those, who should observe the Law of the Lord; and the others, Curses against those, who should violate it.

[Josh. viii. 33.] After the passage of Jordan, Joshua made no delay in executing God's command. He went with all the people to Mount Ebal, there he built an Altar, and offered burnt-sacrifices; and having divided the people according to the Lord's order, he disposed half of them on Mount Gerizim, and half on Ebal; and directed them to pronounce the Blessings and Curses, which we see set down by Moses.

[In the Year of the World 2553, before J.C. 1447, before the Vulgar Æra 1451] Eusebius[1], St. Jerom, and after them, Procopius[2], and Scaliger[3], were all of opinion, that the Mounts Ebal and Gerizim were not near Schechem, but lay to the east of Jericho and Gilgal; that the Mountains so called near Schechem, were not rightly named, and were not those which were meant by Moses in the book of Deuteronomy. St. Epiphanius places these Mountains beyond Jordan, (Hæres. ix. p. 24.) But this opinion is not any way to be maintained. Gerizim was so near Schechem, that Jotham the son of Gideon from the top thereof spoke to the people of Schechem assembled at the bottom, and escaped without their being able to pursue [Judg. ix. 7.] him.

While the Hebrews continued well united, and but one Religion prevailed among them, there was nothing in Gerizim, which distindistinguished it from other Mountains of the country; nor do we see that even under the Kings of Israel it was in any respect remarkable. There is nothing said of it in the Kings or Chronicles. But after the Cuthæans were settled in the Province of Samaria, Ezra [In the year of the World 3183, before J. C. 717, before the Vulgar Æra 721.] upon the return from the Captivity, prosecuting Idolatry every where, and by the help of Nehemiah driving away Manasseh the son of Joiada, and grandson to the High-Priest Eliashib, for having married the daughter of Sanballat, Governour of Samaria; Epiphanius[4] and Procopius[5] affirm, that then the [Nehem. xiii. 28. In the year of the World 3671, before J. C. 329, before the Vulgar Æra 333.] Samaritans took away the Idols which were upon the tops of their houses, and put them into a cave belonging to Mount Gerizim, where they lay concealed; and that they continued secretly to worship them, by turning themselves always at their prayers this way. And after that Manasseh, Sanballat's son-in-law, by the permission of Alexander the Great, had built a Temple to the true God on Gerizim, the Samaritans joined the [Joseph. Antiq. l. xi. c. 8. p. 383, 384, & seq. 2 Kings xvii. 33.] worship of the true God to that of the Idols, which were hidden under Gerizim; whereby these words of Scripture were verified: They feared the Lord, and served their own gods, after the manner of the nations, whom they carried away from thence.

But this Tradition of Idols concealed under Mount Gerizim, has no foundation either in Scripture, Josephus, or the Samaritan historians. The accusation raised against the Samaritans, of worshipping certain Idols hid under their Mountains, proceeds in all probability only from what is related in Genesis of Jacob's arrival at Sichem upon his return out [Gen. xxxv. 3, 4.] of Mesopotamia, of his receiving God's order to go to Bethel, and his enjoining thereupon all his family to put into his hands all their Idols, and the superstitious Pendants of their ears, which he hid under a turpentine-tree behind the town of Sichem. From hence the Jews have forged a story, that the Cuthæans, or Samaritan inhabitants of Sichem, worshipped the idols which were thus concealed under a turpentine-tree, at the foot of mount Gerizim.

[Gen. xii. 6,7. & xiii. 4. Gen. xxxiii. 20.] The Samaritans maintain, that Abraham and Jacob erected Altars at Gerizim, and that there Abraham prepared to sacrifice his son Isaac. It is certain this was upon Mount More or Moriah; now More was in the neighbourhood of Sichem and Gerizim, as we see by Genesis xii. 6. Pertransivit Abram terram usque ad locum Sichem, usque ad convallem illustrem; the Hebrew, usque ad convallem More. And Deuteronomy xi. 30. Super montem Gerizim & super montem Hebal..... juxta vallem tendentem & intrantem procul; the Hebrew, juxta Elon More, as far as the oak or turpentine-tree of Moreh. It is likewise agreed, that Jacob having purchased Hemor's field at Sichem, built an Altar there, and offered sacrifice upon it to the Lord.

[Deut. xxvii. 12, 13.] The Samaritans add, that God hath shewn in two places, that it was upon this mountain he desired principally to be adored, since he required the blessing to be given here to those who observed his Laws; and his curses upon Ebal; that Joshua erected an Altar upon Gerizim composed of twelve stones taken out of the channel of Jordan, and that this Altar erected by Joshua is still in being at this day: That Mount Gerizim being beautiful and fruitful, whereas that of Ebal is intirely barren, Gerizim was chosen for the place of blessing rather than Ebal, as the very Books of the Hebrews own. To maintain their opinion, they cite the text of their Bible, Deuteronomy, chap. xxvii. 4. which runs thus; Therefore it shall be, when ye be gone over Jordan, that ye shall set up these stones, which I command you this day in Mount Gerizim, (in the Hebrew it is, on Mount Ebal,) thou shalt plaister them with plaister, and inscribe on them the words of this Law, &c. v. 12,13.

And in Exodus xx. after the 17th ver. they read; When the Lord hath brought thee into the land of Canaan, which thou goest to possess, thou shalt set up two great stones there, thou shalt plaister them over, and write thereon all the words of this Law; and when thou hast passed over Jordan, thou shalt put these stones on Mount Gerizim, (the Hebrew reads Ebal) and thou shalt build an Altar there to the Lord thy God, an Altar of stones, which shall not be cut with iron, of rough stones: and upon this Altar thou shalt offer Burnt-offerings to the Lord thy God, and shalt sacrifice Peace-offerings, and shalt rejoice before the Lord, upon this Mountain beyond Jordan, beyond the way of the west, and in the land of the Canaanites, who dwelleth in the plain, over against Gilgal, near the oak of Moreh towards Sichem. Which is taken partly from Deut. xi. 29, 30. and partly from the xxvii. 2. and following verses.

We see here a manifest corruption of the text, either by the Jews, who substituted Ebal in the place of Gerizim, or by the Samaritans, who substituted Gerizim in the room of Ebal. But that which makes infinitely against the Samaritans, and aggravates the suspicion of their infidelity in this respect, is, first, their having an interest in the falsification. And, secondly, that all the Versions of the Bible agree in general with the Hebrew, and read Ebal instead of Gerizim. It is true, these translations being all made from the Hebrew, prove nothing against the Samaritan, the text whereof is not represented by them; and if people had bethought themselves of making as many Versions of the Samaritan text, as they have of the Hebrew, the Samaritans might have as much reason to reproach the Hebrews with having falsified their text, as these have had to reproach the Samaritans in this manner. Wherefore it must be agreed, that this argument is not of any great force.

Besides it is certain, that the Hebrews would have much less advantage over the Samaritans, if they did not shew by good histories, and authentick monuments, that the publick exercise of the true Religion was always settled among them, and solemnized in Jerusalem, or other places, and never at Gerizim; whereas the Samaritans have only histories of very little certainty or antiquity, to prove their worship at Gerizim: and although we should confess, that Gerizim, and not Ebal, were to be read in the places where this latter is to be met with, it would not follow that Joshua, and his successors in the government of God's people, had fixed the exercises of their Religion on Mount Gerizim: but only that an Altar was set up in haste there, for a particular, temporary ceremony. The religious observances of the Jewish worship attended certainly the Ark of the Covenant; and the Ark was not fixed in any settled place till after David took it to his palace in Jerusalem, and Solomon had built a Temple for it in the same city.

The Samaritans assure us in their Chronicle, that Joshua built a Temple[6] upon Gerizim, which was served by Priests of Aaron's family, the first High-Priest whereof was named Rus, from whom all those are descended who have ever to this day performed their office on this Mountain. The same Chronicle imports, that Nebuchadnezzar having transplanted the Jews and Samaritans to Babylon, and sent people of other nations into Samaria; these all died, because the fruits of the country were mortal poison to them; and that Nebuchadnezzar upon intelligence of this misfortune, sent back the Samaritans thither, who refused to go, unless the King would publish a general Edict, whereby all the captives were restored to liberty. When this Edict was drawn up, there arose a dispute between the Jews and Samaritans, whether the Temple should be rebuilt at Jerusalem or Gerizim. After many contests, the King commanded that a trial should be made by fire. The Samaritan and Jewish Pentateuchs were both thrown into it; but the latter was consumed in a moment, and that of the Samaritans remained intire, and without damage. Whereupon Nebuchadnezzar decreed, that the Temple of Gerizim should be rebuilt.

It were very needless to set about a confutation of this Chronicle[7], the accounts whereof are so visibly false, and so plainly meer inventions. As to the original of the Temple upon Gerizim, we must take Josephus's relation of it. Manasseh, the grand-son of Eliashib, the High-Priest, and brother to Jaddus, High-Priest of the [In the year of the] Jews, having been driven from Jerusalem, as we have observed, and not enduring patiently to see himself deprived of the honour and advantages of the Priesthood; Sanballat his father-in-law addressed himself to Alexander the Great, who was then carrying on the siege of Tyre; and having paid him homage for the Province of Samaria, whereof he was Governor, he farther offered him eight thousand of his best troops; which disposed Alexander to grant what he desired for his son-in-law, and for many other Priests, who being married, as well as he, contrary to the Law, chose rather to forsake their country than their wives, and had joined Manasseh in Samaria.

The Temple was therefore built on Gerizim, and consecrated to the God of Israel; and as the Mountain was very high, there were many steps made for the conveniency of the people. When King Antiochus Epiphanes began the persecution of the Jews a, the Samaritans wrote to him, intreating him[8] to give leave that their Temple upon Gerizim, which hitherto had been dedicated to an unknown and nameless God, might be consecrated to Jupiter the Grecian; which was easily consented to by Antiochus. There is a medal, upon which this Temple is represented with many steps. Procopius[9] says, there were sixteen hundred and one. But an old traveller, who lived in the reign of Constantine, says, there were but three hundred.

Josephus

[Antiq l. 13. c. 6. p. 433, 434.] Josephus relates a dispute which arose in Egypt, in the reign of Ptolemy Philometor, between the Jews and Samaritans concerning their Temple; the Samaritans maintaining that their Temple upon Gerizim was the only true Temple of the Lord, and the Jews affirming on the contrary, that theirs at Jerusalem was the only true one. The dispute was brought before the King; Advocates on both sides were named, and it was agreed, that they who should make a bad defence, and lose their cause, should be condemned to death. Both parties promised that they would produce all their testimonies from the Law only. Andronicus, Advocate for the Jews, spoke first, and proved so evidently the antiquity of the Temple of Jerusalem from the Scriptures, the Succession of the High Priests, and the Consideration which the Asiatick Princes had always had for this Holy Place, while at the same time they never so much as thought of the Temple at Gerizim, that the King and his Friends declared he had carried his cause, and ordered Sabbæus and Theodosius, the advocates for the Samaritans, to be put to death.

If this account which Josephus gives us, is true, the Samaritans must have very soon forsaken the worship of Jupiter the Grecian, which out of policy they had received in the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes; for this whole dispute supposes, that the same God was worshipped both at Gerizim and Jerusalem; and Ptolemy Philometor reigned from the year of the World 3824, to 3861; and Antiochus Epiphanes from the year of the World 3828, to 3840.

[a Antiq. l. 13. c. 17. In the year of the World 3874, before J. C. 126, before the Vulg. Æra 120. b Jul. Africacan. in Syncelli Chronico, p. 308. In the Year of the World 3947, before J.C. 53, before the Vulg. Æra 57. c John iv. 20.] The Temple of Gerizim subsisted for some time after the invocation of Jupiter the Grecian, or Olympian, was introduced into it; but it was destroyed by John Hircanus Maccabæus a, and was not rebuilt till Gabinius was Governour of Syria; who repaired Samaria, and called it by his own name b: nor do I find that this fact is related very distinctly in any History. But it is very certain, that in our Saviour's time this Temple was in being, and that the true God was worshipped there, since the woman of Samaria, pointing to Gerizim, said to him, c Our Fathers worshipped in this mountain, and ye say, that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship. We are assured that Herod the Great, having rebuilt Samaria, and called it Sebaste, in honour of Augustus, would have obliged the Samaritans to come and worship in the Temple which he had there erected: but they constantly refused to go thither, and have continued to this day to worship God upon this mountain.

This learned gentleman says, that it was composed by very different authors, out of whose papers one body of history was formed, three hundred years after Christ. That it was so tacked together, is visible, he says, from the little connection of the pieces which are joined. The nine and thirty first Chapters contain the history of Joshua: hence the author proceeds to the death of Eli, the siege and taking of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. In the next Chapter we meet with Alexander the Great: and from this Conqueror he makes but one leap to Adrian. The only use which can be made of this book, is, to learn from thence, the opinions and tra- ditions of the Samaritans.

Giant

GIANT. In Greek, Gigas, in Hebrew, Nophel, or Nephilim[1], which may signify a monster, or a terrible man, who beats and [Gen. vi. 4.] bears down other men. The Scripture speaks of Giants who lived before the Flood; it calls them Nephilim, mighty men which were of old, men of renown. Aquila instead of Gigantes, translates this word [Aqu. Ἐμπίπτοντες. Irruentes.] Nephilim, men who attack, who fall with impetuosity upon their enemies; a translation which renders very well the whole force of the Hebrew term. Symmachus [Sym. Βίαιοι.] translates it violent men, cruel, whose only rule of their actions, is violence and force of arms.

The Scripture calls them sometimes[2] Rephaims; for example, Chedorlaomer and his allies beat the Rephaims, or Giants, at Ashteroth-Karnaim. The Emims, ancient inhabitants of the land of Moab, were of a gigantick stature, they were of the number of the Rephaims. The Rephaims and the Perizzites are joined together as old inhabitants of the land of Canaan. Job says, that the ancient Rephaims groan under the [Prov. ii. 18. ix. 18.] waters; and Solomon in the Proverbs, that the ways of a debauched woman lead to the Rephaims, that is to say, to Hell, where the Giants are; and that he who deviates [Ib. xxi. 16.] from the ways of wisdom, shall go and dwell in the assembly of the Giants, in Hell, &c.

The Anakims, or the sons of Anak, were the most famous Giants of Palestine. They dwelt at Hebron, and thereabouts. Their stature was so much above what was common, that the Israelites, who were sent to view the Promised Land, told the people at their return, that they had seen Giants of the race of Anak in this country, who were [Numb. xiii. 33.] of so monstrous a size, that the Israelites, in comparison, were but grashoppers to them.

Lastly, the Septuagint sometimes translate the Hebrew word Gibbor, Gigas[3], tho' literally it signifies no more than a strong man, a man of valour and bravery, a warrior. For example, they say that Nimrod was a Giant before the Lord; that the Sun rises like a Giant to run its course; that the Lord will destroy the Giant, and the warlike man; that he will call his Giants in his wrath, to take vengeance of his enemies; that he will destroy the power of Egypt by the sword of his Giants, that is to say, of his warriors.

It is very probable, that the first men were all of a strength and stature much superior to those of mankind at present, since they lived a much longer time; long life being commonly the effect of a strong and vigorous constitution. The Scripture says, that there were many of these mighty tall men upon the earth, when Noah appeared; but that there were some before, and particularly after that the Sons of God had an intercourse with the Daughters of Men. The Text in Moses runs thus: There were Giants in the earth in those days; and also after that, when the Sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children to them. Several of the ancient Fathers, led[4] into the mistake by the apocryphal book of Enoch, have asserted, that Giants were the productions of a marriage between Angels and the daughters of men. This opinion they founded likewise upon the text of the Septuagint, which in some copies stands thus;[5] The Angels of God saw that the daughters of men were beautiful and fair, and they took them wives of all which they chose. But Moses in this place means nothing else, but that the men of Seth's family, which was the family of the righteous, and the Sons of God, were corrupted by their affection to the women of Cain's race, who are here described under the name of the daughters of men. Thus St. Chrysostom, Theodoret, St. Cyril of Alexandria, St. Austin, and many more have explained it.

As to the existence of Giants, several writers, both ancient and modern[6], have imagined, that the Giants spoken of in Scripture, were indeed men of an extraordinary stature, but not so much above what was common, as they have fancied, who describe Giants as three or four times larger than men are at present. They were, say they, men famous for the violences which they committed, and for their crimes, rather than for their strength, or the greatness of their stature.

But it cannot be denied, that formerly there were men of a stature much above that of common men, at least not without contradicting Holy Scripture, the most cer tain histories, and the tradition of all people. The Israelites who traversed the Holy Land, told their brethren, that they had seen Giants in this country of Anak's race, [Numb. xiii. 33,34.] who were so unmeasurably large, that other men were but Grashoppers in comparison to them. Moses speaks of Og the King of Basan's bed, which was nine cubits long, and four wide; that is to say, fifteen feet four inches and a half long. Goliath was six [4.] cubits and a span in height, that is to say, ten feet seven inches. These sorts of Giants were still common in Joshua's and David's times, when the life of men was already so much shortned, and, as may be presumed, the size and strength of human bodies was very much diminished.

Homer speaks of the Giants Otus and Ephialtes, who at the age of nine years, [Odyss. XI. Vs. 306.] were nine cubits about, and six and thirty in height. He likewise describes the bigness of the Cyclops Polyphemus, whose strength was such, that he could easily and without the least straining, move a great stone, so large, that two and twenty chariots with four wheels could scarce raise it from the ground. I do not deliver this for certain [Odyss. IX. vs. 240.]

history, but for a proof of that ancient tradition, received by the several people of the world, who always believed, that men of old were much larger and stronger than they have been since for many Ages: an opinion which is spread here and there in all the ancient poets and in other writers[7].

St. Austin assures us, that in the port of Utica, he saw a Giant's tooth so large, that it equalled an hundred of our largest teeth[8]. Torniel[9] says, that in the Church at Verceil belonging to his order, there is a tooth, which is believed to have been St. Christopher's, and is as large almost as that we have been speaking of. Pliny[10] tells us, that a mountain in the Isle of Crete, having been opened by an Earthquake, a man was found in it standing upright, who was six and forty cubits high, and was by some taken for the body of Orion, by others for that of Otus. The body of Orestes being dug up by order of the Oracle, was found to be seven cubits, or ten feet and an half. Nævius Pollio was a foot taller than the largest men[11]. There was one Gabbarus at Rome in the Reign of the Emperor Claudius, who was nine feet, nine inches high[12]. Delrio affirms, that in 1572, he saw at Rohan a native of Piemont above nine foot high.

[Plutarch. in Sertorio.] Plutarch relates, that the body of the giant Antes was found in the city of Tingis in Mauritania, and that Sertorius having seen it, and observed it to be sixty cubits in length, offered sacrifices to it, and ordered it to be covered again with earth.

Albericus trium Fontium, a Cistercian Monk, after Elinandus, relates the discovery which was made of the body of Pallas, the son of Evander, who was killed by Turnus. This discovery was made, they say, in 1041, but Alberic reports it in 1054. Elinandus ex dictis Guillelmi. Eo tempore corpus Pallantis filii Evandri Romæ integrum repertum est, cum hoc epitaphio;

Ardens lucerna ad caput inventa est, quam cum nullâ liquoris aspergine, aut flatûs violentiâ extinguere valerent, quidam solertioris ingenii stilo subtus flammam foramen fecit, & mox introducto aëre ignis evanuit.

Corpus muro applicatum vastitate sua magnitudinem mœnium vicit; sed procedentibus diebus stillicidiis rorulentis infusum, communem mortalium corruptionem agnovit, cute solutâ, nervisque fluentibus.

Here are many particulars which seem to come from Authors who were contemporary and well informed. Notwithstanding, I can hardly persuade my self that the matter is not a little exaggerated.

The Chronicle of Colmar under the year 1267, says, that in a village called Hertin near the city of Basil, the bones of Giants were found, who seemed to exceed by thirty feet the stature of an ordinary man. Magnitudinem & longitudinem nostram xxx pedum excedentia.

In January 1701, at a village called Coloubella, six leagues from Thessalonica in Macedonia, the body of a Giant was discovered, which had been buried near the Sea in an old wall of some length and thickness. The Sea in a course of many ages having gradually undermined it, a great shower at last quite overturned it, and exposed the body of the Giant we are speaking of. He was ninety six royal feet in length; his skull contained full fifteen bushels of corn, Paris measure; one of his teeth weighed fifteen pound, and was seven inches and two Royal lines in height. Another tooth without the root of it weighed two pound and an half French; another two pound eleven ounces and six drams; a fourth tooth weighed two pound thirteen ounces.

The smallest bone of his little toe was seven inches and two lines royal measure in length: of the bones in the arm one was two feet four inches and two lines in circumference; a man might put his fist into one of them. Every one falling upon the body, in order to get some pieces of it, the principal were carried to the Bashaw, and the Grand Signior. As to the others which remained, the Sieur Quainet, French Consul at Thessalonica, entered an account of them attested by Father Jerom de Rhetel, a Capuchin, and Missionary to the Levant, who saw them. The same Father Jerom sent a relation of this matter to the Reverend Father Jerom de Mousicaux, a Capuchin at Paris in the suburb St. Honoré, and his letter was subscribed by the Consul above-mentioned, by Peter Rosti, Constantine Peronne, Loicheta, Flot a surgeon, and John Attuchi; who having all seen the said bones, signed as witnesses.

In the year 1719, near Salisbury in England [The Gazette of October 1719. 21 Sept. Art. from London.] , a human skeleton was found which was nine feet four inches long. This discovery was made six miles from Salisbury, in a place called Stonehenge, or Hanging-stones, which the Ancients called The dance of Giants. There is farther to be seen there an inclosure of rough stones, some whereof are fourscore feet high and seven wide, which support others that are placed a-cross. No one has been able hitherto to discover what this ancient monument can be; which seems to be so much the more surprizing, in that throughout all the neighbouring plain there is no stone fit for building to be met with.

The People of Peru affirm, that there came Giants formerly into their country, who from the knees downward equalled the stature of ordinary men. They have the same tradition at Brazil and Mexico, and they shew bones belonging to them of an unmeasurable size. Some also are shewn in the castle of Moulins in the Bourbonnois. Credible witnesses assure us, that in South America there are Giants called Caurahues, who are between nine and ten feet high.

[Diction. dela Bible, t.1. p.523, 524.] M. Simon, author of the Dictionary of the Bible, printed at Lyons in two Volumes, folio, in 1703, attests, That while he was Curate of the Parish of St. Uzé in Dauphiné, he saw, and since that time received an attestation made in the year 1699, signed by three persons, viz. two Governours, and a Priest, who was Chaplain of the Castle of Molard, in the Diocese of Vienne, in Dauphiné, who all affirm, that they too had seen teeth belonging to a human body found in a meadow in 1667, which weighed each ten pounds; and there was one with part of the lower jaw wherein it was still fixed, that together weighed seventeen pounds. In the same meadow there were several bones found, for the most part rotten and in pieces; but one among the rest was pretty intire, which was seven feet three inches long, and two feet in circumference. After these examples, and many others which we might produce, I think no one ought to dispute the existence of Giants. See our Dissertation upon Giants.

The Arabians and Persians have the same persuasion as other people, with relation to the existence of Giants. Mahomet affirms, that Ad and Schedad, Kings of Syria and Arabia, were of such a prodigious size, that they were forced to use the largest forest-trees in setting up their tents. The Mahometans maintain, that the Amalekites, who, according to them, were the old inhabitants of Palestine, were commonly nine cubits, or eighteen feet high; that the Giant Og, who is mentioned by Moses, surpassed them all in stature, and lived to be three thousand years old. They hold, that all the ancient Giants descended from Ad the son of Amalek, and grandson of Ham; or, according to others, Amalek was the son of Uz, and grandson to Aram, of the race of Shem.

[Alcoran, chap. de l'Aurore.] They farther acknowledge other Giants, called Dives or Ginns, in Latin, Divi or Genii; who are neither Men nor Angels, but creatures of another species created before Adam, and appointed for the government of the world. They governed it peaceably during the space of seven thousand years. After them came the Peris, who had the administration of it for two thousand years. But both the Divis and Peris rebelling, God set Eblis to be Lord over them; a creature of a superior order, and formed out of the element of fire. Eblis made war with them: some took a good resolution, and submitted to him, the others were extirpated. But at last Eblis himself fell into apostacy; and this is he who is known to us by the name of Satan or Lucifer.

GIBBETHON, a City in the Tribe of [Josh. xxi. 23.] Dan, allotted to the Levites. It is in all probability the same as Gabbata. Baasha, the Usurper of the Kingdom of Israel, killed Nadab the son of Jeroboam in the City of Gibbethon, which at that time belonged [In the year of the World 3072, before J. Gibeah GIBEAH, a City in the Tribe of *Benjamin*a, celebrated upon several occasions. It gave birth to Saul, the first King of Israel; for which reason it is frequently called Gibeah of Saul, or Gibeah the native country of Saul.

It is also famous for its sins; for that particularly which was committed by forcing the young Levite's wife, who was come to lodge at Gibeah. At first no one offered to receive these strangers, and they con tinued in the street, till an old man desired them to come into his house. No sooner had they supp'd, but the inhabitants of the [Judg. xix.] City came and encompassed the old man's dwelling,demanding with great cries to have the man delivered up to them who was within, saying, that they would know him: under this word concealing an abominable and shameful action. The old man did all he could to divert them from this wicked design; and observing that they did not hearken to him, he said to them, I have a daughter unmarried, and this man has his wife with him; I will bring them to you, and you shall have them to gratify your passion. I only beg of you not to commit a crime so detestable with a man. At the same time the Levite brought his wife to them, and gave her up to be treated by them in the outrageous manner they desired. After they had abused her all the night, they let her go; and the woman returning to the house, where her husband lodged, fell down dead with her arms extended on the threshold.

Her husband having found her in this condition, took her up, and carried her home upon his ass, then cut her into twelve pieces, which he sent to each of the twelve Tribes of Israel. Hereupon there was a convention of eleven Tribes, by whom it was demanded of the Tribe of Benjamin, that the persons who were guilty of this outrage should be delivered up to them, in order to make an example of them: but instead of doing any thing so reasonable, they took up arms to defend the inhabitants of Gibeah; which brought on a war that almost intirely ruined the Tribe of Benjamin. See Judges, ch. xx. xxi.

The Benjamites set an army on foot, consisting of five and twenty thousand men, without reckoning the inhabitants of Gibeah, in number seven hundred, who fought equally with their left as well as with their right hand, and were so expert at their slings, that they could throw a stone [Judg. xx. 26.] with them to an hair's breadth. The army of Israel was composed of four hundred thousand men; they met at Shiloh, where the Ark of the Lord was, in order to consult and know, who should be their General. The Lord answered, Let Judah be your General.

The next day, at break of day, the children of Israel having taken the field, came and incamped near Gibeah, and began to batter the City; but the Benjamites made a sally upon them, and killed two and twenty thousand of their men. The Israelites in great consternation wept before the Lord till night, (for the Ark was removed from Shiloh to the Camp before Gibeah.) There they consulted him, saying, Shall we again engage the children of Benjamin our brethren? The Lord answered, [before the Vulgar Æra 1413.] March against them, and give them battle. The next day therefore they advanced in order of battle towards Gibeah; the inhabitants, together with the Benjamites, sallied out of the town, and fell upon them with so much impetuosity, that they killed again eighteen thousand of their men. Hereupon the children of Israel being intirely discouraged, came before the Ark, and setting themselves down, mourned and fasted there till the evening, offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, and once more consulted the Lord by Phinehas, who was at that time High-Priest, and said to him, Shall we again engage our brethren the children of Benjamin, or remain in quiet? The Lord answered them, Go out against them, for to-morrow I will deliver them into your hands.

They divided their army into three bodies; one they placed in ambuscade behind the City, that they might enter it on that side, and set fire to it, as soon as the inhabitants were sallied out: the other, consisting of ten thousand men, was to appear before the City in order to give ground as soon as those of Gibeah were in sight; the third body, which was more considerable, and composed the gross of the army, was concealed in a place called Baal-tamar, and was not to shew itself till the Benjamites were got at a good distance from the town, and were drawn into the open plain by the ten thousand, who were to counterfeit a flight.

The stratagem succeeded, as they had projected; those of Gibeah sallying out with their usual boldness, fell to pursuing the fugitives without taking any precaution for the defence of the City: they therefore who lay in ambuscade behind it, entred without resistance, and set fire to it. Hereupon, the others who had made a shew of flying, observing the smoak of the town, faced about, and being supported by the main body of the army, which lay at Baal-tamar, and appeared at the same time, they fell upon the Benjamites, and made a great slaughter of them: they who endeavoured to return to their City, were hemm'd in, and cut in pieces by those who had been setting it on fire. Upon this occasion there were eighteen thousand Benjamites put to the sword. As their army was dispersed in several places, there were besides five thousand killed in a rencounter, and two thousand in another place; so that the number of the dead this day amounted to five and twenty thousand men. They who were able to make their escape, fled to the rock of Rimmon. The Israelites afterwards entered Gibeah, and put all, men and beasts to the sword, and all the towns and villages of the Tribe of Benjamin were treated in the same manner, and consumed by fire.

Nothing

N othing was more just than this War [Observations on the War carried on by the eleven Tribes against the Benjamites at Gibeah. Judg. xx. Judg. xx. 18.] of the eleven Tribes, who took arms against that of Benjamin, only to revenge a very enormous and abominable crime. Wherefore when they were at Shiloh, where was the Tabernacle, and the Ark of the Lord, there to consult him, and learn who was to command them in chief, he answered, Let Judah be your General; which was an evident mark, that God approved of this War: however the eleven Tribes, who composed so formidable an army, were twice shamefully beaten before Gibeah, by an army which was infinitely inferior to them, and lost forty thousand men in these two actions. This amazes, and seems surprizing; for God is not the protector of wickedness. The Interpreters disengage themselves as well as they can out of the difficulty, arising from the two victories obtained so near one another by the Benjamites. Dom Calmet in his Comment says, " That the Israelites did " not at first desire to know of God, whether it was his pleasure that they should " make war against their brethren; that " they met, and took their resolution of " themselves, which was the cause of their " bad success. He adds, that we might have " reason to be surprized, if we did not " know, that the judgements of God are " far above those of men, and that oftentimes our most just designs, and most " holy intentions, are not attended with " the success which we believe we have a " right to hope for, that man may learn to " humble himself, to distrust his own " strength, and place his confidence, not in " his own righteousness, or in the force of " his own arms, but in the mercy and " protection of the Almighty." This Morality is excellent, but in a case like this, wherein oppressed innocence, and the blood which was shed cried for vengeance from heaven, and united the minds of all in the desire of punishing a crime which excited horror, what occasion was there to go and consult the Lord? It is true, they had always a custom of consulting him, but this was in things which seemed dubious; as we see in this instance, where the choice of a General was the thing in question: it was necessary that God should name him or appoint [See Numb. ix. 9. Judg. xviii. 5, 6. 1 Sam. xiv 37. xxiii. 2, 4, 9. xxx. 8. 2 Sam. ii. 1. v. 19, 23, xxx. 1. 2 Kings xxii. 13, 18. 1 Chr. xiv. 10, 14. 2 Chr. xviii. 4, 5.] him, that the other Princes of the Tribes might be submissive to him, and they might not be divided by any inclination to command. Besides, the Scripture does not accuse them of any crime: Phinehas, who was High-Priest, would not have failed to reproach them with it, when they came to him to consult the Lord; they had done nothing against their brethren the Benjamites which was not according to the rules of equity, and the law of nations: they had sent ambassadors to demand of them the persons concerned in the guilt of this wickedness, in order to punish them; but upon their refusal, they saw a necessity of coming to an open rupture. They met together, they went to consult the Lord, they asked a General of him, he named one; was not this desiring his protection, and shewing that they took arms only to vindicate his honour, and punish the authors and abetters of a detestable crime? Notwithstanding, they were beaten, they had recourse to him; he commanded them to engage a second time, and they were again defeated: did God deceive them? I am far from thinking so: I am of the learned Commentator's opinion, That the judgements of God are far above those of men, and that his ways are incomprehensible. But let us come now to the actions here mentioned.

The Lord having named Judah to command [Jugd. xx. 19, 20.] the children of Israel, they marched at break of day, and incamped near Gibeah; from thence advancing to encounter the Benjamites, they began to batter the city. I should be inclined to believe, that they at first surrounded the town in order to besiege it, and assault it on every side, attacking it by the way of sapping and scaling: for the method of the Jews, when they designed the siege of any place, was to invest it all round, and draw lines of circumvallation or contravallation, according to their apprehensions from the enemy. The inhabitants of Gibeah, in all appearance, took the advantage of this favourable opportunity to make a general sally, to prevent their having the whole army of the Israelites to engage with; so that they fell upon a part of this prodigious army, which they put to flight, and killed two and twenty thousand of them.

After this defeat, the Israelites retired to their camp. The next day, says the sacred Author, relying upon their forces, and the great number of them, they drew up in order of battle upon the same spot upon which they had fought before. If this verse were not followed by another, which demonstrates to us, that they humbled themselves before the Lord to implore his mercy, the Interpreters would have reason to say, " That glorying in " their number, and presuming too much " on their strength, God permitted them " to suffer so sensible a loss:" but on the contrary, they first went and mourned before him, and consulted him whether they should again engage in battle with the sons of Benjamin their brethren. The Lord answered them, Go against them, [Judg. xx. 23.] and give them battle. Was not this an acknowledgement of their impotency, and that notwithstanding their great number, they could do nothing, unless God supported them with his Almighty

7 T Hand; yet they were once more beaten, and lost eighteen thousand men.

Lastly, the children of Israel being in great consternation upon receiving these great checks, had notwithstanding recourse to God only; they came to the Tabernacle; there they lamented, fasted till the evening, offered Burnt-offerings to him, and Peace-offerings, and consulted him by the High-Priest Phinehas, saying, Shall we again fight with our brethren the children of Benjamin, or shall we abandon this undertaking, and return in peace? At length the Lord hearkened to them, and replied to them by the mouth of his servant Phinehas, [Judg. xx. 28.] March against them, for to-morrow I will deliver them into thine hands.

Afterwards they placed ambuscades round about the city. From this stratagem I am apt to think, they did not invest the place on every side; or else that they collected all their forces together in this last action, making a shew of abandoning the undertaking, and withdrawing their troops, that so the Benjamites might more readily fall into the snare. They therefore divided their army into three bodies; one was placed in ambuscade behind the town, with orders to him who had the command, that he should wait till the Benjamites should sally out; then that they should get possession of it, and set it on fire. The second body, composed of ten thousand men, marched towards the enemy, with an intention of drawing them to some distance from the city. The Benjamites imagining, that the ten thousand men advanced with a design only of covering the main body of the Israelitish army in their retreat, fell upon them. These pretended to give ground by degrees, in order to decoy them into the plain; during which time, the ambuscade which lay behind the Town rising up, made themselves masters of it, and set it on fire. Hereupon the ten thousand, who were flying, faced about: the main body of the army, which was at Baal-tamar, advanced in order of battle, and the ambuscades began to appear, so that the Benjamites were encompassed and attacked on every side. Thus the Lord smote Benjamin before Israel, and the children of Israel destroyed of the Benjamites that day twenty and five thousand and an hundred men; all these drew the sword.

The Scripture remarks, that this happened at a time, when there was no King in Israel, and when every one did that which was right in his own eyes.

Gibeah was about two leagues from Jerusalem[1], towards the north, not far from Gibeon and Kirjath-jearim. In St. Jerom's time[2] it was intirely destroyed. Josephus[3] places it at the distance of thirty furlongs from Jerusalem; St. Jerom[4] but at seven miles from the same City. I take it to be the same as Gibeath in Joshua xviii. 28.

Gibea or Gabaa in Hebrew signifies an Hill; we are not therefore to be surprized to find in a mountainous country, like that of Judæa, so many places going by the names of Gibeah, Gibeon, Gabbatha, Gabbathon, Gabbat, Gabe, all which words signify an eminence; and sometimes proper names called Gabaa, are translated Hills; for example, Zechary xiv. 10. Revertetur omnis terra de colle Remnon ad Austrum Jerusalem. In the Hebrew, All the land shall be turned as a plain from Gaba to Rimmon. And on the contrary, Gabaa or Gibeah in 2 Sam. viii. described as a City, is only the Hill of Kirjath-jearim.

Gibeon

[Josh. ix. 3, 4, &seq. In the year of the World 2553, before J. C. 1447, before the Vulgar Æra 1451.] GIBEON, the capital City of the Gibeonites, who took the advantage of Joshua's oath and of that which the Elders of Israel likewise swore to them, upon an artificial representation which they made of their belonging to a very remote country, and their desire of making an alliance with the Hebrews. Joshua and the Elders had not the precaution to consult God upon this affair; and too inconsiderately entred into a league with these people: but they soon discovered their mistake; and sending for the Gibeonites, reproached them with their fraud; and without revoking the promise which they had made to them, of giving them their Lives, they condemned them to carry wood and water to the Tabernacle of the Lord, as slaves and captives taken in war; in which state of servitude they remained till the ruin and intire dispersion of the Jewish nation.

[Josh. x. 3. &c.] Three days after, the Kings of the Canaanties being informed, that the Gibeonites had surrendred to the Hebrews, came and besieged the City of Gibeon. The Gibeonites perceiving that they were not strong enough to resist five Kings, who at once attacked them; for Adoni-zedek King of Jerusalem, Hoham King of Hebron, Piram King of Jarmuth, Japhia King of Lachish, and Debir King of Eglon, were before their City with their armies: they came to Joshua, and desired speedy help from from him against these five Princes. Joshua marched all night with the choice of all the troops of Israel, attacked the five Kings early in the morning, put them to flight, and pursued them as far as the descent to Bethoron. At that time God caused a shower of stones to fall upon them, which destroyed great numbers of them; and Joshua, fearing lest the night might deprive him of part of those advantages which might follow from this victory, begged of God to retard the course of the Sun and Moon, saying, Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon, and thou Moon in the valley of Ajalon. God heard the voice of Joshua, the Sun and Moon stop'd, and so long a day was never seen. Joshua therefore, and the people of Israel had full leisure to pursue and kill their enemies.

The five Kings were taken, and shut up in a cave, till Joshua, and the people returned from pursuing their enemies. After which they were executed, and hung upon five Gibbets, upon which they remained till the Evening. We do not here enlarge upon this miracle wrought by Joshua, so as to satisfy all the questions, which may be formed concerning it. They, who please, may consult our Dissertation on this Subject prefixed to our Comment upon Joshua.

The Gibeonites were descended from the Hivites, the old inhabitants of that Country, and possessed four cities, whereof Gibeon was the Capital. The Cities were Chephirah, Beeroth, Kirjath-jearim, and Gibeon, which were afterwards given to the Tribe of Benjamin, excepting Kirjath-jearim, which fell to the lot of the Tribe of Judah. The Gibeonites continued ever after subject to those burthens, which Joshua had imposed upon them, and were very faithful to the Israelites. Nevertheless, Saul, through what mistaken zeal we cannot tell, destroyed a very great number of [2 Sam. xxi. 1,2,3, &c.] them; imagining perhaps, that it was his duty to extirpate all Remains of the Canaanites out of the land; but God as a punishment of this cruelty, in the reign of David sent a great famine, which made all the country desolate, and lasted three years. David touched with the misfortunes [In the year of the World 2983, before J. C. 1017, before the Vulgar Æra 1021.] of his people, addressed himself to God; and the Prophets told him, that this calamity would continue as long as that cruelty remained unrevenged, which Saul had exercised against the Gibeonites, to the prejudice of that treaty which Joshua and the Princes of the people had made with them, and confirm'd by oath. Whereupon David asked the Gibeonites, what satisfaction they desired? They answered, Let us have seven of Saul's sons, whom we will put to death, in order to revenge the blood of our brethren. David therefore delivered up to them, the two sons of Saul by Rizpah, and five sons of Merab the daughter of Saul and Adriel. The Gibeonites crucified them before the Lord. This execution happened in the beginning of spring, when in Palestine they set about the cutting of their barley. Rizpah, the concubine of Saul, continued near the dead bodies, and lay down by them, guarding them from the birds of the air, and all voracious animals, from the beginning of the harvest; till God being appeased by this sacrifice, sent rain upon the earth, and restored it to its fertility.

From this time there is no more mention of the Gibeonites, as composing a sort of separate people. But we are of opinion that they were to be understood by the [1 Chr. ix. 2.] word Nethinims, or given, who were publick slaves appointed for the service of the Temple. Afterwards those of the Canaanites, who were subdued, and had their Lives spared, were added to the [Ezra viii. 20. Ib. ii. 58. 1 Kings ix. 20, 21.] Gibeonites. We see from Scripture, that David, Solomon, and the Princes of Judah gave a good number of them to the Lord, that these Nethinims being carried into captivity with the Tribe of Judah, and the Levites, many of them returned with Ezra, Zorobabel, and Nehemiah, and that after the Captivity they continued as before in the service of the Temple, under the orders of the Priests and Levites[1].

Gibeon was seated on an eminence, as is evidenced by its name. It was forty furlongs from Jerusalem, according[2] to Josephus; that is to say, about two leagues from this city, northward. It is called Gabaa, 2 Sam. v. 25. compared with 1 Chr. xiv. 16. [2 Sam. ii. 13. Joseph. l. 2. de Bello, c. 24.] Gabaa and Gibeon have the same literal signification. In some parts of the Scripture there is mention made of the fountain and pool of Gibeon. We neither know when, nor by whom, nor upon what occasion the Tabernacle and Altar of Burnt-sacrifices, which were made by Moses in the wilderness, were removed [1 Chr. xxi. 29, 30.] to Gibeon; but this we certainly know, that towards the end of David's reign, and in the beginning of Solomon's, they were there. David having seen the Angel of the Lord at Araunah's threshing-floor, was so terrified, that he had not strength to go so far as Gibeon, there to offer his sacrifice. But Solomon being seated on the throne of David, went to sacrifice at Gibeon; because this was the most considerable of all the high places in the country, where sacrifices were then tolerated, because the Temple was not as yet built.

Gideon

GIDEON, the son of Joash, of the Tribe of Manasseh. He dwelt in the city of Ophrah, was chosen by God, and had a very extraordinary call to deliver the Israelites from the [Judg. vi. 1, 2. From the year of the World 2752, to 2759.] oppression of the Midianites, to which they became subject after the death of Barak and Deborah. The Midianites kept the Hebrews in a state of so great humiliation, that they were forced to fly into caves, and fortify themselves in places the most proper for resisting of the Midianites. These, after that the Israelites had sown their corn, came upon their lands, pitched their tents there, destroyed all the encrease of the earth, and killed all the cattle, that fell into their hands. The people of Israel, overwhelmed with so many misfortunes, cried unto the Lord, and the Lord deputed a Prophet to them, who reproached them sharply with their ingratitude: but at the same time God sent his Angel to Gideon, the son of Joash, who dwelt at Ophrah, and was there employed in threshing out his corn privately near a wine-press under an oak, that so the Midianites might have no knowledge of what he was doing, and he might be able to fly away immediately with his corn, as soon as they appeared.

The Angel of the Lord therefore saluted him, and said, The Lord is with thee, O thou mighty man of valour. Gideon answered, How comes it then that all these evils are fallen upon us, if the Lord be with us? Where are the wonders which he wrought formerly in favour of our Fathers? but now he hath forsaken us, and delivered us into the hands of the Midianites. Hereupon the Angel, who spoke to him in the name of God, said, Go in this thy might, and thou shalt save Israel from the power of the Midianites: know that it is I who have sent thee. Gideon excused himself, but the Lord said to him, I will be with thee, and thou shalt beat the Midianites, as if they were but one man. Gideon asked a sign of him, that he might be secured it was no delusion, and desired him to stay a moment under the Oak, till he had offered a sacrifice to him. Gideon therefore made ready a kid, and unleavened cakes, brought the whole under the Oak, and presented it to him. But the Angel said, take the flesh, and unleavened cakes, and put them upon this rock, and pour out the broth: which when Gideon had done, the Angel put forth the end of the staff that was in his hand, and having touched the flesh and unleavened cakes, fire issued out of the rock, and consumed them. At the same time the Angel of the Lord disappeared out of his sight.

Gideon perceiving that it was an Angel, said, Alas! O Lord God, for I have seen an Angel of the Lord face to face. And the Lord said unto him, Peace be unto thee, fear not, thou shalt not die. At that same place he erected an Altar to the Lord, and called it, The peace of the Lord. The night following, God commanded him to cut down the grove, and the Altar that was consecrated to Baal, to build an Altar to the Lord upon the top of the rock, where he had already offered the kid and unleavened cakes, and to make a burnt-sacrifice of one of his father's two bullocks. Gideon obeyed, and night coming on, he with ten of his servants, set about cutting down the grove, and overthrowing the Altar of Baal. The next day the inhabitants of Ophrah told Joash, Gideon's father, that nothing less than the death of his son could make satisfaction for the affront offered unto Baal. But Joash answered them, Are ye to defend Baal? if Baal be God, let him himself take vengeance on the person who has destroyed his Altar. From that time Gideon was called Jerobaal[1], that is to say, let Baal see, or, let Baal contest with him, who has thrown down his Altar. He is mentioned by the name of Jerobaal or Jerombal, in the spurious [Apud. Euseb. Præpar. l. 1.] history of Sanchoniathon.

About the same time the Midianites having passed over the Jordan, came and incamped in the valley of Jezree; and Gideon, filled with the spirit of God, sounded the trumpet, assembled the Israelites of the house of Abiezer, who dwelt at Ophrah, and in the neighbouring places, and were of his own family. He likewise sent couriers into the Tribes of Manasseh, Asher, Zebulun, and Naphtali, which lay northward of the land of Canaan. He exhorted them to shake off the yoke of the Midianites, and to join him. These Tribes came with diligence, and in great numbers; so that Gideon, in order to assure them, that God had raised him up for their deliverance, prayed to God to give him some sign of his extraordinary call to this service, and that he would be pleased to let the dew fall upon a fleece of wool, which he would spread upon the ground, while all the earth beside was dry, and received no part of it. God heard his prayer, and it happened as he wished. After this, he desired another sign of God quite contrary to this, that the fleece of wool might remain dry, while all the earth about it was moist, and abounded with dew; and the effect of this second petition was likewise granted.

Gideon confirmed by all these signs, that it was the will of God he should enter upon this undertaking, marched directly to the Camp of the Midianites, who were in the plain of Jezreel. He halted with his troops at the well of Harod: at which time the Lord commanded him to dismiss part of those who were with him, lest, if the Midianites were delivered into the hands of such a body of troops, the Israelites should say, that they were saved by their own strength. Gideon therefore permitted those who were any way afraid, to return; two and twenty thousand of them took the advantage of this permission, and returned to their own houses, so that ten thousand only remained with him. This number was still too large, and the Lord said to Gideon, Bring the people down unto the water, dismiss all such as shall kneel upon the ground, that they may be more at ease while they are drinking, and retain such only as shall have thrown water with their hands into their mouths, or have lapped it with their tongue like dogs; and the number of the latter amounted but to three hundred. These therefore Gideon retained, and dismissed the rest.

He ordered these three hundred men to hold themselves in readiness, and to take provisions with them for some days; to have every one a trumpet, a lamp or light, and an empty pitcher to conceal the fire of the light. In the mean time, God commanded him to advance towards the enemies camp; without any company. Accordingly he went, and heard a Midianite relating his dream to his companion, and telling him, that he had seen a cake of barley-bread in his dream rolling into the camp of the Midia-nites, and oversetting a tent which lay in its way. The person to whom he was speaking, replied, This is nothing else but the sword of Gideon, into whose hands God hath delivered the camp, and whole Army of the Midianites.

Gideon animated by this dream, and the Midianite's interpretation of it, returned to his people, encouraged them to attack the enemy, bid them take their lamps, their pitchers, and their trumpets, and do as they should see him do. The watch-word which he gave them, was, The Sword of the Lord and of Gideon. He divided them into three companies of an hundred men [Judg. viii. 1, 2, 3, &c.] each; and they advanced three different ways towards the camp of the Midianites. At midnight they came to the entrance of it, and Gideon took suddenly his lamp from under his pitcher, threw it on the ground with great noise, and sounded his trumpet; the three hundred men who were with him did the same, and every man stood at his post in three different places of the Midianitish Camp. Hereupon a strange terror spread among the enemies, their whole army was in disorder, they began to fly, to draw their swords against one another, and mutually to kill each other. The Israelites of the neighbouring Tribes of Manasseh, Naphtali and Asher, came in and pursued them. At the same time Gideon sent couriers to the Tribes of Ephraim, to give them notice that they might guard the fords, and prevent the Midianites from repassing Jordan. For his part, he, with his three hundred warriors, passed this river, and followed the Midianites as far as Succoth and Penuel. He overtook them while they were refreshing themselves, and believed they had nothing more to fear, fell upon them, defeated them, took their two Kings Zeba and Zalmunna, and returned towards Succoth and Penuel before Sun-set.

These two cities had refused to supply him with provisions and refreshments, as he passed by them in pursuit of the enemies. But at his return he took vengeance of them in a terrible manner, crushing the Princes of Succoth to death under the thorns and briars of the wilderness, killing the inhabitants of Penuel, and destroying their tower. This done, he put Zeba and Zalmunna to death, the Princes of the Midianites, and took away the ornaments, and golden bosses, which were generally hung about the necks of the King's Camels. The men of Ephraim murmured, and complained that Gideon had not invited them to take their part in this war; but he appeased them by magnifying the services which they had done in this expedition, in taking Oreb and Zeb, Princes of the Midianites.

[Ib. viii. 22, 23, &c.] After this victory, the children of Israel said to Gideon, Be thou our Prince, and command us, thou, thy son, and thy son's son; for thou hast delivered us from the hand of Midian. Gideon answered them, I will not rule over you, neither shall my son rule over you, but the Lord shall be your Prince, and command you. One thing only I request of you, Give me the earrings, which have been part of your booty; for the Midianites had a custom of wearing Gold Pendants in their Ears. They offered them to him with all their hearts, and threw them on a cloak, which they spread upon the ground. They weighed in all seventeen hundred gold shekels, without reckoning the collars, ornaments,

7 U and purple habits, which the Kings of Midian wore, and without the gold Chains, that were about their Camels Necks. Of all these precious materials Gideon made an Ephod, and placed it in the City of Ophrah. This Ephod was an occasion of the Israelites offending God, the cause of Gideon's ruin, and the destruction of his whole house. Gideon was Judge of Israel from this year, which was that of the World 2759, to the year 2768, which was that of his death, in all nine years. He had seventy sons born of many wives, whom he had married; and besides these, had another, Abimelech, the son of a concubine, who reigned three years at Schechem.

It is very probable that Gideon, otherwise called Jerobaal, or Jerubaal, is the same with Jerombal, Priest to the God Jao, whom Sanchoniathon declares with some ostentation to have consulted concerning the Phœnician Antiquities. Sanchoniathon lived in the reign of Ithobal King of Tyre, much about the same time as Semiramis Queen of Assyria; [Apud Eufeb. l. 1. & 10. Præpar.] and consequently a little after Jerobaal or Gideon. But the generality of learned men are now convinced, that Sanchoniathon is a fabulous Author, and that he who wrote the Book whereof we have some fragments under his name, was an Impostor, who maliciously intermixed some passages of the Sacred History with the Fables of the Phœnicians, with a design to bring discredit upon the holy Scriptures of the Hebrews. See hereafter SANCHONIATHON. David calls Gideon, Jerubbesheth, instead of Jerobaal, because the Hebrews did not care to pronounce the name of Baal; for which reason they say Mephibosheth, instead of Mephibaal.

Gihon

GIHON, the name of one of the four rivers, the source whereof was in Paradisea. Many have believed without any probability or grounds, that this was the river Nile; as if the Nile, which rises out of the earth at above six hundred leagues distance from the sources of the Tigris and Euphrates, could be mentioned, as issuing out of the same garden with these two other rivers. The Arabians believe generally, that this is the Oxur, a river which has its rise in the mountains of Imaüs, and runs from East to West: when it comes near the country of Chorarуem, it winds much, and seems to return towards the place of its original; but afterwards it turns back, and discharges its waters into the Caspian Sea westward. This river makes the natural separation between the Provinces inhabited by the Eastern Turks and the Persians. Modern Geographers call the Oxur, Abiamu, that is to say, the river Amu; the Arabians name it Gehon, and Neher-Balkh, the river of Balk, because it passes through this city. They believe it to have its rise in Paradise, and that it is one of the four named by Moses.

Others are of opinion, that Gihon is the most western Channel of the two, made by the Tigris and Euphrates, when after their conflux they separate again from one another to enter the Sea. This is the opinion of Calvin, Scaliger, and many moderns; their principal reason is, that the eastern channel is Phison. But the truth is, one is no more certain than the other. Others on the contrary maintain, that Phison is the western channel, that separates the confluence of the Euphrates and the Tigris; and that Gihon is the eastern, which is formed after the union of these two rivers. As a proof of this opinion, they assert, that the land of Cush, wherein the Gihon runs, is Cissia, or the Chuzestan. And this is the judgement of M. Bochart, and M. Huet.

John Hopkinson, who wrote a Dissertation on the Terrestrial Paradise, takes the arm of the Euphrates for the Gihon, which Pliny says, was diverted from the main river by the Chaldæans, in order to water their plains, and was dried up by the great number of Cuts they made of it.

But there needs but one reflexion to overthrow all these Systems, which is this; that Moses doubtless intended to describe the situation of Paradise, by some geographical marks that were existing and known in his time. Now neither the Cut mentioned by Hopkinson, nor the two arms formed by the waters of the Tigris and Euphrates reunited, and then divided in order to empty themselves separately into the Persian Gulf, were as yet in being in the time of Moses: it cannot be said therefore that this Legislator had any of these channels in view, in his description of the Phison and Gihon.

Pliny says expressly, that it was very late before the channels of the Tigris and Euphrates were joined; that anciently they discharged themselves separately into the Persian gulf; and that their mouths, according to some, were five and twenty thousand paces asunder, or seven thousand, according to others. Inter duorum amnium ostia xxv m. passus fuere, aut ut alii tradunt, vii m. Sed longo tempore Euphratem præclusere Orcheni, & accolæ [Idem, l. 6. c. 28. Herod. l. 1.] agros rigantes, nec nisi per Tigrim defertur in mare. In another place he says, that they still shew the mouth by which the Euphrates fell into the sea; locus ubi Euphratis ostium fuit. Herodotus ascribes to Queen Nitocris these cuts and drains of the Euphrates, which have made this river, that before was so large and majestick, so weak and destitute of water. This Author[1] speaks again of the Euphrates, as falling through its own channel into the Persian gulf, without taking notice of its joining with the Tigris. Pliny[2] says, that the drains of the Euphrates were attributed to Gobar Præfect of Babylonia: Sunt qui tradunt Euphratem Gobaris Præfecti opere deductum ubi eum diximus scindi, &c. Now certainly all this is very remote from the time of Moses. We take it to be the Araxes, a celebrated river, which has its source, as well as the Tigris and Euphrates, in the Mountains of Armenia; and running with an almost incredible rapidity, discharges itself into the Caspian Sea. The word Gihon in Hebrew signifies impetuous, rapid, violent. The Author of Ecclesiasticus speaks of the inundations of Gihon in the time of [Ecclus. xxiv. 37.] vintage, because the Araxes swells towards the latter end of the summer, the snow upon the mountains of Armenia dissolving about that time.

Gilead

GILEAD. The Mountains of Gilead which lay eastward of the river Jordan, separated the lands of Ammon, Moab, Reuben, Gad, and Manasseh from Arabia Deserta. Gilead is often put for the whole country which lies beyond Jordan. Eusebius says, that Mount Gilead reached from Libanus northward, as far as the land possessed by Sihon King of the Ammorites, and given to the Tribe of Reuben. This Ridge of Mountains therefore must have been above seventy leagues long from south to north, and included the mountains of Seir and Basan; and perhaps those of the Trachonitis, Auran, and Hermon. Jeremiah seems likewise to say, that Gilead is the beginning of Libanus; Thou art Gilead [Jerem. xxii. 6.] unto me, and the head of Lebanon. See St. Jerom, and the Interpreters on this place.

Jacob at his return from Mesopotamia came in six days to the Mountains of [Gen. xxxi. 21, & seq.] Gilead. Laban his father-in-law followed after him, and overtook him while he was incamped there. After some sharp reproaches on both sides, they made a covenant, raised an heap of stones together as a monument of the league, which they had entred into, and gave it, each of them, a name according to the propriety of his language. Laban called it Jegar-Sahadutha, and Jacob, Gal-haed, the heap of witness; from whence came the word Gilead.

As these Mountains were covered with a sort of trees abounding with gum, the [Jerem. viii. 21. xlvi. 11. li. 8.] Scripture speaks much in commendation of the Balm of Gilead[1]. The Merchants who bought Joseph, came from Gilead, and were carrying Balm into Egypt.

Gilgal

[Gen. xxxvii. 25. Josh. xii. 23.] GILGAL. Joshua speaks of a King of Gilgal of the Nations[1], who was conquered and killed upon the arrival of the Hebrews in the Land of Promise. It is our opinion, that Gilgal of the Gentiles in this place is the same as Gilgal of the Gentiles in Isaiah ix. 1. and that it signifies Upper Galilee, which extended itself principally beyond Jordan, towards the sources of this river.

Gilgal (II)

II. GILGAL, a celebrated place lying to the west of Jordan, where the Israelites incamped for some time after their passage over this river. A considerable City was afterwards built there, which became famous for many events, the remembrance whereof is preserved in history. Gilgal was about a league from Jordan, and at the like distance from Jericho. This name was given to it on the score of the people's being circumcised there. After this operation, [Josh. v. 2 3 4, & seq.] the Lord said, This day have I taken away the reproach of Egypt from off you; literally, I have rolled away from off you, &c. for Gilgal signifies rolling. As the Ark had been a long time at Gilgal, this place became celebrated afterwards, and the people continued for a great while to go [Hos. iv. 15. & xv. 12. & Amos iv. 4. v. 5.] thither in pilgrimage. It is thought that Jeroboam, or at least some of the Kings of Israel, his successors, set up one of the golden Calves there, which he made, and [1 Kings xii. 29. LXX. Alexandr. Cyril. in Osee v.] obliged his people to worship.

There had been Idols it seems at Gilgal so early as in the time of Ehud, Judge of Israel: for it is said, that Ehud having made his presents to the King, went away [Judg. iii. 19.] as far as Gilgal; that he returned from thence, and pretended to have some secret to discover to him from God, as if he had received some oracle at Gilgal. At the same place the people met to confirm the [1 Sam. xi. 14, 15.] Kingdom to Saul; and, lastly, at Gilgal it was, that Saul had the misfortune to incur God's displeasure by offering sacrifices before Samuel came; there it was that he received [1 Sam. xiii.] the sentence of his rejection for a much more considerable fault, which he had committed in sparing the King of Amalek, with the best and most valuable [1 Sam. xv. Hieron. in Epiraph. Paulæ. Ep. 62. Joseph. l. 3. c. 2. de Bello.] part of the spoils. St. Jerom says, that Paula went to Gilgal, and saw there the camp of the Israelites, the hill of the foreskins, and the twelve stones which Joshua had placed there.

Girdle

GIRDLE. The Hebrews generally wore no Girdle in the house, nor even abroad, unless when they were at work, or upon a journey. At these times they tucked themselves up, and girt their clothes about them, as the eastern people still at this day wear them. This appears from many passages of the Old and New [Tob. v. 5.] Testament. Tobias having found the Angel Raphael girt about, and as it were ready to go[1], desired him to accompany him in his journey. Our Saviour putting himself in a proper condition to wash the feet of his Disciples, girt himself about with a towel. The soldiers likewise had their belts generally girt about them: Thou hast [Psal. xviii. John xiii. 4, 5. 40. Prov. xxxi. 24. Plato Alcibiad. Athenæ, l. 1, &c. Rev. i. 13. 2 Kings i. 8. Matth. iii. 4.] girded me with strength unto the battle.

Belts were often made of some very precious stuff. The virtuous wife made rich Girdles, and sold them to the Canaanites, that is to say, to the Phœnician merchants. These Girdles were used in common both by men and women: the women's are more frequently called Zonæ. We may judge of their value by the Kings of Persia giving sometimes Cities and intire Provinces to their wives for the expence of their Girdles. Our Lord in the Revelations appeared to St. John with a Girdle of gold. And in the same book, the seven Angels, who came out of the Temple, are clothed with linnen, and girt about with golden Girdles. On the contrary, the Prophets and Persons who made particular professions of repentance and contempt of the World, wore Girdles made of skin or of meer leather. The Prophet Elijah had one of this sort, as well as St. John Baptist. In times of mourning they used Girdles made of ropes, as marks [Isai. iii. 24.] of humiliation and sorrow. Isaiah threatens the daughters of Sion, who had offended him with the excess of their ornaments, to reduce them to the wearing of sack-cloth, [Isai. xxii. 12. Nehem. iv. 18.] and cord-girdles. In another place, he menaces Jerusalem with bringing her into captivity, with cutting off her hair, the instrument of her pride, and obliging her to gird herself about with sack-cloth: Ad planctum, ad calvitium, & ad cingulum sacci.

The military Girdle, or Belt, did not come down over the shoulder, as among the old Greeks; but was worn upon the loins, whence the following expressions have their original, Gladio accinctus renes, or Balteo accinctus renes. These Belts [Ezek. xxiii. 15.] were generally rich, and sometimes given as rewards to soldiers. Joab tells him who had seen Absalom hanging on a tree, that if he had smitten him to the ground, he would have given him ten shekels of silver and a Girdle. Jonathan the son of Saul [2 Sam. xviii. 4. Matth. x. 9. 1 Sam. xviii. 4. Haggai i. 6. Job xii. 18.] made David a present of his Girdle. Job, exalting the power of God, says, That he looseth the bond of Kings, and girdeth their loins with a Girdle.

We shall speak of the Priests Girdle under the Article PRIESTS.

The Girdle was used formerly for a Purse, as we see in the Books of the New Testament, and in several passages of the Ancients. Our Saviour forbids his Apostles to carry money in their Girdles: Neque pecuniam in Zonis vestris. These Girdles were large and hollow, as those of the eastern people are at this day, much like the cast skin of a serpent, or an eel. Haggai, intending to shew the unprofitableness [Hor. Ep. l. 2. 1.] of a workman's labour, says, that he putteth his wages in a Girdle, or Bag, with holes. Horace says, that he who has lost his Girdle, that is to say, his money, is ready to do every thing. Ibit eò quò vis, qui Zonam perdidit.

Women wore likewise a sort of Girdles which bound up their breasts close. Isaiah threatens the daughters of Sion with giving them sack-cloth instead of ribbons [Isa. iii. 24. Jer. ii. 32] with which they tied up their bosom and their breasts. And Jeremiah asks, whether the Spouse would forget this ornament: An oblivisceter fasciæ pectoralis suæ? The Lord in Ezekiel says, that he has [Ezek. xvi. 10.] given his Spouse a Girdle of the finest linnen: *Cinxi te Byss*o.

Giscala

[Joseph. de Bello, l. 4. c. 4.] GISCALA, a City of Galilee, which Josephus often mentions in his Books concerning the wars of the Jews. He says it was fortified by his directions, and that the [Idem. l. 4. c. 1. Reland. Palæst. l.3.p.813.] inhabitants of Gabares, Cabarages, and Tyre took it by force. M. Reland believes it to be the same with that spoken of in Jewish authors, under the name of Gusch- Chaleb, and is placed between Morom and Capharanan.

St. Jerom[1] says, that there was a fabulous Tradition of St. Paul's being originally of the City of Giscala, that his parents dwelt there; but that during the troubles in the Province, when the Romans made war there, they were obliged to retire to Tarsus in Cilicia. He says in another place[2], that St. Paul was of the Tribe of Benjamin, and City of Giscala; but that after the taking of this City by the Romans, he was forced to retire with his parents to Tarsus in Cilicia. Nothing was ever worse put together than this fable; for the war, which the Romans carried on against the Jews, was not begun till after the death of St. Paul. This Apostle died in the year 66 of Jesus Christ, and the war against the Jews did not commence till the year 67 or 68.

The conjectures of Interpreters are various concerning this word Gittith.[1] Some think it signifies a sort of musical instrument; others, that the Psalms with this title were sung after the vintage; lastly, others, that the hymns of this kind were invented in the City of Gath. We are rather of opinion, that it was given to the class of young women, or songstresses of Gath, to be sung by them. GLASS, Vitrum. There were particular places in Palestine where sand was to be had, proper to make Glass with. Glory of God

[Exod. xxiv. 9, 10, 16, 17. Exod. xvi. 7, 10.] GLORY OF GOD. In Moses, the Glory of the Lord denotes generally his presence; when he appeared, for example, on Mount Sinai, or the bright Cloud, which declared his presence, descended upon the Tabernacle of the Congregration. Moses, with Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and the seventy Elders of Israel, went up Mount Sinai, and saw the Glory of the Lord. Now the Glory of the Lord was, as it were, a burning Fire upon the Mountain; all under his feet was, as it were, the brightness of the sapphirestone, and resembling Heaven itself in clearness. The Glory of the Lord appeared likewise to the Israelites in the Cloud after their murmuring, and when he gave them Manna and Quails. Moses having earnestly begg'd of God, that he would please to reveal [Exod. xxxiii. 18, 22.] his Glory to him, God said, Thou canst not see my face, for no man is able to support the brightness of it without dying; but I will place thee [1 Sam. iv. 21, 22. Ps. xxvi. 8.] at the entrance of a rock, and when my Glory shall pass before it, I will cover thee with my hand, that so thou mayst not be overwhelmed with the weight of my Glory; but when I shall have passed by, I will take away my hand, and thou shalt see my hinder-parts, but my face thou shalt not see.

[Ps. xxix. 13.] The Ark of God is called the Glory of Israel, and the Glory of God. When the Ark was taken by the Philistins, it is said, Translata est gloria de Israel; and the Psalmist declares, that he loved the House of God tenderly, and the place where his Glory dwelleth.

[Exod. xxviii. 2—40.] The Psalmist somewhere calls his instruments of musick his Glory: That my Glory may sing praise to thee. Awake up [1 Macc. ii. 9, 12. Psal. cvi. 20.] my Glory, awake lute and harp. See also Psalm cix. 3.

The priestly ornaments are called Garments of Glory; and the sacred Vessels, Vessels of Glory. Her vessels of Glory are carried away into captivity ... behold our Sanctuary, even our Beauty and our Glory is laid waste, &c. says Mattathias, the father of the Maccabees. Solomon in all his Glory, in all his Lustre, and in his richest Ornaments, was not more beautiful than a Lilly.

When the Israelites forsook God in the wilderness, they changed their Glory into the similitude of a Calf that eateth hay. When the Prophets would describe the Conversion of the Gentiles, they say, that the Glory of the Lord shall fill all the earth; or that the whole earth shall see the [Rom. v. 2. vii. 21. & 2 Cor. iv. 4, &c. Josh. vii. 19. John ix. 14. 1 Cor. xi. 7. Numb. xxvii. 12. 1 Thess. ii. 20. Prov. xvii. 6. 4, &c.] Glory of the Lord. And St. Paul in several places terms the happiness of Believers, who embraced the Faith of Jesus Christ, the Glory of the sons of God.

When the Hebrews required an oath of any man, they said to him, Give Glory to God: Da gloriam Domino Deo Israel. Confess the truth, give him Glory; confess that God knows the most secret thoughts, and the bottom of your heart.

Childrens children are the Glory of old men; and the Glory of children are their fathers. The woman is the Glory of the man. Ye are our Glory. Every one perceives the emphasis and force of these expressions.

When God thought fit to call his servant Moses to himself, he directed him to go up Mount Abarim, and there resign his breath. Moses hereupon desired of God, that he would provide a man who should be set over the multitude. The Lord therefore commanded him to take Joshua the son of Nun, saying, He is a man who is filled with the spirit; lay thine hands upon him, thou shalt give him thy orders [Acts xxvii. 7.] in the presence of the multitude, and communicate part of thy Glory to him. The question is, what Glory this was, which Moses communicated to Joshua. Onkelos, and some of the Rabbins are of opinion, that Moses imparted to him some of that Lustre which appeared upon his countenance, after the conversation which he had [Exod. xxxiv. 29.] been admitted to with God. He did not give him all his Glory, but only some part of it. Moses, they say, shined like the Sun, and Joshua like the Moon: this was a weak and borrowed brightness. But it may be better understood of that Authority and Empire whereof he stood in need, for the government of the people. Moses laid his hands on him, and by this Ceremony appointed him for his successor in the conduct of the Israelites: He gave him his orders and instructions, that he might acquit himself with honour in this employment.

GNOSTICKS. The name of Gnosticks is not to be met with in the sacred Writings either of the Old or New Testament; but the Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul, in their Epistles, frequently attacked the Hereticks of their time, who afterwards were known under the general name of Gnosticks. St. Paul, writing to Timothy, requires [1 Tim. i. 3, 4.] him to admonish certain false Teachers not to instruct the people in any doctrine different from his, nor to amuse themselves with fables, and endless genealogies. Some believe, that by these words he intended to describe the Gnosticks, who, in imitation of the ancient Magi, and Platonists, introduced among their followers certain kinds of genealogies, under the name of Æons, whereof they composed their Fulness, or phantastick Deity. They amazed the ignorant with these unknown words, and deceived the simple with a vain ostentation of knowledge.

[2 Joh. i. Iren. l. 3. c. 11. Hieron. advers. Lucif. c. 8. Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 7.] The same Apostle gives us a description of these old Hereticks, very much resembling them, in his second Epistle to Timothy, where he says, There shall be men, lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemous, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce despisers of those that are good, traitorous, heady, high-minded, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof . . . these are men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith: but they shall proceed no further, &c. Scape-Goat

SCAPE-GOAT, the Goat which was set at liberty upon the day of solemn Expiation. See above AZAZEL. The ceremony [Levit. xvi. 5, 6, 7, &c.] observed with relation to the Scape-Goat was as follows: The High-Priest received from the people two Goats for a Sin-offering; these he presented before the Lord at the door of the Tabernacle, and cast lots upon them, to see which should be sacrificed, and which set at liberty. That which was by lot appointed for the sacrifice, he sacrificed; and as to the other which was to be let go, he presented it alive before the Lord, used certain prayers over it, and putting both his hands upon the Goat's head, he confessed all the Iniquities of the children of Israel, all their offences, and all their sins, saying, Lord I have been culpable, and have sinned before thee, I and my house: Forgive, O Lord, the sins, faults, and offences which we have committed, I and my house. To which the Priests and all the People answered, Let the venerable Name of his Kingdom be praised for ever and ever.

After having made this confession, and laid [Petron. Satyr. in fine. Herodot. l. 2. c. 39.] laid upon the Goat's head his imprecations, and the penalty of the people's sins, he sent it into the wilderness by the hands of one prepared for this purpose. This man carried it to some desart and steep place, where he let it loose. After this, he returned to the camp; but was not permitted to come in, till he had washed his body and his clothes in pure water. This is what the Scripture has ordained concerning the Scape-Goat. It is probable enough, that this Goat was of that kind of expiatory Sacrifices, which were loaded with curses, and were thought proper to divert the wrath of God from falling upon men. Of this sort were the men, whom the people of Marseilles threw from the top of a rock; and those beasts, the heads whereof the Egyptians cast into the sea, after having loaded them with imprecations. Some think the Scape-Goat was thrown down the steep place above-mentioned; and others, that it was only let loose, and left to Providence to dispose of, as that should please to appoint. See AZAZEL.

Goats

GOATS. Dæmons are sometimes called Goats, or hairy, either from an imagination of their appearing in the shape of Goats, or from the Hebrews worshipping Idols under this form; or, lastly, from their adoring real Goats. In Leviticus[1], God commands his people to bring all the animals which he required to be sacrificed, to the door of the Tabernacle: And they shall no more offer their sacrifices unto Devils; literally, to Goats, after whom they have gone a whoring. And in the Chronicles it is [2 Chron. xi. 15. Isa. xiii. 21.] said, that Jeroboam established Priests for the High-places, and for the Goats and the Calves which he had made. Isaiah, speaking of the state which Babylon was to be reduced to after its destruction, says, that the Goats shall dance there; and in another [Isa. xxxiv. 14.] place, that the Goats shall cry to their fellows.

The generality understand this as meaning Devils, Spectres, Satyrs, figures of Goats, to which the Egyptians and idolatrous Hebrews paid their adorations. Herodotus says, that at Mendes in lower Egypt, the He and She-Goat were worshipped; that this Deity was described as the Greeks represent the God Pan, with the face and thighs of a Goat: not that they believed him to be of this figure; for in their opinion he did not at all differ in form from other Gods; but because it was customary with them to represent him thus, [Herodot. l. 1. c. 46.] and they were persuaded, that the Gods chose to be set before their adorers in the shape of some animals. They paid divine honours also to real Goats, and they are commonly to be seen doing so in the table of Isis. The abominations which were committed during the feasts of these infamous Deities, are but too well known; and the ancient Authors, who speak of them, too apparently justify the terms, Prostitution and Fornication, which are used by Moses, where he mentions the worship which was paid them.

GOATS. Under this name, the Hebrews sometimes understood the Princes of the people. I will visit the Goats, says the Lord in Zechary x. 3. I will begin my vengeance with the Princes of the People. And Isaiah xiv. 9. Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming, it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the great Goats of the earth: all the Kings, all the great Men. And Jeremiah, speaking [Jer. l. 8. Matth. xxv. 33.] to the Princes of the Jews, Remove out of the midst of Babylon, and be as the He-Goats before the flocks. Our Saviour in the Gospel says, that at the day of Judgement, the Goats, that is to say, the wicked, the reprobated, shall be placed on the left-hand, and condemned to eternal fire.

God

GOD. This is the name which we give to that eternal, infinite, and incomprehensible Being, the Creator of all things, who preserves and governs every thing by his Almighty Power and Wisdom, and is the only Object of our Worship[1]. God, properly speaking, can have no name; for as he is one, and not subject to those individual qualities, which distinguish men, and upon which are founded the different denominations that we give them; he has no need of any name to distinguish him from other Gods, nor to put a difference between him and any, since there are none like him. The names therefore which we ascribe to him, are descriptions, or epithets, which express his divine qualities in terms necessarily ambiguous, because they are such as are borrowed from common use, and given to the creatures as well as him; rather than true names which represent his nature, as it is.

The Hebrews give him generally the name of Jehovah, or Jao or Jaho[2], which they never pronounce, but instead of it, make use of that of Adonai or Elohim, which signify Lords, Masters. They likewise call him El, which signifies Strong; or Shaddai, whereby may be meant one, who is Self-sufficient; or, according to another pronunciation, the Destroyer, the Powerful One; or Elion, the most High; or El-sebaoth, the God of Hosts; or Ja, God. In Exodus, the Angel, who spoke in God's [Exod. iii. 13, 14. גלולים] name, said to Moses; If they ask thee, what is his name who sent thee, thou shalt say, I AM hath sent me unto you: I am He who is; or, I shall be He who shall be. Translators' note. The modern Jews have a very orthodox notion of God's Perfections; but their Rabbins are not to be justified, who attribute such actions and expressions to him, as tend to vilify his nature in the opinion of their people, and lessen their respect to the Deity, of whom we cannot conceive too great and noble Ideas. To produce one instance only of the extravagancy of their Doctors. They believe the power of God to be infinite, and illustrate it in this manner: Cæsar, they say, had a mind to see God, and R. Joshua prayed that the effects of his presence might be perceivable. Whereupon God retired 400 leagues from Rome, and bellowed so terribly, that at the noise thereof the city walls fell down, and all the women with child miscarried. God advanced 100 leagues nearer, roaring in the same manner, which so frightned Cæsar, that he fell from his throne, and all the Romans then living lost their rinders. Gods

[Gen. i. 1.] GODS, False Gods. The name of God, in Hebrew, Elohim, is very ambiguous in Scripture. The true God is often called so, as are sometimes Angels, Judges, and Princes, and sometimes Idols, and false [אלילים] Gods: for example, God created the heaven and the earth; the Hebrew, Elohim, denotes [Exod. xxii. 20.] in this place the true God. Qui immolat diis occidetur: He who sacrifices to false Gods, (Elohim) shall be put to death. And [Psal. lxxxv. 8.] again, Non est similis tui in Diis, Domine, & non est secundum opera tua. There is no God who resembles thee, or who equals thy works. He is speaking of false Gods. In the Books of Moses, the name of God is often given to Angels; for example, the three Angels are called so, who appeared to Abraham, and preserved Lot; to him who appeared to Moses in the burning bush; and to him who led the Israelites in the wilderness. Lastly, Princes, Magistrates, and Great Men are called Gods in the following Passages: If a slave is desirous to continue [Exod. xxi. 6.] with his Master, he shall be brought to the Gods, Offeret eum Dominus Diis, to the Magistrates, the Judges, who shall pierce his ear with an awl. And again, Si latet fur, dominus domûs applicabitur ad Deos. If the [Exod. xxii. 8.] thief is not discovered, the master of the house shall be obliged to appear before the Gods, the Judges, the Magistrates. And in another place[1], If one man sin against another, the Gods shall judge them, or reconcile them: they shall plead their cause before the Judges, &c. Thou shalt not speak evil [Exod. xxii. 28.] of the Gods; Diis non detrahes: [Psal. lxxxi. 1. Psal. xlvi. 10.] thou shalt not speak against the reputation of Judges, of Great Men. Josephus[2] and Philo[3] believe it to have been Moses's design, to forbid in this place the speaking evil of strange Gods. The Psalmist says, that the Lord is seated amidst the Gods, and that he judges with them. Deus stetit in Synagoga deorum, in medio autem Deos dijudicat. And elsewhere, The Gods of the earth are gathered together. And again, [Exod. vii. 1.] God says to Moses, I have made thee a God [Psal. xv. 4.] to Pharaoh.

Good Israelites had so great an aversion, and such an extreme contempt for strange Gods, that they scorned even to name them: they disguised and disfigured their names by substituting in the room of them some term of contempt; for example, instead [Elilim.] of Elohim they called them Elilim, nothings, Gods of no value: instead of Miphibaal, and Meribaal, and Jerubaal, they said Mephibosheth, Meribosheth, and Jeribosheth. Baal signifies master, husband; and Bosheth something to be ashamed of, something apt to put one in confusion. Sometimes likewise they called Idols, Ordures, in Hebrew, Galulim, Stercora, or Dii Stercorei. God forbids the Israelites to [Exod. xxiii. 13. Exod. xxiii. 13. Deut. xxix. 26.] swear by strange Gods; and to pronounce the names of them in their oaths.

Moses says, the Israelites worshipped strange Gods, whom they knew not, and whom he had not given unto them; that is to say, Gods who were not their Gods, to whom they did not belong: which increases their ingratitude, and the crime of their rebellion. The Hebrew may be translated, strange Gods, and who had given them nothing. When we compare this passage with others of the Scripture, God seems to have abandoned other nations to strange Gods, to the Stars, and Idols, and to have reserved his own people to himself as his inheritance: not that he excuses or forgives the idolatry of other people; but it is without comparison less criminal than that of the Hebrews. Compare Deut. xxix. 26. with Deut. iv. 19. xvii. 3. Acts vii. 42. Jerem. xix. 13. 2 Kings xvii. 16. xxi. 3, 5. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 3, 5. Amos v. 25, 26, 27. and see Clemens Alexandrinus, Stromat. l. 6. p. 669. and *S. Gog and Magog [Ezek. xxxviii. 2, 3, &c. xxxix. 1, 2, &c. Rev. xx. 7. Gen. x. 2.] GOG and MAGOG. We do not separate these two names, because the Scripture generally joins them. Moses speaks of Magog the son of Japheth, but says nothing of Gog. Gog was Prince of Magog, according to Ezekiel. Magog signifies the country, or [1 Chr. i. 5.] people; and Gog the King of this country. We have shewn upon Genesis, that the generality of the Ancients made Magog the father of the Scythians or Tartars, and the several Interpreters discovered many footsteps of their name in the Provinces of Great Tartary; as in the Provinces of Lug and Mungug, of Cangigu and Gingui, in the cities of Gingui and Cugui, of Corgangui and Caigui.

Others have been of opinion, that the Persians were descendants of Magog. Suidas and Cedrenus say, that they are still called Magog in their own country. We find people there called Magusians, and philosophers called Magoi.

[Vide Ambrof. de fide ad Gratian. l. 2. c.4. ad finem.] Some have imagined, that the Goths were descended from Gog and Magog, and that the wars described by Ezekiel, and undertaken by Gog against the Saints, are no other than those, which the Goths carried on in the fifth age against the Roman Empire.

Bochart has placed Gog in the neighbourhood of Caucasus. He derives the name of this celebrated Mountain from the Hebrew, Gog-chasan, the fortress of Gog. He shews, that Prometheus, said to be chained to Caucasus by Jupiter, is Gog, and no other. There is a Province in Iberia, to the south of Caucasus, called the Gogarene.

Lastly, the generality believe with great reason, that Gog and Magog, mentioned in Ezekiel and the Revelations, are to be taken in an allegorical sense for such Princes as were enemies to the Church and Saints. Thus many by Gog in Ezekiel understand Antiochus Epiphanes, the persecutor of those Jews who were firm to their Religion; and by the person of the same name in the Revelations, they suppose Antichrist to be meant, the great enemy of the Church and Faithful. We have endeavoured in a Dissertation printed before the prophecies of Ezekiel, to demonstrate that Gog and Cambyses King of Persia, were one and the same person; and in our Comment on the Revelations we have asserted, that Gog and Magog denote all the Enemies of the Church, who should be the persecutors of it to the consummation of Ages.

The Arabians call the descendants of Gog and Magog, Jagiouge and Magiouge, [D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 470. Jagiouge & Magiouge.] and believe that they inhabit the most northern parts of Asia, beyond the countries belonging to the Tartars, and Sclaves, or Sclavonians, by the Ancients called Chalybes. It is probable that Gog and Magog, according to the idea of the Arabians, inhabited formerly the Mountains of the Hyperboreans, and that they were known to the Ancients by this name: for they relate, that one Salam, who was sent thither by Vasek, ninth Caliph of Corasan, of the race of the Abastidæ, was in the year of Jesus Christ 842, two years in performing this journey; and that returning after this time, he reported, that at six and thirty days journey from the Caspian sea, northward, he at last found the Cities of the Hyperboreans, which were nothing but ruins without inhabitants; and at seven and twenty days journey from thence, he saw the town of Hasna, so called by the Arabians, because of its almost inaccessible situation. Near this fort were to be seen the remains of a famous rampart built formerly by Alexander the Great, to prevent the barbarous northern nations from making irruptions into the heart of Asia. Salam procured himself to be carried to this place, for there was no approaching it by riding, or any sort of carriages; and he had the satisfaction to find there, all that the old accounts relate of it.

The ancient people of Gog and Magog dwelt, they say, in these Mountains, whither there was no going without difficulties impossible almost to be surmounted. There was a necessity for spending seventeen days in ascending and descending through countries extremely uneven, before they came thither. Whatever was carried thither, was conveyed upon men's backs, or upon goats, which are very large in this part of the world. The people who dwelt there, were so unsociable, that there was no getting the least knowledge out of any of them relating to this nation, or country. This is what we read in Arabian Authors, concerning the Country of Gog and Magog. This nation is certainly very famous in Antiquity, but we are not acquainted with the place where they anciently abode. We do not at all doubt, but that they were some of the Scythians, and confounded among the Great and Little Tartars, and perhaps among the Muscovites, and other northern people. But as these people have no old Historians, we are absolutely unacquainted with their History.

Golgotha

GOLGOTHA, or rather Colgoltha, Goata, or Gulgultha[1], signifies a Skull. There was a Mountain to the north-west of Jerusalem called by this name, either by reason of its form, which was much like an human Skull; or because criminals were executed executed there; or, because it was believed by some, that the first man's head was buried there[2]. This Mountain we generally call Calvary, from a word derived from the Latin, Calvaria, which signifies the Skull, as Golgoltha does the same in Hebrew or Syriac. Jesus Christ was crucified there, and buried in the garden belonging to Joseph of Arimathea, in a tomb dug in a rock. The Emperor Adrian, when he rebuilt Jerusalem, and from his own name called it Ælia, prophaned the sacred tomb of our Saviour, filling it up, and placing over it figures of the most infamous Idols. But God having inspired the Empress Helena with so much devotion, as to pay due honour to these holy places, she gave directions for cleaning out our Saviour's tomb, and building over it a magnificent Church which is still at this day in being. It is a tradition which prevails over all the East, that the first man was buried on Calvary, or Golgotha, where our Saviour suffered death. The Syrians and Arabians call this Mountain Cranion, or Acranion, because of Adam's Skull which they believe [D'Herbe-lot. Bibl. Orient. p. 278. Cranion.] was buried there. The Mahometans have a Book wherein there is a Dialogue between Jesus Christ and Adam's Skull.

Goliath (I)

I. GOLIATH, a famous Giant of the City of Gath, one of the five Principalities belonging to the Philistins. Goliath[1] [1 Sam. xvii. 4, 5, 6, &c.] came and presented himself between the two armies of the Philistins and the Hebrews, incamped between Succoth and [In the Year of the World 2942, before J.C. 1058, before the Vulgar Æra 1062.] Azekah, and defied all the bravest of the Hebrews to encounter him. He was six cubits and a span high, that is to say, about twelve feet and an half, taking a cubit to be twenty inches and a half, and a span to be three inches and a little more. His armour was suitable to his stature, and his insolence every day increased, upon observing that none of the Israelites dared to engage him. The two armies continued in the same place forty days, without coming to blows. At last, David, who was a young man, employed in feeding his father's flocks, coming to the camp, to bring provisions to his brothers, declared that he would encounter this Giant.

This was immediately reported to the King, who sent for David: but seeing him to be so young, and without arms, he at first could scarce believe him capable of such an undertaking. Nevertheless, he ordered his own armour to be put upon him. But David not being accustomed to it, nor knowing well how to use it, took only his own staff, and chose five pebbles in the brook; so marching against Goliath, he flung a stone at him, which struck the Giant with so much force, that he fell down stunn'd with the blow: whereupon David running in upon him, drew the Giant's sword, and cut off his head.

Goliath was descended from Arapha, that is to say, from the old Rephaims. He was higher than any two men, and his armour was proportioned to his stature. An Author who has scrupulously examined the weight of his armour, finds, that allowing a proportionable weight to every part which composed it, it must be two hundred and seventy two pounds thirteen ounces. He allows eighteen pounds three quarters for the iron of Goliath's Spear; to the shaft of this Spear, which must have been six and twenty feet long, at least as much weight as to the iron with which it was bound; to the Helmet fifteen pounds, to the Buckler thirty, to the Sword four pounds and an half, to the Cuirass an hundred fifty six pounds and a quarter: add the Greaves of brass which he wore upon his legs, and the Shield or Lance which was carried by his 'Squire, and you will find pretty near the weight which he allows for the whole armour.

The defeat of the Giant Goliath by David is an event so extraordinary, that it is not at all surprizing to see how the Eastern people, who naturally love fiction, and telling wonderful stories, should embellish it with some circumstances: they say, Goliath was of such an enormous stature, that his suit of armour compleat weighed a thousand pounds, and that his helmet alone weighed three hundred; that nevertheless David broke his helmet with the stone which he flung at him, and pierced his head, and brain. They further believe, that the Kings of the Philistins, who reigned long in Palestine, were all named Goliath, as the Kings of Egypt were called Pharaoh; and that David, after the defeat of the Giant whom we are speaking of, destroyed the nation of the Philistins, the remains of whom retired into Africk; and that the Barbars, people on the coast of Barbary, are descended from them.

It is believed by some, that David upon this occasion composed the hundred and forty-fourth Psalm; Blessed be the Lord my strength, who teacheth my hands to war, and my fingers to fight. The Septuagint particularly take notice, that it was composed upon Goliath: but it is well known, that the titles of the Psalms are for the most part of very little authority. In the Greek copies, there is an hundred and fiftieth Psalm, which is not in the Canon, and is written upon the same subject: but there is no argument to prove that David was the Author of it.

Goliath (II)

II. GOLIATH, another Giant, who was killed by Elhanan, the son of Jair, of Bethlehem. The Author of the Vulgate expresses it thus, Percussit Adeodatus filius Saltûs, polymitarius Bethlehemites, Goliath Getheum. In the Chronicles, where the Text seems to be more correct, we read, Elhanan, the son of Jair, slew Lahmi the brother of Goliath the Gittite. Among the gallant officers belonging to David, there is one Elhanan of Bethlehem, the son of Joab's uncle by the father's side. It was probably this Elhanan, who killed the brother of Goliath, whether this Giant really was his brother, or only resembled him in the height of his stature.

Gomer (I)

I. GOMER, the son of Japheth, was father to the people of Galatia, according to Josephus. The ancient inhabitants of this country were called Gomares, before the Galatians made themselves masters of it. The Chaldee places Gomer in Africk; Bochart, in Phrygia; because Phrygia in Greek has the same signification, viz. a Coal, as Gomer in Hebrew and Syriac. We are of opinion, that the ancient Cimbri or Cimmerians sprung from Gomer. See our Comment upon Genesis x. 2.

It is very probable, that Gomer, or rather the Gomerites his descendants, not only peopled the country of the Cimbri or Cimmerians [Joseph. Euseb. Zonar. Isidor. Cluver. Germ. Cambden.] , but likewise Germany and Gaul; the name of German is not very different from Gomerim. The Gauls, or Galatians, or Celtæ, were derived, they say, from Aschenez, the eldest son of Noah; but Cluver pretends, that the ancient Celtica comprehended Illyria, Germany, Gaul, Spain, and [c. 5, 6, 7. Hosea i. 1, 2, &c.] the British Isles. His reason for this assertion, is, that all these people anciently spoke the same language. He further supposes, that Gomer, or his family, peopled the countries which lie in Asia between the Paropamisus and the Mountain Imaüs, and between the confluence of the Oxus and the Oby; that from thence these people are called Gomares by Ptolemy, l. 6. c. 17. and Mela, l. 1. c. 2.

Gomer (II)

II. GOMER, the daughter of Diblaim, before she became the Prophet Hosea's wife, led the debauched life of a Prostitute. But when she married the Prophet, she forsook this wicked way of living. Hosea received God's command to take a lewd woman for his wife, to signify the prostitution and disorders of Samaria, which had abandoned God, and given itself up to Idolatry. The Lord enjoins him to give such figurative names to the children, who should be the issue of this marriage, as might express the extremity of his anger; and that his vengeance was upon the point of being executed upon the kingdom of the ten Tribes. This was performed by Hosea, upon the birth of his first son, whom he called Jezreel, and his first daughter, who was named, without mercy , and of his second son whose name was, Ye are no longer my people , &c.

Several Interpreters[1], offended at the irregularity which appeared to them in Hosea's marriage with Gomer, the daughter of Diblaïm, have imagined, that in reality there was no such thing, but that it was only a parable; or that Hosea had only discovered to the people what had happened to him in a vision, but was never truly executed. Nevertheless the whole sequel of this Prophet's discourse is an evidence, that every thing he said, did literally happen to him: and that his marriage, as well as the birth of his children, were realities.

GOMORRHA. Gomorrha was one of the principal Cities of the Pentapolis; it was consumed by fire from Heaven[1], as a punishment of its abominations. The Hebrew[2] calls it Amora or Homora: but the Septuagint frequently express the letter Ain by a G. Thus instead of Aza, they say Gaza, &c. Gonorrhoea GONORRHOEA. This word in Greek signifies a Flux, which Modesty does not permit us to name, and which should happen in the use of marriage only. This sort of Flux, when procured by luxury, or any other more criminal motive, as that upon which Onan acted, is an abominable action, and deserves the severest penalty. The Rabbins place it among the several sorts of [1 Cor. vi. 9.] murder; and St. Paul says, that the Effeminate shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

Whenever it happened in the use of marriage, the man became thereby unclean until the evening; that is to say, incapable of partaking in things holy: but it did not exclude him from the use of common things, or the commerce of life.

[Deut. xxiii. 10.] When it happened while he was asleep, the person whom this accident befel, went out of the camp, and was not to come in again till the evening, after he had bathed in water.

[Levit. xv. 1, 2, 3.] Lastly, when the Gonorrhœa was a permanent disease, he who was attacked with it, was reckoned unclean as long as this indisposition lasted. Every thing that he touched, or made use of, contracted the same pollution. Whosoever touched him, continued unclean until the evening, and was not restored to his ordinary purity, till he had washed himself and his clothes in water. When this accident was stopped, he who had been under this flux, reckoned seven days from his cure; and after he had washed his body and his clothes in running water, was purified. On the eighth day, he took two turtle-doves or two young pigeons, presented himself before the Lord at the entrance of the Tabernacle, gave them to the Priest, who offered one for a Sin-offering, the other for a Burnt-offering, and prayed for him, that he might be cleansed from his indisposition.

Good

GOOD. This word is used very frequently for beautiful, agreeable; for something perfect in its kind. God beheld every thing that he had created, and it was perfectly [Gen. i. 31.] Good; Et erant valde bona. Every creature had the goodness, beauty, perfection which it required. This man never prophesieth any thing Good unto me, nothing agreeable. [2 Chr. xviii. 7. 1 Sam. xxv. 8.] We came hither in a Good Day, a festival day, a day of joy. If this seemeth Good in your eyes; if it is agreeable to you. Moses's parents saw that he was a very fine child; literally, that he was Good. Unless I had believed [Exod. ii. 2. Psal. xxvii. 13. Jer. vii. 3] to see the Goods of the Lord in the land of the living; to enjoy the happiness of heaven. Make good your ways and your inclinations; behave yourselves like good men.

Gophna

GOPHNA, Guphna, or Gophnith, the principal place of one of the ten Toparchies [Plin. l. 5. c 14. Joseph. l. 3. de Bello, c. 4. Euseb. in] of Judæa. Josephus reckons eleven, comprehending Jerusalem in the number. He generally joins this Toparchy with the Acrabatene. Eusebius places the City of Gophna at fifteen miles distance from Jerusalem, in the way to Sichem or Naplouse. Josephus says, that Titus coming from Cæsarea to Jerusalem, passed through Samaria and Gophna; and that Vespasian [De Bello, l. 6. c. 1. De Bello, l. 5. c. 8.] having subdued the Toparchy of Gophna, and the Acrabatene, took Bethel and Ephrem or Ephraim.

Gorgias

GORGIAS, an eminent Captain in the Troops of Antiochus Epiphanes, was sent with Lycias into Judæa by Nicanor, at the head of an army consisting of forty thousand foot, and seven thousand horse, with orders to [1 Macc. iii. 38. In the year of the World 3839, before J. C. 161, before the Vulgar Æra 165.] ravage the country, as King Antiochus had commanded before his departure; for he was at that time beyond the Euphrates. These two Generals advanced as far as *Emma*üs. Judas Maccabæus having likewise gathered his little body of troops together, marched the same way. Gorgias sent a detachment of five thousand foot, and a thousand chosen horse, with an intention to surprize him: but Judas having got intelligence of their design, decamped, and went with his forces to attack [1 Macc. iv. 1, 2, & seq.] Nicanor, who continued in his camp with the greatest part of his army. Nicanor was defeated, and his army routed. Gorgias having in vain sought for Maccabæus, returned towards his camp; but seeing it in the possession of the Hebrews, he retreated, and durst not run the hazard of a battle.

As Gorgias was Governour of Jamnia b and Idumæa, c and moreover a man of great experience in the trade of war d, there were actions frequently between him, Judas Maccabæus, and his brethren, but almost always with disadvantage on his side e. We know nothing concerning his death.

Goshen

GOSHEN. The Land of Goshen, a Canton of Egypt, which Joseph procured for his father and his brethren, when they came to dwell in Egypt. It was the most fruitful part of the country, and its name seems to be derived from the Hebrew, Geshem, which signifies rain; because this Province lying very near the Mediterranean, was exposed to rains, which were very rare in other Cantons, and more especially in Upper Egypt. We do not question but that Gozen or Goshen, which Joshua makes part of the Tribe of Judah, is the same as the Land of Goshen, which was given to Jacob and his sons by Pharaoh King of Egypt. It is certain that this country lay [Gen. xlvii. 6. Josh. x. 41. xi. 16. xv. 51. Gen. xlvi. 28.] between Palestine and the City of Tanis, and that the allotment of the Hebrews reached southward as far as the [Josh. xiii. 3.] Nile.

Gospel

GOSPEL. The Greek word Evangelion, signifies good News. And in reality the Book which contains the recital of our [Evangelium, bonus Nuntius.] Saviour's Life, Miracles, Death, Resurrection, and Doctrine, includes the best news that could be published to mankind. We shall give an epitome of the history contained in the Gospel, when we relate the Life of Jesus Christ. See JESUS CHRIST. We acknowledge but four canonical Gospels, those of St. Matthew, St. Mark, St. Luke; and St. John; which we shall speak of in the several Articles relating to each of these Evangelists.

But besides these four Gospels, which are received by the whole Catholick Church, there are several others, which are apocryphal, and without authority; some whereof have been handed down to us, and the rest are intirely lost. Here is a Catalogue of them.

The Gospel according to the Hebrews.
The Gospel according to the Nazarens.
The Gospel of the twelve Apostles.
The Gospel of St. Peter. These four Gospels are probably the same under different titles, viz. the Gospel of St. Matthew, corrupted by certain Hereticks, called Nazarens.
The Gospel of the Egyptians. 6. The Gospel of the Birth of the holy Virgin. This is in Latin.
The Gospel of St. James. This is in Greek and Latin; and is called the preparatory Gospel, Proto-Evangelium, of St. James.
The Gospel of the Infancy of Jesus. This is in Greek and Arabic.
The Gospel of St. Thomas. This is the same as the foregoing one.
The Gospel of Nicodemus. This we have in Latin.
The Eternal Gospel. 12. The Gospel of St. Andrew. 13. The Gospel of St. Bartholomew. 14. The Gospel of Apelles. 15. The Gospel of Basilides. 16. The Gospel of Cerinthus. 17. The Gospel of the Ebionites. 18. The Gospel of the Encratites. This is the same as Tatian's.
The Gospel of Eve. 20. The Gospel of the Gnosticks.
thor.

The Gospel of St. Paul; the same as Marcion's.
Mary's Interrogations, both great and small.
The Book of Jesus Christ's birth. The same in all probability as St. James's Preparatory Gospel.
The Gospel of St. John; otherwise, the Book of the Holy Virgin's death.
The Gospel of St. Matthias. 27. The Gospel of Perfection.
The Gospel of the Simonians. 29. The Gospel according to the Syrians.
The Gospel of Tatian. The same as that of the Encratites.
The Gospel of Thadæus, or St. Jude.
The Gospel of Valentine. The same as the Gospel of Truth.
The Gospel of Life, or the Gospel of the living God. 34. The Gospel of St. Philip.

The Gospel of St. Barnabas. 36. The Gospel of St. James major. 37. The Gospel of Judas Iscariot. 38. The Gospel of Truth. The same as Valentine's.

The spurious Gospels of Leucius, Seleucus, Lucianus, Hesychius.

They who please, may consult M. Fabricius's Codex Apocryphus Novi Testamenti, &c. concerning all these spurious Pieces, and our Dissertation upon the Apocryphal Gospels, prefixed to our Comment on St. Matthew.

The ancient Hereticks began generally with attacking the Gospels, in order to maintain their Errors, or excuse them. Some rejected all the genuine Gospels, and substituted such as were spurious in their room. This produced the Gospels of Apelles, Basilides, Cerinthus, and some others. Others have corrupted the true Gospels, and have suppressed whatever gave them any trouble, or have inserted what might favour their erroneous Doctrines. Thus the Nazarens corrupted the original Gospel of St. Matthew, and the Marcionites mangled that of St. Luke, which was the only one that they received. The Alogians seeing their condemnation too plainly declared in St. John, rejected him, and admitted only the three other Evangelists. The Ebionites rejected St. Matthew, and received the three other Gospels. The Cerinthians acknowledged only St. Mark, and the Valentinians St. John only.

The Mahometans believe, that God sent [D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 315. Engil.] his Gospel to Jesus Christ, but that it is now no longer in being, at least in its primitive purity; they maintain, that it is intirely lost, or so much altered, that according to their principles there can be no depending on any thing we cite from it, unless it agree with what is quoted from it in the Alcoran, composed by Mahomet, who never read the Gospel, and was never capable of reading it: he indeed produces some passages out of it, but with very little accuracy, and like one who had only heard it cited, and was but superficially acquainted with it. For example, he relates the Salutation of the blessed Virgin [Alcoran, Jurat. 3.] in the following manner; " O Mary, " God declares to you the birth of his " Word, whom he hath produced; he shall " be called Christ, the son of Mary: he " shall be glorious in this world and the " next: he shall be one of those who approach God. While he is yet in the " cradle and in swaddling-clothes, he shall " have the use of speech; and when he " is grown, shall be an honest man."

You have here the prayer, whereof they suppose Jesus Christ to be the author; it is very different from the Pater noster which he taught us.

" O my God, I can neither divert the " evil which I detest, nor acquire the good " which I wish. Others have already " received their reward, but I wait for " the recompence of my labour. The " poorest man is not more indigent than " I am. Do thou, O great God, vouchsafe " to forgive me. O Lord, permit me not " to use my enemy opprobriously, nor suffer " my friend to despise me; let not my " Religion be the cause of affliction to " me; let not the world be the object of " my love, nor the subject of my application and study. Let not any one be " my master, who will have no compassion " for me. Grant me these favours for " thy mercy's sake, O thou most merciful " of all those who shew mercy."

The Disciples of Mahomet believe, that we have suppressed several passages of the Gospel, which were favourable to their Prophet. Notwithstanding St. Paul never wrote any Gospel, he cites one however which he calls his; secundum Evangelium [Rom. ii. 16. and xvi. 25. 2 Tim. ii. 8.] meum: whether he is to be understood as meaning the Gospel of our Saviour which he preached, and had learned by revelation, or the Gospel of St. Luke, which some of the Ancients ascribe to him[1], as if he had dictated it to St. Luke, or had advised him only to write it, and had assisted him in composing it; or, lastly, whether St. Luke having learned it from St. Paul's mouth, people might have attributed the work of the Disciple to the Master.

Judæa having been reduced into a Province by the Romans, after the banishment of Archelaus, Tetrarch of this Country, Governours were sent thither. The person who acted with this character, was called sometimes Præses, and sometimes Procurator, Prætor; Intendant, President, Governour. They were subject not only to the Emperors, but also to the Governours of Syria, whereof Judæa made a part.

The first Governour sent into Judæa after the banishment of Archelaus, was Coponius, a Roman Knight, who governed it from the year of Jesus Christ 9, which is [Joseph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 1. p. 616. & de Bello, l. 2. c. 11. p. 784. Luke ii. 2.] the sixth of the Vulgar Æra, to the year 13 of Jesus Christ, and 10 of the Vulgar Æra. At the same time Publius Sulpicius Quirinius was Governour of Syria. This is the Quirinius mentioned by St. Luke.

Marcus Ambibucus, or Ambivius, succeeded Coponius about the year 10 of the Vulgar Æra: he governed, probably, three years, to the year 13 of the Vulgar Æra; for the time of his government is not expressly [Antiq. l. 18. c. 3. p. 619.] mentioned in Josephus.

Annius Rufus succeeded Ambibucus, about the year 13 of the Vulgar Æra, and governed a year or two. Valerius Gratus succeeded Rufus, and governed from the year 15 or 16 of the Vulgar Æra, to the year 26 or 27 of Jesus Christ, that is, [Joseph. ibidem.] eleven years.

Pontius

Pontius Pilate succeeded Gratus, about the year 26 or 27 of the Vulgar Æra, and governed Judæa to the end of the year 36, which is the year 39 from the true time of Jesus Christ's birth.

Marcellus, in the year of the Vulgar Æra 36, was sent by Vitellius, Governour of Syria, to govern Judæa in the room of Pilate.

The year following, being the 37th of the Vulgar Æra, and the first of Caius Caligula, Judæa returned to its former state, and was given with the title of a Kingdom to Agrippa.

But after his death, which happened in the year 44 of the Vulgar Æra, and of Jesus Christ 47, Judæa was again reduced into a Province, and the Emperor Claudius sent thither Cuspius Fadus in quality of [Joseph. l. 19. c. 7. p. 680. de Bello, l. 2. c. 19. p. 793.] Governour or Intendant. He governed it about two years, till about the year 46 of the Vulgar Æra.

Tiberius Alexander, the son of Alexander Alabarch of the Alexandrian Jews, and nephew to Philo, forsook his Religion, and was made Governour of Judæa in the year 46 of the Vulgar Æra. He governed the Province for two years, to the year 48 of the Vulgar Æra.

Ventidius Cumanus succeeded Tiberius Alexander in the year 48, and governed Judæa to the year 52 of the Vulgar Æra.

Felix the Emperor Claudius's Freed-man, was sent to govern Judæa in the year 52. He governed it to the year 60 of the common Æra.

Portius Festus was sent in his room, in the same year 60, and died in Judæa in the year 62 of the Vulgar Æra.

Albinus succeeded him, and came to Judæa in the year 62, and governed this Province to the year 64 of the Vulgar Æra.

Gessius Florus succeeded him towards the end of the year 64, or at the beginning of the year 65 of the Vulgar Æra. This was the last particular Governour that Judæa had. He by his ill conduct began the war there. What became of him after the year 66 of the Vulgar Æra, no one can tell. The City of Jerusalem was taken, and destroyed in the year 70 of the Vulgar Æra. The rebellion of the Jews began in the year 66.

Gourd

GOURD, Wild Gourd. This is a Plant which produces leaves and branches much like Garden-Cucumbers, which creep upon the earth, and are divided into several branches.

Its fruit is of the size and figure of an orange. It is of a light, white substance, if you pare off the rind; and so bitter to the taste, that it has been called the Gall of the earth.

[2 Kings iv. 39.] We read in the second Book of Kings, that Elisha being at Gilgal during a great famine, bad one of his servants prepare something for the entertainment of the Prophets, who were in that place. The servant going into the field, found some wild Gourds, gathered his lap-full of them, and having brought them with him, cut them in pieces, and put them in a pot, not knowing what they were. When they were brought to table, the Prophets having tasted them, thought that they were mortal poison. Immediately the man of God called for some flour, threw it in the pot, and desired them to eat without any apprehensions. They did so, and perceived nothing of the bitterness, whereof they were before so sensible. This plant or fruit is called in Hebrew, Pekaak.

[1 Kings xv. 23. & 2 Chr. xvi. 16.] GOUT, Gouty. The Disease which King Asa was so much troubled with in his feet during his old age, is by some thought to have been the Gout. Gozan

GOZAN, a River whereof there is mention made in several places of the [2 Kings xvii. 6. xviii. 11. xix. 12. 1 Chr. v. 26.] Scripture. It appears by the 2 Kings xix. 12. and Isaiah xxxvii. 11. that Gozan was the name likewise of a Province or Nation; the same in all probability, that the river Gozan ran through. Salmanesèr, after he had subdued the Israelites of the ten Tribes, carried them beyond the Euphrates to a country bordering upon the river Gozan; and Sennecharib boasts, that the Kings his predecessors had conquered the People of Gozan, Haran, and others. We have nothing more to do therefore, but to find, if we can, where beyond the Euphrates this river or nation of Gozan lay. Ptolemy places the Gauzanitis in Mesopotamia. Pliny says, that the Province Elon-gozine extends itself towards the Sources of the Tigris. There is a Canton in Media called Gauzan between the rivers Cyrus and Cambyses. Ptolemy places the City of Gauzania in the same country; and Benjamin of Tudela says, that Gozan is in Media, four days journey from Hemdam. The Rabbins take Gozan for the river Sabbaticus, which never flows, as they affirm, upon the Sabbath-day; and upon this day is encompassed with fire, to prevent any one's approaching it. This is what we find concerning the river Gozan.

Grapes

[Numb. xiii. 24.] GRAPES, Bunch of Grapes, Racemus; in Greek, Botrus; in Hebrew, Tenab, or Eschol. There was abundance of fine Vineyards and excellent Grapes in Palestine. The Bunch of Grapes, which was cut in the Valley of Eschol, and was brought upon a staff between two men to the camp of Israel at Kadesh-barnea, may give us an opportunity of judging how large this fruit was in that country. Travellers relate, that there was some to be seen there of a [Doubdan, Voyage de la Terre Sainte, c. 21.] prodigious size. Doubdan assures us, that in the Valley of Eshcol there were Bunches of Grapes to be found still of ten and twelve pounds. Forster tells us, he was informed by a Religious, who had lived many years in Palestine, that there were Bunches of Grapes so large in the Valley of Hebron, that two men could scarce [Brocard. Descript. Terræ Sanctæ.] carry one. Brocard says, he was told by the inhabitants of Antaradus, that in Palestine and Phœnicia round about Sidon, they had three vintages in a year, and that the same vine produced grapes three times in a year. In the month of March, when the vine has produced its Grapes, they cut away the wood which did not bear any; from hence fresh shoots spring out again in April, and produce Grapes, which ripen some months after. The same wood being again cut in May, shoots out again, and brings forth other Grapes, which ripen in the latter season. These Grapes thus produced at different times, ripen one after anther; so that the first vintage is in August, the second in September, and the third in October; and hence it is, adds Brocard, that in the Holy Land they sell fresh Grapes from St. [Levit. xix. 10.] John's-tide to Martinmas.

Moses in the Law commanded, that when the Israelites gathered their Grapes, they should not be careful to pick up those which fell, nor be so exact as to leave none upon the vines. What fell, and was left behind, he ordered [Deut. xxiv. 21, 22.] should be for the poor. The same Legislator permitted people who were passing that way, to go into another man's vineyard, and [Deut. xxiii. 24.] eat what Grapes he would; but he did not allow them to carry any away with them.

Some learned men are of opinion[1], that [Levit. xix. 10. and Deut. xxiv. 21. Ecclus. l. 16.] the prohibition delivered by Moses against gleaning Grapes after the vintage, may signify a second vintage after the first, which was never so good or so plentiful as the former; for this, they say, was over in the hot countries about the end of August, and the other in September. God requires therefore that this second vintage should be left to the poor, as well as the Grapes of the first which had escaped the observation of the [Isai. xvii. 6. xxiv. 13.] gatherers.

It is frequent in Scripture to describe a total destruction by the similitude of a vine stript in such a manner, that there was not a Bunch of Grapes left for those who came a gleaning. Thus shall it be in the midst of the land, there shall be as the gleaning when the vintage is done. And Jeremiah vi. 9. They shall throughly glean the remnant of Israel as a vine. See likewise Jerem. xlix. 9. and Obadiah, ver. 5.

[Gen. xlix. 11.] The Blood of the Grape, signifies wine. He shall wash his clothes in the blood of Grapes. His habitation shall be in a country where there are vineyards. And Deuteronom. And thou didst drink the pure Blood of the Grapes. The vineyards of Sodom produced none but bitter Grapes, their Grapes are Grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter; probably because of the nitre and sulphur with which the soil was every where impregnated.

Ligaturæ uvæ passæ, 1 Sam. xxv. 18. and xxx. 12. and 2 Sam. xvi. 1. The Hebrew[2] reads no more than dried Grapes, without expressing Ligatures; but generally raisins were put up in parcels.

[Jer. xxxi. 29. Ezek. xviii. 2.] The fathers have eaten sour Grapes, and the childrens teeth are set on edge, is a proverbial way of speaking in the sacred Text; meaning, that the fathers have sinned, and the children have born the punishment of their crimes. It was a kind of reproach made by the Jews to God, who punished those sins in them, whereof they pretended that they were not guilty. But the Lord said, he would cause this proverb to cease in Israel, and that for the future every one should suffer the punishment of his own faults.

It is remarked in the first Book of Maccabees, that wine was shewn to the Elephants in order to enrage and make them fierce, and that the sight of blood might not afterwards affect them.

Wild Grapes

WILD GRAPES, the fruit of a wild [Plin. l. 23. c. 1.] bastard-Vine, in Latin called Labrusca, and in Greek, Ampelos agna. Virgil, [Virgil. Eclog. 5.] ——Aspice ut antrum Sylvestris raris sparsit labrusca racemis. The fruit of the wild Vine is called Oenanthes, or the Flower of Wine. These Grapes never ripen, and are good for nothing but to make verjuice. In Isaiah[1], God complains of his people, whom he had planted as a choice vine, and an excellent plant. He says, that he expected it should bear good fruit, but it had brought forth only wild Grapes; in the Hebrew, fruit of a bad smell and a bad taste; like the Grapes of Sodom mentioned by Moses, Deut. xxxii. 32. For their wine is the wine of Sodom, and of the fields of Gomorrah: their Grapes are Grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter.

The Scripture in some places speaks of the Grapes of Sorek, so called either because [Judg. xvi. 4.] they grew in the Valley of Sorek, or because they had no stones, say the Jews. I believe it was a white or yellow Grape. See the Hebrew, Isa. xix. 9. and Zech. i. 8.

Gratia

GRATIA,

Read this article in its place on the printed pages

Gratia

GRATIA, or GRACE. The word Grace is understood several ways in Scripture, which it may be proper to take notice of. 1. Grace is taken for Beauty, Good-Grace, and Agreeableness of Person. For [Ps. xlv. 2.] example; Full of Grace are thy lips; because God hath blessed thee for ever. Hearken to the instructions of Wisdom, and she shall give to thine head an ornament of [Prov. iv. 9. Gen. xviii. 3. Gen. vi. 8.] Grace.

Grace is taken for favour, friendship. If I have found Grace in thy sight. Noah found Grace in the eyes of the Lord. God gave the Hebrews Grace in the sight of the Egyptians, so that these lent unto them clothes and jewels, &c.

Grace is taken for Pardon, Mercy; to shew Grace and Mercy; to pardon any one, to restore him to our good Graces.

[Ecclus. vii. 37.] 4. Grace is understood to signify benefit. Gratia dati in conspectu omnis viventis: Benefits oblige all men. By Gratia is meant likewise reward. If you do good to your friends only, if you love those only who [Luke vi. 32, 33, 34.] love you, Quæ gratia est vobis? What reward can you expect from God?

Grace is taken for certain Gifts of God, which he bestows freely on whom he pleases; but do not justify those to whom he gives them, and tend not directly to their sanctification: these are Graces, which are called Graces freely given; such are the gifts of miracles, prophecy, languages, and all the rest mentioned by St. Paul in his [1 Cor. xii. 4.] first Epistle to the Corinthians. These Gifts are intended rather for the advantage of others, than of the person, who possesses them; though the good use which he makes of them may contribute to his sanctification. By Grace likewise, all sorts of justifying Graces are meant, some whereof tend to justification, others actually justify.

There are several sorts of inward Graces; for the Graces of the Understanding may be called by this name, as well as the Graces of the Will. There are habitual and actual Graces.

Divines distinguish these inward, actual Graces, into preventing, exciting, and operating; subsequent, assisting, and co-operating. But it is not our design to enter upon an examination of all these Graces; this is the business of Divines.

St. Austin defines inward, actual Grace to be the inspiration of love, which prompts us to do what we know out of a religious affection. Legem volunt (Pelagiani) intelligi gratiam ... non inspirationem dilectionis, ut cognita sancto amore faciamus, quæ propri [Lib. 4. ad Bonif. cap. 5. num. 11.] è gratia est. He says likewise, that the Grace of God, is the blessing of God's sweet influence, whereby we are induced to take pleasure in that which he commands, to desire and love it; and that if God does not prevent us with [Lib. 2. ad Bonif. cap. 9. num. 21.] this blessing, what he commands, not only is not perfected, but is not so much as begun in us. Benedictio dulcedinis est gratia Dei, quâ sit in nobis, ut nos delectet, & cupiamus, hoc est, amemus, quod præcipit nobis; in quâ si nos non prævenit Deus, non solum non perficitur, sed nec inchoatur in nobis.

Without the inward Grace of Jesus Christ, man is not able to do the least thing, that is good. He stands in need of it to begin, continue, and finish all the good he does, or rather which God does in him and with him by his Grace.

[Rom. xi. 6.] The Grace of Jesus Christ is free; it is not due to us: if it were due to us, it would be no more Grace; it would be a debt: of itself it is an assistance so powerful and efficacious, that it surmounts the hardness of the most rebellious heart, without destroying our liberty.

There is no Subject in Divinity, upon which the Christian Doctors have written so largely, as upon the several particulars relating to the Grace of God. It is a mystery which the mind of man has always been desirous to unfold; but notwithstanding all its efforts, it is obliged always to acknowledge its insufficiency. The difficulty consists in reconciling the liberty of man with the operation of Grace, the concurrence of man with the assistance of the Almighty. And who is able to set just bounds between these two things? Who can pretend to know how far the privileges of Grace extend over the heart of man, and what the force of that man's liberty is, who is prevented, enlightned, moved, and attracted by Grace?

Although the Books of the Old Testament express themselves very clearly, with relation to the fall of man, his incapacity as to good, his continual want of God's aids, the darkness of his Understanding, and the evil propensions of his Heart; although this is all to be observed, not only in the historical part of the Bible, but likewise in the Prayers of the Saints, and in the Writings of the Prophets; nevertheless these truths are far from being so well unravel'd in the Old Testament as in the New; nor are the Jewish Doctors so well instructed in matters relating to Grace, as the Fathers, and the [Maimon. More Nevochim. Basnage hist. des Juifs, t. 1. l. 6. c. 13.] Christian and Catholick Divines.

The Rabbins have no distinct knowledge of original Sin; some deny it, and maintain, that it is incomprehensible how a man should be born with sin; but at the same time they acknowledge a natural bad propensity in man, a figmentum malum, which inclines them to evil. See the Article ORIGINAL SIN.

As to the Grace of Jesus Christ, it is not at all extraordinary that they should not be acquainted with it, because they receive neither his Person, his Doctrines, nor the Books of his Disciples: they do not even know, distinctly at least, what that Grace will be, which the Messiah whom they expect, will give them in order to blot out their sins, and lead them to salvation. They believe that the Messiah will be one of [Limburg. Collat. cum Judæo. p. 73.] perfect sanctity, that he will convert the nations, and procure the true God to be worshipped in all places. But they do not acknowledge the satisfaction which he was to make for sin: they reckon much upon their good works, repentance, and a change of life; yet own in their Catechism, that no one ought to expect salvation from the goodness of his works, or the perfection of his righteousness, [Catechism. Jud. Qu. 14.] but that it is Grace which bestows it.

But when we come to examine this Grace, some, as Maimonides, reduce it almost to constitution only. As God, says he, has created man erect in stature with feet and hands, so he has given him a will to move himself, and act as he pleases; and it is the goodness of constitution which makes things easy or difficult. He says farther, That the Fear of God is not in the hand of heaven; that it is in every man's power to observe or not observe the precepts of the Law; that the Fear of God is of this class: that it depends not on God, but on the will of man. Lastly, the Jews admit liberty of indifference in its full extent

It is true, some of them have owned a preventing Grace; and have affirmed, that Grace goes before the merits of the righteous: but the famous Manasseh-Ben-Israel, who wrote at Amsterdam in the last Century, [R. Massé de fragilitate humana. §. 14. p. 116.] confuted these Doctors who departed from Tradition. He asserts, that if Grace were to prevent the Will of Man, it would be no longer free. He lays down two sorts of assistance, and no more, which we are capable of receiving from God; one whereby he so orders it, that favourable opportunities are presented for man's executing the good designs which he has form'd; and the other, whereby he is aiding to every man, when he first begins to live well. He acknowledges, that the concurrence of Providence is necessary in every good action; as a man who would lay a very heavy load upon his shoulders, calls some one to his aid, in order to help him up with it. And this probably was what Josephus meant, when he affirmed, that, according to the Pharisees, Fate was assisting to men in the practice of good works. Under the name of Fate, he might understand Providence.

They maintain, that by admitting a preventing and efficacious Grace, all the merit of works is destroyed; God is made the author of sin and corruption; and is supposed to have an unjust regard to persons. If he gives efficacious Grace to all, why are they not all saved? and if he does not give it to all, where is the equality of his justice? If man cannot do well without Grace, how can the evil be imputed to him which he is necessitated to perform? and why should he be refused such an assistance, without which he must be destroyed?

[Eliezer Pirk. c. 15. p. 32.] Another Rabbin introduces God opening the way of life and death to man, and giving him his choice of either. If he takes the way of death, God however does not as yet intirely forsake him: he hath placed seven Angels in this way; four of the seven are Angels of mercy, the other three are cruel Angels. The former take their post at every door to perdition, and do what they can to prevent men's entering by them. At the first door, the Angel cries out to him, what art thou doing? there is no mercy here; thou art going to cast thy self into the fire. If he passes the first door, the second Angel stops him, and tells him, that he is going to incur God's aversion. The third threatens him with being blotted out of the Book of Life. The fourth conjures him to stay there, and not to proceed any farther, till God comes to seek after Penitents. If he continues to go on, the cruel Angels seize on him, and conduct him into hell.

In all this we see only a general and natural Grace given to all the world, the ordinary effects of Providence, and assistances which are only external, very different from that inward attraction which acts immediately upon our souls, and inspires us with the love of good, and hatred of evil: wherein consists the medicinal Grace of Jesus Christ, acknowledged in his Church.

[D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 469.] The Mahometans have such sentiments of Grace, as it may not be unacceptable to have inserted in this place. Mahomet, in his Alcoran, in the chapter concerning Houd or Eber, says, that this Patriarch speaking to the people of Ad, uses these words; I have placed my whole confidence in God, who is mine and your Lord: for there is no creature upon earth whom he does not hold by the tuft of hair upon his forehead, in order to conduct him through the right way whither he pleases. The Interpreters of this passage maintain, that by this expression, to hold any one by a tuft of hair growing on the fore-part of his head, is meant, that such an one is absolute master of his person, so that he is able to do nothing but what the other pleases, who has him fast by this place.

They affirm, that God is in reality the author and principle of all the actions, and even of all the co-operations of the creatures; that he alone, by the order of his Providence, and the concurrence of second Causes established by him, attracts every thing to himself, according to the capacity capacity and dispositions of the subject, and that herein consists the meaning of the passage above cited. An Arabian Poet has expressed the Action of God upon the creature in a verse to this purpose: God hath attracted him who hath attracted those by whom thou art thy self attracted, to the end that all may go and return to him. Another on the same subject has this remark: Since all the ways we meet with, either to the right or left, tend to him; thou mayst do what thou wouldst; whatever way thou takest, thou wilt go towards him, in order either to be rewarded, if thou hast kept to the right hand; or punished, if thou hast turned to the left. As every thing is originally derived from him, so must every thing likewise terminate in him.

Gratus

GRATUS (Valerius) Governour of Judæa from the year of Jesus Christ 15 or 16, to 26 or 27. He succeeded Annius Rufus, and was himself succeeded by Pontius Pilate. What is in particular remarkable of [Antiq. l. 18. c. 3.] him, is, that he frequently changed the High-Priests. He deposed Ananus to make way for Ishmael, the son of Fabi; and shortly after, deprived Ishmael of the High -Priesthood, and invested Eleazar with it, the son of Ananus. At the year's end he transferred it to Simon the son of Camith; and in a year after gave it to Caiphas, the son-in-law of Ananus.

Great

GREAT, is a word for rich, powerful, celebrated, magnificent, illustrious, ancient. [2 Kings v. 1.] Naaman was Great before the King his master; he was in Great consideration with him. I will make thee head or father of a Great Nation, of a numerous and powerful people. Moses was very Great in the land of Egypt. The whole Country [Exod. xi. 3.] looked upon him as an extraordinary Man, and as one sent from God. The Great Sea, in the way of eminence, is the Mediterranean, greater beyond comparison than the Dead Sea and the Sea of Genesareth, which are but Lakes. The Hebrews shall be called by strangers a Wise people, a [Deut. iv. 6.] Great nation, a powerful and considerable people. The King of Assyria is called the Great King; the Euphrates, the Great River; the City of Niniveh, the Great City; because the King of Assyria was the most powerful King in the East, the Euphrates the greatest River in Syria, and Niniveh the greatest City in the Dominions of the King of Assyria, and of all the Countries round about.

Greatness

[Ps. cxxx. 1. Ps. liv. 13.] GREATNESS, ambulare in magnis, to exercise one's self in great matters. Magna loqui, to speak with haughtiness, [Jer. l. 11.] with insolence, with menacing. From the Least to the Greatest: a customary way of speaking in our language; thy servant [1 Sam. xxii. 15. Isa. ix. 9. Exod. xv. 16.] knew not any thing of the affair, neither little nor great: he had not the least knowledge of it.

Greatness of heart, magnitudo cordis, is taken for pride. Greatness of the arm, for strength, severity. The voice of God's Greatness, is the Thunder. The Seat of Greatness, is the Throne of God's Majesty. The Greatness of God denotes his Glory, his Power, his Majesty, his wondrous Works.

Greece

[1 Macc. i. 11. viii. 18. 2 Macc. iv. 36. xi. 24. iv. 15.] GREECE. This word is often of a very extensive signification in Scripture, and comprehends all the Countries inhabited by the descendants of Javan, as well in Greece as in Ionia, and Asia minor. Since the time of Alexander the Great, the name of Greeks is taken in a still more uncertain and inlarged sense; because the Greeks being masters of Egypt and Syria, of the Countries beyond the Euphrates, and of other Provinces, the Jews were used to call all those Gentile people Greeks, who were Subjects to the Empire of the Greeks, either in the East or West. For which reason in the Books of the Maccabees, in the Gospel, and in St. Paul's writings, a Greek commonly signifies a Gentile. Non est distinctio Judæi & Græci: before God there is no distinction between Jew and Gentile.

[Is. lxvi. 19.] In the Books of the Old Testament written in Hebrew, Greece and Greeks are mentioned under the name of Javan. Isaiah says, that the Lord shall send his Ambassadors to several people, and in particular to Javan, who dwells in the Isles [Ezek. xxvii. 13, 19. Dan. xi. 2. Zech. ix. 13.] afar off. Ezekiel tells us, that Javan, Tubal, and Meshech came to the Fairs at Tyre. Daniel, speaking of Darius the son of Hystaspes, or of Xerxes, says, that he shall stir up all against the realm of Javan. Lastly, Zechary declares, that the Lord shall raise up the sons of Zion against the sons of Javan; which hints at the wars carried on by the Maccabees against Antiochus Epiphanes and the Greeks, who possessed the Kingdom of [Dan. viii. 21. x. 20.] Syria. In Daniel, Alexander the Great is described by the name of King of Javan.

Greek

GREEK. The Greek tongue is the original language of almost all the Books in the New Testament, except St. Matthew. All the Evangelists wrote in Greek, as did also St. Luke, St. Paul, St. Peter, St. James and St. Jude; but excepting St. Luke, the sacred Authors of the New Testament have followed the way of writing used by Hellenists, that is to say, Grecizing Hebrews, and blending abundance of idioms and turns peculiar to the Syriac and Hebrew language, very different from the turn and spirit of the Greek tongue; almost as if a man should translate a French discourse into Latin, and keep to the genius of the French language. Of such an one it might be said, that he speaks Latinum, but not *Latin*è. From the reign and conquests of Alexander the Great, Greek was the common language of almost all the East, and generally used in their commerce with other people. And as the sacred Authors had principally in view the conversion of the Jews, who were scattered in the several Provinces of the East, it was very natural for them to write to them in Greek.

In the Books of the Maccabees, lingua [2 Macc. vii. 8, 27.] patria signifies the Syriac and Hebrew languages, in opposition to the Greek, which was that of King Antiochus's Officers who persecuted the Jews.

As there were generally people of all Nations, and even of all Religions, at the solemn Festivals of the Jews in Jerusalem, Pilate ordered the Inscription on our Saviour's Cross, signifying the motive of his condemnation, to be in Hebrew, [John xix. 20. Luke xviii. 38.] Syriac, Greek and Latin; because these were the languages most generally known in the Roman Empire, and particularly in Palestine.

Hence it was likewise, that at this time many Jews had two names, one Greek, the other Hebrew; others grecized their Hebrew name, and gave it at least a Latin termination. For example, of Jesus they made Jason; of Saul or Saulus, Paulus. St. Peter was called in Hebrew, Simon or Simeon, and in Greek, Petros. St. Thomas went by this name, which was Hebrew, and by that of Didymus, which signifies the same thing in Greek. Salome was called likewise Alexandra, which signifies much the same thing.

In the Books of the Maccabees, the word Greeks is used commonly for Gentiles [2 Macc. xi. 24.] and Idolaters. For example, We understand that the Jews would not consent to our Father, for to be brought unto the custom of the Greeks; to embrace the worship of the Greeks, and their Idolatry. [2 Macc. iv. 15.] And in another passage, the Priests despised the honours of their own Nation, and sought after those of the Greeks. Patrios quidem honores nihil habentes, Græcas glorias optimas arbitrabantur. The honour of the Priesthood and its functions did not affect them, they aspired to those which were obtained in publick games, &c.

By the Kingdom of the Greeks, is meant that of Alexander the Great, and of the Kings of Syria and Egypt, his successors. [1 Macc. i. 11.] And the Year of the Greeks, mentioned in the Maccabees, is the Æra of the Seleucidæ, which begins in the year of the World 3692, in the first year of the 177th Olympiad, and the 312th of the Vulgar Æra, or 308th before the true Epoch of our Saviour's birth. But it is to be observed, that Josephus, the Jews, and the Author of the first Book of Maccabees, begin the Æra of the Seleucidæ in the month Nisan, which is the first of the Jewish Ecclesiastical Year, and answers to the Moon of March; whereas the Author of the second Book of Maccabees supposes the beginning of it to be in the month Tizri, which answers to the Moon of September: and herein the Greeks and Arabians agree with him. But the Chaldæans compute it from the spring of the year following: so that they place the beginning of the Year of the Greeks six months backwards, and the Jews anticipate it six months.

To Grieve

TO GRIEVE, afflict, use ill. Grieve not the stranger. David would not grieve [Exod. xxii. 21. 2 Sam. xiii. 21.] the spirit of his son Amnon[1]. And St. Paul tells the Corinthians, that he rejoices, not to see them sad, but to see them [2 Cor. vii. 8, 9.] sorrowing to repentance: Sed quia contristati estis ad pœnitentiam; that is to say, that their sorrow produces fruits meet for repentance, and a great abhorrence of evil. [Eph. iv. 3.] Grieve not the Spirit of God. This is the same very near with what he says to the Thessalonians, Quench not the Holy Spirit. Neither do nor say any thing which may afflict the Holy Spirit that is in you, or in your brethren. Commit no actions which may diminish the effects of the Grace of God's Holy Spirit in you, that may deprive you of his inward Grace, or outward Gifts; or that may stop or suspend the effects of it in yourselves, or in your brethren. The old Hebrew Gospel, made use of by the Nazarens, ranked the Grieving of our brother's spirit amongst the highest crimes. Hieronym. in Ezech. xviii. 7.

Translators' note. This passage is an addition to the original Hebrew, and translated from the Greek of the Septuagint; Καὶ ἐκ ἐλύπησε τὸ πνεῦμα Ἀμνὼν τῷ υἱῷ αὐτοῦ, &c. It is not however to be found in all the Greek copies; the Complutensian, as M. Bos observes, being without it.

Gryphus

GRYPHUS, or rather Gryps, a Griffin. The Septuagint and the Author of the Vulgate make use of this word in two places; viz. Levit. xi. 13. and Deut. xiv. 12. thereby describing a sort of unclean creature which the Hebrews were forbid to eat. The Greek word Gryps signifies a bird with a hooked beak like an Eagle; and Gryphus is taken for a Griffin, which is a fabulous bird, with the body, as some say, of a Lion, the head and wings of an Eagle. But the Hebrew Peres signifies, as [Levit. xi. 13. Peres. LXX.] some will have it, an Hawk, a Faulcon, or a Kite, or rather a sort fort of Eagle. Bochart and Junius are of opinion, that it signifies the Eagle called Ossifraga, because after having eaten the flesh, it lets the bones fall upon a rock to break them, that so it may extract the marrow.

It is agreed, that the Griffin, such as the Poets describe it to us, and as we see it represented in many antique monuments, is a fabulous animal, consecrated to the Sun, to Jupiter, and the Goddess Nemesis. It was a four-footed beast, having the head and wings of an Eagle, and the body of a Lion, with very large claws. Some of these supposed claws are shewn, which were formerly made use of for vessels to drink out of. The Griffin is said to have so much strength, that it can carry away a man on horse-back, horse and all. It is said likewise, that Griffins have the guard of treasures, and of gold and silver mines, and that they hinder men from coming near them.

But this is all fabulous, as well as what the Persians say of their Simorg Anka, or wondrous Griffin; this is a very extraordinary bird, as well in respect to its size, as to its other qualities. It is so large, that it consumes for its subsistence all the fruits, and every thing that grows on several Mountains; moreover, it talks, is reasonable, and capable of Religion; in a word, it [D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 1016, 1017.] is a Fairy in the shape of a bird. Somebody asking it one day concerning its age, it replied, This world has been already seven times filled with creatures, and often intirely without any. The Age of Adam, wherein we now live, is to last seven thousand years, which make a great cycle of years; twelve of these cycles I have seen already, and how many more there may remain for me to see, I cannot tell. The bird Simorg, say the Persians, lives in the Mountains of Caf. The Rabbins, Authors of the Talmud, speak of a bird called Jukhneh, or Ben-Jukhneh, of an incredible size, concerning which they relate a thousand impertinences. They believe it is designed for the feast of the Elect at the end of the world.

GUITAR. This word comes probably from the Greek, Cithara, and the Hebrew, [Heb. כנורCinnor.] Cinnor. But the form of the Guitar is very different from that of the ancient Cithara and the Cinnor of the Hebrews. The Cithara, or old Harp, was mounted in such a manner, that the strings were stretched from the top to the bottom, supported by two sorts of arms, fastened below to a hollow sounding belly, and at the top to a cross piece of wood, which reached from one arm to the other, to which likewise the strings were tied.

GURBAAL. Gymnasium

[2 Macc. iv.] GYMNASIUM, a place of exercise, so called, because people exercised themselves there naked. Gymnos or Gumnos in Greek signifies naked[1]. The Greeks were passionately fond of theatrical exercises, which were performed by men either quite naked, or very near being so; whether the particular exercise were wrestling, running, quoits, shooting, &c. These inclinations they carried with them into the East, and introduced these Sports and Exercises in the several places which they conquered. The people who were subdued by them, desiring to imitate their masters, addicted themselves to the same diversions, and endeavoured to distinguish themselves in the same exercises. Jason having introduced these novelties at Jerusalem, and built a Gymnasium, or place of exercise, many of the Jews were observed to give themselves up intirely to these Sports, and to imitate in every thing the customs of the Heathens; and despising what was thought honourable in their own Country, endeavoured to excel in such things only as were in esteem among the Greeks. The very Priests neglecting the Duties of their Ministry, and the Sacrifices of the Temple, run after these exercises, and were ambitious of obtaining the Prizes, which were the rewards of such as were most successful. This we learn from the Author of the second Book of Maccabees.

Habbakuk

HABBAKUK, was of the Tribe of Simeon, and a native of Bethzacar, if the Author of the Lives of the [Epiphan. & Doroth. de vita & morte Propheta-rum.] Prophets is to be credited. As he observed, that Nebuchadnezzar advanced towards Jerusalem, and foresaw that he would take it, he made his escape to Ostracin in Arabia, near the lake Sirbon: there he lived some time. But the Chal-dæans having made themselves masters of Jerusalem, and being on the way to their own Country, Habbakuk returned into Judæa; while the rest of the Jews, who had not been carried away to Baby-lon, after the death of Gedaliah, fled into Egypt. He busied himself in cultivating his fields; and as he was one day preparing to carry his reapers their dinner, he heard a voice, commanding him [Dan. xiv.] to carry that provision to Daniel[1], which he designed for his labourers. He excused himself upon his being a stranger both to Daniel and to Babylon. But the Angel of the Lord suddenly transported him by the hair of the head into the City, with what he had provided for his people in the field; which as soon as he had set before Daniel, who was shut up in the lions den, the same hand which convey'd him to Babylon, carried him back again into Judæa. There he died, and was buried two years before the [In the year of the World 3466, before J. C. 534, before the Vulgar Æra 538.] end of the captivity.

He is reported to be the author of several Prophecies, which are not to be found among those which we receive as canonical. It is said, that he foretold the approaching return of his people from their captivity; that a time would come, when there should be a great light seen in the Temple, and they should there contemplate the Glory of the Lord, (meaning the Messiah;) that the City of Jerusalem should be destroyed by a certain people, who should come from the West, (that is to say, by the Romans;) that then the vail, called Dabir, should be rent in two parts; that the chapiters of the two pillars should be carried away by Angels, and concealed in the wilderness, in the same place where, a little before the captivity, the Tabernacle of the Covenant was hidden.

The stories of Susanna, of Bel and the Dragon, and that of his transportation to Babylon, are said likewise to be his, which are inserted among the Works of Daniel, but are not in the Hebrew[2]. There is no other foundation for all this, than an inscription, which was read formerly in some Greek copies, and in these terms, The Prophecies of Abacum, Priest of Judah, of the Tribe of Levi. Others[3] have affirmed, that this Abacum, Priest in the Tribe of Judah, was a person very different from the Prophet, whose writings are in our hands. Habbakuk's tomb was shewn formerly at Bethzacar, Keila, Echela[4], or Gabbatha. The same thing is probably meant by these four places. It is certain, that they were very near one another, and in the neighbourhood of Eleu-theropolis. Sozomen speaks[5] of the discovery which was made of his body at Bethzacar, in the time of Theodosius the Elder.

The Works of Habbakuk, which are indisputably his, are contained in three chapters. In these the Prophet complains very pathetically of the disorders, which he observed [Hab. i. 2, 3, 4. Hab. i. 5—10.] in the kingdom of Judah. God reveals to him, that he would in a very short time punish them in a very terrible manner by the arms of the Chaldæans. He afterwards foretels the conquests of Nebuchadnezzar, his metamorphosis and death; and [Ibid. vs. 7, 8—12.] as the Prophet was offended at the prosperities of this idolatrous Prince, God discovers to him what would happen after his death [Hab. i. 13. & ii. 1, 2, &c. Ibid. c. ii. vs. 9, 10, 11. Ibid. 12, 13, 14.] to the Chaldæans. He then foretels, that the vast designs of Je-hoiakim should be frustrated. He speaks against a Prince, who built with blood and iniquity; this probably was the King of Tyre. He accuses another King with having intoxicated his friend in order to discover his nakedness. This we take to be the King of Egypt, [Ibid. vs. 15, 16, 17.] who ingaged Zedekiah King of Judah to revolt from Nebuchad-nezzar.
